A provision in a workman's compensation act that the parent of a minor workman should receive a fixed amount per month after his death until the time at which he would have arrived at the age of twenty-one years has been interpreted to apply only to cases of nondependency by the beneficiaries, so that where the parent was actually dependent the allowance should continue as long as the dependent condition continued. Boyd v. Pratt, 72 Wash. 306, 130 Pac. 371.

Where a mother lived apart from her son at the time of his death, and did not depend on him for support, though he could have been compelled under a statute to contribute to her support, it was held that she was not "dependent" on him within a workman's compensation act, if no order had been entered at the time of his death requiring him to contribute to her support. Pinel v. Rapid R. System, 184 Mich. 169, 150 N. W. 897.

Evidence showing that an employee's mother had no property, that the employee and his sister took care of her, and that they all kept house together, the expenses being paid from his wages, has been held to be sufficient to show that the mother was dependent on her son for support. Stevenson v. Illinois Watch Case Co. 186 Ill. App. 418.

In Dazy v. Apponaug Co. 36 R. I. 81, 89 Atl. 160, it appeared that a son lived at home with his parents and that all three of them worked, the father earning about $11.50 per week and the mother and son about $8 per week each; that the parents owned considerable real estate; and that at the time of the son's death the family savings were from $10 to $12 per week. Under the circumstances it was held that the parents were not dependent on the son's earnings within the act and could not recover.

Where a workman's compensation act provides that the compensation to a parent shall be fifteen per cent if the amount payable to the surviving wife and children of a deceased employee shall be less than two thirds of his earnings, the parents are entitled to compensation although the deceased leaves no wife or children surviving him. Friscia v. Drake Bros. Co. 167 App. Div. 496, 153 N. Y. S. 392.

An award to a dependent father and mother may be without limitation as to time where the workmen's compensation act providing for the award contains no limitation. Walz v. Holbrook Cabot, etc. Corp. 170 App. Div. 6, 155 N. Y. S. 703.

In Tirre v. Bush Terminal Co. 172 App. Div. 386, 158 N. Y. S. 883, it was held that the mere fact that a workman had sent some money to his mother in a foreign country was not sufficient to show that it was necessary for her support or that it was sent for that purpose.

It has been held that a parent can be dependent on the support of a minor child just as much as on the support of an adult child. Friscia v. Drake Bros. Co. 167 App. Div. 496, 153 N. Y. S. 392.

In Wainwright v. Crichton, 117 L. T. J. (Eng.) 2, it appeared that a father suffered from lumbago as the result of an old wound. His son agreed to maintain the father, who ceased to work. Medical evidence was offered as to the father's earning capacity after the son's death, but the county court decided that the evidence could not be received by reason of the decision of the court of appeal in the case of Pryce v. Penrikyber Nav. Colliery Co. [1902] 1 K. B. 221, 85 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 479, cited in the original note. On appeal, however, it was held that the Pryce case was to be distinguished, the holding in that case being that a sum of money received by the dependent and after the death of the workman did not alter the dependency, and the evidence directed to the subsequent earning power of the person alleged to be wholly dependent was held to be admissible.

In Quebec it has been held that a father was not entitled to compensation under the workman's compensation act if the son was not his sole means of support. Thompson v. Kearney, 25 Quebec K. B. 220; Lafamme v. Levis Ferry Co. 47 Quebec Super. Ct. 201. See also Lamontagne v. Quebec R. Light, etc. Co. 50 Can. Sup. Ct. 423, affirming 23 Quebec K. B. 212, but referring to a subsequent amendment of the statute changing the rule in future cases.

Where the evidence to prove dependency showed that the workman had sent money on two occasions to his parents, but they had in the first instance assisted him by advancing money for his passage to Canada, it was held that the parents had failed to show that they had any reasonable expectation of benefit from the son if he had lived. Brown v. British Columbia Electric R. Co. 15 British Columbia 350.

Where a workmen's compensation act does not specify a certain class of persons to be considered as wholly or partially dependent on the deceased at the time of his death, but provides that the dependency shall in all other cases be determined in accordance with the fact as the fact may be at the time of the death, nonresident parents are not conclusively presumed to be dependent, and in the absence of proof to that effect no compensation will be awarded. Garcia v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 171 Cal. 57, 151 Pac. 741.

Child.

GENERALLY.

A provision in a workmen's compensation act that a child under eighteen years of age shall be presumed to be dependent on the parent with whom he is living at the time of the death of the parent, there being no surviving dependent parent, has been construed to mean that the conclusive presumption of dependency of children is conditioned on the nonexistence of a surviving dependent parent. In re McNicol, 215 Mass. 497, 102 N. E. 697, L.R.A.1916A 306. So under the same act it has been held that a child of a former marriage is conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent on the parent because in her case there is no surviving dependent parent. Coakley's Case, 206 Mass. 71, Ann. Cas. 1915A 867, 102 N. E. 930.

A daughter who received practically all of her father's wages has been held to be wholly dependent on him for support although according to her own testimony she might have earned enough for her own support, had she not devoted herself to the care of her father. In re Herrick, 217 Mass. 111, 104 N. E. 432. See also Simms v. Lilleshall Colliery Co. [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 218.

In Carter's Case, 221 Mass. 105, 108 N. E. 911, it was held that where a daughter for three years before her father's death had no income except money allowed her by her father and two weeks' pay of her own earning, and was too ill to continue to work, she was wholly dependent on her father at the time of his death within the workman's compensation act, and that the fact that at her father's death she had $100 saved from the money given her by her father should not prevent a finding of total dependence.

An act providing that "if there be surviving child or children of the deceased under the age of eighteen years," an additional amount shall be provided for such child or children until such child or children arrive at the age of eighteen years," and making no reference to the question of dependency has been held to create a presumption that children are dependent on their parent up to the age of eighteen years. Matter of Bell, 163 N. Y. S. 733.

In Roberts v. Whaley, 192 Mich. 133, 158 N. W. 209, it was held that a daughter of a deceased workman who went to live in another home when her mother was taken to an insane asylum, at which home she was cared for and supported by the family with which she lived, her father not contributing anything to her support, was not a "dependent" on the father at the time of his death.

In Dobbie v. Egypt, etc. Steamship Co. [1913] Sc. Ct. Sess. 364, [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 75, 50 Scott. L. Rep. 222, 6 B. W. C. C. 348, it was held that since dependency is always a question of fact, children who were deserted by their father three years before his death and received no support from him during that time might still be held to be partially dependent on him if there was a reasonable probability that had he lived he would in the future have contributed to their support.

In Montgomery v. Blows [1916] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 899, it appeared that a workman lived with his daughter, paying 13s. a week for his board and lodging, bought clothing for her children and always mended their boots. The daughter's husband was earning an average of 2l. 9s. a week but allowed his wife only 23s. a week for the upkeep of the family, to which she added the profits of her father's payment for his board and lodging. It was held that the daughter was not a dependent of her father within the meaning of the Workman's Compensation Act of 1906 since the pecuniary loss arising from the death of her father fell not on her, but on her husband.

Under a statutory provision which gave compensation to members of the workman's family, limiting the members of the family to husband and wife and children under eighteen years, a married son twenty-six years old living with his wife and children has been held not to be dependent on his mother for support where he was not physically disabled and had earned as much as $60 a month. The fact that the mother contributed to the support of the son's family while he was out of employment was held not to bring him within the statute as a dependent. Taylor v. Sulzberger, etc. Co. 98 Kan. 169, 167 Pac. 435.

The reported case holds that a married daughter who had received no contributions from her father for six months prior to his death, during which time she had been supported wholly by the joint efforts of her husband and herself, was not dependent on her father for support.

ILLEGITIMATE CHILD.

The fact of dependency within the meaning of a workmen's compensation act may be established regardless of any promise on the part of the father to support an illegitimate child where the statute expressly provides that a child born out of legal wedlock is entitled to compensation if the child is dependent on the earnings of the father. Lloyd v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co. [1914] A. C. (Eng.) 733, 83 L. J. K. B. 1054, [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 450, 111 L. T. N. S. 338, 58 Sol. J. 514, 30 Times L. Rep. 456, reversing decision of the court of appeals [1913] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 130.

It has been held that if the statute does not specifically provide for illegitimate children an intent to exclude them will be implied. So, under a provision that a "child" shall include a posthumous child and a child legally adopted prior to the injury of the employee," illegitimate children are not included. Matter of Bell, 177 App. Div. 123, 163 N. Y. S. 733. The New York statute, however, as amended in 1917, declares that the word "child" shall include an "acknowledged illegitimate child dependent upon the deceased."

Where a claim was made by a girl who alleged that she was an illegitimate child of the deceased workman, it was held that it was the duty of the arbitrator in determining the question whether the claimant was a dependent, to decide incidentally her relationship to the deceased. Johnstone v. Spencer [1908] Sc. Ct. Sess. 1015, 45 Scott. L. Rep. 802, 1 B. W. C. C. 302.

Where a woman lived with a workman ostensibly as his wife for a number of years, it was held that the children although illegitimate, having been born out of legal wedlock, were nevertheless to be considered as legitimate under the workmen's compensation act, where the evidence of either the father or the mother proving their parentage was corroborated. Smith v. C. N. R. 7 West W. Rep. 596.

A mother of an illegitimate child who has obtained an order of filiation against the father of the child has been held to be entitled to compensation on behalf of the child on the death of the father through an accident, although the father managed to evade payment of the amount awarded in the filiation proceedings by concealing his identity. Bowhill Coal Co. v. Neish, 2 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 253, 46 Scott. L. Rep. 250.

In Roberts v. Whaley, 192 Mich. 133, 158 N. W. 209, it appeared that the wife of a workman had been taken to an insane asylum nine years before his death. During the wife's absence he and his housekeeper lived together as husband and wife and two children were born. The children continued to live with the father and were cared for and supported by him and considered as members of his family. Under the circumstances it was held that the children were entitled to compensation as actual dependents under the act, though they were illegitimate. The court said: "They were actually cared for and supported by the deceased, and they had a right to expect a continuation of the support and care had he lived. This brings them clearly within the statute, and establishes as a matter of fact that they were dependent, and therefore entitled to the fund. But it is said they are illegitimate children, and that the law will not encourage the immoral and unlawful relation of the parents by recognizing them. The children are in no wise responsible for their existence or status. They are here, and must be cared for and supported. They were cared for and supported by the deceased up to the time of his death. It was his legal and moral duty to support them, and he was responding to that duty when death overtook him. We think they are clearly within the class entitled to the fund, and it must be passed to them."

POSTHUMOUS CHILD.

A child born after the death of its father is entitled to compensation, where the statute includes children in being and those to be born. Lloyd v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co. [1914] A. C. (Eng.) 733, [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 450, 111 L. T. N. S. 338, 58 Sol. J. 514, 30 Times L. Rep. 456, 83 L. J. K. B. 1054, reversing [1913] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 130. See to the same effect Villar v. Gilbey [1907] A. C. (Eng.) 139, 7 Ann. Cas. 130.

ADOPTED CHILD.

Under a provision in the compensation act of Minnesota that in case of the remarriage of a widow who has dependent children, the unpaid balance of compensation which would otherwise become due her shall be paid to such children, a child adopted by the widow after the death of her husband is not entitled to compensation. State v. District Ct. 134 Minn. 131, 158 N. W. 250, wherein the court said: "We need not determine what children come within the statutes in general, for we are here only concerned with the status of petitioner, though it may be remarked that the statute includes all children of the deceased, and other children who have legal claims to his support and the right to inherit in his estate. This might perhaps include children of his wife by a former husband, or children taken into the family and formally adopted by deceased in his lifetime. But we are of opinion that a child having no such relationship or status to the deceased does not come within the statute and is not entitled to the allowance there provided for. The whole purpose of the compensation act was to make pecuniary provision for those having lawful claims upon the workman, particularly his widow and his children. The petitioner in the case at bar was not the child of the deceased, nor of his widow. She made him her child after the death of decedent, but that fact cannot bring him within the statute. The statute must be construed as having reference and application to conditions existing at the time of the death of the workman, and not to relationships created by the widow after his death. And though the statute might be construed to include children of the widow by a former marriage, who at the time of his death were living with and dependent upon the workman for support, it cannot well be construed to include children coming into an adopted relationship to the widow after his death."

Where a compensation act providing for an award to children includes children by "legal adoption" it has been held that a child which is taken into the family and treated as a natural offspring under an agreement to adopt does not come within the act if the agreement to adopt is not performed. Ellis v. Nevius Coal Co. 100 Kan. 187, 163 Pac. 654, wherein the court said: "While the expression 'legal adoption' has become common, it is really tautological. The full meaning would be expressed by the single word 'adoption,' because taking a child into a family and treating it as natural offspring is not adoption. If, however, some legislative purpose must be found for qualifying the word 'adoption' by the word 'legal,' it must have been to exclude all grafting of children upon another family stock otherwise than by adoption proceedings conforming to the law governing the subject."

STEPCHILD.

The word "children" under a statute providing for compensation to children who are actual dependents of a workman has been held to include stepchildren where the evidence shows that the stepfather supported them. Newark Paving Co. v. Klotz, 85 N. J. L. 432, 91 Atl. 91, affirmed in 86 N. J. L. 690, 92 Atl. 1086, wherein the court said: "It is urged that the court erred in allowing compensation, as in case of four children, when two of the four were only stepchildren. The evidence shows that the deceased supported the stepchildren and bought their clothes and shoes. We think this fact justified the judge in allowing for them as actual dependents. Mulhern v. McDavitt, 16 Gray (Mass.) 404. The amendment of 1913 (Pamph. L. p. 305) removes all doubt on this point for cases arising since its passage, and we find nothing in the language of the Act of 1911 to prevent us from adopting the same construction. The important words are 'actual dependents.' The word 'children' may well be held to include dependent stepchildren."

GRANDCHILD.

It has been held that where a workman supported a child of his deceased daughter for eight years during which time the father of the child was not heard from, and it was not known whether he was alive or dead, and nothing was known about the child's paternal grandparents, the child was a dependent of the workman within the English Workmen's-Compensation Act of 1897. Cooper v. Fife Coal Co. [1907] Sc. Ct. Sess. 564.

Wife.

GENERALLY.

It has been held that notwithstanding a provision in a workmen's compensation act that all questions of dependency shall be determined as of the time of the accident, a woman who marries a workman after the injury which subsequently causes his death, is entitled to compensation, as her right to it is based not on her dependency but on her wifehood. It is not the dependent wife but the "surviving wife" who is entitled to the reward. Crockett v. International R. Co. 176 App. Div. 45, 162 N. Y. S. 357, wherein the court said: "One of the fundamental rules in the construction of a statute is to consider the effects or consequences of the interpretation placed on such statute. The reasoning which would exclude this wife from the benefits of this statute simply because she was not a wife until after her husband received the injury which eventually caused his death would likewise in some cases exclude children from the benefits of the statute. A child under the statute includes a posthumous child. Section 3, subd. 11. But suppose a man married before an injury, lives a year or longer after such injury, and then dies in consequence thereof, and in the meantime a child or children be born to him before his death, such child or children would have to be excluded from the benefits of this statute if the widow in this case is to be excluded therefrom. It is unthinkable that the legislature intended such a result."

But under a similar provision in Wisconsin it has been held that the compensation was properly awarded to the surviving father to the exclusion of the alleged widow and of the employee's minor son where at the time of the accident the employee was not married. Kuetbach v. Industrial Commission (Wis.) 165 N. W. 302.

It has been held that the widow of a deceased employee was entitled to recover although at the time of his death he was not supporting her, where the act provided for compensation if the employee left any widow, child or children whom he was under legal obligation to support, the basis of recovery being not the dependency of the beneficiaries, but the obligation of the deceased to support. Goelitz Co. v. Industrial Board, 278 Ill. 164, 115 N. E. 855.

Where according to the evidence a wife was living with her husband, and had no other means of support than the money he gave her, it was presumed that at the time of his death she was as a matter of law totally dependent on him for support. Muncie Foundry, etc. Co. v. Coffee (Ind.) 117 N. E. 524.

In Hall v. Industrial Commission, 165 Wis. 364, 162 N. W. 312, L.R.A.1917D 829, it appeared that the claimant procured a divorce from her husband in Illinois where the law forbade a remarriage within one year. Within that period she went to Indiana and there married which marriage was not recognized in the state of Wisconsin. Shortly thereafter the claimant settled in Wisconsin with her alleged husband where the latter was killed by an accident arising out of his employment. Under the circumstances it was held that the claimant was not entitled to compensation as a dependent wife living with her husband at the time of his death since the marriage was in fact invalid.

In Armstrong v. Industrial Commission, 161 Wis. 530, 154 N. W. 844, there was involved an act providing as follows: "No person shall be considered a dependent unless a member of the family of the deceased employee, or one who bears to him the relation of husband or widow, or lineal descendant, or ancestor, or brother, or sister." The plaintiff who was living with a workman as his wife was held not to be a member of the family within the act where he was incompetent to contract the marriage because he had a former wife from whom he had not been divorced for one year; and it was held to be immaterial that the plaintiff was dependent on him for her support, since under the statute she could not be considered a member of his family.

Where there is no presumption of dependency the question of the dependency becomes one of fact, and if the evidence shows that the wife was not actually dependent on her husband at the time of his death her claim for compensation cannot be maintained. Sweet v. Sherwood Ice Co. (R. I.) 100 Atl. 316.

Under the Illinois act which provides that if an employee leaves any widow, child or children whom he was under legal obligation to support at the time of his injury, they shall be entitled to compensation, it is not required that there shall be proof of dependency by a surviving wife. The duty to support is imposed by law on the husband and this duty does not depend on the adequacy of the wife's means but on the marriage relation. American Milling Co. v. Industrial Board, 279 Ill. 560, 117 N. E. 147.

In Smith v. Cope [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 460, 6 B. W. C. 569, it appeared that a wife was living with her husband at the time of his death. The husband earned but a few shillings a week, while immediately before his death the wife had been earning 14s. a week for cooking besides earning a few shillings for sewing. But shortly before her husband's death the wife had injured her hand since which time she had been unable to earn anything. A ruling by the county judge that the wife was in no degree dependent on her husband during the last year or two of his life was held to be erroneous.

WIFE ABSENT FROM HUSBAND.

Under an act providing that a husband and wife are presumed to be solely dependent on each other for support at the death of either if they live together, a "living together" has been held to contemplate only the subsistence of the marital relation, and the spouses may be living together though there is a physical separation. The question does not turn on time or distance, but on the nature of the separation and the intention of the parties. Northwestern Iron Co. v. Industrial Commission, 154 Wis. 97, Ann. Cas. 1915B 877, 142 N. W. 271, L.R.A.1916A 366.

In the case of In re Gorski, 226 Mass. 456, 116 N. E. 811, it appeared that a workman left his wife in Poland on a farm. He never sent any money home but a minor son who was with his father gave him some money to send to his mother on two different occasions. When her husband left, the wife continued to live on the farm and hired a man to do the work. It was also shown that the deceased stated that he "intended to have her come over later on." A finding that the wife was living with the husband at the time of his death and entitled to compensation under the act was set aside.

Where the wife and child of a workman were both living apart from him at the time of his death, it was held that neither of them were conclusively presumed to have been wholly dependent on him for support; so that a finding that the wife was not dependent on the deceased for support but that the child was partially so dependent would not be disturbed. In re Bentley, 217 Mass. 79, 104 N. E. 432.

A provision for compensation to actual dependents has been held not to include the deserted wife of a workman who at the time of his death had been away from his wife for six years, during which time she supported herself and had no knowledge of his whereabouts until she read of his death. Batista v. West Jersey, etc. R. Co. (N. J.) 88 Atl. 954.

Where a workmen's compensation act provides that "dependents' shall mean members of the employee's family or next of kin who were wholly or partly dependent upon the earnings of the employee for support at the time of the injury," a wife living apart from her husband at the time of the injury may properly be included as a member of his family within the meaning of the provision. Newman's Case, 222 Mass. 563, 111 N. E. 359, L.R.A.1916C 1145.

It has been held that the presumption of dependency of a wife and child is not rebutted by evidence showing that the employee did not work steadily and was given to dissipation where there was also evidence that when he did work he contributed a substantial part of his earnings toward the support of his wife and daughter, and that he and his wife were not living in a state of legal separation. Taylor v. Seabrook, 87 N. J. L. 407, 94 Atl. 399.

A wife who does not live with her husband at the time of his death and who has been granted a divorce for nonsupport, although no final decree has been entered, is not presumed to be dependent under an act providing that the wife of an employee shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support on him. Sweet v. Sherwood Ice Co. (R. I.) 100 Atl. 316.

In the case of In re Nelson, 217 Mass. 467, 105 N. E. 357, it appeared that a husband and wife were voluntarily living apart, and each was earning a living. One lived in Boston and the other in Nova Scotia. There was never any talk of legal separation or divorce between them. There was no correspondence between them, and the husband sent the wife no money. It was held that the wife was not dependent on her husband's support within a statute which provided that if husband and wife were living together at the time of his death she should be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent on him. The court said: "But words which signify living together do not aptly describe such a situation. These words are used in antithesis to living apart. They exclude a condition where there is neither a home nor an actual dwelling together, and where the suspension of this relation is something more than a mere temporary incident of a changing family habitation. It seems plain that upon the facts disclosed on this record the deceased employee cannot be described rightly as 'a husband with whom she' (the wife) was living 'at the time of his death' in the sense in which these words are used in the workmen's compensation act. We are constrained not to follow Northwestern Iron Co. v. Industrial Commission, 154 Wis. 97, so far as its reasoning is inconsistent with this conclusion."

In Fierro's Case, 223 Mass. 378, 111 N. E. 957, it appeared that a workman was a native of Italy and had been in the United States about eight years. The wife lived in Italy but received money from the husband at different times amounting in all to $161, but there was no evidence to show that he had contributed anything else to her support during the eight years preceding his death. The facts were held to be insufficient to support a finding by the board that the wife was totally dependent on her husband within the meaning of an act which provided compensation for a wife who lived with her husband at the time of his death unless the living apart was due to a justifiable cause, or because the husband had deserted her.

A wife who became insane and had been in an insane asylum nine years before the death of her husband, during which time she was supported by the state, the husband having contributed nothing to such support, has been held not to be dependent on him for support at the time of his death. The fact that the wife did not voluntarily separate from her husband was held to be immaterial since the object of the statute was to provide for those only who depended on the wages of the workman at the time of his death. Roberts v. Whaley, 192 Mich. 133, 158 N. W. 209.

It has been held that where a woman had been living apart from her husband for fourteen years and was supported by her illegitimate son, not being wholly or in part dependent on the earnings of her husband, she was not entitled to compensation under the act in case of his death by accident. Turners v. Whitefield, Sc. Ct. Sess. 6 F. 822, 41 Scott. L. Rep. 631.

It has been held that a provision that a wife who lives apart from her husband for a justifiable cause shall be presumed to be dependent on her husband's earnings, does not apply to a woman who obtains a decree of divorce, with a weekly allowance, three years before the death of the husband. In re Gallagher, 219 Mass. 140, 106 N. E. 558.

To constitute a "living apart for a justifiable cause" so as to entitle a wife to compensation as a total dependent on the husband's earnings, it has been held that the cause need not be such as to entitle her to a divorce, but may be a misconduct of a lesser degree. If she lives apart from him with his consent, the law imposes on the husband the obligation to support her. So the law imposes the obligation of support where the separation is caused by the husband's ill treatment of the wife. Newman's Case, 222 Mass. 563, 111 N. E. 359, L.R.A.1916C 1145.

Under a statute giving compensation to a wife living with the employee at the time of the injury, it has been held that a wife was entitled to an award where the evidence showed that she was compelled to live apart from the deceased and that she was partially supported by him during the separation, and a state of dependency was not conclusively negated by the fact that the wife furnished the substantial means of her support and that the support furnished by the husband was irregular both as to intervals and amount. In re Carroll (Ind.) 116 N. E. 844.

In Veber's Case, 224 Mass. 86, 112 N. E. 485, it appeared that a husband and his wife lived together occasionally only and for short periods of time, at different places where he was employed as a common laborer. Their living apart was due to the husband's inability to secure remunerative employment and not to his wilful neglect. There was evidence that the husband paid doctors' and grocers' bills and gave money to the wife. A few months before her husband's death the wife obtained employment. Under the circumstances it was held that a finding by the board that the wife was living apart from her husband for justifiable cause was erroneous, as the board should have determined as a fact whether she was dependent on her husband at the time of his death in conformity with the provision of the act.

In a case wherein it appeared that several years before the death of the husband he and his wife separated by mutual consent and there was no evidence that the husband ill treated his wife or that there was any reason for their agreeing to live apart except that he was not supporting her as she needed to be supported, as he was earning $11 a week only, it was held that this did not constitute a living apart for a justifiable cause within the meaning of the act so as to entitle her to compensation. Newman's Case, 222 Mass. 563, 111 N. E. 359, L.R.A.1916C 1145.

In Finn v. Detroit, etc. R. Co. 190 Misc. 112, 155 N. W. 721, it appeared that the claimant abandoned the home of her husband of her own volition and resumed her former occupation of school teacher in another state. The evidence tended to show that she severed her marital relations for an indefinite period of time. It was held that she was not a "dependent." Touching the rule governing the presumption of dependency in the case of husband and wife the court said: "Dependency in whole or in part is primarily and as a rule a question of fact to be determined as evidence may disclose, with the exception of an absolute presumption of dependency (irrespective of the facts) in case of husband and wife or minor children under specified conditions. No distinction is made between husband and wife in that particular. If a wife living with her husband is fatally injured in an employment coming under the act, the husband living with her at the time of her death is likewise conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon her, irrespective of what the real facts are. If the parties in this case were reversed, and it was the husband demanding in his favor conclusive presumption that he was wholly dependent upon his wife because living with her at the time of her death, he would be equally entitled to it under the statute, but that he was living with her must be established before the presumption can be invoked."

Where a wife voluntarily left her husband several years before his death taking with her their daughter, and the workman did not contribute to the support of either, it was held that there was evidence sufficient to support a finding of the county court judge that neither the wife nor the daughter was dependent on the workman at the time of his death. Polled v. Great Northern R. Co. 5 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 620, [1912] W. C. Rep. 379.

Brother or Sister.

Evidence that a workman left "brothers and sisters under the age of fourteen years." has been held to afford a fair inference that several of them were of tender age and that such children would not at the expiration of three years have reached the age of sixteen years, the age fixed by the statute when payment on account of children should cease. State v. Dist. Ct. (Minn.) 163 N. W. 509.

It has been held that a finding that a sister of an employee was wholly dependent on her for support would not be disturbed merely because the dependent had a life interest in a house estimated to be worth about two thousand dollars. Buckley's Case, 218 Mass. 354, Ann. Cas. 1916B 474, 105 N. E. 979.

In Kenney's Case, 222 Mass. 401, 111 N. E. 47, it appeared that the claimant who was a sister of a workman was induced by him to remain at home and keep house, he promising to support her. Another sister paid fifteen dollars a month for her board. The brother furnished all other money needed to support the household, giving to the claimant every month twenty dollars and every week three dollars as rental received from a house owned by the three children in common. The claimant had six hundred dollars in the bank at the time of her brother's death. Under the circumstances it was held that while a finding that the claimant was a "dependent" was warranted by the facts, she was not "wholly dependent" on the employee's earnings at the time of the injury within the meaning of the act. The case was distinguished from the Buckley case, supra, in that the real estate was of considerable value, unincumbered and productive.

In the case of In re Lanman, (Ind.) 117 N. E. 671, it appeared that a workman had supported his sister for a number of years under an agreement by which she kept house for him doing no other work. Though she was a competent stenographer, her health was poor and she could not perform the work of a stenographer. This arrangement was held to have created a relationship of total dependency as a basis for compensation, the brother being under a moral if not under a legal obligation to support his sister.

It has been held that a sister of a deceased employee who left a minor daughter, would not be considered as his next of kin, unless she was a member of his family and partly dependent on his earnings for support at the time of his death. In re Murphy (Mass.) 117 N. E. 794. In that case it appeared that the sister, her minor son and the employee lived together in a house formerly owned by the mother. The evidence tended to show that she had the exclusive management of the household affairs. It was held that she could not be considered as a member of the family of the deceased. The fact that nothing was said about board and that the deceased had purchased some incidental household furnishings and supplies and cultivated the garden was held not to make him the head of the family of which his sister and his nephew could be deemed members.

It has been held that a sister was entitled to compensation for the death of her brother where the money contributed by him was for the general support of the family, but was spent in part for her support. Walz v. Holbrook, etc. Corp. 170 App. Div. 6, 155 N. Y. S. 703.

Where a brother took his sister, a working girl, to their uncle's home and agreed to pay for her board before and after the birth of her child, the brother having shown a general disposition to aid, it was held that the sister was partially dependent on the brother for support within the workmen's compensation act, although the uncle was not fully compensated for the board and the care furnished to her. Jackson v. Industrial Commission, 164 Wis. 94, 159 N. W. 561.

Under an act providing for compensation to actual dependents, a sister with whom a workman lived and to whom he paid five dollars each week for board and lodging, although he never remained at the house more than thirty-six hours a week, was held to be an actual dependent and partially supported by her brother's contributions since the payments were materially greater than the mere value of the board and lodging. Hammill v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 87 N. J. L. 388, 94 Atl. 313.

Under an act providing that the compensation under a workmen's compensation act shall be distributed according to the law providing for the distribution of other property of a deceased, the words "legal beneficiaries" have been held not to apply to brothers and sisters, the statute expressly providing that the action shall be for the sole and exclusive benefit of the surviving husband, wife, children and parents of the person whose death shall have been caused. Vaughan v. Southwestern Surety Co. (Tex.) 195 S. W. 261. See to the same effect Southern Surety Co. v. Moore, (Tex.) 196 S. W. 187. Neither will a brother and grandmother be allowed to recover under this provision as legal beneficiaries. Cole v. Mallory Steamship Co. (Tex.) 197 S. W. 326.

So where the act makes no provision for adult brothers and sisters, such brothers and sisters are not entitled to compensation. Shanahan v. Monarch Engineering Co. 219 N. Y. 469, 114 N. E. 795.

Where an employee who was of age turned over all his wages to his father, and the sister of the deceased was substantially benefited by the contribution, an award of compensation to her regardless of whether she was a minor or an adult has been held to be justifiable since she was an actual dependent. Connors v. Public Service Electric Co. 89 N. J. L. 99, 97 Atl. 792.

A clause in the New Jersey Act of 1913 providing for the distribution of compensation to "orphans and other children" has been held to apply only to children of a deceased workman and not to his brothers and sisters. Connors v. Public Service Electric Co. 89 N. J. L. 99, 97 Atl. 792.

Partial Dependency.

Where a compensation act provides for compensation to "actual dependents" of a workman, the fact that the workman's family is not entirely dependent on him does not preclude compensation. Muzik v. Erie R. Co. 85 N. J. L. 129, 89 Atl. 248, judgment affirmed 86 N. J. L. 695, 92 Atl. 1087; Jackson v. Erie R. Co., 86 N. J. L. 550, 91 Atl. 1035. And see also Havey v. Erie R. Co. 87 N. J. L. 444, 95 Atl. 124.

It has been held that in determining the compensation to be awarded to a partial dependent, the amount contributed to the dependent through the entire period during which contributions were made might be considered. In re Carroll, (Ind.) 116 N. E. 844.

Where a sister was induced by her brother to remain at home and keep house, he to furnish the support for the household, it was held that this arrangement made her a dependent as a basis for compensation. Kenney's Case, 222 Mass. 401, 111 N. E. 47, wherein it was said that in view of the fact that she had six hundred dollars in the bank and was the owner of a third interest in a property of considerable value at the time of her brother's decease she was only "partially dependent."

Where a father earns $15 per week and his son earns $12.75 per week both sums going toward the support of the family, the father is only partially dependent on the contributions made by the son. Bloomington-Bedford Stone Co. v. Phillips (Ind.) 116 N. E. 850.

Under a statute providing that a child shall be considered a partial dependent of a workman if he derives part of his support from his wages, a daughter thirty years of age whose husband is dead, and who derives part of her support from her father, has been held to be a partial dependent within the statute, and entitled to compensation. State v. District Ct. 134 Minn. 131, 158 N. W. 798.

In accordance with the rule that dependency must be determined by the facts in each case, it has been held that partial dependency may exist, though the contributions have been made at irregular intervals and in irregular amounts and though the dependent may have other means of support. Hotel Bond Co's Appeal, 89 Conn. 143; 93 Atl. 245.

In Ford v. Oakdale Colliery Co. [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 46, the evidence showed that the deceased son paid his mother 10s. a week, and her two daughters who lived with her each paid her 6s. a week, out of which they were provided with food and clothing. An award by the county court judge on the basis of partial dependency was held to be proper under the evidence. The court said: "There were a number of reasons for the decision of the county court judge; one of them was that these girls, the daughters of the applicant, were themselves claimants as having benefited by the funds which were sent by their brother to the house. The county court judge had to determine whether any compensation was due to them, and he decided that no compensation was due to them. Having got so far, and found that the cost to the mother of each of the girls' feeding, clothing, and share of rent did not exceed 6s. a week, it is an easy step to go beyond that and infer that in the opinion of the county court judge the 6s. contributed by the girls to the mother was more than she spent on them, for in these very humble circumstances the cost of living is very little. I agree that the appeal fails."

In Hotel Bond Co's Appeal, 89 Conn. 143, 93 Atl. 245, the evidence showed that a workman before his death had contributed to the support of his mother who, though not immediately dependent, was liable to become so because of old age, condition of mind, lack of regular employment and property. It was held that a condition of partial dependency was shown and that the mother was entitled to compensation.

In Miller v. Riverside Storage, etc. Co. 189 Mich. 360, 155 N. W. 462, a sister testified that she received $6 a week from her brother regularly for a period of time before his death and that he gave her other sums of money from time to time which she used to regain her impaired health. A finding by the accident board that she was partly dependent on the brother was held not to be wholly unsupported by the testimony, although her own average earnings were $10 per week. The court said: "Unless a standard of independence for unmarried women who work for and live upon wages can be set up which classes as independent all who earn $10 or even $12 a week, or more, it cannot be said there was no testimony tending to prove the dependency of claimant. It is manifest there are many women who regard themselves as independent, who live wholly upon their wages, who receive a smaller weekly wage. According to the report of the commissioner of labor published in 1915, there were employed in Detroit 1,974 female stenographers who received wages; the average daily wage being $2.22. In two cities only out of sixty in the state reported is there paid a higher average daily wage. Assuming six days a week's work, the average wage per week was $13.32. This is more than claimant ever received, and more than $3 per week more than she was earning when her deposition in this case was taken. That she can maintain herself upon the wages she is getting is probably true, at least with good, or fair, health. She says she has not good health, and an agent of her former employer testified that she is nervous and excitable."

In the case of In re Peters (Ind.) 116 N. E. 848, it appeared that a father was earning $15 a week which went to the family fund. A son earned $12.75 which also went for the support of the family. On the death of the son the father was held to be only partially dependent on the son's earnings. It was further held that the cost of maintaining his minor son should not be considered in determining the amount of compensation to which the father was entitled under the act since the father was entitled to the wages of his minor child. See to the same effect Mahoney v. Gamble-Desmond Co. 90 Conn. 255, 96 Atl. 1025, L.R.A.1916E 110.

In a case where the evidence, though weak and unsatisfactory, showed that a workman contributed to the support of his sister, it was held that a finding that the sister was a partial dependent would not be interfered with. State v. District Ct. 132 Minn. 249, 156 N. W. 120.

It has been held that partial dependency is sufficient to justify an award, and since the question of dependency is one of fact the decision of the commission on the evidence is final. Matter of Bylow, 179 App. Div. 555, 166 N. Y. S. 874.

Where a woman whose husband had deserted her cohabited with another man and a child was born, it was held that the child was totally dependent on the earnings of the father, although the mother, when her husband deserted her, was awarded a separation allowance of 23s. per week for the support of herself and the legitimate children. Even if the separation allowance was mixed with the earnings of the father as a common fund to be used in the same manner, it was held, the child could not be regarded as only partially dependent on a precarious allowance made for the purpose of maintaining the mother and the other children. Taylor v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co. [1916] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 765, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 325, 115 L. T. N. S. 409, 60 Sol. J. 665, 85 L. J. K. B. 1680.

In Rhyner v. Hueber Bldg. Co. 171 App. Div. 56, 156 N. Y. S. 903, it was held that the claimant need not be reduced to absolute want in order to come within the provision of the act, but that partial dependency was sufficient. Hence, the fact that a mother had some small means and some other sources of revenue at the time her son died, was held not to preclude her from being a "dependent" within the act. See also Carter's Case, 221 Mass. 105, 108 N. E. 911; Parson v. Murphy (Neb.) 163 N. W. 847; Dazy v. Apponaug Co. 36 R. I. 81, 89 Atl. 160. And see the reported case.

In Rintoul v. Dalmeny Oil Co. [1908] Sc. Ct. Sess. (Eng.) 1025, 45 Scott. L. Rep. 809, it appeared that a widow who had five sons, four of whom were married and had children, lived with her unmarried son and was entirely supported by him. On a claim for compensation for the death of that son it was held that although she had a right to relief from the four other sons, who were able to contribute to her support, she was wholly dependent on the earnings of the deceased within the meaning of the act. The court per Lord McLaren said: "Given the relationship, then I think the injury must always be, did the deceased in fact maintain his mother or child, or whoever the person may be, who is making the claim, and if he did so, I think it is irrelevant to consider whether there are others against whom a claim might have been made upon the same ground of relationship."

It has been held that where the statute does not require that a person shall be wholly dependent in order to be entitled to the death benefit, a sister who is in part dependent for her support on other sources than the contributions of a workman is nevertheless entitled to the benefit under the statute. Actual partial dependency of a person bearing one of the several relationships specified in the statute is sufficient. Walz v. Holbrook, etc. Corp. 170 App. Div. 6, 155 N. Y. S. 703.

Where an employee left surviving him two sisters under eighteen years and a mother to whom he gave $20 a month which the mother used for her support and that of her minor children, a finding by the compensation commissioners that she was partially dependent on him was sustained although the mother received other support from her husband who earned $50 a month. Kennerison v. Thames Towboat Co. 89 Conn. 367, 94 Atl. 372, L.R.A.1916A 436. See to the same effect Smith v. National Sash, etc. Co. 96 Kan. 816, 153 Pac. 533; Reardon v. Philadelphia, etc. R. Co. 85 N. J. L. 90, 88 Atl. 970; Connors v. Public Service Elec. Co. 89 N. J. L. 99, 97 Atl. 792; Walz v. Holbrook, 170 App. Div. 6, 155 N. Y. S. 703.

In Caliendo's Case, 217 Mass. 498, 107 N. E. 370, it appeared that a mother and sister of an employee lived in Italy. By reason of failing eyesight they became incapacitated to follow their usual occupations and were consequently forced to rely on him for their means of subsistence. It also appeared that an aunt of the employee contributed small gratuitous remittances and another member of the family earned six or seven cents a day. It was held that the mother and sister were wholly dependent on the employee for their support within the act.

In Quebec a relative in the ascendent line is apparently not entitled to compensation for the death of an employee by whom he was not wholly supported. Laflamme v. Levis Ferry Co. 47 Quebec Super. Ct. 291; Lamontagne v. Quebec R. Light, etc. Co. 50 Can. Sup. Ct. 423, affirming 23 Quebec K. B. 212, but referring to a subsequent amendment of the act.

Devolution of Dependent's Right.

An award to a wholly dependent person vests in the dependent when the award is made, and when the dependent dies his or her personal representatives are entitled to the balance remaining unpaid. See State v. Industrial Commission, Ann. Cas. 1917D 1162 and note.

Under a statute providing for the payment of compensation to the heirs of a workman to whose support he had contributed, it has been held that an employer could not be compelled to make payment to the estate of a workman's mother who was his only dependent although the statute provided that the compensation should be distributed in accordance with the laws relating to descent and distribution of personal property. The statute must be construed to mean, it was held, that the distribution was to be made to those only to whose support the employee contributed during his lifetime. Matecny v. Vierling Steel Works, 187 Ill. App. 448, wherein the court said: "In refusing the first proposition of law submitted by the appellant, the trial court interpreted the word 'beneficiaries' in paragraph e as meaning all the heirs of the deceased, regardless of whether they were dependent or not. We cannot agree with this interpretation. Such a construction, in our judgment, does violence to the plain purpose and spirit of the act, and it would work a grave injustice in this and many other cases arising under the act. The word 'beneficiary' means, 'one for whose benefit a trust is created, a cestui que trust.' Black's Law Dictionary; Bouvier's Law Dictionary. Keeping in mind the purpose of the act, it is not difficult to interpret paragraph e. The beneficiaries contemplated by the paragraph are the particular heirs who have suffered pecuniary loss by reason of the cutting off of the wages of the deceased employee. These are the heirs who are entitled to the compensation under the act. Paragraph e simply prescribes the method of determining the respective shares of the dependent heirs in the trust fund in the hands of the administrator."

In Ivey v. Ivey [1912] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 118, 5 B. W. C. 279, it was held that where an award was made in favor of a workman's widow and four children in allotted shares, and the widow died before her share was exhausted, the unexhausted portion did not pass to her legal personal representatives but could be varied and allocated to the children.

It has been held that where the deceased left two children who were conclusively presumed to be dependent on him and one of the children subsequently died, a decree that the benefit should be divided between the administrator of the deceased and the administrator of the minor child, which decree was not appealed from by the dependents, would not be disturbed at the instance of the insurer since it was obliged to pay the amount and the person to whom the payments must be made were the same whether the surviving child was entitled to the entire payment or whether there was a division. The court, however, refused to give an opinion as to the soundness of the decree. In re Janes, 217 Mass. 192, 104 N. E. 556.

Person Entitled to Receive Payment.

Where a workmen's compensation act provides that the "legal representative" shall have a right of action for the compensation in case of the death of the employee, "legal representative" has been held to mean the dependent and not the executor or administrator. Dearborn v. Peugeot Auto Import Co. 170 App. Div. 93, 155 N. Y. S. 760.

So where an act provides that the compensation and benefits shall be paid to employees or their dependents, any payments accruing after the death of a workman are payable to the dependents and not to the workman's personal representatives. Wozneak v. Buffalo Gas Co. 175 App. Div. 268, 161 N. Y. S. 675.

In Woodcock v. Walker, 170 App. Div. 4, 155 N. Y. S. 702, it was held that where the act authorizes the widow as the principal dependent to make an agreement with the employer subject to the approval of the commission as to the payment of the award both to herself and to her children, the moneys allotted to infant children in the case of the death of the employee may be paid to the widow since it does not seem probable that it was the intention of the legislature to require an appointment of a general guardian with an additional expense in order to enable the children to collect.

Apportionment of Compensation.

Under a provision that if there shall be more than one person wholly dependent the benefit shall be divided equally among them, it has been held that a child of the deceased by a former wife, who is presumed to be dependent, is entitled to share equally with the surviving wife, although the provision, technically speaking, applies only to cases where the dependency is not presumed or where the presumed dependents are all children under eighteen years. Coakley's Case, 216 Mass. 71, Ann. Cas. 1915A 867, 102 N. E. 930.

It has been held that where a son contributed to the support of his parents and the claim for compensation was made in the name of both the father and the mother, it was not necessary that the mother should file a waiver of her claim. Buhse v. Whitehead etc. Iron Works (Mich.) 160 N. W. 557.

In Matter of Bylow, 179 App. Div. 555, 166 N. Y. S. 874, it was found that the deceased who was unmarried and without children, left surviving and partially dependent on him for support at the time of the accident his mother, three half sisters, and one half brother. All the children were under the age of sixteen and going to school. An award by the commission of $1.45 per week for each was held to be a proper award where the evidence was that at the time of his death the deceased was earning one dollar per day although in previous employments by other employers he had worked for a smaller wage.

Under a provision giving compensation to the deceased's widow, child or children, or parents or other lineal heirs, it has been held that where an employee left a dependent mother and a nondependent brother and sisters, the compensation was to be awarded to the mother alone, the brother and sisters not being entitled to share with the mother in the compensation allowed. Mateeny v. Vierling Steel Works, 187 Ill. App. 448.

In State v. District Ct. 133 Minn. 454, 158 N. W. 792, the statute involved was as follows: "Partial dependents shall be entitled to receive only that proportion of the benefits provided for actual dependents which the average amount of the wages regularly contributed by the deceased to such partial dependent at, and for a reasonable time immediately prior to the injury, bore to the total income of the dependent during the same time." It was held that the monthly contributions of the deceased to his mother should be considered as a part of her total income in determining the amount she was entitled to recover as a partial dependent.

EUGENE DIETZEN COMPANY

v.

INDUSTRIAL BOARD OF ILLINOIS ET AL.

Illinois Supreme Court—June 21, 1917.

279 Ill. 11; 116 N. E. 684.

Workmen's Compensation Acts — What Is Accident Arising Out of Employment.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 1 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1915-16, c. 48, § 126), providing for compensation for accidental injuries "arising out of and in the course of the employment," it is not sufficient that the injury occurs in the course of the employment, but it must also arise out of the employment; that is, it must be an accident resulting from a risk reasonably incidental to the employment.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Where a servant is employed to do a certain service and is injured in the performance of a different service voluntarily undertaken, the master is not liable.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Where a servant voluntarily and without direction from the master, and without his acquiescence, goes into hazardous work outside of his contract of hiring, he puts himself beyond the protection of the master's implied undertaking, and, if injured, must suffer the consequences.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

A master is not liable for injuries to a servant unless the servant was at the time in the performance of some duty for which he was employed; and a "volunteer" is one who introduces himself into matters which do not concern him, and does, or undertakes to do, something which he is not bound to do or which is not in pursuance or protection of any interest of the master, and which is undertaken in the absence of any peril requiring him to act as in an emergency.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The scope of a servant's duties is determined by what he was employed to do and what he actually did with his employer's knowledge and consent, and an employee injured when performing the services he was in the habit of performing is not a volunteer in performing such duties.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

An employee is engaged in the course of his employment when injury occurs within the period of his employment, at a place where he may reasonably be, and while he is reasonably fulfilling the duties of his employment or is engaged in doing something incidental to it.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

A workman was employed to polish small metal articles on a buffing machine, to which was attached an exhaust pipe containing a fan to carry away dust from the work. The exhaust system was entirely separate from the buffing machine and in charge of a special responsible man. The workman disregarded his instructions not to meddle with the exhaust system, and took off a cover on the pipe near the fan and reached down to recover a metal piece he had accidentally dropped into the system below the buffing wheel, and was cut on the hand by the fan. It is held that the accident was not incidental to the work in which he was employed, and he could not recover compensation.

[See note at end of this case.]

Review of Findings.

While the industrial board's findings of fact are conclusive on the supreme court, the legal conclusions of that board, based on their findings, are subject to that court's supervision.

[See Ann. Cas. 1916B 475; Ann. Cas. 1918B 647.]

Same.

If it is clear upon the facts found by the industrial board that as a legal conclusion an injury was not accidental or that it did not arise in the course of the employment, a contrary conclusion awarding compensation will not be allowed to stand.

Error to Circuit Court, Cook county:
TORRISON, Judge.

Claim for compensation under workmen's compensation act. Giuseppe Cappucio, claimant, and Eugene Dietzen Company, defendant.

Claim allowed by Industrial Board. Decision affirmed by Circuit Court. Defendant brings error. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Thomas C. Angerstein and George W. Angerstein for plaintiff in error.

[12] CARTER, C. J.—Giuseppe Cappucio, while in the employ of plaintiff in error on July 15, 1914, sustained a serious injury to his right hand, for which he filed a claim before the Industrial Board. Upon hearing before the committee of arbitration an award was entered in his favor. On petition for review filed by plaintiff in error, the Industrial Board, without the introduction of additional evidence, entered an award in Cappucio's favor, requiring plaintiff in error to pay him five dollars a week for 112 weeks. The case was duly taken by certiorari to the circuit court of Cook county, which, after a hearing, affirmed the award of the Industrial Board, [13] the trial judge certifying that in his opinion the cause was one proper to be reviewed by this court. The case was thereafter brought here by writ of error.

Cappucio began work for plaintiff in error on June 27, 1914. He first worked at nickel-plating, but a few days before his injury was put to work on a buffing machine. This machine consisted of an upright stand, shaped somewhat like the letter T, along the top of which was a revolving spindle. At one end of the spindle was a soft buffing wheel and at the other end a hard buffing wheel. Cappucio was employed to work on the soft buff, his sole duty at the time being to polish small metal handles for tape lines, these handles being about three inches in size each way and shaped similar to a stirrup. His work was to take one of these metal pieces out of a box, hold it against the cloth buff and polish it and place it in another box. When one box was completed it was taken away and another box brought. Just below the buffing wheel at which he worked was a small box-like receptacle into which the dust from the work fell. The receptacle was supported by a tripod of three iron rods attached to the floor but was not in any way attached to or a part of the buffing machine. From this receptacle a pipe, something like a jointed stovepipe, led downward and away from the operator as he stood facing the machine, this pipe curving to connect with a larger exhaust pipe. This larger pipe in turn connected with a large case of sheet metal, which was fully enclosed and in which was a fan, a few feet distant from the buffing machine. The pipe connecting with the box-like receptacle could be detached from the exhaust system if by chance any piece of metal that was being polished should be accidentally dropped into it. There was a similar arrangement below the hard buffing wheel, connecting in the same manner with the exhaust system. Between the buffing wheel and the fan there was located on the top of the larger pipe an opening, covered by a tight cover. The only [14] proper way to get into the exhaust system near the fan was to take off this tight cover and reach down into the pipe and then over into the case in which the fan was located. The evidence shows, without contradiction, that the exhaust system was entirely separate from the buffing machine. This exhaust system was in charge of a special, responsible man for the purpose of cleaning and oiling, which work, the evidence tends to show, was done by this man on Saturday of each week. Before he began this polishing work Cappucio was instructed by another employee, Anders, an expert metal polisher of about nineteen years' experience. Anders testified that he told Cappucio his sole duty was to take the metal pieces and hold them against the buffing wheel; that he should not lift the cover and reach into the exhaust pipe. He testified that he instructed Cappucio, if anything went wrong, to notify him. Cappucio stated in his testimony that he had been instructed by Anders that if anything went wrong to come and see him, and that he had notified Anders on several occasions when things went wrong. Cappucio knew that the exhaust system was to carry away the dust and dirt, and there was a loud noise made in the case, so it is argued he must have known that a fan or some other revolving machinery was in the large part of the exhaust system where the fan was located. Anders testified that on a previous occasion he had seen Cappucio take the cover off of the hole in the large exhaust pipe and start to reach into the pipe and that he had instructed Cappucio not to do it; that he (Anders) would attend to that. Cappucio denied receiving such orders and instructions, although two witnesses called on behalf of the plaintiff in error testified that while Cappucio was in the hospital recovering from the injuries he told them he had been so instructed by Anders. Cappucio testified that on the day he was injured he accidentally dropped one of these metal pieces that he was polishing, into the receptacle immediately below said buffing wheel; that he did not notify [15] anyone but went to the opening in the pipe to which we have referred, took off the cover and reached his hand down into the exhaust pipe and around inside, and was injured by the fan, which broke and cut his hand.

Section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act provides, among other things, that the employer is required to pay "compensation for accidental injuries sustained by any employee arising out of and in the course of employment," etc. (Hurd's Stat. 1916, p. 1272.) It is conceded this injury was accidental and that the award is not unjust if an award of any nature should be allowed. The sole question raised here is whether the injury arose "out of and in the course of the employment" of Cappucio. It is not sufficient that the injury occurs in the course of the employment. It must also arise out of the employment. These words are used conjunctively, and the circumstances of the accident must satisfy both the one and the other. "The words 'out of,' point, I think, to the origin or cause of the accident; the words 'in the course of,' to the time, place and circumstances under which the accident takes place. The former words are descriptive of the character or quality of the accident; the latter words relate to the circumstances under which an accident of the character or quality takes place." (Fitzgerald v. Clarke, 1 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 197; Boyd on Workmen's Comp. sec. 472.) It must be an accident resulting from a risk reasonably incidental to the employment. "An accident arises 'in the course of' the employment if it occurs while the employee is doing what a man so employed may reasonably do within a time during which he is employed and at a place where he may reasonably be during that time to do that thing." (Bryant v. Fissell, 84 N. J. L. 72, 86 Atl. 458. See also 1 Honnold on Workmen's Comp. sec. 113.) "An accident arises 'out of' the employment when it is something the risk of which might have been contemplated by a reasonable person, when entering the employment, as incidental to it. . . . A risk is [16] incidental to the employment when it belongs to or is connected with what a workman has to do in fulfilling his contract of service. . . . It may be incidental to the employment when it is either an ordinary risk directly connected with the employment, or an extraordinary risk which is only indirectly connected therewith." (Bryant v. Fissell, supra, on p. 461.) It is stated that it may be "difficult to conceive of any injury which arises 'out of' the employment which does not arise 'in the course of' it; but the converse, however, is not true. . . . The determination of this question presents one of the most difficult problems in connection with the act. It has been said that each case must depend upon its own circumstances and cannot be solved by reference to any formula or general principle." (Glass on Workmen's Comp. Law, 40.) "An accident only arises out of and in the course of a workman's employment when it arises from his doing or omitting to do some act within the sphere of his employment. If he chooses to step outside the sphere of his employment and to do something he is not expected or required to do, he does so at his own risk and is not under the protection of the act. . . . A sharp distinction is drawn between doing of a thing recklessly or negligently which a workman is employed to do and the doing of a thing altogether outside and unconnected with what he is employed to do, and if an accident happens in the former case it arises out of and in the course of the employment but in the latter case. 'There are prohibitions which limit the sphere of employment and prohibitions which only deal with conduct within the sphere of employment. A transgression of a prohibition of the latter class leaves the sphere of employment where it was, and consequently will not prevent the recovery of compensation. A transgression of the former class carries with it the result that the man has gone outside the sphere.'" (Elliott on Workmen's Comp. Act (7th ed.) 50. See also 1 Honnold on Workmen's Comp. sec. 114.) "If the [17] act which caused the injury was within the scope of the servant's employment, the mere fact that he had been expressly forbidden to do that act will not necessarily be fatal to his claim." (Glass on Workmen's Comp. Law, 52.) "Ordinarily, where workmen are not employed to work with machinery or in close proximity thereto, they are held not entitled to compensation for injuries received where they voluntarily put themselves in a position to be injured thereby. . . . An accident does not arise out of the employment if, at the time, the workman is arrogating to himself duties which he was neither engaged nor entitled to perform. But the courts are inclined not to be too severe upon workmen who are injured by attempts to further the master's business, although the attempt is in a line somewhat outside the precise scope of the employment." (Glass on Workmen's Comp. Law, 48.) Where a servant is employed to do a certain service and is injured in the performance of a different service voluntarily undertaken, the master is not held liable; also where a servant voluntarily and without direction from the master, and without his acquiescence, goes into hazardous work outside of his contract of hiring he puts himself beyond the protection of the master's implied undertaking, and if he is injured he must suffer the consequences. (1 Bradbury on Workmen's Comp. 458, 459.) A master is not liable for the injuries to his servant unless the servant was at the time in the performance of some duty for which he was employed. (Stagg v. Edward Weston Tea, etc. Co. 169 Mo. 489, 69 S. W. 391.) A volunteer is one who introduces himself into matters which do not concern him, and does, or undertakes to do, something which he is not bound to do or which is not in pursuance or protection of any interest of the master, and which is undertaken in the absence of any peril requiring him to act as on an emergency. (Kelly v. Tyra, 103 Minn. 176, 114 N. W. 760, 115 N. W. 636, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 334.) The scope of a servant's duties is determined by what he was employed to do and what he [18] actually did with his employer's knowledge and consent, and an employee who was performing the same services he was in the habit of performing when he was injured is not a volunteer in performing such duties. (Dixon v. Chiquola Mfg. Co. 86 S. C. 435, 68 S. E. 643.) These rules were briefly summed up in Moore v. Manchester Liners [1910] A. C. (Eng.) 498, where it was stated an accident to an employee occurs in the course of employment when it takes place "while he is doing what a man so employed may reasonably do within a time during which he is employed and at a place where he may reasonably be during that time to do that thing."

It is the rule that an employee is engaged in the course of his employment when the injury occurs within the period of his employment, at a place where he may reasonably be and while he is reasonably fulfilling the duties of his employment or is engaged in doing something incidental to it. Where a workman sustained an injury while attempting to regain his pipe, which had fallen, it was held that his action in attempting to recover his pipe, under the circumstances, seemed to satisfy all the conditions. He was within the period of his employment, at a place where he might reasonably be. It was held "he had a right to be at the place, riding on or walking beside the wagon; he was within the time during which he was employed, because the accident happened during the actual period of transit; and he was doing a thing which a man, while working, may reasonably do. A workman of his sort may reasonably smoke, he may reasonably drop his pipe, and he may reasonably pick it up again." (M'Lauchlan v. Anderson, 4 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 376.) A boy who had charge of the handle of a machine lifted off the cover over some pinion wheels and played with them, with the result that his hand was caught in the wheels and the end of one of his fingers was torn off. He had orders not to lift the cover or touch the pinion wheels. It was held that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. (Furnias v. Gartaide [19] [1910] 3 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 411.) A boy employed in a spinning mill injured himself while cleaning the machinery when it was in motion. He was not employed to clean the machinery, and it was held that the accident did not arise out of the employment. (Naylor v. Musgrave Spinning Co. 4 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 286.) A lad fourteen years of age was employed as a bobbin boy at a spinning mill. His duty was to take off the bobbins and he had been fully instructed for the work. While the machine was in motion he attempted to put on some weights which had fallen off, and was injured. The duty of putting on weights belonged to men employed for that purpose. It was held that the master was not liable for the injuries received. (Michael v. Henry, 209 Pa. St. 213, 58 Atl. 125.) A boy employed in a boot factory, who was directed to take an insole down-stairs to have it remolded, and in the absence of the operator of the molding machine attempted to remold it himself and was injured, was held entitled to compensation where he had not been expressly forbidden to touch the molding machine. (Tobin v. Hearn, 44 Ir. L. T. (Eng.) 197.) A woman injured while cleaning a part of the machinery that it was not her duty to clean was held to have suffered an injury arising out of and in the course of the employment, where she was not expressly forbidden to clean the machinery. (Greer v. Thompson, [1912] B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 272.) Authority for a servant to act on an emergency, in his master's interest, may be implied. Where a workman was injured in attempting to stop his master's runaway horse it was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment although his work was wholly unconnected with the horses. (Rees v. Thomas, [1899] 1 Q. B. (Eng.) 1015, 68 L. J. Q. B. (Eng.) 539.) A workman was employed to look after baggage, clean out lion cages and generally make himself useful, but it was no part of his duty to feed the lions. One afternoon this workman was left in sole charge of the cages of lions, with orders to see that no harm came to the lions or to anyone by reason of their fierceness. One of [20] the lions got out of a cage and into a dressing room, but there was no evidence to show how it happened. The workman went into the dressing room and tried to drive the lion back into the cage, when the lion killed him. It was held that as he had been left in charge it was his duty to get the lion back into the cage, and that as he was killed in the discharge of his duty the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. (Hapelman v. Poole [1908] 2 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 48.)

These cases all serve to illustrate the principles as to when a workman is acting in the scope of his duties and when the accident arises out of and in the course of the employment. The difficulty arises only in applying these principles to the special facts of a given case. Cappuccio testified that he had seen Anders put his hand in the pipe when articles had dropped in and that he (Cappuccio) had never been forbidden to do the same thing, while Anders testified that he had at one time seen Cappuccio start to reach inside the pipe and had forbidden him to do so, and that he told Cappucio to call on him if anything went wrong. The Industrial Board found that the weight of the testimony showed Cappucio had been forbidden to reach into said pipe to recover articles that were dropped. It can hardly be said that the evidence shows that there was any emergency in order to protect the property of the employer that would justify Cappucio in reaching into the exhaust pipe. There is no evidence tending to show that there was any danger from the piece of metal being left in the exhaust pipe. Had the piece fallen upon the floor, there can be no question that it might well be considered as in the line of his duty for Cappucio to have picked it up, as that would ordinarily involve no danger and would be naturally incidental to the work in which he was employed. Of course, it can readily be understood that he desired to have his box complete and all the handles there and not to be criticised because he had lost one; but it is plain from the construction of the [21] exhaust system, in connection with the machinery at which he was working, that he must move with deliberation in order to step around to the large pipe, take off the tightly fitting cover and then reach in some distance,—far enough to bring his hand in contact with the fan. It certainly cannot be said that there was an emergency and that he was acting under a sudden impulse to protect the property of the employer. It is plain from the evidence and from the photograph in the record showing the construction of the machinery and the exhaust pipe, that they were totally distinct; that there was nothing in the construction that would tend in the slightest degree to lead Cappucio to think his work was in any way connected with cleaning the exhaust pipe or taking anything therefrom that had fallen into it, when in doing so he would be required to take off the tightly fitting cover of the pipe in order to reach into the opening. Whether this is true or not, we think the conclusion necessarily follows from this record that the act of opening this exhaust pipe to get the piece of metal out had no such reasonable connection with his work as to justify him in the conclusion that it was his duty to take off this cover and attempt to recover the article. In Bischoff v. American Car, etc., Co. 190 Mich. 229, 157 N. W. 34, it was held that "notice must be taken that a factory of to-day usually includes within the fields of its operations many fairly distinct lines of work, from that of the roustabout engaged in the ordinary labor that almost anyone may perform, to that of the expert mechanic, which can be done safely by those only with skill and experience. The difference between these various kinds of work was always recognized by the common law, and it was held to be negligence for the master to require of the servant, without warning and instructing him, the performance of work outside and more dangerous than that which the latter had contracted to perform. Such classification of work exists in the very nature of things, and as much under the statute as at common law. Its recognition [22] is required by any proper organization of a factory, not only for efficiency but as well for the purpose of guarding against accident and injury. And if a workman, when there is no emergency, should of his own volition see fit to intermeddle with something entirely outside the work for which he is employed, he ought not to be allowed compensation upon the mere plea that he thought his act would be for the benefit of his employer. That plea may be of value under some circumstances, but it cannot authorize an employee to voluntarily take upon himself the performance of work for which he was not employed." The reasoning in that case is clearly applicable to the work which Cappucio was employed to do,—that is, the work of polishing was clearly different from the act of putting his hand into the pipe to clean it out or remove an article from it.

While the Industrial Board's findings of fact are conclusive on this court, the legal conclusions of that board, based upon their findings, are subject to the supervision of this court. The Workmen's Compensation act does not make the board's legal conclusions binding upon this court. If it is clear upon the facts that as a legal conclusion an injury was not accidental or that it did not arise in the course of the employment, a contrary conclusion awarding compensation will not be allowed to stand. (Bell v. Hayes-Longia Co. 192 Mich. 90, 158 N. W. 179.) It seems manifest from the uncontroverted testimony in the record that Cappucio was not acting within the scope of his employment at the time he was injured.

The judgment of the circuit court will be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to enter an order setting aside the award of the Industrial Board.

Reversed and remanded, with directions.

NOTE.

What Is Accident Arising Out of and in Course of Employment within Meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act.

I. Introductory, 769.

II. In General, 769.

III. Burden of Proof:

1. General Rule, 770.

2. Burden Not Sustained, 771.

3. Burden Sustained, 777.

IV. Risk of Accident:

1. In General, 786.
2. Risk Incidental to Employment, 787.
3. Risk Not Incidental to Employment, 794.

V. Scope of Employment:

1. In General, 800.
2. Act Not within Scope of Employment, 801.
3. Act within Scope of Employment, 806.

VI. Disobedience or Negligence of Workman:

1. In General, 809.
2. Disobedience or Negligence Precluding Recovery, 809.
3. Disobedience or Negligence Not Precluding Recovery, 812.

VII. Beginning of Employment:

1. In General, 813.
2. Employment Begun, 814.
3. Employment Not Begun, 815.

VIII. Interruption of Employment:

1. In General, 815.
2. Seaman Returning to Ship, 816.
3. Other Cases, 816.

IX. End of Employment:

1. In General, 819.
2. Employment Not Terminated, 819.
3. Employment Terminated, 822.

I. Introductory.

The earlier cases discussing the question what is an "accident arising out of and in the course of the employment" within the meaning of a workmen's compensation act, are treated in the notes to Parker v. Hambrook, Ann. Cas. 1913C 1; Plumb v. Cobden Flour Mills Co. Ann. Cas. 1914B 495; and Parker v. Ship Black Rock, Ann. Cas. 1916B 1290. This note reviews the recent cases on the subject, arranged in accordance with the scheme adopted in the previous notes.

As to whether a disease is an accident within the meaning of a workmen's compensation act, see the notes to the following cases: Brintons v. Turvey, 2 Ann. Cas. 137; Broderick v. London County Council, 15 Ann. Cas. 885; Sullivan v. Modern Brotherhood of America, Ann. Cas. 1913A 1116; and Vennen v. New Dells Lumber Co. Ann. Cas. 1918B 293.

The question what is an "injury" or a "personal injury" within the meaning of a workmen's compensation act is treated in the notes to Hurle's Case, Ann. Cas. 1915C 919, and Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission, Ann. Cas. 1918B 354.

II. In General.

The courts are practically unanimous in holding that the words "accident arising out of" Ann. Cas. 1918B.—49.

of and in the course of the employment," as used in a workmen's compensation act, should be given a broad and liberal construction in order that the humane purpose of the enactment may be realized. Holland-St. Louis Sugar Co. v. Shraluka (Ind.) 116 N. E. 330; United Paperboard Co. v. Lewis (Ind.) 117 N. E. 276; Haskell, etc. Car Co. v. Brown (Ind.) 117 N. E. 555; Heitz v. Ruppert, 218 N. Y. 148, 112 N. E. 750, L.R.A.1917A 344, affirming order 171 App. Div. 961, 155 N. Y. S. 1112, reargument denied 218 N. Y. 702, 113 N. E. 1057. See also Duffield v. Peers, 37 Ont. L. Rep. 652, 32 Dominion L. Rep. 339.

"The workmen's compensation act was designed to furnish compensation whenever employees suffer injury or death in the course of the employment from accidents arising out of it. It was intended to let those employers and employees, who so have chosen, escape from the harsh consequences which so often result from the application to their status of the common-law rule of negligence, contributory negligence, assumption of risk and the negligence of fellow servant. And every person who is entitled to avail himself of the compensation law is presumed to have so done when the relation of employer and employee was assumed. As remedial legislation it should not receive a narrow construction, but should be applied fairly and broadly with a view to confer the benefits intended. It may be that in some particular case, remedies afforded by the law outside of this act would be to the servant's advantage. But where both employer and employee have concluded to be bound by the compensation act, in respect to accidental injuries suffered in the employment, courts should not be too prone to exclude an accident when it does occur from the operation of the compact. It will not do to adopt a rule excluding an accidental injury from the compensation act, if the servant may recover more damages under other provisions of law, and including it only when otherwise no compensation is attainable. Both employer and employee must be treated with the same fairness." Mahowald v. Thompson-Starratt Co. 134 Minn. 113, 158 N. W. 913, rehearing denied 134 Minn. 117, 159 N. W. 565.

To entitle a workman to an award of compensation under a workmen's compensation act, his injuries must result from an accident both arising out of and in the course of his employment. The two elements must coexist. They must be concurrent and simultaneous. The one without the other will not sustain an award. Yet the two are so entwined that they are usually considered together in the reported cases, and a discussion of one of them involves the other. Holland-St. Louis Sugar Co. v. Shraluka (Ind.) 116 N. E. 330.

"In the course of" points to the place and circumstances under which the accident takes place and the time when it occurred. In order to restrict beyond the reach of question the words "in the course of the employment," the words "arising out of" were added, so that the proof of the one without the other will not bring a case within the act. The term "arising out of" in the act points to the origin or cause of the injury. It presupposes a causal connection between the employment and the injury. Larke v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 90 Conn. 303, 97 Atl. 320, L.R.A. 1916E 584.

The words "out of" involve the idea that the accident is in some sense due to the employment. Griffith v. Cole (Ia.) 165 N. W. 577.

"The statute does not provide an insurance against every accident happening to the workman while he is engaged in the employment. The words 'arising out of and in the course of employment' are conjunctive, and relief can be had under the act only when the accident arose both 'out of' and 'in the course of' employment. The injury must be received (1) while the workman is doing the duty he is employed to perform, and also (2) as a natural incident of the work. . . . On the other hand, the act has not been applied to accidents resulting from the chances of life in general to which the victim of misfortune was exposed in common with all mankind rather than as employee. . . . Injuries received through skylarking or horseplay during working hours and at the place of work have been considered by the courts, and it has been held that an accident caused to a workman, while engaged in his work, by the wrongful act of a fellow workman, entirely outside the scope of his employment, has no relation to the employment and is not within the act. . . . Altercations and blows may, however, arise from the act of a fellow servant while both are engaged in the employer's work and in relation to the employment. The employer may be badly or carelessly served by two men engaged in his work, and yet it may be inferred, when one injures the other in a quarrel over the manner of working together in a common employment, that the accident arose out of the employment and was not entirely outside of its scope, if it was connected with the employer's work and in a sense in his interest. Such cases necessarily present close questions of fact." Heitz v. Rupert, 218 N. Y. 148, 112 N. E. 750, L.R.A. 1917A 347, affirming order 171 App. Div. 961, 155 N. Y. S. 1112, reargument denied 218 N. Y. 702, 113 N. E. 1057.

A contention that the provision in the Ohio Workmen's Compensation Act (103 Ohio Laws, pp. 72, 82, § 27) with reference to an injury "in the course of employment" permits an award to be made to one whose injury did not arise out of the employment, has been held not to be well taken. Fassig v. State, 95 Ohio St. 232, 116 N. E. 104, wherein the court said that it was plainly the intention of the framers of the constitutional amendment, in which the language was found as well as in the statute, to provide for compensation only to one whose injury was the result of or connected with the employment, and that the language used would not cover any case which had its cause outside of and disconnected with the employment, although the employee might at the time have been actually engaged in doing the work of his employer in the usual way.

The Federal Workmen's Compensation Act of 1908 (Act of May 30, 1908, c. 236; 35 Stat. 556; Fed. Stat. Ann. 1909 Supp. p. 330) was of but limited scope, and is now superseded by the Federal Act of 1916 (Act Sept. 17, 1916, c. 458; 38 Stat. 742; Fed. Stat. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 8, p. 141). However, the former act applied to injuries received "in the course of employment" merely, so that it was held to suffice if the injury giving rise to the compensation resulted from an accident which occurred in the course of the employment, provided it was an injury within the meaning of the act, without holding that the injury must result from an accident which arose out of, as well as in the course of, the employment. See the various opinions of the solicitor, department of labor, cited throughout this note.

A wide departure from the legislation of the other states and from the English act is shown by the terms of the Washington Act (Laws 1911, c. 74). It is not an employers' liability act, or a compensation act of the ordinary type. It uses the far stronger terms, "fortuitous event," and "injured in extra-hazardous work" in place of the phrases "accident," injury arising "during and in the course of employment," and "personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of employment." The intention to get rid of judicial controversies and include every form of industrial accident is apparent throughout the act. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission, Ann. Cas. 1918B 354.

III. Burden of Proof.

1. GENERAL RULE.

The onus rests on an applicant for compensation under a workmen's compensation act to furnish evidence showing not only the fact of an accidental injury, but also that it arose out of and in the course of the employment. Renfrew v. McCrae [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 195, [1914] Sc. Ct. Sess. 539; Ford v. Gaiety Theatre [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 53,

279 Ill. 11.

7 B. W. C. C. 197; Kettle v. McKay [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 297, 115 L. T. N. S. 397, 85 L. J. K. B. 1490, 9 B. W. C. C. 544; Brownlee v. Coltness Iron Co. [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 235; Joy v. Phillips [1916] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 849, 114 L. T. N. S. 577, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 67, 85 L. J. K. B. 770, [1916] W. N. 142, 9 B. W. C. C. 242; Murphy v. Cooney [1914] 2 Ir. R. 76, [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 44; Rourke v. Holt [1917] 2 Ir. R. 318; Western Grain, etc. Co. v. Pillsbury, 173 Cal. 135, 159 Pac. 423; Armour v. Industrial Board, 273 Ill. 590, 113 N. E. 138; Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Industrial Board, 274 Ill. 336, 113 N. E. 629; Bloomington, etc. R. Co. v. Industrial Board, 276 Ill. 454, 114 N. E. 939; Ohio Bldg. Safety Vault Co. v. Industrial Board, 277 Ill. 96, 115 N. E. 149; Albaugh-Dover Co. v. Industrial Board, 278 Ill. 179, 115 N. E. 834; H. G. Goelitz Co. v. Industrial Board, 278 Ill. 164, 115 N. E. 855; Savoy Hotel Co. v. Industrial Board, 279 Ill. 329, 116 N. E. 712; Peoria R. Terminal Co. v. Industrial Board, 279 Ill. 352, 116 N. E. 651; Northern Illinois Light, etc. Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.) 117 N. E. 95; Union Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. Davis (Ind.) 115 N. E. 676; Haskell, etc. Car Co. v. Brown (Ind.) 117 N. E. 555; Sugar Valley Coal Co. v. Drake (Ind.) 117 N. E. 937; Griffith v. Cole (Ia.) 165 N. W. 577; Von Ette's Case, 223 Mass. 56, 111 N. E. 696, L.R.A.1916D 641; De Mann v. Hydraulic Engineering Co. 192 Mich. 594, 159 N. W. 380; Draper v. Regents of University (Mich.) 161 N. W. 956.

However, it is not indispensable that the proof should be made by direct and positive evidence that the injury was due to an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment. It may be made by circumstantial evidence from which such an inference can fairly and legitimately be drawn. Western Grain, etc. Co. v. Pillsbury, 173 Cal. 135, 159 Pac. 423; Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Industrial Board, 274 Ill. 336, 113 N. E. 629; Albaugh-Dover Co. v. Industrial Board, 278 Ill. 179, 115 N. E. 834; Von Ette's Case, 223 Mass. 56, 111 N. E. 696, L.R.A.1916D 641.

But the proof must be based on competent, legal evidence, and must amount to something more than mere guess, conjecture or surmise. Bloomington, etc. R. Co. v. Industrial Board, 276 Ill. 454, 114 N. E. 939; Ohio Bldg. Safety Vault Co. v. Industrial Board, 277 Ill. 96, 115 N. E. 149; Albaugh-Dover Co. v. Industrial Board, 278 Ill. 179, 115 N. E. 834; H. G. Goelitz Co. v. Industrial Board, 278 Ill. 164, 115 N. E. 855; Savoy Hotel Co. v. Industrial Board, 279 Ill. 329, 116 N. E. 712; Peoria R. Terminal Co. v. Industrial Board, 279 Ill. 352, 116 N. E. 651; Von Ette's Case, 223 Mass. 56, 111 N. E. 696, L.R.A. 1916D 641.

"The decision in workmen's compensation cases show, especially where death occurs, that very slender evidence may be sufficient to justify an inference that an injury has been caused by an accident in the course of employment." Cherry, L. J., in Wright v. Kerrigan [1911] 2 Ir. R. 301, 45 Ir. L. T. 82.

If the incapacity of the workman is due to a supervening cause, he must establish a causal connection between this novus actus interveniens and the original injury. Brownlee v. Coltness Iron Co. [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 235.

Where, however, a workman has been injured by what was admittedly an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and claims compensation under the act, the onus of proving that the subsequent existing incapacity is no longer due to the accident, but is attributable to a novus actus interveniens, such as improper medical treatment owing to an incorrect diagnosis, is on the employer. Bower v. Meggitt [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 40, 116 L. T. N. S. 178, 86 L. J. K. B. 463, 10 B. W. C. C. 146; Brownlee v. Coltness Iron Co. [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 235.

Where a watchman claims compensation for injuries arising out of the operation of a hazardous business, the burden of proof rests on the employer to show that the plant was not in operation and hence that the employee was not exposed at the time of his injury to the hazards of the business. Kobyra v. Adams, 176 App. Div. 43, 162 N. Y. S. 269.

2. BURDEN NOT SUSTAINED.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the burden of proof had not been sustained by the applicant:

Porter Walking Three Miles with Seventeen Pound Parcel.—A porter, twenty-six years of age and in good health, was sent by his employers on a very hot day with a parcel weighing seventeen pounds a distance of about three miles. He was given money for a train fare. He arrived at his destination between three and four o'clock in the afternoon, when he knocked at the door but was not answered, as no one was in. He then sat down on a coping at the top of the steps leading to the door. After sitting there a little time he fell into the area below, receiving injuries from which he died later. It was held that the applicant for compensation had not discharged the burden which rested on him of showing that the accident, which admittedly happened in the course of the deceased's employment, arose out of the employment in any sense in which those words could properly be applied. Kettle v. McKay [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 297, 115 L. T. N. S. 397, 85 L. J. K. B. 1490, 9 B. W. C. C. 544.

Workman Opening Window Fastened by Employer.—An employer in anticipating and guarding against his employees passing over the top of dye tubs, which were filled with hot water and constantly emitted steam, caused the lower or bottom sashes in the windows back of the dye tubs to be "nailed down so that the men would not be reaching over the tubs to open the windows." The claimant, after passing over the dye tubs, was attempting to remove the fastening of the window in question by the use of a chisel and hammer, when he "was struck in the eye by a piece of the chisel," broken off by a blow of the hammer. It was held that he had failed to show that the accident arose out of his employment. In re Borin, 227 Mass. 452, 116 N. E. 817.

Blood Poisoning.—A workman on returning home from work one evening showed his wife a scratch or mark behind one ear. He continued to work, but continually complained of pain, and after a fortnight died of acute blood poisoning. Evidence was given on behalf of the employer that the workman had a pimple behind his ear and that if he scratched it and dirt got in, blood poisoning would be caused. It was held that the facts in evidence supported the decision of the county court judge that he was not satisfied that there was "personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the man's employment." Fitzgerald v. Murphy, 45 Ir. L. T. 200.

In his particulars of claim, a dependant alleged that the workman was moving scenery "when a splinter was driven into the middle finger of his right hand," and that he died of blood poisoning following on this injury. The doctor who attended the workman stated that he saw a place where a small wound had been in the middle finger of his right hand, and that the inflammation was in his right arm. But a fellow workman, who saw the workman with a splinter in his finger and who removed it with a knife, said that the splinter was in the tip of the middle finger of the left hand. It was held that there was no evidence from which the arbitrator could find that there was an accident arising "out of and in the course of" the employment. Ford v. Gaiety Theatre [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 53, 7 B. W. C. C. 197.

Chill—Brusher Waiting in Mine Pit.—A brusher went to the bottom of the pit shaft to be taken to the surface just at the time of the beginning of the daily statutory shaft inspection, of which he knew. The inspection took an hour that morning instead of the usual half-hour, owing to the breakdown of the bell wire, and during that time the workman stood about in a strong current of cold air. He contracted a chill and died of pneumonia. It was held that the evidence supported the finding by the arbitrator that the workman had not been injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Lyons v. Woodilee Coal, etc. Co. 117 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 65, 86 L. J. P. C. 137, [1917] W. N. 151, 61 Sol. J. 490, affirming [1916] Sc. Ct. Sess. 719, 9 B. W. C. C. 655.

Heart Disease.—In arbitration proceedings to recover compensation, the arbitrator found that the claimant, while in the course of his employment lifting a derailed hutch, felt a sharp pain near the heart, followed by palpitation and shortage of breath, and that on being examined the claimant was found to be suffering from advanced disease of the heart, which was of long standing, was in its nature progressive, and bound to manifest itself sooner or later. He thereupon held that it was not proved that the lifting of the hutch accelerated the disease. It was held that the arbitrator was entitled to find that the claimant had not proved that he had sustained an "accident arising out of and in the course of his employment." Spence v. Baird [1912] Sc. Ct. Sess. 343, 49 Scott. L. Rep. 279, [1912] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 18, 5 B. W. C. C. 542.

A workman employed in a colliery took two empty tubs down an incline having a slope of one in twenty. He went in front of them to hold them back. Shortly afterwards the tubs were found about thirty feet down the slope, with the man lying dead with his feet under the foremost tub, and its wheel against his right leg. Each tub was provided with an iron bar or "scotch" which could be inserted into the wheels to prevent its moving. There was a dispute whether the tubs had been "scotched" or whether they had been stopped by the fall of the man himself and the obstruction caused by his leg being under the wheel. The man had a weak heart, far advanced, with an almost total destruction of the mitral valve, and the evidence was to the effect that his death might have been occasioned by the pressure on his leg or by the extension of the disease. It was held that the county court judge properly dismissed the application for compensation on the ground that the burden of proof which lay on the applicant to show that the death of the workman was due to an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment had not been discharged. Maxwell v. Ruabon Coal, etc. Co. [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 36, 116 L. T. N. S. 176, 86 L. J. K. B. 428, 10 B. W. C. C. 138.

Pneumonia — Conflicting Testimony.—A workman died of pneumonia. His dependants contended that the pneumonia resulted from lowered vitality caused by an accident to him arising out of and in the course of his employment. The medical referee reported that pneumonia could not have been caused by the alleged accident, the only evidence of which consisted of several inconsistent statements made by the workman to various persons on the day after the accident, which were admitted in evidence without any objection being taken. It was held that there was no evidence that there was any accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Langley v. Reeve, 3 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 175.

Rupture.—A workman was engaged at the moment of his injury, a rupture, in his usual and ordinary employment in the usual and ordinary way. In the course of his employment it was his duty to lift an iron bar about three feet long and weighing about ninety pounds, once in about every fifteen minutes, ninety or one hundred times a day. It was held that the evidence conclusively showed that he had not suffered an accident or received an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment. Kutschmar v. Briggs Mfg. Co. (Mich.) 163 N. W. 933.

A workman was employed as an engineer in the capacity of an "engine tamer," it being his duty to take locomotives which had been overhauled and repaired and break them in before they were put into regular service. This was done by running the engine back and forth in the yard limits. The fireman testified that in handling one engine they ran it back and forth along a two-mile track about twenty-five times; that in throwing the reverse lever it worked hard, and on one occasion the workman requested him to assist him in throwing it; that it required considerable exertion for the two of them to throw the lever; that the workman made no complaint of being hurt that day, and that the next day they handled another engine, and the next time he saw the workman was two days later when the latter complained of not feeling well and stated that he was going home. The workman died following an operation for strangulated or incarcerated hernia. It was held that excluding certain testimony improperly admitted there was nothing on which to base the conclusion that death was caused by an accidental injury arising out of and in the course of his employment. The court held that the burden rested on the administratrix to prove that the injury was so received, and that it would not be inferred that the injury had been so received from the mere fact that the workman, in his employment, was engaged in work which caused him to undergo a severe physical strain. Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Industrial Board, 274 Ill. 336, 113 N. E. 629.

A workman suffering from hernia was employed as an underground hauler in a colliery, to regulate the supply of empty trains at or near the pit bottom. After hauling the allotted quantity of trains from one heading, occupying about an hour in so doing, he led his horse into another heading to do similar work there. Shortly afterward he was heard to call out, complaining of being very ill and that he had a lump coming in his groin.

He died of strangulation of a right scrotal hernia of the ordinary inguinal type. On appeal, it was held that the evidence was not sufficient to justify the finding of the county court judge, that the strangulation was the result of some act of exertion which the workman underwent while he was at work lifting a train or some other act. Perry v. Ocean Coal Co. 106 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 713, [1912] W. C. Rep. 212, 5 B. W. C. C. 421.

Tuberculosis—Struck by Box.—The workman whose death was the subject of inquiry and another were wheeling a load of castings in a box on a truck down an inclined runway, the other man being at the upper end, holding the handles of the truck, and the workman in front of it, holding it back. The other man slipped and fell, and the truck ran against the workman and pushed him over and swung him around against a door. The box hit him on the left side, between the navel and the hip and a little lower than the direct line. In reply to the question of the straw boss as to whether he got hurt, he replied that he did not but got a strain as though they had put an electric wire on him or an electric shock, and continued to work. Later he developed a suppurating sinus in the region of the epididymis, which was remote from the point of injury, and died of miliary tuberculosis of the lung. The medical evidence was unanimous that a tubercular condition resulting from a blow would develop at the point of the blow as the seat of the condition and could not develop from a strain. It was held that the evidence failed to sustain a finding that the workman met with an accident arising out of the employment. Albaugh-Dover Co. v. Industrial Board, 278 Ill. 179, 115 N. E. 834.

Dazed Condition—Fall.—The workman was employed to operate a coring saw on the second floor of a factory, and was in general good health. One day he was not well, was slow at his work, had no appetite and threw away his lunch. He did not leave work with the rest of the men. There were some pipes lying on the floor near his work. Half an hour later the night watchman found him wandering on the second floor, apparently sick and dazed and unable to speak. In leaving the building he had a fall, but not hard, on the last step of the back stairway. When he arrived home, after a trip involving two transfers, his clothes were covered with dust and he was pale. He had a broken collar bone, and after remaining in bed in a semi-conscious condition for nearly two weeks, died. It was held that there was no evidence to support an award on the ground that he received an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment which had caused his death. Peterson v. Industrial Board, 281 Ill. 326, 117 N. E. 1033.

Seaman—Drinking Poison for Water.—A seaman by mistake drank from a tin, which he thought contained drinking water put there to cool, a solution of caustic soda, which the owner of the can, another member of the crew, had put into the tin for the purpose of cleaning it, and was severely injured. It was the practice of the crew to take the water in tins or cans to a cool place and leave it to cool and partake of it as required, a practice sanctioned by the officers, but not done by their orders. It was held that there was no evidence that the accident arose out of the employment. Hutchinson v. McKinnon [1916] A. C. (Eng.) 471, 114 L. T. N. S. 570, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 17, 85 L. J. P. C. 98, 60 Sol. J. 320, [1916] W. N. 46, 9 B. W. C. C. 147, 32 Times L. Rep. 283, reversing [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 386, [1915] Sc. Ct. Sess. 867, [1915] Scot. L. T. 22.

Stable Boy—Kicked by Horse.—A stable lad was found lying unconscious in his employer's stable, having been kicked in the head by a horse. He died without recovering consciousness. The horse which had kicked the boy was quiet and had no vice. The boy had a halter in his hand when found, which he was clutching, and he was lying with his legs nearer the horse than his head. There was evidence that the boy had been employed to sweep up the stables and yard and put the head collars up, when the horses were out. The stable had been swept out and the broom put back in place at the time of the accident, and the boy had nothing to do with the halter at that time, as he was nothing to do in the stable after the sweeping up. The boy was not wrong in being in the stable. He had been caught teasing the horses with the broom and a halter on previous occasions. It was held that there was evidence on which the county court judge could act to show that at the time when the accident happened the boy had no business in the stable at all with the halter, and therefore that the accident did not arise out of his employment. Joy v. Phillips [1916] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 849, 114 L. T. N. S. 577, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 67, 85 L. J. K. B. 770, [1916] W. N. 142, 9 B. W. C. C. 242.

Porter Riding on Footboard of Train.—A porter fell under a train leaving a station, with the result that he was severely injured. He claimed compensation from his employers, alleging that the accident happened while he was carrying out his duties as porter, securing the handle of a door of the train. His employers, however, deny liability on the ground that the accident happened owing to his getting on the footboard of the train for his own pleasure, to talk to some passenger friends. It was held that there was sufficient evidence to support the conclusion of the county court judge that the man was riding on the footboard for his own pleasure, and that the accident did not therefore arise out of the employment. Parsons v. South-Western, etc. Rys. [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 254, 9 B. W. C. C. 532.

Seaman—Fall from Bridge.—On the evening of this accident the first mate of a steamship, heavily under the influence of drink, reached his vessel at the quay when the ladder and gangway had been pulled on board, the vessel being about to sail and having delayed her departure owing to his late arrival, and was helped on board. It was his duty to come on the bridge and take the wheel when the vessel left port, but, after taking the wheel, he was navigating the vessel so dangerously that the captain took the wheel from him and ordered him to go below as he was "not fit to be about the decks." The descent from the bridge was by means of a narrow, almost upright ladder some six feet in height. He staggered across the bridge, and instead of immediately going below, as ordered by the captain, remained standing at the head of the ladder for eight or ten minutes. Shortly afterwards a thud was heard, and he was found at the bottom of the ladder with a wound in his head from which his death followed. No one, however, actually saw him fall. On appeal it was held that the evidence failed to sustain the finding of the recorder that the accident had arisen out of and in the course of the employment. Murphy v. Cooney [1914] 2 Ir. R. 76, [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 44, 48 Ir. L. T. 13, following Frith v. Steamship Louisiana [1912] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 155, [1912] W. C. Rep. 285.

Larking—Shot by Fellow Servant.—A domestic servant whilst in the course of her employment was accidentally shot and injured by a farm laborer who was carrying a gun from the house to the fields, where it was required by the employer for the purpose of shooting crows. In reply to the question: "Did he present it at you in a joke?" put by the county court judge, she stated: "He might have pointed it at me; it was not intended." It was held that her evidence was sufficient to justify the conclusion that the injury was caused by the larking or fooling of the laborer and that therefore it was not an accident arising out of the employment. Hillis v. Shaw [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 744, 47 Ir. L. T. Rep. 221.

Night Watchman—Mistaking Sheriff for Robber.—A night watchman of a construction company with a bridge operator whose station was near the construction company's buildings, and a deputy sheriff and his assistant mistook each other for robbers whom they knew to be in the vicinity, and in the darkness and fog shots were exchanged and the watchman was fatally injured. It was held that there was no evidence to support the finding that the watchman's injury "arose out of" his employment. Harbroe's Case, 223 Mass. 139, 111 N. E. 709, L.R.A.1916D 933.

Circus Employee—Leaving Team.—A hostler employed in a show was driving a team and was engaged in hauling equipment from the show ground to the railroad and in loading cars. About an hour after midnight he temporarily left his team in the care of a fellow workman and "went to the sleeping car to go to the toilet and get a drink of water." While crossing the tracks on his way back to his team, he was knocked down by a moving car and injured. It was held that the evidence did not warrant the finding that the injury by accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. Hagenback v. Leppert (Ind.) 117 N. E. 531.

Hospital Superintendent—Going Home for Dinner.—It was the custom of the superintendent of a hospital to take his noon and evening meals at the hospital, unless he was called home for some reason or unless he had business down town which took him away from the hospital. One evening he called up his home and said that he would be home for the evening meal. Half an hour later he was killed by a street car as he was about to enter the campus, which was directly between the hospital and his home, from the direction of the hospital. It was not shown that he had any business to transact on the way or what the nature of the business might be. It was held that there was not sufficient evidence to show that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. Draper v. Regents of University (Mich.) 161 N. W. 956.

Miner Leaving Work by Permission—Crossing "Jig Brow".—One of the authorized ways by which the workmen employed in a colliery left the pit was by a jig brow, along which full tubs were let down and empty tubs drawn up by means of a jig-wire rope to which they were hooked. At two o'clock in the afternoon, the usual time for the colliers to leave the pit by the jig brow, the running of tubs up and down thereon was stopped, and at the rear of any empty tubs remaining stationary on the jig-brow "level" a "stop block" was let down, which prevented them from running backwards down the jig brow. Consequently, at that time, the jig brow and jig-brow "level" were made safe for colliers using the same, and they could then pass with safety either behind or between the stationary trucks in the jig-brow "level." A workman left his working place two hours before the usual time with permission and went to the jig-brow "level." As soon as the empty tubs had become stationary, but before the process of "jigging" was completed—that is to say, before the "stop block" had been let down or there had been time to let it down—he forced the two center tubs part in order to make a gap through which he could pass. The movement of the tubs released the hook by which they were attached to the jig-wire rope, and the four tubs began to move backwards down the incline, dragging him with them, he receiving injuries which caused his death. If he had not pushed the tubs apart, they would not have moved; and if he had waited a few seconds the "stop block" would have been let down and he could have passed between the tubs with perfect safety; or if he had walked three and a half yards he could have gone around the front of the first tub with perfect safety. It was held that the evidence warranted the finding of the county court judge that the accident had not been shown to have arisen "out of and in the course of" the employment, but that the workman exposed himself to an added risk or peril which was not incidental to his employment, but was due entirely to his own conduct. Baker v. Bradford [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 177, 114 L. T. N. S. 1144, 85 L. J. K. B. 1031, 60 Sol. J. 493, [1916] W. N. 202, 9 B. W. C. C. 436, affirming [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 576, 85 L. J. K. B. 263.

Returning from Use of Convenience Other than That Provided.—The applicant was employed at a colliery as a laborer in a fitting shop on the surface, and on the day of the accident was suffering from diarrhoea and had to go to relieve himself on several occasions. There were four sets of privies provided for the use of surface men on the employer's premises, some of which, including one specially provided for the fitters and consisting of four privies, could be reached from the fitting shop without crossing any railway lines. There was, however, one set of conveniences on a dirt tip some distance away which could only be reached by crossing the lines in a busy part of the yard. On the last occasion, instead of going to any of the conveniences provided, the applicant went on to the slope of the dirt tip amongst some bushes and there relieved himself. In returning to the fitting shop he was knocked down and run over while crossing the rails. By a statutory regulation, a copy of which was posted up in the mines and on the premises, it was provided that "No person shall relieve his bowels on the surface except in one of the conveniences provided." The only reason given by the applicant for not using the conveniences provided was that he thought they might be full, but he admitted that he did not go to look. It was held that there was ample evidence to sustain the finding of the county court judge that the accident did not arise out of the applicant's employment. Senior v. Brodsworth Main Colliery Co. [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 284.

Unexplained Death—Commercial Traveler.—A commercial traveler in the course of his employment met a customer, and both visited two public houses at which they had some form of alcoholic refreshment. Thereafter they went to another town, where the commercial traveler did not attempt to transact any business, but became intoxicated, and while in this condition found his way to the station, where he was last seen alive sitting in a seat some ten feet from the edge of the platform. A non-stopping goods train passed, and shortly after he was found lying on the rails with his head outwards and his feet towards the platform, having received injuries from which he died in a few hours. It was held that the evidence did not support the finding of the arbitrator that the accident arose out of the employment. Renfrew v. McCrae [1914] Sc. Ct. Sess. 539, [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 195, [1914] 1 Scott. L. T. 354.

Unexplained Death—Dock Laborer.—A dock laborer was engaged to assist in discharging a vessel's cargo. The only intervals given dock laborers by their employers was an hour for breakfast and an hour for dinner, but it was within the knowledge of employers that these men were in the habit, without asking leave, of going at other times to a public house nearby for liquid refreshment. The employer's clerk considered the laborer as unfit to continue to work owing to his drunken condition, the result of several visits to the public house, and directed him to sit down in the shed, where his money would be brought to him. When the clerk returned with the money he could not find him. The body was shortly afterward, and before the expiration of the working hours, found in the water about opposite the place where he had been working. It was held that there was not sufficient evidence to show that this accident arose out of the employment or in the course of that employment. M'Intyre v. Stewart [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 550, [1916] Sc. Ct. Sess. 91, 9 B. W. C. C. 430, [1915] 2 Scott. L. T. 288.

Unexplained Death—Porter.—A porter, when last seen, was in an intoxicated condition. Later his body was found in his porter's uniform in a sitting position in one corner of the freight elevator of the hotel in which he was employed, with his legs lying across a small two-handled baggage truck. An examination disclosed that his neck was broken, and that he had suffered a cut in the jaw, and an abrasion on the right leg near the knee. There was a small pool of blood beside him. The elevator had been used two hours previously by another porter, and there were no marks of any kind on the elevator beam or the sides of the elevator shaft. He had apparently finished his work for the day, and his fellow employees and the clerk supposed that he had gone home, as was his custom. It was held that there was no proof fairly tending to show that the death resulted from an accidental injury received arising out of and in the course of the employment. Savoy Hotel Co. v. Industrial Board, 279 Ill. 329, 116 N. E. 712.

Unexplained Death—Seaman.—A seaman disappeared while he was on duty at the wheel of a steamship in the wheelhouse in the center of the flying deck, while the first and third officers were also on the flying deck on look-out, one on the starboard, and the other on the port side. There were two doors to the wheelhouse, one at the port and the other at the starboard side, and there was a solid railing round the flying deck over three feet high. The night was not stormy; it was rough, dark and drizzling, and the sea was choppy, but the ship was not rolling and was quite steady. The county court judge found as a fact that the death was not the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment. On appeal it was held that as the post of duty of the seaman was at the wheel, the onus of proof on the applicant was not met by an assumption that he was at his allotted employment when he fell overboard, since the natural inference from the facts would be that he was not. Rourke v. Holt [1917] 2 Ir. R. 318.

A fireman on a ship, having no work to do until the next day, when the ship was to sail, went ashore with another man at 6:30 P.M. They went to the theatre and stayed there until 8:30 P.M. There they met a friend, and after stopping at a public house for some drinks, returned towards the ship. When still some distance away from the ship, the fireman's companion collapsed and had to be helped along. A little further on, the fireman turned back, saying that he was not going on board at present. He was never seen again, and some two months later his body was found in the dock a little forward of the place where the bow of his ship had been. There was evidence that he was a steady, sober and capable man, and that during the five years he had been employed on the ship he had never stayed a night ashore. It was held that there was no evidence to establish that the accident happened in the course of his return to the ship, and hence that such an inference drawn by the county court judge and his conclusion that the accident arose out of and in the course of the deceased's employment were without support. Spencer v. Liberty [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 293.

Unexplained Death—Ship's Cook.—The ship's cook was in the galley, which was on the bridge deck, about 6:45 A.M., and after looking for something there and directing the second cook to have the porridge on at 7 A.M., remarked, "This is a hell of a job." He thereafter left the galley and was never seen again by anybody on board. The bridge deck on which the galley was situated was fenced by a strong iron railing about three feet high with uprights about four feet apart. There was no observable grease on the deck that morning. The arbitrator found that there were no facts proved or admitted from which it could be inferred that he met his death by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and this decision was affirmed on appeal. Lynch v. Crown Steamship Co. [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 194, [1916] Sc. Ct. Sess. 695, [1916] 1 Scott. L. T. 370.

Finding—Contradictory Evidence.—A finding by the industrial accident board that an employee left his machine "temporarily to go to the toilet or for some other purpose incidental to his employment," based on the mere fact that the toilet and water tank were in the direction of the machine by which he was injured, overruled a finding by the arbitration committee that the workman was injured while acting as a volunteer in fixing the machine of another, which latter finding was supported by the testimony of every eyewitness to the accident. It was held that there was no evidence whatever to sustain the finding of the board that the accident arose out of the employment. In re Dube, 226 Mass. 591, 116 N. E. 234.

3. BURDEN SUSTAINED.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the burden of proof had been sustained by the applicant:

Aneurism.—There were two accidents, one in October, when a workman fell into an excavation and sustained bruises of the chest and ribs; the second in November, when he fell dead while doing some heavy lifting. After the first accident he was examined by the employer's physician who found heart irregularity and aneurism of the aorta. The trial court inclined to the view that the accident in October produced a condition that brought on the death under the strain of November, although he held that it could reasonably be found that the strain of November in his diseased condition was the cause of death, and therefore found that the workman came to his death by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. The latter theory was held to be sufficiently sustained and the finding was affirmed. Winter v. Atkinson-Frizelle Co. 88 N. J. L. 401, 96 Atl. 360.

The workman and another were engaged in unloading steel sheets from a car. Each sheet weighed from 465 to 485 pounds and was moved by means of a crane. The sheets stood on edge in the car and sometimes became jammed together so that their separation required a great deal of physical effort. The morning of his injury, the workman came to his work feeling well. Later he was seen to put his hand to his throat, to stagger, and to complain of feeling sick. He was found to be suffering from an aneurism of which the medical evidence was to the effect that the strain was the exciting or aggravating cause. It was held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the finding that he suffered personal injuries by accident "arising out of and in the course of the employment." Haskell, etc. Car Co. v. Brown (Ind.) 117 N. E. 555.

Blood Poisoning.—A workman employed in "spreading sod, cultivating, and doing work in the line of improving the grounds," received a scratch on the back of his hand which became infected, and he died of blood poisoning. It was held that the evidence sustained a finding that the injury arose out of and in the course of his employment. In re Bean, 227 Mass. 558, 116 N. E. 826.

A workman was employed to assemble brake and clutch pedals, in which employment abrasions were a common form of injury. Shortly before quitting time, he went to the foreman and exhibited his thumb, which was dirty, torn up and clotted over the nail with blood, and was sent by the latter to a doctor. The abrasion was treated, but was infected, septicaemia followed, and the workman died therefrom. It was held that the facts supported the inference that the injury arose out of and in the course of the employment. Kinney v. Cadillac Motor Car Co. (Mich.) 165 N. W. 651.

In the discharge of his duties a fireman was required to take out clinkers from the combustion chamber, clean the boilers and fixtures, polish the same, clean the engine, and oil it. One day he was attended by a physician who discovered two little cuts through the skin on the thumb, about an eighth of an inch apart and half an inch long, around which there was some redness and from the condition of which he judged that he was suffering from streptococcus infection. Two days later the hand was more swollen; the next day he had chills and his temperature had gone up. He was removed to a hospital, grew worse, and died four days later of septicaemia. It was held that there was evidence to sustain the finding of the commission that the death was due to an injury received in the course of his employment. William Rahr Sons Co. v. Industrial Commission (Wis.) 163 N. W. 169.

Rupture of Blood Vessel.—A mason's helper started with his wheelbarrow and tools for another place of work a short distance away. His wheelbarrow was of iron and weighed some eighty pounds and the tools weighed perhaps fifty pounds. A block and a half of the distance was up a steep grade, and the alley into which he then turned was rough and full of holes. He was suddenly stricken with severe pain and paralysis of the lower limbs, found to be due to the rupture of a blood vessel caused by the muscular strain or exertion to which he was subjected in propelling the wheelbarrow. It was held that the finding that his death was accidental and arose out of and in the course of his employment was sustained by the evidence. State v. District Ct. (Minn.) 162 N. W. 678.

The workman was assisting in cutting a large piece of granite, using a twenty-pound hammer. The blows were required to be struck from the side, necessitating the striker's assuming a crouching position. The day was very cold. He struck about 130 blows in an hour and a quarter with the heavy hammer, after which he was considerably exhausted and perspired freely. After lunch he resumed the work of striking for about half an hour with a fifteen-pound hammer. After this, while engaged in manipulating an overhead traveler, he fell over a pile of stone, his head striking a piece of granite, cutting a large gash over his right eye, and died a few minutes thereafter. It was found that the cause of death was cerebral hemorrhage due to a ruptured blood vessel, and that he came to his death as the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. The evidence was held to be sufficient to justify this finding and to support an award. State v. District Ct. (Minn.) 163 N. W. 667.

A fireman on board ship was seen frequently drinking water while in the stokehole. Soon afterwards he was found to be very ill; later he became unconscious and died. The medical evidence as to the cause of death was conflicting. The county court judge came to the conclusion, there being medical evidence to that effect, that the cause of death was cerebral hemorrhage, caused by the heat and drinking of excessive quantities of water, and that the fireman had sustained a "personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment." On appeal, the finding was sustained. Johnson v. Steamship Torrington, 3 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 68.

Gonorrheal Infection—Substance in Eye Removed by Fellow Workman.—A workman employed by a manufacturing company was working on a rear axle with another employee, when a piece of steel flew and struck him in the right eye. At once, after the accident, a fellow workman examined the eye, using for that purpose a match wrapped in a piece of cloth. A gonorrheal infection set in and he lost the sight of the eye. It was held that the evidence warranted the finding that the loss of sight was attributable to an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Cline v. Studebaker Corp. 189 Mich. 514, 155 N. W. 519, L.R.A.1916C 1139.

While a miner was breaking up a large chunk of iron ore with a hammer, a particle of ore flew into his left eye, cutting through the cornea and embedding itself in the eyeball. A fellow workman removed the particle from the eye at the time, using in his efforts a match and handkerchief. The eye was immediately thereafter washed in water from a trough which was used daily by other miners for the purpose of washing their hands and faces. Thereafter a gonorrheal infection set in and the workman lost his sight. It was held that the finding that the accidental injury arose out of and in the course of the employment was sustained by the evidence. State v. District Ct. (Minn.) 163 N. W. 755.

A workman got a cinder from a passing locomotive in his eye, which a fellow workman removed from the eye with a piece of cotton. Later a gonorrheal infection developed in the eye, blinding him. It was held that the evidence sustained the finding that the accident occurred by reason of and in the course of his employment. Canadian Pac. R. Co. v. Flore, 24 Quebec, K. B. 55, 24 Dominion L. Rep. 710.

Heart Disease.—A workman was descending the side of a ship by a rope ladder. The ladder twisted suddenly, he gave a cry, fell into the water and was dead when picked up. The medical evidence was that death was due to heart failure and not to drowning, and that the heart was in such a state that any slight exertion might have caused its failure. It was held that there was evidence to support the finding of the county court judge that death was due to "accident arising out of and in the course of employment." Trod-den v. McLennard, 4 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 190.

A workman was employed in loading heavy bags on to trucks and then pushing the loaded trucks on to a railway. The work was heavy, and three men were employed on it so that one man might rest while the other two worked except that all three pushed a truck. The workman had been working all morning, and in the afternoon he had just joined with the other two men in pushing a truck, when he fell, and died soon afterwards. The medical evidence was that the workman was suffering from fatty degeneration of the heart, but that the disease was not so far advanced that he would have died without being subjected to certain strain. It was held that there was evidence to support the finding of the county court judge that the man died of a strain arising "out of and in the course of" his employment. Doughton v. Hickman [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 143, 6 B. W. C. C. 77.

The workman, who was employed on a "band press," a machine used to press copper bands around shells, slipped on a T-rail extending about an inch above the level of the floor, as he took a shell and started toward the press. He fell and hit his breast against the lever that operated the press, an iron rod with a steel handle, and was injured. After the injury there was found a mark over his heart about five inches long, and his attending physician testified that the fall brought on a condition of the heart known as "pericarditis," which caused the death. It was held that the evidence was sufficient to show an injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment, which proximately caused the death. Bugyrus Co. v. Townsend (Ind.) 117 N. E. 656.

Osteomyelitis—Blow While Moving Rail.—A workman was engaged in moving rails in a colliery, and on April 18, while dragging a rail along, he backed into a prop, with the result that the rail struck him a blow on the inside of the thigh. He went on working until May 29, when he suffered so much pain in the thigh that he had to stop work. His panel doctor treated him for contused tissue. He grew worse, and on June 10, a consulting doctor was called in, who diagnosed the case as osteomyelitis and septicaemia, and operated at once, but the man died that night. It was held that there was evidence on which the county court judge was justified in finding, as he did, that the workman met with his death as the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Mills v. Dinnington Main Coal Co. [1917] W. O. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 11, 116 L. T. N. S. 181, 86 L. J. K. B. 231, 61 Sol. J. 202, 10 B. W. C. C. 153.

Paralysis—Miner Struck by Mine Prop.—The plaintiff testified that a mine prop struck him while engaged in mining coal, on the side of the head, midway between the center of the top of his head and the top of his ear, and knocked him fifteen feet away; that the top of his head was affected and his skull fractured; that he was taken to the hospital where they took out pieces of his skull and "bruised blood;" that the injury caused all his strength to leave him, that he could not use his right hand or his right leg, and that the right side of his body was paralyzed; and that he could scarcely walk. His evidence was supported by that of three physicians to the same effect. It was held that the evidence amply sustained the finding that he was injured while in the course of his employment. Frey v. Kerens-Donnewald Coal Co. 271 Ill. 121, 110 N. E. 824.

Pneumonia — Unexplained Accident.—A healthy and steady workman was employed to pick up cotton waste on the deck of a ship. At 1 P.M. he was sent to work in No. 6 hold; at 3 P.M. he climbed up the ladder of the hold, apparently in great pain, and was sent home. He was medically attended, and marks were found on his ribs; three days later he developed pneumonia, attributed by the doctor to the injury to his sides, of which he died. It was held that there was evidence that the workman had died from "personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment." Lovelady v. Berrie, 2 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 62.

Pulling Waste out of Cogs of Machine.—The applicant was employed in filling cans of jute from a machine and her hand was caught in the cog wheels of the machine, with the result that she sustained serious injury. She gave evidence that about a month before the date of the accident a piece of waste jute fell among the cog wheels of the machine and brought it to a stop, breaking some of the cogs. The foreman warned her that if such a thing happened again she would be dismissed. On the day of the accident she was about to stop the machine, as it was near closing time, when a piece of waste fell through the guard onto the cogs. She at once tried to snatch it out, and her hand was caught in the machinery. She knew this was a dangerous thing to do. The waste must have been thrown on the machine but the girls working near her denied having thrown it. Another can filler confirmed the applicant's evidence of the incident a month before the accident. The county court judge dismissed the application, saying: "I am unable to accept the story told by the applicant as to the way this accident happened. The onus is upon her to satisfy me upon this. This is sufficient to dispose of the applicant's case. But if I was able to accept her account, I think even then she would have been doing something she was not employed to do, and that the accident happened through an added peril to which she exposed herself by placing her hand where she had no right to place it, and not through a peril invoked in her contract of service." On appeal it was held that there must be a new trial. McNally v. Bootle Jute Factory Co. [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 64, 114 L. T. N. S. 816, 85 L. J. K. B. 774.

Rheumatism.—A mine brusher was directed to bale out of the pit the water which had accumulated owing to the breakdown of the pump. This necessitated his standing immersed in water up to his chest for eight hours. Thereafter he was incapacitated for work for several days by rheumatism owing to the extreme and exceptional exposure to cold and damp which his work of bailing had entailed. On these facts, the arbitrator held that there was evidence that the workman was incapacitated by an injury caused by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. And on appeal, it was held that there was evidence on which the arbitrator could so find. Glasgow Coal Co. v. Welsh [1916] 2 A. C. (Eng.) 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E 161, 114 L. T. N. S. 809, [1916] W. C. & Ins.

Rep. 79, 85 L. J. P. C. 130, 32 Times L. Rep. 359, 60 Sol. J. 336, 9 B. W. C. C. 371, [1916] W. N. 109, affirming [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 463, [1915] Sc. Ct. Sess. 1020, [1915] 2 Scott. L. T. 123.

The applicant was employed as a pilot to take a ketch out of the harbor on a rough night with a high wind. Having piloted the ketch out of the harbor, and having been paid, the applicant attempted to get into his own boat, which was being towed astern of the ketch, for the purpose of going ashore. He jumped into the boat, alighting somewhere near the bows, with the result that they went under water, and he got wet up to his thighs. He was pulled up on board the ketch again, and later rowed ashore. Subsequently he suffered from sciatica. The county court judge found that the applicant's boat filled with water by accident, that he got wet by accident when he first jumped into the boat to go ashore, that the sciatica was the result of this accident, and that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. On appeal, it was held that there was sufficient evidence on which the county court judge would find as he did. Barbeary v. Chugg [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 174, 112 L. T. N. S. 797, 84 L. J. K. B. 504, 3 Times L. Rep. 153, 8 B. W. C. C. 37.

Rupture.—A workman employed to paint gas engines, was ruptured by the extra strain caused by a 600 pound engine, which he was moving, sticking to the floor. It was held that the evidence supported a finding that he suffered an accidental injury arising out of and in the course of his employment. Robbins v. Original Gas Engine Co. 191 Mich. 122, 157 N. W. 437.

A brewer's assistant was lifting a heavy cask standing on a shelf five feet from the ground, when he felt a severe internal pain and became faint and sick. Afterwards he found that he had ruptured himself. Twenty-two years before he had had a rupture in the same place, for which he wore a truss for many years, but during the last four or five years he had left it off, having found that he could do his work without it. The county court judge held that although there was "injury by accident," it did not arise "out of the employment," but was the result of a gradual weakening and not of any unusual strain. It was held that "accident" having been found, the evidence proved that it arose "out of the employment." Brown v. Kemp [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 595, 6 B. W. C. C. 725.

A workman accidentally ruptured himself in the course of his employment and was obliged to undergo an operation for hernia. In the course of the operation he was discovered to be suffering from another hernia of long standing, and both hernias were operated on at the same time. He subsequently died, the cause of death being found to be heart weakness and degeneracy "set up by the strain of the accident." The employers maintained in defense to the claim for compensation that, death being due to an operation part of which was rendered necessary by the accident, the operation was a novus actus intervening to break the chain of causation between the accident and the death. It was held that on the facts stated there was evidence to justify the arbitrator in finding that death was the result of the accident the workman had sustained in the course of his employment. Thomson v. Mutter [1913] Sc. Ct. Sess. 619, 50 Scott. L. Rep. 447, [1913] 1 Scott. L. T. 213, [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 241, 6 B. W. C. C. 424.

A workman, who was employed in lifting weights in a sawmill, went to his work about 6 A.M. He returned home about three hours later and was seen by his wife at 10 A.M. lying on his bed and vomiting. He was also seen with his hand on his stomach and vomiting blood in a place close to his work, but not part of the place where he was working. He died nine days later of a strangulated hernia. No one was produced who saw him at work, and the foreman of the sawmill who was in court during the hearing was not examined by either side. It was held that while the facts afforded evidence from which the county court judge could have drawn the inference that the accident (if any) arose out of and in the course of the employment, there must be a new trial because the judge had allowed his mind to be influenced by inadmissible evidence. Shea v. Wilson [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 197, 50 Ir. L. T. Rep. 73.

Tuberculosis.—Jumping into River to Avoid Injury.—While the claimant was working for his employer operating a crane, one of the timbers broke, and to save himself from injury he jumped into the river, a distance of some ten feet, the water coming up to his knees. He waded to the shore, contracted a heavy cold and pleurisy, which developed into pulmonary tuberculosis. It was held that the evidence sustained the finding that his condition was the result of an accidental injury arising out of and in the course of his employment. Rist v. Larkin, 171 App. Div. 71, 156 N. Y. S. 875.

Frost Bite.—A workman was cutting a roadway on railway construction work, in the open air for from ten to eleven consecutive hours, without shelter, when the temperature was sixty degrees below zero. As a result his feet were badly frozen. It was held that there was ample evidence to support the finding of the trial judge that the injury was from an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and that the workman was, by reason of his employment, exposed to a greater risk of frost bite than persons not so employed. Nikkiczuk v. McArthur, 9 Alberta L. Rep. 503, 34 West L. Rep. 674, 28 Dominion L. Rep. 279.

A workman was employed as a swamper in cutting and hauling timber, and making roads. He used an axe and handled the timber with his hands, and they came in contact with the snow. The weather was severely cold, he had no facilities for warming or protecting himself, and his thumb was frozen so that amputation was necessary. It was held that the evidence fairly sustained a finding that the character of the workman's employment subjected him to a risk of freezing not shared by the generality of the community, and therefore that the freezing was a personal injury by accident arising out of the employment. State v. District Ct. (Minn.) 164 N. W. 585.

It was the duty of the claimant, who was employed by a coal dealer, to assist the driver in caring for the horses and in carrying coal. On a very cold stormy day, while engaged in carrying coal, all the claimant's fingers and toes were frostbitten. It was held that the evidence supported the finding that the claimant, by reason of his employment in handling wet coal in the storm, was specially affected by the severity of the weather, and that his injuries were accidental and arose out of his employment. Days v. Trimmer, 176 App. Div. 124, 162 N. Y. S. 603.

A longshoreman had both his hands more or less frozen, losing parts of the fingers, on a day when the thermometer fell to four degrees below zero. It was held that the evidence sustained the finding that he was exposed "to materially greater danger and a likelihood of getting frozen than the ordinary person or outdoor worker on the date" in question by reason of the nature and the place of his work, and therefore that he had suffered an injury arising out of his employment. McManaman's Case, 224 Mass. 554, 113 N. E. 287.

A janitor, as part of his duties, was required to shovel the snow from the sidewalk in front of the building. While so engaged in very cold weather, he froze his big toe, with the result that the amputation of his leg became necessary. It was held that his work so exposed him to freezing that the finding that it was an accident arising out of his employment was sustained by the evidence. State v. District Ct. (Minn.) 164 N. W. 917.

Belt Boy—Stone Thrown by Another Boy.—A boy of fourteen was employed at a colliery to pick stones and dirt out of the coal in one of three parallel slow-moving belts conveying coal. He was hit in the eye by a stone thrown by another boy employed at a neighboring belt, and lost the sight of his eye. At the top of the stairs leading to the belts there was a notice board prohibiting stone throwing in the mine, but the boys sometimes threw stones at each other to attract attention. The county court judge found that the stone was mischievously thrown, though whether it was aimed at the boy who was hurt he did not know, and he thought that it did not matter, as the act was tortious; but he thought that the circumstances of the boy's employment were such as to expose him to special risk, the special risk being stones thrown by other boys; and therefore made an award in favor of the injured boy. The court of appeal were of the opinion that it was not an accident arising out of the employment, and set aside the award. On appeal to the House of Lords, it was held that there was evidence sufficient to support the finding of the county court judge. Clayton v. Hardwick Colliery Co. [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 33, 114 L. T. N. S. 241, 85 L. J. K. B. 292, 32 Times L. Rep. 159, 60 Sol. J. 138.

Compositor—Going on Roof for Fresh Air.—A newspaper compositor towards midnight or early in the morning went from the room in which he was working, the room being hot and the work slack, and he being in need of fresh air, out on the roof of a building on the employer's premises. While on the roof, he accidentally walked over the edge, or became dizzy and slipped off into the areaway, and fell to his death. One of the office rules forbade any employee to leave the composing room during working hours except on office business, and with the permission of the man in charge. However, there was an established custom among the employees, known to the employer, to go on the roof for the purpose of obtaining fresh air. It was held that the evidence sustained the finding that the injury arose out of and in the course of the employment. Von Ette's Case, 223 Mass. 56, 111 N. E. 696, L.R.A.1916D 641.

Employee Guarding Ice Pond.—A workman was employed in the business of harvesting ice on a certain pond. On the morning of the day of his death, he was sent by his employer to the pond, with directions to remain there until three o'clock in the afternoon, and to prevent all persons from cutting holes and fishing through the ice on the central portions of the pond. He was not directed as to how he should perform that duty or at what place on the pond or its shores he should station himself. At about noon, while the workman was alone on the center of the pond, the ice on which he was walking broke, and he was precipitated into the water and drowned. It was held that there was legal evidence in support of the conclusion that the injury and death arose out of and in the course of the employment. Jillson v. Ross, 38 R. I. 145, 94 Atl. 717.

Employee Working Overtime—Answering Personal Telephone Call.—The employee was to be manager of a store, but his predecessor was still in the store and was to conclude his service the next day. He was getting through when the employee came to work, but at the latter's request was relieving him of the duty of making out the daily report at the time of the injury. The employee was working overtime taking account of stock, and was injured by falling downstairs at eight o'clock in the evening while answering a telephone call from his daughter who asked when he was coming home. It was held that the evidence warranted the conclusion that it was the employee's duty to answer telephone calls even outside the usual business hours, and hence that the fact that the call happened to be a personal one, would not prevent his conduct in attending to it, from being service issuing out of and in the course of his employment. So, it was held that the finding that he received an injury in the course of and arising out of his employment was supported by the evidence. Cox's Case, 225 Mass. 220, 114 N. E. 281.

Fireman—Fall from Engine.—A fireman, while firing on a switch engine, fell therefrom and death resulted. On an autopsy, the physicians found a portion of the brain soft and that a hemorrhage apparently had emanated from that portion of the brain, and it was found that the workman died from hemorrhage of the brain and fracture of the skull, but it was uncertain whether the hemorrhage was caused by the fracture. One physician then present testified that this strain on the brain was caused by a ruptured blood vessel; that in his judgment the fall could not have produced that condition; that the cause of the condition was syphilis, that the scars on the other parts of the workman's body indicated that condition; that the fall would aggravate such a condition and hasten results; and that the exercise of shoveling would cause blood pressure, and might cause a ruptured blood vessel. It was held that the evidence justified a finding that the injury resulted from an accident arising out of the employment. Peoria R. Terminal Co. v. Industrial Board, 279 Ill. 352, 116 N. E. 651.

Laborer on Dam—Struck by Lightning.—While a workman was at work on a dam during a rain storm he received a stroke of lightning which resulted in his death. It was found that he came to his death while performing services growing out of and incidental to his employment, and that at the time and place of his death he was not exposed to a hazard from lightning stroke peculiar to the industry or differing substantially from the hazard from lightning stroke of any ordinary outdoor work. And on appeal it was held that there was substantial basis for the findings in the evidence. Hoenig v. Industrial Commission, 159 Wis. 646, 150 N. W. 996, L.R.A.1916A 339.

Laborer Unloading Coal—Fall from Trestle.—A workman was engaged in shoveling coal from one of two cars on a trestle. The next day at about six minutes before seven o'clock a laborer working with him found the planks covered with frost and footprints thereon as far as the ladder which was used to get into the coal car. His left hand mitten was found in the corner of the car next to the ladder. About seven o'clock he was found unconscious on the ground directly below the ladder, where he would naturally be if he had fallen from the trestle, more than thirty-six feet above. It was held that the finding that the death resulted from an injury arising out of and in the course of the employment, was warranted by the evidence. Uzzio's Case, 228 Mass. 331, 117 N. E. 349.

Riding on Footboard of Engine.—The applicant was working under a contract for unloading coal at a power plant. He was in the habit of directing the switching crew about the placing of the cars of coal. One day after all the coal had been unloaded, he went down to the railroad yards to see about getting more. He saw a train of about thirty cars coming with coal, with a switchman standing on the front of the engine. He stepped on the footboard on the rear of the engine and soon after was jerked or fell off and was run over and injured. It was held that there was credible evidence to sustain the finding that the injury arose out of and in the course of his employment. Decatur R. etc. Co. v. Industrial Board, 276 Ill. 472, 114 N. E. 915.

Oiling Machine after Usual Hours.—The applicant for compensation was employed as a baker by a master baker and grocer, "to take charge of" a dough-mixing machine in the latter's bakery. After finishing his day's work, he later came back to the bakehouse, went upstairs to the dough-room and proceeded to oil the machine, in the course of which several of his fingers were caught in the machine and injured. The applicant's evidence showed that it was the general practice for the man in charge of the machine as doughmaker to oil and lubricate it, and he understood it to be his duty so to do when employed. But there was evidence for the employers that some five years before they had assigned a special man for the work of oiling and lubricating the machines, intending that he alone should have that duty. It was held that the evidence supported the holding of the recorder that the accident arose out of and in the course of the applicant's employment. Sexton v. Horsford [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 216, 50 Ir. L. T. Rep. 90.

"Jounce" of Wagon Throwing Workman to Street—Intoxication.—The only eyewitness to the happening of the accident testified that the workman appeared to be all right, and that a "jounce" of the wagon threw him to the street. There was conflicting testimony as to whether the workman was in a state of intoxication. It was held that the evidence was sufficient to support the finding that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. Napoleon v. McCullough, 89 N. J. L. 716, 99 Atl. 385.

Drowning—Seaman Getting Boat.—The skipper and the mate of a barge went ashore in its boat, the skipper landing at the causeway and directing the mate to move the boat to the railing of a floating stage lying against a pier. On returning to the pier the skipper sent the mate down the pier to fetch the boat round to the causeway. The mate went down the pier and shortly afterwards fell into the water and was drowned. It was a very dark night and there were no lights on the pier, the skipper being able to see the mate for a dozen yards only and the latter having fifty yards to go to the boat. After a time long enough for the mate to have reached the boat, the skipper heard a splash. The mate would have had to get over the railing to reach the boat, which apparently had not been touched since it had been made fast. The arbitrator found that an accident had happened to the mate arising out of and in the course of his employment, drawing the inference from the evidence that the mate had reached the boat and had arrived within the ambit of his employment. It was held that the facts were sufficient to justify the inference drawn. Harman v. Crow [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 536, 9 B. W. C. C. 88.

Fall on Slippery Platform.—A number of employees worked at a table trimming the viscera of cattle. The table was about waist-high, about forty-five feet long, and about two feet higher at one end than at the other end. The workmen stood on a platform which sloped with the table, and both were wet and slippery. While standing there, a workman fell backward, and later died. It was held on demurrer to the evidence, that the evidence tended to prove that he met his death as the result of an injury by accident arising out of his employment. Madey v. Swift, 101 Kan. 771, 168 Pac. 1105.

Mine Explosion.—A workman was employed to blast and then shovel the loose earth and ore, using for blasting dynamite, fuses, and dynamite caps. Shortly after he had started work one morning, he left his work and went to a "crosscut," a usual thing for that time of day. In a few minutes an explosion was heard and the workman was found about a hundred feet from his place of work, his chest and vitals badly torn by the explosion. The evidence not being conclusive of suicide, it was held that it supported the finding of death caused by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment. State v. District Ct. (Minn.) 164 N. W. 582.

Teamster—Caring for Other Team.—A teamster employed to deliver ice and coal, at the time of the accident, was feeding a team in the barn when one of the horses kicked him with such violence that he died about three weeks thereafter. The team was a new one which had not been assigned to any of the teamsters. There was testimony that it was the duty of each teamster to feed his own team only and no other. There was also testimony to the effect that, when a teamster came back to the barn early from the afternoon's work, it was his duty to care for any extra horses that happened to be in the barn. It was held that the evidence was sufficient to support the finding that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. Suburban Ice Co. v. Industrial Board, 274 Ill. 630, 113 N. E. 979.

Teacher—Moving Desk.—A teacher, in attempting to get a book from a bookcase, put her weight on a desk which was out of its proper position and which prevented her from opening the case, in order to move it, and was injured. It was held that the evidence supported a finding that the accident whereby she was injured arose out of and in the course of her employment as a teacher. Elk Grove Union High School Dist. v. Industrial Acc. Commission (Cal.) 168 Pac. 392.

Undertaker's Employee Struck by Coffin.—A workman employed by an undertaker to lift coffins out of vans, went out to work on a particular day with no physical injuries on his person and returned home the evening of the same day bearing marks which were consistent with his having been struck by a coffin. These marks consisted of a black mark on his chest and right side, and on the stomach, and his leg was strained and swelled, and were seen by his wife and his physician. He died of pneumonia supervening on traumatic pleurisy. It was held that there was sufficient evidence to justify the conclusion of the recorder that the death was the result of injuries caused by an accident which arose out of and in the course of his employment. Wright v. Kerrigan [1911] 2 Ir. R. 301, 45 Ir. L. T. 82, 4 B. W. C. C. 432.

Workman Killed While Waiting to Resume Work.—One of a gang of men employed to wheel stone and cement to a concrete mixer, went to his work at 7 o'clock in the morning. On his arrival it was found that the pipes of the concrete mixer had frozen and that no work could be done until they had been repaired. At 7:40 o'clock, and at least an hour before the mixer was fixed so as to permit the resumption of work, he was struck by a street car and killed. It was held that the evidence justified a finding that his death was due to an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Newark Paving Co. v. Klotz, 85 N. J. L. 432, 91 Atl. 91.

Sawing Timber—Dust Blown in Eye.—Where a workman stated in his application for compensation that dirt or sawdust or some other foreign substance entered his left eye while he was sawing timber, and in his testimony he said that he was sawing some timber, and the wind was strong and the dust flew in his left eye, it was held that it could fairly be inferred that the dust caused by his sawing flew into his eye, and that the injury arose out of the employment. Dickinson v. Industrial Board (Ill.) 117 N. E. 438.

Using Motorcycle on Employer's Business.—A workman was in the custom of coming to his work on a motorcycle, owned by him and which he used from time to time for going to and from jobs, with the knowledge and consent of his employer. He was not paid extra for the use of the motorcycle by the employer. After arriving at his employer's place of business one morning, he proceeded to clean the clutch in order to put the machine in proper working order, and while so doing he caught his fingers in the chain guard and had to have parts of them amputated. It was held that, under the evidence, a finding that the accident was one arising out of and in the course of the employment was not unreasonable. Kingsley v. Donovan, 169 App. Div. 828, 155 N. Y. S. 801.

Watchman—Altercation with Employee of Tenant.—The applicant, a night watchman employed by a company engaged in drying lumber and operating planing mills, agreed to watch the motorcycle of an employee of a tenant of the company which was left in the blacksmith's shop. Although such an agreement was outside the scope of his employment, it had terminated at the time the accident occurred, for the testimony showed conclusively that the owner had taken his motorcycle from the blacksmith shop and had it out in the street at the time of the accident, and that the altercation between him and the applicant, in which the latter was injured, came about by reason of the applicant becoming suspicious of the movements of the owner of the machine and taking measures to keep him out of the blacksmith shop. It was held that the evidence supported the finding that the accident arose out of and in the scope of the employment. Chicago Dry Kiln Co. v. Industrial Board, 276 Ill. 556, 114 N. E. 1009.

Watchman—Death by Violence.—A watchman employed on a company's premises entered on his customary duties at about 10 P.M. and was never seen again. On the next morning three pools of fluid partly reddish and partly grey were found on the wharf on the property of the company. There were drops of fluid staining the wharf to its edge. There were marks such as might have been made by dragging a body from these pools over the edge of the wharf and into the water. The watchman's cap was found in or near one of these pools, with a tear in the back part of the cap at a place which, when the cap was worn, would be at the base of the skull, but the tear did not extend through the lining. His unopened knife lay just at the edge of the wharf. In the engine room was found the card in which he checked off his hourly rounds, the entries indicating that he had made his last tour of duty about midnight. A door near the boiler room was found open. On the outside of the fence which partially surrounded the property were marks which might have been made by the feet of persons endeavoring to climb over it. His home life was happy. It was held that the evidence warranted the finding that the death was accidental and in the course of the watchman's employment. Western Grain, etc., Products Co. v. Pillsbury, 173 Cal. 135, 159 Pac. 423.

Watchman—Intentionally Shot by Third Person.—A watchman was employed by six corporations to make regular rounds of their premises, his employment being by a separate agreement with each of his employers, and not by any joint agreement or joint employment. One morning his body was found on the premises of one of the corporations, death having been caused by gunshot wounds inflicted by unknown persons engaged at the time of the murder in committing burglary on the premises. It was not disputed that the evidence warranted the inference that the killing had occurred while he was "performing services growing out of and incidental to his employment and acting within the course of his employment as such." It was held that the killing was accidental, even though the shooting was the wilful and intentional act of a third person. Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 407, Ann. Cas. 1917E 390, 156 Pac. 491.

The body of a night watchman was found on a path. He had been shot and had died instantly. It was his duty to keep loiterers who were in the habit of going into the plant of his employers at night to get warm off the premises. It was held that the evidence warranted the finding that some marauder who was suddenly surprised at meeting the night watchman killed him because he was the night watchman, and therefore that his death resulted from an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Mechanics' Furniture Co. v. Industrial Board, (Ill.) 117 N. E. 986.

Unexplained Death—Floatman.—It was the duty of a floatman to take records of the cars on the float, to see that the cars were properly charged up, that the brakes were applied and placed under the wheels, and that the tugboats were properly tied.

He was directed by his superior to take his lamps and other gear and go aboard a float then at the pier, which was loaded with cars, and to stand by until the tug which had brought another float over should return to take his float to the bridge, when the cars on the float would be run on the railroad tracks. He was not seen alive subsequent to the giving of these directions. That he followed them and went on the float was proven by the fact that about twenty minutes later, when the tug came to take the float to the bridge, his lanterns and gear were on the float. Two days later his body was found floating in the slip. It was held that the evidence was sufficient to justify the finding that the death was accidental and arose out of the employment. Tirre v. Bush Terminal Co. 172 App. Div. 386, 158 N. Y. S. 883.

Unexplained Death—Seaman.—The chief engineer of a steamship gave orders that he should be called earlier than usual. He got up, dressed in his working clothes, and was seen going to the after end of the ship until he passed behind the wheelhouse in the stern, which was the last time he was seen. The sea was calm. It appeared from the evidence that the ship was a new vessel, this being her second voyage, and that the engines were not working satisfactorily; that the propeller tips had been bent, and later broken off, as he thought, and that the propeller tips and the ship's draught could be seen if a man put his head through the rails at the stern, or climbed over them and leaned outwards, and that such a thing was sometimes done, but was risky. It was held that the evidence supported the conclusion of the county court judge that the death was caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment. Serbino v. Proctor [1916] 1 A. C. (Eng.) 464, 114 L. T. N. S. 431, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 30, 85 L. J. K. B. 599, [1916] W. N. 46, 9 B. W. C. C. 182, 32 Times L. Rep. 280, affirming [1915] 3 K. B. 344, 113 L. T. N. S. 640, [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 425, 84 L. J. K. B. 1381, [1915] W. N. 262, 31 Times L. Rep. 524, 59 Sol. J. 629.

Unexplained Death—Watchman.—The duties of a night watchman employed by a brewing company consisted mainly of cleaning up after the day force had left, and turning on the steam in the pasteurizing machines some time between midnight and four o'clock in the morning, which could be done from the basement floor. His hours were from six o'clock in the evening until six o'clock in the morning, including the night from Sunday evening to Monday morning. At the time of the accident, a large opening had been made in the first floor of the building preparatory to installing a pasteurizing machine. Surrounding this opening and at its edge there had been placed beer boxes, with planks on them, for a guard or railing. Between eight and nine o'clock Sunday night, he was found lying on the basement floor. There was an abrasion on the back of the head, one shoulder was bruised, and the finger nails of one hand were turned back. On the middle of one of the planks around the opening there was an opened bottle of beer, with the contents untouched. It was held that the facts and circumstances amply supported the conclusion that the watchman accidentally sustained a personal injury which caused his death and that it was incidental to his employment. Heileman Brewing Co. v. Shaw, 161 Wis. 443, 154 N. W. 631.

A night watchman was employed by a biscuit company and it was his duty to patrol the buildings every hour, passing through every department. One night, soon after midnight, his body was found at the bottom of the well under the stairway in one of the company's buildings. It was held that an award of compensation was sustained by the testimony as establishing that his death was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Fogarty v. National Biscuit Co. 221 N. Y. 20, 116 N. E. 346, reversing order 175 App. Div. 729, 161 N. Y. S. 937.

Unexplained Death—Body Found at Foot of Stairs.—A common laborer was employed with others in connecting the water mains with the intake pipes in a theater. It was one of his duties to look after the tools and see that they were properly put away when the day's work was ended. The tools were kept, as were the men's coats, vests and dinner pails, on the stage. At about five minutes past five o'clock his body was found lying on the cement floor at the foot of the stairs leading from the basement, across which had been placed a large beam so that it was necessary for one going from the basement to the stage to stoop underneath the beam. He was in his shirtsleeves, his coat, vest, and dinner pail being later found on the stage. It was held that the evidence warranted the finding that the injury arose out of and in the course of the employment. De Mann v. Hydraulic Engineering Co. 192 Mich. 594, 159 N. W. 380.

Unexplained Death—Workman in Oil Refinery.—A workman, while in the employ of an oil company at its refinery, during working hours and while dressed in his working clothes, met his death by a fire communicated in some way to the inflammable flannel shirt he wore. In the course of the work the flannel shirts of all the workmen became saturated with oil and were very inflammable. Adjoining the room in which he was employed was a locker room, where each employee had a locker in which to keep his street clothes when at work, and his work clothes at other times. For some unknown purpose he left his work room and entered the locker room, closed the door after him and was there five or six minutes, then he rushed out of the room with the side of his shirt ablaze. There was a Bunsen burner in the locker room, which had formerly been used as a test room, which burner was used occasionally for heating samples of oil in the wash tanks and for heating glue for repairs, and was lighted at the time of the accident. His locker was about two feet from the end of the hood over the burner and about four and a half feet from the burner itself. A burnt match was found on the floor. There was no rule prohibiting the men from going to the locker room during working hours, or prohibiting smoking. It was held that there was evidence to sustain the finding that the death resulted from accidental injuries which arose out of and in the course of the employment. Chludzinski v. Standard Oil Co. 176 App. Div. 87, 167 N. Y. S. 225.

IV. Risk of Accident.

1. IN GENERAL.

When the accident is the result of a risk reasonably incident to the employment, it is an accident arising out of the employment. But the statute does not provide an insurance against every accident happening to the workman while he is engaged in the employment. The words "arising out of and in the course of employment" are conjunctive, and relief can be had under the act only when the accident arises both "out of" and "in the course of" employment. The injury must be received: (1) while the workman is doing the duty he is employed to perform; and also (2) as a natural incident of the work. It must be one of the risks connected with the employment, flowing therefrom as a natural consequence and chiefly connected with the work. Heitz v. Ruppert, 218 N. Y. 148, 112 N. E. 750, L.R.A. 1917A 344, affirming order 171 App. Div. 961, 155 N. Y. S. 1112, reargument denied 218 N. Y. 702, 113 N. E. 1057.

A test for determining whether the risk is incidental to the employment, was given in Union Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. Davis (Ind.) 115 N. E. 676, wherein the court said: "It has been held that an injury arises 'out of' the employment 'when it is something the risk of which might have been contemplated by a reasonable person, when entering the employment, as incidental to it. . . . A risk may be incidental to the employment when it is either an ordinary risk directly connected with the employment, or an extraordinary risk which is only indirectly connected with the employment owing to the special nature of the employment'—and that an injury arises 'in the course of the employment' if it 'occurs while the employee is doing what a man so employed may reasonably do within a time during which he is employed, and at a place where he may reasonably be during that time.' . . . In other cases it is held that an injury arises 'out of' the employment when there is apparent to the rational mind, upon consideration of all the circumstances, a causal connection between the conditions under which the work is required to be performed and the resulting injury. Under this test, if the injury can be seen to have followed as a natural incident of the work and to have been contemplated by a reasonable person, familiar with the whole situation, as a result of the exposure occasioned by the nature of the employment, then it arises 'out of' the employment. But it excludes an injury which cannot fairly be traced to the employment as a contributing proximate cause, and which comes from a hazard to which the workmen would have been equally exposed apart from the employment. The causative danger must be peculiar to the work, and not common to the neighborhood. It must be incidental to the character of the business, and not independent of the relation of master and servant. It need not have been foreseen or expected, but after the event it must appear to have had its origin in a risk connected with the employment, and to have flowed from that source as a rational consequence."

So in the case of In re Loper (Ind.) 116 N. E. 324, the court said: "The existence of a duty on the part of the employer and its breach resulting in injury to a workman, however, are not the tests by which the right to an award under compensation acts is determined. A duty and its breach is negligence, but negligence on the part of the employer is not essential in order that there may be compensation under such acts. The test of the right to compensation under such acts, in so far as concerns the element now under consideration, is whether the injury resulted from some peril incident to the employment; whether the cause of the injury, although not foreseen, may reasonably be deduced from the circumstances and surroundings peculiar to the place, and under which the workman was required to perform his labors, regardless of whether such perils or surroundings involve negligence on the part of the employer."

In discussing the question of proximate cause, the court in Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 682, 158 Pac. 212, L.R.A. 1916F 1164, said: "The accidents arising out of the employment of the person injured are those in which it is possible to trace the injury to the nature of the employee's work or to the risks to which the employer's business exposes the employee. The accident must be one resulting from a risk reasona-

My incident to the employment. . . . It arises out of the occupation when there is a causal connection between the conditions under which the servant works and the resulting injury. It need not have been foreseen or expected, but after the event it must appear to have had its origin in a risk connected with the employment, and to have flowed from that source as a rational consequence."

In Simpson v. Sinclair [1917] A. C. (Eng.) 127, 116 L. T. N. S. 609, [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 164, 86 L. J. P. C. 102, [1917] W. N. 97, 33 Times L. Rep. 247, 61 Sol. J. 350, reversing [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 543, [1916] Sc. Ct. Sess. 85, [1915] Scott. L. T. 291, Viscount Haldane said: "What, then, is the special point of view which the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, directs us to take in the practical selection of the circumstances which are to determine whether an event has arisen out of the employment which has amounted to injury by accident within the meaning of the act? I think that the court is directed to look at what has happened proximately, and not to search for causes or conditions lying behind, as would be the case if negligence on the part of the employer had to be established. For the reasons which I assigned in this House in Trim Joint Dist. School v. Kelly [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 359, 83 L. J. P. C. 220, [1914] A. C. 667, reasons which I abstain from repeating, I am of opinion that the governing purpose of the statute makes it as irrelevant to look beyond the immediate cause of the accident for explanations, or for remoter causes, as it would be in a case arising on a policy of marine insurance, provided that the circumstances bring the immediate cause within the definition. Where the question is one of the construction of an obligation to insure against accident, the law looks to the proxima causa of the accident as decisive, and does not look behind it."

2. RISK INCIDENTAL TO EMPLOYMENT.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the risk of the accident was incidental to the employment and therefore that the accident arose out of the employment:

Assault by Fellow Workman.—A workman employed as a helper was asked by the boiler maker he was working with why he did not come to work the night before. He replied that he had been sick. The boiler maker became angry and hit him with a piece of iron across the left arm, breaking it. It was held that the accident arose "in the course of employment" within the meaning of the Federal Act of 1908. In re Flemmings, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 225.

The claimant while employed in a factory became involved in a verbal exchange of insulting language with a fellow employee, as a result of which the latter violently assaulted the claimant three-quarters of an hour later. In defending himself from the assault, the claimant sustained injuries. An award of the state industrial commission was affirmed. Carbone v. Loft, 219 N. Y. 579, 114 N. E. 1062, affirming 174 App. Div. 901, 159 N. Y. S. 1104.

The claimant was employed as a driver. He brought his horses into the stable, where a fellow workman and he unharnessed them and proceeded to wash them off with the hose. The claimant told his coworkman that he was using too much water on the horses, and the latter then intentionally sprinkled some water on the claimant. Shortly after the claimant touched the other workman on the shoulder as he passed him and told him not to do that again. The workman slapped the claimant on the shoulder, and as the latter turned around, the workman's finger stuck in his eye causing injuries necessitating its removal. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. Heitz v. Ruppert, 218 N. Y. 148, 112 N. E. 750, L.R.A.1917A 344, affirming order 171 App. Div. 961, 155 N. Y. S. 1112, reargument denied 218 N. Y. 702, 113 N. E. 1057.

Assault by Stranger.—The work of the petitioner was the filling of a barrel with water, and the carrying of the water in pails to other servants of the same employer to be used in mixing cement. While temporarily away from it, two strangers upset the barrel and carried it a short distance away. At this point the petitioner's superior directed him to get the barrel and bring it back. This he undertook to do, and when he approached the men they threw down the barrel and assaulted him, inflicting injuries. It was held that the accident arose out of the employment as well as in the course of it. Nevich v. Delaware, etc. R. Co. 90 N. J. L. 228, 100 Atl. 234, L.R.A.1917E 847.

The claimant was employed as a night man at a plant engaged in the manufacture of sandpaper, which was a hazardous employment. His duties were to watch the premises against the danger of fire, to protect them against the commission of depredations, to keep the furnaces under the boilers supplied with coal, and to pour glue into the vats. One evening he was assaulted and robbed by strangers, and injured in the course of the struggle. It was held that he was entitled to compensation for accidental injuries arising out of and in the course of his employment. Hellman v. Manning Sand Paper Co. 176 App. Div. 127, 162 N. Y. S. 335.

A night watchman was assaulted and killed while engaged at the time in the duties of his employment, which included the protection of the employer's property against burglary. It was held that he received an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment. Ohio Bldg. Safety Vault Co. v. Industrial Board, 277 Ill. 96, 115 N. E. 149.

Anthrax.—A workman while employed with other workmen in sorting wool in a factory, was infected with anthrax and died thereof. It was held that his death was attributable to personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Brintons v. Turvey [1905] A. C. (Eng.) 230, 2 Ann. Cas. 137, 92 L. T. N. S. 578, 74 L. J. K. B. 474, 21 Times L. Rep. 444, 53 W. R. 641, affirming [1904] 1 K. B. 328, on the authority of Fenton v. Thorley [1903] A. C. 443.

The occupation of the claimant was weighing hides, a hazardous employment. Wet salt from the hides caused a swelling on the back of his hand, from which an abrasion of the skin or fissure resulted. Later, in handling dirty and diseased hides, anthrax germs contained therein were communicated to him through this abrasion or fissure. It was held that this might properly be deemed an accidental injury arising out of and in the course of his employment. Hiers v. Hull, 178 App. Div. 350, 164 N. Y. S. 767.

Rupture of Blood Vessel.—A workman, as the result of the overexertion and strain of lifting a can of paint weighing a hundred or more pounds and carrying it twenty or thirty feet, ruptured a blood vessel in his lungs, and died of traumatic pneumonia resulting from that rupture. It was held that the injury was "an accidental injury suffered in the course of his employment." Southwestern Surety Ins. Co. v. Owens (Tex.) 198 S. W. 662.

The claimant was employed as a bottler, and while working at his employer's plant and assisting another employee in lifting a barrel weighing about two hundred pounds, for the purpose of tiering for storage in the cooler, was seized with a stroke of apoplexy by reason of the strain occasioned by the lifting of the heavy barrel. It was held that having been an employee in a hazardous employment, and having suffered a cerebral hemorrhage as the result of unusual strain or exertion while prosecuting that employment, the claimant suffered an accidental injury arising out of and in the course of his employment. Fowler v. Risedorff Bottling Co. 175 App. Div. 224, 161 N. Y. S. 535.

A workman, while engaged in the course of his employment in moving a weight, had an attack of cerebral hemorrhage as the result of the exertion he was using. The work was being performed in the usual manner. Four days later a second attack supervened, which caused permanent paralysis. At the time of the first attack his arteries were in a degenerate condition, rendering the recurrence of an attack likely. It was held that the workman's final disablement was caused by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. M'Innes v. Dunsmuir [1908] Sc. Ct. Sess. 1021, 45 Scott. L. Rep. 804.

Burn—Falling into Fire While in Epileptic Fit.—A night watchman in the reclamation service, while standing or leaning over a camp fire to get warm, lost consciousness from epilepsy and fell into the fire, sustaining a severe burn. It was held that he received an accidental injury in the course of his employment, within the meaning of the Federal Act of 1908, notwithstanding it arose in consequence of disease. In re Clement, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 228.

Heat-stroke—Stoker.—A trimmer on board a steamship who was in a weak and emaciated condition, received a heat-stroke while he was working in a stokehole opposite the boiler, became exhausted, and died in a few hours. It was held that this was an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Ismay v. Williamson [1908] A. C. (Eng.) 437, 99 L. T. N. S. 595, 77 L. J. P. C. 107, 24 Times L. Rep. 881, 52 Sol. J. 713, following Fenton v. Thorley [1903] A. C. 443; Brintons v. Turvey [1905] A. C. 230, 2 Ann. Cas. 137.

Lead Poisoning.—The physical incapacity of a workman for labor found to have been caused by the gradual absorption of lead poisoning into his system resulting in personal injury has been held to be an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment. Johnson's Case, 217 Mass. 388, 104 N. E. 735.

Nephritis—Hot Workroom—Chill.—There were about two big wagonloads of steaming pulp in the basement room where a workman was required to work, which had run out of a broken iron pipe. His foreman directed him to remove it by flushing it out into the sewer with water, to do which he was required to use a hose through which hot water from the exhaust of the engine was forced. His working place became very hot in consequence of the pulp and water, and he perspired profusely. On his way home for dinner he became chilled, and acute nephritis developed. It was held that he received a personal injury by reason of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. United Paperboard Co. v. Lewis (Ind.) 117 N. E. 276.

Streptococcus Infection—Undertaker's Assistant.—An undertaker's assistant, while cleaning instruments which had been used on the body of one who had died of streptococcus infection, was himself infected through a small cut in his finger, which infection caused his death. It was held that the evidence was sufficient to justify the finding that the injury arose out of and in the course of the workman's employment. Blaess v. Dolph (Mich.) 161 N. W. 885.

Tetanus—Nail Piercing Foot of Gardener.—A gardener, while digging in his employer's garden, was injured by a nail piercing his foot through his boot. He subsequently contracted and died of tetanus through the germ which caused that disease passing into the wound in his foot. It was found that persons working in stables and gardens were peculiarly subject to contract this disease, if suffering from any wound, and that the tetanus germ entered the wound whilst the gardener was doing his gardening work. It was held, supporting the award of the recorder, that the workman met his death by "accident arising out of and in the course of his employment." Walker v. Mullins, 42 Ir. L. T. 168, 1 B. W. C. 211.

Typhoid Fever—Drinking Polluted Water Furnished by Employer.—A workman became afflicted with typhoid fever which caused his death, from the drinking of polluted water furnished him by his employer. It was held that his death was proximately caused by accident while he was "performing services growing out of and incidental to his employment." Vennen v. New Dells Lumber Co. Ann. Cas. 1918B 293.

Larking—Turning Air Compressor on Workman.—While a drill press operator was engaged in performing his work and was not participating in the sport or horseplay, the assistant superintendent of the employer turned the air from the air compressor on him, causing severe internal injuries resulting in death. The employees in the factory had established the custom of using the air compressor to clean their clothes, and also of using the air therefrom on one another in acts of sport in which the assistant superintendent participated. It was held that as the employer, with knowledge of the facts, permitted these practices to continue when he might have prohibited them, they became an element of the conditions under which the employee was required to labor. Hence it was held that the injury and death arose out of the employment. In re Loper (Ind.) 116 N. E. 324.

Larking—Pushing Workman—Standing in Line for Pay.—A workman quit work about five o'clock and formed in line with the other employees to receive his weekly pay at the office window as he passed out of the building. There were about seventy-five men in line, and he occupied a position about the middle of the line. Some of the men behind him began pushing forward, and those in front of him began pushing backward at the same time, with the result that he was squeezed out of the line and slipped and fell on the cement floor and was injured. It was held that it could not be seriously contended that the injury did not arise out of the employment. Pekin Cooperage Co. v. Industrial Board, 277 Ill. 53, 115 N. E. 128.

Frost Bite.—An employee was engaged in soliciting insurance and collecting insurance premiums. He was of good health and of rugged physique. On an unusually cold day he left home and drove fifteen or twenty miles, in the regular course of his employment, and during this time his nose was frozen, and the tissues adjacent thereto, producing a lesion of the skin and surface tissues. As a direct result of these injuries he contracted erysipelas, from which he died. It was held that he died of a personal injury "arising in the course of and out of his employment." Lark v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 90 Conn. 303, 97 Atl. 320, L.R.A. 1916E 584.

A workman employed in filling wagons with stone in a pit eighteen feet deep at a very low temperature for ten consecutive hours froze his left foot, and in consequence it had to be amputated. It was held that the accident occurred in the course of his employment, as the workman was exposed to a particular risk. Canada Cement Co. v. Pazuk, 22 Quebec K. B. 432.

Street Risk—Riding Bicycle.—A boy in the employment of builders was, by their orders, riding a bicycle through the public streets, having been directed to go on the bicycle to get some plaster. He came into collision with a motor car and was injured. It was held that the accident arose out of, as well as in the course of, his employment. Dennis v. White [1917] A. C. (Eng.) 479, 116 L. T. N. S. 774, 86 L. J. K. B. 1074, [1917] W. N. 203, 33 Times L. Rep. 434, 61 Sol. J. 558, reversing [1916] 2 K. B. 1, 114 L. T. N. S. 579, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 106, 85 L. J. K. B. 862, 60 Sol. J. 385, 9 B. W. C. 250, and following M'Neice v. Singer Sewing Mach. Co. [1911] Sc. Ct. Sess. 12, 4 B. W. C. C. 351; Hughes v. Bett [1915] Sc. Ct. Sess. 150, and White v. Avery [1916] Sc. Ct. Sess. 209, in preference to Pierce v. Provident Clothing, etc. Co. [1911] 1 K. B. 997, 4 B. W. C. C. 242; Sheldon v. Needham [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 274, 7 B. W. C. C. 471; Slade v. Taylor [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 53, 8 B. W. C. C. 65.

Street Risk—Slipping on Ice.—It was the duty of the applicant, a machine fitter, to go around to various places in order to be present as representing his employers when the county inspector of weights and measures inspected certain weighing machines. After finishing his inspection at one village, the inspector had to go to another village about half an hour's walk distant. He went there by bicycle, and as there was no convenient railroad communication, the applicant, who had a railway pass, in order to keep in touch with the inspector, decided to walk the distance. The road was slippery owing to frost after a recent rain, and the applicant, whilst stepping aside to avoid a van, slipped on the ice and fell and broke his wrist. It was held that the circumstances presented a typical case of an accident which was directly attributable to, and arose out of, his employment. White v. Avery [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 594, [1916] Sc. Ct. Sess. 209, [1915] 2 Scott. L. T. 374.

Street Risk—Steel Beams Falling from Building on Teamster.—A teamster was doing his usual work in a customary manner, driving along a street where he would properly be expected to travel, when a heavy load of steel beams weighing over thirteen tons broke the hoisting apparatus and fell from the eighteenth story of a building, instantly killing him. It was held that the teamster's death was caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Mahowald v. Thompson-Starrett Co. 134 Minn. 113, 158 N. W. 913, rehearing denied 134 Minn. 117, 159 N. W. 565.

Street Risk—Struck by Automobile.—A tree trimmer and planter was employed by the week to go around trimming trees, doing tree surgical work, taking down trees, etc., with other men of whom he had charge. While going from the inspection of one job to inspect another, which was necessary in the discharge of his duties, he was knocked down by an automobile and fatally injured. It was held that his death was due to an accident "arising out of and in the course of his employment." Kunze v. Detroit Shade Tree Co. 192 Mich. 435, 158 N. W. 851, L.R.A. 1917A 252.

Street Risk—Thrown Out of Cart.—The applicant, who was employed as a builder's assistant and mason, fell from a cart while taking a window frame to a customer's house, and was injured. The window frame was of considerable size and weighed about three stones. As the employer had no cart at the time in which to send the frame, he told the workman to manage it the best way he could. The man started with it on his shoulders, when, meeting a pony and cart accompanying a traction engine, he arranged with the lad in charge for a lift. He then put the frame into the cart and was getting in himself, when the pony dashed off, after the traction engine had started. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment, and was due to a special risk incident thereto. Mullinger v. Bidewell [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 51, 10 B. W. C. C. 104.

Teamster—Cat Bite.—A teamster took his horses to the stable for their midday meal, and then proceeded to eat his own dinner in the stable. While he was eating his dinner, a stable cat sprang at him and bit him. He was not teasing the cat in any way, nor was he feeding it on that occasion, although he had thrown bits to the cat on other occasions. The cat was not known to be vicious. The bite set up blood poisoning, and two joints of the applicant's finger had to be amputated. It was held that the decision of the county judge that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment, was correct. Rowland v. Wright [1909] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 963, 99 L. T. N. S. 758, 77 L. J. K. B. 1071, 24 Times L. Rep. 852, 1 B. W. C. C. 192.

Employee Bitten by Dog Kept in Cellar.—An employee of a piano manufacturer was directed by his superior to carry some materials into the cellar of the factory. While doing so, he was bitten by a dog which had been kept there for a year or more by the engineer, who was stationed in the cellar. It was held that the injury sustained by the employee was one "arising out of and in the course of his employment." Barone v. Brambach Piano Co. 167 N. Y. S. 933.

Bite of Mad Dog.—While the claimant was in the canal cut attending to the duties of his position as powder foreman, a mad dog came running through the cut and bit him on the calf of his left leg. It was held that the injury was received in the course of the employment. In re Bailey, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 297.

Baker—Explosion of Natural Gas—Negligence of Foreman.—A workman's injuries occurred as a result of an explosion of natural gas used for heating the ovens of his employer, caused by the negligence of the employer's foreman, while the workman was engaged in his capacity of baker at a table about twelve feet directly in front of the oven, and consisted of severe burns. It was held that the workman's injuries were accidental injuries arising out of and in the course of his employment. Adams v. Item Biscuit Co. (Okla.) 162 Pac. 938.

Bartender—Struck by Glass Thrown by Drunken Man.—While in the course of his employment, and actually engaged in his duties as bartender in the saloon where he was employed, the applicant was struck in the right eye by a heavy drinking glass thrown by a patron of the saloon who was so drunk that he did not know what he was doing. It was held that the applicant's employment caused a special degree of exposure to risk, and that the accident "arose out of" his employment. State v. District Ct. 134 Minn. 16, 158 N. W. 713, L.R.A. 1916F 957.

Hotel Employee—Fall on Platform of Railway Station.—The applicant was employed as a "boots" at a hotel. Among his duties was that of attending both arriving and departing trains and waiting for trains to carry luggage, at the railway station. On the day of the accident, he was informed that the train for which he was waiting would not come, owing to the heavy snowstorm. In walking along the platform to get to the hotel bus outside the station, he slipped in the snow and fell on the rails, three and half feet lower than the platform, breaking his leg. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. Blake v. Ramsay [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 84, 51 Ir. L. T. Rep. 6.

Bricklayer—Fall of Scaffold.—The claimant, by occupation a bricklayer, was employed by a lithographing and printing company to point up one of the walls of its plant and repair cracks therein. For such labor he and his helper were to be paid the regular wages for bricklayers and bricklayers' helpers, and the company furnished all materials, ladders, and supplies. While working without a helper, one of the ropes supporting a scaffold on which he was at work broke and he was precipitated a distance of some thirty feet to the ground and was injured. It was held that the injury to the claimant arose out of and in the course of an employment "carried on by the employer for pecuniary gain," and that the claimant's work was incidental and requisite to the hazardous business carried on by the company, namely, lithographing and printing. Dose v. Mochle Lithographic Co. 221 N. Y. 401, 117 N. E. 616.

Carpenter Repairing Car—Door Blown Shut.—A carpenter employed by a railroad company was repairing a camp car on a repair track. There was a coal car on the next repair track, the space between the two cars being about six feet. While passing between these cars from taking certain measurements, which was the most direct, convenient, and only available route, the door of the camp car, which opened outwards, instead of sliding as car doors generally do, blew shut in a gust of wind, throwing him against the coal car and injuring him. It was held that his injury arose out of as well as in the course of his employment. Myers v. Louisiana R. etc. Co. 140 La. 937, 74 So. 256.

Delivery Boy—Catching Hold of Rear End of Truck.—A delivery boy was furnished a bicycle with which to do his work. He was given permission to get his luncheon at home and was then to make a call for a package and to return to the store. After lunch he caught on the rear end of a motor truck, proceeding in his direction. The truck overtook and passed a second truck, proceeding in the same direction and then made a sudden turn. The boy was thrown to the pavement as a result and run over by the rear truck before it could be stopped. It was held that he received a personal injury arising out of and in the course of his employment. Beaudry v. Watkins, 191 Mich. 445, 158 N. W. 16, L.R.A.1916F 576.

Delivery Helper—Finger Pierced by Nail in Bottom of Barrel.—The claimant was employed as a delivery helper. Among his duties were loading goods on a truck and drawing the truck by hand to the place in the basement where it was to be unloaded. While lifting a barrel for the purpose of putting it on a truck and moving it to another part of the store, a nail in the bottom of the barrel pierced one of his fingers, which wound later became infected. It was held that his injuries arose out of and in the course of his employment. Holtz v. Greenhut, 175 App. Div. 878, 162 N. Y. S. 359.

Dishwasher in Restaurant—Floor Giving Way.—While working as a dishwasher in the restaurant in which he was employed, the floor immediately above the place where the workman was at work suddenly gave way, due to the fact that it had been overloaded by the storing of a large quantity of bottled grape juice thereon, and he was struck by some falling object or objects, and injured. It was held that he was injured by an accident "arising out of the employment." Kimbol v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 173 Cal. 351, Ann. Cas. 1917E 312, 160 Pac. 160, L.R.A. 1917B 595.

Driver—Fall from Wagon.—A driver was employed in delivering gasoline, and while returning home fell in front of the wagon in attempting to raise the canopy top attached to the seat, was run over, and died. It was held that the accident from which he came to his death did not result from the nature of the product which he carried, but from an accident which occurred in the course of and arose out of his employment. Gibson v. Industrial Board, 276 Ill. 73, 114 N. E. 515.

Driver—Stepping on Rusty Nail.—A driver while working for his employer in collecting dirt from the city streets, stepped on a board containing a rusty nail as he was getting into his wagon. The nail pierced his shoe and went into his foot, the wound became infected, and he died of tetanus. It was held that the injuries were accidental, and arose out of and in the course of his employment. The court held that he was engaged in the operation of a wagon drawn by horses, concededly a hazardous occupation under the statute, and that one of the necessary incidents of his delivery about the streets was getting off and on his wagon and hence his dependent was entitled to compensation, though the danger of stepping on the nail might be said to have been common to all persons using the street. Putnam v. Murray, 174 App. Div. 720, 160 N. Y. S. 811.

Traction Engine Driver—Falling from Engine.—A traction engine driver, who was intoxicated, fell off the footplate on to the roadway while driving his traction engine, and died of the injuries received. It was held that the accident not only occurred while he was "in the course of" his employment, but arose "out of" his employment. Fraser v. Riddel [1914] Sc. Ct. Sess. 125, [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 125.

Fish Kipperer—Fall of Adjacent Wall.—The applicant, who was employed as a kipperer in the fish-curing business, was at work along with a number of other women in a shed constructed of brick walls with a corrugated iron roof. While they were so occupied, a brick wall in the course of erection on the ground of an adjacent proprietor suddenly fell on the shed causing it to collapse, and burying the inmates beneath the wreckage, the applicant being seriously injured. It was held that the injuries sustained by the applicant were caused by an accident arising "out of" her employment. Simpson v. Sinclair [1917] A. C. (Eng.) 127, 116 L. T. N. S. 609, [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 164, 86 L. J. C. P. 102, [1917] W. N. 97, 33 Times L. Rep. 247, 61 Sol. J. 350, reversing [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 543, [1916] Sc. Ct. Sess. 85, [1915] 2 Scott. L. T. 291.

Gamekeeper—Shot While Hunting with Employer's Tenant.—A game warden and keeper employed to patrol a ranch in quest of poachers and to eject trespassers, was accidentally shot while, under express orders of the superintendent, he was assisting one of his employer's authorized tenants in finding and killing a deer. It was held that the fact that the accident arose out of the employment, appeared from the fact that it followed as a natural incident of the employment, engagement in which exposed the employee to the danger of being accidentally shot. O. L. Shafter Estate Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission (Cal.) 166 Pac. 24.

Laborer—Going to Work Along Railroad Track.—There were three ways of getting to the works where the applicant was employed as a fitter's laborer, the way along the railway being dangerous, but used by the workmen to a far greater extent and in much greater numbers than the other two. The employers knew that this way was so used and did not forbid its use. In using this way the applicant was struck by a locomotive and injured. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment, and that the applicant, in taking the dangerous way, was not adding a peril to his employment, disentitling him to compensation. Fox v. Rees [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 339, 115 L. T. N. S. 358, 86 L. J. K. B. 43, 9 B. W. C. C. 459.

Laborer—Recovering Dropped Pipe.—A workman was employed as a laborer to load and unload wagons, and to accompany them while being hauled by a traction engine from one quarry to another. While sitting on a wagon, which was being so hauled, he dropped his pipe, and in attempting to recover it lost his balance and fell in front of the wheels of the wagon, receiving fatal injuries. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. M'Lauchlan v. Anderson [1911] Sc. Ct. Sess. 529, 48 Scott. L. Rep. 349, 4 B. W. C. C. 376.

Livery Stable Employee—Fall Down Stairs.—An employee of a firm conducting a boarding and livery stable in a building owned by them, lived on the top floor of the building. While going down stairs from his apartment, he fell and cut his forehead. Thereafter erysipelas developed which, with other complications, caused his death. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. Lealie v. O'Connor, 220 N. Y. 672, 116 N. E. 1057, affirming order 173 App. Div. 988, 158 N. Y. S. 1120.

Machinist Overhauling Pump—Infection from Coral.—A machinist, while assembling the fire and wrecking pump of a tug which had been used in Oriental waters, was infected by pieces of coral which had been forced into his thumb and finger. It was held that he met with an injury of an accidental nature in the course of his employment. In re Green, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 237.

Porter—Building Shelf.—A workman was employed in the capacity of "porter, elevator and handy man" by a corporation engaged in the hazardous business of manufacturing drugs and chemicals. While he was engaged in building a shelf near the elevator well in his employer's place of business, and while reaching into the elevator well to obtain a board which he had placed at some point on the side of the well, he lost his balance and fell down the elevator shaft, and was instantly killed. It was held that his act in building a shelf, while not an act in the immediate process of manufacturing drugs and chemicals, was fairly incidental to the prosecution of that business and hence, that his death was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Larsen v. Paine Drug Co. 218 N. Y. 252, 112 N. E. 725, affirming order 169 App. Div. 838, 155 N. Y. S. 759.

Traveling Salesman—Steamship Sunk by Submarine.—A traveling salesman engaged passage on the steamship Lusitania, it being necessary for him to visit his employer's London office. While the vessel was within the area which had theretofore been declared a war zone by the German government, she was attacked and torpedoed by a German submarine, the salesman being drowned. It was held that his death was due to an accident while in the course of his employment, and that the accident arose out of his employment. Foley v. Home Rubber Co. 80 N. J. L. 474, 99 Atl. 624.

Family Servant—Lighting Fire with Wood Alcohol.—A family servant was required as a part of her duty to light the fires. She was forbidden to use kerosene "or anything like that" to assist her in lighting a fire. She used wood alcohol, and by reason thereof was burned to death. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of her employment, notwithstanding the disobedience of her orders, as she was doing what she was expected to do at the very place where it was meant to be done. Kolaszynski v. Klie (N. J.) 102 Atl. 5.

Stenographer—Burning of Building.—A stenographer was employed in the conduct of a business—the preparation of animal hair and its byproducts for commercial purposes—which occupied the fourth floor of a building. A fire originating in one of the lower floors sent up such great volumes of smoke and flame that it shut off practically any escape to the employees of the business. The stenographer failed in her effort to make her escape and was so burned that death resulted. It was held that her death was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of her employment. Newark Hair, etc. Co. v. Feldman, 89 N. J. L. 504, 99 Atl. 602.

Night Watchman—Substance Blown into Eye.—The claimant was employed as a night watchman by an employer engaged in the business of the manufacture of desks and furniture, declared by the statute to be a hazardous employment. While working in that capacity, about eleven o'clock in the evening, a severe storm arose. In closing a window because of the storm, a gust of wind blew some substance from the outside of the building into the claimants' eye, causing an injury necessitating its removal. It was held that the injury arose out of and in the course of his employment, there being no evidence that the factory was not in operation. Ko-byra v. Adams, 176 App. Div. 43, 162 N. Y. S. 269.

Utility Man—Crossing Street from One Factory to Other.—The workman was employed as a general utility man by a corporation engaged in manufacturing commercial trunks, one of his duties being the lettering of trunks. Diagonally across the street was a second corporation, engaged in the manufacture of personal trunks, both corporations being owned by the same stockholders and carried on by a single executive organization. The workman performed services for both corporations. In returning from the factory of the second corporation to that of the first, after having lettered a trunk in the former factory, he slipped on the snow and ice in the street, and received injuries of which he died. It was held that the accident was one "arising out of" the employment, and not merely a street accident to which every one using the highway was equally liable. Redner v. Faber, 167 N. Y. S. 242.

Shifting Belt by Hand Instead of Foot Lever.—The claimant was drilling a piece held in a jig, when the drill caught, causing the jig to revolve. Instead of shifting the belt by means of the belt shifter with his foot to stop the machine, he tried to throw it off with his hand, and was injured. It was held that this was such an accident as might happen to any ordinarily careful machinist in the usual course of his employment. In re Hadlock, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 495.

Taking Tools to Designated Place.—The assistant fire ranger directed the claimant to proceed on a subsequent day to a place eight miles distant. At the same time he directed the claimant to take along with him certain tools, among which was a small axe used for trimming trees. The claimant accordingly started on his journey on the designated morning, laden with the necessary tools, it being necessary for him to walk the distance, and the ground being covered with about six inches of snow. While en route, he stumbled and fell, dropping the axe on his foot and causing an injury to it. It was held that the injury was received in the course of his employment which began when the claimant started on the journey. In re Connor, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 330.

Negligence of Employees of Other Company.—A workman was employed by a brick company to transfer coal from railroad cars to cars by which the coal was distributed about the plant of the brick company. The railroad cars were placed on the side track of the brick company by the railroad company. In making a flying switch of a number of cars, these cars were thrown against the car which the workman was engaged in unloading while he was under the car, thus fatally injuring him through the negligent act of the employees of the railroad company. It was held that the injury was received "in the course of and resulted from the employment." Mercer v. Ott, 78 W. Va. 629, 89 S. E. 952.

Digging Cellar—Falling of Pier.—A workman was engaged as a laborer in digging out a cellar, in which there were some masonry piers. During the course of his work one of the piers fell over on him, with fatal results. On review, it was not denied that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. Taylor v. Seabrook, 87 N. J. L. 407, 94 Atl. 399.

Injury on Employer's Premises on Way to Work.—A screen boy employed at a colliery slipped on a rail while crossing the road on his way to work and on the colliery premises, but before he had received his check. It was held that as a matter of law the accident arose "out of the employment," as it was caused by a peril attached to the particular location in which by the obligation of service the workman was placed, although the accident was not contributed to in any way by the nature of the employment. Marsh v. Pope [1917] W. N. (Eng.) 262, 33 Times L. Rep. 523.

Drowned While Going for Others Living on Boat.—A laborer was employed on river and harbor improvement work, and during such employment lived on a quarter boat, which was used for purposes of living quarters by the employees engaged in that particular work. He was on the boat one night when he heard a call from the shore from some fellow laborers who desired that a small boat should be sent them in order to return to the boat, where they also had their living quarters. While in the act of getting a small boat and going for the men on shore, he fell overboard from the quarter boat and was drowned. It was held that his death occurred in the course of his employment. In re House, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 325.

Crossing Yard to Convenience—Tripping on Small Piece of Wood.—The employers of the applicant, a woman, having no separate convenience for women as required by law, arranged that she should have the use of the women's convenience on the adjacent premises of another employer. The applicant was returning from the convenience and had almost crossed the yard common to both premises, when, on the flagged portion and close to the door leading into her employer's premises, she tripped or slipped on a small piece of wood, two inches long by one and a half inches broad, lying on the flags, with the result that she fell and was injured. It was held that the accident arose not only in the course of but out of her employment. Fearnley v. Bates [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 207, 86 L. J. K. B. 1000, [1917] W. N. 170, 61 Sol. J. 506.

Pulling Timber Out of Pile—Wrenched Back.—An employee of a lumber company was assisting another man in loading 4 x 6 redwood timber on trucks. While pulling a piece of timber out from a pile, he either slipped or in some manner wrenched his back and fell down. He arose, put that stick of timber on the truck, and then could not move. It was held that, giving the words their ordinary meaning, the expression, "accident arising out of and in the course of the employment," was broad enough to include the injury received by the workman. Southwestern Surety Ins. Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 768, 158 Pac. 762.

Steadying Trolley Pole—Slipping of Pike.—The claimant at the time of the injury was one of four men who, each with a pike, were steadying a trolley pole, which was being placed in position. The pole appeared to be falling over toward him and, being compelled to quickly change the position of his pike to steady the pole, he put the handle of his pike against the ground. This was new made and soft, and gave way, throwing the claimant off his balance so that he tumbled off the embankment on which he was working and fell a distance of seven or eight feet, and was injured. It was held that the injury arose in the course of employment and was not due to the negligence or misconduct of the claimant. In re Burns, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 451.

Unexplained Death—Body Found under Train of Cars.—A workman who had gone to his foreman in search of material, was found lying dead under a train of cars, with a hole about six inches in diameter in his abdomen. It was held that a prima facie case of accident was shown and that the injury arose out of and in the course of his employment. De Fazio v. Goldschmidt Detinning Co. (N. J.) 88 Atl. 705.

3. RISK NOT INCIDENTAL TO EMPLOYMENT.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the risk of the accident was not incidental to the risk of the employment and therefore that the accident did not arise out of the employment:

Assault—Brewery Collector.—A brewery route foreman was required to look after the various beer delivery routes and on Saturdays to deliver beer and collect the moneys therefor. One Saturday evening he made a delivery of beer at a dwelling house and while returning to his wagon which he had left in the street a little distance away, was assaulted and shot. He mounted the wagon and returned to the brewery and accounted for the moneys intrusted to and collected by him, and then went to the hospital where he died ten days later from the effects of the shot. It was held that owing to the absence of evidence showing any motive for the attack, his death was not the result of an accident arising out of his employment. Schmoll v. Wiesbrod, etc. Brewing Co. 89 N. J. L. 150, 97 Atl. 723.

Assault—Altercation with Fellow Employee.—A workman employed as a lead molder should have gone with the complaint that his ladle had not been relined with fire clay to the foreman. But he met a fellow workman who had nothing to do with the relining of ladles and got into a controversy with the latter, which he started, over his ladle not being relined. It was held that the injuries received by the workman as a result of the quarrel did not arise "out of" the employment, as that phrase was used in the act. Union Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. Davis (Ind.) 115 N. E. 676.

Assault and Robbery—Night Watchman.—A night watchman in a mill was at 9 P.M. making a tour through the mill, recording his passage by registering on his watchman's clock, and while going from one station to another stopped to close a door opening from the mill to a loading platform, adjacent to a railroad switch. As he leaned against the handle of the door to roll it shut, he was struck on the head with a club by an employee of the company who had entered the mill and hidden himself near the door, intending to rob the watchman. The latter died immediately and his assailant took his pay envelope, but did not attempt any robbery from the office of the mill. It was held that the death of the watchman did not arise out of his employment. Walther v. American Paper Co. 89 N. J. L. 732, 99 Atl. 263, reversing judgment 98 Atl. 264.

Larking—Butcher's Boys.—The applicant, a boy in the employ of a butcher, got his right hand badly cut with a knife. He alleged that while he was cleaning knives in the shop, another boy, who was sweeping up the shop, struck a knife and so drove it into the applicant's hand while the two were larking together. It was held that the finding of the county court judge that the boys were larking meant that he found that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of the employment. Harrison v. Featherstone [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 74, 10 B. W. C. C. 54.

Larking in Elevator.—An employee operating an elevator left the elevator rope to "fool" with another employee who was riding in it, and in the scuffle his heel was caught and injured. It was held that his injury "did not arise out of his employment." Moore's Case, 225 Mass. 258, 114 N. E. 204.

Larking—Shears Entering Eye.—Two boys employed in a candy factory were larking with a pair of shears, and in the course of the play one end of the shears went into the eye of one boy, destroying the sight of the eye. It was held that the accident was not one arising "out of and in the course of the employment." Doyle v. Moirs, 48 Nova Scotia 473, 22 Dominion L. Rep. 767, following Armitage v. Lancashire, etc. R. Co. [1902] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 178.

Larking—Tickling Fellow Employee.—As an employee known to his associates to be peculiarly susceptible of being tickled was going down a flight of stairs with a filled bucket in his hand, one of his associates, in passing him by, punched him in the back with a newspaper, which caused him to make a sudden movement and to fall, whereby he was injured. It was held that the accident did not arise out of the employment. Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 682, 158 Pac. 212, L.R.A.1916F 1164.

Larking—"Trick" Camera.—One day a fellow employee took a "trick" camera into the applicant's office, pointed it at him, told him to "look pleasant," and before he could protect himself touched a button which caused a spring to be ejected from the false camera. The missile struck the applicant so that as a result of the injury inflicted he lost the sight of one eye. It was held that the accident did not arise out of the employment. Fishing v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 690, 158 Pac. 215, following Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, supra.

Street Risk—Death by Collapse of Parapet of House.—A workman was employed as a grocer's porter and messenger, a portion of his duties being to deliver groceries. While so engaged, and as he was walking along the pavement of a main thoroughfare in the city, the parapet of a house which he was about to pass collapsed, and he was killed by the falling stones and mortar. It was held that the accident was not one arising out of the employment, the risk of which might have been contemplated by a reasonable man when entering the employment as incidental to it. Cooper v. Healy [1916] 2 Ir. R. 33, applying Collins v. Collins [1907] 2 Ir. R. 104.

Street Risk—Riding Bicycle in Public Street.—The applicant was employed as a visiting nurse, and at the time of her engagement she was told that she would have to go around on a bicycle to see all the children in a certain area. The number of cases averaged 120 per month, and she had to travel on a bicycle from six to ten miles a day. One morning, when she was making a round of calls, and was going along a muddy road, she attempted to go around a horse and cart standing across the road, when, before she could get to the side of the road again, a small cart passed quickly, followed by two larger carts. When nearing the second cart, her bicycle skidded in a rut, and she was thrown underneath the last cart with the result that she was severely injured. The county court judge made an award in her favor saying: "I was of opinion that the evidence quite clearly established that the applicant was exposed to abnormal risk, out of which the accident arose, inasmuch as she was compelled to be traveling many hours a day on her bicycle over a large area through which the main London and Brighton Road runs, and that the risk was enhanced by her having to be constantly mounting and dismounting after each visit she made." On appeal it was held that there was no evidence from which he could properly come to the conclusion that there was an abnormal risk sufficient to lead to the inference that the accident arose out of the employment, but that, as the accident was due to an ordinary street risk and not to any special risk incidental to the employment, it did not arise out of the employment. Ince v. Reigate Education Committee [1916] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 671, 115 L. T. N. S. 402, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 278, 85 L. J. K. B. 1283, 32 Times L. Rep. 721, 60 Sol. J. 666, [1916] W. N. 313, 9 B. W. C. C. 595.

A solicitor's clerk had to attend a justice's court once a week at a place ten miles distant from his employer's office, on his employer's business, and then to return to the office. He generally went by train, his train fares being office expenses and paid as such by his employer. Sometimes he went on his bicycle with the knowledge of his master and without his disapproval. One day, on his way back to the office, a motor car collided with his bicycle, and he was killed. It was held that the accident did not arise "out of the employment." Read v. Baker [1916] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 927, 114 L. T. N. S. 828, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 133, 32 Times L. Rep. 382, 60 Sol. 402, [1916] W. N. 145, 9 B. W. C. C. 361.

Street Risk—Slipping on Ice.—While a traveling salesman was walking from a house where he had completed his business back to the electric car line to go to another place to sell some goods, he slipped on the ice and was injured. It was held that as the risk of slipping on the icy pavement was common to the public, it was not a causative danger peculiar to the claimant's employment, and hence that the injury received could not properly have been found to have arisen out of the employment. Donahue's Case, 226 Mass. 595, 116 N. E. 226.

Street Risk—Slipping on Orange Peel.—The master of a ship met with an accident while walking down the road, on the way to his ship, by slipping on a piece of orange peel. He fell, breaking his left thigh. The county court judge held that the applicant was ashore on the ship's business, and found that "owing to the fruit and other stalls in the street in question, its crowded condition, and the character of the local population, a passenger along the street on the day of the accident incurred a greater risk of slipping on orange peel than other persons in the greater portion of the metropolis generally." He therefore held that the accident arose out of, as well as in the course of, the employment. It was held, however, on appeal, that the accident was not due to a risk peculiarly incidental to the employment, and that the judge erred in finding that the accident arose out of the employment. Chapman v. Pearn [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 47, 32 Times L. Rep. 368, 9 B. W. C. C. 224, following Leaske v. Wigan [1909] 2 K. B. 635, and Hadwin v. Shepherd [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 503.

Carman—Fall from Ordinary Staircase.—A carman in the employ of certain contractors took a cart daily to Olympia, a depot of the Royal Army Clothing Department, and therefore closed to the public, and after loading up there went to obtain instructions from the transport officer in charge as to where he was to take the goods. The transport office was situated in a gallery, which was reached by a stone staircase with ordinary steps, wide, in good repair, well-lighted and with an easy gradient. Shortly afterwards he was found lying on a landing of the staircase with his skull fractured, of which injury he died. It was held that the accident did not arise out of the employment; that he was exposed only to an ordinary risk, and not to a special risk incident to his particular employment though the general public was excluded from the use of the staircase. Harder v. Gains [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 99, 114 L. T. N. S. 817, 85 L. J. K. B. 866, 9 B. W. C. C. 328.

Cotton Spinner—Replacing Belt.—Two workmen were engaged at a carding machine, which was worked by a belt passing over a pulley on an overhead revolving shaft. The belt having shifted, it became the duty of one of them to replace it on the pulley, while the other fixed the lower end of the belt on the machine. Instead of fetching a ladder provided for this purpose, the workman replacing the belt got up on the embrasure of a window and pulled himself up, resting one foot on a very narrow and steeply sloping edge. While in this position and attempting to replace the belt, he was caught in the shaft and sustained the injuries of which he died. The county court judge held that the accident was not due to a risk incidental to the employment, and therefore that it did not arise out of the employment. On appeal the master of the rolls affirmed the decision. Russell v. Murray [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 532, 9 B. W. C. C. 81.

Driver—Delivering Meat on Foot.—A workman was employed by the proprietor of a meat market, his principal duty being that of driving a delivery wagon, acting both as driver and delivery man. Occasionally, he also assisted in the abattoir; and occasionally, when not engaged in his principal duties, he assisted in cutting and preparing meat for retail sale. As he was proceeding from the market on foot, the horse and wagon having been put up for the day, to deliver some meat, he fell on a pail containing broken glass and severed a varicose vein, causing a hemorrhage which resulted in his death the next day. It was held that, inasmuch as his injury was not sustained in connection with or as incidental to any hazardous employment of his employer as defined by the act, the accident, while it occurred in the course of the employment, did not arise out of any hazardous employment. Newman v. Newman, 218 N. Y. 325, 113 N. E. 332, affirming order 169 App. Div. 745, 155 N. Y. S. 665.

Driver for Florist—Fixing Window Box of Customer.—A workman was employed by a florist to drive a delivery wagon, a hazardous employment under the statute, and, if necessary, to assist in delivering the goods another man who went on the wagon for the purpose of making deliveries. At one place they delivered some flowers, and then proceeded to adjust a window box in the house. For this purpose the workman got up on a ladder in front of the house, and while working there, lost his balance and fell into the areaway, and the window box fell on top of him, causing injuries. It was held that there was no connection between the driving of the delivery wagon and his fall from the ladder, which resulted in his death, and hence that the injury received by him did not arise out of nor in the course of the employment. Glatzl v. Stumpp, 220 N. Y. 71, 114 N. E. 1053, reversing order 174 App. Div. 901, 159 N. Y. S. 1115.

Employee Fainting—Ammonia Thrown in Face by Mistake for Water.—An employee in a millinery department had some difference with her boss with regard to her work. As a result, she became nervous and hysterical and fainted. Two of her coemployees rushed to get water and ammonia. They returned, one with a glass of water and one with a glass of ammonia. In some way these glasses became mixed, and the ammonia was thrown into the face of the employee causing injuries. It was held that where the injuries so received by her were clearly accidental and arose in the course of her employment, they did not arise out of it. Saenger v. Locke, 220 N. Y. 556, 116 N. E. 367, reversing order 175 App. Div. 963, 161 N. Y. S. 1144.

Employee Sent to Dig Post Holes—Discharge of Gun Taken Along.—One of two workmen going in a wagon loaded with tools and implements with which to dig post holes, took a shotgun along for his own pleasure, thinking he would be able to hunt after quitting work. The employer knew the workman was taking the gun and his fellow employee knew that he had placed it on the seat between them and did not object. In a rough place in the road, the gun slipped from its insecure position and was discharged, injuring the fellow servant of the one who was taking it along. It was held that the accident did not arise out of the employment. Ward v. Industrial Acc. Commission (Cal.) 164 Pac. 1123.

Fireman—Heat Stroke.—The workman, a man of ordinary physique, was a fireman and trimmer employed on board a steamship and began to complain that he was ill with the heat several days before his death. On the morning of the day before his death he complained of being sick on account of the heat and was given some medicine by the captain, and again at 1 P.M. On the day of his death he again complained at 1 P.M. and was given medicine. He then worked, with intervals for refreshment, until 4:30 P.M. when he collapsed, and was taken up on deck, but died soon after. It was held that while his death occurred in the course of and arose out of his employment, it did not result from accident. Pyper v. Manchester Liners [1916] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 691, 115 L. T. N. S. 406, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 301, 85 L. J. K. B. 1459, 60 Sol. J. 706, 32 Times L. Rep. 723.

Insurance Agent—Riding with Customer at Latter's Invitation.—An insurance agent was invited by a prospective customer to accompany him on an automobile trip to further discuss the policy. In returning the machine "turned turtle" and threw the men out. It was held that the accident was not one arising out of and in the course of the employment of the agent, as the injury was not "occasioned by the nature of the employment" nor was the danger incident to the use of an automobile a "causative danger" "peculiar to the work," but it was a risk common to all parties using one. Hewitt's Case, 225 Mass. 1, 113 N. E. 572, L.R.A.1917B 249.

Joiner Using Wood-working Machine.—The applicant, a joiner employed in making gun-carriage wheels, while planing a piece of wood in a planing machine in order to fit it as a block for supporting the fellow of a wheel while the spokes were being riveted in, got his left hand caught in the machine and lost three fingers. The employers had in the works machine men specially provided for working the wood-working machines, a fact well known to the workman, and although there was no express prohibition of user of the machines, no other workmen were permitted to or did in fact work them. It was held that the applicant, in using the machine, was incurring a risk not incidental to his employment and that his accident could not be said to have arisen "out of" his employment. Anderson v. Armstrong [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 71, 10 B. W. C. C. 67.

Fall from Scaffold—Epileptic Fit.—A laborer employed in the erection of a building, was working on a scaffold five feet in width and thirty-nine feet above the ground, and the scaffold was guarded, in compliance with the law, by a rope three feet high along its outer edge. While so engaged, he fell to the surface of the scaffold, rolled off the edge, and fell to the ground, death resulting from the injuries caused by the fall. It was practically conceded that the sole cause of his fall was a fit of epilepsy. It was held that the proximate cause of the fall was the epileptic fit, with which his employment had no causal connection, and hence that the accident and resulting injury arose from the fact that he was an epileptic and had the fit, and not out of his employment. It was also held that the question whether such an injury arose "out of" the employment would not and did not depend on the height from which the employee fell or the extent of the injury he received as the result of the fit. Brooker v. Industrial Acc. Commission (Cal.) 168 Pac. 126.

Where a plumber and steamfitter was standing on a scaffold six feet in height, and fell in an epileptic fit, fracturing his skull, the fit being the only cause of his injury, it was held that the accident did not arise "out of" the employment. Van Gorder v. Packard Motorcar Co. (Mich.) 162 N. W. 107, L.R.A. 1917E 522.

Railway Laborer—Passing between Cars.—

A railway laborer with his foreman and other workmen had to wait in a station for a time. The men had food with them, but in order to get hot water to prepare their breakfasts, they crossed from the station over the tracks to a mess room maintained by the railway company. At the mess room the man in charge was in the habit of supplying hot water to any servant of the company who applied for it. On one of the lines, the men found a goods train which they supposed to be "dead," as, owing to the convexity of the line, the engine was not visible to them. They proceeded to pass under the couplings of the cars, and while one of them was in the act of doing so the train moved on, and he was caught between the tracks and killed on the spot. The men could have gone round to the mess room from the platform on which they were, by a bridge over the line or by making use of a subway under the line, but these routes were slightly longer. It was held that the workman, while going to make preparations for his breakfast, was engaged on his own business and not his master's, and secondly that by going between the cars as he did he ran an additional and quite unnecessary risk, and that for this reason the accident did not arise out of his employment. Lancashire, etc. R. Co. v. Highley [1917] A. C. (Eng.) 352, 116 L. T. N. S. 767, [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 179, 86 L. J. K. B. 715, [1917] W. N. 119, 33 Times L. Rep. 286, 61 Sol. J. 397, affirming [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 244, 115 L. T. N. S. 494, 85 L. J. K. B. 1513, 9 B. W. C. C. 496.

*Maid—Darning Skirt.—*A parlor maid was darning a rent in her skirt, and while so engaged the parlor bell rang. She sprang up to attend to it, leaving the needle sticking in her dress, with the result that the needle was driven into her knee, where a portion broke off and remained. It was held that she was not injured by an accident arising out of her employment. Griffiths v. Robins [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 44, 10 B. W. C. C. 90.

*Manageress of Café—Crossing Railway Line on Level.—*The applicant was manageress of a café. Her duties were to go every weekday morning to her employer's shop and there get the key of the café, change for the day, and provisions for the café, to stay all day in the café, and return every evening to the shop with the key and the receipts. Between the shop and the café ran a railway line, and the shortest route between them was by a level crossing over the railway line. There was a somewhat longer route over a bridge, but the applicant habitually used the level crossing. One morning while she was crossing the level crossing with the key, the change for the day, and a paper bag containing provisions, she was struck by a train and severely injured. It was held that although the accident arose "in the course of" the employment, it did not arise "out of" it. Hadwin v. Shepherd [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 503, 9 B. W. C. C. 60, following Sheldon v. Needham [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 274.

*Packer—Injury by Parcel Lift.—*A workman employed as a packer, was required as part of his duty to go from the second floor down to the ground floor and to return to the second floor. In going down, he made use of a temporary parcel lift, intended for goods only. In returning, he had evidently gotten in and started the lift by putting his arm outside, and in so doing his head had been crushed so that he died. It was held that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of the employment, as the risk from which it arose was not reasonably incidental to the employment, but was an added peril due to the workman's conduct. Palmer v. Harrods [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 213, 114 L. T. N. S. 869, 85 L. J. K. B. 1659, 32 Times L. Rep. 382, 9 B. W. C. C. 291.

*Special Policeman—Extrahazardous Occupation.—*A special policeman for a city was accidentally killed, as he stooped over his desk, by the discharge of his own revolver, which was fired by falling out of his pocket and striking the edge of a cuspidor. The city maintained a free wagon bridge within its limits, which was an extrahazardous employment. It was held that while the city was engaged in an extrahazardous occupation, the policeman was not engaged in any work in connection with the bridge, and as his occupation was not hazardous, he did not die of an injury arising out of and in the course of such an employment. Marshall v. Pekin, 276 Ill. 187, 114 N. E. 497.

*Real Estate Salesman—Burned by Hotel Fire.—*A salesman employed for the purpose of selling real estate on commission, was directed by his employer to go to a town for the purpose of selling real estate there and to remain there indefinitely. The night of his arrival a fire broke out in the hotel at which he was staying and he was burned in escaping from the fire. It was held that the injuries which he had suffered could not be held to have been sustained by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, nor to have occurred at a time when he was performing services growing out of and incidental to his employment and acting within the course of his employment as such. Forman v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 31 Cal. App. 441, 160 Pac. 857.

Seaman—Fall from Gangway.—A sailor, returning to his ship after leave at night in an intoxicated condition, was seen to proceed up the gangway, holding on to the ropes on either side until he reached a point about two-thirds the way up. He then stopped suddenly, let go with his left hand on the side of the gangway towards the ship, and instantly swung round, overbalanced and fell over on the quay, sustaining injuries of which he died the next day. The gangway was a solid step gangway, with stanchions, and two ropes passed on each side through the stanchions. It was well fixed, steady and well lighted. The county court judge held that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment and was due to two concurrent causes—first, that the seaman was subjected to a special risk by reason of his employment; and secondly, that he was so much under the influence of drink that the peril was to him greatly increased and beyond his power to cope with. On appeal it was held that while the accident occurred in the ambit of the man's employment, as he was returning to the ship and his duty, it did not arise out of the employment, but out of his intoxicated condition and an award was denied. Nash v. Rangatira [1914] 3 K. B. (Eng.) 978, 111 L. T. N. S. 704, [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 490, 83 L. J. K. B. 1496, 58 Sol. J. 705, following Frith v. Louisianian [1912] 2 K. B. 155, [1912] W. C. Rep. 285.

Sitting in Tent—Struck by Lightning.—A workman was employed by bridge builders and while sitting in the boarding tent provided by his employers awaiting his bed time, came to his death from a stroke of lightning. It was held that while the injury arose in the course of, it did not arise out of, his employment. Griffith v. Cole (Ia.) 165 N. W. 577.

Going on Forbidden Structure.—The applicant was employed by lead smelters to fill skips with ore. When a skip was full it was his duty to call for the crane to lift it, and if for any reason the call was not obeyed, he was to endeavor to find the crane man. The crane traveled over a structure spoken of as a "bridge," which connected the two buildings of the employers and crossed the street, although it did not serve any of the purposes of a passenger bridge. One night the applicant, having filled a skip, called for the crane man, but got no reply. In order to find him, the applicant went up onto the "bridge" and walked in the dark nearly the whole length of it, when he fell through a trapdoor to the street below and was injured. There was a notice on the "bridge" near the end of the gangway prohibiting workmen under pain of dismissal from going onto the "bridge," of which the applicant was ignorant, and he honestly believed that he ought to go on the "bridge" when the crane man did not answer the call. It was obviously dangerous to go on the "bridge" and the crane man should have been hailed from a safe place near the "bridge." It was held that the accident did not arise out of the employment and that the evidence that the man believed that he was entitled to go on the "bridge" could not in any way enlarge the scope of the employment. Wardle v. Enthoven [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 18, 116 L. T. N. S. 103, 86 L. J. K. B. 309, 33 Times L. Rep. 123, 61 Sol. J. 170, 10 B. W. C. C. 79.

Taking Poison by Mistake for Medicine.—At the time of a workman's death, the company employing him was installing tanning machinery for another company, and he was engaged in the performance of this work. On the day of his death, he suffered from some form of illness and was told by an employee of the company for whom the machinery was being installed to take some Epsom salts, and was informed where a large quantity of these were stored in the factory. He went to the place indicated, but by mistake took some chloride of barium, which almost immediately caused his death. It was held that, assuming that this occurrence constituted an accident under the act and that it arose in the course of the decedent's employment, it could not be said that it "arose out of his employment." O'Neil v. Carley Heater Co. 218 N. Y. 414, 113 N. E. 406, L.R.A.1917A 349, reversing order 173 App. Div. 922, 157 N. Y. S. 1138.

Injury Due to Intervening Act.—While the claimant was engaged in the regular work of his employment, three fingers of his right hand were frozen. On returning to his house, he put turpentine on his hand, bandaged it, and then soaked it thoroughly in turpentine. With the hand in this condition, the claimant then attempted to put coal on the fire at his house, when the bandage caught fire and the hand was badly burned. It was held that the injury causing the burn was a novus actus interveniens, and that the claimant's subsequent incapacity was not due to an injury which was received in the course of his employment. In re Rockwell, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 307.

Injury to Eye.—A workman alleged that his eye had been injured by an accident in his employment. About a month after he had left the employment the eye suddenly became inflamed. He went into a hospital and the eye had to be removed. On a claim for compensation by the workman, the county court judge held that the injury was not caused by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment. Silk v. Isle of Thanet Ru- ral Council [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 647, 6 B. W. C. C. 539.

Unexplained Accident—Cotton Waste Feeder.—The applicant who was employed as a waste feeder with a helper at a machine which had to be fed with cotton waste, met with an accident and had her hand drawn into the machine and severely injured. The evidence left in doubt how precisely the accident had happened, but apparently the helper had gone to fetch a fresh supply of cotton waste, the machine having been stopped meanwhile, and in her absence, the applicant moved round from the back of the machine and started it, the accident then taking place. The county court judge said that he thought that she was doing something dangerous at the time of the accident and was fully aware of this, and held that the accident had not arisen out of the employment. Rogers v. Garside [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 535, 9 B. W. C. C. 91 (the case was sent back for a new trial with respect to the question whether the accident was due to the applicant's misconduct within the sphere of her employment or to some act by her outside the sphere of her employment).

V. Scope of Employment.

1. IN GENERAL.

In the reported case it is said to be the rule that an employee is engaged in the course of his employment when the injury occurs within the period of his employment, at a place where he may reasonably be, and while he is fulfilling the duties of his employment or is engaged in doing something incidental to it.

Where, however, a workman meets with an accident while doing something actually outside the sphere of his employment, the accident does not arise out of his employment, and this is so whether he performs that act from a desire for amusement, from feelings of fatigue, or to forward the object of his employer. Herbert v. Fox [1916] 1 A. C. (Eng.) 405, Ann. Cas. 1916D 578, 114 L. T. N. S. 426, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 1, 85 L. J. K. B. 441, 60 Sol. J. 237, 32 Times L. Rep. 261, [1916] W. N. 34, 9 B. W. C. C. 164, affirming [1915] 2 K. B. 81, [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 154, 112 L. T. N. S. 833, 8 B. W. C. C. 94.

"If a workman is injured while voluntarily doing something quite outside the scope of the work he is employed to do, it cannot well be said that such injury 'arises out of and in the course of his employment.' . . . In other words, the work which one is employed to do, when construed in a reasonably broad and comprehensive way, does limit and mark out 'his employment,' within the meaning of the statute. Of course, the scope of such particular employment may be enlarged for the time being by the directions of some superior who has authority; and in the case of an actual emergency it may be held that any reasonable attempt to preserve the employer's property is within the general lines of an employee's duty. But ordinarily the scope of a workman's employment is defined by the things he is employed to do, and the things reasonably and fairly incident thereto. Notice must be taken that a factory of to-day usually includes within the field of its operations many fairly distinct lines of work, from that of the roustabout engaged in the ordinary labor that almost anyone may perform, to that of the expert mechanic, which can be done safely by those only with skill and experience. The difference between these various kinds of work was always recognized by the common law, and it was held to be negligence for the master to require of the servant, without warning and instructing him, the performance of work outside of and more dangerous than that which the latter had contracted to perform. Such classification of work exists in the very nature of things, and as much under the statute as at common law. Its recognition is required by any proper organization of a factory, not only for efficiency, but as well for the purpose of guarding against accident and injury. And if a workman, when there is no emergency, should, of his own volition, see fit to intermeddle with something entirely outside the work for which he is employed, he ought not to be allowed compensation upon the mere plea that he thought his act would be for the benefit of his employer. That plea may be of value under some circumstances, but it cannot authorize an employee to voluntarily take upon himself the performance of work for which he was not employed." Bischoff v. American Car, etc. Co. 190 Mich. 229, 157 N. W. 34.

In passing on the right of a workman to recover an award under a workmen's compensation act for injuries received in an endeavor to save the life of another, the court in Waters v. William J. Taylor Co. 218 N. Y. 248, 112 N. E. 727, L.R.A.1917A 347, affirming order 170 App. Div. 942, 154 N. Y. S. 1149, said: "Independent of any legal obligation which might require the master to attempt to rescue a servant from the dangers of an emergency, there is a moral duty resting on principles of humanity and those principles ought to apply to a contract of employment and broaden its scope so as to permit a servant . . . to rescue a fellow-workman although technically working for a different employer. Even the rather rigid rules of an action at law for negligence bend before such a situation of peril and without penalty to his rights permit a casual bystander to take risks in the attempt to save life which would be prohibited under any other circumstances. . . . And certainly it would be a narrow and disappointing view if in judging the conduct of a workman under the remedial provisions of the workmen's compensation act we should hold that the legislature intended to deprive him of the benefits of that act because in going to the rescue of another workman under such circumstances as arose here he has stepped somewhat beyond the limits which would fix the scope of his employment under ordinary circumstances. That act is framed on broad principles for the protection of the workman. Relief under it, generally speaking, is not based on the negligence of the employer or limited to the absence of negligence on the part of the employee. It rests on the economic and humanitarian principles that compensation should be given at the expense of the business to the employee or his representatives for earning capacity destroyed by an accident in the course of or connected with his work, and this not only for his own benefit but for the benefit of the state which otherwise might be charged with his support. This purpose ought not to be defeated by placing too narrow a limit upon the nature of the acts which will be regarded as pertaining to his employment."

2. ACT NOT WITHIN SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the workman was not acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the injury and was therefore not entitled to relief:

Riding on Trucks Contrary to Rules.—A workman was employed on a private railway line as a shunter. At the time of the accident, the shunting engine was being driven tender first, pushing trucks back to the shed and it was his duty to keep a lookout on the journey, walking in front of the first truck for that purpose. Instead, he climbed on a buffer of the truck, holding his shunting pole with both hands. The pole slipped and he fell and was run over by the truck. In riding on the buffer, the workman was violating a printed notice, of which he had knowledge, providing that lookout men should be in front of the wagons, and he admitted that the manager would have dismissed any man whom he had seen riding on the buffers. It was held that the accident did not arise out of the course of employment, but that it was outside the scope of the service altogether, and hence that he was not entitled to compensation. Herbert v. Fox [1916] 1 A. C. (Eng.) 405, Ann. Cas. 1916D 578, 114 L. T. N. S. 426, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 1, 85 L. J. K. B. 441, 60 Sol. J. 237, 32 Times L. Rep. 261, [1916] W. N. 34, 9 B. W. C. C. 164, affirming [1915] 2 K. B. 81, [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 154, 112 L. T. N. S. 833, 8 B. Ann. Cas. 1918B.—61.

W. C. C. 94, following Barnes v. Nunnery Colliery Co. [1912] A. C. 44, [1912] W. C. Rep. 90, and Plumb v. Cobden Flour Mills Co. [1914] A. C. 62, Ann. Cas. 1914B 495, [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 48, and distinguishing Blair v. Chilton [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 283.

A workman was taking two truck loads drawn by a horse along a mine level. He mounted on the leading truck load. He had no reins, and the horse could not be controlled except by voice. He could not get off the truck load as the trucks were then going too fast, being on a downward incline, and he did not shout to stop the horse as he feared the impetus of the trucks would drive them on to it. In consequence his back was caught by the roof of the level, he was thrown off the truck load, and his spine was fractured. Riding on trucks was prohibited by the colliery rules and also by a statutory regulation applicable to that mine. The county court judge held that the applicant had not satisfied the onus resting on him of showing that the accident arose "out of" the employment. On appeal, it was held that the accident happened because the workman was doing something outside the sphere of his employment, and hence did not arise out of his employment. Maydew v. Chatterley-Whitfield Collieries [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 277.

Riding Motorcycle after Express Prohibition.—A workman was employed by a cycle maker and repairer to look after his shop and do small repairs to cars and bicycles on the premises. He was not engaged as a driver and was forbidden to use machines out of the shop in any way, or to leave the shop. He was insured by his employer as a cycle repairer and not as a driver, of which fact he was aware. He had some physical weakness in the legs. A customer brought a motorcycle to the shop to be repaired. When the machine had been repaired, the workman took it out of the shop by a back way and was riding it back to the customer when he was run into by a motor omnibus and killed. It was held that there was no emergency and that the act was beyond the scope of the employment and that therefore the accident was not one which arose out of and in the course of his employment. Leggett v. Gibbons [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 154, 114 L. T. N. S. 830, 85 L. J. K. B. 980, 9 B. W. C. C. 354.

Going on Forbidden Structure.—The applicant was employed by lead smelters to fill ships with ore. When a skip was full it was his duty to call for the crane to lift it, and if for any reason the call was not obeyed, he was to endeavor to find the crane man. The crane traveled over a structure spoken of as a "bridge," which connected the two buildings of the employers and crossed the street, although it did not serve any of the purposes of a passenger bridge. One night the applicant, having filled a skip, called for the crane man but got no reply. In order to find him, the applicant went up onto the "bridge" and walked in the dark nearly the whole length of it, when he fell through a trapdoor to the street below and was injured. There was a notice on the "bridge" near the end of the gangway prohibiting workmen under pain of dismissal from going onto the "bridge," of which the applicant was ignorant, and he honestly believed that he ought to go on the "bridge" when the crane man did not answer the call. It was obviously dangerous to go on the "bridge," and the crane man should have been hailed from a safe place near the "bridge." It was held that the accident did not arise out of the employment, and that the honest belief by the workman that he was entitled to go on the "bridge" could not in any way enlarge the scope of the employment or make it permissible for him to say, when an accident had arisen from his going to a place where he had no duty to go, that in that case the accident arose out of the employment. Wardle v. Enthoven [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 18, 116 L. T. N. S. 103, 86 L. J. K. B. 309, 33 Times L. Rep. 123, 61 Sol. J. 170, 10 B. W. C. C. 79.

Buffer—Putting Hand in Exhaust System.—In the reported case it appears that a workman was employed on a buffing machine, his sole duty being to polish small metal handles. Near the machine, but not attached to it, was a small box into which the dust fell and from this receptacle a pipe curved to connect with a larger exhaust pipe, which in turn, connected with a large sheet metal case inclosing a fan. The pipe connecting the boxlike receptacle could be detached from the exhaust system if by chance any piece of metal that was being polished should be accidentally dropped into it. On top of the larger pipe there was located an opening, covered by a tight cover leading to the case in which the fan was located. The exhaust system was entirely separate from the buffing machine and was in charge of a special, responsible man for the purpose of cleaning and oiling it. The workman was instructed that his sole duty was to take the metal pieces and hold them against the buffing wheel, but that he should not lift the cover and reach into the exhaust pipe. On the day he was injured, he testified that he accidentally dropped one of the metal pieces he was polishing into the receptacle immediately below the buffer wheel; that he did not notify anyone, but went to the opening in the pipe, took off the cover, and reached his hand down into the exhaust pipe and around inside, and was injured by the fan. It is held that the workman was not acting within the scope of his employment at the time he was injured.

Joiner—Using Wood-working Machine.—The applicant, a joiner employed in making gun-carriage wheels, while planing a piece of wood in a planing machine in order to fit it as a block for supporting the felloe of a wheel while the spokes were being riveted in, got his left hand caught in the machine and lost three fingers. The employers had in the works machine men specially provided for working the wood-working machines, a fact well known to the workmen, and, although there was no express prohibition of user of the machines, no other workmen were permitted to or did in fact work them. It was held that the applicant, in using the machine, was not in the scope of his employment and hence that the accident did not arise "out of" it. Anderson v. Armstrong [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 71, 10 B. W. C. C. 67.

Molder—Going on Electrical Crane.—A workman employed as a molder used an electrical crane in his work, but was instructed never to go on the crane. He understood from the foreman that he was to report to the machinist or to the electrician any defect in the operation of the crane and, if they could not be found, that he was to sit down or go home. On the day of the injury, the claimant reported to the machinist the fact that the crane did not work properly, and the latter got a ladder and climbed up on the crane to repair it. He was followed by the claimant, not apparently for the purpose of reporting the condition of the crane, but to suggest to the machinist what the latter should do, well knowing the danger to which he was subjecting himself. The machinery was set in motion, and in going down the ladder the claimant's hand was caught in certain gear wheels and badly injured. It was held that the injury did not arise out of and in the course of the claimant's employment, but that he had gone outside the limits of his employment. Bischoff v. American Car, etc. Co. 190 Mich. 229, 157 N. W. 34.

Leaving Work to Cash Pay Check.—A foreman carpenter was at work in a roundhouse surrounded with tracks, which were used as a shunting yard in making up trains. He was paid there about eight o'clock in the morning. At half-past eleven that morning, he left his work to cross the tracks for the purpose of getting his pay check cashed at a bank some distance away and returning to his work. There was a space between two cars in a train being made up of from two to four feet, and the workman started to pass between these two cars, when an engine at one end of the line of cars brought the two together. He was caught between the couplers and killed. There was a special prohibition against the crossing of these tracks by the men, and particularly that the men should not leave their work to cash their pay checks. It was held that the accident did not happen by reason of or in the course of the employment. Lavery v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 48 Quebec Super. Ct. 278, 24 Dominion L. Rep. 522.

Boy Employed on Punching Machine—Operating Other Machine.—A shop boy was employed to turn a lever on a punching machine and for other minor services. A few feet from the punching machine stood a large rolling machine with which he had nothing whatever to do. On the day of the accident, while the punching machine was not running, the boy stepped up on the rolling machine to turn a handle or lever, and in attempting to do so his left foot slipped between the rollers and he was injured. It was held that his injury was due to an act without the scope of his employment. In re Morales, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 295.

Assisting Fellow Servant in Work for Master.—The applicant was employed by a mathematical instrument maker to work a hand press for cutting squares of metal. Being short of material on which to work, she went down to the ground floor of the factory to find the foreman in order to get instructions from him. While waiting for him, she went to assist another girl who was sitting there working on piece work a power press drawing pins. While so doing, her left hand was caught in the press and parts of four fingers were taken off. There was no special prohibition against workers assisting one another. It was held that the girl took an added peril clearly not within the scope of her employment and that the accident therefore did not arise out of her employment. Brinckman v. Harris [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 45, 9 B. W. C. C. 200.

Answering Supposed Call of Fellow Servant.—A girl who was employed at a machine for making lozenges thought she heard another girl who worked on a second machine on the same bench call her. She left the machine at which she was working and walked towards the other machine, and in so doing got her hand caught in the cogs of that machine. It was held that the accident did not arise out of the employment. Chinnick v. Potter [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 55, 9 B. W. C. C. 320.

Seaman Going Ashore to Bring Comrade Back.—A seaman on a ship hauled up on a slip for the purpose of being overhauled went ashore in performance of a private arrangement with another seaman to bring the latter back, his time being his own outside of his regular hours. While returning with his fellow employee in a boat borrowed for that purpose, the boat was swamped and the seaman was drowned, the place of his death being about five-eighths of a mile from his ship. It was held that his dependent was not entitled to recover, because the accident occurred while the seaman was outside, and before he had returned to the scope, of his employment, and therefore did not arise out of his employment. M'Lean v. Macbrayne [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 49, [1916] Sc. Ct. Sess. 338, [1916] 1 Scott. L. T. 76

Going to Assistance of Fellow Workman.—A shovel engineer and a negro brakeman became involved in an altercation and the negro attacked the former with an iron bar and finally struck him on the head. The claimant, seeing the engineer's life in danger, got down from the shovel to defend him, and when he struck the negro in the teeth with his fist, the back of his hand was badly bruised and lacerated and shortly afterward became infected. It was held that the claimant went outside the scope of his employment in taking part in the fight, and compensation was denied. In re Armistead, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 305.

Forestry Service—Cleaning Pistol of Fellow Employee.—The claimant was employed as a laborer or fire patrolman in the forest service. While he was engaged in cleaning the pistol of a fellow employee, it was unexpectedly discharged, the bullet inflicting a serious injury to his leg. It was held that the injury did not arise in the course of the claimant's employment. In re Brown, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 328.

Workman Off Duty Assisting Another.—A workman, who was off duty at that hour, went up on the bin to talk with the man working there about going home the following Sunday. As he was in the act of leaving, a box of gravel was raised for the purpose of being emptied by the man to whom he had been talking. Instead of passing on and allowing the man on duty to empty the box, the workman took hold of it for that purpose, and in so doing fell overboard and was drowned. It was held that at the time of his death he was not engaged in the course of his employment. In re Simpson, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 316, 319.

Watchman on Engine—Taking Charge of Steam Shovel.—A night watchman of a locomotive operated by contractors, whose duty it was to stay on the engine nights, was killed while on a steam shovel of which he had taken temporary charge at the request of the watchman employed to stay on it. It was held that his death was not due to an injury arising out of or in the course of his employment. Sherer v. Industrial Acc. Commission (Cal.) 166 Pac. 318.

Laborer Employed to Shovel Gravel—Driving Team.—The applicant was employed as a laborer to shovel gravel, but while driving a team hauling a gravel wagon, the team became frightened and the applicant was thrown from the wagon and injured. His testimony was that he was not assigned specifically to any particular kind of work, but that he understood that he was to shovel gravel. He also stated that it was customary for teamsters and shovelers to exchange places, but it did not appear that the employer had any knowledge or notice of any such custom. It was held that in driving a team, the applicant was acting outside the scope of his employment, and that the accident did not arise "out of and in the course of his employment." Modoc County v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 32 Cal. App. 548, 163 Pac. 685.

Assault by Fellow Workman.—While a workman was carrying some stock to the racks where it was required to be placed, he passed a fellow employee, who was putting some blind rails on a box, one of which accidentally struck the workman as he passed. He became angry over this accident, and kicked the fellow employee, who in turn shoved him and he fell over against a box, sustaining injuries and aggravating a latent disease which caused his death. It was held that the injury did not arise "out of" the employment, but was outside the scope and sphere of it. Griffin v. Roberson, 176 App. Div. 6, 162 N. Y. S. 313.

Assisting Fire Warden to Put Out Fire.—While the claimant, with a gang of men, was engaged in constructing a railroad, he, with several of his collaborators, was ordered by the fire warden to go with him and assist in extinguishing a fire. He complied with the order and while engaged in that work, was struck by a falling tree and the sight of his left eye was destroyed. He was directed at his work by the fire warden and his regular wages were paid him by his employer, who was reimbursed by payments from the county and state. It was held that his injury did not arise out of his employment or in the course of it. Kennelly v. Stearns Salt, etc. Co. 190 Mich. 628, 157 N. W. 378.

Boarding Moving Train.—The chief clerk of the freight auditing department of a railroad company was ordered to proceed to a station for the purpose of checking up the accounts of the local agent at that station. Just as the train on which he was riding left an intermediate station, it ran over and injured a man, and when it stopped, on account of that accident, the clerk alighted from the train. On signal being given by the conductor for the train to proceed, the clerk, after it had started, attempted to board it, when in some manner his hold slipped and he fell under the wheels and was almost instantly killed. It was held that his act in alighting from the train was a departure from the course of his employment, and that therefore he was not performing services growing out of and in the course of his employment, so as to entitle his dependents to compensation for his death. Northwestern Pac. R. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 174 Cal. 297, 163 Pac. 1000.

Explosion—Miner Using Detonator.—The rules of a pit provided that explosives capable of being fired only by detonators should be used; that the detonators should be securely kept and issued only to shot-firers; and that every charge should be fired by a competent person appointed in writing to perform that duty. After the shot-firer had left the pit, a miner who had a detonator in his possession, which, however, he had not received from the shot-firer, started to fire a shot. In the course of the operation an explosion occurred whereby he was killed. It was held that the accident happened while the miner was taking on himself a duty which he was neither engaged nor entitled to perform, and that it did not arise out of and in the course of the employment. Kerr v. Baird [1911] Sc. Ct. Sess. 701, 48 Scott. L. Rep. 646, 4 B. W. C. C. 397.

Conductor on Train Run by Employees for Their Own Pleasure.—The claimant volunteered his services as conductor for the purpose of running a train known as the "opera special," which was run by and for the employees who wished to attend a theatrical performance. The use of the equipment was granted to the employees by the officials of the commission and of the railroad company. The conductor and engineer volunteered their services and the train crew was paid by a collection taken up among the party. On the trip the claimant was injured. It was held that the injury was not received in the course of employment. In re Fitzpatrick, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 306.

Craneman Living on Dredge—Falling Overboard from Dock while Intoxicated.—A crane man employed and living on a dredge went ashore one evening on his own business. He became intoxicated and fell from the dock, where a boat from the dredge was on its way to meet him, into the water and was drowned. It was held that the injury did not arise out of and in the course of the employment. Berg v. Great Lakes Dredge, etc. Co. 173 App. Div. 82, 158 N. Y. S. 718.

Diver's Assistant—Going Ashore During Hours of Duty.—It was a workman's duty to attend one of the divers on a derrick, his hours of duty being from four o'clock in the afternoon until midnight. One evening he went ashore about eight o'clock for supper and returned in an intoxicated condition. His diver refused to allow him to assist, and the captain of the derrick locked him up in the forecandle. Shortly after eleven o'clock he came out of the forecandle and after insisting on attending the diver, but not being allowed to do so, went at 11:30 with one of the other employees who was going ashore in the customary boat for some purpose in connection with the work, and who conveyed him to the trestle and placed him thereon. The next morning his body was found in the trench under the trestle, he evidently having fallen therefrom and been drowned. It was held that in no just or reasonable sense could it be said that this accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. Matter of Pope, 177 App. Div. 60, 183 N. Y. S. 655.

Leaving Employment for Relief.—A workman employed by a gas company, when repairing a gas pipe in a private house, asked leave of his chargeman to go to a place of convenience. Leave having been given, the workman went to the house of his father-in-law, three streets (about 214 yards) away from the house in which he was working. On entering the house, he fell into a hole in the floor and was injured. It was held that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. Cogdon v. Sunderland Gas Co. 1 B. W. C. C. (Eng.) 156.

Mate Taken Out of Employment by Captain's Order.—A mate of a ship was ordered by his captain to go to his room for being drunk, but instead of going to his room, he went in another direction to speak to some one on a personal matter, and fell down a hatchway, dying from the effects of the fall. It was held that he had been taken out of his employment by the order of the captain and that the accident did not arise "out of" the employment. Horsfall v. Steamship Jura [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 183, 6 B. W. C. C. 213.

Messenger Boy—Taking Ride on Passing Truck.—A messenger boy, on an unusually busy day, in his haste to return to the office to continue his duties from an errand on which he had been sent, climbed on an automobile truck which was proceeding in that direction. While so riding, he slipped on a roller on the floor of the truck, became entangled in the gears thereof, and was severely injured. It was held that, while the accident happened in the course of his employment, in obtaining a ride on the truck, he had departed from the scope or ambit of his employment, and hence that the accident did not arise out of his employment. State v. District Ct. (Minn.) 164 N. W. 1012.

Packer—Injury by Parcel Lift.—A workman, employed as a packer, was required, as part of his duty, to go from the second floor down to the ground floor and to return to the second floor. In going down, he made use of a temporary parcel lift, intended for goods only. In returning, he apparently got in and started the lift by putting his arm outside, and in so doing his head was crushed so that he died. It was held that the accident did not arise out of or in the course of his employment, as the use of the lift was an added risk or peril without the scope of his employment. Palmer v. Harrods [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 213, 114 L. T. N. S. 869, 85 L. J. K. B. 1659, 32 Times L. Rep. 382, 9 B. W. C. C. 291.

Railway Laborer—Passing between Cars.—A railway laborer, with his foreman and other workmen, had to wait in a station for a time. The men had food with them, but in order to get hot water to prepare their breakfast, they crossed from the station over the tracks to a mess room maintained by the railway company. At the mess room the man in charge was in the habit of supplying hot water to any servant of the company who applied for it. On one of the lines, the men found a goods train which they supposed to be "dead," as, owing to the convexity of the line, the engine was not visible to them. They proceeded to pass under the couplings of the cars, and one of them was in the act of doing so when the train moved on, and he was caught between the trucks and killed on the spot. The men could have gone around to the mess room from the platform on which they were, by a bridge over the line or by making use of a subway under the line, but these routes were a little longer. It was held first, that the workman, while going to make preparations for his breakfast, was engaged in his own business and not his master's and secondly, that by going between the cars as he did, he ran an additional and quite unnecessary risk, and that for this reason the accident did not arise out of his employment. Lancashire, etc. R. Co. v. Highley [1917] A. C. (Eng.) 352, 116 L. T. N. S. 767, [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 179, 86 L. J. K. B. 715, [1917] W. N. 119, 33 Times L. Rep. 286, 61 Sol. J. 397, reversing [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 244, 115 L. T. N. S. 494.

Real Estate Salesman—Burned by Hotel Fire.—A salesman employed for the purpose of selling real estate on commission, was directed by his employer to go to a town for the purpose of selling real estate there and to remain there indefinitely. The night of his arrival a fire broke out in the hotel at which he was staying and he was burned in escaping from the fire. It was held that the injuries which he had suffered could not be held to have been sustained by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, nor to have occurred at a time when the employee was performing services growing out of and incidental to his employment, and acting within the course of his employment as such. Forman v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 31 Cal. App. 441, 160 Pac. 857.

Walking on Railroad Track.—It was found that a workman was not in the usual passageway of eight feet in width between the railroad tracks and his employer's trestle, but was on the railroad track when killed.

On certiorari, the court held that while it was not prepared to say that there was no proof of an accident, in the absence of evidence that he was forced on the track, if an accident occurred, it did not arise out of the employment. Siemientkowski v. Berwind White Coal Min. Co. (N. J.) 92 Atl. 909.

Watchman—Falling While Asleep in Chair.—A night watchman was employed "to watch the premises and to go around the building for that purpose." The findings showed that he abandoned his duty, and after obtaining a chair sat therein on the second floor of the building at an open doorway, and that while sitting there he "dozed off" and fell down a chute and received the injuries from which he died. It was held that the injury did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. Gifford v. Patterson, 222 N. Y. 4, 117 N. E. 946, reversing order 179 App. Div. 420, 165 N. Y. S. 1043.

Workman Off Duty Purchasing Money Order—Injured on Employer's Premises.—A workman was employed to tend the generators in an electric power plant. While off duty he went to a hotel on a portion of the employer's premises, run by the defendant through another employee. While the workman was purchasing a money order from the hotel employee, a gasoline tank the latter was soldering exploded and the workman was injured. It was held that the workman was attending to his own private affairs and therefore that his act was not service growing out of and incidental to his employment, though at the time it was performed he was subject to a call for duty, and though done on the employer's premises under the sanction of a custom. Brienen v. Wisconsin Public Service Co. (Wis.) 163 N. W. 182.

Deviating from Usual Route in Returning to Quarters.—A workman was employed as a foreman in the reclamation service, performing excavating work, and as was usual he had his living quarters furnished by the government in the immediate vicinity of the work. While off duty he had left his quarters to go to a store near by to make some necessary purchases. On his return to his quarters, his attention was attracted to an electric wood saw which was in operation just off the main road of travel, and he, with several other men, stopped to watch the operations. While so doing, a stick of wood was thrown by the saw, striking him in the face and inflicting injuries resulting in his death. It was held that his death did not arise in the course of the employment. In re Gilson, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 326.

3. ACT WITHIN SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the workman was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the injury and was therefore entitled to relief:

Foreman—Going to Stop Fight between Men.—The claimant was in charge of a gang of men, and it was his duty to enforce discipline and preserve order in and around the work. Two of the men engaged in a fight, and as he started toward them to stop the fight, he ran into a pole in the hands of other laborers engaged in unloading a boat and was thereby injured. It was held that the injury was received in the course of his employment. In re Wharton, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor, 315.

Mill Hand—Bursting of Beer Bottle.—The applicant, who worked at a mill in a room with an average temperature of about ninety degrees, was in the act of getting hold of a bottle of herb beer to quench his thirst, when the bottle burst, injuring him. It was shown that it was a recognized custom throughout Lancashire to allow mill employees to bring to their work liquid refreshment, which they took from time to time to quench their thirst while following their employment. It was held that the accident arose out of the man's employment. Heywood v. Broadstone Spinning Mill, 128 L. T. J. (Eng.) 134.

Carpenter's Laborer—Fall through Open Hatch.—A carpenter's laborer went on board a ship with some other men to do some work in No. 5 hold. They removed a portion of No. 5 hatch on the upper deck to enable them to get down to the shelter deck, where they removed part of the lower hatch going down to the 'tween decks. After a time the laborer was found to be missing and it was subsequently discovered that he had fallen into the hold through No. 6 hatchway in the shelter deck. No. 6 hatchway was some forty or fifty feet further aft than No. 5, and there was no work to be done at it. The only suggestion with regard to his presence at No. 6 hatchway was that he had gone there to relieve himself, and that, it being pitch dark on the shelter deck except just under No. 5 hatchway, he had fallen down No. 6 hatchway which happened to be open. The w. c.'s on the ship were all closed at the time. The county court judge drew the inference that the laborer had gone towards No. 6 hatch to relieve himself and held that the man had not gone so far that he had traveled outside the scope of his employment, and hence that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. The finding was affirmed on appeal. Armstrong v. Gregson [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 226, 9 B. W. C. C. 468.

Express Truck Driver—Delivering Package.—The driver of an express company's motor truck was struck by an automobile while crossing a street on his way from his truck to deliver an express package, and received injuries which caused his death. It was held that the injury arose out of his employment. Miller v. Taylor, 173 App. Div. 865, 159 N. Y. S. 999.

Fireman—Extinguishing Fire in Foreign Territory.—The claimant was employed as a fireman in the fire department of the civil administration under the Isthmian canal commission. While assisting as pipeman in an effort to extinguish a fire which had broken out in a building situated in Colon, he was injured. The city of Colon was foreign territory. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. In re Nellis, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 286.

Hernia—Lifting Barrel.—A shipping clerk suffering from hernia, in pursuing his regular duties, sustained a personal injury consisting of a strain occasioned by lifting or attempting to lift a barrel. His duties were confined to clerical and inspecting work, and his only duty in regard to the barrel was to weigh it. What he was engaged in doing was for his master's benefit and to push on his own work. It was held that though he departed temporarily from his usual avocation to perform some act necessary to be done by some one for his master, he did not cease to be acting in the course of his employment; and so it was held that he suffered a personal injury arising in the course of and out of the employment. Hartz v. Hartford Faience Co. 90 Conn. 539, 97 Atl. 1020.

Steam Fitter—Moving Steel Beams.—A steam fitter's helper, while attending to a boiler, attempted to move two steel "I" beams resting about three feet from the floor by pushing against the beams with his body. The ends of these beams projected over and obstructed the passageway on which he was required to walk to reach the steam pressure gauges of the boiler, and he might have called other steam fitters near to move the beams far enough to allow him to pass. He did this once or twice when he felt sick and faint. He was assisted home and was sick, nauseated and weak, with increasing soreness and pain across the stomach. The third night he was nauseated and vomited blood and soon afterwards had a slight paralytic stroke. It was held that he was injured by an accident while he was acting within the scope of his employment. Manning v. Pomerene (Neb.) 162 N. W. 492.

Power Press Operator—Putting Hand in Press While in Operation.—The claimant was employed by a manufacturer of metal oiling cups as the operator of one of its power presses, into which automatically a sheet of steel was fed and the cup shells punched therefrom released. It was a rule of the company, as to which the claimant had been explicitly instructed both by his foreman and superintendent, never to put his hand within the press while it was in operation. Noticing that one or more small pieces of steel had caught in the die of the press, the claimant attempted to remove them with his left hand, with the result that it was caught by the punch and badly injured. It was held that the prohibition was not one which limited the sphere of the claimant's employment, but simply dealt with his conduct within the sphere of his employment in operating the press, and hence that the accident was one arising out of the claimant's employment. Macechko v. Bowen Mfg. Co. 166 N. Y. S. 822.

Subway Engineer—Taking Shower Bath.—The claimant was supervising the construction of a part of a subway, and was directed to survey all the floors under the railroad tracks, underneath the decking, and while so engaged he became very dirty. It was his duty after leaving the subway to make up estimates at the engineer's field office. In most such offices a shower bath was provided for the men similarly engaged; no such regular bath was provided at this one, and two or three days before the accident the claimant and his assistant engineer had improvised a shower bath at the office. While standing on a marble slab, his foot slipped and he was injured. It was held that his injuries arose out of and in the course of his employment. Sexton v. Public Service Commission, 167 N. Y. S. 493.

Street Risk—Thrown out of Cart.—The applicant, who was employed as a builder's assistant and mason, fell from a cart while taking a window frame to a customer's house and was injured. The window frame was of considerable size and weighed about three stones. As the employer had no cart at the time in which to send his frame, he told the workman to manage it the best way he could. The man started with it on his shoulders, when, meeting a pony and cart accompanying a traction engine, he arranged with the lad in charge for a lift. He then put the frame into the cart and was getting in himself, when the pony dashed off, after the traction engine had started. It was held that the accident was not due to an act of the workman so far outside the scope of his employment that it could be said that the accident did not arise out of the employment. Mullinger v. Bidewell [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 51, 10 B. W. C. C. 104.

Fall When Leaving Shop.—While leaving the shipfitter's shed after quitting time, the claimant tripped, and in attempting to keep from falling took hold of a sharp plate edge, cutting the palm of his hand, according to the report of his superior officer. The claimant himself stated that while coming into the shop he stumbled and injured himself as described above. It was held that the fact that the claimant was not actually engaged in the work for which he was employed would not take him without the scope of his employment. In re Fahey, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 283.

Seaman—Going Ashore on Ship's Business.

—The crew of a vessel were by arrangement allowed to sell old ropes, which were the property of the owners, and to keep the proceeds for themselves, save that out of the proceeds of sale they had first to make good any broken crockery. The ship came into harbor to coal, but having to wait until the tide rose, the crew had nothing to do for an hour or so. On a previous occasion, some old ropes had been sold under the foregoing arrangement, and a seaman went to get the purchase money. The only way to get ashore was by going on top of the wheelhouse, leaning or kneeling down to get on the plank extending from the wheelhouse top to the quay, and crossing by the plank. In kneeling or leaning down to get onto the plank, the seaman slipped, and fell on the boiler casing and thence onto the deck, and died of his injuries. The master of the rolls held that the evidence showed that the accident arose "out of" the employment, because it was proved that the seaman was really going ashore to perform a duty to his employers—that was to say, to get money due in respect to his employers' goods, or on which they had a lien. With respect to the claim that, even if the seaman was going ashore on his own business, the accident still arose "out of" the employment, it was held that it was sufficient to say that the accident occurred while he was on the ship and before he had crossed the plank. Duck v. North Sea Steam Trawling Co. [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 529, 9 B. W. C. C. 83.

Going to Assistance of Employee of Another Company.—A workman was in the employ of a company which had a contract for performing part of the work necessary in the construction of a building. While one of the employees of another contracting company, engaged in performing other work in its construction necessitating an excavation, was at work in the excavation, the bank thereof caved in and he was caught. This occurred about 20 feet from where the workman was at work, and he went to the assistance of the endangered man. While he was endeavoring to release the latter another cave-in occurred by which the workman received injuries of which he subsequently died. It was held that his death was due to an accident "arising out of and in the course of" his employment. Waters v. William J. Taylor Co. 218 N. Y. 248, 112 N. E. 727, L.R.A. 1917A 347, affirming order 170 App. Div. 942, 154 N. Y. S. 1149.

Crossing Tracks.—A workman was employed as a stone derrickman, part of his work consisting of assisting in unloading stone from cars on switch tracks onto wagons. On the day prior to the accident, he and the other employees left, on quitting work, in a partially unloaded car, some tools with which they were unloading the stone. On arriving at work the next morning, the workman discovered that the car had been moved north during the night and was informed that it would be moved back the next morning. He then went to work unloading another car of stone, but he and the other workmen confined their work to the smaller pieces which did not require tools in handling. After he had been working a short time the yardmaster came to where he and the other workmen were unloading the car, and said: "Here comes your car in that train now. It's running slow, and you can jump over the fence and get on the car and throw off your tools." The freight train was moving slowly south on the fourth track west of the fence. The workman immediately jumped from the car he was on, climbed over the fence and was struck and killed by an express train running north on the track next to the fence. A city ordinance declared it unlawful for any person, other than employees of railroad companies acting in the discharge of their duties, to enter on or to walk along or across any track of any railroad elevated in accordance with the city ordinances. It was held that the workman was killed by an accident arising out of his employment. Alexander v. Industrial Board, 281 Ill. 201, 117 N. E. 1040.

Volunteer Work.—An employee working on the door of a warehouse received an injury to his eye. The work was in the nature of an improvement or alteration which was done for the purpose of expediting some work within the scope of the employee's duties, but was not work which he had been ordered to do and was performed outside the building in which he usually worked. It was held that the accident arose "out of and in the course of employment." Holland v. Rumely Products Co. 35 West L. Rep. 454, 31 Dominion L. Rep. 426.

Miner Returning to Work after Hours — Shot by Guard.—The evidence showed that the established mining practice was for one of the departing shift which had drilled the blasting holes and fired the shots to investigate where any apparently failed to explode, and, if possible, remedy the dangerous situation left by the unexploded charges for the new shift. The claimant went to his tent and twenty minutes later revisited the scene of the explosions and found that all of the shots had been fired, his fellow workmen having meanwhile gone on home. In returning to his tent, while carrying his miner's light, he was shot by a mine guard. It was held that his injuries thus resulting grew out of and occurred in the course of his employment. Atolia Min. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission (Cal.) 167 Pac. 148.

Returning to Machine to Remedy Obstruction.—The applicant for compensation was employed in a department where material was being prepared for rope-making by a series of machines. She had worked at first as a preparer, and then at an intermediate drawing frame, next to which was a finishing frame. On the morning of the accident, she was working an intermediate drawing frame along with another girl, when the water power of the factory temporarily failed, stopping the machines. When work was resumed, the applicant and the other girl were replaced by two girls, by instructions of the foreman, but received no orders what they themselves were to do. Without instructions, they went to the adjoining finishing machine, and after sorting some "ends" which were running away, the applicant left to look for the foreman for definite instructions. As she passed the end of the intermediate frame at which she had been previously working, she noticed some manilla threads twining round one of the rollers and threatening to disturb the even running of the machine; and she attempted to release them while the machine was running, with the result that her right hand was caught between the rollers and she received injuries necessitating the amputation of her arm. The same or similar obstructions in the working of the machines were not uncommon and the girls employed at the machines were in the habit of so removing them; nor was there any prohibition against the practice. It was held that the applicant was injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of her employment. Beattie v. Tough [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 93, [1917] 1 Scott. L. T. 27.

VI. Disobedience or Negligence of Workman.

1. IN GENERAL.

In the absence of serious and wilful misconduct, the mere disobedience of orders, which limit the method of work, but do not limit the sphere of the employment, does not preclude a recovery by the injured workman. See the cases cited infra in this subdivision.

A rule of an employer, however, has in some cases the function of fixing the limits of the workmen's duty, or as it has been expressed, delimiting the sphere of his employment. Thus, if an employer employs a workman to do a particular kind of work in an indicated place, and prohibits him from doing a different kind of work in quite another place, the doing of the prohibited work in the prohibited place is not merely misconduct. The prohibition places the work in the doing of which the accident occurs outside the sphere of the workman's employment altogether, and the accident cannot therefore be held to arise out of his employment, Herbert v. Fox [1916] A. C. (Eng.) 405, Ann. Cas. 1916D 578, 114 L. T. N. S. 426, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 1, 85 L. J. K. B. 441, 60 Sol. J. 237, 32 Times L. Rep. 261, [1916] W. N. 34, 9 B. W. C. C. 164, affirming [1915] 2 K. B. 81, [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 154, 112 L. T. N. S. 833, 8 B. W. C. C. 94.

Where it appears that the accident occurred while the servant was doing an act which he was expressly forbidden, by his master, to do, no recovery can be had. Smith v. Corson, 87 N. J. L. 118, 93 Atl. 112.

The question what constitutes the "serious and wilful misconduct" which debars an injured employee from recovery under a workman's compensation act, is discussed in the note to the case of In re Nickerson, Ann. Cas. 1916A 791. The voluntary intoxication of an employee as precluding a recovery under a workman's compensation act for an injury of which the intoxication is the proximate cause, is treated in the notes to Nekoosa-Edward Paper Co. v. Industrial Commission, Ann. Cas. 1915B 995, and Williams v. Llandudno Quaching, etc. Co. Ann. Cas. 1918B 682.

2. DISOBEDIENCE OR NEGLIGENCE PRECLUDING RECOVERY.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the disobedience or negligence of the workman was a bar to recovery:

Riding on Truck—Practice Forbidden by Rules and Statute.—A workman was taking two truck loads drawn by a horse along a mine level. He mounted on the leading truck load. He had no reins, and the horse could not be controlled except by voice. He could not get off the truck load, as the trucks were then going too fast, being on a downward incline, and he did not shout to stop the horse as he feared the impetus of the trucks would drive them on to it. In consequence his back was caught by the roof of the level, he was thrown off the truck load, and his spine was fractured. Riding on trucks was prohibited by the colliery rules and also by a statutory regulation applicable to that mine. The county court judge held that the applicant had not satisfied the onus resting on him of showing that the accident arose "out of" the employment. On appeal, it was held that the accident happened because the workman was doing something outside the sphere of his employment, as the effect of the rule was to exclude from the sphere of his employment the doing of that which was prohibited by the rule, and hence did not arise out of his employment. Maydew v. Chatterley-Whitfield Collieries [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 277.

A workman was employed to work on a private railway line as a shunter. At the time of the accident, the shunting engine was being driven tender first, pushing trucks back to the shed, and it was his duty to keep a look-out on the journey, walking in front of the first truck for that purpose. Instead, he climbed on a buffer of the truck, holding his shunting pole with both hands. The pole slipped and he fell and was run over by the truck. In riding on the buffer, he was violating a printed notice, of which he had knowledge, providing that look-out men should be in front of the wagons, and he admitted that the manager would have dismissed any man whom he had seen riding on the buffers. It was held that the accident did not arise out of the course of employment but that it was outside the scope of the service altogether and hence that he was not entitled to compensation. Herbert v. Fox [1916] A. C. (Eng.) 405, Ann. Cas. 1916D 578, 114 L. T. N. S. 426, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 1, 85 L. J. K. B. 441, 60 Sol. J. 237, 32 Times L. Rep. 261, [1916] W. N. 34, 9 B. W. C. C. 164, affirming [1915] 2 K. B. 81, [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 154, 112 L. T. N. S. 833, 9 B. W. C. C. 94, following Barnes v. Nunnery Colliery Co. [1912] A. C. 44, [1912] W. C. Rep. 90, and Plumb v. Cobden Flour Mills Co. [1914] A. C. 62, Ann. Cas. 1914B 495, [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 48, and distinguishing Blair v. Chilton [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 283.

Riding Motorcycle after Express Prohibition.—A workman was employed by a cycle maker and repairer to look after his shop and do small repairs to cars and bicycles on the premises. He was not engaged as a driver and was forbidden to use machines out of the shop in any way, or to leave the shop. He was insured by his employer as a cycle repairer and not as a driver, of which fact he was aware. He had some physical weakness in the legs. A customer brought a motorcycle to the shop to be repaired. When the machine had been repaired, the workman took it out of the shop by a back way and was riding it back to the customer when he was run into by a motor omnibus and killed. It was held that there was no emergency and that the accident was not one arising out of and in the course of the employment. Leggett v. Gibbons [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 154, 114 L. T. N. S. 830, 85 L. J. K. B. 980, 9 B. W. C. C. 354.

Jumping on Moving Car.—The plaintiff was a member of a gang of fourteen or fifteen men, carried by the employer from place to place as required in a work-train, two cars of which were box cars fitted as sleeping cars, and was allotted to one of the sleeping cars. The train stopped at a point during a trip and the plaintiff got off for a purpose contemplated by his employment. He was then invited to join some of his fellow workmen in a car ahead. He got into that car and remained there until the train started, when he jumped out of that car and waited on the ground until his car came along. He then grabbed a rung of the ladder which was the means of ingress and egress, nailed to the side of the car, but the motion of the train jerked him off his feet and he fell under the train and was injured. It was held that the plaintiff was guilty of misconduct of such a character as to make it impossible for him to say that the risk of accident arising therefrom was reasonably incidental to his employment. Bechtel v. Canadian Pac. R. Co. 9 Sask. L. Rep. 3, 33 West. L. Rep. 426, 26 Dominion L. Rep. 339.

Brakeman Jumping from Train.—It was the custom and duty of a brakeman to get on the first car and there receive and transmit to the engineer the requisite orders and signals. While reducing speed to stop at a station, the brakeman instead of staying on the first car, descended to the first step of the tender. The engineer, realizing that he was going to jump and also the danger, warned him not to do so. However, a few seconds after the warning, the brakeman jumped and was killed. It was held that he was not the victim of an accident happening by reason of or in the course of his employment. Jette v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 40 Quebec Super. Ct. 204.

Reaching under Moving Car for Coat.—The claimant was one of a gang of laborers engaged at work on the tracks in a train yard. A rain shower, sufficiently copious to justify the suspension of work, occurred, and the claimant, with a number of other laborers, went under one of the cars of a train which was standing on a nearby track, for shelter. The nearest shelter available other than the cars was an engine shed about three hundred yards away. At the time the claimant went under the car no engine was attached to the train, but while he was still there an engine was coupled on and the train was moved. The claimant safely escaped from under the car, but reached under the moving car to get his coat, which had been left on one of the trucks, and his arm was caught and badly injured. It was held that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of employment, but was due to the negligence of the claimant. In re Torres, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 412.

Explosion—Minor Using Detonator.—The rules of a pit provided that explosives capable of being fired only by detonators should be used; that the detonators should be securely kept and issued only to shot-firers; and that every charge should be fired by a competent person appointed in writing to perform that duty. After the shot-firer had left the pit, a miner who had a detonator in his possession, which, however, he had not received from the shot-firer, started to fire a shot. In the course of the operation an explosion occurred whereby he was killed. It was held that the accident happened while the miner was taking on himself a duty which he was neither engaged nor entitled to perform, and that it did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. Kerr v. Baird [1911] Sc. Ct. Sess. 701, 48 Scot. L. Rep. 646, 4 B. W. C. C. 397.

Joiner—Using Wood-working Machine.—The applicant, a joiner employed in making gun-carriage wheels, while planing a piece of wood in a planing machine in order to fit it as a block for supporting the fellow of a wheel while the spokes were being riveted in, got his left hand caught in the machine and lost three fingers. The employers had in the works machine men specially provided for working the wood-working machines, a fact well known to the workmen, and, although there was no express prohibition of user of the machines, no other workmen were permitted to or did in fact work them. It was held that the applicant, in using the machine, was incurring a risk not incidental to his employment and that his accident could not be said to have arisen "out of" his employment. Anderson v. Armstrong [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 71, 10 B. W. C. C. 67.

Fireman—Entering Transformer Room.—A company operating a power plant took every precaution to exclude from the transformer room the public and all of its employees except those whose duties required them to enter or pass through the room, by means of a fence, signs, and rules. In disobedience of these rules, the head fireman, who, the evidence showed, had sometimes been called on to perform the duties of the engineer and enter this room, but who had no business therein at the time of the accident, entered the room and was killed by an electric shock by coming in contact with a wire. It was held that the accident which resulted in the injury did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. Northern Illinois Light, etc. Co. v. Industrial Board, 279 Ill. 565, 117 N. E. 95.

Leaving Work to Cash Pay Check.—A foreman carpenter was at work in a round-house surrounded with tracks, which were used as a shunting yard in making up trains. He was paid there about eight o'clock in the morning. At half-past eleven that morning, he left his work to cross the tracks for the purpose of getting his pay check cashed at a bank some distance and returning to his work. There was a space between two cars in a train being made up of from two to four feet, and he started to pass between these two cars, when an engine at one end of the line of cars brought the two together. There was a special prohibition against the men crossing these tracks, and particularly that the men should not leave their work to cash their pay checks. It was held that the accident did not happen by reason of or in the course of the employment. Lavery v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 48 Quebec Super. Ct. 278, 24 Dominion L. Rep. 522.

Carpenter—Ordered to Keep Off Scaffolds.—A carpenter was employed on a building in the course of erection. He fell from the end of a plank lying diagonally across a scaffold fourteen feet high, sustaining injuries of which he died later. His presence on the scaffolding was in direct disobedience of his employer's orders that he was "to keep off scaffolds and not to do any climbing." It was held that the injuries which caused his death did not arise out of his employment. Smith v. Corson, 87 N. J. L. 118, 93 Atl. 112.

Going on Forbidden Structure.—The applicant was employed by lead smelters to fill skips with ore. When a skip was full it was his duty to call for the crane to lift it, and if for any reason the call was not obeyed, he was to endeavor to find the crane man. The crane traveled over a structure spoken of as a "bridge," which connected the two buildings of the employers and crossed the street, although it did not serve any of the purposes of a passenger bridge. One night the applicant, having filled a skip, called for the crane man but got no reply. In order to find him, the applicant went up onto the "bridge" and walked in the dark nearly the whole length of it, when he fell through a trapdoor to the street below and was injured. There was a notice on the "bridge" near the end of the gangway prohibiting workmen under pain of dismissal from going onto the "bridge," of which the applicant was ignorant, and he honestly believed that he ought to go on the "bridge" when the crane man did not answer the call. It was obviously dangerous to go on the "bridge" and the crane man should have been hailed from a safe place near the "bridge." It was held that the accident did not arise out of the employment, and that the honest belief of the workman that he was entitled to go on the "bridge" could not in any way enlarge the scope of the employment or make it permissible for him to say, when an accident had arisen from his going to a place where he had no duty to go, that in that case the accident arose out of the employment. Wardle v. Enthoven [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 18, 116 L. T. N. S. 103, 86 L. J. K. B. 309, 33 Times L. Rep. 123, 61 Sol. J. 170, 10 B. W. C. C. 79.

Molder—Going on Electrical Crane.—A workman employed as a molder used an electrical crane in his work, but was instructed never to go on the crane. He understood from the foreman that he was to report to the machinist or to the electrician any defect in the operation of the crane, and, if they could not be found, that he was to sit down or go home. On the day of the injury, the claimant reported to the machinist the fact that the crane did not work properly, and the latter got a ladder and climbed up on the crane to repair it. He was followed by the claimant, not apparently for the purpose of reporting the condition of the crane, but to suggest to the machinist what the latter should do, well knowing the danger to which he was subjecting himself. The machinery was set in motion, and in going down the ladder the claimant's hand was caught in certain gear wheels and badly injured. It was held that the injury did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. Bischoff v. American Car, etc. Co. 190 Mich. 229, 157 N. W. 34.

3. DISOBEDIENCE OR NEGLIGENCE NOT PRECLUDING RECOVERY.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the disobedience or negligence of the workman was no bar to recovery:

Bottler in Soda Water Factory—Not Wearing Gauntlets.—The applicant for compensation was a girl of fourteen, who was engaged as a bottler in a soda water factory. While she was at work, a bottle exploded in the machine, and a piece of glass struck and injured her right wrist. At the time of the accident she was wearing a glove on her left hand, but had no protection on the right, as required by the special rules under the factory and workshop acts for the bottling of soda water, which were posted. The employer claimed that the accident was due to the applicant's serious and wilful misconduct in not wearing protective gauntlets on both arms as required by the rules, and as she had been told to do by himself and the forewoman. The county court judge found that the gauntlets were provided, that the applicant knew that she had to wear them, but that the forewoman, whose duty it was to see that the applicant wore them, had allowed her to do the work without a gauntlet on her right hand and to disregard the rules, and only verbally told the applicant to obey the rules to protect herself with the employer. He therefore held that the defense of serious and wilful misconduct was not established, which decision was affirmed on appeal. Casey v. Humphries [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 485, 57 Sol. J. 716, 29 Times L. Rep. 647, 6 B. W. C. C. 520.

Family Servant—Lighting Fire with Wood Alcohol.—A domestic servant, part of whose duty was to light the fires, was forbidden to use kerosene "or anything like that" to assist her in lighting a fire. She used wood alcohol, and by reason thereof was burned to death. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of her employment, notwithstanding the disobedience of her orders, as she was doing what she was expected to do at the very place where it was meant to be done. Kolaszynski v. Klie (N. J.) 102 Atl. 5.

Going Home from Work—Forced Off Engine by Conductor.—The claimant was engaged in his usual employment on the day of the injury about half a mile distant from the shop and about a mile distant from the place where he lived. On the blowing of the whistle at 5 P.M., as the signal for stopping work, he and two other men boarded the step on the front of a light engine, which was going to the shop. Such riding on "light engines" was a matter of frequent occurrence, some conductors permitting it and some not. In the present case, the conductor threw coal at the men on the front of the engine; the claimant's hat fell off; the conductor went forward over the engine, and while it was in rapid motion kicked or forced the claimant off. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment, and was not due to the claimant's negligence, though he was undoubtedly guilty of misconduct in boarding the engine contrary to orders. In re Clarke, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 468.

Larking—Mine Explosive.—In the course of blasting operations in a mine, a brushing squad, had drilled a hole and filled it with a charge of an explosive known as saxonite, placing at the bottom of the charge a detonator which was to be electrically exploded by means of two wires passing downwards through the charge and attached to the detonator. The foreman brusher thereafter, contrary to fact and apparently for fun, informed the fireman whose duty it was to explode the charge that it was not ready, and the fireman went away. Subsequently the fireman was sent for, but could not be found, and the foreman brusher then proceeded alone to the charge, which exploded and killed him. It was found in fact, as the only way in which the arbitrator could account for the accident, that it was caused by friction set up by the foreman attempting to pull out the wires communicating with the detonator. It was proved that the statutory rule providing that "no explosive shall be forcibly pressed into a hole of insufficient size, and when a hole has been charged, the explosive shall not be unrammed," was well known to the foreman and was carefully enforced, but it was not proved that he knew the mechanism of the detonator, or the danger of pulling the wires. It was held that the accident was not caused by an attempt to unram the charge in the sense of the statutory rule, and did not result from the "serious and wilful misconduct" of the foreman; but that it arose "out of and in the course of" his employment. Lynch v. Baird, Sc. Ct. Sess. 6 F. 271, 41 Scott. L. Rep. 214.

Machinist—Filing Piece of Steel in Vise.—A machinist was engaged in filing a heavy piece of steel which he had fixed in the grip of a vise. While changing the position of the piece of steel, it accidentally slipped, struck against his wrist, and inflicted a severe cut. The superintendent of the factory stated that it was "due to his negligence in not properly securing the work to prevent slipping between vise jaws." It was held that the claimant incurred the injury in question through an accident such as might happen to any ordinarily careful machinist in the usual course of his employment. In re Robinson, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 389.

Motorman—Adjusting Trolley.—While a motorman was on the ground in front of his car, attempting to adjust the trolley so as to furnish current to drive his car into the barn, the car suddenly started forward and caught his body between it and the next car, injuring him so that he died the same day. It was held that the injury which caused his death was an accidental one arising out of and in the course of his employment; and that the fact that he had not observed the rules of the company, with which he was familiar, or that he acted negligently, did not take him out of the employment, nor the act which resulted in the injury out of the course of his employment. Chicago Rys. Co. v. Industrial Board, 276 Ill. 112, 114 N. E. 534.

Power Press Operator—Putting Hand in Press While in Operation.—The claimant was employed by a manufacturer of metal oiling cups as the operator of one of its power presses, into which automatically a sheet of steel was fed and the cup shells punched therefrom released. It was a rule of the company, as to which the claimant had been explicitly instructed both by his foreman and superintendent, never to put his hand within the press while it was in operation. Noticing that one or more small pieces of steel had caught in the die of the press, the claimant attempted to remove them with his left hand, with the result that it was caught by the punch and badly injured. It was held that the prohibition was not one which limited the sphere of the claimant's employment, but simply dealt with his conduct within the sphere of his employment in operating the press, and hence that the accident was one arising out of the claimant's employment. Macechko v. Bowen Mfg. Co. 166 N. Y. S. 822.

Operating Elevator—Putting Head Out of Door.—A workman was engaged in moving patterns from one floor to another by means of an elevator which he operated himself. The evidence furnished some ground for the inference that he carelessly put his head out of the elevator door while it was moving. It was held that this was merely a want of due care and that the accident occurred in the course of the employment. Erickson v. American Well Works, 196 Ill. App. 346.

VII. Beginning of Employment.

1. IN GENERAL.

An accident to a workman may arise out of and in the course of his employment, within the meaning of a workmen's compensation act, though he is not actually working at the time of the accident. Holland-St. Louis Sugar Co. v. Shraluka (Ind.) 116 N. E. 330; Von Ette's Case, 223 Mass. 56, 111 N. E. 696, L.R.A.1916D 641; Stacy's Case, 225 Mass. 174, 114 N. E. 206. So it has been held that the employment is not limited to the exact moment of the workman's arrival at the place of the actual work, but exists after the actual work begins and continues after the actual work has ceased, for a reasonable length of time. Carter v. Rowe, 92 Conn. 82, 101 Atl. 491. In De Constantin v. Public Service Commission, 75 W. Va. 32, 83 S. E. 88, L.R.A.1916A 329, the court said: "Since injury after termination of actual work, while on the premises of the employer and in pursuit of the usual way of leaving the same, is held to be within the course of employment and to have arisen out of the same, it seems clear that an injury to a workman while coming to his place of work on the premises of the employer and by the only way of access, or the one contemplated by the contract of employment, must also be regarded as having been incurred in the course of employment and to have arisen out of the same. If, in such case, injury does not occur on the premises but in close proximity to the place of work and on a road or other way intended and contemplated by the contract as being the exclusive means of access to the place of work, the same principle would apply and govern. If the place at which the injury occurred is brought within the contract of employment, by the requirement of its use by the employee, so that he has no discretion or choice as to his mode or manner of coming to work, such place and its use seem logically to become elements or factors in the employment and the injury thus arises out of the employment and is incurred in the course thereof. But, on the contrary, if the employee, at the time of the injury, has gone beyond the premises of the employer, or has not reached them, and chosen his own place or mode of travel, the injury does not arise out of his employment nor is it within the scope thereof."

"We think the governing principles of all the decisions are not difficult of discernment. The first of these is that there are excluded from the benefits of the act all those accidental injuries which occur while the employee is going to or returning from his work, and it matters not in this respect whether his journey takes him over public roads or private ways. Second, in the case of vessels, a seaman or other employee is entitled to the benefits of the act if injured while using the instrumentality provided in either reaching or departing from his ship, and in case no instrumentality at all is provided, the injured employee will not be excluded from the benefits of the act if he adopts some perilous means of boarding his ship, as by endeavoring to leap to her deck from her pier. But in the case of an employee seeking to board his vessel, until he has come into such proximity to her as to be using or immediately about to use the gang-plank, ladder, or other instrumentality 'specifically connected with the ship,' his accident does not arise out of his employment. In the very broadest sense, of course, it is true that an injury which happens to a man who is on his way to his place of employment is an injury 'growing out of and incidental to his employment,' since a necessary part of the employment is that the employee shall go to and return from his place of labor. But it is to be noted that the right to an award is not founded upon the fact that the injury grows out of and is incidental to his employment. It is founded upon the fact that the service he is rendering at the time of the injury grows out of and is incidental to the employment. Therefore, an employee going to and from his place of employment is not rendering any service, and begins to render such service only when, as has been said, arriving at the place of his employment, he proceeds to use some instrumentality provided, by means of which he immediately places himself in a position to perform his tasks. Such beyond question is the reasoning of the cases and the meaning of their adjudications." Ocean Acc. etc. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 173 Cal. 313, 159 Pac. 1041, L.R.A.1917B 336.

2. EMPLOYMENT BEGUN.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the employment had begun and that the applicant was therefore entitled to recover:

Boat Hand—Ashore with Leave.—A boat hand was instructed to report for duty on the boat which was to sail at 5 o'clock. He reported shortly before that hour and was then informed that the boat would sail at 11 o'clock. He went ashore with permission to use the intervening time as he pleased. About 10 o'clock in the evening he returned to the premises and while going through the yard by a not unreasonable route to board the boat, fell in the darkness and suffered injuries. It was held that he was injured in the course of his employment. Carter v. Rowe, 92 Conn. 82, 101 Atl. 491.

Laborer—Going to Work Along Railroad Track.—There were three ways of getting to the works where the applicant was employed as a fitter's laborer, the way along the railway line being dangerous, but used by the workmen to a far greater extent and in much greater numbers than the other two. The employers knew that this way was so used and did not forbid its use. In using this way, the applicant was struck by a locomotive and injured. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment, and that the applicant, in taking the dangerous way, was not adding a peril to his employment, disentitling him to compensation. Fox v. Rees [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 339, 115 L. T. N. S. 358, 86 L. J. K. B. 43, 9 B. W. C. C. 459.

Waiting to Start Work—Struck by Stone from Blast.—While the claimant was on the premises of his employer waiting for time to start work, he was warned by the blowing of a whistle that a blast was to go off. He got under a car for protection, but was struck on the elbow by a stone hurled by the blast. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. In re Giovanni, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 287.

Going to Work in Time to Change Clothes.—The claimant was a plasterer employed by subcontractors for the plastering of a building in the course of construction, and in the course of the work it became necessary to shift the temporary stairs which had been erected. The claimant arrived before working time in order to change into his working clothes which he had left on the third floor the night before, and be ready for work on time. In ascending to the third floor he fell through the stairs and was injured. It was held that the accident "arose out of" the claimant's employment. Klukas v. Thompson, 7 West. W. Rep. (Alberta) 1102, 21 Dominion L. Rep. 312, reversed on other grounds 31 West. L. Rep. 438, 8 West. W. Rep. 778, 24 Dominion L. Rep. 67.

Going to Work—Pursuing Ordinary and Necessary Course.—The claimant, a watchman on a steam shovel, was injured by jumping to the ground in getting over a train of cars. It appeared that there were practically no roads or sidewalks at the place and that the claimant was pursuing the ordinary and necessary course pursued by employees engaged in connection with the shovel. In re Chambers, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 291.

Going to Work—Injury at Main Gate to Premises.—While a workman was going to work through the main gate at the place where he was employed, he received a fall, caused by a hose being pulled against him by another employee who was using it. It was held that he was injured while in the course of his employment. In re Guerin, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 324.

Going to Work—Injury on Employer's Premises.—A screen boy employed at a colliery, slipped on a rail crossing the road while on his way to work and on the colliery premises, but before he had got his check. It was held that as a matter of law the accident "arose out of the employment," as it was caused by a peril attached to the particular location in which by the obligation of service the workman was placed, although the accident was not contributed to in any way by the nature of the employment. Marsh v. Pope [1917] W. N. (Eng.) 262, 33 Times L. Rep. 523.

Going to Work—Hernia from Fall.—A policeman employed by the Isthmian canal commission in the canal zone was walking along the railroad track near midnight on his way to report for duty. It was raining and the night was very dark. When he had almost reached his destination, he slipped on a crosstie and stepped into a drain about twelve inches deep and was injured. It was held that, the claimant having taken the only route available on his way to work, the accident had occurred in the course of employment. In re Koontz, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 294.

Going to Work Along Employer's Track—Struck by Train.—As a workman was following the railroad track of his employer on his way from his quarters to his place of employment, he was killed by being run over by a train of cars belonging to his employer, without negligence or misconduct on his part. It was held that he met his death in the course of his employment. In re Gonzales, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 333.

3. EMPLOYMENT NOT BEGUN.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the employment had not begun and that the applicant was therefore not entitled to recover:

Crossing River in Fellow Employee's Launch.—A cook on a dredge, while crossing the river on his way to work one morning along with three other employees in a launch owned by one of them, was drowned with the others by the sinking of the launch. It was held that the accident did not arise in the course of the employment, since the employee had not entered on the duties of his occupation. In re Ware, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 335.

Crossing Street—Struck by Train.—A night fireman, en route to the place of his employment, was struck at a street crossing by the train. It was held that the injury had not been received in the course of his employment. In re Flaherty, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 290.

Going to Work—Walking Along Railroad Track.—A workman employed by contractors engaged in construction work on a railroad line, was killed on the main line of the railroad, but not on the construction work, while on his way to work, when he supposedly stepped in front of one train in an effort to escape from another. There was no evidence that the place of the injury had been brought within the contract of employment by the requirement of its use by the employee in coming to work. Hence it was held that the evidence did not show that the injury, by which the workman's death was occasioned, arose out of his employment, or that it was incurred in the course thereof. DeConstantin v. Public Service Commission, 75 W. Va. 32, 83 S. E. 88, L.R.A.1916A 329.

Going to Work—On Public Highway.—While a storeman was on his way from his hotel to a labor train, he passed by a mule team on the highway, belonging to the quartermaster's department, and one of the mules kicked him, breaking his left wrist. It was held that the injury was not sustained in the course of the claimant's employment. In re Gilkey, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 288.

The claimant was injured while on a public road or path leading to the place of his employment. He stepped on a rock which turned under his foot, throwing him to the ground whereby he was injured. It was held that the accident did not occur in the course of the claimant's employment. In re Cassidy, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 289.

VIII. Interruption of Employment.

1. IN GENERAL.

"From an examination of cases in which it has been held that an employee injured on the premises of his employer during the noon hour or other temporary suspension of work was not under the act, we think it manifest that the controlling reason for denying an award in those cases rests upon the proven facts that the employee broke the so called nexus between work and employer by some manifestly reckless and unreasonable hazard, amounting to intentional and wilful misconduct, or by disregarding, or disobeying, some warning or danger at the place of injury, or prohibition relating to the thing being done, either addressed to the workman or promulgated as a general rule of conduct while on the premises." Haller v. Lansing (Mich.) 102 N. W. 335, L.R.A.1917E 324.

2. SEAMAN RETURNING TO SHIP.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the accident to a seaman returning to his ship, while arising in the course of, did not arise out of, the employment:

Fall from Gangway—Intoxication.—A sailor, returning to his ship at night after leave in an intoxicated condition, was seen to proceed up the gangway, holding on to the ropes on either side until he reached a point about two-thirds the way up. He then stopped suddenly, let go with his left hand on the side of the gangway towards the ship, and instantly swung around, overbalanced and fell over on the quay, sustaining injuries of which he died the next day. The gangway was a solid step gangway, with stanchions, and two ropes passed on each side through the stanchions. It was well fixed, steady and well lighted. The county court judge held that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment and was due to two concurrent causes—first, that the seaman was subjected to a special risk by reason of his employment; and secondly, that he was so much under the influence of drink that the peril was to him greatly increased and beyond his power to cope with. On appeal, it was held that while the accident occurred in the ambit of the man's employment, as he was returning to the ship and to his duty, it did not arise out of the employment, but out of his intoxicated condition, and an award was denied. Nash v. Steamship Rangatira [1914] 3 K. B. (Eng.) 978, 111 L. T. N. S. 704, [1914] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 490, 83 L. J. K. B. 1496, 58 Sol. J. 705, following Frith v. Louisianian [1912] 2 K. B. 155, [1912] W. C. Rep. 285.

Engineer Returning to Tug Moored in Unusual Berth.—After a tug had been moored in a temporary location, chosen for protection against stormy weather and not its customary berth, the engineer went ashore for purposes of his own, unconnected with his employment and spent the night ashore. On going ashore it was necessary to cross two steamers before reaching the wharf. During the night the tug was shifted back to its usual berth. The next morning the engineer returning to the tug crossed the steamers safely and discovered that his vessel was not there. In seeking to return to the wharf and thence to his vessel, he fell into the bay between the two steamers and was drowned. It was held that the engineer in his progress toward his vessel had not reached a point where it could be said that his death was due to an accident in "performing service growing out of and incidental to his employment." Ocean Acc. etc. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 173 Cal. 313, 159 Pac. 1041, L.R.A.1917B 336.

3. OTHER CASES.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the accident arose out of the employment, and that therefore a recovery could be had:

Cat Bite—Teamster.—A teamster took his horses to the stable for their midday meal, and then proceeded to eat his own dinner in the stable. While he was eating his dinner a cat sprang at him and bit him. He was not teasing the cat in any way, nor was he feeding it on that occasion, although he had thrown bits to the cat on other occasions. The cat was not known to be vicious. The bite set up blood poisoning and two joints of the applicant's finger had to be amputated. It was held that the decision of the county court judge that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment was correct. Rowland v. Wright [1909] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 963, 99 L. T. N. S. 758, 77 L. J. K. B. 1071, 24 Times L. Rep. 852, 1 B. W. C. C. 102.

Employee Eating Lunch in Factory.—An employee of a manufacturing concern was seated on a large piece of rubber in a room of the factory at the noon hour eating his lunch, in accordance with a custom known by and tacitly consented to by his employer, when a large pile of crude rubber near him unexpectedly fell on him, breaking his leg. It was held that at the time of the accident he was performing service "growing out of and incidental to his employment." Racine Rubber Co. v. Industrial Commission, 165 Wis. 600, 162 N. W. 664.

Going for Meal.—A common laborer left his work of piling and loading wood at about noon, and started for dinner at his boarding place, about half a mile distant and a few hundred feet westerly of his employer's lands. His path lay along the private roadway of the company and then along a switch track of the company; and while crossing over an intervening switch he was struck by a switching engine and killed. During the time of his employment, he had continuously followed this route in going between his work and his boarding house. There was no rule of the company forbidding the men to walk along the railroad tracks. It was held that the injuries were accidental and that they arose out of and in the course of the employment. Bylow v. St. Regis Paper Co. 179 App. Div. 555, 166 N. Y. S. 874.

While the claimant was walking hurriedly down the path to dinner, he stumbled and fell on a crosstie. The fall aggravated a previous rupture and produced a double hernia. It was held that the evidence was sufficient to justify the conclusion that the claimant was on his way from his work to his dinner and that he was pursuing the course usually and necessarily followed by him in connection with his employment. Hence it was held that the injury was received in the course of the employment. In re Joseph, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 294.

Riding from Work to Dinner—Jumping from Car.—A workman was on a labor train riding from his place of employment to his dinner when one car of the train was derailed and he jumped, falling under the cars and being killed. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. In re Lyte, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 397.

Returning from Dinner—Going over Pile of Stone in Usual Path.—A cableway engineer, on going to his work after the noon meal, found that the usual path had been blocked by a tower. In going around this tower he had to go over a pile of crushed stone. While on this stone, he began to slide and slid into a moving engine which was passing by, and was injured. In view of the fact that the claimant was injured while following the usual pathway on his return to work from dinner, and was on the premises of his employer at the time of the accident, it was held that he was injured in the course of his employment. In re Atkins, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 295.

Eating Lunch in Toolhouse—Explosion of Gasoline Vapor.—A workman was employed as a common laborer by the day at outside work. It was customary for the men employed at grading and shoveling to eat their dinners wherever they were, at such spot as they found most convenient and comfortable. The day of the accident was cloudy, raw and windy, and the men were working on an elevation. A short distance away was a toolhouse belonging to the employer, to which they repaired that day to eat their lunch, violating no rules and disobeying no orders in doing so. There was a banked up fire in a stove in the toolhouse, and a small amount of gasoline in a can under a bench. The workman struck a match to light his pipe and an explosion ensued causing a fire which destroyed the building and he received burns which caused his death a few days later. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. Haller v.

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—52.

Lansing (Mich.) 162 N. W. 335, L.R.A.1917E 324.

Alighting to Get Drink.—The claimant belonged to the crew engaged on a dirt unloader. As the unloader was passing through the yard office on the way to a water truck about a hundred yards beyond, to take water for the engine, he attempted to alight for the purpose of getting a drink of water at the yard office. The unloader was moving at the rate of about four or five miles an hour at the time; and as he stepped down his foot caught in some way, causing him to fall against a switch stand and injure himself. It was held that the accident occurred while the claimant was still in the course of his employment and that he was not guilty of misconduct or negligence. In re Guiseppe, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 467.

Captain of Vessel Being Towed—Falling Overboard.—The captain of a schooner which was being towed and was not using its sails, was drowned by falling from the ship at a time when his service was not required. He slept on board the vessel according to the terms of his employment. It was held that he was the victim of an accident in the course of his work. Dallaire v. Quebec Salvage Co. 49 Quebec Super. Ct. 501.

Deck Hand on Barge—No Duties on Trip.—A deck hand whose duties consisted in helping to load and unload a barge, but who had no duties to perform during the voyage, fell from it while it was being towed and was drowned. It was held that the accident occurred in the course of and arose out of his employment. W. R. Rideout Co. v. Pillsbury, 173 Cal. 132, 159 Pac. 435.

Survey Man Returning to Boat Wherein He Lived.—A workman was employed as a survey man in a party engaged in survey work along the Mississippi river. In the performance of the work it was necessary for the entire party to occupy boats furnished by the government for living quarters, taking their meals and sleeping therein. After supper one evening the workman left the boat and proceeded to a nearby town for the purpose of cashing his pay check and making some purchases. In returning to the boat, he passed across the bow of an intermediate barge, and in attempting to pass around a person on the gangplank who had stopped, he lost his balance, fell overboard, and was drowned. It was held that the accident occurred in the course of his employment. In re Hott, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 302.

One of Several Bunk House Men Getting Water for Others.—The claimant, a laborer in the reclamation service, was furnished as an incident of his employment, a bunk house for lodging purposes which was located at the site of the employment. Each of the several men living at the bunk house took a turn at supplying the wash water for all. At about six o'clock one morning the claimant was in the act of taking his turn at supplying the water, and while so doing he slipped on the ice and was injured. It was held that he was injured in the course of his employment. In re Joos, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 303.

Walking Backward from Looking Out of Window.—During the noon hour the claimant was looking out of the window. She walked backward from the window and tripped over an electric wire attachment to a sewing machine and fell to the floor. It was held that the accident arose in the course of her employment. In re Hawes, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 285.

Leaving Work to Answer Supposed Telephone Call.—A workman's daily period of service was from six o'clock in the morning until six o'clock in the evening continuously, without the allowance of time for his noon lunch, for seven days in each week. His regular task was operating a centrifugal machine, but on the day of the accident he was ordered by the foreman to go to the third floor and wipe the belt on the beet slicer. While working there, the employer's chemist called to him from the second floor and informed him that he was wanted on the telephone. It appeared later that the call was for another employee. In response to the call the workman started to walk down the stairway, and after taking the first step slipped on some pieces of beet and fell to the floor below. It was held that the accident which resulted in his injuries was an "accident arising out of and in the course of his employment." Holland-St. Louis Sugar Co. v. Shraluka (Ind.) 116 N. E. 330.

Employee on Way to Office.—The claimant was on his way from the cut where he was at work to the field office for the purpose of securing a commissary book, which was part of the consideration for his services, and his route lay between two railroad tracks. On reaching a point where it became necessary for him to cross one of the tracks, which lay between him and the office, cinders were blown into his eyes from a train which was standing on the other track, momentarily blinding him. At this moment, a train going in the opposite direction at about ten miles an hour came along. The engineer blew the whistle, which was heard by the claimant, but before he could recover his composure he was struck by the engine and injured. It was held that the accident occurred in the course of the employment. In re Papius, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 314.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the accident did not arise out of the employment, and that therefore a recovery could not be had:

Eating Dinner in Cellar—Explosion of Boiler.—A workman was employed by a general contractor who had a contract for some construction work to be done on the main and second floors of a garage. He and three other men at the noon hour went down to the boiler room in the cellar to eat their dinner. Just before the men were ready to go upstairs to continue their work for the afternoon, the boiler exploded and the workman thereby received burns from which he died the same day. It was held that this accident was not one "arising out of and in the course of his employment." Manor v. Pennington, 167 N. Y. S. 424.

Railway Laborer—Passing between Cars.—A railway laborer after reporting for work, with the foreman and other workmen, had to wait in a station for a time. The men had food with them, but in order to get hot water to prepare their breakfast, they crossed from the station over the tracks to a mess room maintained by the railway company. At the mess room the man in charge was in the habit of supplying hot water to any servant of the company who applied for it. On one of the lines, the men found a goods train which they supposed to be "dead," as, owing to the convexity of the line, the engine was not visible to them. They proceeded to pass under the couplings of the cars, and one of them was in the act of so doing when the train moved on, and he was caught between the tracks and was killed on the spot. The men could have gone around to the mess room from the platform on which they were, by a bridge over the line or by making use of a subway under the line, but these routes were slightly longer. It was held first, that the workman, while going to make preparations for his breakfast, was engaged in his own business and not his master's, and secondly, that by going between the cars as he did, he ran an additional and quite unnecessary risk, and that for this reason the accident did not arise out of the employment. Lancashire, etc. R. Co. v. Highley [1917] A. C. (Eng.) 352, 116 L. T. N. S. 767, [1917] W. N. 119, 33 Times L. Rep. 286, 61 Sol. J. 397, affirming [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 244, 115 L. T. N. S. 494, 85 L. J. K. B. 1513, 9 B. W. C. C. 496.

Deviating from Usual Route in Returning to Quarters.—A foreman in the reclamation service performing excavating work, had his living quarters furnished by the government in the immediate vicinity of the work. While off duty he had left his quarters to go to a store near by to make some necessary purchases. On his return to his quarters, his attention was attracted to an electric wood saw which was in operation just off the main road of travel, and he, with several other men, stopped to watch the operations. While so doing, a stick of wood was thrown by the saw, striking him in the face and inflicting injuries resulting in his death. It was held that his death did not arise in the course of the employment. In re Gilson, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 326.

Returning to Work.—Bitten by Mad Dog.—The claimant was bitten on the right leg below the knee by a mad dog while returning to work from dinner. It was held that he was not injured in the course of his employment. In re Green, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 288.

Conductor—Reporting for Duty after Temporary Relief.—A conductor employed by a street surface railroad, a corporation engaged in a hazardous employment, was relieved and had no further duties to perform for about two hours. In returning to his duties and his employer's station, and while crossing the public highway twelve minutes before it was time for him to report for duty, he was struck by another car of the employer and killed. It was held that he was performing no service in the operation of his employer's railroad, and hence that the injury did not arise out of and in the course of the employment. McCabe v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 177 App. Div. 107, 162 N. Y. S. 741.

On Way to Work at Noon—Returning Baseball.—As the claimant was on his way to work at the noon hour, on his employer's premises, following the path, and as he crossed a street, a baseball rolled in front of him from an adjoining baseball field. As he picked it up to return it to the game, he was struck by an automobile. It was held that the claimant was not injured in the course of his employment. In re Schlechter, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 331.

Running to Ring Time Clock at Noon.—The claimant had been playing ball during the noon hour, and while running to check up at the time clock, fell and struck his knee on the ground. It was held that the injury had not been received in the course of his employment. In re Kramer, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 322.

Returning to Boat.—A dredge hand on river and harbor work was furnished with living quarters, but not with meals, on the boat. He left the boat one evening to go to a neighboring town as a matter of personal recreation after the completion of the day's work, and in returning to the boat fell into the water and was drowned. It was held that he did not meet his death in the course of his employment. In re Jackson, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 320.

Watchman on Engine—Taking Charge of Steam Shovel.—A night watchman having charge of a locomotive used by contractors, and whose duty it was to stay on the engine nights, was killed while on a steam shovel which he had taken temporary charge of at the request of the watchman employed to stay on it. It was held that the injury did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. The court said that the case presented was precisely as though he had, at the close of his night's labor, repaired to his home, and, while awaiting a return of the time to assume his duties, he had been murdered. Sherer v. Industrial Acc. Commission (Cal.) 166 Pac. 318

IX. End of Employment.

1. IN GENERAL.

An accident to a workman may arise out of and in the course of his employment, within the meaning of the act, though he is not actually working at the time of the accident, as when his work for the day is finished, and he is on his way home at the time of the accident. Stacy's Case, 225 Mass. 174, 114 N. E. 206.

An employee, in quitting work for the day, is entitled to a reasonable opportunity to leave the employer's plant and place himself on a public highway, and if he is injured before reaching the public highway, provided he uses reasonable speed in leaving the plant, he is within the purview of the compensation law. In re Pope, 177 App. Div. 69, 163 N. Y. S. 655; Bylow v. St. Regis Paper Co. 166 N. Y. S. 874; De Constantin v. Public Service Commission, 75 W. Va. 32, 83 S. E. 88, L.R.A. 1916A 329

2. EMPLOYMENT NOT TERMINATED.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the employment had not ceased, and that the applicant was therefore entitled to recover:

Workman Going for Pay.—An employee was engaged by an agent in Chicago and was sent to work in a logging camp near Phelps, Wis. When he arrived at Phelps, the book-keeper sent him to the camp by its logging train and told him to come to Phelps to get his pay. Later the employee told the foreman of the camp that he was going to take a vacation, and the foreman told him to go to Phelps for his money and gave him a slip for that purpose. While riding on the logging train on his way to Phelps he was injured. Employees usually went from the camp at which they were working, transportation free, to Phelps on the logging train and railway owned by the employer, and operated by it in the prosecution of its business. It was held that at the time of his injury, the employee was in the employment of his employer and was performing service incidental to and growing out of the employment, and that the employment had not terminated on the receipt of the time slip. Hackley-Phelps-Bonnell Co. v. Industrial Commission, 165 Wis. 586, 162 N. W. 921.

Going Home—Injured on Employer's Premises.—The applicant was employed as a rolleyway man at a colliery. His shift finished work at 5.30 A.M., at which time it was quite dark and the ground was covered with ice, owing to frost. In going home, he slipped and fell on the first of two railway sidings which he had to cross in order to reach the street on which his house was, and was injured. The place where he fell was part of the colliery premises. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. Wales v. Lambton, etc. Collieries [1917] W. N. (Eng.) 250, 33 Times L. Rep. 504, 61 Sol. J. 611.

Miner—Injured while Still in Mine.—At the end of the day's work, the plaintiff changed his mining clothes for street clothes in one of the rooms in the coal mine and then started to walk along the entry in the mine leading towards the shaft for the purpose of ascending to the top of the mine. He wore his miner's lamp in order to find his way to the bottom of the shaft. While he was walking along one of the straits of the mine leading to the shaft, he struck his face against a piece of slate which was hanging from the roof of the mine, and was injured. It was held that his injury arose out of and in the course of his employment. Sedlock v. Carr Coal Min. etc. Co. 98 Kan. 680, 159 Pac. 9, L.R.A.1917B 372.

Fall on Employer's Premises after Day's Work.—A workman, while on his way home after completing his day's work, and while still on the employer's premises, slipped on the sidewalk and fractured his hip. It was held that the injury was received in the course of his employment. In re Bernard, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 323, following In re Fahey, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 283.

Leaving Work by Outside Stairway—Fall over Railing.—While an employee was going down a stairway on the outside of the building on his way home, he momentarily took his hand off the railing. Other employees were rushing down the stairs. When he reached for the railing again near the bottom, he lost his balance and fell over the railing to the ground. It was held that he "received a personal injury which arose out of and in the course of his employment." O'Brien's Case. 228 Mass. 380, 117 N. E. 619.

Subicay Workman—Struck by Train.—A foreman employed by a contracting company on work being done in a subway was struck by a train and killed a few minutes after the close of his day's work. The question was whether the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. An award of the state industrial commission was affirmed. Di Paolo v. Thomas Crimmins Contracting Co. 219 N. Y. 580, 114 N. E. 1065, affirming 173 App. Div. 988, 158 N. Y. S. 1113.

Leaving Work for Unknown Reason.—A laborer on river work for some unknown reason left the barge on which he was working, got into a skiff used around the work for various purposes, and started across the river to the opposite shore. The skiff was caught by the wind and current and carried over a nearby dam, and the employee was drowned. It was held that it might be assumed that he was engaged in some duty, either directly or indirectly connected with his employment, in the absence of anything in the record to support an opposite hypothesis, and hence that the accident occurred in the course of his employment. In re Webb, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 336.

"Ringing Out" at Close of Day's Work.—In the carpenter shop where the claimant was employed, a time clock was used for recording the time of the employees. While the claimant was in the act of "ringing out" just at the close of the day's work, he was pushed by some person behind him, and in trying to keep from falling, he slipped and tore the ligaments of his left leg. It was held that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. In re Rugan, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 285.

Detained Beyond Quitting Hour—Injured by Blast.—The claimant had ceased his work for the day, had left the premises proper of the employer and was on the public highway on his way home when he was struck by a rock thrown by a blast which had just been set off. This highway was the only available route from the place where he was at work to his home and was used only for business connected with the work. On account of the known danger to the employees from the blasting, the same was not done until after the usual hour of quitting work, but the claimant had been detained by his work beyond the quitting hour. It was held that the accident arose in the course of his employment. In re Leonard, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 312.

Living on Boat—Unexplained Death.—A workman was employed on river and harbor improvement work, and by reason of the exigencies of the employment, it was necessary that he have his living quarters in one of the boats attached to the project. About 5:30 o'clock one morning, he came out of his quarters in the boat and in some unknown way fell overboard, and was drowned. It was held that he met his death in the course of his employment. In re Jenkins, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 334.

Carpenter Leaving Quay—Place of Accident Property of Another.—A carpenter was employed by certain engineers and ship repairers to do work on a barge which they had contracted to repair. The dock at which the barge lay was private property under the control of the Port of London authorities, but the employers and their workmen had permission to pass through the docks on the way to and from the barge on which they were at work. The deceased left the barge one night, missed his way in the darkness while passing along the quay, fell into the lock and was drowned. It was held that his employment continued until he had passed out of the dock gates and reached the public road and that therefore the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. Stewart v. Longhurst [1917] A. C. (Eng.) 249, 116 L. T. N. S. 763, 86 L. J. K. B. 729, 33 Times L. Rep. 285, [1917] W. N. 120, 61 Sol. J. 414, affirming [1916] 2 K. B. 803, 115 L. T. N. S. 399, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 292, 85 L. J. K. B. 1328, 32 Times L. Rep. 722, 61 Sol. J. 9, 9 B. W. C. C. 605.

Janitor—Putting Out Fire after Employment Had Ended.—A janitor was employed to operate the elevator, fire the boilers and keep the hall and stairways in a building swept clean. One evening an hour after his hours of employment for the day had ended, a fire occurred in the basement of the building. He had not left the premises and in attempting to extinguish the fire was overcome by the fumes and smoke. Early the next morning he died from the effects of having inhaled poisonous gases in the boiler room. It appeared that he was in the habit of removing bags of film scraps set outside the door of a film company's rooms, for which service he was paid 50 cents per week by the film company. It did not appear from the recital of facts that his presence an hour after his day had ended under the terms of his employment was caused by his employment by the film company to remove its scraps. Hence it was held that the mere fact that at the time of the accident his day's service according to the terms of his employment had ended, was not sufficient to authorize the reversal of a finding that the accident arose out of and was received in the course of his employment. Munn v. Industrial Board, 274 Ill. 70, 113 N. E. 110.

Returning on Last Trip of Day.—A workman was employed to load from the platform of a warehouse onto an automobile truck, goods that were stored in the warehouse, and to go with the truck and unload the furniture, etc., at the homes of customers. His work for the day had terminated and while returning from having made his last delivery of goods, the truck, which had become stalled on the street car tracks, was struck by a car, and the applicant badly injured as a result. It was held that the injury occurred within the line of his employment. Friebel v. Chicago City R. Co. 280 Ill. 76, 117 N. E. 467.

Raftman Returning to Camp.—A raftsmen returning to camp after his day's work, on a dark and rainy night, came to a river thirty-five feet wide, where the bridge had been carried away during the day by the water. At the same time, searchers sent out from the camp to find him, having seen him, threw across the river a tree to form a bridge.

The raftsmen tried to cross thereon, but the tree broke and he was carried away by the current and drowned. It was held that there was no inexcusable fault on the part of the raftsmen, and that, though the accident happened after the day's work, yet it was at his place of work, during the course of and by reason of his employment, since he was returning to the camp from necessity, there to take his meals and rest under the supervision of his employer. Baie St. Paul Lumber Co. v. Tremblay, 25 Quebec K. B. 1, affirming 46 Quebec Super. Ct. 203.

Laborer on Bridge—Train Running Wild.—In going from his work to the place where he took his dinner, the claimant crossed a bridge to board a train which generally stopped at the other side and did not usually cross the bridge at all to take its passengers. This time apparently the train was running wild since it was coming towards him at a speed of about forty miles an hour, and the claimant, not having time to get off the bridge before the train would pass, lay down on the bridge between the rails, the train, in passing, crushing the big toe of his left foot. It was held that the injury arose out of and in the course of his employment, and was not due to negligence on his part. In re Crooks, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 449.

Going Home—Riding on Engine.—While the claimant, who was employed in the canal zone, was going home from work riding on an engine, the engine struck a depression in the track and left the rails, the claimant being injured in the accident. There was no rule forbidding riding on the engine by an employee going home from work. It was held that the injury arose out of and in the course of the employment and was not due to negligence or misconduct of the claimant. In re Gerow, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 282.

Going Home—Passing from One Car to Another.—A workman was on a labor train going to his work when he attempted to pass from one car to another. The train was in motion and a jar or lurch caused him to fall between the cars. The trucks passed over his body, killing him instantly. It was held that the accident occurred in the course of the employment. In re Lopez, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 282.

Going Home Across Ice Pond.—A workman employed in cutting ice from a pond on his employer's premises, went home from work across the pond, which was shown to be the "reasonable and customary way," instead of going by a circuitous path around the pond. He broke through the ice and was drowned. It was held that the injury arose out of and in the course of his employment. Stacy's Case, 225 Mass. 174, 114 N. E. 206.

Going Home in Automobile Hired by Employer.—Certain building contractors agreed with a carpenter and five other employees, to pay them, in addition to their regular wages, their transportation charges to their place of employment, fixed at 90 cents each day. They arranged with one of the workmen to carry the employees to and from the place of employment in his own automobile, operated and maintained by him, and the 90 cents for each man was paid by the contractors to him. While returning from their work to their homes one afternoon, the automobile collided with a train, and the owner and the other five men in it were killed. It was held that the injury arose out of the employment. Swanson v. Latham, 92 Conn. 87, 101 Atl. 492; Osterhout v. Latham, 92 Conn. 91, 101 Atl. 494.

Going Home—Railroad Track Only Route.

—The claimant, who was employed as a night watchman by the Isthmian canal commission, was struck by an ice train on the main line of the railroad while going home from work. The evidence showed that the claimant was walking on the railroad track as being the only available route for him to travel in order to reach the public highway at the place where he could get on it by crossing the ditch between the railroad and the highway. It was held that he had received the injury in the course of his employment, and had not been guilty of negligence or misconduct within the meaning of the act. In re Forde, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 309.

Going Home—Forced Off Engine by Conductor.—The claimant was engaged in his usual employment on the day of the injury about a half mile distant from the shop and about a mile distant from the place where he lived. On the blowing of the whistle at 5 P.M. as the signal for stopping work, he and two other men boarded the step on the front end of a light engine, which was going to the shop. Such riding on "light engines" was a matter of frequent occurrence, some conductors permitting it and some not. In the present case, the conductor threw coal at the men on the front of the engine; the claimant's hat fell off; the conductor went forward over the engine, and while it was in rapid motion kicked or forced the claimant off. It was held that the accident arose in the course of the employment, and was not due to the claimant's negligence, though he was undoubtedly guilty of misconduct in boarding the engine contrary to orders. In re Clarke, Op. Sol. Dept. of Labor 468.

3. EMPLOYMENT TERMINATED.

In each of the following cases, on the facts as set forth, it was held that the employment had ceased, and that the applicant was therefore not entitled to recover:

Mate Taken Out of Employment by Captain's Order.—A mate of a ship was ordered by his captain to go to his room for being drunk, but instead of going to his room, he went in another direction to speak to some one on a personal matter, and fell down a hatchway, dying from the effects of the fall. It was held that the deceased had been taken out of his employment by the order of the captain and that the accident did not arise "out of" the employment. Horsfall v. Steamship Jura [1913] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 183, 6 B. W. C. C. 213.

Going Home by Boat of Another.—A workman, at the end of his day's work, got into a boat belonging to another than his employer, to cross the canal, and was drowned. It was held that the accident did not arise out of the employment. Menard v. Quinlan, 47 Quebec Super. Ct. 115.

Engineman Going to Collect Pay.—A yard engineman, having completed his work, turned in his engine and also his slip showing that his run had been completed. There were a number of streets by which he could have left the yard for the purpose of going home, but instead, he walked along the tracks for a distance and crossed over another street and onto the tracks on the other side and was there struck and killed by a passing freight train. His purpose in going on this second track was supposed to be in order to catch a passing freight train to ride to a certain place to collect his pay. It was held that the injuries which resulted in his death did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. Ames v. New York Cent. R. Co. 178 App. Div. 324, 165 N. Y. S. 84.

Walking Along Track to Bunk Car.—The claimant was one of a force of laborers engaged under a foreman in repairing and raising the railroad track. He was employed by the day, and when work stopped at quitting time in the evening, about 5:30, his wages stopped, he was through for the day, his employer had no demand nor duty on him, he owed it no duty, and was then master of his own time and movements until the following morning when he returned to work. He did not receive pay for time used in going to or returning from his place of employment, nor for transportation. He lived in a bunk car, which it was customary for his employer to furnish on a siding near the work for the laborers to use if they desired, free of charge. It was not compulsory for them to do so and some did not. On quitting one evening, the claimant "hung around" for about half an hour and then started toward the town, returning with a companion to his car for the night. They went along the railroad track instead of using the slightly longer highway nearly paralleling the track, and he was struck by a train going in the opposite direction and was injured. It was held that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. Guastecio

v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. (Mich.) 160 N. W. 484, L.R.A.1917D 69.

Running to Car to Proceed to Place for Watch Test.—After a motorman had finished his work for the day, and as he was hurrying to catch a car which was just coming to a stop before the car barn, he was struck by an automobile, receiving injuries from which he died later. It was understood when employees were hired that they should have free transportation on the cars of the company. It was a rule of the company (employer) that the men should have their watches tested once in every two weeks, under penalty of loss of one day, and it was for the purpose of taking a car to proceed to a place to have his watch tested that the motorman was hurrying. The employees were not paid for the time they consumed in the period of testing their watches, or of going to or from the place where the test was made. The person who made the test was designated and paid by the employer. It was held that the death did not result from "an accidental personal injury sustained by the employee arising out of and in the course of his employment." De Voe v. New York State Rys. 218 N. Y. 318, 113 N. E. 256, L.R.A.1917A 250, affirming order 169 App. Div. 472, 155 N. Y. S. 12.

Railway Section Hand Fighting Fire on Ranch—Leaving to Go Home.—The manager of a ranch applied for help to fight a fire on the ranch to the foreman of a railroad section gang, and the latter sent a number of the section hands, among them the applicant. He worked under the manager's direction from 6 P.M. until midnight, when the fire had been brought under control and the work ended. The men collected in a group preparing to walk to their homes and stopped for a brief period to partake of drinks furnished by the manager, he being at the time still on the ranch premises. During this stop the applicant walked backward a short distance and in so doing fell, breaking his leg. His fall was due to his stepping in a squirrel hole. It was held that the accident occurred after the applicant's work had ended, when he had left the precise place of his labors and was ready to go home, and though he was still on the premises did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. London, etc. Guarantee, etc. Acc. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 173 Cal. 642, 161 Pac. 2.

Miner Going Home.—A workman employed at a coal mine had finished his day's work, and was proceeding home along a private line of railway occupied by the colliery, when he was run over and killed at a point 230 yards distant from the place where he worked. It was held that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. Catón v. Summerlee, etc. Iron, etc. Co. So. Ct. Sess. 4 F. 989, 39 Scott. L. Rep. 762.

Going Home for Dinner.—A "trouble man" employed by an electric company was told to report after supper to take the place of the man whose turn it was to take care of the "troubles" but who was ill. At the regular quitting time, the workman took the automobile furnished him by the company for use in his work, to drive to his home for supper. On the way, the automobile was struck by a street car and he was injured. It was held that he was not in the course of his employment at the time of the accident. The court said: "We think it clearly appears that he had completed his regular work, and had not entered upon the extra work which he was to perform that night. The burden was upon defendant to prove that plaintiff was performing work for his master at the time the accident happened. There was no evidence that he was to receive pay for the time occupied in going to and returning from his supper. The statute leaves little room for doubt or argument on the question before us, for it provides that the phrase 'personal injuries arising out of and in the course of the employment' shall be held 'not to cover workmen except while engaged in, on or about the premises where their services are being performed or where their services require their presence as a part of such service at the time of the injury, and during the hours of service as such workmen' (Gen. St. Minn. 1913 sec. 8230, subd. '1')." Otto v. Duluth St. R. Co. (Minn.) 164 N. W. 1020.

Workman Leaving Colliery.—A boiler-maker's assistant employed in a colliery, left at the end of his day's work and proceeded to the station, seven hundred yards away in a direct line, to catch a train there. There were three ways of getting from the colliery to the station—first, along the railway line, which passed by the colliery; secondly, by a road running nearly parallel with the line, a slightly longer route; and thirdly, by the road from the colliery for about half the distance, and thence, getting on the railway line by some steps, along it to the station. The workman went by the third route, and was caught by a train on the line and was killed. The colliery employees generally used the railway line, special facilities having been given them by the railway company and they were given permission to use the line which was denied to the general public, but this permission was not given at the instance of the employers. It was held that the accident did not arise out of or in the course of the employment. Whittall v. Staveley Iron, etc. Co. [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. (Eng.) 202, 117 L. T. N. S. 130, [1917] W. N. 179, 61 Sol. J. 523.

CAIN

v.

GARNER ET AL.

Kentucky Court of Appeals—April 25, 1918.

169 Ky. 633; 185 S. W. 122.

Master and Servant — Contract of Employment — Enforcement of Negative Covenant.

Contracts for the services of artists of special merit are personal and peculiar, and, when they contain negative covenants which are essential parts of the agreement that the artist will not perform elsewhere, and the damages in case of violation are incapable of definite measurement, they are such contracts as ought to be specifically enforced, and a violation of the covenants will be restrained by injunction.

[See Ann. Cas. 1914B 2; Ann. Cas. 1917C 391.]

Divorce — Effect of Remarriage — Custody of Child.

Where the parents of an infant were divorced in 1905, and the mother was awarded the custody, the remarriage of the parents in 1906 annulled the judgment of divorce and restored the parents to their rights over the child as if they had never been divorced.

Parent and Child — Respective Rights of Parents.

Under the law of Iowa the rights of parents in relation to their children are equal.

Contract by Parent for Services of Child.

A contract whereby the father of an infant undertook to bind him to work for plaintiff as a stable boy and race rider for three years for a fixed compensation, to be paid to the father, signed by the father, the son, and the plaintiff, all the covenants of which purported to be the covenants of the infant, whether regarded as executed directly by him or by his father, is the contract of the infant.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

An infant is not bound by a contract made for him or in his name by another person purporting to act for him, unless such person has been duly appointed his guardian or next friend and authorized by the court to act and bind him; but the person so contracting is himself bound.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

A contract whereby a father undertook to bind his infant son to work for plaintiff as a stable boy and race rider for a term of three years for a fixed compensation to be paid to the father, which purported to be the act of the infant by his parents, and was signed by him and by his father and the plaintiff, covenanting that the infant would not leave the service of plaintiff and would faithfully serve him, but under which the plaintiff was under no obligation to teach the infant or to develop him as a jockey, is a contract for his personal services, and not an indenture of apprenticeship, under the laws of Iowa, where the contract was made.

[See note at end of this case.]

Infants — Right to Avoid Contract — Contract for Personal Services.

Except for necessities, an infant may, at his election, avoid any executory contract made by him during infancy, including his contract for the performance of labor or personal services.

Enforcement of Infant's Contract for Services.

Where an infant's executory contract with plaintiff for personal services as a jockey was unenforceable against him, an injunction restraining him from a breach of its covenants by working for or serving any person except the plaintiff is improperly granted.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Fayette county.

Action by W. M. Cain, plaintiff, against Mack Garner et al., defendants. From judgment rendered, defendants appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Allen & Duncan for appellants.

J. P. Johnston and George C. Webb for appellee.

[634] MILLER, C. J.—This action was brought by the plaintiff, W. M. Cain, to compel the defendant, Mack Garner, an infant sixteen years of age, to specifically perform a contract to render personal services as a jockey for the plaintiff, and for an injunction prohibiting him from working for any other person.

Mack Garner and his parents, T. F. and Sarah M. Garner, are and were at the time the contract was made, residents of Centerville, Appanoose county, Iowa. On November 8th, 1905, T. F. and Sarah M. Garner were divorced from the bonds of matrimony by a judgment of the district court of Appanoose county, Iowa, and the custody of their infant children, including the defendant, Mack Garner, was awarded to the mother.

T. F. and Sarah M. Garner, however, lived separate and apart for only about eight months, and were then remarried to each other. They have since continuously lived together as husband and wife.

While at Butte, Montana, on July 14th, 1914, T. F. Garner made a contract with the plaintiff, Cain, whereby T. F. Garner undertook to bind his infant son Mack Garner to work for Cain as a stable boy and race rider, for a term of three years, for a compensation of $25.00 per month for the first year, $35.00 per month for the second year, and $50.00 per month for the third year, to be paid to the father. The contract, which purported to be the act of Mack Garner, by his parents, was signed by Mack Garner, T. F. Garner his father, and W. M. Cain, and contained this clause:

[635] "The said minor agrees not to leave the said services of his employer during term of service, and to faithfully, honestly and industriously serve said employer; to keep all his secrets, and to readily obey all the lawful directions and instructions of the said employer, or the said employer's duly authorized representative or trainer."

The infant Mack Garner consented to this contract, signed it as a party thereto, and immediately entered plaintiff's service. He had had no experience, however, in riding horses; but he was a bright boy and learned to ride rapidly, under the instruction of Cain. The value of a race rider in addition to his ability to ride at light weight, consists largely in his skill and judgment, as evidenced by his ability to get his mount away from the post in the most advantageous position, to properly rate his horse throughout the entire race, to save all the ground possible, and to take advantage of every opportunity during the race of getting the position most favorable to winning it.

Cain instructed Mack upon all these points, and gave him every opportunity to profit therein by having him ride in races so as to become an experienced jockey. By reason of his small stature, Mack was able to ride at 85 pounds; had good judgment; and used his head; and, under the tuition of Cain, he rapidly developed into a jockey or extraordinary skill and success. The contract permitted Mack to ride horses for outside parties, and in this way he earned several hundred dollars per month, in addition to his salary. Cain and one other witness testified that the contract by which Cain was entitled to the services of Mack for the remaining two and a half years covered thereby, was worth from $15,000.00 to $20,000.00 to Cain.

Mack remained with Cain during the race meetings in Helena, Mont., Oklahoma, Dallas and Juarez, Mexico, the last named place having been reached about October 1st, 1914. They remained at El Paso, Texas participating in the races at Juarez, immediately across the river, until April 1st, 1915. During that meeting Mack improved rapidly, and at the close of the Juarez meeting on April 1st, he was considered by the racing profession as the best light weight Jockey in America.

Mr. and Mrs. Garner visited their son, Mack at El Paso; attended the races at Juarez; and witnessed many successes of their son as a rider. He frequently won from [636] two to four races in a day. Before leaving El Paso, Mrs. Garner expressed her approval of her son's business connection with Cain, saying that she hoped he and Mack would have a successful year, make lots of money, and that she would see them at the Lexington races in April.

While the parties were at El Paso, Cain learned that Mack had made, or was contemplating the making of, a contract to ride for the defendant Holland, and upon Cain's asking Mack and his father about it, Mack denied that he had made such a contract, or even contemplated doing so, saying that he intended to remain with Cain, who had befriended him by making him what he was as as a race rider.

At the close of the race meeting at Juarez, Mack left El Paso for Lexington, Ky., going, however by the way of Centerville, Iowa, to visit his parents who had preceded him. He was to join Cain in Lexington in time for the April races.

But, on March 1st, 1915, and while in Iowa, Mack Garner and Sarah M. Garner, his mother, entered into a contract with the defendant, James L. Holland, through his agents, Williams and Cassidy, by which Mack, who was then sixteen years of age, agreed to work for Holland as a stable boy and race rider for a term of three years, for a compensation of $200.00 per month, to be paid to the mother.

By a judgment of the district court of Appanoose county, Iowa, entered on April 19th, 1915, Sarah M. Garner was appointed guardian of Mack Garner's property, and the contract of March 1st, 1915, with Holland, was approved and ratified.

Shortly thereafter, Mack Garner appeared in Lexington, where he entered the service of Holland under the contract of March 1st, 1915, above referred to, and refused to carry out or even to recognize the contract with Cain.

On May 15th, 1915, Cain brought this action against Garner, alone, seeking to enforce his contract, and to enjoin Garner from riding for Holland. By an amended petition, Holland, and Williams and Cassidy, his agents, were made defendants; and, upon her petition, Sarah M. Garner, as guardian, was made a defendant, whereupon she filed her answer, counter-claim and cross-petition showing her appointment as guardian of her son Mack; the judgment of the Iowa court approving the contract [637] with Holland; and asked that the petition be dismissed.

Upon the trial the circuit court sustained plaintiff's motion for an injunction against the defendant Mack Garner, in part, by enjoining him from working for or serving any person except Cain. The defendants have applied to me as a judge of the Court of Appeals to dissolve the injunction.

Many interesting questions were presented upon the argument, all centering, however, around the validity and effect of plaintiff's contract of July 14th, 1914. If that contract is valid and binding upon the infant Mack Garner, the injunction was properly granted, since it is well settled that contracts for the services of artists of special merit are personal and peculiar; and when they contain negative covenants which are essential parts of the agreement, as in this case, that the artist will not perform elsewhere, and the damages, in case of violation, are incapable of definite measurement, they are such contracts as ought to be observed in good faith and specifically enforced in equity. That a violation of such covenants will be restrained by injunction, is thoroughly settled law, both in England and in America. Lumley v. Wagner, 1 De G. M. & G. (Eng.) 604; Montague v. Flockton, L. R. 16 Eq. Eng. 190; McCaull v. Braham, 16 Fed. 37, and Abbott's Note thereto; Philadelphia Ball Club v. Lajoie, 202 Pa. St. 210, 51 Atl. 973, 90 Am. St. Rep. 627 with Note, 58 L.R.A. 227; Pom. Eq. Jur. sec. 1343.

But the enforcement of plaintiff's contract depends upon its validity and binding force upon the infant Mack Garner. The validity of plaintiff's contract must be established before he can obtain any relief whatever. Recognizing that fact, the plaintiff contends that as T. F. Garner, the father, was liable for the support of his infant son, he is entitled to his services, and had the right to make the contract; that the divorce in 1905, followed by the re-marriage in 1906, did not affect his rights or liability with respect to his son; that Mrs. Garner ratified her husband's contract by her acts of approval at El Paso and Juarez, above referred to, and that she should not be permitted to defeat his contract by the subsequent contract made by her with Holland. On the other hand, it is insisted that when the Garner parents were divorced in 1905, and the custody of Mack was awarded to his mother, the father was thereby deprived of all his rights [638] to the control of Mack, and that the mother retained those rights, although she and her husband were subsequently re-married.

Furthermore, Sarah M. Garner relies upon her appointment as statutory guardian of the property of Mack Garner, and the subsequent approval of the Iowa district court, of that contract.

Plaintiff's counsel has displayed great industry in bringing to our attention the cases which support the proposition that the judgment of divorce granted to Mrs. Garner in 1905, with the custody of her son, Mack Garner, did not relieve his father from his liability to support his infant son, or deprive him of the correlative right to his son's services. But, in view of the re-marriage of the parents in 1906, it is wholly beside the question to discuss the divorce proceedings of 1905. The re-marriage annulled the judgment of divorce and restored the parents to all their rights over their children as if they had never been divorced.

Usually, it is provided by statute that a judgment of divorce may be annulled upon the joint application of the divorced parties. The same result, however, is obtained by a formal re-marriage of the parties. But, in either case, the result upon the status of the parties with respect to each other, or their relation to their children is the same; and, under the law of Iowa their rights are equal. Rowe v. Rugg, 117 Ia. 606, 91 N. W. 903, 94 Am. St. Rep. 318.

It has often been held that upon the death of a mother to whom a child has been awarded by a decree of divorce, the father becomes entitled to the custody of his child. Schammel v. Schammel, 105 Cal. 261, 38 Pac. 729; Bell v. Krauss, 169 Cal. 387, 146 Pac. 874; In re Neff, 20 Wash. 652, 58 Pac. 383; Clarke v. Lyon, 82 Neb. 625, 118 N. W. 474, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 171.

So, whenever the judgment of divorce is annulled the parents' rights with respect to their children are reinstated as if no divorce had been granted. That being true, whatever rights T. F. Garner had over his infant son in 1914, were not affected by the divorce of 1905, because it had been annulled by the re-marriage of 1906.

Moreover, since Cain can win only upon the strength of his contract, it is unnecessary to consider the effect of the Holland contract. The case is to be determined upon the major proposition as to what was the effect of the Cain contract upon the infant Mack Garner. If it was not [639] binding upon him, the injunction was erroneously granted, and should be dissolved.

Counsel for the plaintiff concede the general doctrine that the contract of an infant for the performance of labor or personal services, is voidable at his election, and that Cain's contract with Mack Garner is not enforceable against him if it should be treated as the contract of Mack Garner only, and not the contract of his father. The contract with Cain purports to be the covenant of Mack Garner, acting through his father. All the covenants are between Mack Garner and Cain; T. J. Garner undertakes nothing. He cannot breach his contract because he made none. He is not even made a defendant to this action. The injunction went against Mack Garner, not against his father. The contract must, therefore, be treated as the covenant of the infant Mack Garner, whether it be treated as executed directly by him, or by his father for him.

But in 22 Cyc. 584, it is said:

"An infant is not bound by a contract made for him or in his name by another person purporting to act for him unless such person has been duly appointed his guardian or next friend and authorized by the court to act and bind him; but the person so contracting is himself bound."

See also Slusher v. Weller, 151 Ky. 203, 151 S. W. 684.

It may be conceded that a parent is entitled to his child's services, and that the child owes obedience to the parent; but it will hardly be contended that a parent could come into a court of equity and successfully ask for an injunction to prevent his son from working for some one else. And, if a court would not grant such relief to a parent, it certainly would not grant it to a third person to whom the parent had attempted to transfer the right to the son's service.

The contract in question cannot be treated as an indenture of apprenticeship under the laws of Iowa. By its terms, Cain is under no obligation whatever to teach the boy, or to develop him as a jockey. It is a simple contract for the personal services of an infant, for a stipulated compensation to the father.

The case, therefore is reduced to the simple proposition of enforcing the executory contract of an infant. It is elementary law that, except for necessities, an infant may avoid any contract made by him during infancy. [640] 1 Bl. Com. 465; 22 Cyc. 580; Breckenridge v. Ormsby, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 236, 19 Am. Dec. 71; Watson v. Cross, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 147; Forsee v. Forsee, 144 Ky. 171, 137 S. W. 836.

And, as to his contract for personal services, 22 Cyc. 599, says:

"An infant may enter into a contract for the performance of labor or personal service, and although such contract is not binding upon him, but voidable at his election, it is not void, and cannot be avoided by the other party, but the infant may recover the wages due him under the contract."

See also Ray v. Haines, 52 Ill. 485, and Danville v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 62 N. H. 133; the first case holding that an infant may quit service before the expiration of his contract term, and the second, that a contract not to quit work without a specified notice is not binding upon an infant.

Cain's contract being unenforceable against the infant defendant, it follows that the injunction was improperly granted, and it is now dissolved.

Carroll, Thomas and Clarke, JJ., heard the argument, and concur in this opinion.

NOTE.

Contract by Parent for Services of Minor Child as Binding Latter.

Exclusive of decisions relating to contracts of apprenticeship, there seems to be but one case other than the reported case which deals with the question whether a parent may bind his minor child by a contract for the services of the latter. In the reported case it is held that while a parent is entitled to his child's services, the father of a minor son who contracts for the latter's services is not entitled to an injunction to prevent the son from working for some one else; and that a contract for an infant's services entered into between the minor and his father on one side and the employer on the other, is binding on the father, but is voidable as against the infant. In Barnes v. Barnes, 50 Conn. 572, it appeared that the father of an infant, when the latter was four months old, agreed with the plaintiff that the infant should serve the plaintiff faithfully during his minority, the plaintiff agreeing to provide for the infant during that time suitable food, clothing and schooling. When the infant reached the age of nineteen years he agreed with the plaintiff that the contract should not be binding, and that thereafter the infant was to be entitled to his earnings and the plaintiff was to receive three dollars per week for the infant's board. In an action by the plaintiff for the board, the infant contended that the agreement between the plaintiff and the father was a valid and subsisting contract. It was held that the subsequent agreement was a repudiation by the infant of the contract made between the father and the plaintiff and that the plaintiff could recover from the defendant for reasonable necessities. Touching the right of the infant to repudiate the contract made by his father the court said: "That a father has a right to dispose of the services of his minor son during minority is not disputed; but this right is not absolute. As his right to the services of his son is limited and qualified, it necessarily follows that he conveys only a qualified right. The more important qualification, and the only one we need now to refer to, is, that the father's right to the services of his son dies with the father. That event emancipates the son, and his obligation to perform the contract made for him by the father is at an end. In this case, the father being dead, the son was at liberty to repudiate the contract, certainly after arriving at years of discretion. The question is not whether the minor was legally capable of making a valid contract with the plaintiff, but it is rather whether that agreement amounted to a repudiation of the contract made with the father. We are clearly of the opinion that it did."

MISSISSIPPI RAILROAD COMMISSION

v.

MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

Mississippi Supreme Court—June 18, 1917.

115 Miss. 101; 75 So. 778.

Public Service Commissions — Remedy for Review — Injunction.

Injunction by railroad company objecting to reasonableness of railroad commission's orders, requiring erection of a new depot, is a proper remedy, since the commission in making such order was acting in its legislative or administrative capacity, and not in a judicial or quasi judicial capacity.

Presumption in Favor of Order.

In view of Code 1906, § 4836, providing that the railroad commission's findings shall be prima facie evidence that their determination was right and proper, one who attacks such order has the burden of proving its unreasonableness "by clear and satisfactory evidence."

Decree Disapproving Order — Review by Appellate Court.

A chancellor's decree, disapproving railroad commission's orders, requiring erection of railroad depot, will be conclusive on appeal, where there is evidence to support it, such decree being considered of the same force and effect as other chancery decrees, and the appellate court in such cases will not retry the case.

Railroads — Requiring Station at Particular Place — Reasonableness of Order.

In proceedings for injunction against enforcement of railroad commission's orders requiring erection of station, it is held that there was evidence to sustain chancellor's decree disapproving orders of the commission.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from Chancery Court, Hinds county: TAYLOR, Chancellor.

Action by Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company et al., plaintiffs, against Mississippi Railroad Commission, defendant. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Ross A. Collins for appellant.

Carl Fox for appellee

[111] SYKES, J.—The Mississippi Railroad Commission was petitioned by the Business Men's League of Corinth to require the Mobile & Ohio and Southern Railroad Companies to construct a new union passenger depot in the city of Corinth. These two railroads cross each other at almost right angles. The present union passenger station is now situated in the southeast angle, south of the Southern Railroad, and east of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad. The petitioners asked that the union passenger station be located in the northeast angle. The principal reason alleged for this change in location was in order to prevent passengers and other parties having business at the union station from crossing the tracks of the Southern Railway Company at Filmore street crossing, which is one of the principal streets of Corinth, and which is a dangerous crossing. The Southern Railroad at that time maintained nine tracks over this crossing. It was also alleged that the depot accommodations were insufficient. Already located at that time in the northeast angle—which, by the way, is an obtuse angle, as the two railroads do not exactly cross at right angles—was situated the freight depot of these two railroad companies, and also, as a necessary adjunct to the freight depot, a great many tracks for switching were therein situated. The business portion of the town of Corinth, and a great many residences therein, are also situated in this northeast angle. If the passenger depot were located in that angle, then it would obviate the necessity of crossing over the tracks of the Southern Railway Company at Filmore street crossing over the tracks of the Southern Railway Company at Filmore street crossing.

The members of the Railroad Commission personally examined the present union passenger station and the [112] freight depot and railroad tracks and all the four angles. They also took oral testimony on the question and passed an order requiring the railroad companies to construct a new union passenger depot in the northeast angle. The present passenger depot was built about ten years ago, and was the result of a citation originally issued by the Railroad Commission to these two companies, to know why it was not necessary for them to build a union passenger depot. After many continuances of that investigation, the Railroad Commission and the railroad companies, without any orders, tacitly agreed on the location of the present passenger depot. Some months after the railroad companies were ordered to build a new passenger station in the northeast angle, the one here in controversy, on subsequent petitions and an examination, these companies were further ordered to erect a new freight depot and alter certain switch tracks, also, in the northeast angle, and some across Filmore street. In other words, the orders of the Commission here involved are: First, an order requiring a new passenger depot in the northeast angle; and the subsequent orders requiring a new freight depot in the same angle, and switch-track alterations. These orders require the railroad companies to build a freight depot and switch tracks in this angle and also a passenger depot which would be in the switchyards of the company. A bill was filed by the railroad companies, enjoining the Commission from executing the order requiring the erection of the passenger depot. Subsequently to the filing of this bill, the subsequent orders requiring the erection of the freight depot and alteration of tracks were entered, and a bill of injunction was filed to enjoin the Commission from putting these orders into effect. Both these bills were filed in the chancery court of Hinds county, and by agreement the two suits were consolidated. In the trial in the chancery court, [113] the defendant companies admitted the reasonableness of the order as to the freight depot and track facilities, but contended that the order as to the passenger depot was unreasonable. The case was tried before the chancellor, and a vast amount of testimony was introduced before him. The question for determination was whether or not the order of the Commission requiring the erection of this passenger depot in the northeast angle was reasonable or unreasonable.

The question is raised, but not seriously argued, that injunction was not the proper procedure by these companies. However, the Commission was not acting in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity in ordering the building of these depots. It was acting in its legislative or administrative capacity in doing so, and its procedure was proper, as is borne out by the authorities, which we deem it unnecessary to cite.

The principal contention of the Railroad Commission in this court is that under section 4836, Code of 1906, which reads as follows:

"Findings in Writing; Proof of; Effect of. —All findings of the Commission and the determination of every matter by it shall be made in writing and placed upon its minutes, and proof thereof shall be made by a copy of the same duly certified by the secretary under the seal of the Commission; and whenever any matter has been determined by the Commission, in the course of any proceeding before it the fact of such determination, duly certified, shall be received in all courts and by every officer in civil cases as prima facie evidence that such determination was right and proper; and the record of the proceedings of the Commission shall be deemed a public record, and shall at all seasonable times be subject to the inspection of the public," the order of the Railroad Commission in this case was prima facie evidence that it was right and proper, and that the lower court should have sustained this finding [114] unless the testimony showed

"by clear and satisfactory evidence that the order of the Commission complained of is unlawful and unreasonable;" that if in this trial there were two reasonable theories, one that the order of the Commission was reasonable, the other that it was unreasonable, then it was the duty of the chancellor to uphold the order of the Commission. Minneapolis, etc. R. Co. v. Wisconsin R. Commission, 136 Wis. 146, 116 N. W. 905, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 821. The above statute makes the findings of the Railroad Commission prima facie evidence that they are right and proper. One who attacks an order of the Railroad Commission has the burden of proof resting upon him of establishing to the satisfaction of the lower court that the order of the Commission is not reasonable. This statute is perfectly plain and unambiguous. It was the duty of the lower court to give to findings of the Railroad Commission the benefit of this statute. Without reviewing all of the testimony introduced before the chancellor, it is sufficient to say that, from this testimony, he could have found, as in fact he did, that the greatest part of the danger at Filmore street crossing would be obviated by the removal of certain switch tracks ordered to be removed by the Railroad Commission.

It was contended, and testimony was introduced by the railroad companies, that there was not sufficient ground in the northeast angle at its disposal to maintain the union passenger and freight depots and all the necessary switch tracks in that angle; that it would be highly dangerous, inconvenient and improper to maintain a passenger depot in such close proximity to the freight yards; that the passenger depot was practically a new one, was adequate and sufficient and convenient to the public and to the railroad companies, and that it would be unreasonable and confiscatory to require these companies to build another passenger depot just across the track from the site of the present one; that [115] if the present one was inadequate it could be sufficiently enlarged to meet the views of the Commission and of the complaining parties. This testimony fully sustained the contention of the railroad companies. Practical railroad men, familiar with these matters, testified to this effect. Railroad civil engineers, some in the employ, and some not connected with the companies, testified that it would be impracticable to obey the orders of the Commission. On behalf of the Commission, the commissioners testified, giving their judgment that their orders were just and proper and reasonable, and that they believed these two depots and certain switch tracks could be maintained within this angle; that, in their judgment, it was not necessary to put all the tracks the railroads wanted in this angle; that certain tracks could be placed in other places by the railroad, where they would be just as useful and convenient to the railroad and to the public. A number of business men of the highest standing in the city of Corinth testified to facts sustaining the orders of the Commission. Only one expert engineer testified for the Commission. He had never been to Corinth, and only testified from certain maps and blueprints submitted to him on behalf of the Commission.

The chancellor, after hearing and considering the testimony, decided that the order to remove the passenger depot was unreasonable, and the injunction was made perpetual in that particular. He also decided that the present union station was inadequate, and ordered certain changes made in it and certain work done at the Filmore street crossing. The railroad company has not prosecuted on appeal from the latter part of this order; the Commission being the sole appellant. We are not therefore called upon to city the latter party of this decree.

It is earnestly insisted by the appellant in this case that this court, in reviewing the decision of the chancellor, [116] should not give it the same weight and consideration on its findings of fact that it does in ordinary cases, but that we should view this case just as if we were the lower court trying the case and give to the order of the Commission the weight it is entitled to under section 4836 of the Code. Numerous decisions are cited by counsel for the appellant as to what effect should be given the finding of the Commission. These decisions, however, relate only to the effect to be given to this finding by the lower court, or by the appellate court when the lower court has sustained these findings of the Commission. In the case at bar, however, the chancellor decided that the order of the Commission was unreasonable. To this decree we give the same force and effect that we do to all other decrees of the lower court. In other words, if the chancellor could have so found under the testimony, then we will not disturb his findings here. The case now under review comes to us with the finding of fact of the chancellor that the order of the Commission relating to the passenger depot is unreasonable. The decree specifically so states. There was testimony under which the chancellor could have so found. We cannot try the case in this court, as it was tried in the lower court. We give to this decree the same force and effect that we give to the decrees of all the chancery courts. The chancellor also held the orders of the Commission relative to the building of a new freight depot and the alteration of the switch tracks to be reasonable, and dissolved the temporary injunction and dismissed the bill in that case. No appeal was prosecuted from this decree of dismissal.

We, therefore, decline to disturb the findings of fact of the chancellor, and the decree is affirmed.

Affirmed.

NOTE.

The reported case sustains a decree setting aside as unreasonable an order of a railroad commission requiring the erection of a passenger depot and prescribing its precise location, the purpose being so to locate it as to permit of approach by the greater part of the persons using the station without crossing the tracks. The validity of an order by a railroad commission requiring a railroad to erect a depot at a specified place is discussed in the note to Vicksburg, etc. R. Co. v. Louisiana R. Commission, Ann. Cas. 1914C 1168.

IN RE HAHN.

New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals—
January 28, 1916.

85 N. J. Eq. 510; 96 Atl. 589.

Attorneys — Disbarment — Right of Appeal.

One deprived by order of the court of chancery of his office of solicitor and of the right of exercising to the full extent, the office of counselor is aggrieved thereby within 1 Comp. St. 1910, p. 450, § 111, authorizing persons aggrieved by any order of the court of chancery to appeal from the same.

[See note at end of this case.]

Jurisdiction to Disbar — Court of Chancery.

Under 2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 2278, fixing a fee for the governor for a license to an attorney and solicitor, to appear and practice in all courts, and page 2281, providing for fees for the judges of the supreme court for license to an attorney and solicitor, and page 4054, § 5, providing that any counselor, solicitor, or attorney who shall be guilty of malpractice in any of the courts shall be put out of the roll and not thereafter permitted to practice, unless he shall obtain a new license and be again enrolled in due form of law, which is section 5 of the Practice Act of 1903 regulating "the practice of courts of law," and the constitution, protecting the jurisdiction of the court of chancery as existing at the time of the adoption of the constitution, the court of chancery has no jurisdiction to make an order adjudging a solicitor guilty of malpractice and debarring him from practice as solicitor and counselor in the court of chancery.

Same.

An order of the court of chancery debar-ring a solicitor in chancery from practicing as solicitor and counselor in the court of chancery cannot be sustained under the practice act, requiring the solicitor to act under the direction of the court, which refers only to causes in which the solicitor is acting, and not to his own disqualification for practicing.

Same.

An order of the court of chancery disbar-ring a solicitor in chancery from practicing as solicitor and counselor in the court of chancery, entered in proceedings not purporting to be proceedings to punish for contempt, is not sustainable as a punishment for contempt.

Appeal and Error — Motion to Dismiss — Merits Not Considered.

Whether an order of the court of chancery, disbarring a solicitor in chancery from practicing as solicitor and counselor in the court of chancery, is sustainable as an order suspending him from practicing in the court of chancery until the supreme court has acted under the statute, will not be considered on a motion to dismiss an appeal from the order, but the question can be dealt with only on the appeal itself in determining whether the order shall be affirmed, reversed, or modified.

Appeal from Chancery Court.

Disbarment proceedings against Simon Hahn, solicitor of Court of Chancery. Decree of disbarment ordered. Defendant appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion. MOTION DENIED.

Nelson B. Gaskill for motion.

Robert H. McCarter and George W. O. McCarter opposed.

[512] SWAYZE, J.—The proceedings are not in the nature of proceedings for contempt of court nor mere disciplinary proceedings. The distinction between proceedings to punish for contempt and proceedings to disbar is sufficiently shown by the decision of the United States supreme court in Ex p. Bradley, 7 Wall. 364, 19 U. S. (L. ed.) 214, and Ex p. Robinson, 19 Wall. 505, 22 U. S. (L. ed.) 205. We have no doubt that the chancellor has the same power to proceed against an attorney for contempt as against any other person, and that he has the additional power to suspend a solicitor or counselor from appearing in the court of chancery provided he does not as far as to infringe upon the powers possessed by the supreme court at the time of the adoption of the constitution of 1844. This would include power to suspend until the facts could be presented to the supreme court for more severe action. Whether an appeal will lie from an order punishing for contempt or even suspending a solicitor for a limited time as an act of mere discipline is not the question now before us. This order “debars” Mr. Hahn from appearing hereafter in the court of chancery as a solicitor or counselor, and prohibits him from exercising any of the functions, rights or privileges of a solicitor or counselor of that court. We do not know whether the selection of the unusual word “debar” was merely accidental or whether it was chosen advisedly in an effort to distinguish the order from the well known, and long-continued procedure of the supreme court not hitherto departed from in the whole history of New Jersey’s jurisprudence, except perhaps in a single sporadic case to be mentioned hereafter. That procedure was commonly known as a procedure to disbar. As neither “disbar” nor “debar” accurately expresses the result in technical terms, the mere question of words is not important. Nor do we attribute any significance to the fact that the proceeding was by its title directed against Mr. Hahn as a solicitor only, and was for malpractice as a solicitor while the order affects him as a counselor also. The fact that he is prohibited from exercising his rights as a “counselor [513] of this court” is, as will be shown, of more importance. We deal with the substance rather than the form of the order. In substance it has the same effect, if valid, as far as the court of chancery is concerned, as striking the appellant’s name off the roll would have, and the real question now before us is whether an appeal will lie from an order of the court of chancery having that effect.

There is some divergence in the cases as to whether an appeal will lie in such a case where the lower court has jurisdiction. It turns sometimes upon a mere question of procedure, and sometimes upon the statutes of the state. Our statute, dating from 1799 (Pat. L. p. 434 § 59), enacts that all persons aggrieved by any order or decree of the court of chancery may appeal from the same or any part thereof to the court of errors and appeals. Comp. Stat. p. 450 § 111. On the face of it, we think that a man is aggrieved by an order that deprives him of one office, that of solicitor, and prevents him from exercising to the full extent, another office, that of counselor. We need not go so far as the supreme court of Connecticut and hold that the office of solicitor or counselor can fairly be regarded as property. In re O’Brien, 79 Conn. 46, 63 Atl. 777, 780. It is enough to say that one holding such an office is as much aggrieved and entitled to appeal to the courts for protection in its enjoyment, as a public officer or the officer of a private corporation is by means of quo warranto, mandamus or certiorari with an tracks could be placed in other places by the railroad, where they would be just as useful and convenient to the railroad and to the public. A number of business men of the highest standing in the city of Corinth testified to facts sustaining the orders of the Commission. Only one expert engineer testified for the Commission. He had never been to Corinth, and only testified from certain maps and blueprints submitted to him on behalf of the Commission.

The chancellor, after hearing and considering the testimony, decided that the order to remove the passenger depot was unreasonable, and the injunction was made perpetual in that particular. He also decided that the present union station was inadequate, and ordered certain changes made in it and certain work done at the Filmore street crossing. The railroad company has not prosecuted on appeal from the latter part of this order; the Commission being the sole appellant. We are not therefore called upon to city the latter party of this decree.

It is earnestly insisted by the appellant in this case that this court, in reviewing the decision of the chancellor, [116] should not give it the same weight and consideration on its findings of fact that it does in ordinary cases, but that we should view this case just as if we were the lower court trying the case and give to the order of the Commission the weight it is entitled to under section 4836 of the Code. Numerous decisions are cited by counsel for the appellant as to what effect should be given the finding of the Commission. These decisions, however, relate only to the effect to be given to this finding by the lower court, or by the appellate court when the lower court has sustained these findings of the Commission. In the case at bar, however, the chancellor decided that the order of the Commission was unreasonable. To this decree we give the same force and effect that we do to all other decrees of the lower court. In other words, if the chancellor could have so found under the testimony, then we will not disturb his findings here. The case now under review comes to us with the finding of fact of the chancellor that the order of the Commission relating to the passenger depot is unreasonable. The decree specifically so states. There was testimony under which the chancellor could have so found. We cannot try the case in this court, as it was tried in the lower court. We give to this decree the same force and effect that we give to the decrees of all the chancery courts. The chancellor also held the orders of the Commission relative to the building of a new freight depot and the alteration of the switch tracks to be reasonable, and dissolved the temporary injunction and dismissed the bill in that case. No appeal was prosecuted from this decree of dismissal.

We, therefore, decline to disturb the findings of fact of the chancellor, and the decree is affirmed.

Affirmed.

NOTE.

The reported case sustains a decree setting aside as unreasonable an order of a railroad commission requiring the erection of a passenger depot and prescribing its precise location, the purpose being so to locate it as to permit of approach by the greater part of the persons using the station without crossing the tracks. The validity of an order by a railroad commission requiring a railroad to erect a depot at a specified place is discussed in the note to Vicksburg, etc. R. Co. v. Louisiana R. Commission, Ann. Cas. 1914C 1168.

IN RE HAHN.

New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals—
January 28, 1916.

85 N. J. Eq. 510; 96 Atl. 539.

Attorneys — Disbarment — Right of Appeal.

One deprived by order of the court of chancery of his office of solicitor and of the right of exercising to the full extent, the office of counselor is aggrieved thereby within 1 Comp. St. 1910, p. 450, § 111, authorizing persons aggrieved by any order of the court of chancery to appeal from the same.

[See note at end of this case.]

Jurisdiction to Disbar — Court of Chancery.

Under 2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 2278, fixing a fee for the governor for a license to an attorney and solicitor, to appear and practice in all courts, and page 2281, providing for fees for the judges of the supreme court for license to an attorney and solicitor, and page 4054, § 5, providing that any counselor, solicitor, or attorney who shall be guilty of malpractice in any of the courts shall be put out of the roll and not thereafter permitted to practice, unless he shall obtain a new license and be again enrolled in due form of law, which is section 5 of the Practice Act of 1903 regulating "the practice of courts of law," and the constitution, protecting the jurisdiction of the court of chancery as existing at the time of the adoption of the constitution, the court of chancery has no jurisdiction to make an order adjudging a solicitor guilty of malpractice and debarring him from practice as solicitor and counselor in the court of chancery.

Same.

An order of the court of chancery debar-ring a solicitor in chancery from practicing as solicitor and counselor in the court of chancery cannot be sustained under the practice act, requiring the solicitor to act under the direction of the court, which refers only to causes in which the solicitor is acting, and not to his own disqualification for practicing.

Same.

An order of the court of chancery disbar-ring a solicitor in chancery from practicing as solicitor and counselor in the court of chancery, entered in proceedings not purporting to be proceedings to punish for contempt, is not sustainable as a punishment for contempt.

Appeal and Error — Motion to Dismiss — Merits Not Considered.

Whether an order of the court of chancery, disbarring a solicitor in chancery from practicing as solicitor and counselor in the court of chancery, is sustainable as an order suspending him from practicing in the court of chancery until the supreme court has acted under the statute, will not be considered on a motion to dismiss an appeal from the order, but the question can be dealt with only on the appeal itself in determining whether the order shall be affirmed, reversed, or modified.

Appeal from Chancery Court.

Disbarment proceedings against Simon Hahn, solicitor of Court of Chancery. Decree of disbarment ordered. Defendant appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion. MOTION DENIED.

Nelson B. Gaskill for motion.

Robert H. McCarter and George W. O. McCarter opposed.

[512] SWAYZE, J.—The proceedings are not in the nature of proceedings for contempt of court nor mere disciplinary proceedings. The distinction between proceedings to punish for contempt and proceedings to disbar is sufficiently shown by the decision of the United States supreme court in Ex p. Bradley, 7 Wall. 364, 19 U. S. (L. ed.) 214, and Ex p. Robinson, 19 Wall. 505, 22 U. S. (L. ed.) 205. We have no doubt that the chancellor has the same power to proceed against an attorney for contempt as against any other person, and that he has the additional power to suspend a solicitor or counselor from appearing in the court of chancery provided he does not as far as to infringe upon the powers possessed by the supreme court at the time of the adoption of the constitution of 1844. This would include power to suspend until the facts could be presented to the supreme court for more severe action. Whether an appeal will lie from an order punishing for contempt or even suspending a solicitor for a limited time as an act of mere discipline is not the question now before us. This order "debars" Mr. Hahn from appearing hereafter in the court of chancery as a solicitor or counselor, and prohibits him from exercising any of the functions, rights or privileges of a solicitor or counselor of that court. We do not know whether the selection of the unusual word "debar" was merely accidental or whether it was chosen advisedly in an effort to distinguish the order from the well known, and long-continued procedure of the supreme court not hitherto departed from in the whole history of New Jersey's jurisprudence, except perhaps in a single sporadic case to be mentioned hereafter. That procedure was commonly known as a procedure to disbar. As neither "disbar" nor "debar" accurately expresses the result in technical terms, the mere question of words is not important. Nor do we attribute any significance to the fact that the proceeding was by its title directed against Mr. Hahn as a solicitor only, and was for malpractice as a solicitor while the order affects him as a counselor also. The fact that he is prohibited from exercising his rights as a "counselor [513] of this court" is, as will be shown, of more importance. We deal with the substance rather than the form of the order. In substance it has the same effect, if valid, as far as the court of chancery is concerned, as striking the appellant's name off the roll would have, and the real question now before us is whether an appeal will lie from an order of the court of chancery having that effect.

There is some divergence in the cases as to whether an appeal will lie in such a case where the lower court has jurisdiction. It turns sometimes upon a mere question of procedure, and sometimes upon the statutes of the state. Our statute, dating from 1799 (Pat. L. p. 434 § 59), enacts that all persons aggrieved by any order or decree of the court of chancery may appeal from the same or any part thereof to the court of errors and appeals. Comp. Stat. p. 450 § 111. On the face of it, we think that a man is aggrieved by an order that deprives him of one office, that of solicitor, and prevents him from exercising to the full extent, another office, that of counselor. We need not go so far as the supreme court of Connecticut and hold that the office of solicitor or counselor can fairly be regarded as property. In re O'Brien, 79 Conn. 46, 63 Atl. 777, 780. It is enough to say that one holding such an office is as much aggrieved and entitled to appeal to the courts for protection in its enjoyment, as a public officer or the officer of a private corporation is by means of quo warranto, mandamus or certiorari with an ultimate appeal to this court. The right of appeal by attorneys from orders of disbarment is well settled by the decision of tribunals of the first authority. In Ex p. Bradley, 7 Wall. 364, 19 U. S. (L. ed.) 214, a mandamus was issued to restore an attorney and counselor to his office from which he had been removed by an inferior tribunal. Mr. Justice Miller dissented from this judgment of the court but did not question that a state appellate tribunal might entertain an appeal; his argument was that the supreme court of the United States possessed no such general supervisory power over inferior federal courts as belongs to the king's bench and the appellate tribunals of the states. The jurisdiction of the last named tribunals to [514] review has been exercised in repeated instances. It is enough to cite In re Durant, 80 Conn. 140, 67 Atl. 497; In re Eldridge, 82 N. Y. 161, 37 Am. Rep. 558. The report of the former case in 10 Ann. Cas. 539, is accompanied by a note citing cases in which the appellate jurisdiction has been exercised; in some the facts have been reviewed, and in others the legal errors only. Boston Bar Assoc. v. Greenhood, 168 Mass. 169, 46 N. E. 568. In the last cited case, the language of the statute was similar to that of our Chancery act above quoted. In England, also, an appeal is allowed from an order striking a solicitor off the roll. In re Hardwick, 12 Q. B. D. (Eng.) 148; 53 L. J. Q. B. 64.

Whatever doubt there may be as to the right of appeal from a mere disciplinary order, there can be no doubt as to the appealability of such an order as this if the court of chancery was without jurisdiction to make it, since if this court cannot restrain the excess of jurisdiction, no court can, and the usurpation of power, if there is any, would go uncorrected. The supreme court could not act by mandamus as the United States supreme court acted in the Bradley case, because the court of chancery is one of co-ordinate jurisdiction. Only this court can act, and that by way of appeal. The stress of the argument at bar was upon the question whether the court of chancery had jurisdiction. This question we proceed to consider.

Our method of licensing counselors, attorneys and solicitors is peculiar. From the very beginning of the Province of New Jersey in the time of Lord Cornbury and probably in East Jersey at least from the time of Governor Basse in 1698 (Leam. & Spen. 223 § 11), attorneys and counselors have been licensed by the governor under the great seal of the state. The supreme court never has licensed them nor admitted them to practice. In re Branch, 70 N. J. L. 568, 570, 571, 57 Atl. 431. There has never been a suggestion that the court of chancery has licensed solicitors to practice in that court. A careful distinction has been preserved in that court between masters and solicitors. Beginning with 1817 at least, the rules of the court of chancery have provided for the oaths of masters but not for the oaths of solicitors, no doubt because solicitors who were licensed by the governor, were [515] sworn in the supreme court, and there were no solicitors licensed by the chancellor as chancellor. After the new constitution of 1844, there seems to have been some doubt of the power of the chancellor to appoint masters, and in 1845, the legislature enacted that the power should continue in the chancellor. P. L. 1845 p. 161. This was confirmed in 1846. P. L. 1846 p. 188. The act now appears in the compiled statutes. Comp. Stat. 3785 pl. 8. There is no such legislation as to solicitors. A claim by the chancellor to appoint or remove solicitors is inconsistent with the language of the governor's commission. See 70 N. J. L. 570, 57 Atl. 431. The mandate of the governor under the great seal, attested by the secretary of state, is addressed to the court of chancery as well as to the supreme court and all the courts of record within the state. In 1748 the colonial legislature enacted a fee bill (1 Nevill 338; Allinson 160) which gave the governor a fee of twenty shillings for licensing an attorney, and the supreme court a fee of eighteen shillings for "admitting" every attorney, and those provisions, in substance, have remained on the statute books. No mention was made of any license to a solicitor until the act of 1799 (Pag. L. p. 418) which gives the governor a fee of three dollars for a "license to an attorney and solicitor," and the judges of the supreme court a like fee in the same language. The language is repeated in the revision of 1877 and is to be found in the compiled statutes of 1910. Comp. Stat. pp. 2278, 2281. The fact that attorney and solicitor were coupled, that a fee was allowed the governor, and a like fee for the same service to the justices of the supreme court, is significant enough; its importance is emphasized by the fact that although the chancellor was then paid by fees and his fee bill was for the first time, as far as appears, provided for by the very same act of 1899, no mention is made of any fee to him for licensing a solicitor. Governor Paterson had himself been governor and chancellor, and was not likely to overlook any of the chancellor's rights when he was for the first time drawing a fee bill to be provided for that officer by the legislature. It is probable, as suggested in the case of In re Raich, 83 N. J. Eq. 82, 90 Atl. 12, that in New Jersey as [516] in England in early times, no distinction was made between the practice of an attorney in a court of law and his practice in the court of chancery. The instances cited by the learned vice-chancellor on pages 114 and 115 point to that. But when Judge Paterson was drawing the fee bill and the Practice act, he wrote with accuracy, and for the first time a fee was provided the governor for a license to an attorney and solicitor. The license was as it has ever since been a single license to one individual in a double capacity for one fee. See Lynde v. Lynde, 64 N. J. Eq. 736, 747, 52 Atl. 694, 97 Am. St. Rep. 692, 5 L.R.A. 471. That the governor in granting the license was acting as governor and not as a chancellor also is apparent from the fact that the fee was given him as governor, and not as chancellor; while the fee for such judicial service as was rendered even in the licensing of a solicitor was given to the justices of the supreme court.

Enough has been said to demonstrate the difference between our practice and the English practice. Practitioners in the superior courts in England were admitted by each several court to practice in that court, and each court had its own roll. 3 Bl. Com. 26. By the act of 2 Geo. II. c. 23 § 20, a sworn attorney in any of the courts of king's bench, common pleas, &c., might be sworn and enrolled as a solicitor without further fee after an examination of his qualifications to be a solicitor. That act did not give a similar privilege to solicitors to act in the law courts, and the omission was corrected by 23 Geo. II. c. 26, § 15, which permitted solicitors to be enrolled as attorneys of the king's bench or common pleas without fee upon an examination by the judges of the solicitor touching his fitness and capacity to act as attorney. Under such a system, each court controlled its own roll and its own officers, and although an attorney who had been struck off the roll of one court might also be stricken off the roll of another court, this was not always done. 1 Tidd 89; 1 Arch. 30; In re Smith, 1 B. & B. 522, 5 C. C. L. 172. The power of the English courts was a power to discipline officers of their own appointment by striking names off a roll kept by that very court, not by some other. In New Jersey the appointment comes not from the court but from the governor; counselors, attorneys and solicitors are more than [517] mere court officers; their commissions run in substantially the same terms and are issued by the same authority and with the same solemnity as our own. They do not in terms require enrollment by the court. That requirement comes from immemorial usage descended from the English practice and implied rather than required by the Practice act. But for the provisions of that act it might be doubtful whether even the supreme court could nullify the governor's commission, or whether any action of that character could be of consequence if the governor should choose to issue a new commission. Could the chancellor, even if he knew an attorney and solicitor to be unfit to practice, refuse to obey the mandate of the governor? Whatever the inherent power of a court may be to punish its officers, it has no inherent power to deprive the governor's commission of its efficacy to authorize an attorney and solicitor to "appear and practice in all courts of record and to receive fees therefor, and to require all judges, justices and others concerned to admit him accordingly." The power of the supreme court to deprive the governor's commission of its efficacy rests on the Practice act of 1799. Section 3 of that act which appears substantially unchanged in the Revised Practice act of 1903 (Comp. Stat. p. 4054), enacted that if any counselor, solicitor or attorney-at-law shall be guilty of malpractice in any of the said courts, he shall be put out of the roll and never after be permitted to act or practice as a counselor, solicitor or attorney-at-law, unless he shall obtain a new license and be again enrolled in due form of law. The section is directed against malpractice in "any of the said courts." The reference is to section 1 of the act, which authorizes every person of full age and sound memory to prosecute or defend any action in any of the courts of judicature of this state in person or by his solicitor in chancery or attorney-at-law. The reference to "solicitor in chancery" makes it clear that the court of chancery was included among the courts, for malpractice in which an attorney and solicitor could be put out of the roll. The collocation of sections remained the same until the revision of March 27th, 1874; section 3 became section 5, and the language was changed so as to read, "If any counselor, solicitor or attorney-at-law [518] shall be guilty of malpractice in any of the courts, he shall be put out of the roll." The words "any of the courts" are as broad as they can well be and the use of the word "solicitor" again shows that the court of chancery was included. So also does the language of section 5 of the revision of 1903, "any court." Although the title of the Practice act points only to the courts of law, it must be remembered that our constitutional provision as to the title of an act is not found in the constitution of 1776, and the act of 1799 was therefore not objectionable on that score. In 1844, when our present constitution was adopted, the power of the supreme court under the act of 1799 was settled beyond the power of legislative interference; and the legislature in the revisions of 1846, 1877 and 1903, merely followed the ancient lines.

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—53.

Judge Paterson prepared also an act respecting the court of chancery which was passed in 1799, a few months after the Practice act. Pat. L. p. 428. He made no provision therein for the punishment of solicitors who had been guilty of malpractice. It is almost inconceivable that he would have omitted such a provision in the Chancery act and inserted it in the Practice act if it had been meant that the court of chancery should possess that power. Moreover the language of the Practice act demonstrates that the power was meant to be limited to the supreme court. The only penalty prescribed for misconduct, including as we have said, misconduct in any court, was that the delinquent solicitor should be put out of the roll, and never after permitted to practice. Obviously before he could be put out of the roll, he must be on it. The only roll ever known in New Jersey is a roll kept by the clerk of the supreme court, going back to colonial days, and for many years the oath to which an attorney and solicitor subscribed on that roll, has covered his office both as solicitor and as attorney. In re Raisch, 83 N. J. Eq. 97, 90 Atl. 12. The oath has always been taken before the supreme court. The suggestion in the Raisch Case that Judge Paterson, when he drew the Practice act of 1799, either erroneously supposed that the court of chancery maintained a separate roll of its solicitors and that they took their official oath as solicitors before the chancellor in open court, or assumed [519] that this practice (the English practice) would be established forthwith in New Jersey, can hardly be taken seriously. That Judge Paterson, who was a solicitor himself and had already served as chancellor, could have made the mistake of supposing that he had signed such a roll as solicitor, or that he had had such a roll in his custody as chancellor, when in fact he had not, and that he had taken an oath as solicitor before the then chancellor or that others had taken such an official oath before him when chancellor, in open court, when the fact was otherwise, is to us incredible. The alternative supposition that the English practice would be forthwith established in New Jersey is an impossible supposition since Judge Paterson himself omitted from the Chancery act all provision as to striking solicitors from the roll and carefully inserted such a provision in the Practice act. The language is struck out of the roll, not the rolls.

Judge Paterson moreover had a good reason for putting the provision in question in the Practice act. Although the commissions of counselors, attorneys and solicitors were from the governor under the great seal of the state, the practice was to issue the commission on the recommendation of the supreme court, and only on that recommendation. Even the commission to one as solicitor was issued on the recommendation of the supreme court, as soon at least as the commission began to run to the licensee as both attorney and solicitor. It was because the justices of the supreme court did the work that the legislature gave them the fee, making no distinction between attorney and solicitor and giving one fee for the two combined. There was another and a more cogent reason. The evil of the English practice was that a man might be able to practice in one court who had been stricken off the roll of another court. That evil was the natural, almost inevitable result, of each court having a separate roll. That evil Judge Paterson guarded against by providing that for malpractice in any court, the practitioner should be put out of the roll and never after permitted to practice as counselor, solicitor or attorney, unless he obtained a new license and was again enrolled in due form. The evil of having solicitors and attorneys under the control of two distinct courts is well illustrated in the present case. Mr. Hahn's offence is said [520] to have been committed by him as a solicitor in his practice in the court of chancery. The supreme court would have no means of knowing the facts unless communicated to it by the chancellor, as in the Cahill case, hereinafter referred to, or by some outside agency. The chancellor, by proceeding to "debar" the solicitor, prevents him from practicing in the court of chancery before the supreme court can even direct proceedings to be begun in the supreme court. Under our constitutional provisions, the attorney cannot be put out of the roll without notice and a hearing, and pending the hearing, if the present order is valid, the lawyer, as he is commonly called, may practice in one tribunal and not in another, the very scandal that Judge Paterson's act would have avoided. One who is put out of the roll of the supreme court is disqualified to practice in all courts; one who is "debarred" as solicitor may still practice in all other courts unless a new proceeding is had against him. Judge Paterson could not have meant that. Again, the provision as to putting counselors out of the roll is contained in the same section as the provision relating to attorneys and solicitors. Whether the attorney and solicitor holds two offices, as the vice-chancellor argues in the Raisch case, or is one officer with two distinct functions as a justice of the supreme court is also a judge of the oyer and terminer, is unimportant; a counselor certainly holds but one office, that of counselor-at-law. There is no such officer as "a counselor of this court," to use the words of the chancellor's order. The office of counselor-at-law cannot be divided by the action of the court of chancery; the governor's commission requiring all courts to admit him as such cannot be deprived of its efficacy in one end of the state house while it remains efficacious in the other. So far as the present order affects Mr. Hahn as counselor, it is a clear excess of jurisdiction. It is notable that in the case of Cosey, argued at the same time, there was no attempt to "debar" him from practice as counselor; so, that if the order in his case is valid, although he may not issue a subpoena, he may, nevertheless, appear and argue before the chancellor as a counselor.

To return to the language of the Practice Act of 1799. The provision as to re-enrollment of itself is conclusive against the [521] jurisdiction of the court of chancery. A new license could be obtained only as the old license had been obtained, by a recommendation of the supreme court and a commission from the governor; and that commission would require the chancellor as well as other judges to admit the practitioner to practice. The control of this new license and re-enrollment would thus be in the supreme court, and the man who had been "debarred" on one day by the chancellor might walk into court with the governor's new commission the next week. To avoid that scandal the control was put in a single tribunal, the supreme court. No doubt our whole system of admission to the bar and of disbarment is sui generis, but it has worked well, and, so far as we know, without difficulty for over a century, recognized by the court of chancery as well as by the supreme court, and no question has ever been brought to this court until the present time. We are far from suggesting that any inherent power of the court of chancery is lost by disuse; but when the question is whether the power existed in that court, the fact that it has not been exercised, is a cogent argument against its existence. The argument becomes irresistible when we find that a distinguished chancellor communicated to the supreme court a case of malpractice by a solicitor in the court of chancery "with the suggestion that it was a case for discipline." In re Cahill, 66 N. J. L. 527, 50 Atl. 119. It is true we are referred in the opinion of the vice-chancellor, in the Raisch Case, 83 N. J. Eq. 111, 90 Atl. 12, to an unreported case, In re Edmunds, where Chancellor Runyon, it is said, expelled from office a solicitor who had forged a decree of divorce. The fact that no opinion is reported, and that the chancellor "stayed the infliction of the penalty," weakens the value of the case as a precedent even in the court of chancery. We cannot avoid the thought that perhaps he came to entertain doubts of his jurisdiction. The explanation that he was led by considerations of mercy seems hardly adequate in view of the serious nature of the offence—one in which mercy would be misplaced. Such weight as the case might have had in the court of chancery is lost in the face of the subsequent action of Chancellor Magie in the Cahill case, and it was never followed until two years ago in the Raisch case. Even the [522] opinion in that case is of no more value as a precedent than the weight, great, to be sure, to be given to the view of the very learned and able judge who gave expression to it. Confessedly, what he said was merely obiter, since the question of jurisdiction was not raised in the case (see pages 85, 86), and the discussion of that subject, it seems probable, was intended as a foundation for a claim of jurisdiction in the court of chancery that had never been exercised before, with the possible exception of the Edmunds case. This court is not bound by the Raisch case, nor by the cases in the court of chancery that have followed it during the last two years without any further consideration of the question of jurisdiction.

We have thus far dealt with the question as one of statutory construction. The Raisch case seeks, however, to vindicate the jurisdiction, on the theory that the power was inherent in the court of chancery when the constitution of 1844 was adopted. This is deduced from the fact that the English chancellor exercised the power over the solicitors in his court. The deduction lacks support in fact. What the English chancellor did was to strike off the roll of the court of chancery a solicitor who was enrolled thereon. Precedents antedating the Judicature acts of 1873 and 1875 are given in Seton Dec. 651, 652. There is nothing that we have found or that counsel has cited to show that the English chancellor ever undertook to strike a name off the roll of the king's bench. The very reason that the order now brought here for review rejects the precedents of the English chancery and "debars" Mr. Hahn is that the established form of order would be absurd since Mr. Hahn has never signed a roll of the court of chancery. A novel term had to be invented for this novel proceeding and he is "debarred." No power to "debar" was ever asserted by the English chancery.

But the case is of too much importance to rest the argument upon the novelty of the word used, significant as that novelty is. The jurisdiction of the court of chancery that is protected by the constitution of 1844, is the jurisdiction that existed at that time. This jurisdiction was not necessarily the same as the jurisdiction of English chancery. So far as the latter depended on English [523] statutes antedating the Revolution, our inquiry must be whether the statute was in force in New Jersey. The regulation of the enrollment, which meant the admission to practice, of solicitors was regulated at the time of our Revolution by statutes. The name "solicitors" seems to have arisen in the seventeenth century. Chris. His. Sol. 74. In 1729, the act of 2 Geo. II. c. 23, for the better regulation of attorneys and solicitors was passed. That act required only an oath that the affiant would truly and honestly demean himself in the practice of an attorney. Chris. 111. We have already referred to the act at length. It was extended (23 Geo. II. c. 26) so as to give solicitors the privilege to practice in the king's bench without further fee. The important point is that the practice of solicitors was regulated by statute. By the constitution of 1776 it was provided that so much of the statute law as had theretofore been practiced in the colony, should still remain in force, until altered by the legislature. To make definite exactly what was meant, the legislature, on November 24th, 1792, authorized Judge Paterson, who was then governor, to collect and reduce into proper form all the statutes of England or Great Britain, which before the Revolution were practiced and which by the constitution extended to this state, as also all the public acts passed by the legislature before or since the Revolution which remained in force; and, on March 19th, 1795, authorized him to collect, alter and modify the statutes he had not reported on and to propose to the legislature such bills as to him should appear conducive to the general interests of the state and to the completion of the revision and system of the laws of this state. Judge Paterson's work, in pursuance of these legislative mandates, has ever since been treated as a complete system of the statute law of New Jersey, in 1799. Schomp v. Schenck, 40 N. J. L. 195, 29 Am. Rep. 219. The omission of the acts of 2 Geo. II. c. 23, and of 23 Geo. II. c. 26, together with the enactment of the Practice act of 1799, make it clear that the English law as to the admission of solicitors was not applicable in this state, and account for the uniform practice with reference to the matter. We find no jurisdiction of such proceedings as this existing in the court of chancery when the constitution of 1844 was adopted.

[524] The order cannot be sustained under the section of the Practice act requiring the solicitor to act under the direction of the court. That, obviously, refers to causes in which he is acting, not to his own disqualification for practicing at all, which is the subject of another clause of the statute. It is, however, suggested that the order made by the chancellor may be sustainable as a punishment for contempt. This amounts to saying that what the court of chancery cannot do directly, it can do indirectly. The distinction between the power to punish for contempt, and the power to disbar, is pointed out in Ex p. Robinson, 19 Wall. 505, 22 U. S. (L. ed.) 205, and the care our own courts take to avoid excessive punishment for contempt, is apparent from our opinion in O'Rourke v. Cleveland, 49 N. J. Eq. 577, 25 Atl. 367, 31 Am. St. Rep. 719. As far as we know, the power to punish for contempt is limited to fine and imprisonment and does not extend to stripping a man of his means of gaining a living. We need not pursue the subject, since the proceedings do not purport to be proceedings to punish for contempt and there is no adjudication of a contempt.

As the court of chancery was without jurisdiction to make the order, the motion to dismiss the appeal must be denied.

The question whether or not the order disbarring the appellant may be held to be an order suspending him from practicing in the court of chancery until the supreme court has acted under the statute is not presented by a motion to dismiss the appeal which is all that is now before us; such a question can be properly dealt with only upon the appeal itself, when the question will be whether the order brought up by the appeal shall be affirmed, reversed or modified.

TRENCHARD, J. (dissenting).—I am unable to concur in the conclusion of the majority of the court. I think the court of chancery had jurisdiction to make the order under review. I think it had power to make it substantially, for the reasons given by Vice-Chancellor Stevenson in his opinion in re Raisch, 83 N. J. Eq. 111, 90 Atl. 12, in which case an order quite like the one here was made. If, as I think, the court of chancery had power to make such order, it follows, upon well-settled principles, that it is not appealable. I vote to dismiss the appeal.

[525] I am requested by Mr. Justices Garison and Black, and Judges White, Terhune and Heppenheimer, to say that they concur in this view.

NOTE.

Right of Attorney to Review of Disbarment Proceedings.

Introductory, 836.

Appeal, 837.

Writ of Error, 837.

Mandamus, 837.

Certiorari, 838.

Introductory.

The earlier cases touching on an attorney's right to a review of proceedings resulting in his disbarment are discussed in the notes to

In re Durant, 10 Ann. Cas. 539, and Burns v. Allen, 2 Am. St. Rep. 844. This note collates the more recent decisions.

Appeal.

In several recent cases the right of an attorney to review by appeal proceedings resulting in his disbarment has been recognized. Peters v. State, 193 Ala. 598, 69 So. 576; State v. Kimball (Ia.) 158 N. W. 579; In Matter of Goodman, 199 N. Y. 143, 92 N. E. 211, affirming 135 App. Div. 594, 120 N. Y. S. 801; In re Robinson, 209 N. Y. 354, 103 N. E. 160, affirming order 151 App. Div. 589, 136 N. Y. S. 548; In re Flannery, 212 N. Y. 610, 106 N. E. 630, affirming 150 App. Div. 369, 135 N. Y. S. 612. And see the reported case.

In the case of In Matter of Goodman, supra, an order was entered suspending an attorney from practice for a period of two years. From this order an appeal was taken, the contention being that the charges of unprofessional conduct against him were not sustained by the evidence. The court said: "In a proceeding of this character the power of review ends in this court when it appears that the proceeding has been instituted and conducted in accordance with the statutes and rules authorizing it; that no substantial legal right of the accused has been violated; that no prejudicial error has been committed in the reception or exclusion of testimony; and that there is some evidence to sustain the findings upon which the order is based. Further we cannot go, for the power and discretion of the appellate division in the infliction of punishment when guilt is established are not subject to review in this court."

In Peters v. State, 193 Ala. 598, 69 So. 576, an attorney, who had been disbarred, sought to review the proceedings by an appeal under the statute, which was allowed, but it was held that the appeal did not permit a trial de novo but only a review on exceptions taken at the trial, the court saying: "It is plain that appeals in such cases are not trials de novo in this court. The statute (Code, § 3002) vests in the trial court the power, and imposes thereon the duty to decide whether the attorney charged shall be disbarred or merely suspended. In order to present for review a trial court's decision to disbar, rather than suspend, an attorney, it is necessary to save the question in the trial court. It cannot be presented here for the first time. Hence there cannot be on this record any review of the trial court's conclusion to disbar, rather than suspend, the attorney."

In State v. Kimball (Ia.) 158 N. W. 579, the court held, in reviewing disbarment proceedings on appeal, that a disbarred attorney has the right to submit questions of fact on the evidence in the record, if he included the evidence in his abstract, but that where no evidence was presented, only points of law could be reviewed.

In each of the following cases an appeal taken by a disbarred attorney was entertained, though the question of the attorney's right to appeal was not raised: Wernimont v. State, 101 Ark. 210, Ann. Cas. 1913D 1156, 142 S. W. 184; In re Soale, 31 Cal. App. 144, 159 Pac. 1065; In re Kone, 90 Conn. 440, 97 Atl. 307; U. S. v. Ballinger, 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 520; Jones v. McCullough, 138 Ga. 16, 74 S. E. 694; In re Darrow, 176 Ind. 44, 92 N. E. 369; In re Wilson, 79 Kan. 450, 453, 100 Pac. 75; In re Wilson, 79 Kan. 674, 17 Ann. Cas. 690, 100 Pac. 635, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 517; Lenihan v. Com. 165 Ky. 93, 176 S. W. 948, L.R.A.1917B 1132; Heck v. Battistee, 172 Ky. 234, 189 S. W. 25; Denny v. Com. 175 Ky. 357, 194 S. W. 330; Boston Bar Assoc. v. Casey, 204 Mass. 331, 90 N. E. 584, affirming 196 Mass. 100, 81 N. E. 892; In re Allin, 224 Mass. 9, 112 N. E. 494; In re Spenser, 203 N. Y. 613, 96 N. E. 1131; In re Hopkins, 54 Wash. 569, 103 Pac. 805.

Writ of Error.

Disbarment proceedings may in the federal courts be reviewed by a writ of error. Cobb v. U. S. 172 Fed. 641, 96 C. C. A. 477; Thatcher v. U. S. 212 Fed. 801, 129 C. C. A. 255, affirming order In re Thatcher, 190 Fed. 969, rehearing denied Thatcher v. U. S. 219 Fed. 173, 135 C. C. A. 71.

Mandamus.

In order to obtain a writ of mandamus to review disbarment proceedings, an attorney must clearly show his right thereto. Where the trial court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and there is some evidence to support the charges on which the disbarment proceedings are founded, the writ will not issue. Garfield v. U. S. 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 109; U. S. v. Ballinger, 35 App. Cas. (D. C.) 520; State v. Brough, 33 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 257.

In U. S. v. Ballinger, supra, it appeared that an order disbaring an attorney from practicing before the secretary of the interior was entered. Later the order was revoked and canceled. The attorney subsequently petitioned for a writ of mandamus to compel the secretary of the interior to make the revoking order show on its face that it related back and vacated the original order as of its date. The court held that it had no jurisdiction to review the judgment of the secretary of the interior, entered in the exercise of his discretion, saying: "Nor can it, in this proceeding, undertake to interpret the meaning and operation of the order entered, and restore relator to any rights of property that may have been denied him by virtue of the order of disbarment, while it was in apparent force. That could only be done in a case involving such a right between the parties interested. If the order of February 5, 1900, was entered without due process of law, it would be a nullity, and impeachable in any proceeding in which it might be pleaded or offered in evidence. But the duty of ascertaining the effect of that order, and of its subsequent cancellation is that of the tribunal in which the action is depending."

In State v. Brough, 33 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 257, an attorney, who had been disbarred, applied for a writ of mandamus to compel a lower court to permit him to practice therein. The grounds claimed for the issuance of the writ were stated to be that the court which disbarred him had no jurisdiction, that if it had jurisdiction it did not extend beyond its own court, and that the legislature had passed an act admitting him to practice. The court held that to entitle the relator to the remedy of mandamus, he must show a clear right thereto, and the claims set forth by him being decided against him, the writ was refused.

In Garfield v. U. S. 32 App. Cas. (D. C.) 109, a petition for a writ of mandamus by a firm of attorneys who had been disbarred from practicing in the department of the secretary of the interior was allowed, the secretary of the interior being ordered to restore them to practice. From that order an appeal was taken by the secretary. It was held that the secretary of the interior having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and having found that there was sufficient evidence to show conduct violative of the rules and regulations, his judgment was not subject to review, and the order issuing the writ was reversed.

Certiorari.

It has been held that a writ of certiorari may be granted to review disbarment proceedings when the record shows on its face that the inferior court acted without jurisdiction. Baird v. Justice's Court, 11 Cal. App. 539, 105 Pac. 259; In re Radford, 159 Mich. 91, 123 N. W. 546, 16 Detroit Leg. N. 757.

In the case first cited it appeared that a police court judge who was trying a case before a justice of the peace, was disbarred from that court. His client applied for a writ of certiorari on which the order of disbarment was vacated, an appeal was taken, and it was held that while the petitioner was not a party in interest entitling him to bring the petition, nevertheless, inasmuch as a justice of the peace had no authority to disbar attorneys, the record itself showed that the attorney was improperly disbarred, and although the court below should not have entered a judgment vacating the order on the client's petition, since no injustice by so doing resulted, the judgment was affirmed.

In the case of In re Radford, 159 Mich. 91, 123 N. W. 546, 16 Detroit Leg. N. 757, proceedings were brought to disbar an attorney, who filed a demurrer to the charges. The court entered an order overruling the demurrer, to review which order the attorney applied for a writ of certiorari. It was held that the proceedings must be finally disposed of in the trial court before the petition for the writ of certiorari would be considered.

VIRGINIA RAILWAY AND POWER COMPANY

v.

GORSUCH.

Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals—March 15, 1917.

120 Va. 655; 91 S. E. 632.

Trial — Reopening for Additional Testimony — Discretion of Court.

Reopening the case to take additional testimony inadvertently omitted being within the trial court's discretion and not reviewable unless arbitrarily exercised, it is proper, in an action against a street railway for injuries to an automobile passenger, to permit the reopening of the passenger's case to show the ownership of the street car which struck the automobile.

Automobiles — Occupant — Imputation of Driver's Negligence.

That the wife owned an automobile which she sent to another city for her husband to use, and on her casual visit to the city, while riding with him in the automobile, it was struck by a street car, at a crossing, while she was engaged in conversation with another passenger and exercising no control over its operation, does not render negligence of the husband, if any, imputable to her, since the husband was in effect her bailee.

[See note at end of this case.]

Error to Circuit Court, City of Richmond.

Action by Mrs. Sophia Gorsuch, plaintiff, against Virginia Railway and Power Company, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

H. W. Anderson, A. B. Guigon and Thos. P. Bryan for plaintiff in error.

J. Kent Raicley and M. J. Fulton for defendant in error.

[657] PRENTIS, J.—A collision occurred at the intersection of Eighth and Grace streets, in the city of Richmond, on the night of September 19, 1914, between 11:30 and 12 o'clock, between a west-bound automobile and a north-bound street car of the Virginia Railway and Power Company. The occupants of the automobile were Mr. Thomas H. Gorsuch, his wife Sophia, and their friend, Mr. John F. Stephenson. The front part of the automobile was seriously damaged and Mrs. Gorsuch was injured.

Mr. Gorsuch was employed by the Virginia Railway and Power Company to do some work in the city of Richmond in connection with dismantling certain plants on Brown's Island and re-erecting them on Belle Isle. His wife lived in the city of Baltimore. She owned the automobile referred to, but Mr. Gorsuch, shortly before the accident, had told her that he had so far to walk to his work, it would be a convenience to him to have the use of the automobile in Richmond, and she had sent it to him, and it had been in Richmond and in his possession for about a week before the date of the accident. On the afternoon of the day of the accident, Mrs. Gorsuch came from Baltimore to Richmond for a visit, was met at the train by her husband with the automobile, and after a pleasure ride Mr. Stephenson was invited to go with them to a local hotel, where the party had something to eat with some beer (though there is no suggestion of intoxication), and after watching the dancing they started home about 11:30 p.m. Within one square after the automobile started, the collision occurred. At that time the surface of Grace street was torn up because the company was relaying or repairing its tracks at that point. The excavations made it necessary to provide a temporary crossing over the tracks at the place of the accident, which consisted of railroad ties laid alongside of each other, making a crossing twelve feet wide.

[658] 1. One of the errors assigned is, that after the evidence had been concluded, the defendant company had demurred to the evidence because it had not been proved that the street car was the property of the Virginia Railway and Power Company, although the plaintiff, Mrs. Gorsuch, had rested and concluded her case, after the statement of the grounds of demurrer, the court allowed her to reopen the evidence and prove the ownership of the street car.

There is no merit in this assignment. At that stage of the proceedings they were within the control of the trial court, and it was the duty of the judge to permit the plaintiff to prove a fact which had been inadvertently omitted, but about which there was no doubt whatever. Had the court refused to do so, it would have been reversible error. Matters of this sort are within the discretion of the trial court and will not be reviewed unless such discretion is exercised in an arbitrary or obviously improper manner. Norfolk, etc. R. Co. v. Coffey, 104 Va. 670, 51 S. E. 729, 52 S. E. 367; Daniels v. Thacker Fuel Co. (W. Va.) 90 S. E. 841; Burns v. Morrison, 36 W. Va. 423, 15 S. E. 62; Cook v. Raleigh Lumber Co. 74 W. Va. 503, 82 S. E. 327.

2. Another error assigned is the failure of the court below to instruct the jury that the contributory negligence of the husband, Mr. Gorsuch, should be imputed to Mrs. Gorsuch in bar of her recovery.

The doctrine of imputable negligence has been discussed, and the books are full of cases dealing with the question. There are some conflicts in the decisions, but it may be regarded as settled by the overwhelming weight of authority, that the negligence of the driver of an automobile will not be imputed to a mere passenger, unless the passenger has or exercises control over the driver. The negligence of the servant is imputed to the master, because the master employs and can discharge the servant and direct his actions. It seems to be well settled that the negligence of a husband [659] driving an automobile is not, as a general proposition, imputable to his wife merely because of the marital relation; nor is the negligence of the driver of an automobile imputable to his guest merely because he is riding with him by invitation. Anthony v. Kiefner, 96 Kan. 194, 150 Pac. 524, L.R.A. 1915F 876, Ann. Cas. 1916E 268; Ann. Cas. 1912A 649; Reading Tp. v. Telfer, 57 Kan. 798, 48 Pac. 134, 57 Am. St. Rep. 355, 110 Am. St. Rep. 289; Shultz v. Old Colony St. R. Co. 193 Mass. 309, 79 N. E. 873, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 597, 118 Am. St. Rep. 502, 9 Ann. Cas. 402; Wachsmith v. Baltimore, etc. R. Co. 233 Pa. St. 465, 82 Atl. 755, Ann. Cas. 1913B 679; St. Louis, etc. R. Co. v. Bell (Okla.) 159 Pac. 336, L.R.A. 1917A 543.

It is earnestly claimed, however, that because of the fact that Mrs. Gorsuch owned the automobile involved in this collision, none of the rules above stated are applicable to this case, and that Mrs. Gorsuch, as the owner of the machine, had such control, or right of control, over it as to make her responsible for the negligence of her husband.

We cannot agree with this suggestion. Mr. Gorsuch was the gratuitous bailee of her automobile and had been for a week before the accident. His control of it while his wife remained in Baltimore, was as absolute as if he had owned the machine, and the casual visit of Mrs. Gorsuch to Richmond did not change this control.

The case of Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 615, 34 Am. Dec. 273, decided in 1839, is instructive. Newell had demised his team for a term of two years, which had not expired at the time of the injury, to his son-in-law and co-defendant, Roper. The accident, however, occurred when Newell, the owner of the team, was riding in the vehicle, and the court acquitted him of responsibility for the accident upon the ground that at the time thereof he had no control over the team and could not be made liable [660] without proof of positive and active concurrence in the injury, quaintly adding, "a thing for which there is no pretense in the proof, and which implies a barbarous temper, which the law cannot presume in any one."

This appears from the case of New Jersey Electric R. Co. v. New York, etc. R. Co. 61 N. J. L. 287, 41 Atl. 1116, 43 L.R.A. 849. The New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company was the owner of a certain locomotive and cars which had been injured in a collision between such locomotive and an electric car of the New Jersey Electric Railway Company. At the time of the accident the locomotive and cars of the plaintiff had been hired by the day and from day to day for the use of another company, the New York and Greenwood Lake Ry. Co. which latter company was, with its own engineer, fireman and employees, operating the same upon its own roadbed and rails at the time and place of the collision. The effort was made to impute the negligence of the operating company, the lessee, to the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company, the owner of the cars, but the court refused to take that view, saying, among other things: "In a contract of bailment of things for hire, the bailor is not responsible to a third party for injuries occurring to such third party by reason of the negligent use of the thing hired by the bailee, nor for the negligence of the servants of the bailee in respect thereto. The bailee does not stand in the place of the bailor, nor represent him in such relation as to render the bailor liable for such injuries; nor are the servants of the bailee the servants of the bailor, or in any sense acting for him; and the contract of bailment is in so far entirely an independent one, and the liabilities of the bailor and the bailee to third parties are essentially independent of each other."

The modern and better doctrine is that the negligence of a bailee of property, over whom the bailor is exercising no [661] control at the time of the injury, is not imputable to the bailor. Hence, a livery stable keeper is not prevented from holding a railroad company liable for negligently killing a horse because the negligence of the hirer, in whose sole control the animal was, contributed to the injury. Gibson v. Bessemer, etc. R. Co. 226 Pa. St. 198, 75 Atl. 194, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 690, 18 Ann. Cas. 535.

The proposition is also strengthened by Sea Ins. Co. v. Vicksburg, etc. R. Co. 159 Fed. 676, 86 C. C. A. 544, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 925; Currie v. Consolidated R. Co. 81 Conn. 383, 71 Atl. 356; Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Clarke, 145 Ala. 459, 39 So. 816; Van Zile on Bailments and Carriers (2d ed. 1903) sec. 119; 3 R. C. L. 147.

We know of no reason for applying a different rule when the bailment is gratuitous.

The relation of Mrs. Gorsuch to Mr. Gorsuch, under the circumstances above referred to, was that of bailor to bailee, and until she resumed control of the property, the operation of the car was as completely within his control as if he had been the fee simple owner thereof.

Mrs. Gorsuch, at the time of the accident, was no more responsible for the negligence of her husband than the other guest who was riding in the machine was responsible therefor. In order to defeat her recovery in this case, it would be necessary to prove that she was herself guilty of some negligence. This the record fails to show. She was on the front seat, on the side of the automobile from which the street car was approaching, half-turned, so that she could not see the approaching street car, talking from time to time to their guest, Stephenson. This conduct was perfectly natural and such as is demanded by the ordinary rules of courtesy. She had no reason to distrust her husband's skill or carefulness, and notwithstanding the advances made by modern women towards political and [662] economic independence of man, it still remains true that the normal woman married to the normal man recognizes the obligation of obedience contained in the marriage vow, and observes the Pauline injunction to remain subject to her husband, as is suggested in Reading Tp. v. Telfer, supra; Ann. Cas. 1912A 649.

There is nothing then in this record to indicate any negligence on the part of the plaintiff in the action, Mrs. Gorsuch.

Where a passenger is in a private vehicle by invitation and is exercising no control over the driver, the negligence of such driver cannot be imputed to the passenger. If precluded from recovery it must be because of his own negligence. This case is controlled by the well-established doctrine announced in the case of Atlantic, etc. R. Co. v. Ironmonger, 95 Va. 632, 29 S. E. 319.

It follows from this that it is unnecessary to pass upon the question as to whether the evidence indicates that the negligence of her husband contributed to the accident. Whether it did or not, under the circumstances of this case, it cannot be imputed to her.

Mrs. Gorsuch made no claim in her testimony for damages for injury to the automobile, and her husband stated that the automobile had been repaired at his own expense. The court apparently eliminated this element of damage from the consideration of the jury, for the instruction as to damages limits the jury to the consideration of her physical and bodily injuries, mental suffering caused by the accident, and actual damages to wearing apparel and jewelry; and the jury unquestionably heeded this instruction, because they rendered a verdict of $800, and the repairs to the automobile alone, according to the testimony, amounted to $590.

[663] The question as to responsibility for the accident was fairly submitted to the jury, and they were justified, upon the evidence introduced by the plaintiff, in inferring the negligence of the company from the failure of the motorman to keep a proper lookout for travelers upon Grace street, and in failing to moderate the speed of the street car in accordance with the city ordinance limiting that speed to four miles an hour when crossing Grace street.

The judgment will, therefore, be affirmed. Affirmed.

NOTE.

The reported case holds that the negligence of a husband in driving an automobile is not to be imputed to his wife who is riding as a passenger and exercising no control over the driving, though the car is the property of the wife. The negligence of the driver as imputable to an occupant of an automobile is discussed in the notes to the following cases: Dale v. Denver City Tramway Co. 19 Ann. Cas. 1223; Wachsmith v. Baltimore, etc. R. Co. Ann. Cas. 1913B 679; Corley v. Atchison, etc. R. Co. Ann. Cas. 1915B 764; Anthony v. Kiefner, Ann. Cas. 1916E 264, and Hampel v. Detroit, etc. R. Co. 110 Am. St. Rep. 275.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY

v.

BURLINGTON TRACTION COMPANY.

Vermont Supreme Court—October 10, 1916.

90 Vt. 506; 99 Atl. 4.

Judicial Notice — Charter of Public Service Corporation.

The court will not take judicial notice of the provisions of the charter of a public service corporation.

[See 124 Am. St. Rep. 57.]

Public Service Commissions — Review of Findings.

In proceedings before the public service commission by a telegraph company to compel a traction company to remove its high-tension power line from dangerous proximity to the telegraph company's wires, the findings of the commission, that both parties were corporations subject to its supervision, under Acts 1908, No. 116, and that their lines were used in service to the public in and about their business carried on in the state, are determinations of mixed questions of law and fact, and conclusive on appeal as showing that the traction company fell within the provisions of section 3 of the act.

Power of Commission — Requiring Separation of Electric Wires.

Acts 1908, No. 116, § 9, giving the public service commission jurisdiction to enter judgment and make orders or decrees in all matters respecting the manner of operating and conducting any business, subject to its supervision under the act, so as to be reasonable and expedient and to promote the safety, convenience, and accommodation of the public, and respecting the sufficiency and maintenance of proper systems, plants, conduits, appliances, wires, and exchanges, and, when the public safety and welfare require, respecting the location of such wires or any portion thereof underground, confers jurisdiction on the commission to hear and determine proceedings by a telegraph company against a traction company to compel removal of power wires from dangerous proximity to telegraph wires.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

In proceedings before the public service commission by a telegraph company to compel a traction company to remove its power wires from dangerous proximity to telegraph wires, where the traction company sought to base any claim upon the intention of the legislature to take away by its charter the private rights of individuals or the telegraph company, another public service corporation, the burden is with the traction company to show that such an intention appeared by express words or necessary implication in its charter.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

An order of the public service commission, made on petition of a telegraph company, requiring a traction company, owning its right of way, to remove its high-tension power wires from dangerous proximity to telegraph wires, does not exceed the constitutional powers of the commission as being confiscatory of the traction company's property and a taking without "due process of law," in violation of Federal Const. Amendments 5 and 14; private ownership of its right of way not giving the traction company the right to erect its high-tension line thereon without regard to the rule restricting every man against using his property to the prejudice of others.

[See note at end of this case.]

Review of Findings.

The findings of the public service commission, having the force and effect of reports of special masters in courts of equity, are conclusive in the supreme court on appeal.

Requiring Separation of Electric Wires.

Where a traction company constructed its high-tension power line on its right of way in dangerous proximity to the wires of a telegraph company, though the telegraph company's lines needed some repair by way of new poles, the order of the public service commission, made on petition of the telegraph company, requiring that the traction company remove its high-tension power line to a minimum distance of 30 feet, is not an unreasonable exercise of the commission's authority.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Where the public service commission determined the necessity of an elimination of the danger in the close proximity of a traction company's high-tension power wires and a telegraph company's wires, it is within the province of the commission to determine the manner in which the elimination could best be accomplished, with a view to the operation of both lines and to the public safety.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from order of Public Service Commission, Chittenden county.

Action by Western Union Telegraph Company, plaintiff, against Burlington Traction Company, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. AFFIRMED.

[507] This case comes before the Supreme Court by appeal from the order of the Public Service Commission. The petition was brought by the Western Union [508] Telegraph Company against the Vergennes Power Company; but the report of the commission states that at the outset of the first hearing, it was stated that the Burlington Traction Company was practically the party in interest instead of the Vergennes Power Company, the Burlington Traction Company being the real owner of whatever there was to the Vergennes Power Company; that it was thereupon agreed by all the parties that the Burlington Traction Company should be substituted as petitionee for the Vergennes Power Company, whereupon the Burlington Traction Company entered as petitionee in the matter and appeared by counsel; and that the latter company is thereafter in the report designated as the petitionee. It is so designated in the opinion of the court.

The commission reports the following facts: It was conceded by both parties that the petitioner's lines were erected before the high tension line of the petitionee was erected, and that there has been no change in the petitioner's lines since the high tension line of the petitionee was erected. Both parties to this proceeding are corporations subject to the supervision of the commission under No. 116 of the Acts of 1908, and the lines of said parties which are described and designated in the report and order are used by them in service to the public and about the business carried on by them in this state.

In presenting its case, the petitioner arbitrarily divided that part of petitionee's high tension line against which it petitioned into twenty-one sections. Sections 19-21 were not urged at the hearing, and are not in question. The first section begins at a point about 2,000 feet north of Ferrisburgh station; thence the first eighteen sections which are consecutive, extend northerly along the west side of the right of way of the Rutland Railroad Company and parallel thereto, ending at a point about one and one-half miles south of Shelburne station at which the high tension line and the right of way diverge.

The petitioner, on February 23, 1910, and before the petitionee had taken any steps looking to the construction of its high tension line or the acquisition of any real estate or rights incident thereto, entered into a written contract with the Rutland Railroad Company, by the terms of which it acquired the right to maintain its poles and wires at the places within the railroad right of way and in the manner set forth in the report for a period of twenty-five years from January 1, 1910. This [509] contract also gave the railroad company the right to use certain of the petitioner's wires. The petitioner's poles and wires had been located at these places specified in the contract for a considerable period prior to the execution thereof. The petitionee erected its high tension line sometime subsequent to the month of April in the year 1912, and upon a private right of way which it purchased. This high tension line, consisting of three solid copper wires, one of which is located on top of the poles, and the others on the ends of the cross-arms, constantly carries a voltage of 22,000. The poles are placed one hundred thirty feet apart. There was no evidence tending to show that the petitionee had any other right of way than the one which its high tension line now occupies.

The petitioner has two lines of poles and wires, located wholly within the limits of the railroad right of way, which extend from a point opposite to the beginning of section 1 of the high tension line to the point opposite the end of section 18 thereof, a distance of a little less than eleven miles. One of these lines is on the east and the other on the west side of the single railroad track. The line west of the track is parallel with the high tension line for the whole of this distance and is constructed with twenty-five foot class B and C cedar poles, each carrying two cross-arms. The lower arms carry three wires on the west of the poles and two on the east side of the poles. The two outside wires on the west of the poles are a telephone circuit used by the railroad company in its general business. The wire on the west which is nearest the poles is a railroad telegraph wire for general messages. The wire on the east of and nearer the poles is a telegraph wire used jointly by the petitioner for commercial business, and by the railroad for general messages. The outside wire on the east of the poles is a commercial wire of the petitioner. The upper cross-arms carry two wires on each side of the poles. The two wires on the west of the poles are commercial telegraph wires. The wire nearer the poles on the east is a lease wire of the petitioner, and the outside wire is used by the railroad company in telegraphic train dispatching between Bellows Falls and Burlington.

The petitioner's line has been in place for a number of years and the majority of the poles need renewal, but in many instances the poles could be cut off and reset, and then have a considerable period of usefulness. But if the line of the petitioner [510] were in proper condition, the hazards set forth in the report would not be materially reduced. The report shows the location of the eighteen sections (in question) of the high tension line, the average distance at each of these sections between the centers of the petitionee's high tension pole-line and the petitioner's pole-line adjacent thereto, and the average clearance at each of the sections between the wires of the two proximate lines.

The high tension line when considered without reference to proximity or parallelism with any other line, might be regarded as fairly well constructed for the purpose for which it is used. But the proximity which exists between sections 1 and 18 inclusive of said line, and the petitioner's line west of the railroad track which is parallel, creates danger which is in no wise justifiable from the standpoint of public safety. The wooden poles of the high tension line, under abnormal stress of weather and particularly in the spring when the ground is thawing, are likely to blow over, which would almost inevitably bring about a contact between the wires of the two lines. Porcelain insulators, the type used in the high tension line, will puncture occasionally under stress of electrical service and a breakage of insulators often results therefrom. This is sometimes followed by a break and recoil of the wire which, being under considerable tension may be whipped laterally to a considerable distance, probably resulting, the present conditions existing, in a contact between the high tension and the telegraph wires. The pins holding the insulators of the high tension line are of wood, and a punctured insulator would probably result in the destruction of the pin and a liberation of the wire, with a resultant contact between the lines. At points where the two lines are closest, the line clearance in some instances is not over twenty-five inches, and if a wire in either line becomes there disconnected, an ordinary swing of the disconnected wire would result in contact between the two lines. At these last mentioned points, it is extremely hazardous for linemen to work on the ends of petitioner's cross-arms nearest the high tension line. All the hazards mentioned are intensified by the use of wooden pins in the high tension line. Such pins tend gradually to disintegrate when used in connection with voltage of an intensity as high as 22,000. The lack of storm and head guying and of [511] sufficient side guying, and the use of solid instead of stranded wire in the electric line, also go to intensify the danger created by the proximity of the two lines. Contact between wires of the two lines would produce an instantaneous electrification by a current of at least 16,000 volts of the petitioner's wire and every instrument and piece of apparatus connected therewith at every point on the wire, with the attendant probability of injury or death to persons using said instrument or apparatus.

The findings in conclusion are, that the maintenance and operation of the aforesaid eighteen sections of the petitionee's high tension line with a voltage of 22,000 at the proximity which exists between the same and the petitioner's telegraph line adjacent thereto, constitutes an ever present public danger which should be eliminated; and that a separation of the line of poles carrying the first eighteen sections of the high tension line and the petitioner's line of poles parallel thereto and west of the railroad track to a minimum distance of thirty feet would eliminate the danger above described in the most reasonable and feasible manner, if both lines are to be continued in operation.

The order of the commission, dated February 17, 1916, is as follows: "Upon the facts found as above set forth, it is ordered that the Burlington Traction Company shall, before the first day of July, 1916, separate the line of poles of the eighteen sections of its high tension line above described to a minimum distance of thirty feet from the line of poles of the Western Union Telegraph Company parallel thereto on the west side of the railroad track or, as an alternative, cease from transmitting high tension current over said eighteen sections after said date until such separation is made."

On March 27, 1916, by order of a Justice of the Supreme Court upon the application of the petitionee, the foregoing order of the commission was stayed, and the time therein limited was extended to October 1, 1916, with leave to make further application for extension, if circumstances warrant.

An appeal was taken by the petitionee from the order made by the commission, and from the order overruling the petitionee's exceptions to the report.

George W. Stone, A. G. Whittemore and Sherman R. Moulton for appellant.

W. B. C. Stickney for appellee.

[513] WATSON, J. (after stating the facts).—It is contended by the petitionee that the order of the public service commission should be set aside for three reasons: (1) Because it is beyond the scope of the statutory authority delegated to the commission; (2) because it is beyond the constitutional powers of the commission; (3) because it is so unreasonable, that it comes "within the elementary rule that the substance, and not the shadow, determines the validity of the exercise of the power." No other question is within the appellant's brief.

I. By statute the findings of fact by the commission have the force and effect of the reports of special masters in courts of equity, whenever the cause is taken by appeal to this court. And any party who feels himself aggrieved by the final order, judgment or decree of the commission is given the right of appeal for the correction of any errors excepted to in its proceedings, or in the form or substance of its orders, judgments and decrees, on the facts found and reported by the commission. P. S. 4598, 4599, as amended by Sec. 1, No. 116, Laws of 1908.

The report states that both parties to this proceeding are corporations subject to the supervision of the commission under No. 116 of the Acts of 1908, and the lines of said parties, which [514] are described and designated in the report and order, are used by them in service to the public in and about the business carried on by them in this State. No exception was taken to either of these findings. Each of these corporations, though private in character, is upon the findings a public service corporation carrying on business in this State. Neither the charter of the petitionee, nor any part of it, is before us, and notice of the provisions thereof will not be judicially taken. Briggs v. Whipple, 7 Vt. 15; Winooski v. Gokey, 49 Vt. 282. In these circumstances we think the above findings are the determinations of mixed questions of law and fact, and are conclusive as showing that the petitionee falls within the provisions of section three of the Act mentioned.

By section nine of that Act, the public service commission is given jurisdiction to render judgment and make orders and decrees in all matters provided for in the charter of any corporation owning or operating any plant, line or property subject to supervision under the Act, and is given like jurisdiction in all matters respecting: "III. The manner of operating and conducting any business subject to supervision under this act, so as to be reasonable and expedient, and to promote the safety, convenience and accommodation of the public." And "V. The sufficiency and maintenance of proper systems, plants, conduits, appliances, wires and exchanges, and when the public safety and welfare require the location of such wires or any portion thereof underground." The provisions of these two clauses are sufficiently broad to confer jurisdiction upon the commission to hear and determine the matters here involved as shown by the record, and to render judgment, make orders and decrees therein.

II. It is urged that the order made is in excess of the constitutional powers of the commission, in that it is confiscatory of the property of the petitionee, and is a taking of it without due process of law, in violation of the 5th and the 14th Amendments of the Constitution of the United States.

The report shows that, by written contract entered into with the Rutland Railroad Company on February 23, 1910, and before the petitionee had taken any steps looking to the construction of its high tension line or the acquisition of any real estate or rights incident thereto, the petitioner acquired the right to maintain its telegraph poles and wires at the places within the [515] railroad right of way, and in the manner, stated in the report, for the period of twenty-five years from January 1, 1910; that the petitioner's poles and wires had been there located and erected for a considerable period prior to the execution of the contract; that the petitionee erected its high tension line sometime subsequent to the month of April in the year 1912, and upon its private right of way by purchase; and that since the last named line was erected, there has been no change in the petitioner's lines.

The report further shows that the high tension line, consisting of three solid copper wires, constantly carries a voltage of 22,000; that this line, when considered without reference to proximity or parallelism with any other line, might be regarded as fairly well constructed for the purpose for which it is used; that the proximity which exists between sections 1 to 18 inclusive of this line and the petitioner's parallel line west of the railroad track, creates danger which is in no wise justifiable from the standpoint of public safety; that at points where the two lines are closest, the line clearance is, in some instances, not over twenty-five inches, and if a wire in either line become there disconnected, an ordinary swing of the disconnected wire would result in contact between the two lines; that at these last mentioned points, it is extremely hazardous for linemen to work on the ends of the petitioner's cross-arms nearest the high tension line; that contact between wires of the two lines would produce an instantaneous electrification, by a current of at least 16,000 volts, of the petitioner's wire and every instrument and piece of apparatus connected therewith at every point on the wire, with the attendant probability of injury or death to persons using said instruments or apparatus; that the maintenance and operation of the aforementioned eighteen sections of the petitionee's line with a voltage of 22,000, at the proximity existing between the same and the petitioner's telegraph line adjacent thereto, constitutes an ever present public danger that should be eliminated; and that the separation of the line of poles carrying these eighteen sections of the high tension line, and the petitioner's line of poles parallel thereto and on the west side of the railroad track, to a minimum distance of thirty feet, would eliminate the danger in the most reasonable and feasible manner, if both lines are to be continued in operation.

[516] No claim is made that by the provisions of the petitionee's charter the locating of its high tension line where it is in the sections in question, was mandatory or imperative; and the contrary must be assumed, for if the petitionee sought to base any claim upon the intention of the Legislature to take away the private rights of individuals or of another public service corporation, the burden was with the petitionee to show that by express words, or by necessary implication, such an intention appears. Per Lord Blackburn in Metropolitan Asylum Dist. v. Hill, 6 App. Cas. 193, 18 Eng. Rul. Cas. 556. See also Rutland-Canadian R. Co. v. Central Vermont R. Co. 72 Vt. 128, 47 Atl. 399. Fixing the location of its line, acquiring the right of way therefor in that particular place, and erecting the line there, were discretionary acts of the company. Private ownership of the right of way did not give the company the right to erect its high tension line thereon without regarding the rule of law restricting every man against using his property to the prejudice of others. In Clarendon v. Rutland R. Co. 75 Vt. 6, 52 Atl. 1057, this Court said: "It was not within the scope of legislative authority to grant to the company a right to construct and operate its road without regard to the rights of other persons and corporations. It is a settled principle that every holder of property, however absolute his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use of it shall not be injurious to the enjoyment of others having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community. All property is held subject to general regulations made by the Legislature, under its police power, for the common good and general welfare." In Carty v. Winooski, 78 Vt. 104, 62 Atl. 45, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 95, 6 Ann. Cas. 436, it is said that, "One of the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty is the governing and regulating of its internal police." And that, "It is a governmental function founded upon the duty of the state to protect the public safety, the public health, and the public morals." In Nelson v. Vermont, etc. R. Co. 26 Vt. 717, 62 Am. Dec. 614, it was held that by general laws, the Legislature may require public service corporations to conform to such regulations of a police character, as they may deem for the security of the rights of citizens generally, and most conducive to quiet and good order, and the security of property, and even of animals. "And if the running of railroads, under [517] present restrictions, was found cruelly and recklessly destructive, even of the lives of domestic animals, it would be strange if the Legislature could not interfere, upon the general maxim, that every one shall be bound and required, sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas." In Thorpe v. Rutland, etc. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625, it is said that the police power extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the State; and that according to the maxim given above, it must of course be within the range of legislative action to define the mode and manner in which every one may so use his own as not to injure others. In State Board of Health v. St. Johnsbury, 82 Vt. 276, 73 Atl. 581, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 766, 18 Ann. Cas. 496, the principle of this maxim is said to be "a universal and prevailing obligation, and a condition on which all property is held, the application of which in the particular conditions must necessarily be within the reasonable discretion of the Legislature; and that when such discretion is exercised in a given case by means appropriate and reasonable, not oppressive nor discriminatory, it is not subject to constitutional objection." See also State v. Morse, 84 Vt. 387, 80 Atl. 189, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 190, Ann. Cas. 1913B 218.

In Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 979, 17 S. Ct. 581, the court, through Mr. Justice Harlan, said: "The plaintiff in error took its charter subject to the power of the state to provide for the safety of the public, in so far as the safety of the lives and persons of the people were involved in the operation of the railroad. The company laid its tracks subject to the condition necessarily implied that their use could be so regulated by competent authority as to insure the public safety. And as all property, whether owned by private persons or by corporations, is held subject to the authority of the state to regulate its use in such manner as not to unnecessarily endanger the lives and the personal safety of the people, it is not a condition of the exercise of that authority that the state shall indemnify the owners of property for the damage or injury resulting from its exercise. Property thus damaged or injured is not, within the meaning of the Constitution, taken for public use, nor is the owner deprived of it without due process of law. The requirement that compensation be made for private property taken for public use imposes no restriction [518] upon the inherent power of the state by reasonable regulations to protect the lives and secure the safety of the people. In the recent case of New York, etc. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 38 U. S. (L. ed.) 269, 14 S. Ct. 437, this Court declared it to be thoroughly established that the inhibitions of the Constitution of the United States upon the impairment of the obligation of contracts, or the deprivation of property without due process or of the equal protection of the laws, by the states, are not violated by the legitimate exercise of legislative power in securing the public safety, health, and morals. 'The governmental power of self-protection' the court said 'cannot be contracted away, nor can the exercise of rights granted, nor the use of property, be withdrawn from the implied liability to governmental regulation in particulars essential to the preservation of the community from injury.' The recent case of Bacon v. Boston, etc. R. Co. 83 Vt. 421, 76 Atl. 128, contains a lengthy discussion of the police power and its applicability in regulating public service corporations in the interest of the public. There the report of the public service commission showed that at the railroad station in White River Junction, a condition inconsistent with the safety of the travelling public existed, and that additional platform space was necessary to relieve the situation; and it appeared that some change of tracks was a necessary incident of providing such platform space as should be reasonably safe and free from discomfort. It was held that so far as the movement of the rails adjacent to the station was such necessary incident, the commission had power to order it; that moving back from the station, the railroad tracks, as safety required, was a legitimate exercise of the police power, was not a taking of property without compensation, did not constitute expropriation of property, nor impair any obligation of contract.

The facts reported show that the part of the petitionee's high tension line, here in question, at the short distance it is now located from the petitioner's parallel telegraph line west of the railroad track, is highly dangerous to the public safety, in that it constantly endangers the lives and persons of the petitioner's linemen at work in the place mentioned, and the lives and persons of all those who are anywhere using the instruments and apparatus connected with that telegraph wire, and consequently that said high tension line constitutes a public nuisance. In these circumstances, on the authorities cited, the [519] commission has the constitutional power of regulation in the interest of the public, and if this power was not exercised by it in such a manner as to cause it to be within the rule that the substance and not the shadow, determines the validity of the exercise of the power, the order made is not confiscatory and does not deprive the petitionee of its property without due process of law. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 215 U. S. 452, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 280, 30 S. Ct. 155; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union Pac. R. Co. 222 U. S. 541, 56 U. S. (L. ed.) 308, 32 S. Ct. 108.

III. It is contended that the order, even though in form within the power delegated to the commission, is an unreasonable exercise of authority. This question must be determined upon the facts reported; for the findings of the commission, having the force and effect of reports of special masters in courts of equity, when the cause is in this Court on appeal, are conclusive.

When the petitionee constructed its high tension line, it had knowledge of the location of the petitioner's lines; and it will be taken to have had knowledge of the natural tendencies of electric energy in its transmission under high voltage, and of the inherent dangers attending it. In such circumstances it would be most inequitable and unjust to say that the petitionee could locate this line in disregard of the legal rights of the petitioner, thereby create a public nuisance of the nature hereinbefore described, and then, because of some repairs (by way of more or fewer new poles), needed in the latter's parallel line, that the nuisance should be abated and the dangers eliminated by the removal of the line of the innocent party, instead of by the removal of the line of the wrong-doer, as was ordered in this case. By the order made, the petitionee is required to separate its line of poles of the eighteen sections in question, to the minimum distance of thirty feet from the line of the poles of the petitioner on the west side of the railroad track, within the time limited, or thereafter to cease using its line for the transmission of high tension current until separation is made. Such separation is expressly found to be the most reasonable and feasible manner of eliminating the danger, if both lines are to be continued in operation. The commission having determined the necessity for such elimination, it was within the province of the commission to determine the manner in which this could best be accomplished with a view to the operation of the lines [520] and the public safety (Sayers v. Montpelier & W. R. R. 90 Vt. 201, 97 Atl. 660); and the record affords no basis for the contention that the order is an unreasonable exercise of authority to that end.

Order of the Public Service Commission affirmed and cause remanded that the commission may fix a new time within which the order shall be complied with.

NOTE.

Power of Public Service Commission to Prevent Maintenance of Electric Wires in Close Proximity.

By the weight of authority an electric company is not entitled to enjoin another similar company from stringing wires to transmit a high tension current in such close proximity to those of the first company as to involve danger of damage by induction. See the note to Citizens Telephone Co. v. Ft. Wayne, etc. R. Co. Ann. Cas. 1916A 132. But, as is shown by the cases discussing that point, experience has demonstrated that a real danger of damage of induction exists in such a case. Moreover the charging of the wire of one company by that of another is a fruitful source of peril to person and property. See the note to Mize v. Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Co. 16 Ann. Cas. 1189. The prevention of a construction of that kind would seem therefore to be within the regulatory power of the state, and that view is taken in the reported case, which is apparently the only decision on the point. An order of a public service commission requiring a traction company to remove its high tension line to a distance of at least thirty feet from a telegraph line is held to be reasonable and to violate no constitutional rights of the traction company.

HILL

v.

PURDY ET AL.

District of Columbia Court of Appeals—June 2, 1917.

46 App. Cas. (D. C.) 495.

Wills — Estates Devisable — Contingent Remainder as "Interest" in Land.

A contingent remainder is, if the person who is to take is certain, such an "interest in real estate" as to be subject to devise by the remainderman.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from Supreme Court of District of Columbia.

Action by John Purdy et al., plaintiffs, against Josephine Postlewait et al., defendants. Elizabeth Pauline Hill, intervener. From judgment rendered, intervener appeals. AFFIRMED.

[496] This is an appeal from a decree in equity of the supreme court of the District of Columbia construing the wills of John Purdy, Rebecca Wallace, and Virginia Thompson, deceased; ordering partition by sale of certain real estate devised by said decedents, and certain accountings in respect of funds arising in the administration of said estates.

The original bill of complaint was filed by John Purdy, Annie Purdy Reager, William Wallace Purdy, Virginia Purdy Corley, and Edgar Purdy, all being children of John Purdy, Junior, deceased, and grandchildren of John Purdy, Senior, said plaintiffs claiming certain interests in the property left by said John Purdy, Senior.

The defendants to the original bill were Josephine Postlewait and Clara P. Elliot, legatees and devisees under the wills of Rebecca Wallace and Virginia Thompson, through which wills said defendants also claimed certain interests in the property left by John Purdy, Senior.

Thomas Bryan Huyck and the National Savings & Trust Company were also made defendants in the bill as custodians of certain funds involved in the controversy.

After issue joined on the original bill between the abovenamed parties, the appellant here, Elizabeth Pauline Hill, was made a party defendant in the cause and decreed to be a child of Henry Purdy, deceased, a son of John Purdy, Senior, and entitled to share whatever rights in the premises a child of said Henry Purdy might be entitled to take.

Thereafter, upon consideration of the whole case, a final decree was made disposing of all the issues presented to the court, and adjudging that all the properties involved be divided among the original beneficial parties to the cause in certain proportions fixed in the decree, to the exclusion of the said Elizabeth Pauline Hill, who took nothing.

All parties acquiesced in this decree, except Mrs. Hill, who prosecutes the present appeal alone.

Simon Wolf, Myer Cohen and Wm. G. Johnson for appellant.

J. J. Darlington and George Francis Williams for appellees.

[498] Hirtz, J.—After consideration of all questions presented by the record and by the arguments of counsel, we conclude that the decree appealed from was correct and should be affirmed, with costs; and it is so ordered.

And this court adopts as its own the learned opinion of Mr. Justice Gould filed in the supreme court of the District of Columbia in connection with the final decree of that Court:

[499] "The original bill in this case was filed to secure the construction of three wills: that of John Purdy, and those of his two daughters and devisees, Ellen Rebecca Wallace and Virginia Thompson. It also sought a distribution of funds derived from sales of certain real estate devised by said John Purdy, such funds being held by the defendant, the National Savings & Trust Company, as trustee appointed by the court in prior equity causes, and of other funds collected by the defendant Huyck, as rents of other real estate of said John Purdy.

"On August 24, 1914, an amended bill was filed making one Elizabeth Pauline Hill a party defendant on the ground that her claimed rights in the estate of said Purdy might be determined. The amended bill also seeks a partition of the real estate described in the original bill, being the undistributed portion of the estate of said John Purdy.

"John Purdy, a resident of the District, died July 22, 1881, possessed of a considerable estate, both real and personal. His will was dated December 27, 1866, and two codicils thereto were dated, respectively, September 5th, 1868 and September 18, 1872; they were duly probated September 27, 1881. The personal estate has long since been distributed. He left a widow, who received a bequest in lieu of dower in the form of an annuity charged upon his real estate, but she has since died. At the date of his will he had five children; three sons, Henry, Alexander and John, and two daughters, both married, Rebecca Wallace and Virginia Thompson. Henry died before the testator. Alexander, who was given an annuity under the will, departed this life before his brothers and sisters. The plaintiffs are the children of the son John. The defendants, Josephine Postlewait and Clara P. Elliot, are devisees of the lost survivor of the children, Virginia Thompson. Elizabeth Pauline Hill, made a defendant by the amended bill, is a daughter of Henry Purdy, who, as heretofore stated, predeceased his father.

"Testimony was taken in open court as to whether or not Elizabeth Pauline Hill was the daughter of said Henry Purdy, which resulted in a decree dated June 29, 1915, adjudging her to be the legitimated child of said Henry Purdy.

[500] "The portion of the will of John Purdy, Sr., which the court is asked to construe is the residuary clause containing devises to John Purdy, Jr., Rebecca Wallace, and Virginia Thompson. The clause in question gave one third of the residuary estate to his son John Purdy, with a proviso that if the son died childless, his third part should go to the testator's daughters, Rebecca Wallace and Virginia Thompson, and their respective heirs, in equal shares; a second one third part of the residuary estate was given to the testator's daughter, Rebecca Wallace, with the proviso that if she died childless, her one third share should pass to John Purdy, Jr., and Virginia Thompson, and their respective heirs; while the remaining one-third interest was given to Virginia Thompson, with the proviso that, if she died childless, her share should pass to John Purdy, Jr., and Rebecca Wallace, and their respective heirs.

"It thus appears that John Purdy, Jr., took a fee in his one-third share, subject to be cut down to a life estate if he died childless, with an executory devise of a fee simple of a one-third interest in another third if Rebecca Wallace died childless, and an executory devise in fee simple of one-half interest in the remaining one-third share if Virginia Thompson died childless.

"Rebecca Wallace took a third part in fee simple, subject to be cut down to a life estate if she died childless, with an executory devise in fee simple of a one-half interest in another third share if John Purdy, Jr., died childless, and an executory devise in fee simple of another one-half interest in the remaining one-third share, if Virginia Thompson died childless.

"Virginia Thompson took a fee in her one-third share, subject to be cut down to a life estate if she died childless, with an executory devise in fee simple of a one half of another one-third share if John Purdy died childless, and an executory fee simple devise of a one-half interest of the remaining third share if Rebecca Wallace died childless.

"1. John Purdy, Jr., died August 7, 1887, intestate, the first of the three residuary devisees to depart this life. He left children, who are the plaintiffs, to whom, of course, passed his residuary one third in fee simple.

[501] "2. Rebecca Wallace died April 12, 1907, without children, so that her one-third share was cut down to a life estate, terminating with her death, and passed, one half to the heirs of John Purdy, Jr., and one half to Virginia Thompson. But she also had, at her death, under the will of her father, an executory devise of one half of Virginia Thompson's residuary one third, in the event that the latter died childless. Mrs Wallace left a will, the eighth paragraph of which reads as follows: 'All my right, title, and interest in the estate of my late father, John Purdy, I give, devise, and bequeath, one half to my sister Virginia Thompson, and the other half thereof to the children of my deceased brother John Purdy.'

"At her death, therefore, the residuary estate of John Purdy, Sr., stood as follows:

"A. The children of John Purdy, Jr., were seized as follows:

"Item 1. One-third share devised to their father by the will of John Purdy, Sr.,

"Item 2. One half of the one-third share devised to Mrs. Wallace by the same will, she having died childless,

"Item 3. An expectancy in one half of the one third devised to Mrs. Thompson, should she die childless,

"Item 4. An expectancy, under the will of Mrs. Wallace, of one half of her half share in the executory devise attached to Mrs. Thompson's original one-third share of the residuary estate, if the latter died childless.

"This would make their portion, absolutely and in expectancy, as follows:
 $\frac{1}{3} + \frac{1}{3} + \frac{1}{3} + \frac{1}{3} = \frac{4}{3}$.

"3. Virginia Thompson, the remaining residuary devisee of John Purdy, Sr., died August 19, 1913, leaving a will by which she devised all her real estate to the defendants Josephine Postlewait and Clara P. Elliot.

"Upon her death, childless, as above stated, one half of her original residuary one third passed to the children of John Purdy, Jr. (Item 3, supra). The other one half of her original residuary one third passed to Rebecca Wallace, under the terms of the will of John Purdy, Sr. As before stated Rebecca Wallace devised this one half of one third as follows: one half (one [502] half of one half of one third—one twelfth) to the children of John Purdy, Jr., and the other one half (one half of one half of one third—one twelfth) to Virginia Thompson. The controversy in the case is whether this last-mentioned one twelfth passed by the will of Virginia Thompson to the defendants, Josephine Postlewait and Clara P. Elliot. There is no question but that the one half of Rebecca Wallace's original residuary one third passed to these devisees through Mrs. Thompson's will.

"On behalf of the complainants, and of Mrs. Hill, the intervener, it is contended that the one twelfth referred to which Mrs. Wallace attempted to dispose of by her will was contingent, and not capable of being devised until the contingency happened; viz., the death of Mrs. Thompson without children.

"But the authorities do not support this contention.

"Thus, in Loring v. Arnold, 15 R. I. 428, 8 Atl. 335, the will devised real estate to testator's son James for his natural life, to his heirs and assigns if he left children, and if none, then the lands to descend to Julia Barney and other named persons. James died childless February 8, 1885. Julia Barney had died four years earlier, leaving a will by which she had devised her interest in all real estate in Rhode Island to Charles Barney. The question was whether she had at the time of her death, four years prior to the death of James, a devisable interest in the land disposed of by the will of the testator. The court said: 'She had a contingent remainder in this portion of the estate of Thomas Whipple. Her estate depended upon the leaving of "any lawful child or children" by her brother James. This contingency was not determined until after her death, when James died in 1885. Nevertheless she had a devisable interest. In Brown v. Williams, 5 R. I. 309, the court, quoting the works of Lord Mansfield, declares it to be the established doctrine "that in all contingent, springing, and executory uses, where the person who is to take is certain, so that the same are descendible, they are devisable, these being convertible terms." The court points out the distinction to be observed between cases, 'where the person who is to take is certain' and those where the contingency [503] is to determine who is to be the object of the contingent limitation. In the former, the interest is descendible; in the latter, "no one can claim, before the contingency decides the matter, that any interest is vested in him, to descend from, and hence to be transferred or devised by him."

Ann. Cas. 1918R.—54.

"The court of appeals of Maryland, on a recent case, Fisher v. Wagner, 109 Md. 243, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 121, 71 Atl. 999, gave careful consideration to the question involved, and, in an exhaustive opinion by Chief Justice Boyd, reached the same conclusion. James I. Fisher's will devised the residue of his estate equally among his four children, Robert A., Richard D., Ammita E. (who afterwards married Charles Green), and Mary M. Wagner. In case Mrs. Green died without leaving a child, one-third part was devised to his son Robert. Robert died in 1881, leaving a will in which he devised and bequeathed the residue of the estate of which he might die possessed in trust, etc. Mrs. Green died in 1908 leaving no issue. The question was whether Robert's contingent interest in the estate devised to Mrs. Green passed under his will. After a careful review of the Maryland cases and a full citation of cases from other jurisdictions and quotations from text-writers, the chief justice, speaking for the whole court, concludes: 'Robert A. Fisher took a transmissible and devisable estate under the will of his father, as the person to take was certain.'

"A note to this case in 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 121, says: 'Where the person who will take is certain, a contingent remainder may be devised subject to the contingency;' and many authorities are cited in support of the statement.

"While, in view of the authorities, it is not necessary to seek statutory provisions to support the proposition involved, the following sections of the Code are instructive:

"Sec. 512. [31 Stat. at L. 1269, chap. 854 as amended 32 Stat. at L. 532, chap. 1329.]

Any interest in or claim to real estate, whether entitled to present or future possession and enjoyment, and whether vested or contingent, may be disposed of by deed or will, and any estate which would be good as an executory devise, may be created by deed.'

[504] "Sec. 1022. [31 Stat. at L. 1351, chap. 854.] A future estate is vested when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the land upon the expiration of the intermediate or precedent estate, or upon the arrival of a certain period or event when it is to commence in possession.'

"Sec. 1030. Expectant estates shall be descendible, devisable, and alienable in the same manner as estates in possession.'

"Sec. 1623. [31 Stat. at L. 1433, chap. 854.] All lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and personal estate which might pass by deed or gift, or which would, in the case of the proprietor's dying intestate, descend to or devolve on his or her heirs or other representatives, shall be subject to be disposed of, transferred, and passed by his or her last will, testament or codicil.'

"The conclusion is that the devise by Mrs. Wallace to Mrs. Thompson of one half of Mrs. Wallace's interest in the estate of John Purdy, Sr., carried with it one half of her one half interest in the executory devise attached to Mrs. Thompson's original one third of that estate, and gave Mrs. Thompson a fee simple in the one twelfth interest in question, which passed under her devise of all her real estate to the defendants Postlewait and Elliot.

"It follows that the plaintiffs are entitled to nine twelfths and the defendants to three twelfths of the estate. And a decree will be signed accordingly.

"The funds held by the defendant National Savings & Trust Company, as trustee, hereinbefore referred to, amounting to about $6,000 exclusive of accumulative interest, represent an undistributed balance of proceeds of sales of certain parcels of real estate of which John Purdy died seized and title to which passed under the residuary clause of his will already considered. The suits in which said sales were made were based, so far as an undivided two thirds interest in the lands involved therein was concerned, upon the provisions of law contained in sec. 100 of the Code, giving this court jurisdiction to order sales of lands in which one or more persons shall be entitled to an estate for life or years, or base or qualified fee simple, or any other limited or conditional estates, and any other person or persons shall be [505] entitled to a remainder or an interest by way of executory devise in the lands. As to the other undivided one third, it was alleged in the bills in said equity causes that the title thereto was vested, in fee simple, in the children of John Purdy, Junior, deceased (plaintiffs in the present suit), and that they were entitled to have the said lands sold for the purpose of partition, as to said third interest. The decrees passed in said causes appointed said National Savings & Trust Company trustee to sell, and directed that of the net proceeds of sale one third be distributed among the children of said John Purdy, Junior, and that the residue of said net proceeds be held by the trustee so as to inure in like manner as provided by the aforesaid will of John Purdy, deceased.

"The parties to said equity causes (which causes are known as Nos. 24505 and 25264 in equity, and have been consolidated) were the said children of John Purdy, Junior, deceased (plaintiffs in the present suit), and the two daughters of John Purdy, Senior; namely, Ellen Rebecca Wallace (called in the will Rebecca Wallace) and Virginia Thompson. It appears that after the sales, distribution to the children of John Purdy, Junior, of one third of the net proceeds thereof was made, as directed, by the decrees in said causes.

"The death of Mrs. Wallace occurred after the said partial distribution, and application to the court was subsequently made on behalf of all the surviving parties to the cause for distribution of another one third of the net proceeds of sale. Following a reference to and report by the auditor, the court directed that one half of the one third be distributed to the children of John Purdy, Junior, and the other one half thereof to the said Virginia Thompson. The remaining one third of the net proceeds of sale was invested and held by the trustees under the terms of the original and supplemental decrees in said equity causes, and pursuant to the provisions of said Code sec. 100 'so as to inure in like manner as provided by the original grant to the use of the same parties who would be entitled to the land sold.'

"The balance of said funds thus held by said trustee represented [506] that interest or share in the real estate sold, devised by the will of John Purdy, whereby he devised a one-third part of all the rest and residue of his estate to said Virginia Thompson and her heirs, with the proviso that if she died childless, her third share should pass to John Purdy, J., and Rebecca Wallace and their respective heirs. Said Virginia Thompson was therefore entitled to receive the income from said balance of proceeds during the remainder of her life, and it appears that the same was paid to her accordingly. After her death, which occurred in August, 1913, the defendant Josephine Postlewait, executrix of the will of Virginia Thompson, claimed the entire funds so held by the National Savings & Trust Company, while the plaintiffs herein also claimed the same funds. The intervener, Elizabeth Pauline Hill, has also asserted a claim to share the said funds, on the ground that Ellen Rebecca Wallace having died childless, she, as the only child of a deceased brother, Henry Purdy, is one of the heirs of Mrs. Wallace.

"The proper disposition of these funds, however, depends upon the application of the same principles already stated. The plaintiffs are entitled, as children of John Purdy, Junior, to one half of said funds to which he would have been entitled if living, while the other one half, to which Mrs. Wallace would have been entitled if living, goes not to her heirs as such (the plaintiffs and said Elizabeth Pauline Hill), but to the devisees under her will. As hereinbefore stated, she died before Virginia Thompson, and by her will devised one half of all her right, title, and interest in the estate of her father, John Purdy, unto said Virginia Thompson and the other one half unto the children of her deceased brother, John Purdy. The plaintiffs by virtue of this devise are entitled to one half of one half of said funds, making, with the one half to which they are entitled as children of John Purdy, three fourths of the net funds, while the defendants Miss Postlewait and Mrs. Elliot, in their capacity of devisees of Virginia Thompson, are entitled to the remaining one fourth.

"A reference to the auditor should be taken to state the account of the trustee and distribution in accordance with this opinion.

[507] "It should be added that on the pleadings in the present case a question is presented as to the validity of the several executory devises above referred to, their validity being alleged in the original and amended bills and denied in the answer of the defendants, Postlewait and Elliot, the answer (to the original bill) of the said two defendants stating in this regard that they are advised and believe, and so aver, that under said will of John Purdy, the said Ellen Rebecca Wallace and Virginia Thompson took fee simple estates, clear of limitations. Under this construction of the will, if sustained, the said two defendants, as sole devisees of Virginia Thompson, would be entitled to a one-half interest in the real estate, while the entire trust fund held by the trustee above-mentioned would be payable to the executrix of Mrs. Thompson. As to this theory of construction it is sufficient to say that this court is clearly of opinion that the executory devises referred to are valid, and the point was conceded by counsel for said two defendants in his argument at the hearing, and in his brief filed after argument."

NOTE.

The reported case, applying a statute providing that any "interest in real estate" is subject to devise, holds that a contingent remainder may be devised if the person who will take the remainder is certain. The meaning of the term "interest" as used with respect to the transfer of property is discussed in the note to Copeland v. Eaton, Ann. Cas. 1912B 521.

CHILTON

v.

COMMONWEALTH.

Kentucky Court of Appeals—May 31, 1916.

170 Ky. 491; 186 S. W. 191.

Homicide — Sufficiency of Evidence — Self-defense Not Shown.

In a prosecution for murder, where it appeared that accused had left his barn carrying his shotgun at a time when he was in no immediate danger, and approached the pike upon which the decedents with whom he had had trouble were walking, evidence is held to be sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty.

Instructions — Self-defense.

In a prosecution for murder an instruction on self-defense must leave the question to be determined by the jury in the light of all the facts and circumstances in the case, rather than in the light of certain particular facts, whether relied on by the commonwealth or by the accused.

Trial — Custody and Conduct of Jury.

The members of a jury impaneled to try a homicide case should not be subjected to any outside influence, but their conclusion should be the result of an unbiased judgment, based on the evidence heard in the courtroom and the law as expounded by the court, considered in the light of proper arguments by counsel for the prosecution and defense.

Taking Jury to Revival Meeting.

In a prosecution for murder, where the jury were present at a revival meeting during the trial, a mere theoretical discussion of sin and its punishment, considered solely from the angle of divine government, is not prejudicial to the rights of the defendant.

[See note at end of this case.]

Disqualification of Juror — As Ground for New Trial.

In a prosecution for murder, the fact that a juror on the day before the trial stated that "he had heard much about the case and he thought it was a bad case" is insufficient to authorize a new trial on the ground that the juror was disqualified from acting because of any opinion he had formed as to defendant's guilt.

New Trial — Newly Discovered Evidence — Affidavit Showing Diligence — Necessity.

In a prosecution for murder, where a new trial is sought for newly discovered evidence, the defendant must file his own affidavit stating that he did not know, and by the exercise of reasonable diligence could not have known, of the existence of the newly discovered evidence until after the trial was concluded.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Anderson county.

Criminal action. Joe Chilton convicted of murder and appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Lillard Carter for appellant.

M. M. Logan, C. H. Morris and Leslie W. Morris for appellee.

[491] CLAY, C.—Appellant, Joe Chilton, who was convicted of the murder of Dollins Hawkins and given a life sentence in the penitentiary, seeks a reversal of the judgment.

For a proper understanding of the questions raised a brief statement of the facts will be necessary. It appears that appellant, with his wife and three children, lived in Anderson county about eight miles from Lawrenceburg and near the Bond Brothers' Distillery on Gilbert's creek. A turnpike, known as the Harry Wise pike, runs through appellant's farm and by the distillery, where it joins the [492] Lawrenceburg pike. Though appellant owns land on both sides of the Harry Wise pike, that pike is a public road and after running through appellant's farm passes the home of Dollins Hawkins some distance away. Appellant's house is situated on a hill somewhere in the neighborhood of two hundred yards from the pike, and a footpath leads from his house by his barn to the pike near two water tubs. Along the pike and some distance therefrom a fence runs practically parallel with the pike, inclosing that part of the farm on which appellant's residence is located. Near the point where the footpath passes this fence there is a gate through which the path leads towards the pike. At a point near the pike the path bends to the south and runs with the pike. Just above the pike is a long bluff about four feet high, made in grading the pike on the hillside.

The path leads abruptly down the bluff into the turnpike. Near the home of appellant and just above the distillery lived Elmer Standforth. A road or path leads down the hill from his residence to the turnpike at a point near the distillery. In front of the distillery is the boiler room facing the pike, and a path leads therefrom to the pike by way of a foot bridge across an intervening branch.

Dollins Hawkins was a brother-in-law of appellant. Some three or four months before the homicide, Hawkins, according to the story of appellant, told him of a certain scandal affecting Standforth's wife. This appellant repeated to his own wife. Subsequently his wife told Standforth of the report. Thereafter Hawkins came to appellant's home, called him a liar and abused and threatened him with a hand spike. At that time appellant made no effort to defend himself and begged off from the difficulty. Some time later Hawkins, Standforth and appellant were in the distillery office. Hawkins and Standforth went out. Hawkins told Standforth to call appellant out. They began quarreling and appellant tried to beg out of the difficulty. Standforth remarked that the matter had to be settled; he was not going to have any such talk get out. Mr. Jeff Bond objected to their quarreling on the premises. Standforth then remarked that he was going to get Hawkins and appellant together again and have the matter settled. About eight o'clock on the morning of the tragedy Hawkins and Standforth met at the quart house conducted by Bryan Hawkins on the Kentucky river a mile and a half from the scene of the killing. Dollins [493] Hawkins bought a quart of whiskey. Bryan Hawkins gave Dollins a half pint bottle of whiskey for his sick uncle. Thereafter Dollins Hawkins and Standforth went to the Bond Brothers' Distillery. After being there a while Standforth started for his home. In the meantime appellant had gone to the distillery to get some wire. When he reached the bridge Standforth came towards him. According to appellant's statement, Standforth began cursing him and wanted him to go down the creek with him and Hawkins. Standforth called him a damn coward, and appellant stated that he did not want any trouble with him. Standforth then stated that he was going to get Hawkins and come up to appellant's home. Other witnesses said that Standforth stated that the matter had to be settled and damn quick, and wanted appellant to get off the distillery premises. Appellant then left and went to his house. There he procured a shot gun, loaded it with two shells and went to his barn. After appellant left the distillery, Hawkins and Standforth started up the pike. John Taylor Bond heard Standforth say: "We will meet him." He then went up towards appellant's barn for the purpose of avoiding trouble, and appellant inquired where Hawkins and Standforth were. Bond told appellant that he saw them coming up the hill. Appellant and his boy say that Bond told them that he had seen Standforth and Hawkins coming up to appellant's house to get him. Taking his boy with him, appellant started towards the pike. Appellant says that when Hawkins and Standforth approached he pleaded with them to drop the matter and be friends. Hawkins and Standforth immediately began to threaten and abuse him and started up the path towards him. Hawkins was in the lead and threw his hands behind him as if to draw a weapon. Standforth was also approaching in a threatening manner. Appellant first shot Hawkins and then Standforth. As to what occurred at the time of the killing appellant is corroborated by his fifteen year old boy, who was present.

According to the evidence for the Commonwealth, appellant spoke to Hawkins in a friendly manner while at the distillery and there appeared to be no friction between them. Hawkins and Standforth were both shot in the side of the neck and face, and their bodies were found, that of Hawkins in the road about seven feet above the path, and that of Standforth about seventeen feet above the path, and on the side of the road near the bluff. Persons who examined [494] their bodies found no weapons of any kind on them, except a small knife in the possession of Standforth. Some two or three witnesses examined the hillside and found no footprints or blood that would indicate that the two men were on the hillside when shot. It appears, however, that Mrs. Hawkins was present before any others reached the scene of the tragedy and it is suggested that perhaps she removed the weapons which they carried. There is also evidence to the effect that Hawkins generally carried a pistol.

It is the theory of the Commonwealth that appellant, while at his own house or barn, was in no danger at the hands of Hawkins and Standforth, and he voluntarily left his barn and went down to the pike to meet them for the purpose of killing them; that as the physical facts show that their bodies were found in the road beyond the path and there was no evidence of blood or footprints on the side of the bluff, it clearly appears that they were shot while in the road and not while coming up the path in the direction of appellant. On the other hand, the evidence for appellant tends to show that although he took his shot gun and left his barn and approached the pike, he had no intention of killing the decedents, but only did so to avoid injury at their hands when they started up the path towards him and indicated by their hostile demonstrations a determination on their part to do him personal violence. Considering the case, however, in the light of the physical circumstances, and of the fact that appellant did not await the coming of Hawkins and Standforth, but at a time when he was in no immediate danger at their hands voluntarily approached the point where he had reason to believe they would pass and carried a shot gun which he had previously loaded, we cannot say that the evidence was insufficient either to take the case to the jury or to sustain the verdict.

1. The instructions given by the trial court are in the usual form and are not complained of. It is insisted, however, that the court should have instructed the jury that if they believed from the evidence that Hawkins and Standforth, or either of them, had assaulted and threatened to kill the appellant, or to do him great bodily harm, and threatened then and there to go together to the home of appellant to carry out said purpose, the appellant had a right to arm himself, and if the jury further believed from the evidence that the appellant knew, or had reasonable [495] grounds to believe, that Hawkins and Standforth were then and there going to his home to execute their said threats, appellant had a right to meet them near his home and on his premises so armed; and if he then believed, and had reasonable grounds to believe, from their actions that they then and there were able and intended to carry out their threats, he had a right to use such means as to him seems reasonably necessary to protect himself from the threatening danger. Without entering into a discussion of the soundness of the principle of law contained in the suggested instruction, it is sufficient to say that the instruction should not have been given, because it groups together and unnecessarily emphasizes particular facts relied on by the defendant and gives them undue prominence in the estimation of the jury. We have repeatedly condemned such an instruction and held that an instruction on self defense should be in the usual form, thus leaving the question to be determined by the jury in the light of all the facts and circumstances of the case, rather than in the light of certain particular facts, whether relied on by the Commonwealth or by the accused. Reynolds v. Com. 114 Ky. 912. 72 S. W. 277; Com. v. Thomas, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 899, 104 S. W. 326; Heck v. Com. 163 Ky. 518, 174 S. W. 19; Hobson, Blain & Caldwell on Instructions to Juries, section 661.

2. Another error relied on is the misconduct of the sheriff and jury. It appears that after the jury had been empaneled and sworn the sheriff took them to the opera house, where a religious revival was being conducted. On the next day appellant made a motion to discharge the jury and filed in support thereof the following affidavit:

"The affiant Joe Chilton states that after the jury herein was accepted and sworn, it was on last night taken to the opera house where a protracted meeting was being held; that the jury were given seats just in front of the preacher who preached from the subject of sin and its punishment and his sermon referred directly to this prosecution and gave many illustrations of offenses and crimes and character of punishment therefor."

The minister who was conducting the religious meeting also filed his affidavit. He says that in introducing his subject he asked the people to hear him before they passed judgment on him. In this connection he said: "Gentlemen, your court is in session, and if a man is being tried for murder would you pass judgment before you [496] heard the evidence or after?" He also showed that David committed murder and yet went to heaven, and proved it by God's word. He further states that the above reference, if it be considered a reference, was the only one that he made in regard to the court being in session and the man on trial, and in making these statements he did not have in mind the trial which was going on in the circuit court and did not know the jury was present. J. R. Paxton also filed an affidavit, saying that he was present on the occasion referred to and heard all of the sermon; that at no time was reference made to the case on trial; that the word "murder" was used by the minister, but only in a general way and as one of the number of sins denounced by the Bible. It is well settled, of course, that the members of a jury empaneled to try a case like this should not be subjected to any outside influences, but their conclusion should be the result of an unbiased judgment, based on the evidence heard in the court room and the law as expounded by the court, considered in the light of proper arguments by counsel for the prosecution and defense. Therefore, if it appeared that on the occasion in question any improper reference was made by the minister to the facts of the case on trial, or to the duty of the jury under the circumstances, there might be some merit in the contention that the accused was prejudiced. As it is, however, the only reference to the case, even if it be considered a reference, was the suggestion that a man should not be condemned until after the evidence was heard, and this reference was in favor of the accused rather than against him. It is suggested, however, that the very subject of the sermon, that of sin and its punishment, was prejudicial, because it showed that even God himself approved of punishment and thus fortified and prepared the minds of the jurors to follow the divine example. This contention, however, does not go beyond the mere suggestion.

It is not based on any facts which actually occurred. It is not shown that the jurors were exhorted to do their duty because God did his. In the absence of facts tending to show the contrary, we are unable to perceive how a mere theoretical discussion of sin and its punishment, considered solely from the angle of divine government, can be regarded as prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant.

3. Another error assigned is the incompetency of one of the jurors. It appears from an affidavit that this [497] juror, on the day before the trial, stated that "he had heard much about the case and he thought it was a bad case" and that he wanted to hear it. The language attributed to the juror only shows that what he had heard had made upon him a mere impression to the effect that the case was a bad one. It does not show that he had formed any real opinion as to appellant's guilt. We, therefore, conclude that the language referred to is insufficient to authorize a new trial, on the ground that the juror was disqualified from acting by reason of any opinion which he had formed as to the real merits of the case.

4. Lastly, it is insisted that a new trial should have been granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence. In support of this ground there is filed only the affidavit of one Grover C. Springate, who states that in a conversation which took place between him and Elmer Standforth just prior to Christmas, 1914, Standforth said that he had had several quarrels with Joe Chilton, and that he had made up his mind to kill Chilton and go back to his former home in Ohio. He also says that after that time he had another conversation with Standforth, in which Standforth stated that he had to sell his farm, because if he stayed in Anderson County he would have to kill Chilton; that his wife wanted to kill him herself but that it was not a woman's affair, and that he would do it himself if he stayed there. Passing the question whether or not the evidence relied on his, under the particular facts of this case, of such a decisive character as to render a different result reasonably certain, it is sufficient to say that a new trial was properly refused, because appellant did not file his own affidavit stating that he did not know, and by the exercise of reasonable diligence could not have known, of the existence of the newly discovered evidence until after the trial was concluded. Ellis v. Com. 146 Ky. 715, 143 S. W. 425; Brennon v. Com. 169 Ky. 815, 185 S. W. 489.

Finding in the record no error prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant, it follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

NOTE.

Allowing Recreation to Jury during Trial as Ground for New Trial.

The rule laid down in State v. Jeffries, 210 Mo. 302, 14 Ann. Cas. 524, that allowing recreation to a jury during the trial of a criminal case is not a ground for a new trial when it does not appear that the accused was prejudiced thereby, and there was no misconduct on the part of the jury, is supported by several recent cases.

It has been held that a new trial will not be granted because of the mere fact that the jury were taken to a theatrical performance or moving picture show where it is shown that they were properly kept apart, communicated with no one, and were not subjected to improper influences. Mansfield v. Com. 163 Ky. 488, 174 S. W. 16; State v. Oteri, 128 La. 939, Ann. Cas. 1912C 878, 55 So. 582; Sherman v. State, 125 Tenn. 19, 140 S. W. 209. In the case last cited it appeared that a portion of the jurors attended a vaudeville show, sitting in a private box, apart and separate from all others. They did not come in contact with anyone. The court in denying a new trial said: "We do not mean in any way to approve the course of the officers in allowing these jurors to become separated and taking part of them to a theater. While, as matter of fact, no communication was had with them, or influence exerted upon them, in this case, and no opportunity seems to have been offered for such communication to have been effected, nevertheless the officers' conduct was reprehensible. They should have been fined by the circuit judge. They took a chance which they should not have done. While the circuit judge has found, and we can see, that there were no evil results in this case, and the defendant was not at all prejudiced, still it might have resulted differently, and it might have been necessary to set this verdict aside, and such a practice as that indulged in here cannot be permitted by a trial court, on the part of its officers or jurors. Both officers and jurors should have been punished by the court."

In State v. Oteri, 128 La. 939, Ann. Cas. 1912C 878, 55 So. 582, the defendant, having been convicted of murder, moved for a new trial, assigning as one of the grounds therefore that the jury had been permitted to attend a theatrical performance and sit with the audience. In discussing the question the court said: "It appears that on a Sunday, during the recess of the court, the jury, attended by two deputy sheriffs, left their room in the courthouse to attend a theatrical show nearby. After the jury were seated, one of the deputies retired, leaving the jury in charge of the other deputy, Mr. Erwin, who was a witness for the prosecution, and had testified several times during the trial of the case. The jury were seated on benches reserved for them, and the nearest spectators were about ten feet away. The jury remained during the performance, and, according to the testimony of Mr. Erwin, had no communication with anyone outside of their body. It appears that the jury had the permission of the judge to attend church or go to the show. The majority voted in favor of the place of amusement. . . . The evidence shows that the jury did not separate for a moment and had no communication with anyone outside of their body. Therefore the accused was not prejudiced by the incident under discussion. We, however, must express our disapproval of the permission given the jury to attend the show, thereby subjecting them to the danger of outside influence. We may add that our ruling would have been different if any prejudice whatever had been shown by the evidence."

In Mansfield v. Com. 163 Ky. 488, 174 S. W. 16, wherein the defendant was found guilty of murder, it appeared that the jury were taken by the officer in charge to a moving picture show on several different occasions. On a motion for a new trial, this fact having been alleged as one of the grounds, the court said: "It is further complained that the sheriff, on three different nights during the trial, took the jury to a moving picture show. But the record shows, without contradiction, that the place where the moving picture show was exhibited was not crowded; that the jury sat on the front seats, while the sheriff occupied a seat nearby from which he could and did see what the jurors did, and that no one approached any of them nor was any conversation relating to the trial had in their presence. We do not find in this circumstance any misconduct on the part of the officer or jury."

Where it is shown, however, that the jury were taken to a place of recreation and were then so situated as to be accessible to outside influences, misconduct will be presumed, and the burden is on the state to show that in fact there was no misconduct. State v. Clary, 136 La. 589, 67 So. 376. In that case, wherein the defendant was convicted of manslaughter, it was shown that the jury were taken to moving picture shows on two occasions at night and sat in the ordinary rows of chairs with the rows in front and back of them occupied. It was held that the jury were accessible, and misconduct was presumed and a new trial ordered. Later, however, on a rehearing, it being affirmatively shown by the state that there had been no separation, and no misconduct on the part of the jury while attending the moving pictures, the verdict was affirmed.

In the reported case it appears that the jury, after having been accepted and sworn, were taken to an opera house where a religious revival meeting was being held. The jury were given seats in front of the preacher, who preached on the subject of sin and its punishment, and referred in a general way to the court being in session and a man on trial. The minister afterwards stated that he did not know the jury were present. The court, while declaring that members of a jury should not be subjected to outside influences and that their conclusion should be the result of unbiased judgment, holds that since there was no improper reference made by the minister to the facts in the case on trial or to the duty of the jury, but merely a theoretical discussion of sin and its punishment, the attendance of the jury thereat could not be regarded as prejudicial to the substantial rights of the accused.

During a trial, the jury may be taken for a walk in charge of the proper officers and it is not ground for a new trial if the jury are not subject to improper influences and are not allowed to communicate with others. Freels v. State (Ark.) 196 S. W. 913. In that case, a prosecution for murder, it was shown that the morning after the jury took the case under consideration they were taken for a walk, and, while walking, were permitted to go through the cemetery where the person alleged to have been murdered was buried. A relative of the deceased was seated near the grave at the time, weeping. It was contended on the part of the defendant that this tended to influence the verdict of the jury. The court said: "The special bailiff having charge of the jury testified that on Thursday morning, after the case had been turned over to the jury the night before, he started out to give the jury a little exercise. Nobody suggested that they go into the cemetery. He was walking behind the jurors. When they got to the corner on the street where Judge Driver lived, some one says, 'Let's go to the cemetery.' He did not think any of the jurors knew Mrs. Sullinger. They merely saw a lady sitting there. He did not know himself that it was Mrs. Sullinger. The lady was weeping and glanced around. The jury went straight on through the cemetery, and as they came back through the lady had gone. There was no effort upon her part to attract the attention of the jury. She did not speak a word to them, and the fact that she was in the vicinity of the grave of Edrington did not enter witness's mind. He heard no discussion among the jury about the presence of the lady there. He did not know where Edrington's grave was; neither did any of the jury. . . . This testimony shows conclusively that there was no pre-arranged plan on the part of the attorney and Mrs. Sullinger and the officer that the jury, while they were deliberating upon their verdict, should be conducted to the cemetery for the purpose of bringing them under any sinister influence that would be calculated to arouse their sympathies for the dead and their prejudice against the appellant, and thus to procure a verdict not in accordance with the law and the evidence."

SELECTIVE DRAFT LAW CASES.

ARVER

v.

UNITED STATES.

GRAHL

v.

UNITED STATES.

WANGERIN

v.

UNITED STATES.
(Two Cases.)

KRAMER

v.

UNITED STATES.

GRAUBARD

v.

UNITED STATES.

United States Supreme Court—January 7, 1918.

245 U. S. 366; 38 S. Ct. 159.

Army and Navy — Conscription — Validity of Act.

Under Const. art. 1, § 8 (8 Fed. St. Ann. pp. 637, 645, 649), authorizing Congress to declare war, to raise and support armies, and to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, and to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying the foregoing powers into execution, and article 6 (9 Fed. St. Ann. 218), providing that the Constitution and laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof shall be the supreme law of the land, Congress has power to raise armies by conscription, and such power is not denied by reason of the fact that under the Constitution as originally framed state citizenship was primary, and United States citizenship but derivative and dependent thereon, or by the fact that, prior to the Constitution, the state authority over the militia embraced every citizen, and therefore Act May 18, 1917, c. 15 (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 85), providing for raising an army by means of a selective draft, is valid.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

When Congress exercises its power to call a citizen into the army without his consent, the army into which he enters is not limited to services such as those for which it is claimed the militia may only be used.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The powers of Congress respecting the militia under Const. art. 1, § 8 (8 Fed. St. Ann. 652), authorizing Congress to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the nation, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions, and to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the states, respectively, the appointment of officers and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress, and the power to raise armies conferred by the same section, are separate powers, and the army power embraces complete authority, and is not diminished by the control over the militia left in the states, though the militia power may diminish the occasion for the exertion by Congress of its military power, and though the power to raise armies is susceptible of narrowing the area over which the militia clause operates.

[See note at end of this case.]

Citizens — State and Federal Citizenship.

Under Const. Amend. 14 (9 Fed. St. Ann. 384), providing that all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside, citizenship in the United States is paramount and dominant, instead of being subordinate to and derivative from state citizenship.

Army and Navy — Conscription — Validity of Act.

Act May 18, 1917, c. 15 (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 85), providing for the raising of an army by means of a selective draft, is not void as delegating federal powers to state officials because of some of its administrative features.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Act May 18, 1917, c. 15 (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 85), providing for raising an army by a selective draft, is not void, as vesting administrative officers with legislative discretion.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Act May 18, 1917, c. 15 (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 85), providing for raising an army by selective draft, is not void, as conferring judicial power on administrative officers.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Act May 18, 1917, c. 15 (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 85), providing for the raising of an army by means of a selective draft, and exempting from the draft regular or duly ordained ministers of religion and theological students under prescribed conditions, and also relieving from military service, other than service of a noncombatant character, members of religious sects whose tenets exclude the moral right to engage in war, does not violate Const. Amend. 1 (9 Fed. St. Ann. 241), providing that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Act May 18, 1917, c. 15 (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 85), providing for raising an army by means of a selective draft, does not impose involuntary servitude, in violation of Const. Amend. 13 (9 Fed. St. Ann. 376).

[See note at end of this case.]

Error to United States District Court for District of Minnesota, and for Southern District of New York.

Criminal actions. Joseph F. Arver, Alfred F. Grahl, Otto Wangerin, Walter Wangerin, Louis Kramer, and Meyer Graubard, convicted of failing to present themselves for registration under Act of May 18, 1917, chapter 15, and bring error. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

T. E. Latimer for plaintiffs in error Arver, Grahl, Otto Wangerin and Walter Wangerin.

Harry Weinberger for plaintiff in error Kramer.

Edwin T. Taliaferro for plaintiff in error Graubard.

Solicitor General Davis for defendant in error.

[375] WHITE, C. J.—We are here concerned with some of the provisions of the act of May 18, 1917, c. 15, 40 Stat. 76, (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 85) entitled, "An Act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States." The law, as its opening sentence declares, was intended to supply temporarily the increased military force which was required by the existing emergency, the war then and now flagrant. The clauses we must pass upon and those which will throw light on their significance are briefly summarized:

The act proposed to raise a national army, first, by increasing the regular force to its maximum strength and there maintaining it; second, by incorporating into such army the members of the National Guard and National Guard Reserve already in the service of the United States (Act of Congress of June 3, 1916, c. 134, 39 Stat. 211 (6 Fed. St. Ann. 2d ed. 444) and maintaining their organizations to their full strength; third, by giving the President power in his discretion to organize by volunteer enlistment four divisions of infantry; fourth, by subjecting all male citizens between the ages of twenty-one and thirty to duty in the national army for the period of the existing emergency after the proclamation of the President announcing the necessity for their service; and fifth, by providing for [376] selecting from the body so called, on the further proclamation of the President, 500,000 enlisted men, and a second body of the same number should the President in his discretion deem it necessary. To carry out its purposes the act made it the duty of those liable to the call to present themselves for registration on the proclamation of the President so as to subject themselves to the terms of the act and provided full federal means for carrying out the selective draft. It gave the President in his discretion power to create local boards to consider claims for exemption for physical disability or otherwise made by those called. The act exempted from subjection to the draft designated United States and state officials as well as those already in the military or naval service of the United States, regular or duly ordained ministers of religion and theological students under the conditions provided for, and, while relieving from military service in the strict sense the members of religious sects as enumerated whose tenets excluded the moral right to engage in war, nevertheless subjected such persons to the performance of service of a non-combatant character to be defined by the President.

The proclamation of the President calling the persons designated within the ages described in the statute was made, and the plaintiffs in error, who were in the class and under the statute were obliged to present themselves for registration and subject themselves to the law, failed to do so, and were prosecuted under the statute for the penalties for which it provided. They all defended by denying that there had been conferred by the Constitution upon Congress the power to compel military service by a selective draft, and asserted that even if such power had been given by the Constitution to Congress, the terms of the particular act for various reasons caused it to be beyond the power and repugnant to the Constitution. The cases are here for review because of the constitutional [377] questions thus raised, convictions having resulted from instructions of the courts that the legal defences were without merit and that the statute was constitutional.

The possession of authority to enact the statute must be found in the clauses of the Constitution giving Congress power "to declare war; . . . to raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years; . . . to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." Article I, § 8 (8 Fed. St. Ann. 637, 645, 649). And of course the powers conferred by these provisions like all other powers given carry with them as provided by the Constitution the authority "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers." Article I, § 8 (8 Fed. St. Ann. 674.)

As the mind cannot conceive an army without the men to compose it, on the face of the Constitution the objection that it does not give power to provide for such men would seem to be too frivolous for further notice. It is said, however, that since under the Constitution as originally framed state citizenship was primary and United States citizenship but derivative and dependent thereon, therefore the power conferred upon Congress to raise armies was only coterminous with United States citizenship and could not be exerted so as to cause that citizenship to lose its dependent character and dominate state citizenship. But the proposition simply denies to Congress the power to raise armies which the Constitution gives. The power by the very terms of the Constitution, being delegated, is supreme. Article VI. (9 Fed. St. Ann. 218.) In truth the contention simply assails the wisdom of the framers of the Constitution in conferring authority on Congress and in not retaining it as it was under the Confederation in the several States. Further it is said, the right to provide is not denied by calling for volunteer enlistments, but it does not and [378] cannot include the power to exact enforced military duty by the citizen. This however but challenges the existence of all power, for a governmental power which has no sanction to it and which therefore can only be exercised provided the citizen consents to its exertion is in no substantial sense a power. It is argued, however, that although this is abstractly true, it is not concretely so because as compelled military service is repugnant to a free government and in conflict with all the great guarantees of the Constitution as to individual liberty, it must be assumed that the authority to raise armies was intended to be limited to the right to call an army into existence counting alone upon the willingness of the citizen to do his duty in time of public need, that is, in time of war. But the premise of this proposition is so devoid of foundation that it leaves not even a shadow of ground upon which to base the conclusion. Let us see if this is not at once demonstrable. It may not be doubted that the very conception of a just government and its duty to the citizen includes the reciprocal obligation of the citizen to render military service in case of need and the right to compel it. Vattel, Law of Nations, Book III, c. 1 & 2. To do more than state the proposition is absolutely unnecessary in view of the practical illustration afforded by the almost universal legislation to that effect now in force.¹ In England it is certain that before the [379] Norman Conquest the duty of the great militant body of the citizens was recognized and enforceable. Blackstone, Book I, c. 13. It is unnecessary to follow the long controversy between Crown and Parliament as to the branch of the government in which the power reside, since there never was any doubt that it somewhere resided. So also it is wholly unnecessary to explore the situation for the purpose of fixing the sources whence in England it came to be understood that the citizen or the force organized from the militia as such could not without their consent be compelled to render service in a foreign country, since there is no room to contend that such principle ever rested upon any challenge of the right of Parliament to impose compulsory duty upon the citizen to perform military duty wherever the public exigency exacted, whether at home or abroad. This is exemplified by the present English Service Act.²

In the Colonies before the separation from England there cannot be the slightest doubt that the right to enforce military service was unquestioned and that practical effect was given to the power in many cases. Indeed [380] the brief of the Government contains a list of Colonial acts manifesting the power and its enforcement in more than two hundred cases. And this exact situation existed also after the separation. Under the Articles of Confederation it is true Congress had no such power, as its authority was absolutely limited to making calls upon the States for the military forces needed to create and maintain the army, each State being bound for its quota as called. But it is indisputable that the States in response to the calls made upon them met the situation when they deemed it necessary by directing enforced military service on the part of the citizens. In fact the duty of the citizen to render military service and the power to compel him against his consent to do so was expressly sanctioned by the constitutions of at least nine of the States, an illustration being afforded by the following provision of the Pennsylvania constitution of 1776. "That every member of society hath a right to be protected in the enjoyment of life, liberty and property, and therefore is bound to contribute his proportion towards the expense of that protection, and yield his personal service when necessary, or an equivalent thereto." Art. 8, (Thorpe, American Charters, Constitutions and Organic Laws, vol. 5, pp. 3081, 3083.)³ While it is true that the States were sometimes slow in exerting the power in order to fill their quotas—a condition shown by resolutions of Congress calling upon them to comply by exerting their compulsory power to draft and

¹ In the argument of the Government it is stated: "The Statesman's Year-book for 1917 cites the following governments as enforcing military service: Argentine Republic, p. 656; Austria-Hungary, p. 667; Belgium, p. 712; Brazil, p. 738; Bulgaria, p. 747; Bolivia, p. 728; Colombia, p. 790; Chile, p. 754; China, p. 770; Denmark, p. 811; Ecuador, p. 820; France, p. 841; Greece, p. 1001; Germany, p. 914; Guatemala, p. 1009; Honduras, p. 1018; Italy, p. 1036; Japan, p. 1064; Mexico, p. 1090; Montenegro, p. 1098; Netherlands, p. 1119; Nicaragua, p. 1142; Norway, p. 1152; Peru, p. 1191; Portugal, p. 1201; Roumania, p. 1220; Russia, p. 1240; Serbia, p. 1281; Siam, p. 1288; Spain, p. 1300; Switzerland, p. 1337; Salvador, p. 1270; Turkey, p. 1353." See also the recent Canadian conscription act, entitled, "Military Service Act" of August 27, 1917, expressly providing for service abroad (printed in the Congressional Record of September 20, 1917, 55th Cong. Rec., p. 7959); the Conscription Law of the Orange Free State, Law No. 10, 1899; Military Service and Commando Law, sections 10 and 28; Laws of Orange River Colony, 1901, p. 855; of the South African Republic, "De Locale Wetten en Volksraadsbesluiten der-Zuid-Afr. Republiek," 1898, Law No. 20, pp. 230, 233, article 6, 28; Constitution, German Empire, April 16, 1871, Art. 57, 59; Dodd, 1 Modern Constitutions, p. 344; Gesetz, betreffend Aenderungen der Wehrpflicht, vom 11 Feb. 1888, No. 1767, Reichs-Gesetzblatt, p. 11, amended by law of July 22, 1913, No. 4264, RGBL, p. 593; Loi sur le recrutement de l'armee of 15 July, 1889 (Duvergier, vol. 89, p. 440), modified by act of 21 March, 1905 (Duvergier, vol. 105, p. 133).

² Military Service Act, January 27, 1916, 5 and 6 George V, c. 104, p. 367, amended by the Military Service Act of May 25, 1916, 2nd session, 6 and 7, George V, c. 15, p. 33.

³ See also Constitution of Vermont, 1777, c. 1, Art. 9 (Thorpe, vol. 6, pp. 4747, 3740); New York, 1777, Art. 40 (id., vol. 5, p. 2637); Massachusetts Bill of Rights, 1780, Art. 10 (id., vol. 3, p. 1891); New Hampshire, 1784, pt. 1, Bill of Rights, Art. 12 (id., vol. 4, p. 2455); Delaware, 1776, Art. 9 (id., Vol. 1, pp. 562, 564); Maryland, 1776, Art. 33 (id., vol. 3, pp. 1686, 1696); Virginia, 1776, Militia (id., vol. 7, p. 3817); Georgia, 1777, Art. 33, 35 (id., vol. 2, pp. 777, 782).

by earnest requests by Washington to Congress that a demand be made upon the States to [381] resort to drafts to fill their quotas⁴—that fact serves to demonstrate instead of to challenge the existence of the authority. A default in exercising a duty may not be resorted to as a reason for denying its existence.

When the Constitution came to be formed it may not be disputed that one of the recognized necessities for its adoption was the want of power in Congress to raise an army and the dependence upon the States for their quotas. In supplying the power it was manifestly intended to give it all and leave none to the States, since besides the delegation to Congress of authority to raise armies the Constitution prohibited the States, without the consent of Congress, from keeping troops in time of peace or engaging in war. Article I, § 10 (8 Fed. St. Ann. 899).

To argue that as the state authority over the militia prior to the Constitution embraced every citizen, the right of Congress to raise an army should not be considered as granting authority to compel the citizen's service in the army, is but to express in a different form the denial of the right to call any citizen to the army. Nor is this met by saying that it does not exclude the right of Congress to organize an army by voluntary enlistments, that is, by the consent of the citizens, for if the proposition be true, the right of the citizen to give consent would be controlled by the same prohibition which would deprive Congress of the right to compel unless it can be said that although Congress had not the right to call because of state authority, the citizen had a right to obey the call and set aside state authority if he pleased to do so. And a like conclusion demonstrates the want of foundation for the contention that although it be within the power to call the citizen into the army without his consent, the army into which he enters after the call is to be limited [382] in some respects to services for which the militia it is assumed may only be used, since this admits the appropriateness of the call to military service in the army and the power to make it and yet destroys the purpose for which the call is authorized—the raising of armies to be under the control of the United States.

The fallacy of the argument results from confounding the constitutional provisions concerning the militia with that conferring upon Congress the power to raise armies. It treats them as one while they are different. This is the militia clause:

"The Congress shall have power . . . To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions; To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress." Article I, § 8 (8 Fed. St. Ann. 652, 654).

The line which separates it from the army power is not only inherently plainly marked by the text of the two clauses, but will stand out in bolder relief by considering the condition before the Constitution was adopted and the remedy which it provided for the military situation with which it dealt. The right on the one hand of Congress under the Confederation to call on the States for forces and the duty on the other of the States to furnish when called, embraced the complete power of government over the subject. When the two were combined and were delegated to Congress all governmental power on that subject was conferred, a result manifested not only by the grant made but by the limitation expressly put upon the States on the subject. The army sphere therefore embraces such complete authority. But the duty of exerting the power thus conferred in all its plentitude was not [383] made at once obligatory but was wisely left to depend upon the discretion of Congress as to the arising of the exigencies which would call it in part or in whole into play. There was left therefore under the sway of the States undelegated the control of the militia to the extent that such control was not taken away by the exercise by Congress of its power to raise armies. This did not diminish the military power or curb the full potentiality of the right to exert it but left an area of authority requiring to be provided for (the militia area) unless and until by the exertion of the military power of Congress that area had been circumscribed or totally disappeared. This, therefore, is what was dealt with by the militia provision. It diminished the occasion for the exertion by Congress of its military power beyond the strict necessities for its exercise by giving the power to Congress to direct the organization and training of the militia (evidently to prepare such militia in the event of the exercise of the army power) although leaving the carrying out of such command to the States. It further conduced to the same result by delegating to Congress the right to call on occasions which were specified for the militia force, thus again obviating the necessity for exercising the army power to the extent of being ready for every conceivable contingency. This purpose is made manifest by the provision preserving the organization of the militia so far as formed when called for such special purposes although subjecting the militia when so called to the paramount authority of the United States. Tarble's Case, 13 Wall. 397, 408, 20 U. S. (L. ed.) 597. But because under the express regulations the power was given to call for specified purposes without exerting the army power, it cannot follow that the latter power when exerted was not complete to the extent of its exertion and dominant. Because the power of Congress to raise armies was not required to be exerted to its full limit but only as in the discretion of Congress it was deemed the public [384] interest required, furnishes no ground for supposing that the complete power was lost by its partial exertion. Because, moreover, the power granted to Congress to raise armies in its potentiality was susceptible of narrowing the area over which the militia clause operated, affords no ground for confounding the two areas which were distinct and separate to the end of confusing both the powers and thus weakening or destroying both.

⁴ Journals of Congress, Ford's ed., Library of Congress, vol. 7, pp. 262, 263; vol. 10, pp.

190, 200; vol. 13, p. 299. 7 Sparks, Writings of Washington, pp. 162, 167, 442, 444.

And upon this understanding of the two powers the legislative and executive authority has been exerted from the beginning. From the act of the first session of Congress carrying over the army of the Government under the Confederation to the United States under the Constitution (Act of September 29, 1789, c. 25, 1 Stat. 95) down to 1812 the authority to raise armies was regularly exerted as a distinct and substantive power, the force being raised and recruited by enlistment. Except for one act formulating a plan by which the entire body of citizens (the militia) subject to military duty was to be organized in every State (Act of May 8, 1792, c. 33, 1 Stat. 271) which was never carried into effect, Congress confined itself to providing for the organization of a specified number distributed among the States according to their quota to be trained as directed by Congress and to be called by the President as need might require.⁵ When the War of 1812 came the result of these two forces composed the army to be relied upon by Congress to carry on the war. Either because it proved to be weak in numbers or because of insubordination developed among the forces called and manifested by their refusal to cross the border,⁶ [385] the Government determined that the exercise of the power to organize an army by compulsory draft was necessary and Mr. Monroe, the Secretary of War (Mr. Madison being President) in a letter to Congress recommended several plans of legislation on that subject. It suffices to say that by each of them it was proposed that the United States deal directly with the body of citizens subject to military duty and call a designated number out of the population between the ages of 18 and 45 for service in the army. The power which it was recommended be exerted was clearly an unmixed federal power dealing with the subject from the sphere of the authority given to Congress to raise armies and not from the sphere of the right to deal with the militia as such, whether organized or unorganized. A bill was introduced giving effect to the plan. Opposition developed, but we need not stop to consider it because it substantially rested upon the incompatibility of compulsory military service with free government, a subject which from what we have said has been disposed of. Peace came before the bill was enacted.

Down to the Mexican War the legislation exactly portrayed the same condition of mind which we have previously stated. In that war, however, no draft was suggested, because the army created by the United States immediately resulting from the exercise by Congress of its power to raise armies, that organized under its direction from the militia and the volunteer commands which were furnished, proved adequate to carry the war to a successful conclusion.

So the course of legislation from that date to 1861 affords no ground for any other than the same conception of legislative power which we have already stated. In that year when the mutterings of the dread conflict which was to come began to be heard and the Proclamation of the President calling a force into existence was issued it [386] was addressed to the body organized out of the militia and trained by the States in accordance with the previous acts of Congress. (Proclamation of April 15, 1861, 12 Stat. 1258.) That force being inadequate to meet the situation, an act was passed authorizing the acceptance of 500,000 volunteers by the President to be by him organized into a national army. (Act of July 22, 1861, c. 9, 12 Stat. 268.) This was soon followed by another act increasing the force of the militia to be organized by the States for the purpose of being drawn upon when trained under the direction of Congress (Act of July 29, 1861, c. 25, 12 Stat. 281), the two acts when considered together presenting in the clearest possible form the distinction between the power of Congress to raise armies and its authority under the militia clause. But it soon became manifest that more men were required. As a result the Act of March 3, 1863, c. 75, 12 Stat. 731, was adopted entitled "An act for enrolling and calling out the National Forces and for other purposes." By that act which was clearly intended to directly exert upon all citizens of the United States the national power which it had been proposed to exert in 1814 on the recommendation of the then Secretary of War, Mr. Monroe, every male citizen of the United States between the ages of twenty and forty-five was made subject by the direct action of Congress to be called by compulsory draft to service in a national army at such time and in such numbers as the President in his discretion might find necessary. In that act, as in the one of 1814, and in this one, the means by which the act was to be enforced were directly federal and the force to be raised as a result of the draft was therefore typically national as distinct from the call into active service of the militia as such. And under the power thus exerted four separate calls for draft were made by the President and enforced, that of July, 1863, of February and March, 1864, of July and December, [387] 1864, producing a force of about a quarter of million men.⁷ It is undoubted that the men thus raised by draft were treated as subject to direct national authority and were used either in filling the gaps occasioned by the vicissitudes of war in the ranks of the existing national forces or for the purpose of organizing such new units as were deemed to be required. It would be childish to deny the value of the added strength which was thus afforded. Indeed in the official report of the Provost Marshal General, just previously referred to in the margin, reviewing the whole subject it was stated that it was the efficient aid resulting from the forces created by the draft at a very critical moment of the civil strife which obviated a disaster which seemed impending and carried that struggle to a complete and successful conclusion.

⁵ Act of May 9, 1794, c. 27, 1 Stat. 367; Act of February 28, 1795, c. 36, 1 Stat. 424; Act of June 24, 1797, c. 4, 1 Stat. 522; Act of March 3, 1803, c. 32, 2 Stat. 241; Act of April 18, 1806, c. 32, 2 Stat. 383; Act of March 30, 1808, c. 39, 2 Stat. 478; Act of April 10, 1812, c. 55, 2 Stat. 705.

⁶ Upton, Military Policy of the United States, pp. 99 et seq.

Brevity prevents doing more than to call attention to the fact that the organized body of militia within the States as trained by the States under the direction of Congress became known as the National Guard (Act of January 21, 1903, c. 196, 32 Stat. 775 [6 Fed. St. Ann. (2d ed.) 433]; National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, c. 134, 39 Stat. 211 [6 Fed. St. Ann. (2d ed.) 444]. And to make further preparation from among the great body of the citizens, an additional number to be determined by the President was directed to be organized and trained by the States as the

National Guard Reserve. (National Defense Act, supra.)

Thus sanctioned as is the act before us by the text of the Constitution, and by its significance as read in the light of the fundamental principles with which the subject is concerned, by the power recognized and carried into effect in many civilized countries, by the authority and practice of the colonies before the Revolution, of the States under the Confederation and of the Government [388] since the formation of the Constitution, the want of merit in the contentions that the act in the particulars which we have been previously called upon to consider was beyond the constitutional power of Congress, is manifest. Cogency, however, if possible, is added to the demonstration by pointing out that in the only case to which we have been referred where the constitutionality of the Act of 1863 was contemporaneously challenged on grounds akin to, if not absolutely identical with, those here urged, the validity of the act was maintained for reasons not different from those which control our judgment. (Kneeder v. Lane, 45 Pa. St. 238.) And as further evidence that the conclusion we reached is but the inevitable consequence of the provisions of the Constitution as effect follows cause, we briefly recur to events in another environment. The seceding States wrote into the constitution which was adopted to regulate the government which they sought to establish, in identical words the provisions of the Constitution of the United States which we here have under consideration. And when the right to enforce under that instrument a selective draft law which was enacted, not differing in principle from the one here in question, was challenged, its validity was upheld, evidently after great consideration, by the courts of Virginia, of Georgia, of Texas, of Alabama, of Mississippi and of North Carolina, the opinions in some of the cases copiously and critically reviewing the whole grounds which we have stated. Burroughs v. Peyton, 16 Grat. 470; Jeffers v. Fair, 33 Ga. 347; Daly v. Harris, 33 Ga. Supp. 38, 54; Barber v. Irwin, 34 Ga. 27; Parker v. Kaughman, 34 Ga. 136; Ex p. Coupland, 26 Tex. 386; Ex p. Hill, 38 Ala. 429; In re Emerson, 39 Ala. 437; In re Pille, 39 Ala. 459; Simmons v. Miller, 40 Miss. 19; Gatlin v. Walton, 60 N. C. 333, 408.

In reviewing the subject, we have hitherto considered [389] it as it has been argued, from the point of view of the Constitution as it stood prior to the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment. But to avoid all misapprehension we briefly direct attention to that Amendment for the purpose of pointing out, as has been frequently done in the past,⁸ how completely it broadened the national scope of the Government under the Constitution by causing citizenship of the United States to be paramount and dominant instead of being subordinate and derivative, and therefore, operating as it does upon all the powers conferred by the Constitution, leaves no possible support for the contentions made, if their want of merit was otherwise not so clearly made manifest.

⁷ Historical Report, Enrollment Branch, 1866.

Provost Marshal General's Bureau, March 17,

223 Mass. 119.

It remains only to consider contentions which, while not disputing power, challenge the act because of the repugnancy to the Constitution supposed to result from some of its provisions. First, we are of opinion that the contention that the act is void as a delegation of federal power to state officials because of some of its administrative features, is too wanting in merit to require further notice. Second, we think that the contention that the statute is void because vesting administrative officers with legislative discretion has been so completely adversely settled as to require reference only to some of the decided cases. Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 12 S. Ct. 495, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 294; Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 470, 24 S. Ct. 349, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 525; Intermountain Rate Cases, 234 U. S. 476, 34 S. Ct. 986, 58 U. S. (L. ed.) 1408; Bay City First Nat. Bank v. Fellows, 244 U. S. 416, 37 S. Ct. 734. A like conclusion also adversely disposes of a similar claim concerning the conferring of judicial power. Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 470, 497, 24 S. Ct. 356, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 525; West v. Hitchcock, 205 U. S. 80, 27 S. Ct. 423, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 713; Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Stranahan, 214 U. S. 320, 338-340, 29 S. Ct. 671, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 1013; Zakonaite v. Wolf, 226 U. S. 272, 275, 33 S. Ct. 31, 57 U. S. (L. ed.) 218. And we pass without anything but statement [390] the proposition that an establishment of a religion or an interference with the free exercise thereof repugnant to the First Amendment resulted from the exemption clauses of the act to which we at the outset referred, because we think its unsoundness is too apparent to require us to do more.

Finally, as we are unable to conceive upon what theory the exaction by government from the citizen of the performance of his supreme and noble duty of contributing to the defense of the rights and honor of the nation, as the result of a war declared by the great representative body of the people, can be said to be the imposition of involuntary servitude in violation of the prohibitions of the Thirteenth Amendment, we are constrained to the conclusion that the contention to that effect is refuted by its mere statement.

Affirmed.

NOTE.

The reported case, which is the first decision of the United States Supreme Court to pass on the validity of a law imposing compulsory military service, holds to be constitutional the Selective Draft Law of May 18, 1917 (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 85). The court also holds that, even as applied to the drafting of members of the militia, the act is an exercise of the power to raise armies and not of the power to provide for calling forth the militia, and therefore is not subject to the limitations attached to the latter power. The entire subject of compulsory military service is discussed in the note to Rex v. Commanding Officer, Ann. Cas. 1917C 809.

BRACKETT

v.

COMMONWEALTH.

(Two Cases.)

BUTCHERS' SLAUGHTERING AND MELTING COMPANY

v.

COMMONWEALTH.

(Two Cases.)

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court—
March 3, 1916.

223 Mass. 119; 111 N. E. 1036.

Eminent Domain — Procedure — Report of Commissioners — To What Court Made.

St. 1911, c. 439, providing for proceedings in the supreme judicial court for the assessment of damages from the building of a bridge, authorizes the filing of a petition in the supreme judicial court and the appointment of commissioners to assess damages. It is held that such commissioners are required by imperative inference to make their report to the supreme judicial court which appointed them, and are officers of such court subject to its orders.

⁸ Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 72-74, 94-95, 112-113, 21 U. S. (L. ed.) 394; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 549, 23 U. S. (L. ed.) 588; Boyd v. Nebraska, 143 U. S. 135, 140, 12 S. Ct. 375, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 103; McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 37, 13 S. Ct. 3, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 869.

Status of Commissioners.

That Congress in giving the state permission to build a bridge over a stream required that the state should by legislative enactment provide for adequate compensation to persons suffering injuries, does not make commissioners appointed under St. 1911, c. 439, providing for assessment of such damages, federal officers, but such commissioners being appointed by the state courts are officers of the state court.

Elements of Compensation — Injury Not Actionable at Common Law.

That landowners' injuries resulting from the erection of a bridge were not of a kind for which a common-law action would lie, and no constitutional provision entitled them to compensation, does not preclude the state from awarding compensation.

Jurisdiction over Commissioners.

As St. 1911, c. 439, § 3, relating to assessment of damages for the erection of a bridge makes ample provision for meeting expenditures incurred under the act, the supreme judicial court, which was empowered to appoint commissioners to assess damages, has exclusive jurisdiction over such officials.

Proceeding to Enforce Award — Jurisdiction.

As St. 1911, c. 439, relating to compensation for damages from the construction of a bridge provided a remedy in the supreme judicial court, the superior court has no jurisdiction over a proceeding to collect the award of commissioners appointed by the supreme judicial court.

Review of Decision of Commissioners.

As St. 1911, c. 439, § 2, providing that the decision of commissioners appointed to estimate the damage resulting from the erection of a bridge should be final as to the amount of damages and as to questions of fact involved, the commissioners' decision is not final as to other matters; the statute implying that ordinary court procedure should be pursued in other respects and the commissioners not constituting a board of referees or arbitrators to whom all issues both of law and fact were submitted irrevocably.

Same.

A court appointing commissioners to estimate damages from a public work has power to examine their report and review it as to any errors of law apparent on its face.

Same.

Where commissioners appointed by a court to estimate the damage resulting from a public work intended to proceed and decide according to law, their report may be reviewed to correct errors of law as could an award of arbitrators or referees under similar circumstances.

Same.

Where court commissioners appointed to assess damages resulting from a public work, exercised the authority conferred upon them, their report will not be recommitted for errors, unless substantial justice requires that course and some appreciable change would be made.

Elements of Damage — Loss of Profits.

In assessing damages to a leasehold interest from the building of a bridge near by, the profits of a lessee from his business conducted on the demised premises are immaterial.

[See note at end of this case.]

Procedure — Irrelevant Evidence — Effect.

In such case, if incompetent evidence touching that point is injected in the case, by the petitioner, the commonwealth should move to have it stricken out and not meet it by a further inquiry into irrelevant matters.

Evidence Admissible to Show Value — Tax Returns.

Under St. 1903, c. 437, § 48, continued in St. 1909, c. 490, part 3, § 40, and St. 1914, c. 196, § 6, declaring that tax returns shall only be open to inspection of the tax commissioner and his assistant and such officers of the commonwealth as may have occasion to inspect them to collect taxes, tax returns are not admissible in a proceeding to assess the damages suffered by a landowner from the building of a bridge in the vicinity of his lands.

Certificate of Incorporation.

Certificates of condition filed by a corporation with the secretary of the commonwealth containing statements as to value of its real estate which it contended was damaged by the erection of a bridge, while not conclusive admissions as to value, are admissible in determining that question.

Admissions as to Value.

Such certificates are not admissions binding on a lessee of the corporation, as to injury to his leasehold.

Same.

Statements by one who was the director, clerk, and auditor of a corporation and by another who was its vice-president and managing director to a tax assessor as to the value of corporate real estate, are not admissible to show value in a proceeding by the corporation to recover damages to its real estate resulting from the building of a bridge; it not being shown that such officers were authorized to speak for the corporation on that matter.

Same.

That a corporation after a bridge was built near its realty paid the same taxes as before, is not an admission that the building of the bridge did not damage its property.

Estoppel to Assert Damage.

In such case, as the value was fixed by the assessors and not the corporation, neither payment of taxes nor failure to claim an abatement estopped the corporation from asserting damage.

Form of Award — Separate Statement of Items.

A lessee being entitled to occupy permanent structures on the land, as sheds, automatic railways, etc., such property constituting a part of the land and not fixtures, commissioners in assessing damages unnecessarily separated the damages to "leasehold interest" and "loss of fixtures."

Same.

That commissioners appointed to assess damage resulting from the building of a bridge improperly classified as fixtures permanent structures on the premises which were leased, and made separate awards for injuries to land and injuries to fixtures, does not require reversal.

Same.

Commissioners appointed to assess the damage to realty from the building of a bridge estimated the damage to the owner which had leased the premises separately from the damages of the lessee; the report showing the two estimates. The commissioners gave the commonwealth's nineteenth request for a ruling, providing that the report of the commissioners should show the value of the entire tract of land immediately before and immediately after the building of the bridge, and the value of the leasehold interest before and after that event. It is held that, though the report did not show separate estimates of the value of the leasehold interest and of the reversion, it was not subject to objection on the ground that all damages were included in the assessment in favor of the lessor, and that there was a duplication by assessing damages to the lessee, the separate statement of the damages showing that each party's interest and damage was separately and definitely determined.

On report from Supreme Judicial Court, Suffolk county, and from Superior Court, Suffolk county: McLAUGHLIN, Judge.

Petitions by Arthur L. Brackett and by Butchers' Slaughtering and Melting Association, against Commonwealth, for relief as stated in the opinion. Cases reported. The facts are stated in the opinion. Petitions in Superior Court DISMISSED and rulings of single justice AFFIRMED.

Powers & Hall for petitioners.

Roger Sherman Hoar and Judd Dewey for Commonwealth.

[121] Rugg, C. J.—The first two of these cases are petitions brought for the assessment of damages alleged to have been sustained by the petitioners as lessees and owner respectively of property abutting on the Charles River above the Stadium or Anderson Bridge, caused by the construction of that bridge, built in accordance with St. 1911, c. 439. Upon these petitions commissioners were appointed by the Supreme Judicial Court for the county of Suffolk, to hear the parties and to assess their damages, whose award was returned into that court. The Commonwealth filed numerous exceptions to the report and moved to recommit the report for the same reasons in substance set forth in its exceptions. The petitioners asked for a ruling that the court had no jurisdiction to receive or to act respecting the report, and that it be stricken from the files and returned to the commissioners. The single justice denied these requests for rulings, overruled the exceptions, refused to recommit the report, ordered it confirmed and then reported all questions of law involved for determination by the full court. The last two cases are petitions brought by the same petitioners in the Superior Court against the Commonwealth under R. L. c. 201, seeking collection of the amounts awarded by the commissioners. The Commonwealth demurred and answered in abatement. A judge of the Superior Court overruled the demurrers and answers in abatement and then reported the cases.

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—55.

1. The first essential step open to a person damaged in his estate by the construction of the bridge was to file a petition in the Supreme Judicial Court. That of itself is implication that that court acquired and retained jurisdiction of the cause of action described in the petition. The next step in the procedure was the appointment by that court of three commissioners. The entire authority of the commissioners came from that appointment. [122] They were thereby empowered and directed to perform the duties set out in the order of appointment, and to execute the functions described in the statute. In the absence of express provision to the contrary, they were officers of the court. By imperative inference, they were required to make report of their doings to the court by which they were appointed. They stand on the same footing in this regard as auditors, masters and referees. As was said by Chief Justice Gray, with affluant citation of authorities, in Wyman v. Eastern R. Co. 128 Mass. 346, 347: "It is settled, by repeated decisions, that commissioners appointed by this court and deriving all their powers from their judicial appointment must, by necessary implication, without any express statute direction, return their award to the court which appoints them, to be there examined, and, if no sufficient cause to the contrary is shown, confirmed and recorded." Kingman, petitioner, 153 Mass. 566, 579, 27 N. E. 778, 12 L.R.A. 417.

The consent of the United States was necessary for the construction of the bridge. That consent was given by act of Congress approved February 27, 1911 (c. 165, 36 Stat. L. 933). It there was enacted that, [123] before the construction of the bridge could begin, the State of Massachusetts should, by legislative enactment, provide for adequate compensation for persons suffering injury like in kind to that claimed by the petitioners, and "Provided further, That said legislative enactment shall provide for the appointment of three commissioners to hear the parties.

in interest and assess the damages to said property: Their decision as to the amount of damages and questions of fact to be final: said commissioners to be appointed by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts." The material parts of the act of Congress were embodied in St. 1911, c. 439, § 2.

This act of Congress does not constitute the commissioners federal officers. They do not derive their authority in any degree from the United States. The Congress having the power to withhold consent for the construction of the bridge, or to grant consent upon whatever terms seemed wise, imposed as conditions to the granting of its consent, that provision should be made for awarding damages to persons suffering damages like that claimed by the petitioners, and that such damages should be ascertained by commissioners appointed by the highest court of the Commonwealth. These conditions could be performed only by the General Court of Massachusetts acting within the scope of its legislative powers and providing for the exercise of judicial functions by a State tribunal. Doubtless the injuries sustained by the petitioners were of a kind for which at common law no action would lie and no constitutional right would have been infringed if no provision for compensation to them had been made. Blackwell v. Old Colony R. Co. 122 Mass. 1; Dwyer v. New York, etc. R. Co. 209 Mass. 419, 95 N. E. 850. But the Commonwealth was not thereby precluded from awarding them damages. Statutory compensation is not imperatively confined to the boundaries of strict rights secured by the paramount law. Earle v. Com. 180 Mass. 579, 583, 63 N. E. 10, 91 Am. St. Rep. 326, 57 L.R.A. 292.

[124] Manifestly, compliance with the conditions imposed by the act of Congress did not establish a federal but a State commission, deriving its authority from the State court by which it was appointed and to which it must report. The act of Congress does not purport to provide affirmative action on the part of the United States. It simply allows the State to enact a comprehensive scheme of legislation for the construction of the bridge, including compensation for injury to property, which so far as it affects that part of the field over which Congress has power, must comply with certain conditions. But it is a State scheme throughout when made vital by acts of the General Court of Massachusetts. The commissioners, when appointed under this special statute, were officers of the court by which they were appointed.

2. It would be most unusual, if not unprecedented in our legislative history, to clothe a court with the duty to appoint commissioners to determine damages, and deprive it of power to enforce its award. St. 1911, c. 439, § 3, makes ample provision for meeting the expenditures incurred under the act out of the resources of the Commonwealth. There is a necessary implication that the Supreme Judicial Court has the power and is charged with the duty of taking whatever steps may be appropriate to see that the report of the commissioners is enforced, provided it is according to the law and ought to be enforced.

3. It follows from what has been said that the Superior Court has no jurisdiction over the petitions filed in that court. Since St. 1911, c. 439, is sufficient and complete in itself as to remedy for damages, that affords the means provided by the Commonwealth for the enforcement of rights against itself. It cannot be implied in any other manner or in any other court. McArthur Bros. Co. v. Com. 197 Mass. 137, 83 N. E. 334, and cases there collected.

4. The court has power to examine the report of the commissioners and review it as to any errors of law apparent on its face. This power is ordinarily a part of judicial duty. In the absence of express statute or law to the contrary, it inheres in a court appointing its officers to make investigations. It is provided in § 2 of the instant statute that "the decision of said commissioners as to the amount of said damages and as to questions of fact involved shall be final." The fair implication from these [125] words is that in other respects their decision is not final, but is subject to usual court procedure, and that questions of law raised in the report may be reviewed. The statute did not constitute the commission a board of referees or arbitrators, to whom all issues between the parties, both of law and fact, were to be submitted irrevocably. It is quite distinguishable from that before the court in Danvers v. Com. 184 Mass. 502, 506, 69 N. E. 320. Since neither the statute, the rule of court, nor agreement of parties made the commissioners referees or arbitrators, the well settled principle that the award of arbitrators or referees will not be set aside for alleged errors of law, is not applicable. Fairchild v. Adams, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 549; Electric Supply, etc. Co. v. Conway Electric Light, etc. Co. 186 Mass. 449, 70 N. E. 983; Darrow v. Braman, 201 Mass. 469. Moreover, it is apparent from the report that the commissioners intended to proceed and to decide according to law. It has been said that, under such circumstances, even an award of arbitrators or referees may be reviewed to correct errors of law. Spoor v. Tytzer, 115 Mass. 40; Davis v. Henry, 121 Mass. 150. See Gloucester Water Supply Co. v. Gloucester, 185 Mass. 535, 70 N. E. 1015. The controlling principle in the case at bar is stated in Boston, etc. R. Corp. v. Western R. 14 Gray (Mass.) 253, at page 258, in these words: "They [the commissioners] are constituted a board for the performance of certain services under the statutes; but as they derive all their right and power to act in the premises at all from their judicial appointment, the court by which it is made will so far supervise and control their proceedings, as to see that, in discharge of the duties thus imposed upon them, they have acted within the scope, and have neither exceeded nor failed to exercise the full measure of authority with which they are invested. In considering their return, if it be found that they have thus acted, their doings and decisions will not be interfered with."

While, therefore, the court will review the report, it will not be set aside nor the case sent back for rehearing, unless there appears to be some probability that an appreciable change would be made in the report upon a correction of the mistakes, if any there are, and unless substantial justice requires that course. Newburyport Water Co. v. Newburyport, 168 Mass. 541, 552, 47 N. E. 533; Pigeon's Case, 216 Mass. 51, 55, Ann. Cas. 1915A 737, 102 N. E. 932.

[126] 5. There was no error in the exclusion of the questions, put by the Commonwealth to the petitioner Brackett upon his cross-examination, touching the profits of his business. The question on trial was the injury to his leasehold estate. The profits of his business were too remote to have any necessary bearing upon that issue. Bailey v. Boston, etc. R. Corp. 182 Mass. 537, 539, 66 N. E. 203; Mississippi, etc. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 410, 25 U. S. (L. ed.) 206. If incompetent evidence touching that point had been injected in the case by the petitioner, the proper course was to move to have it stricken out, not to meet it by further inquiry into an irrelevant subject.

6. The Attorney General offered the original tax returns of the petitioning corporation filed with the tax commissioner of the Commonwealth and taken from his custody for the purpose of the evidence before the commission. These returns are required by law to be in detail. It may be presumed that they contained statements as to value material to the issues on trial. It is matter of common knowledge that formerly such returns often have been used in evidence, when values therein stated became material in actions, by the persons making them. But in St. 1903, by § 48 of c. 437, it was enacted for the first time that such return "shall be open only to the inspection of the tax commissioner, his clerks and assistants, and such other officers of the Commonwealth as may have occasion to inspect it for the purpose of assessing or of collecting taxes."

This provision has been continued in St. 1909, c. 490, Part III, § 40, and St. 1914, c. 198, § 6. It indicates a legislative determination not only that it shall not be open to general observation, but that it shall not be used for any purpose other than that stated in the statute. Thus its evidential character is also affected. The statute manifests a purpose that such returns shall not be used as evidence in the ordinary case. Bowman v. Montcalm Circuit Judge, 129 Mich. 608, 610, 89 N. W. 334. The reason for treating tax returns as not open to use by usual methods has been recognized. Boske v. Comingore, 177 U. S. 459, 469, 20 S. Ct. 701, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 846; In re Joseph Hargreaves [1900] 1 Ch. D. (Eng.) 347. It is not here intimated that in a criminal proceeding involving integrity of the return, it might not be produced in court. Therefore, there is nothing inconsistent with this conclusion in Commonwealth v. Ryan, 157 Mass. 403.

[127] 7. Certificates of condition filed with the Secretary of the Commonwealth by the petitioning corporation under St. 1903, c. 437, § 45, cl. 6, were received in evidence. These contained statements as to value of its real estate, which tended to contradict the value as shown by evidence introduced by the corporation at the hearing. These certificates were competent evidence as admissions by the petitioner as to the value of its real estate. Smith v. Paul Boyton Co. 176 Mass. 217, 57 N. E. 367. There appears in the record to be no other ground on which such certificates could have been received in evidence. It must be assumed that they were given the weight to which under all the circumstances they were entitled. But they were not binding admissions in the sense that the real value could not be shown by other competent evidence. The request for ruling, to the effect that the certificates constituted an admission by the corporate petitioner, taken in conjunction with the request to rule that they were binding on the other petitioner, implies that these requests went beyond the plain proposition just stated. The requests appear to seek to have attached to the certificates a conclusiveness on the question of value which they did not possess. No reversible error is shown in this respect. It is not necessary now to determine the effect of such certificates where persons have acted upon the information disclosed in them. Steel v. Webster, 188 Mass. 478, 480, 74 N. E. 686.

8. Plainly these certificates were not admissions binding the other plaintiff, who had nothing to do with making them.

9. The testimony as to statements made by one who was a director, a clerk and the auditor of the corporate petitioner, and by another who was its vice president and managing director, to an assessor of the city of Boston, as to the value of that petitioner's real estate, rightly was excluded. It does not appear that these officers were authorized by the corporation to speak for it on that subject, or that such statements were within the scope of their official duty. Wellington v. Boston, etc. R. Co. 158 Mass. 185, 33 N. E. 393; Gilmore v. Mittineague Paper Co. 169 Mass. 471, 48 N. E. 623.

10. The payment of taxes upon the same valuation of its real estate, after as before the erection of the bridge, was not an admission that there had been no change in value. The valuation was not the act of the landowner, but of the assessors. For the same reason, the payment of taxes worked no estoppel as to valuation. [128] Nor was the failure to claim an abatement of consequence in this connection. Raynes v. Bennett, 114 Mass. 424.

11. The commissioners reported that the damage to Brackett, on account of "his leasehold interest," was $18,000, and "the loss on his fixtures to be $3,400, a total of $21,400." It appears from another part of the report that what here was referred to as fixtures was a "coal plant," consisting of a shed, automatic railways, steam shovel, and a wharf. While the phrase of the decision in this respect is not felicitous, it appears to mean that the commissioners undertook to divide the damages between the two elements of land and of structures upon the land. That which the commissioners termed fixtures were structures annexed to the land and hence real estate. They were to become the property of the lessor at the end of the lease. These so called fixtures were as much a part of the leasehold interest as was the land itself. The right to occupy for the term of the lease the land, wharf and buildings, with their attached machinery and appliances, was the estate which constituted the leasehold interest of the petitioner Brackett. Although such a division may be necessary sometimes, Cornell-Andrews Smelting Co. v. Boston, etc. R. Corp. 209 Mass. 298, 314, 95 N. E. 887, there seems to have been no occasion for it here. But the form of the report in this particular does not require reversal.

12. It is contended with great earnestness in behalf of the Commonwealth, that the form of the report shows that the commissioners found the entire damages to the estate of which the corporate plaintiff owned the fee, on the basis that it as owner was in possession of the entire estate without deduction on account of the leasehold interest of Brackett, and then found the damages to Brackett's leasehold interest as a separate matter, thus including that item twice. That contention is based on the form of the report, especially in the light of the defendant's nineteenth request for ruling, which the commissioners gave. The form of the report in this particular is as follows: "In petition No. 2110, Butchers Slaughtering and Melting Association, we find that the value of the property before the building of the bridge was $290,000, and after the building of the bridge the value was $237,000. We therefore find for the petitioner and assess damages in the sum of $53,000, together with interest from December 11, [129] 1912 to July 29, 1915, the date of filing this report, amounting to $8,374.00 making a total of $61,374.00. In petition No. 21109, Arthur L. Brackett, we find the value of his leasehold interest to have been $30,000 above the rental, and it was damaged to the extent of $18,000, and we find the loss on his fixtures to be $3,400, a total of $21,400, with interest from December 11, 1912 to July 29, 1915, the date of filing this report, amounting to $3,381.20 making a total of $24,781.20." This, standing alone, while not expressed with great clearness, does not seem open to misconstruction. All that the corporate petitioner could recover under its petition was the damage it had sustained to its real estate. It did not own free from incumbrance the entire real estate, but its title was subject to the incumbrance of the leasehold interest of Brackett. The only damage which in law the corporation could recover or be entitled to was that sustained in that part of the whole estate which was left after deducting from it the value of Brackett's leasehold interest. When, therefore, the commissioners refer to the petition of the corporation by number as constituting the cause of action on which the finding of damages is made, the rational inference is that they meant only that portion of the entire parcel of real estate for which that petitioner was in law entitled to recover damages. But the commissioners granted the defendant's request No. 19, to wit: "The findings by the commission should contain these figures: (a) the value of the entire tract of land immediately prior to December 11, 1912; (b) the value of the entire tract of land immediately subsequent to December 11, 1912, (c) the value of the leasehold immediately prior to December 11, 1912; and (d) the value of the leasehold immediately subsequent to December 11, 1912." Although this introduces some confusion and has caused doubt, yet it does not quite seem to overcome the statement from the report which has been quoted. That request, strictly construed according to the interpretation contended for at the argument on behalf of the Commonwealth, in (a) and (b) did not relate to any issue upon which the commissioners were required to pass. Their duty, as has been said, was to find the damages sustained by each of the petitioners. Separate petitions rightly were brought, and the damages were to be separately assessed. Although granting that request, the commissioners did not in express terms find the value [130] of the leasehold immediately before December 11, 1912, and immediately subsequent to that date. Those amounts can be ascertained only after some figuring. The plain duty of the commissioners was to find separately the damages suffered by each petitioner. They had performed that duty by the report as framed. Under all the circumstances, the only reasonable interpretation is to hold that the meaning of the report was not intended to be nullified by granting the request No. 19; but that the commissioners supposed they had complied with the request by the report, by finding the damages which the plaintiff corporation had suffered in its own right, and the damages which Brackett has sustained in his right.

The petitions pending in the Superior Courts are to be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. In the petitions pending in the Supreme Judicial Court, the rulings of the single justice were right and the order confirming the report is affirmed in each case.

So ordered.

NOTE.

Loss of Profits or Injury to Business as Element of Damages in Eminent Domain Proceedings.

Introductory, 869.

Condemnation for Railroad Purposes:

Majority Rule, 869.

Minority Rule, 873.

Condemnation for Other than Railroad Purposes:

Generally, 873.

Rule in Massachusetts, 875.

Rule in New York, 875.

Property Not Taken but Injured, 876.

Injury to Franchise, 877.

Injury to Good Will, 878.

Loss of Speculative or Future Profits, 879.

Introductory.

It is the purpose of this note to discuss the cases dealing with the question of loss of profits or injury to business as an element of damage in eminent domain proceedings. The element of injury to business is in the main confined to cases that are closely connected with loss of profits. For a discussion of the right to recover damages in eminent domain proceedings for an injury to personal property or the expense of removing it from the premises, see the notes to the following cases: Blincoe v. Choctaw, etc. R. Co. 8 Ann. Cas. 689; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Anderson, 16 Ann. Cas. 784; St. Louis v. St. Louis, etc. R. Co. reported post, this volume, at page 881; Board of Trade Tel. Co. v. Darst, 85 Am. St. Rep. 238, 298.

Condemnation for Railroad Purposes.

MAJORITY RULE.

The general rule is that loss of profits or injury to business is ordinarily not an element of damage to be considered in determining the value of property taken for railroad purposes under the power of eminent domain.

England.—Cameron v. Charing Cross R. Co. 19 C. B. N. S. 764, 115 E. C. L. 764, 11 Jur. N. S. 282, 12 L. T. N. S. 121, 13 W. R. 390; Ricket v. Metropolitan R. Co. 5 B. & S. 149, 117 E. C. L. 149, L. R. 2 H. L. 175; Reg. v. Vaughan, 4 L. R. Q. B. 190. Compare Jubb v. Dock Co. etc. 9 Q. B. 443, 58 E. C. L. 443; Senior v. Metropolitan R. Co. 2 H. & C. 258, 9 Jur. N. S. 802, 32 L. J. Exch. 225, 8 L. T. N. S. 544, 11 W. R. 836; Ripley v. Great Northern R. Co. L. R. 10 Ch. 435, 31 L. T. N. S. 869, 23 W. R. 685.

Canada.—Rex v. Richards, 14 Can. Exch. 365. Compare In re Cavanagh, 14 Ont. L. Rep. 523, 9 Ont. W. Rep. 842; In re Davies, 28 Ont. L. Rep. 544; In re Schooley, 34 Ont. L. Rep. 328, 25 Dominion L. Rep. 537, 8 Ont. W. N. 589.

Arkansas.—Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Anderson, 88 Ark. 129, 16 Ann. Cas. 784, 113 S. W. 1030.

Georgia.—Selma, etc. R. Co. v. Camp, 45 Ga. 180.

Illinois.—Jacksonville, etc. R. Co. v. Walsh, 106 Ill. 253; Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Dresel, 110 Ill. 89; De Buol v. Freeport, etc. R. Co. 111 Ill. 499; Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Eaton, 136 Ill. 9, 26 N. E. 575; Braun v. Metropolitan West Side El. R. Co. 166 Ill. 434, 46 N. E. 974; Chicago v. Jackson, 196 Ill. 496, 63 N. E. 1013, 1135. See also Dupuis v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 115 Ill. 97, 3 N. E. 720. Compare St. Louis, etc. R. Co. v. Kirby, 104 Ill. 345.

Louisiana.—Opelousas, etc. R. Co. v. St. Landry Cotton Oil Co. 121 La. 796, 46 So. 810.

Massachusetts.—Whitman v. Boston, etc. R. Co. 3 Allen 133; Boston, etc. R. Corp. v. Old Colony, etc. R. Corp. 3 Allen 142; Massachusetts Cent. R. Co. v. Boston, etc. R. Co. 121 Mass. 124; Bailey v. Boston, etc. R. Corp. 182 Mass. 537, 66 N. E. 203; Peabody v. Boston El. R. Co. 191 Mass. 513, 78 N. E. 392.

Missouri.—St. Louis, etc. R. Co. v. Knapp, etc. Co. 160 Mo. 396, 61 S. W. 300; St.

Louis v. St. Louis, etc. R. Co. 266 Mo. 694, 182 S. W. 750. See also St. Louis, etc. R. Co. v. Continental Brick Co. 198 Mo. 698, 96 S. W. 1011. Compare Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. McGrew, 104 Mo. 282, 15 S. W. 931.

Nevada.—Virginia, etc. R. Co. v. Henry, 8 Nev. 165.

New Hampshire.—Ranlet v. Concord R. Corp. 62 N. H. 561.

New York.—Taylor v. Metropolitan El. R. Co. 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 311; Troy, etc. R. Co. v. Northern Turnpike Co. 16 Barb. 100. See also In re New York, etc. R. Co. 29 Hun 1.

Ohio.—Toledo Consol. St. R. Co. v. Toledo Electric St. R. Co. 3 Ohio Cir. Dec. 493, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. 362; Lake Shore, etc. Co. v. Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. 30 Ohio St. 604.

Pennsylvania.—Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Eby, 107 Pa. St. 166; Spring City Gaslight Co. v. Pennsylvania Schuylkill Valley R. Co. 167 Pa. St. 6, 31 Atl. 368; Becker v. Philadelphia, etc. Terminal Co. 177 Pa. St. 252, 35 Atl. 617, 35 L.R.A. 583; Hamilton v. Pittsburg, etc. R. Co. 190 Pa. St. 51, 42 Atl. 369, 51 L.R.A. 319; Kossler v. Pittsburg, etc. R. Co. 208 Pa. St. 50, 57 Atl. 66; Cox v. Philadelphia, etc. R. Co. 215 Pa. St. 506, 64 Atl. 729, 114 Am. St. Rep. 979; Schonhardt v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 216 Pa. St. 224, 65 Atl. 543. See also Kersey v. Schuylkill River East Side R. Co. 133 Pa. St. 234, 19 Atl. 553, 19 Am. St. Rep. 632, 7 L.R.A. 409. Compare Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Vance, 115 Pa. St. 325, 8 Atl. 764; Ehret v. Schuylkill River East Side R. Co. 151 Pa. St. 158, 24 Atl. 1068.

Texas.—Houston, etc. Cent. R. Co. v. Powell, 125 S. W. 330.

Virginia.—Richmond, etc. R. Co. v. Chambelin 100 Va. 401, 41 S. E. 750; Hunter v. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. 107 Va. 158, 59 S. E. 415, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 124. See also Richmond v. Williams, 114 Va. 698, 77 S. E. 492.

Washington.—North Coast R. Co. v. A. A. Kraft Co. 63 Wash. 250, 115 Pac. 97; Seattle, etc. Ry. v. Land, 81 Wash. 206, 142 Pac. 680. See also Seattle, etc. R. Co. v. Roeder, 30 Wash. 244, 70 Pac. 498, 94 Am. St. Rep. 864.

West Virginia.—Shenandoah Valley R. Co. v. Shepherd, 26 W. Va. 672; Buckhannon, etc. R. Co. v. Great Scott Coal, etc. Co. 75 W. Va. 423, 83 S. E. 1031.

It was said in Bailey v. Boston, etc. R. Co. 182 Mass. 537, 66 N. E. 293: "The principles of law applicable to these cases have long been well established in this commonwealth, whatever difficulties may have arisen in the application of them. Under statutes like that before us, in the absence of any peculiar provision, persons damaged in their real estate are to receive compensation for all such damages as are direct and proximate, as distinguished from those that are remote and consequential, if they are, at the same time, special and peculiar as distinguished from common and general. When real estate is used in carrying on a business, the damage to be assessed for the diminution in value of the real estate is estimated in reference to the uses to which it is adapted, and not for loss in the business. . . .

Loss to business as business is too remote and consequential a damage to be allowed in estimating damage to the real estate on which it is conducted. Nor does it furnish a correct criterion by which to determine the diminution in value of the estate for the uses to which it is adapted. The business might chance to be exceedingly profitable at the time of the taking, so that an interruption of it from an interference with the full use of the real estate might cause a loss far greater than the reasonable rentable price of the property, or it might then be going on at a loss, so that the interruption would cause no damage to the business, notwithstanding that the interference with the use of the real estate was such as would cause a great diminution of its rentable value. In these cases there was an interference with the use of the petitioner's property for about twelve months. So far as this interference diminished its rentable value, or its value for the uses to which it was adapted, and so far as the damage was special and peculiar, as distinguished from that suffered in greater or less degree by the public generally, it was an element properly to be considered by the jury. The fact that it continued only while the work of construction was going on, if it was properly incident to the construction, is immaterial. . . . In the form in which the items are stated, one being for money paid for handling goods which could not be taken by teams on account of the work of construction, and the other being for money loss to the business from diminution in its volume, it is plain that the jury were rightly instructed that they were not recoverable."

In Jacksonville, etc. R. Co. v. Walsh, 106 Ill. 253, wherein premises on which the owner maintained a saloon were sought to be condemned for railroad purposes, testimony as to the amount of business, and the profits arising therefrom, was held to be incompetent. The court said: "There can be no plainer proposition than the cash value of the property condemned was the sum appellee was entitled to recover as damages. All legitimate evidence tending to establish that sum was proper, and all evidence that tended to enhance the damages above or reduce them below that sum was illegitimate and improper. The inquiry should have been confined to the market value of the property, and all evidence of the amount of business that was or could be done in it, or the probable profits arising therefrom, was improper, and should have been rejected. The purposes for which it was used and designed, its location and advantages as to situation, were proper matters of consideration by the jury; but the profits of the business of the past, and conjectural profits for the future, were too speculative and uncertain upon which to ascertain the market or cash value of the property. The question was not the value of the property for a short term of years, but the entire property, and its value. Here, evidence was admitted to show the sales of liquor in the saloon each day, and the profits accruing from these sales. Such sales depend so largely on varying circumstances that the damages are purely speculative. Whether there shall be licenses granted to keep saloons in the municipality is contingent, and wholly uncertain. No one can say that when appellee's license expires, he or others can procure another for years, if ever, afterwards. That all depends upon the discretion of the municipal authorities. Again, one person can do a greatly larger business in the same calling, at the same place, and under the same circumstances, than another. It may be that appellee could, in that saloon, do double the amount of business that any other person could do. Such considerations are purely contingent, and altogether speculative, and cannot form the basis for fixing the price of the property, and its market value was the question involved, and which the jury were required to find. That was the measure of the damages they were to assess. The question as to the number of guests that stopped at the house daily, was of the same character. That depended upon a great number of contingencies. As one witness answered, the house was sometimes full, and sometimes it was not. Again, the question of the cost of erecting such buildings was not an element of damages, unless it were shown they would actually increase the value of the premises to the extent of their cost. All know that the cost of improvements on real estate is not a true test of their value in market. They may, or not, owing to circumstances, enhance the value of the property to the amount of their cost. The true question was, what was the value of the property as it then was—not what it cost, but for how much would it sell. The admission of this evidence, against the objection of appellant, was also error."

So it was said in Cox v. Philadelphia, etc. R. Co. 215 Pa. St. 506, 64 Atl. 729, 114 Am. St. Rep. 979: "It is well settled that the measure of damages for land taken or injured by a railroad company under the right of eminent domain is the difference in the market value of the tract as a whole before the taking and afterwards, as affected by it. In adjusting this difference, the landowner is entitled to have the jury take into consideration the value of his property for any and every purpose or use to which it may be adapted, and to have the damages assessed upon a basis of the most valuable use to which the property may be adapted. As said by the present Chief Justice in Harris v. Schuylkill River East Side R. Co. 141 Pa. St. 242: 'In estimating the value of the lot before the taking, its possible and probable uses are important elements, and may be shown by the opinion of experts.' On the other hand, the defendant company is entitled to any benefits or advantages which may accrue to the part of the tract of land, not taken or injured, by reason of the construction of the improvement. In ascertaining the damages, therefore, the jury must take into consideration the value of the land for the uses to which it has been or may be applied, and the special advantage the construction of the road may be to the residue of the tract through which it is constructed. While these general principles, applicable to the assessment of damages in condemnation proceedings, are well settled, there is another rule which has been recognized and enforced for more than three-quarters of a century in this state, which prohibits the landowner from having the profits of his business considered by the jury in determining the value of the property which is affected or injured by the improvement. 'We have so often said,' says Mr. Justice Green in Becker v. Philadelphia, etc. R. Co. 177 Pa. St. 252, 'that the profits of business could not be recovered in condemnation proceedings that it seems like a waste of time to cite the decisions. As far back as Thoburn's Case, 7 Serg. & R. 411, it was held that, in estimating the damages done to the landowner, the jury are to value the injury to the property at the time the injury was suffered, without reference to the person of the owner or the state of his business. The allowance of damages for an actual or supposed loss of profits in a business carried on upon the premises by reason of the taking, was most emphatically condemned in the opinion, and that decision has been followed by this court from that day to this. . . . After stating the injustice of allowing for the profits of business to be carried on, the chief justice added (in Thoburn's case), 'That would make the defendant an insurer of ordinary profits in a new state of the business, pushed to a morbid extent, and would put it in the power of the plaintiff to increase the damages to any extent he might think proper. I mention this to show the danger of taking into consideration circumstances posterior to the time when the privilege is fully entered on, and its consequences to the individual to be compensated are ascertained.'"

Mere consequential injuries resulting from inconvenience, loss of business and the like are not recoverable. The measure of recoverable damage is the actual diminution in the value of the property for sale or rental. Ope-lousas, etc. R. Co. v. St. Landry Cotton Oil Co. 121 La. 796, 46 So. 810. No recovery for loss of profits can be had whether the interruption to business is permanent or temporary. Cameron v. Charing Cross R. Co. 19 C. B. N. S. 764, 115 E. C. L. 764, 11 Jur. N. S. 282, 12 L. T. N. S. 121, 13 W. R. 390. Nor may a recovery be had for any inconvenience caused to the plaintiff's business. Birmingham R. etc. Co. v. Smyer, 181 Ala. 121, Ann. Cas. 1915C 863, 61 So. 354, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 597.

In Metropolitan West Side El. R. Co. v. Siegel, 161 Ill. 638, 44 N. E. 276, the court while recognizing the general rule that the measure of damages for the property condemned is its fair market value, and that in arriving at such value it is competent to prove any use for which it is adapted, said that exceptional cases may arise where a proper observance of the constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation may require the payment of damages actually sustained other than those measured by the value of the property taken. Accordingly in that case wherein the plaintiff's leasehold interest was sought to be condemned for the purposes of constructing an elevated railway, damages for the interruption or suspension of business were allowed. See to the same effect Atchinson, etc. R. Co. v. Schneider, 127 Ill. 144, 20 N. E. 41, 2 L.R.A. 422.

In St. Louis, etc. R. Co. v. Capps, 72 Ill. 188, affirmed 67 Ill. 607, the power of eminent domain was exercised under an ordinance granting a right of way on the following condition: "The said railroad company are to be held bound to pay all damages that may accrue to the property owners on said Main street (the one in question) by reason of the construction of said railroad." It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for whatever deterioration in value his real estate may have undergone in consequence of laying the railway track, and to damages for interruption to his business during such time as would have been necessarily employed in accommodating himself to another place equally eligible, and his removal thereto; that during that time, the damages to his business should be ascertained by proof of the probable reasonable profits which might have been made on sales had there been no interruption to the business of the plaintiff by the defendant company. See also Peoria, etc. R. Co. v. Sawyer, 71 Ill. 361; Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Hock, 118 Ill. 587, 9 N. E. 205.

In a few jurisdictions the majority rule is maintained in a modified form, the courts holding that while loss of profits or injury to business are not distinct elements of damage, yet in arriving at the measure of compensation, it is proper for the jury to consider the purposes for which property taken has been used, and whether it is profitable and valuable for that use, and the loss of that use may be considered in fixing the damages. Laffin v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 33 Fed. 415; King v. Minneapolis Union R. Co. 32 Minn. 224, 20 N. W. 135; Driver v. Western Union R. Co. 32 Wis. 569, 14 Am. Rep. 726; Chapman v. Oshkosh, etc. R. Co. 33 Wis. 629; Weyer v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 68 Wis. 180, 31 N. W. 710. See also Esch v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 72 Wis. 229, 39 N. W. 129.

Thus in King v. Minneapolis Union R. Co. supra, proceedings were instituted by a railroad company to condemn a leasehold interest in certain lots together with certain buildings and fixtures thereon. The only issue was the amount of compensation to which the lessee was entitled, the entire property on which the lessee had maintained a manufacturing business for fourteen years being taken. The court said: "The evidence minutely described the situation of the premises, the size of the buildings, the nature and character of the machinery, and the uses to which it was adapted. Witnesses were also called to prove the value of the respondents' leasehold interest, including the buildings and machinery. While the exceptions to the admission of evidence as well as to the charge of the court vary somewhat in form, and present the matter in different shapes, yet the general question raised by all of them really is whether it was proper, in determining the value of this property, to take into account the fact that here was a manufacturing business established and in operation upon the premises. That this was allowed is really the alleged error here urged, and which we have to consider. We think it may be stated as elementary that a person is entitled to the fair value of his property for any use to which it is adapted and for which it is available, and for which it may be sold. He is entitled to the value of his property for any use to which it may be applied, and for which it would ordinarily sell in the market, whether that use be the one to which it is presently applied, or some other to which it is adapted. It is, we think, equally true that any evidence is competent and any fact is proper to be considered which legitimately bears upon the question of the marketable value of the property. In this case evidence was introduced tending to prove that the fact of a business having been established and carried on on the premises for so long a time materially increased the market value of this property. If this was the fact, it was competent to prove it; and, if proved, we cannot see why it was not proper to take it into consideration in estimating the value. Who can say that this circumstance would not affect its value; that is, what a purchaser would ordinarily be willing to pay? When we speak of the market value of property as being what purchasers generally would pay for it, we do not mean what men would pay who had no particular object in view in purchasing, and no definite plan as to the use to which to put it. The owner has a right to its value for the use for which it would bring the most in the market. This property was expressly built for a plow factory, and was especially suited for such a use. And it is not unreasonable to suppose that a purchaser would give more for it than he would if the business had been suspended for a time or had never been established there. Take, for example, a hotel built expressly as a public house, and not capable of advantageous use for anything else: might it not be worth more, that is, bring more in the market, by reason of the fact that it had been for years run as a hotel? So with a stand long used for some branch of mercantile business. From that very fact it might be worth more for that kind of business than any other, and a man who wished to buy might give more for it than he otherwise would. If so, why is not that a proper element to take into account in determining its value? To do so is not, as counsel seems to argue, to pay the owner for his loss of business or loss of future profits, but simply to give him the marketable value of his property for the use for which it is best adapted, and for which it would bring the most. The court below expressly instructed the jury, in substance, that they could only allow respondents the fair market value of the property, and could not take into account their loss of profits, or damages to their business; but that in estimating this value they could take into account its desirable location for this or any other legitimate business, and the fact that a business had been established there, so far as these considerations would affect the value of the property, or what a purchaser would be willing to pay for it. Reduced down, this, it seems to us, is the plain import of the charge of the court, and the meaning which the jury would naturally attach to it. And it was only to this extent and for this purpose that witnesses were permitted to take into account the fact that this business had been established and was in operation on the premises. In this we think there was no error, and this really covers the substance of all that is here assigned as error on the trial."

MINORITY RULE.

In a few jurisdictions the view obtains that in estimating the damages in case of a condemnation for railroad purposes injury to business and loss of profits are proper elements to be included. Colorado M. R. Co. v. Brown, 15 Colo. 193, 25 Pac. 87; Missouri, etc. R. Co. v. Haines, 10 Kan. 439; Covington Short Route Transfer Co. v. Piel, 87 Ky. 267, 8 S. W. 449; Maysville, etc. R. Co. v. Conner, 29 S. W. 344, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 635; Grand Rapids, etc. R. Co. v. Weiden, 70 Mich. 390, 38 N. W. 294. Thus it was said in Missouri, etc. R. Co. v. Haines, supra, "In assessing damages done to land by reason of the appropriation of a right of way through it for a railroad, the commissioners or jury may always take into consideration all incidental loss, inconvenience, and damages, present and prospective, which may be known, or may reasonably be expected, to result from the construction and operation of the road in a legal and proper manner; and in doing so they may always take into consideration the exact condition in which the road may be at the time when they make the assessment." See also St. Louis, etc. R. Co. v. McAuliff, 43 Kan. 185, 23 Pac. 102.

So it has been held that in ascertaining the damages, the value of the property as a home and loss resulting to the owner's business were proper elements to be considered by the jury. Covington Short Route Transfer Co. v. Piel, 87 Ky. 267, 8 S. W. 449, wherein the court suggested that "to say that no such facts should enter into the estimate of value would be unjust to the owner, and place him in a condition where he had sustained actual injury other than the mere market value of his property, without affording him any remedy for the wrong."

Condemnation for Other than Railroad Purposes.

GENERALLY.

The general rule recognized in case land is appropriated for railroad purposes that loss of profits and injury to business are not, as such, recoverable, is correspondingly applied to the taking of property under the power of eminent domain for other than railroad purposes. Bigg v. Corp. of London, L. R. 15 Eq. Cas. 376, 28 L. T. N. S. 336; U. S. v. Inlota, 2 Am. L. Rec. 314, 513, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,441; Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Chicago, 26 Fed. 415; U. S. v. Meyers, 190 Fed. 688; In re Post Office Site, 210 Fed. 832, 127 C. C. A. 382; West Chicago Park Com'rs v. Boal, 232 Ill. 248, 83 N. E. 824; Portland, etc. R. Co. v. Deering, 78 Me. 61, 2 Atl. 670, 57 Am. Rep. 784; Kansas City v. Bacon, 157 Mo. 450, 57 S. W. 1045; In re Mt. Washington Road Co. 35 N. H. 134; Chosen Freeholders v. Emmerich, 57 N. J. Eq. 535, 42 Atl. 107; Schuylkill Nav. Co. v. Farr, 4 Watts & S. (Pa.) 362; Schuylkill Nav. Co. v. Thoburn, 7 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 411; Porter

v. Scranton, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 218; Fuller v. Edings, 11 Rich. L. (S. C.) 239; Eddings v. Seabrook, 12 Rich. L. (S. C.) 504; Lenzi v. Memphis Union Station Co. 3 Tenn. Civ. App. 218; Buckhannon, etc. R. Co. v. Great Scott Coal, etc. Co. 75 W. Va. 423, 83 S. E. 1031; Stadler v. Milwaukee, 34 Wis. 98. See also Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterhill, 97 Me. 185, 54 Atl. 6, 60 L.R.A. 856; Shaw v. Philadelphia, 169 Pa. St. 506, 32 Atl. 593; In re Barbadoes St. 8 Phila. (Pa.) 498.

While it is proper to show how the property is used as an element of value, it is incompetent to go into the question of profits. Incidental loss or inconvenience in business, resulting from removal or changes made necessary by the taking of property, must be borne by the owner for the sake of the general good and are not the subject of damages in condemnation. Buckhannon, etc. R. Co. v. Great Scott Coal, etc. Co. 75 W. Va. 423, 83 S. E. 1031. "The general rule, as settled by the best authorities, is that injury to a business carried on upon the premises, either by the landlord or tenant, is not a proper element of damage." Chosen Freeholders v. Emmerich, 57 N. J. Eq. 535, 42 Atl. 107.

But in some jurisdictions the general rule is qualified by a holding that while loss of profits is not recoverable as such the fact that the property is the site of a profitable business is to be considered in estimating its value. Ranck v. Cedar Rapids, 134 Ia. 563, 111 N. W. 1027; Gillespie v. South Omaha, 79 Neb. 441, 112 N. W. 582; Harriaburg, etc. Turnpike Road Co. v. Cumberland County, 225 Pa. St. 467, 74 Atl. 340; Iron City Automobile Co. v. Pittsburgh, 253 Pa. St. 478, 98 Atl. 679, L.R.A.1917C 421; Re Meyer, 30 Ont. L. Rep. 426, 5 Ont. W. N. 733. See also Prosser v. Wapello County, 18 Ia. 327, and see infra the subdivision Rule in New York.

It is pertinent to show that the business of the occupant of the property whose land has been taken under the power of eminent domain, has been affected by the taking, and that the access thereto is less convenient, not as showing independent items of damage, but for the sole purpose of determining the difference between the market value of the property before and after the construction of the public improvement. Gillespie v. South Omaha, 79 Neb. 441, 112 N. W. 582.

Testimony by a person whose land was condemned for public use as a street, that he had a stable on the lot fitted up for a large number of horses and had been conducting a livery and feed business there for sixteen years, the long use of which tended to increase the value of the land for such business, has been held to be relevant and material on the question of its value. Ranck v. Cedar Rapids, 134 Ia. 563, 111 N. W. 1027, wherein it was said: "It is claimed upon part of the appellant that appellee was permitted to testify to the loss of or injury to his business by reason of the condemnation, and that such evidence is inadmissible. If the record bore out this claim, it would present a very serious question, for the rule observed by the courts with respect to damages of this nature is involved in considerable doubt; but we need not pause to consider it here, because an examination of the abstracts does not sustain the alleged error. . . . The value of . . . property for any special use for which it is fitted or adapted may always be inquired into, and the fact that for a long time a particular line of business has been there carried on, thus giving an increased value to the location, may also be shown. Of the many authorities already cited supporting this view, none are more directly in point than King v. Minneapolis Union R. Co. 32 Minn. 224, 20 N. W. 135. From this opinion prepared by Mitchell, J., a jurist of distinguished ability, we quote: We think it elementary that a person is entitled to the fair value of his property for any use to which it is adapted. . . . It is, we think, equally true that any fact is proper to be considered which legitimately bears upon the market value of the property. In this case evidence was introduced tending to prove that the fact of a business having been established and carried on upon the premises for so long a time materially increased the market value of this property. If this was a fact, it was competent to prove it; and, if proved, we cannot see why it was not proper to be taken into consideration in estimating the value. . . . The owner has the right to its value for the use for which it would bring the most in the market. The property was expressly built for a plow factory, and was especially fitted for such a use, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that a purchaser would give more for it than he would if the business had been suspended for some time, or had never been established there. Take, for example, a hotel built expressly as a public house, and not capable of advantageous use for anything else. Might it not be worth more—that is, bring more in the market—by reason of the fact that it had for years been run as a hotel? . . . If so, why is it not a proper element to take into account in determining its value? To do so is not, as counsel seem to argue, to pay the owner for his loss of business or future profits, but simply to give him the marketable value of his property for the use for which it is best adapted and for which it would bring the most. This doctrine is in entire harmony with our own decisions. It is also sound in principle, and fully justifies the rulings of the trial court to which the exceptions here considered were taken."

It has been held in Michigan that profits of a business carried on on the property when reasonably certain may be allowed as an element of damage for its appropriation for public use. Detroit Parks, etc. Com'rs v. Moesta, 91 Mich. 149, 51 N. W. 903. And see Detroit v. Brennan, 93 Mich. 338, 53 N. W. 525.

RULE IN MASSACHUSETTS.

In Massachusetts the general rule that ordinarily the injury done to a person's business by the exercise of the right of eminent domain is not a matter for which he can claim compensation, is generally recognized. Cobb v. Boston, 109 Mass. 438; Pegler v. Hyde Park, 176 Mass. 101, 57 N. E. 327; Emery v. Boston Terminal Co. 178 Mass. 172, 59 N. E. 763, 86 Am. St. Rep. 473; Boston Belting Co. v. Boston, 183 Mass. 254, 87 N. E. 428; Nashua River Paper Co. v. Com. 184 Mass. 279, 68 N. E. 209; Whiting v. Com. 196 Mass. 468, 82 N. E. 670. And see the reported case. See also Brooks v. Boston, 19 Pick. 174.

But such damage was held to be recoverable in each of the following cases, by virtue of a special act: Earle v. Com. 180 Mass. 579, 63 N. E. 10, 91 Am. St. Rep. 326, 57 L.R.A. 292; Fairbanks v. Com. 183 Mass. 373, 67 N. E. 335; Sawyer v. Com. 185 Mass. 356, 70 N. E. 438; Allen v. Com. 188 Mass. 59, 74 N. E. 287, 69 L.R.A. 599. See also Sawyer v. Com. 182 Mass. 245, 65 N. E. 52, 59 L.R.A. 726.

RULE IN NEW YORK.

In New York the general rule obtains that loss of profits is not recoverable as an element of damage for the taking of property by the exercise of the power of eminent domain. Matter of Buffalo, 1 N. Y. St. Rep. 742; In re New York, etc. R. Co. 35 Hun 633; Van Buren v. Fishkill Water-Works Co. 50 Hun 448, 3 N. Y. S. 336, 21 N. Y. St. Rep. 438; Matter of Public Parks, 53 Hun 280, 6 N. Y. S. 750, 25 N. Y. St. Rep. 9, appeal dismissed 121 N. Y. 711, 24 N. E. 1101; Matter of New York, etc. Bridge, 50 Hun 606 mem. 4 N. Y. S. 222; Matter of Newton, 63 Hun 628 mem. 19 N. Y. S. 573; Matter of Gilroy, 26 App. Div. 314, 49 N. Y. S. 798; Sauer v. New York City, 44 App. Div. 305, 60 N. Y. S. 648; Syracuse v. Stacey, 45 App. Div. 249, 61 N. Y. S. 165; New York Telephone Co. v. State, 169 App. Div. 310, 154 N. Y. S. 1059. "Although . . . in determining the market value of property taken for public use, it is proper to consider such property with reference to any and all purposes to which it may be devoted, yet an inquiry as to the profits which have been or may be realized from some particular business would have but little, if any, legitimate bearing upon the question of value, for the reason that the profitable or unprofitable conduct of all business is generally dependent upon a variety of causes, such as the location of the property, the enterprise, judgment, and business skill of the owner, not to mention several other elements which will readily suggest themselves." Syracuse v. Stacey, 45 App. Div. 249, 61 N. Y. S. 165. See also Matter of New York Water Supply, 159 App. Div. 279, 144 N. Y. S. 373.

But by a special enactment in New York (Laws 1905, c. 724, as amended in 1906) creating a state water supply commission, it is provided that where land is condemned for the purposes mentioned in that statute, the owners of business injured by such condemnation are entitled to compensation for the loss of profits or injuries to their business. See Matter of Simmons, 58 Misc. 581, 109 N. Y. S. 1036, affirmed 130 App. Div. 350, 114 N. Y. S. 571; People v. New York, 198 N. Y. 439, 92 N. E. 18; In re New York Water Supply, 211 N. Y. 174, 105 N. E. 213.

Evidence of the loss of profits or injury to business has been held to be admissible in New York not as showing specific items of damage, but as bearing on the question of the market value of the property appropriated. Matter of State Reservation, 16 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 159; Reisert v. New York, 174 N. Y. 196, 66 N. E. 731; Matter of Grade Crossing Com'rs, 17 App. Div. 54, 44 N. Y. S. 844, affirmed 154 N. Y. 550, 49 N. E. 127; Brainerd v. State, 74 Misc. 100, 131 N. Y. S. 221; Matter of Bensel, 148 App. Div. 553, 133 N. Y. S. 84; Matter of Water Supply, 81 Misc. 19, 142 N. Y. S. 83.

Thus it was said in Brainerd v. State, supra: "The cases, however, are not harmonious on the question of injury to business. . . . The profits derived from the use of the property itself may be shown, whenever such profits would be an indication of the value. . . . So the profits derived from the farming afford a criterion of the value of the farm. . . . If the particular use to which the property is devoted has continued for a long time and has imparted to the property a peculiar value for that use, as for a hotel, it is proper to show the fact and to take it into consideration in fixing the damages. . . . Whether or not profits should be considered depends upon the nature of the premises taken. Where the personal skill, experience and efforts of the owner play too prominent a part, the profits realized from the business conducted upon real property constitute but little aid in determining the value of the property; but, where the earnings depend chiefly upon the location, soil or character of the property itself, the profits derived from it may furnish reliable evidence of its value. There are, therefore, cases which hold that profits are inadmissible in evidence (Matter of Gilroy, 26 App. Div. 314; Sauer v. Mayor, 44 App. Div. 308; Syracuse v. Stacey, 45 App. Div. 249) and those where evidence of profits has been held to be admissible. Reisert v. New York, 174 N. Y. 196. In this particular case, there is a question as to whether or not the property is so situated as to justify the introduction in evidence of the profits of the business, not as the basis of the value of the property, but as bearing upon its value. . . . The claimants should have been permitted to introduce in evidence all the facts relating to their business, including, if the information is reliable, the profits realized from their business. Omaha Horse R. Co. v. Cable Tram-Way Co. 32 Fed. 727; Laffin v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 33 Fed. 415; Matter of State Reservation, 16 Abb. N. Cas. 159. It is true that the premises were favorably situated, and it is not denied that no similar location in the village of Spencerport was available. Under these circumstances it would seem that this property had a special adaptation to the uses to which it had been placed and that it was peculiarly available for the business conducted thereon by the claimants. It is well known that the income from property is one of the chief facts relied upon by prospective purchasers of real estate. The rents received from real property are supposed to bear certain relation to its value. In the case of some kinds of property, the earnings are the best measure of the value; for frequently such property is so peculiar and rare in the community that it has no market value as that term is generally understood. . . . While this is so with reference to productive real estate, it may or may not be true in the case of real property upon which a business is conducted. In the latter case the profits may be entirely the result of the personal skill, experience and labor of the individual conducting the business; and in such a case the profits would not be the measure of the value of the property and have very little bearing thereon. It is a matter that must be left to the judgment of the court, but it may be safely asserted that no element should be excluded in arriving at the market value of premises which it is customary for the business world to consider in determining such market value, and which an ordinarily prudent man would take into account before forming a judgment as to the market value of property which he is about to purchase."

Property Not Taken but Injured.

Formerly all compensation was limited to cases in which property was taken. That was the scope of the constitutional provisions, but the manifest injustice of such limitation has led to constitutional action in many jurisdictions extending compensation to cases in which property is damaged, although none is actually taken. See 10 R. C. L. tit. Eminent Domain, p. 164 et seq.

In case of such an injury the measure of damages is the diminution of the value of the property which is injuriously affected by the public improvement. In arriving at that damage, neither the profits of the business conducted on the premises, nor the cost to the tenant of fixtures and improvements placed therein, nor the articles purchased for the purpose of enabling the lessee to conduct the business, nor diminution in the value of such fixtures, improvements or articles as are removed by the lessee, can be recovered as damages; but the increased value of the premises for rent in consequence of the putting in of such fixtures and improvements may properly be considered in computing the damages to the leasehold estate. In such a case the profits of the business are not recoverable by way of damages, but evidence that the business is profitable is admissible to illustrate and throw light on the value of the premises for rent. Pause v. Atlanta, 98 Ga. 92, 26 S. E. 489, 58 Am. St. Rep. 290. To the same effect see the following cases: Cook, etc. Co. v. Chicago Sanitary Dist. 177 Ill. 599, 52 N. E. 870; Marshall v. Chicago, 77 Ill. App. 351; Chicago Sanitary Dist. v. McGuirl, 86 Ill. App. 392; Chicago v. McShane, 102 Ill. App. 239; New York, etc. R. Co. v. Blacker, 178 Mass. 386, 59 N. E. 1020; Voigt v. Milwaukee County, 158 Wis. 666, 149 N. W. 392. See also St. Louis, etc. R. Co. v. Capps, 72 Ill. 188, affirmed in 67 Ill. 607; Leach v. Philadelphia, etc. Co. 258 Pa. St. 522, 102 Atl. 175. Compare Hohmann v. Chicago, 140 Ill. 226, 29 N. E. 671, 41 Ill. App. 41.

Where a city closed an alley on which the plaintiff's property abutted it was held that the abutting owners could not recover damages for consequent injury to their business. Henderson v. Lexington, 132 Ky. 390, 111 S. W. 318, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 20, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 703, wherein it was said: "The measure of damages to which the property holder is entitled in cases of this character does not include loss occasioned by injury to his business. He is only entitled to compensation for loss sustained to his property, and this loss is the difference in the market value of the property. Any other criterion of damages would enter the field of speculation, and make the loss incapable of reasonable ascertainment. The market value of a thing is generally the best evidence of its worth—the fairest standard of its value. The individual whose property is taken might not be willing to surrender it for three times its market value. To him it might be associated with sentimental notions that would enlarge its value far beyond the real and substantial. Again, the owner may have established a business in a particular place or building that was more valuable to him than it would be to any one else, and as a consequence the property would have a value to him far above its market value. But these evidences or elements of value are the result of personal or individual preference and effort. They affect the individual more than they do the property, and, if allowed to enter into or control the damage, it would be virtually impossible to estimate or fix with reasonable certainty the real value of the property. It must be admitted that, when the standard by which the loss is to be measured is fixed at the market value of the property, the owner in some cases will not secure what is to him its fair value, but, on the other hand, the purchaser ought not to be required to pay more than the fair market value for any property that the law gives him the right to take upon the payment of just compensation, and when the owner has recovered this price, he will generally get what he is entitled to. There is some apparent conflict in the cases on this subject largely attributable to the different states of fact presented, but . . . the rule we have announced is fully sustained. It is also the one approved in Lewis on Eminent Domain, § 463; Dillon on Municipal Corporations, § 623; Elliott on Streets, § 271; 15 Cyc. 701; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) 1151. In disposing of this question, we have not deemed it pertinent to the subject in hand to discuss the range the evidence may take in elucidating what is the market value of the property proposed to be taken. No fixed rule of universal application can be laid down. The relevancy and competency of evidence must be left to be controlled by the facts of each case as it comes up. But generally all the facts as to the condition of the property, its surroundings, improvements, and capabilities may be shown. . . . In the case before us the injury was to the whole property. None of it was, accurately speaking, taken. The only injury consisted in depriving the property of the full use of an adjacent alley; and, while this was in the meaning of the constitution a taking, yet the damage done was susceptible of being fairly estimated upon the basis of the injury done to the market value of the property. And what we have said upon this point must be accepted as our understanding of the law controlling cases presenting questions like the one under consideration."

So it was held in Sauer v. New York, 44 App. Div. 305, 60 N. Y. S. 648, that loss of profits or injury to business were not proper elements of damage where the plaintiff claimed that he was deprived of certain easements, such as light, air and convenience of access due to the construction of a viaduct in front of his premises. The court said: "The plaintiff himself was sworn and asked the following questions: 'Q. Will you tell me what your annual profits were from these premises in the use of occupation and business as you carried it on during the years before the viaduct—state what it averaged annually?' and 'Q. After the viaduct came there what did your annual profits from the use and occupation of the business there average, if anything?' Both questions were objected to by the defendant upon the ground that they were irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial, and called for an improper measure of damages, which objections were overruled and an exception taken in each instance. The witness answered that during the four years immediately preceding the construction of the viaduct his profits averaged about $15,000 per year, and that since its construction he had lost money each year in his business. One of plaintiff's witnesses was also permitted, against the defendant's objection, to give testimony of a similar character. We think this testimony was improperly admitted. The profits of a business are too uncertain, and depend upon too many contingencies to safely be accepted as any evidence of the usable value of the property upon which the business is carried on. Profits depend upon the times, the amount of capital invested, the social, religious and financial position in the community of the one carrying it on, and many other elements which might be suggested. What one man might do at a profit, another might only do at a loss. That the plaintiff had made profits in his business in the past was no indication that he would continue to make them in the future, even had the viaduct not been constructed. This testimony being inadmissible, the defendant's objections thereto should have been sustained."

Injury to Franchise.

The loss incident to or in depreciation of the profits of a franchise appurtenant to property is not a proper element of damage, in considering the value of the property when it is appropriated for a public purpose. Hydes Ferry Turnpike Co. v. Davidson County, 91 Tenn. 291, 18 S. W. 626. To the same effect see Moses v. Sanford, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 731. Thus, where a franchise was given to the plaintiff to operate horse cars for a period of fifty years and thereafter the defendant company received permission from the city to construct a cable tramway in which some of the tracks crossed those of the plaintiff company, it was held that no damages could be recovered by the plaintiff for injuries to its business flowing from the mere matter of competition, but the damage caused by the loss of passengers due to the inconvenience of access to the plaintiff's cars where the defendant's cable cars ran between the horse cars and the sidewalk was a proper element of recovery. Omaha Horse R. Co. v. Cable Tram-Way Co. 32 Fed. 727. To the same effect see Toledo Consol. St. R. Co. v. Toledo Electric St. R. Co. 3 Ohio Cir. Dec. 493, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. 362.

It was held in Piatt v. Covington, etc. Bridge Co. 8 Bush (Ky.) 31, that where the construction of a bridge would interpose no physical obstruction to the enjoyment of a ferry franchise across the same river, the owners of the ferry were not entitled to compensation for any incidental impairment of the profits of their ferry resulting merely from the use of the bridge instead of the ferry by the public. The court said: "Admitting the right of the appellants to the exclusive enjoyment of their ferry franchise to the fullest extent contemplated or allowed by the laws of this state, and that within certain limits they were protected by law from competition by the establishment of rival ferries, did the mere grant of the franchise under existing laws have the effect of vesting in the appellants the exclusive privilege of transporting persons and property across the river for hire between Covington and Cincinnati, by whatever mode the legislature of this state might chose to authorize, in view of the convenience of the public and the increase of travel and commercial intercourse between the cities of Covington and Cincinnati? This involves the inquiry whether the appellants could have successfully resisted the erection of the bridge as infringing or unlawfully affecting their rights; for if, notwithstanding the previous grant of the ferry franchise, the right and power still existed in the legislature of authorizing the erection of a bridge for better subserving the interests of the public, it is difficult to perceive how the owners of the bridge could be held responsible for the loss of custom to the plaintiffs, however great it might be, incidentally and consequentially resulting from the preference which the public might give to the bridge over the ferry as a means of crossing the river." See also Richmond, etc. Turnpike Road Co. v. Rogers, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 135. See also Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co. 17 W. Va. 397; Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co. 20 W. Va. 223.

But in Montgomery County v. Schuylkill Bridge Co. 110 Pa. St. 54, 40 Atl. 407, it was held that in taking a toll bridge from the owner of the franchise for public purposes, it was proper to consider the income from it during a series of years preceding the taking in estimating the damage.

Injury to Good Will.

No damages can be recovered for the good will of a business interfered with by the taking of property under the right of eminent domain. Bales v. Wichita Midland Valley R. Co. 92 Kan. 771, 141 Pac. 1009, L.R.A. 1916C 1090; Edmands v. Boston, 108 Mass. 535; Cobb v. Boston, 109 Mass. 438; Williams v. Com. 168 Mass. 364, 47 N. E. 115; In re Race St. 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 433; Condemnation of Property, 9 Pa. Dist. 615; Lenzi v. Memphis Union Station Co. 3 Tenn. Civ. App. 218. But see Senior v. Metropolitan R. Co. 2 H. & C. (Eng.) 258, 9 Jur. N. S. 802, 32 L. J. Exch. 225, 8 L. T. N. S. 544, 11 W. R. 836; Re McCauley, 18 Ont. 416.

Thus it was said in Condemnation of Property, supra: "The exceptions substantially charge error upon the jury in not taking into consideration the good will of the business carried on by the claimant in estimating the market value of her property, and not taking into consideration everything which gave the property intrinsic value at the time it was actually taken by the city. Upon the argument, counsel for exceptant sought to establish the proposition that the good will of a business is a valuable right of property which attaches to the freehold, and, therefore, gives it intrinsic value, which must be considered in estimating the market value of the property when taken for municipal purposes. In my opinion, there is no ground upon which this proposition can be maintained. That the good will is valuable property there is no doubt, but that in any case it can be said to attach to the freehold is without warrant of authority, and contrary to the nature of the thing itself, for, if it attached to the freehold without reference to the business, it would continue to exist after the business ceased, which is a manifestly absurd conclusion. This leads us to inquire what the nature of the good will of a business is. In Austen v. Boys, 2 DeG. & J. (Eng.) 626, it is held that where a trade is established in a particular place, the good will of that trade means nothing more than the sum of money which any person would be willing to give for the chance of being able to keep the trade connected with the place where it has been carried on, and that good will is something distinct from the profits of a business, although, in determining its value, the profits are taken into account, and it is usually estimated at so many years' purchase. Again, it has been defined as follows: Good will must mean every possible advantage that has been acquired by the old firm in carrying on its business, whether connected with the premises in which the business was previously carried on, or with the name of the late firm, or with any other carrying with it the benefit of the business: Ginesi v. Cooper, 14 L. R. Ch. D. (Eng.) 596. Mr. Parsons defines it as that benefit or advantage which rests on the good will, or kind and friendly feeling of others, and which, of course, can be wholly lost without giving rise to any legal right or ground of complaint: Parsons on Partnership, *261. It is well settled that it is a partnership asset. On insolvency of a firm, it passes to the assignee. The name under which a business is conducted is part of the good will of the business. Inasmuch as the good will consists in the probability that customers will continue to come to the old place of business, it is only co-extensive with the business carried on: Bradford v. Peckham, 9 R. I. 250. It is perfectly clear, in reviewing these propositions, that there is nothing in the nature of realty connected with this kind of property. It is, undoubtedly, personal estate and exclusively mercantile in its character, and it is also clear that it is an incident of the business rather than of the premises upon which the business is carried on. It is true that in certain cases where the property is especially adapted to the carrying on of a particular business, as in the case of the public house, cited and relied upon by the counsel for exceptant, there is a more intimate association between the premises and the good will than in other cases, such as that presented by the present record, but, even in such cases, the nature of the property is not changed; it does not rise to the dignity of realty or become a thing appurtenant to the freehold, and its value must still be ascertained by a reference to the business of which it is a part. . . . In New York, in proceedings by a railroad company to condemn real estate, it was decided that the compensation was limited to the market value of the land condemned, and that interruption of business, loss of profits, inability to perform contracts and good will were to be excluded: In re New York, etc. R. Co. 35 Hun 633. And in Mills on Eminent Domain, § 191, in discussing the right to recover damages for the taking of property for public use, it is stated: 'No damages can be allowed for the good will of a business interfered with by condemnation of buildings.' Mr. Justice Green, delivering the opinion of the court in Philadelphia Ball Club v. Philadelphia, 192 Pa. St. 632, states, in reference to the rule which controls the assessment of damages in all cases of the kind under consideration, that there has never been a better statement of that rule than was given in the case in which it originated seventy-nine years ago, namely, Schuykill Nav. Co. v. Thoburn, 7 Serg. & R. 411, where Mr. Justice Gibson announced the rule in the following language: 'The jury are to consider the matter just as if they were called on to value the injury at the moment when compensation could first be demanded; they are to value the injury to the property without reference to the person of the owner or the actual state of his business; and, in doing that, the only safe rule is to inquire what would the property, unaffected by the obstruction, have sold for at the time the injury was committed? What would it have sold for as affected by the injury? The difference is the true measure of compensation.' In my opinion, the jury in the present case has properly applied this rule in estimating the compensation to be awarded to the owner of the premises in question."

The "good will" of the business of a lessee which was situated on land taken by a city to widen a street, has been held not to be property for which damages could be recovered; the court saying that it was to be considered only so far as it tended to enhance the market value of the estate that was injured. Edmands v. Boston, 108 Mass. 538.

"The fact that the premises as the petitioner had fitted them up were convenient for his business, and that he will lose the use in his business of the conveniences which he had thus provided, cannot be regarded as an element of damage, any more than the loss of good will would be." Williams v. Com. 168 Mass. 364, 47 N. E. 115.

Loss of Speculative or Future Profits.

It is generally held that speculative or future profits of a business are not such elements of damage as may be considered in ascertaining the value of property taken under the power of eminent domain.

United States.—Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Chicago, 26 Fed. 415; Laffin v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 33 Fed. 415; Adams v. U. S. 101 Fed. 661, 41 C. C. A. 580; Gage v. Judson, 111 Fed. 350.

California.—Central Pac. R. Co. v. Pearson, 35 Cal. 247.

Illinois.—Munn v. People, 69 Ill. 80; Booker v. Venice, etc. R. Co. 101 Ill. 333; Jacksonville E. R. Co. v. Walsh, 106 Ill. 253; Calumet River R. Co. v. Moore, 124 Ill. 329, 15 N. E. 764; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Lofant, 167 Ill. 85, 47 N. E. 62; Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Pontiac, 169 Ill. 155, 48 N. E. 485; West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Chicago, 172 Ill. 198, 50 N. E. 185; Cook, etc. R. Co. v. Chicago Sanitary Dist. 177 Ill. 599, 52 N. E. 870. See also Mills v. St. Clair County, 3 Scam. 53.

Kentucky.—Richmond, etc. Turnpike Co. v. Rogers, 1 Duv. 135; Piatt v. Covington, etc. Bridge Co. 8 Bush 31.

Massachusetts.—Boston, etc. R. Co. v. Middlesex, 1 Allen 324; Boston, etc. R. Corp. v. Old Colony R. Corp. 12 Cush. 605.

New York.—Matter of Public Service Commission, 92 Misc. 420, 155 N. Y. S. 985.

Pennsylvania.—Clements v. Philadelphia Co. 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 14; Harvey v. Lackawanna, etc. R. Co. 47 Pa. St. 428; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Eby, 107 Pa. St. 166; Spring City Gaslight Co. v. Pennsylvania Schuylkill Valley R. Co. 167 Pa. St. 6, 31 Atl. 368; Allentown, etc. Turnpike Co. v. Lehigh Valley Traction Co. 174 Pa. St. 273, 34 Atl. 565; Hamilton v. Pittsburg, etc. R. Co. 190 Pa. St. 51, 42 Atl. 369, 51 L.R.A. 319; Philadelphia Ball Club v. Philadelphia, 192 Pa. St. 632, 44 Atl. 265, 73 Am. St. Rep. 835, 46 L.R.A. 724; Cox v. Philadelphia, etc. R. Co. 215 Pa. St. 506, 64 Atl. 729, 114 Am. St. Rep. 979. Compare Pittsburg, etc. R. Co. v. Vance, 115 Pa. St. 325, 8 Atl. 764.

Virginia.—Richmond, etc. Electric R. Co. v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. 103 Va. 399, 49 S. E. 512.

Washington.—Seattle, etc. R. Co. v. Murphine, 4 Wash. 448, 30 Pac. 720; Seattle, etc. Ry. v. Land, 81 Wash. 206, 142 Pac. 680.

Canada.—Gibbon v. Reg. 6 Can. Exch. 430; Re Perram, 36 Ont. L. Rep. 582, 31 Dominion L. Rep. 142, 10 Ont. W. N. 153; In re Cavanagh, 14 Ont. L. Rep. 523, 9 Ont. W. Rep. 842.

"A mere intention on the part of the plaintiff, at some indefinite future time, to subdivide some part of the land from which the 100-foot strip was taken into lots, and to sell them if possible, from time to time, as best he could, at a profit, is not controlling, and, standing alone, is immaterial. . . . The measure of damages is its actual depreciation in value at the time of the taking. This depreciation is to be determined exclusive of all remote, fanciful, or speculative injuries." Lafin v. Chicago, etc. Co. 33 Fed. 415.

Evidence that the plaintiff contemplated putting additional buildings on the land cut off by a railroad and that by reason thereof he expected a future profit, has been held to be incompetent. Hamilton v. Pittsburg, etc. Co. 190 Pa. St. 51, 42 Atl. 369. See also Gearhart v. Water Co. 202 Pa. St. 292, 51 Atl. 891.

So it has been held to be error to charge the jury as follows: "In ascertaining the market value of the property in question, if the jury find that its highest available use at the time of the taking was that of gas plant, they have a right to consider the future growth of the borough of Spring City and Royersford, the increased demand for gas, as far as these considerations affect its market value; and if the jury further find that by reason of the location of the railroad through the property its availability has been curtailed, lessened or partly destroyed, they have the right to consider these questions as far as they affect the market value of the property as a whole immediately after the taking." Spring City Gaslight Co. v. Pennsylvania Schuylkill Valley R. Co. 167 Pa. St. 6, 31 Atl. 368.

It has been held that anticipated profits as an element of damages should be allowed where they are reasonably certain; but when they are speculative, remote and contingent, they should be excluded. Bales v. Wichita Midland Valley R. Co. 92 Kan. 771, 141 Pac. 1009, L.R.A.1916C 1090. See to the same effect Atchison, etc. R. Co. v. Lyon, 24 Kan. 745; Missouri, etc. R. Co. v. Haines, 10 Kan. 439. See also Detroit v. Brennan, 93 Mich. 338, 53 N. W. 525.

Similarly it has been held that such items as diversion of travel and inconvenience of access to the premises thereby causing injury to business may be considered by the jury not as independent items of damage but for the sole purpose of determining the difference between the market value of the property before and after the construction of the public improvement. Gillespie v. South Omaha, 79 Neb. 441, 112 N. W. 582. See also Fremont, etc. R. Co. v. Whalen, 11 Neb. 585, 10 N. W. 491; Fremont, etc. R. Co. v. Lamb, 11 Neb. 592, 10 N. W. 493; Fremont, etc. R. Co. v. Ward, 11 Neb. 597, 10 N. W. 524.

It was held in St. Louis, etc. R. Co. v. Continental Brick Co. 198 Mo. 698, 96 S. W. 1011, that an instruction to the jury in substance that if they should find that the defendant's property through which the railroad company sought to condemn a right of way was specially exposed to fire from that cause, different from other property in the same neighborhood, and that thereby it was depreciated in value, they should allow for such depreciation, was not error. The court said: "The opinion of the witnesses that there is a present depreciation of value in manufacturing property because of its peculiar liability to destruction by fire notwithstanding a railroad company may be ultimately liable for the damages incurred if the fire should occur, is not unreasonable. A prudent business man would generally prefer to purchase property in which to conduct his business which is not peculiarly liable to destruction by fire even though the menacing party may be solvent and liable to respond in damages."

So it was said in Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. McGrew, 104 Mo. 282, 15 S. W. 931: "When we remember the close proximity of the railroad to the engine on one side, and the shaft and superstructure on the other, and that employees of defendant would necessarily be engaged over and about the track of the road, it will be readily seen that damage from accident may occur, for which the railroad company would not be liable. It is clear, that persons exposed to danger, as defendant's employees would necessarily be, could not perform their labors with the same degree of efficiency, and, at the same time, exercise the care to avoid danger which the law imposes on them, as they could if not so exposed. The extra risk might also cause a demand for higher wages. Neither can a railroad company be held liable for all fires that may originate from its locomotives. They may occur through no fault of the company. Defendant would also be under obligation to exercise care and watchfulness, under the circumstances, to avoid and prevent damage from fires, and this duty might impose additional expense upon him. So it will be seen that the general rule cannot, in justice, be applied to its full extent, under the facts in this case. It would not be proper to estimate the possible damage from fires or injuries to persons. Neither may ever occur, and to take them into the estimate would be mere speculation. We think they may properly be considered, however, in so far as they tend to depreciate the value of the whole property, and to affect the proposed changes, but no further."

CITY OF ST. LOUIS

v.

ST. LOUIS, IRON MOUNTAIN AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY ET AL.

Missouri Supreme Court—January 6, 1916.

266 Mo. 694; 182 S. W. 750.

Eminent Domain — Items of Recovery — Cost of Removing Personalty.

A lessee for years of a parcel of land condemned for a public use is not entitled to recover for loss of profits in its business during removal of its stock of goods, nor for the expense of the removal of the goods and personal property as distinguished from fixtures, from the location, condemned, to a new location, nor for the depreciation in value of such personal property and stock caused by removal and reinstallation, and is entitled to be paid the reasonable market value of its fixtures affixed to the premises condemned; but where the party condemning does not want the fixtures, and the lessee elects to take them, the damages which the party condemning must pay as such value should be reduced to the extent of the reasonable market value of the fixtures as they stood on the premises condemned diminished by the necessity of immediate removal and reinstallation elsewhere.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal to St. Louis Circuit Court: SHIELDS, Judge.

Action by City of St. Louis, plaintiff, against St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway Company et al., defendants. From judgment rendered, plaintiff appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Charles H. Danes and Truman P. Young for appellant.

Rassieur, Kammerer & Rassieur for respondent.

[697] FARIS, P. J.—The city of St. Louis brought this action to condemn a strip of land for the western approach to its Municipal Bridge. Damages were assessed in favor of the several defendants by a commission of three freeholders, to whose report the city filed exceptions. The case came on for hearing in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, wherein the exceptions of appellant city were overruled and it appealed.

The Regal Buggy Company, respondent herein, was the lessee for years of one parcel of the real estate which was condemned in this action. The lease of respondent, at the date of the making of the commissioners' report, had a little over three years to run. Specifically touching the land occupied by respondent the commission assessed the value of said land taken, plus the damages to the remainder of the parcel, at the sum of $41,310. They then apportioned [698] this sum by allowing to the owner thereof $38,610, and to this respondent, as lessee, the sum of $2700, being the appraised value of its lease over and above the monthly rent reserved. After making allowances of damages aforesaid the commission allowed the respondent the further sum of $8450 on account of injury to its business and for its damages and expenses arising from the removal of the fixtures and personal property of respondent from the premises condemned to a new location and for installing said property therein. The commissioners' report, which was approved by the circuit court upon exceptions taken thereto, states the specific elements of damages going to make up the last mentioned sum thus:

"(1) For the cost of removal of their several stocks of goods and fixtures from their present place of business to new locations and installing said goods and fitting said fixtures therein;

"(2) For depreciation in the value of such goods and fixtures caused by the removal and reinstallation of the same;

"(3) For injury to their said businesses caused by the interruption of the same during the period of removal of their said stocks of goods and fixtures."

The allowance of damages for the three items above enumerated is the sole matter of contention here. It is conceded, even, that if these three items were proper subjects of damages, then that the amount allowed respondent therefor is fair and reasonable, but appellant contends that under the law of eminent domain of this State no such damages may be paid by the condemner to him whose land is taken for public uses.

These three propositions and the contentions of appellant and respondent pro and con respectively, form the points up for decision.

OPINION.

[699] As forecast there is no contention made by appellant that respondent as the owner of a lease for a term of years was not entitled to compensation therefor; nor that the amount of damages awarded as the market value of respondent's lease, to wit, $2700, is unfair or unreasonable. It is only the damages awarded for the three items set out in our statement herein that are in controversy.

I. For convenience of discussion we will consider all items or elements of damages together, except that having to do with the fixtures, which we leave for subsequent separate discussion, since, under the law as we view it this may be conveniently done. In brief, these elements have to do with the allowance of damages (a) for the removal of the stock of goods of respondent from the right of way taken to a new location and placing them therein; (b) for depreciation in the value of said goods, caused by such removal and re-installation, and (c) for injury to the business of respondent on account of the interruption or cessation thereof during the period of removal of said stock of goods and fixtures.

When this case was argued, the writer was of the opinion that it ought to be affirmed upon principle if not upon authority; but upon coming to examine the authorities I have been forced to a different view. Coming to the question of authority first, we have had our attention directed to but one case squarely on all-fours in favor of the allowance of damages for the expense of removal of personal property from the right of way condemned. That is the case of Blincoe v. Choc-taw, etc. R. Co. 16 Okla. 286, 8 Ann. Cas. 689, 83 Pac. 903, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 890. In the latter case the question of the allowance of such [700] expenses was squarely before the court and he whose lease was taken was adjudged entitled to expenses of removing certain personal property, to wit, lumber, from the lands taken. In that case, however, the learned court admitted that the rule in other jurisdictions was contrary to the conclusion reached; but it held that the law in Oklahoma warranted a different holding because of the language of the statute of that State, which in substance required the commission to consider the injury which the owner of the land might sustain and assess the damages caused him by reason of the appropriation of his lands.

The case of Philadelphia, etc. R. Co. v. Getz, 113 Pa. St. 214, 6 Atl. 356, is urged upon us as announcing a rule in favor of the contention that damages of the sort here under discussion may be allowed; but that case did not deal with ordinary personal chattels, but apparently with machinery and fixtures. Besides, the Pennsylvania court, in the later case of Becker v. Philadelphia, etc. R. Co. 177 Pa. St. 252, 35 Atl. 617, 35 L.R.A. 583, held to the contrary, in that they held that it was proper to refuse to allow proof as to the expense of the removal from such land of the personal property of him whose land was being taken, and said that the expense of such removal could not be considered as an element of damages for the condemnation of real estate for public uses.

The case of Atchison, etc. R. Co. v. Schneider, 127 Ill. 144, 20 N. E. 41, 2 L.R.A. 422, is urged as an authority for the awarding of damages of the sort here under discussion. But we need not consider whether that case is an authority or not, for the reason that it was distinguished and practically overruled by the later case of Braun v. Metropolitan West Side El. R. Co. 166 Ill. 434, 46 N. E. 974. So, we cannot see that respondent's contentions are at all aided by either of the above cases.

The case of Covington Short Route Transfer Co. v. Piel, 87 Ky. 267, 8 S. W. 449, is cited by respondent as an authority for a modicum of the position taken by it. This case seems to an extent to [701] bear out respondent's contention touching the phase of its right to damages for and during the interruption of its business caused by the taking of its property. We need not consider whether this is so or not, nor need we microscopically analyze the latter case, but pass it by, saying merely that it is opposed in its doctrine by the great weight of authority everywhere and in this State as well, and that in reaching the conclusion stated the learned court wholly overlooked and failed to consider the necessary hypothetical and speculative character of such damages. [U. S. v. Wiener, 210 Fed. 832, 127 C. C. A. 1. c. 385.]

The rule announced by Mr. Lewis in his excellent work on Eminent Domain, is as follows: "While it is proper to show how the property is used, it is incompetent to go into the profits of the business carried on upon the property. No damages can be allowed for injury to business. The reason is that the constitution and the statutes, as ordinarily worded, require only that just compensation shall be made for the property taken. Just compensation, as we have already seen, where an entire property is taken, is the market value of the property, and where a part is taken, it is the value of the part taken and damages to the remainder by the taking and use of the part for the purpose proposed. The business conducted upon the property is not taken and the owner can remove it to a new location or continue it upon the part of the property which remains. Any incidental loss or inconvenience in business, which may result from a removal or change consequent upon the taking, must be borne by the owner for the sake of the general good in which he participates. In a few instances the statute has expressly provided that compensation should be made for injury to business." [Lewis on Eminent Domain, sec. 727; Central Pac. R. Co. v. Pearson, 35 Cal. 247; Pause v. Atlanta, 98 Ga. 92, 26 S. E. 489, 58 Am. St. Rep. 290; Jacksonville, etc. R. Co. v. Walsh, 106 Ill. 253; Chicago, etc. [702] R. Co. v. Dressel, 110 Ill. 89; DeBuol v. Freeport, etc. R. Co. 111 Ill. 499; Braun v. Metropolitan West Side El. R. Co. 166 Ill. 434, 46 N. E. 974; Cook, etc. Co. v. Chicago Sanitary Dist. 177 Ill. 599, 52 N. E. 870; Marshall v. Chicago, 77 Ill. App. 351; Chicago Sanitary Dist. v. McGuirl, 86 Ill. App. 392; Whitman v. Boston, etc. R. Co. 3 Allen (Mass.) 133; Cobb v. Boston, 109 Mass. 438; Pegler v. Hyde Park, 176 Mass. 101, 57 N. E. 327; Sawyer v. Metropolitan Water Board, 178 Mass. 267, 59 N. E. 658; Bailey v. Boston, etc. R. Corp. 182 Mass. 537, 66 N. E. 203; Boston Belting Co. v. Boston, 183 Mass. 254, 67 N. E. 428; Nashua River Paper Co. v. Com. 184 Mass. 279, 68 N. E. 209; Keokuk, etc. R. Co. v. Knapp, etc. Co. 180 Mo. 396, 61 S. W. 300; St. Louis, etc. R. Co. v. Continental Brick Co. 198 Mo. 698, 96 S. W. 1011; In re Mt. Washington Road Co. 35 N. H. 134; Ranlet v. Concord R. Corp. 62 N. H. 561; Matter of Public Parks, 53 Hun 280, 25 N. Y. St. Rep. 9, 6 N. Y. S. 750; Van Buren v. Fishkill Water-Works Co. 50 Hun 448, 21 N. Y. St. Rep. 438, 3 N. Y. S. 336; Matter of Grade Crossing Com'rs, 17 App. Div. 54, 44 N. Y. S. 54; Matter of Gilroy, 26 App. Div. 314, 49 N. Y. S. 798; Cincinnati Iron Stove Co. v. Cincinnati So. R. Co. 9 Ohio C. C. 103 [29 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 719]; Schuykill Nav. Co. v. Farr, 4 Watts & S. (Pa.) 362; Schuykill Nav. Co. v. Thoburn, 7 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 411; Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Patterson, 107 Pa. St. 461; Hamilton v. Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. 190 Pa. St. 51, 42 Atl. 369, 51 L.R.A. 319; Schonhardt v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 216 Pa. St. 224, 65 Atl. 543; Porter v. Scranton City, 36 Pa. Super. Ct.

218; Fuller v. Edings, 11 Rich. L. (S. C.) 239; Eddings v. Seabrook, 12 Rich. L. (S. C.) 504; Richmond, etc. R. Co. v. Chamblin, 100 Va. 401, 41 S. E. 750; Hunter v. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. 107 Va. 158, 59 S. E. 415, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 124; Stadler v. Milwaukee, 34 Wis. 98; Each v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 72 Wis. 229, 39 N. W. 129; Union Steam-Boat Co. v. Chicago, 39 Fed. 723; Bigg v. London, L. R. 15 Eq. Cas. (Eng.) 376; Reg. v. Vaughn, etc. R. Co. 4 L. R. Q. B. (Eng.) 190.]

In the case of Pause v. Atlanta, 98 Ga. 92, 1 c. 105, 26 S. E. 489, 58 Am. St. Rep. 290, the Georgia Supreme Court said: "The measure of her damages is the injury to her property which is injuriously affected by the public improvement; in arriving at that damage, neither the profits in the business [703] conducted on the premises, nor the cost to the tenant of the fixtures and improvements placed therein nor the articles purchased for the purpose of enabling the lessee to conduct the business, nor diminution in value of fixtures, improvements or articles such as are removed by the lessee, can be recovered as damages; but the increased value of the premises for rent in consequence of the putting in of such fixtures and improvements may properly be considered in computing the damages to the leasehold estate."

The general rule as regards including as elements of damages expenses of removal of personal property, as well as that regarding the status of fixtures, below discussed, is thus stated by Mr. Lewis: "Fixtures upon the property taken must be valued and paid for as part of the real estate, and any depreciation in the value of fixtures upon the part not taken is to be taken into consideration, the same as damage to the soil itself. Where a railroad was laid through premises which had been fitted up for a water cure, so as to render it unsuitable for that purpose, it was held that the owner was entitled to the difference between what the fixtures and appurtenances were worth in connection with the property as a water cure (not exceeding their reasonable cost) and what they were worth to be removed from the premises and applied to other purposes. In a case in Pennsylvania it was held proper to show the expense of removal of machinery and fixtures as bearing upon the value of the property as it stood. But the damages to personal property, or the expense of removing it from the premises, cannot be considered in estimating the compensation to be paid. But when both parties proceed upon the theory that the owner is entitled to the cost of removing machinery, the condemning party cannot complain. Where the statute provided that the commissioners should inspect said real property and consider the injury which such owner may sustain by reason of such railroad; [704] and they shall assess damages which said owner will sustain by such appropriation of his land,' it was held that the words in italics required that compensation should be made for the removal of personal property." [2 Lewis, Em. Dom. sec. 728, citing Blincoe v. Choctaw, etc. R. Co. supra.]

But this matter has also been before our Missouri courts and if we are now to hold that respondent is entitled to damages for the three elements under discussion, we must of necessity overrule two Missouri cases wherein the point involved was squarely lodged and wherein it was held that no such compensation is allowable under our laws. [Keokuk, etc. R. Co. v. Knapp, etc. Co. 160 Mo. 396, 61 S. W. 300; Springfield Southwestern R. Co. v. Schweitzer, 173 Mo. App. 650, 158 S. W. 1058.] In the Knapp-Stout case, supra, at page 412, Judge Gantt, writing the opinion of the court, in defining the measure of damages, and touching the identical question of the allowance of damages of the sort here under discussion, said:

"It is the settled law of this court that the measure of compensation and damages in cases in which only a part of a tract is condemned, as in the case at bar, is the market value of the land taken for the right of way, and the damages to the remainder by reason of the railroad running through it, less any benefits that are peculiar to the tract of land arising from the running of the road through it. [Mississippi River Bridge Co. v. Ring, 58 Mo. 491; Wyandotte, etc. R. Co. v. Waldo, 70 Mo. 629; Kansas City, etc. R. Co. v. Story, 96 Mo. 611, 10 S. W. 203; Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Baker, 102 Mo. 553, 15 S. W. 64.]

"Injury to business, loss of profits, inconvenience to the owner, damage to personal property or the expense of removing it, are not to be estimated as distinct elements of damages."

In the very late case ruled by the Springfield Court of Appeals practically all of the Missouri cases were examined and discussed, and such of them as seem upon casual glance to oppose the conclusion [705] reached, were successfully distinguished. Many of these cases are urged upon us as announcing a different rule, but we do not think they so far announce a different rule when carefully considered and when the precise point up for judgment is regarded, as to warrant us in overruling those on all-fours; a fortiori, when they but follow the overwhelming weight of the authorities upon these questions everywhere. Since all of these cases have been so lately, fully and ably discussed in Railroad v. Schweitzer, supra, we need not take up space to consider them again.

In the Knapp-Stout case, supra, precisely the same question was before this court that was before the Oklahoma court in the Blincoe case, viz.: the question of whether he whose land was taken for public uses could recover the expenses necessarily incurred in the removal of personal property from the land, to wit, lumber, lying thereon. In both cases parts of lumber yards were taken, yet we ruled that such expenses were not proper elements of damages.

At first glance it is to be conceded that there exists a difficulty in finding a reason for not compensating the owner of personal chattels who is compelled to remove them, for his expense in so removing them to a point at least, beyond the edge of the right of way. It is equally clear, on the other hand that no logical reason can be found for compensating him for the expense of removal beyond such point. This is so, for the reason that A might desire to move his chattels only into the next adjoining house, while B might desire to have his taken several blocks, or even several miles, and C on the other hand, his business being broken up, might desire to remove his goods to some other place, or city. No reason in logic therefore can be found for the condemnor's paying more than is sufficient to move the personal property off the right of way. A rule which would require the condemnor to do more [706] would be variant and indefinite, and therefore speculative.

It is obvious that a lessee stands in no better condition touching his right to be compensated for expenses of this sort than does the owner of the fee. In fact, the reasons are more cogent for permitting the owner of the fee to recover as damages expenses of this sort than they are in favor of the lessee. For the lessee may be compelled to move at the end of his term; and since his occupancy of the premises is founded on contract, it may even be said that the presumption is that he will move. Or if there be no such presumption, or no presumption either way, the lessee is not aided by a discussion of this moving matter, for arguments in his favor in this behalf are founded upon the presumption that he will renew his lease and remain at the end of his term. But as regards the owner whose lands are taken, no requirement exists for his removal at any time, unless he sells the premises—a contingency too remote for consideration in this connection.

We apprehend that back of the rule against allowing damages of this nature also lie the considerations that loss of profits during removal is necessarily so speculative as to afford as a measure of computation no rule except a mere guess; that likewise, beyond the mere moving of goods to a point just outside the bounds of the right of way condemned, the expenses of removal being variant, damages would be arbitrary and highly speculative, and removal but to a point only just beyond the edge of the right of way would fall into the category de minimis, and that moreover, the inclusion of expenses of removal of personal property and compensation for loss of profits during removal, is merged and included in the price paid for the easement to the owner, or to the lessee, as the case may be. Viewed as a forced purchase by the public for the public [707] good, as a condemnation action is in the last analysis, the latter consideration seems of great weight. For if he whose land is condemned had voluntarily sold his land to a private purchaser, ordinarily no thought would occur to either one, absent agreement to that end, that the seller should be compensated by the buyer for the removal from the sold premises of mere personal goods and chattels. That one is a voluntary sale and the other an involuntary sale does not peculiarly detract from the force of the argument.

But be all these things as may be the overwhelming weight of authority both in this State and in all other jurisdictions is as we hold, and having had other views in the beginning, by reason of the apparent, rather than real, crying inequities in the case, we have yet been compelled to follow the law as it is written both here and elsewhere. To rule otherwise would necessitate the overruling of at least two Missouri cases squarely in point and of most carefully distinguishing three or four other cases. [Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. McGrew, 104 Mo. 282, 15 S. W. 931; Hannibal Bridge Co. v. Schaubacher, 57 Mo. 582; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Porter, 112 Mo. 361, 20 S. W. 568.]

We therefore hold, in consonance with the great weight of authority everywhere, that respondent was not entitled to recover for loss of profits in its business during the removal of its stock of goods; nor for the expense of the removal of its stock of goods and personal property, as contradistinguished from fixtures, from its old location which was condemned, to a new location; nor for the depreciation in value of such personal property and stock of goods, caused by such removal and reinstallation.

II. What we have said above disposes of a part of the questions involved in contention (1) supra, that is to that part of this contention having to do with the cost of the removing of mere personal property [708] and chattels. The other phase of the case mooted in both contentions (1) and (2) viz: that touching the cost of removal of trade fixtures, which we left over for subsequent separate discussion, presents a somewhat different question. We assume, of course, nothing further appearing, that the word "fixtures" is used in its legal and technical sense, and not as a mere mercantile designation applied to chairs, tables, iron safe, et id omne genus.

A fixture appertains to the real estate itself, which real estate to the extent, at least, of an easement therein, is being taken by condemnor. We need not enter into any intricate discussion of fixtures (since such a discussion does not belong here), for the reason above given, which is well-settled, to wit: that a trade fixture such as is herein involved, and such as was to an extent involved in the case of Hannibal Bridge v. Schaubacher, supra, is a part of the realty; and since it passes ordinarily as between vendor and vendee, upon a voluntary sale, we see no reason why it should not pass to the condemnor upon an involuntary transfer, such as this is. We find nothing in the Missouri cases, nor in the cases from other jurisdictions which seriously militates against this view. Those mentioned below sustain it. It seems to be right on principle; to do full justice and afford full compensation.

In passing we may say arguendo, that the view that the owner should be compensated for the expense of tearing out, moving and reinstalling fixtures in another location has much of logical cogency. But it seems out of consonance with our own rulings, and subject to the objection that the expense of carriage from the old to the new location would be speculative, and so having reached a view which affords full compensation for the injury done, we hesitate to overrule our former holdings. Many of the cases from [709] other jurisdictions which have been urged upon us as sustaining all of respondent's contentions, are cases which allowed compensation for removing and reinstalling fixtures, and ruling that such compensation was permissible. This for the reason, that if the owner of the land or lease condemned take such fixtures off the hands of the condemnor, who, ordinarily, does not want them, thus minimizing the damages accruing, both the owner and the condemnor ought to be held to the rule that their reciprocal duty toward each other is to so act as not unduly to augment the damages arising from the appropriation of the land.

In a very late case, decided in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second District, it was held that an award in a condemnation proceeding for the value of certain trade fixtures, to wit, machinery of an engraving plant, was proper, the court holding that in condemnation proceedings where the land is taken in invitum, the rule which obtains as to such fixtures is analogous to that between vendor and vendee and not that between landlord and tenant. [U. S. v. Wiener, 210 Fed. 832, 127 C. C. A. 382.] In the latter case the court quoted with approval what was said in In re Block Bounded by Avenue A, 66 Misc. 488, 122 N. Y. S. 321, l. c. 339, wherein it was ruled:

"The city took the entire buildings as they stood, including the trade fixtures therein, and for the purposes of this proceeding they must all be regarded as real property; that is, as between the tenant and the city, the trade fixtures were real property and must be paid for by the city the same as a building, and the tenant was under no more obligation to remove them than he would be to remove a building if he were the owner. As between the tenant and the owner, however, the trade fixtures were personalty, and could be removed, and therefore any award made for them would go to the tenant."

[710] In the above case of United States v. Wiener, the court upon the other phases of this case, discussed supra, says: "There seems to be no authority for an allowance for the removal of the business as distinguished from the plant and machinery. The district court allowed $2500 as damages which may result from the change of location. This was based upon hypothesis and speculation and we are unable to find any controlling authority to support the award."

Since houses, which are but fixtures to real estate, pass to the condemner (Kansas v. Morse, 105 Mo. 1. c. 519, 16 S. W. 893), and since trade fixtures under the vendor and vendee rule would pass to the buyer, they pass here to the condemner and it must pay for them. Respondent, absent an election on its part and consent of the city to that end, could not take fixtures which the city had condemned, nor obtain as damages pay for moving property which by condemnation became that of the city. [Kansas City v. Morse, 105 Mo. 1. c. 519, 16 S. W. 893; Springfield Southwestern R. Co. v. Schweitzer, 173 Mo. App. 650, 158 S. W. 1058.]

It follows from all this that respondent was entitled to be paid the reasonable market value of its fixtures (contra-distinguished from mere goods and chattels) which were contained in, and affixed to the leased premises condemned. But the apparent present status of the instant case causes us to further rule, that if appellant does not want these fixtures, and respondent elects, or has elected, to take them (or, as seems probable, has already taken them), then damages which appellant will be held to pay as such value of them should be recouped to the extent of their reasonable market value, as they stood in their old location, when confronted however, as diminishing such value, by the necessity of immediately tearing them out and reinstalling them elsewhere.

Upon the other phases of the case and to the extent last discussed upon the latter one, we are of the [711] opinion that the court erred, and that for such error this case must be reversed and remanded to be retried in such wise as is not inconsistent with the views herein expressed. Let this be done. All concur.

Rehearing denied February 15, 1916.

NOTE.

Recovery of Damages in Condemnation Proceedings for Injury to Personal Property or Expense of Removing It from Premises.

Introductory, 886.

Damages Not Allowed, 886.

Damages Allowed, 887.

Introductory.

This note reviews the recent cases dealing with the right to recover damages in condemnation proceedings for injury to personal property or the expense of removing it from the premises. The earlier cases are collected in the notes to Blincoe v. Choctaw, etc. R. Co. 8 Ann. Cas. 689; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Anderson, 16 Ann. Cas. 784; and Board of Trade Tel. Co. v. Darst, 85 Am. St. Rep. 288, 298.

For a discussion of the value of fixtures as an element of damages sustained by the appropriation of property in eminent domain proceedings, see the note to Jackson v. State, Ann. Cas. 1916C 779.

For a discussion of the loss of profits or injury to business as an element of damage in eminent domain proceedings, see the note to Brackett v. Commonwealth, reported ante, this volume, at page 863.

Damages Not Allowed.

In the absence of express statutory provisions, it is generally held that damages for injury to personal property or the expense of removing it from the condemned premises, cannot be considered in estimating the compensation to be paid in condemnation proceedings. U. S. v. Inlots, 2 Am. L. Rec. 314, 513, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,441; U. S. v. Wiener, 210 Fed. 832, 127 C. C. A. 385; U. S. v. Meyers, 190 Fed. 688; Braun v. Metropolitan West Side El. R. Co. 166 Ill. 434, 46 N. E. 974; Pegler v. Hyde Park, 176 Mass. 101, 57 N. E. 327; Emery v. Boston Terminal Co. 178 Mass. 172, 59 N. E. 763, 86 Am. St. Rep. 473; Springfield Southwestern R. Co. v. Schweitzer, 173 Mo. App. 650, 158 S. W. 1058; Mohler v. Board of Regents (Neb.) 165 N. W. 954; Yates, etc. Co. v. Memphis, 137 Tenn. 642, 194 S. W. 903; Lenzi v. Memphis Union Station Co. 3 Tenn. Civ. App. 218. And see the reported case, and the case of St. Louis v. St. Louis, etc. R. Co. (Mo.) 197 S. W. 107, involving the same condemnation proceeding. See also White v. Foxborough, 151 Mass. 28, 23 N. E. 652; Stone v. New York, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 157.

Thus in Braun v. Metropolitan West Side El. R. Co. supra, in excluding proof of damage resulting from the removal of goods from the condemned property and by the interruption of the business while moving and re-establishing the same, the court said: "The general rule is, that just compensation to the owner of private property taken or damaged for public use is to be measured by its fair cash market value. We said in Dupuis v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 115 Ill. 97 (on p. 99): 'The fair market value would always give the owner just compensation, and that is all he is entitled to receive under the law. If the lots were devoted to some particular use and in consequence of such use had an intrinsic value, the owner, in such case, in order to get just compensation, would be entitled to recover whatever the lands were worth for the use or purpose to which they might be devoted.' (See Lewis on Eminent Domain, sec. 478.) This rule excludes all evidence as to the amount of business done or which could be done in the property, or the probable profits arising therefrom. (Jacksonville, etc. R. Co. v. Walsh, 106 Ill. 253.) It is a general rule that damages to personal property, or the expense of removing it from the premises, cannot be considered in estimating the compensation to be paid."

So it was held in Emery v. Boston Terminal Co. 178 Mass. 172, 59 N. E. 763, 86 Am. St. Rep. 473, that a lessee was not entitled to recover anything for the interruption of his business by reason of having to move from the premises which were taken under the power of eminent domain, the court saying that "the same principle applies to a claim for the expenses of removing the petitioners' property to their new place of business."

"There seems to be no authority for an allowance for the removal of the business as distinguished from the plant and machinery. The district court allowed $2500 as damages which may result from the change of location. This was based upon hypothesis and speculation and we are unable to find any controlling authority to support the award." U. S. v. Wiener, 210 Fed. 832, 127 C. C. A. 385.

Unless personal property is actually taken as material to be used by the condemnor there can be no recovery for injury done thereto. Yates, etc. Co. v. Memphis, 137 Tenn. 642, 184 S. W. 903.

It was held in North Coast R. Co. v. A. A. Kraft Co. 63 Wash. 250, 115 Pac. 97, that evidence by a lessee tending to show the expense of moving machinery, stock and fixtures from the condemned premises to a new place of business and the damage to the property resulting from the removal, was admissible, "not as a basis for a specific claim but as showing the value of the unexpired term," the court saying: "'Damages' in law, means an adequate compensation for the loss suffered or the injury sustained. The rule itself is well settled and simple of statement, but its application is often attended with difficulty, on account of the great diversity of circumstances surrounding different cases where the principle is sought to be applied. As was said in Seattle, etc. R. Co. v. Scheike, 3 Wash. 625, 29 Pac. 217, 30 Pac. 503: 'It is difficult, if not impossible, to lay down a rule of universal application as to what may be considered as elements of damage, as the equities of the parties must more or less depend upon the particular facts and circumstances of each case.' This is particularly true as applied to a leasehold which may have no market value in excess of the rent reserved. The appellant is entitled to be paid the value of the unexpired term. The items under consideration are but constituent elements of the value. In principle, and according to what we consider the better authority, they are not recoverable as something apart from the leasehold interest. They form an essential part of its value."

In Springfield Southwestern R. Co. v. Schweitzer, 173 Mo. App. 650, 158 S. W. 1058, the court distinguished between the right to recover damages incurred in removing personal property from the condemned premises, and the right to damages sustained by the breakage and deterioration of such property while being removed, saying: "Complaint is also made of the allowance of the claim of $86 for damage to the fire brick, but to this contention of the appellant we do not agree. It became necessary for the tenant to remove the machinery and property and if it could not be moved without being damaged the tenant should be paid for such damage as ensued because it is expressly provided by our constitution that property shall not be taken or damaged without just compensation. We therefore hold that the defendant company is entitled to any damage sustained to its property by reason of its dismantling and removal."

Damages Allowed.

In Virginia, compensation may be recovered for the expense of removing personal property in condemnation proceedings pursuant to a constitutional provision adopted in 1902 forbidding the legislature to enact any law "whereby property shall be taken or damaged for public uses without just compensation" and a statute in obedience to that provision of the constitution, providing that in condemnation proceedings commissioners must be appointed "to ascertain what will be a just compensation for the land or other property, or for the interest or estate therein, proposed to be condemned for its uses, and to award the damages, if any, resulting to the adjacent or other property of the owner, or to the property of any other person," etc. Richmond v. Williams, 114 Va. 698, 77 S. E. 492, wherein it was said: "We are now, we believe, for the first time called upon to consider the precise question now presented in the light of the constitution and laws as they now exist. Our statute requires the commissioners to ascertain what will be a just compensation for the land or other property proposed to be condemned. In clause 10 of section 5 of the Code, it is provided that the word 'land' or 'lands,' and the words 'real estate' shall be construed to include lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interest therein, other than a chattel interest. The words 'other property,' therefore, which are added, must apply to something other than land, or they are wholly superfluous. If, therefore, it becomes necessary to take land and other property, which must of necessity embrace property other than land, we can only satisfy the language of the statute by construing the language used as embracing personal property. So construed, just compensation must be awarded for the land or other property taken, and damages must be awarded resulting to adjacent or other property of the owner, or to the property of any other person, beyond the peculiar benefits accruing to such properties, respectively; and the just compensations required to be made must, under the law as it now stands, be a full equivalent for the damages to the land or other property injured, as well as for that which is taken. Now, in this case, upon the land which was taken, there was stored a great quantity of lumber. In appropriating the land to the uses of the city it became necessary to remove the lumber, and we think it plain that in compelling its owner to remove it, a burden was imposed which diminished the value of the lumber and damaged its owner. We are of opinion, therefore, that there was no error in the instruction given to the commissioners to consider the expense of moving the stock of lumber upon the strip of land condemned."

In Diamond Mills Emery Co. v. Philadelphia, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. 9, wherein property consisting of a mill and machinery was taken by the city by virtue of its right of eminent domain, the court said: "There is always difficulty in estimating damages occasioned by taking or injuring mill property under the right of eminent domain. Questions of the depreciation of the value of the machinery, of the cost of its removal to another place, of the impaired value of the replaced plant, arise and lead to complications. In the case before us, the land upon which the mill stood was taken by the public for a park. As respects the land and buildings, therefore, a comparison of values before and after taking became unnecessary, the loss being total. But, as respects the machinery, it was claimed that a great sum of money was spent in removing it from the permanent beds on which it had been fixed, in carrying it a considerable distance to the place chosen by the plaintiff for its new plant, in erecting beds at that place and in placing the machinery upon those beds. It was further claimed that the machinery was impaired in the process of taking down and putting up. Much contention arose as to the cost of removal, the city maintaining that the plaintiff could recover only for the cost of removing to the sidewalk, and the plaintiff arguing that it had a right to recover for removal to its new mill. The question is an embarrassing one. The plaintiff might, in the exercise of its discretion, have deemed it advantageous to remove its mill to a point distant from the city, and it is obvious that the city would have no right to complain of the directors of the company in choosing a new site, but the distance of the place chosen might be so great as to make the cost of removal an enormous item—greater, perhaps, than the value of the machinery removed. On the other hand, to adopt the contention of the city—that when the machinery was removed and landed on the side walk, all the damage that the plaintiff could recover had accrued—presents great difficulties. The machinery could not be used on the sidewalk; indeed, would not be tolerated there, and whoever owned it would be under a legal duty to remove it promptly. The only other alternative presented was that the jury had a right to determine to what reasonable distance the plaintiff should remove the machinery, and to give the damages for the cost of such removal. This latter method of ascertaining the damage injects into the assessment an element of personal caprice, namely, the notion of the owner as to the place to which he desires to remove. The city, however, is liable only for the real damage it does, and is not liable to pay for carrying out the fanciful views of the owners of the property. It is necessary, therefore, to seek a rule which limits itself to ascertaining facts, free from any taint of motive or personal preference. An indication of such a rule we find in the opinion of Mr. Justice Clark, in the case of Philadelphia, etc. R. Co. v. Getz, 113 Pa. St. 214-219. These are his words: "The damages must be measured according to the market value for any useful purpose, and the estimate, both before and after the injury, must embrace all the buildings, machinery, etc., which gave to the property its distinctive character as a marble mill. It was proper, therefore, to inquire what the property of H. S. Getz & Co., not only the lease, but the machinery and fixtures used in connection therewith, was worth before and after it was affected by the injury. This was the only way the jury could accurately ascertain the true amount of damages to which the tenants were entitled.' The proper application of this rule to the present case would require the plaintiff to prove the value of the whole plant before the taking. In estimating this value, the land, buildings and machinery must all be taken into consideration. After the taking the plaintiff had nothing unless the city expressly or tacitly permitted it to remove the machinery. If the permission to remove the machinery was given while the machinery was fastened to its beds, then the city would be entitled, by way of deduction from the plaintiff's claim, to the value of that machinery upon those beds. The cost of removal would, in that case, be merely an indirect piece of evidence as an explanation of the relatively low value of machinery which had to be removed from its fixed place. The true evidence to give would be the evidence of experts as to the value of such machinery under such conditions. This rule, firmly carried out, leaves nothing to conjecture or caprice, except in so far as these may be said to be included in the estimate of experts. As a legal rule, it is free of difficulty and may be followed in any case. The rule laid down by the trial judge assumed that the taking of the city was merely the taking of the land and buildings, leaving the machinery in the possession of the plaintiff. This, in our opinion, was a misconception. Fixtures upon the property taken must be valued and paid for as part of the real estate, and any depreciation in the value of fixtures upon the part not taken is to be taken into consideration, the same as damage to the soil itself." See also Colorado M. R. Co. v. Brown, 15 Colo. 193, 25 Pac. 87; Covington Short Route Transfer Co. v. Piel, 87 Ky. 267, 8 S. W. 499.

STATE EX REL. THOMPSON

v.

REICHMAN.

Tennessee Supreme Court—August 9, 1916.

135 Tenn. 653, 685; 188 S. W. 225, 597.

Sheriffs and Constables — Powers of Sheriff.

The office of sheriff carries all the common-law powers and duties except as modified by statute.

Duty to Prevent Crime.

Under Shannon's Code, § 6889, a sheriff who has "notice" of an offense and does not do his duty to prevent it is guilty of a misdemeanor, and any knowledge from any source is notice within the statute.

Same.

Since cities have police officials, the sheriff may assume that they will perform their duties, but if he has knowledge of neglect on their part, or reason to think there is neglect, he must inform himself and prevent and suppress offenses in cities as well as rural districts.

Breach of the Peace — Unlawful Sale of Intoxicants.

"Breach of the peace" being a generic term including all violations of public peace or order, includes unlawful sale, actual or threatened, of intoxicating liquors, and the sheriff may arrest without warrant therefor.

Same.

While mere possession of intoxicating liquors in any quantity is not unlawful, it is a breach of the peace for one having liquors to prepare for sale thereof, that being a threat to violate the law against sales.

Duty of Sheriff to Arrest without Warrant.

The right of the sheriff to arrest without warrant for threatened unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors and to close the place of business is not unlawful as an arbitrary invasion of property rights, which are not more sacred than the person, which may be seized to prevent breach of peace.

Same.

The requirement that the sheriff, to prevent breaches of the peace, arrest one who threatens unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors and if necessary close his place of business, is not subject to the objection of requiring services without compensation.

Same.

For a misdemeanor committed without his presence, a sheriff cannot arrest without warrant; but, if breach of peace is threatened in his presence, he needs no warrant to arrest to prevent the breach under Shannon's Code, § 6892.

Notice of Violation of Law.

The duty of the sheriff, having notice of commission of an offense, being to prevent or suppress it, involves the duty to at least make some investigation, and it is not necessary in case of unlawful sales of intoxicating liquors, for the sheriff to actually see sales before swearing out warrants.

Same.

Although the sheriff is not bound to maintain a detective force, and no statute in terms makes it his duty to swear out warrants or give information to the grand jury, yet, being commanded to prevent and suppress crimes and breaches of the peace, he must use all the means provided by law to accomplish such end.

Public Officers — Removal — Failure of Sheriff to Enforce Law.

In a proceeding for his removal the evidence is held to show that a sheriff failed to perform his duties to prevent and suppress breaches of the peace by unlawful sale and threatened unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

It is no defense for the sheriff's failure to prevent breaches of the peace by unlawful sales of intoxicating liquors, that the state was proceeding against offenders under the Nuisance Act (Laws 1913 [2d Ex. Sess.] c. 2), or that the criminal court administration was lax and nothing would have been accomplished in case of arrest.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

A sheriff who has made an honest and reasonably intelligent effort to do his duty will not be removed by the courts, though his efforts may not have been wholly successful, his right to continue in office depending rather on the good faith of his efforts than on the degree of his success.

[See note at end of this case.]

Sheriffs and Constables — Duty to Enforce Law — Notice of Violation.

When a sheriff learns that a city in his county is collecting tribute from numerous liquor dealers and leaving them otherwise undisturbed, this is notice to him that the law is being violated and no effort made to enforce it.

Duty of Investigation.

While a sheriff need not make a forcible entrance into a suspected residence or place of business to discover violations of the liquor law, he or his deputies should enter open saloons and make arrests if justified by what they see therein.

Breach of Peace — What Constitutes.

The word "peace," in the phrase "breach of the peace," means the tranquility enjoyed by the citizens of a municipality or community where good order reigns among its members; that invisible sense of security which every man feels necessary to his comfort, and for which all governments are instituted.

Same.

"Breach of the peace," in view of the generally accepted definition, and of constitutional provision that all indictments shall conclude, "against the peace and dignity of the state," includes any violation of any law enacted to preserve peace and good order.

Illegal Sale of Intoxicants as Breach of Peace.

Shannon's Code, § 993, subsec. 2, requiring every applicant for a liquor license to give bond to keep a peaceable and orderly house, is a legislative declaration that the liquor law is intended to preserve the peace, so that any violation thereof is a breach of the peace.

Same.

Engaging in the sale of intoxicating liquors, declared by Acts 1913 (2d Ex. Sess.), c. 21, to be a nuisance, is among that class of nuisances always treated by the court as tending to disturb the peace and good order of the community.

Intoxicating Liquors — Illegal Sale — Exclusiveness of Abatement Proceeding.

That Acts 1913 (2d Ex. Sess.), c. 2, declaring a saloon a nuisance, provides a method for its abatement, merely furnishes a cumulative remedy, and does not abrogate any other remedy or affect a sheriff's duties.

Disorderly Houses — Illegal Sale of Intoxicants.

A saloon run in violation of law is a "disorderly house," which is defined as any place where illegal practices are habitually carried on; and hence a saloon open, equipped, and ready for business is a threat to breach the peace, if not in itself a breach of the peace.

[See 134 Am. St. Rep. 819.]

Breach of Peace — Violence Not Essential.

It is not necessary that an act have in itself any element of violence in order to constitute a breach of the peace.

[See generally, Ann. Cas. 1917C 889.]

Intoxicating Liquors — Arrest for Threatened Violation of Law — Duty of Officer.

On making an arrest for a threatened violation of the liquor law, the sheriff should take such steps as are necessary to prevent the threatened sales, as, in case of a saloon open for business, by closing it till the liquors are removed, and then release the offender and leave future sales and future threats to be dealt with as they arise.

Public Officers — Removal — Failure to Enforce Law.

In proceedings to remove a sheriff for failure to enforce the liquor law, he is precluded, by his admission that he did nothing in a city within his county but to serve process where liquor was openly sold in violation of law, from asserting that no wilful neglect of his duty has been shown.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from Chancery Court, Shelby county: HEISKELL, Chancellor.

Action by State, on relation of F. M. Thompson, Attorney General, for removal from office of J. A. Reichman, sheriff of Shelby county. Judgment for defendant. Relator appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

G. T. Fitzhugh and F. M. Thompson for appellant.

Chas. M. Bryan and T. K. Biddick for appellee.

[656] FRIERSON, J.—This is a petition filed by the attorney-general of the State in the chancery court of Shelby county to remove the defendant from the office of sheriff of that county under the provisions of chapter 11, Acts 1915, entitled "An act to provide for the removal of unfaithful public officers, and providing a procedure therefor."

The petition contained many charges. Some of them, however, were considered by the chancellor insufficient, [657] even if true, to warrant a removal and were stricken out. There was then a very full hearing on the remaining charges with the result that the chancellor held that no misconduct or neglect of duty sufficient to justify a removal was shown and dismissed the petition.

The charge of the petition which has been the subject of the chief controversy, relates to the laws against the sale of intoxicating liquors. It is stated in great detail. But the substance of it is that, during his term as sheriff, defendant has not only failed and neglected to enforce these laws, but through an agreement or understanding with the officials of the city of Memphis, has permitted saloons to be run in violation of law.

Both parties introduced a great mass of evidence touching this charge. From a consideration of this evidence, we think the following facts are established with but little conflict between the witnesses. Since the passage of the Act of 1909 extending the four-mile law (Laws 1909, chapter 1), which made the sale of intoxicating liquors in Memphis unlawful, the handling of the liquor question in that city has assumed a new phase with each new act passed by the legislature to secure the enforcement of the law. From 1909 to March 1, 1914, the law seems to have been entirely ignored. The saloons seem to have been recognized, and, in a measure regulated by the city officials. During this period, for a part of the years 1910 and 1911, the defendant was police commissioner of the city of Memphis. He knew the conditions, but made no effort [658] to enforce the liquor laws. On the contrary, as he admits, he recognized the existence of saloons and assumed to regulate them by requiring that they close each night at midnight, and remain closed all day Sunday. This condition continued and the saloons seems not to have been disturbed from any source until March 1, 1914, when what is known as the "Nuisance Act" went into effect (Laws 1913 [2d Ex. Sess.] chapter 2). Then began a period during which the only effort to enforce the law was through injunction bills filed by the district attorney-general or special counsel employed by the governor. The city authorities still did nothing. But several hundred injunction bills were filed and a great many places closed and a large number of dealers were sent to the work-house for violating the injunctions. Just what the conditions were during this period is the subject of some controversy, but we think it fairly appears that intoxicating liquors continued to be sold in many places in the city in varying degrees of openness. There was undoubtedly some effort at secrecy and concealment to guard against surprise by the special counsel in charge of the injunction suits and the officer working under him. But no danger seems to have been apprehended from any other source. Some places maintained bars; others did not. In many places liquors were served in the rear of barber shops, restaurants, and small grocery stores. In some, lunch counters were used as blinds, and, in others, sales were made behind interstate shipping house signs. The main difference, perhaps, was [659] that stocks of liquors were not kept conspicuously displayed, but were kept more or less concealed, or where they could be quickly removed.

These were the conditions in the city when in August, 1914, defendant was elected sheriff, and on September 1, 1914, when he assumed the duties of that office. They remained unchanged until about February 1, 1915. During that time he did nothing toward enforcing the liquor laws in the city of Memphis except to serve the process from the chancery courts in some three hundred injunction cases. There were, however, a number of roadhouses and other places outside of the city where liquors were being sold. These he seems to have endeavored to break up. He was advised by his counsel that he had no right to make searches or to arrest, without a warrant, for a misdemeanor, unless committed in his presence. But notwithstanding this, he had his deputies make a number of raids, arrest a good many people, and destroy a considerable quantity of liquor. He also, through his deputies, secured the indictment of a considerable number of persons for selling liquors outside of the city.

But, on January 29, 1915, the act of the removal of unfaithful officers, known as the "Ouster Law," went into effect. Immediately the defendant and the city officials held a conference. The mayor made a public announcement that the liquor laws would be enforced in Memphis. Defendant announced that, co-operating with the city officials, he would enforce the law in the county. And, for a short time, there seems to have [660] been a very fair enforcement of the liquor laws in Memphis. But, soon after the passage of the ouster bill, the policy of enforcing the law through injunction suits was abandoned and nothing further was done in that line except to wind up the suits already commenced.

Then, about May 1, 1915, the city officials adopted a new policy. Through the police, lists were made of all the places in the city in which it was known that liquor was being sold. Each dealer was arrested, but if he would turn over to the arresting officer "a forfeit" of $50, he was left undisturbed in his place. If he did not appear at the city court, his $50 was forfeited to the city and this ended the matter. If he appeared he was fined $50. In neither event was he bound over to the grand jury. Defendant admits that he knew of this practice. Some effort is made to deny that it was understood that the periodical payment of this $50 would enable the dealer to continue his unlawful business without molestation. But it had this effect and we cannot doubt, from the record, that it was so intended and understood. Under this plan Memphis again had fairly open saloons. In places there was still some secrecy. Some places were being run in violation of injunctions, and precautions had to be taken. Others were selling on the sly and trying to avoid paying an occasional "forfeit" of $50 to the city. But there were a great many open saloons.

These were the conditions prevailing during defendant's term of office and at the time the petition in this [661] cause was filed. For misconduct and neglect of duty in permitting them to exist, the mayor and other city officials have been removed. State v. Crump, 134 Tenn. 121, 183 S. W. 505, L.R.A.1916D 951. The question now is whether they also furnish ground for removing defendant from the office of sheriff. If he was responsible for them or if they were due to his neglect of any duty which the law imposed on him, he is unworthy and must be removed. But if he has neglected no duty, if the law did not require him to do the things it is insisted he did not do, and we should remove him because of the conditions we have described, we would do judicial violence to the law—the worst kind of lawlessness.

For the State, it is insisted that it was his duty to suppress these lawless saloons, arrest the offenders and report them to the grand jury. For the defendant, it is insisted that he was under no duty to do detective service to discover violations of the law; that he had no authority to arrest for misdemeanors, without a warrant, unless the offense was committed in his presence; that it was not only not his duty, but would be unlawful for him to swear out a warrant on information; that no sales of liquor were made in his presence; and that, therefore, he neglected no duty which the law imposed on him when he failed to put an end to the conditions of which complaint is made.

To determine this issue, it is necessary to understand just what the duties of a sheriff are. The office of sheriff is a most ancient one. It carries with it, in America, all of its common-law duties and powers except [662] as modified by statute. We have several statutes which bear on the question and which, taken together, set out the duties of the sheriff very much as they existed at common law.

Aside from the ordinary duties to execute and return process, to attend upon the courts, and to take charge of the jail, the following statutes, as set out in Shannon's Code, are applicable:

Sec. 452. "The sheriff and his deputies are conservators of the peace, and, to keep the peace, prevent crime, arrest any person lawfully, or to execute process of law, may call any person or summon the body of the county to their aid."

Sec. 6892. "Public offenses may be prevented by the intervention of the officers of justice (1) by requiring security to keep the peace; and (2) by suppressing riots, unlawful assemblies, and breaches of the peace."

Sec. 6893. "Whenever the officers of justice are authorized to act in the prevention of public offenses, other persons who, by their command, act in their aid, are justified in so doing."

Sec. 6894. "The sheriff is the principal conservator of the peace in his county, and it is his duty to suppress all affrays, riots, routs, unlawful assemblies, insurrections, or other breaches of the peace, to do which, he may summon to his aid as many of the male inhabitants of the county as he thinks proper."

Sec. 6895. "The judicial and ministerial officers of justice in the State, and the mayor, aldermen, marshals, and police of cities and towns, are also conservators [663] of the peace, and required to aid in the prevention and suppression of public offenses, and for this purpose may act with all the power of the sheriff."

Sec. 6898. "If any person commanded to aid, under the provisions of this chapter, any magistrate or officer, without good cause, refuses or neglects to obey such command, he is guilty of a misdemeanor."

Sec. 6899. "If a magistrate or officer, having notice of any unlawful act provided against in this chapter, neglects or refuses to do his duty in the prevention of the public offense, he is guilty of a misdemeanor."

When an offense has been committed, a warrant for the arrest of the offender may be issued by a justice of the peace, upon information, after he has examined the informant on oath and is satisfied that the offense has been committed. Shannon's Code, section 6978.

The cases in which, to prevent a breach of the peace, the sheriff may, without a warrant, arrest a person for the purpose of requiring him to give security to keep the peace are set out in section 6900 of Shannon's Code as follows:

"It is the duty of all peace officers who know or have reason to suspect any person of being armed with the intention of committing a riot or affray, or of assaulting, wounding or killing another person, or of otherwise breaking the peace, to arrest such person forthwith, and take him before some justice of the peace."

The succeeding section provides how the justice of the peace shall require bond of the offender and, in default thereof, commit him to jail.

[664] With respect to the arrest, without a warrant, of persons accused of felonies, an officer is given a rather wide latitude, but beyond this and the section just quoted, the only provision for such arrests is:

"An officer may without a warrant, arrest a person: (1) For a public offense committed or a breach of the peace threatened in his presence." Shannon's Code, section 6997.

To summarize, it is the duty of a sheriff to keep the peace and prevent or suppress crimes and public offenses. In order to do this, he is authorized to arrest, without a warrant, persons known to be or suspected of being armed for the purpose of committing a breach of the peace, and such persons may be required to give security to keep the peace. All other breaches of the peace he is simply commanded to suppress. And, to this end, he is authorized, for such a breach of the peace threatened in his presence, to make an arrest without a warrant. He may likewise arrest for any misdemeanor committed in his presence. In the case of all other misdemeanors, he must have a warrant.

Now what kind of an officer does this make of a sheriff? We cannot agree that he is a mere process server, or that he may, if he would discharge the duties of his office, be passive until some one swears out a warrant for him to serve. Nor can he, if he knows in any way that a public offense has been committed or is about to be committed, remain inactive. His duties are not merely to apprehend those who have committed offenses but to prevent such offenses. The sections of the [665] Code quoted make this plain. He is "to keep the peace" and "prevent crime." He is to prevent "public offenses" and suppress breaches of the peace. He is the commander in chief of the law forces of the county. All judicial and ministerial officers of justice and all city officials are required to aid him, and the male population of his county is subject to his command "in the prevention and suppression," not only of violent breaches of the peace, but of all public offenses. It is idle to say that all this does not imply initiative on the part of the sheriff in the enforcement of the law against public offenses. The duties imposed cannot be performed without some degree of activity and diligence to inform himself of conditions in his county. Certainly they preclude the idea that he may, without dereliction, shut his eyes to what is common knowledge in the community, or purposefully avoid information, easily acquired, which will make it his duty to act.

We do not mean that it is his duty to patrol the county as the streets of the city are patrolled by the police, or to maintain a detective force to ferret out crimes. All we now decide is that it is the duty of the sheriff and his deputies to keep their eyes open for evidence of public offenses, and that it is a distinct neglect of duty for them to ignore common knowledge of law violation or to intentionally avoid being where they have reason to believe that such offenses are being committed. And to make imperative action in the discharge of his duty to prevent and suppress, it is not necessary that the sheriff shall see, with his own eyes, an offense [666] committed or about to be committed. By section 6899, Shannon's Code, it is provided that if he has notice of such offense and does not do his duty in preventing it, he is guilty of a misdemeanor. We hold that knowledge coming to him from any source is "notice" within the meaning of this statute.

Again it is clear that the duties and powers of a sheriff within the limits of an incorporated city are precisely the same that they are in the remainder of the county. The law draws no distinction. The city officials are conservators of the peace. But they do not supplant him. On the contrary, by the express terms of the statute, they are to aid him. He is the chief and they are his assistants. True, there is not ordinarily the same need for vigilance on his part in the city as in the country. One of the chief reasons for the incorporation of towns and cities is to provide in the more densely populated sections, better police protection, than, in the nature of things, the sheriff's office can afford. When, therefore a city has patrolling its streets a police force employed expressly, to detect crime and apprehend offenders, the sheriff, in the absence of information to the contrary, is justified in assuming that the city officials will do their duty, and hence will not be guilty of any serious neglect of duty if he gives little attention to police matters in such city. But if he has reason to believe that the police force is neglecting its duty, or is in league with offenders, it is his duty to inform himself. And, if he knows that the city officials are deliberately ignoring [667] or permitting a certain class of offenses, his duty to prevent and suppress such offenses is the same it would be if there was no municipality and no police force.

The unlawful sale of liquor is undoubtedly a misdemeanor and public offense in Tennessee. It is not also a breach of the peace? "The term 'breach of the peace' is generic and includes all violations of public peace or order, or acts tending to the disturbance thereof." 5 Cyc. p. 1024, citing many authorities. And this court has said:

"A breach of the peace is 'a violation of public order, the offense of disturbing the public peace. An act of public indecorum is also a breach of the peace.'" Galvin v. State, 6 Cold. (Tenn.) 294.

The sale of intoxicating liquors has always been recognized as tending to provoke disturbances of good order and breaches of the peace. When such sales were lawful it was found necessary to impose upon them strict regulations to prevent breaches of the peace. Speaking of such regulation this court long ago said:

"This is a police regulation, for the good order and quiet of the city." Smith v. Knoxville, 3 Head. (Tenn.) 247.

See, also, Webster v. State, 110 Tenn. 507, 82 S. W. 179.

The original four-mile act, which exempted from its operation incorporated towns, was sustained as a reasonable police regulation for the preservation of peace and good order. And the exception of incorporated towns was justified upon the theory that such towns "would provide the necessary police force, so as to [668] keep down disturbances and breaches of the peace that arise out of the sale and use of intoxicating liquors." State v. Frost, 103 Tenn. 694, 54 S. W. 986.

And so when the four-mile law was extended to incorporated towns and cities, the purpose was still to preserve peace and good order. The Legislature of 1877 (Laws 1877, c. 23) considered the sale of liquor without adequate police protection a disturber of peace and good order, and prohibited it. But that Legislature thought that, with such protection as towns and cities could afford, it was possible for liquor selling and peace and good order to co-exist. However, after an experience of 32 years, the Legislature of 1909 evidently concluded that the sale of liquor, with or without police protection, was destructive of or, at least, dangerous to peace and good order. Whether we would have reached the same conclusion is immaterial. The Legislature has so declared and we hold that the liquor laws of the state were passed as a means for preserving the peace, and that their violation is a breach of the peace.

We have been cited to no case, and have found none which, in terms, decides that the unlawful sale of liquor is a breach of the peace. But the conclusion we have reached follows irresistibly from the definition of a breach of the peace generally accepted by the courts and from the logic of our cases cited above, and we are entirely satisfied with its soundness. True the unlawful sale of liquors is not a breach of the peace to prevent which the sheriff may arrest a person and require [669] him to give bond to keep the peace. That, as we have seen, can only be done when one is armed for the purpose of committing a breach of the peace. It belongs rather to that class which the sheriff is commanded to suppress, and to prevent which, when threatened in his presence, it is his duty to arrest without warrant. It is of the same class and to be dealt with in the same way as the breaches of the peace enumerated in the brief of counsel for defendant, as follows:

"The term, 'breach of the peace' is generic, and includes riotous and unlawful assemblies, riots, forcible entry and detainer, the ending of challenges and provoking to fight, going around in public, without lawful occasion, in such manner as to alarm the public, the wanton discharge of firearms in the public streets, engaging in an affray or assault, using profane, indecent, and abusive language by one toward another, on a street and in the presence of others, or being intoxicated and yelling on the public streets in such manner as to disturb the good order and tranquillity of the neighborhood." 8 Ruling Case Law, p. 285.

The unlawful sale of liquor being a breach of the peace, it is not always necessary for an officer to actually see a sale before he is authorized to make an arrest without a warrant. If, in his presence, such a sale is threatened, he is authorized to arrest as for any other threatened breach of the peace. The threat need not be in words. If one man puts himself in a position to assault and, by his acts, manifests a purpose [670] to assault another, a breach of the peace is undoubtedly threatened. How does this principle apply to a threatened unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors? The condemnation of our statutes is confined to the selling of such liquors. It is not unlawful for a man to have liquors, in any quantity, in his home or in his place of business. The mere presence of liquors, therefore, without more, is not a public offense, and will not under all circumstances, indicate a purpose or threat to sell them unlawfully. Thus a stock of liquors in a house from which an interstate shipping business is being done may have no unlawful significance. But when liquors are found in a place of business fitted up as only saloons are usually equipped, with a bar, bartenders, bottles, glasses, and all the paraphernalia commonly used in places where drinks are served, there can be no doubt of the purpose. Men do not maintain places of that kind except for one purpose. Such a place, standing fully equipped and ready to serve the public, is a constant threat to sell liquor unlawfully and thus breach the peace. It cannot be that an officer, charged with the duty of preventing breaches of the peace, with this threat before his eyes, and with the certainty that the threat will be carried into execution the moment he is out of sight, is powerless to act because there has not already been a breach of the peace. We emphasize his duty to prevent offenses. And certainly no rights of an individual are violated when he is simply deprived of the privilege of doing that which is unlawful. The interposition of the law to prevent [671] a crime is more humane and less harsh than its punishment for one committed.

Our act authorizing an arrest for a threatened breach of the peace was taken from the Alabama Code of 1852. And we quote, with approval, what the Supreme Court of that State has said in sustaining the right of an officer to prevent a threatened breach of the peace as follows:

Two great and vital principles of government are to be kept steadily in view, in pronouncing on conduct, such as is brought to view in this record; the liberty of a citizen, and the peace and repose of society. Civil liberty is natural liberty, shorn of the excesses which invade and trench on the equal liberty of others. No one can claim the right to violate the law, and precautionary force is justified, to prevent a greater impending evil. Such force, however, is in its nature remedial, and can be carried no further than is reasonably necessary to prevent the threatened wrong. Prevention is less hurtful than redress, and when prudently exercised, is not only justified, but is commended of the law. No man can rightfully complain of any encroachment upon personal liberty, which he himself by his lawlessness or violence has rendered necessary for the safety and protection of others. It is liberty as defined by law, not unbridled license, our free Constitution guarantees to every man—the humblest, equally with the most exalted.” Hayes v. Mitchell, 69 Ala. 454.

We hold therefore, that a person found in control of such a place as we have described is subject to arrest, [672] without warrant, as for a breach of the peace threatened in the presence of an officer. It may be true that he has not committed any offense for which he may be indicted and prosecuted. But neither has the man who has threatened an assault and battery, or to send a challenge, but has been arrested before he could put his threat into execution. In such cases the arrest is made not for the purpose of inflicting punishment, but to prevent the necessity for punishment. It is not to be followed by imprisonment, unless it shall be necessary to so restrain the offender to prevent the threatened offense. The limit of the force that may lawfully be used to prevent a breach of the peace, as held by the Alabama court, is that it shall “be carried no further than is reasonably necessary to prevent the threatened wrong.”

In the Alabama case referred to it was held that the circumstances might be such as to justify the arresting officer in even putting the offender in jail, the court saying:

“The right to imprison was a question for the jury, under appropriate instructions.

There should certainly be no imprisonment, unless the circumstances rendered such imprisonment necessary. If, by reason of the unreasonableness of the hour, or the inaccessibility of the mayor or other magistrate having jurisdiction, the offender could not be then brought to trial; or, if by reason of riotous or lawless conduct, the peace-preserving powers of the marshal were, or seemed to be in request, to maintain the general peace, or to protect [673] others or their property from lawlessness, then it would not be the duty of the marshal to exhaust his entire energies, in personally detaining the prisoner, to the neglect of all other equally pressing duties. In such case, he would be authorized to imprison the offender, until he could be properly brought to trial.” Hayes v. Mitchell, 69 Ala. 452; Johnson v. Americus, 46 Ga. 80; Boaz v. Tate, 43 Ind. 60.

In other words, in obedience to the command to prevent and suppress breaches of the peace, the officer making the arrest is to do whatever, under the circumstances is reasonably necessary to prevent the threatened offense. In the event of an unlawful assembly, he will command that the persons assembled disperse. If the command is obeyed, his duty is done. If it is not obeyed, he will arrest those who disobey and detain them until the assembly is dispersed. Yerkes v. Smith, 157 Mich. 559, 122 N. W. 223. If one threatens an assault and is arrested by an officer in whose presence the threat is made, he will be detained until the danger of the assault appears to have passed, and then released. So if an officer finds a saloon, such as we have described, it is his duty to do whatever is reasonably necessary to prevent the threatened sales of liquors. Manifestly his first step will be to arrest the person in charge for a threatened breach of the peace. Having done this, he should detain such person until the danger of the threatened breach of the peace is removed. How this danger can be effectually removed will depend on the circumstances. If this can be done [674] by seizing and removing the liquors, such action is within the power of the officer. Or, if necessary, he may close the place of business and keep it closed until the purpose of conducting it as a saloon is abandoned.

It may be said that this involves an arbitrary invasion of property rights. But the law does not hold one's property more sacred than his person. And it must be conceded that his person may be seized when necessary to prevent a breach of the peace.

It is insisted that this calls on the sheriff to render services for which the law provides no compensation. It may be that he will sometimes do things not covered by the fee bill. But, if so, this is nothing more than is incident to the work of men in every walk of life. He must take his office with its burdens as well as its emoluments. Besides when one is arrested for threatening a breach of the peace by maintaining a saloon, it will rarely be the case that sufficient evidence of past offenses will not be found to justify swearing out a warrant upon which the offender can be prosecuted and convicted.

Of course what we have said here does not apply to all places in which liquors are found. We apply it now only to places, like saloons, so fitted up as to be a constant invitation to the public to buy and drink. So applied, the things we have held that the sheriff is authorized to do are nothing more than the defendant himself did in his efforts to enforce the law in the rural districts. In fact these are the very things that all faithful officers, who have really tried to enforce the [675] law, have found it necessary to do and have done for years. There has been an impression that such officers were, in fact exceeding their lawful authority. It is time they were authoritatively advised that, in doing these things, so long as they do not abuse their power they have the full sanction and protection of the law.

We are not unmindful of the contention of counsel that an officer has no right to arrest, without a warrant, for a misdemeanor not committed in his presence. That rule is too well understood to require the citation of authorities. Nor do we mean to depart from it. But, under the statute quoted, an arrest may lawfully be made when no misdemeanor has in fact been committed if it is necessary to prevent a threatened breach of the peace. Whatever is a violation of public order or tends to the disturbance of public peace or order is a breach of the peace. In the judgment of the Legislature, the sale of intoxicating liquors is such a violation of good order and so tends to the disturbance of public peace and order that laws have been enacted prohibiting such sales. A violation of these laws undoubtedly violates good order and tends to the disturbance of public peace and order, and, by all the accepted rules of construction and of logic, is a breach of the peace.

For any misdemeanor, whether also a breach of the peace or not, actually committed, no arrest can be made without a warrant, unless the offense is committed in the presence of the arresting officer. But to prevent any offense which is a breach of the peace, threatened [676] in the presence of an officer an arrest may be made without a warrant. So, to arrest for a sale of liquor, not made in his presence, an officer must have a warrant. But to prevent such a sale, when threatened in his presence, he needs no warrant. Hence when he finds a man in possession of a saloon, with everything ready to serve customers, such a man is undoubtedly threatening, in the presence of an officer, a breach of the peace which he will commit unless prevented. We have no hesitancy in holding that it is the duty of the officer to prevent the breach of the peace by making an arrest. It cannot be that an officer of the law must stand powerless in the presence of complete preparations for a breach of the peace which is sure to be committed as soon as he is out of sight.

Moreover, as we have seen, when the sheriff has notice that an offense is being committed, it is his duty to act in prevention and suppression. This involves the duty to, at least, make some investigation to ascertain the facts. That defendant had notice that saloons were running in Memphis, we do not doubt from the record. And it is impossible that, with saloons running as the record shows they were, the sheriff and his deputies could not, with slight effort, have put themselves in possession of sufficient knowledge to satisfy a justice of the peace that the offense of selling liquor had been committed. Nor do we understand that it was necessary for the officers to actually see sales before swearing out warrants. We are aware that State v. Good, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 240, holds that when the informant [677] does not know the facts, but has only been informed of them, the justice of the peace is not authorized to issue the warrant. But if any officer knows the facts which reasonably lead to the conclusion that sales of liquor have been made, he is within the rule laid down in that case and is justified in swearing out a warrant, although he may not have actually seen the sales.

We have said that the sheriff is not bound to maintain a detective force. It is also true that there is no statute which, in terms, makes it his duty to swear out warrants or give information to the grand jury. But when he is commanded to prevent and suppress crimes, public offenses, and breaches of the peace, it is incumbent on him to use all the means which the law has provided to accomplish that end. If complaint is made to him or he has notice that an offense has been committed, or is about to be committed, it is his duty to investigate. If an offense is committed or a breach of the peace threatened in his presence, it is his duty to arrest without a warrant. If, upon investigation, he learns facts which show that an offense has been committed, it is his duty to swear out a warrant and make the arrest. If he has reason to believe that an offense has been committed, but does not know facts sufficient to justify his swearing out a warrant, it is his duty to report the matter to the grand jury for investigation. Nothing short of this will be a complete performance of his duty to prevent and suppress crime and public offenses.

[678] Has the defendant neglected to perform the duties of his office as thus fixed by the law? So far as the county outside of the limits of the city of Memphis is concerned, with a single exception, we think he has not, and, as to this part of the county, his conception of the duties of his office was just about as we have stated them to be. Some criticism is made of his conduct with respect to the sale of liquor at certain roadhouses. But it appears that he made numerous arrests, a number of raids, destroyed considerable quantities of liquors, and secured many indictments. On the whole we think he acted in good faith and with reasonable vigor in the effort to enforce the liquor laws outside of the city of Memphis with a single exception to be now referred to.

The Tri-State Fair was held in September, 1914, just outside the limits of Memphis. At some time between defendant's election, in August, 1914, and his induction into office on September 1st, in a conference at which he (Mayor Crump) and the chief of police of Memphis were present, he was asked if he would permit liquor to be sold on the fair grounds. He at first replied that he would not, as that would be a prostitution of his office. But, after some remarks by the mayor, he said that if as many as ten of the directors of the fair would ask it in writing, he would agree. This is the version as given by the chief of police. The defendant does not deny it and Mr. Crump was not called as a witness. The chancellor accepted it as true, as do we also. It does not appear that the petition suggested was ever signed or presented. But it does appear that beer and [679] whisky were sold openly on the grounds during the fair, and that defendant was present and could not have been ignorant of the sales, though he may have avoided actually seeing them. The agreement, made before he became sheriff, could not be made a ground for his removal, unless it was afterwards carried out. We do not know whether the directors ever signed a petition as suggested, nor do we know that defendant ever formally waived the petition as a condition to his agreement. But whether by his express agreement or not, intoxicating liquors were sold openly on the grounds, and he was present and took no steps to prevent it.

In the city of Memphis, defendant admits that he did nothing toward enforcing the liquor laws except to serve such process, principally in injunction cases, as was placed in his hands. He was personally and politically on the most intimate terms with the mayor of Memphis. Whether by formal agreement or tacit understanding or on his own motion, it is manifest, from his own testimony, that he was content to leave the enforcement or nonenforcement of the laws against selling intoxicating liquors entirely to the city authorities. At the same time he admits that he knew that, from September 1, 1914, to January 29, 1915, the city authorities were making no effort to enforce these laws, and that, from May to October, 1915, they were merely arresting liquor dealers, collecting $50 from each, and binding none of them over to the grand jury. His failure [680] to act, under these circumstances, was a clear neglect to perform the duties of his office.

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—57.

The excuse is offered that, when he was inducted into office the state was proceeding against liquor dealers by injunction suits and that this was the most effective weapon against them. But this is only an additional means of enforcing the law and relieves no officer of any of the ordinary duties of his office.

It is also urged, in excuse, that the officials of the criminal court were so derelict in the discharge of their duties that nothing would have been accomplished by having offenders bound over to the grand jury. But however this may have been, the derelictions of other officials cannot excuse him for failure to do what the law plainly required him to do for the prevention of public offenses. Besides it is conceded that, during a portion of his term, the chancery courts were very active and the counsel employed by the Governor very energetic in proceeding against dealers by injunction. In these proceedings, defendant gave no aid except to serve process. If he really desired to enforce the law and felt that his efforts were being obstructed in the criminal court, a report to the official in charge of these proceedings would have brought most effective aid. It is said, however, that the Nuisance Act does not impose any duty on him. It is true that act does not mention the sheriff, and he is not authorized to institute any proceeding under it. But neither is there any act which, in terms, says that he shall, under any circumstances, swear out a warrant or give information to the [681] grand jury and, counsel say, no statute says that he shall ever make an arrest without a warrant; the only provision being that he may do so in certain cases. But he is commanded to preserve the peace and prevent and suppress public offenses. And we hold that this makes it his duty to use all the machinery which the law provides to accomplish that result. It is his duty to co-operate with all other officials who are charged with duties looking to the same end. If, therefore, he found that the enforcement of the law was being obstructed in the criminal court, while this would not relieve him of the duty to have offenders bound over, it would impose the additional duty of enlisting the aid of those in charge of injunction suits.

In reaching these conclusions, we have not, we think, put any harsh or strained construction on the law. We have only held that the sheriff must be a real conservator of the peace and, to that end, must, in good faith, use all the power which the law gives him to prevent and suppress public offenses.

It is not to be expected that any sheriff can so conduct his office that no liquor will be sold in his county any more than that there will be no such crimes as larceny, disturbing public worship, or assault and battery. And no sheriff who, with reasonable intelligence, makes an honest effort to prevent and suppress public offenses of all kinds has anything to fear from the courts.

The inquiry of counsel as to what defendant could have lawfully done is a pertinent one. We have no [682] right to condemn him, unless we can show what the law made it his duty to do. But what we have said furnishes, we think, a definite answer to that question. We have no doubt, from the record that, during at least a portion of his term he had notice that a number of saloons were being run openly and that the city authorities were doing nothing to suppress them. It is equally clear that no efforts were being made to conceal their operations from his force. What could he and his deputies have done? (1) They had only to step into these places, observe a sale, and make an arrest for an offense committed in their presence, or if they found the place ready for business, but saw no sales made, they could have made an arrest for a breach of the peace threatened in their presence, and could then have seized the liquor or closed the place, as under the circumstances, would have been reasonably necessary to prevent sales being made. (2) With notice of these open saloons a slight investigation would have put his deputies in position to swear out warrants. (3) If his efforts had been obstructed in the criminal court, he could have reported to the official in charge of injunction suits and secured effective aid.

We have not overlooked the authorities cited by counsel but have considered them. Most of them are not in conflict with what we have held.

Com. v. Wright, 158 Mass. 149, 33 N. E. 82, 19 L.R.A. 206, 35 Am. St. Rep. 475, simply holds that for statutory misdemeanors, not amounting to a breach of the peace, an officer has no authority to arrest [683] without a warrant, though the offense be committed in his presence, "unless it is given by statute." But our statute extends the authority to all "public offenses."

Pinkerton v. Verberg, 78 Mich. 573, 44 N. W. 579, 7 L.R.A. 507, 18 Am. St. Rep. 473, holds that a police officer cannot, without a warrant, lawfully arrest a woman upon mere suspicion that she is on the street for the purpose of plying her vocation as a prostitute.

Jamison v. Gaernett, 10 Bush (Ky.) 221, merely denies the power of an officer to arrest, without warrant, for an assault not committed in his presence.

Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549, 37 N. W. 21, and 8 Ruling Case Law, p. 258, citing a Florida case holding that carrying concealed weapons is not a breach of the peace, as well as some other cases, not cited, but which we have examined, are, in principle, more or less in conflict with our holding that the unlawful selling of liquor is a breach of the peace. But, we think, they are not supported by the weight of authority or reason.

It is not necessary to discuss other charges of the bill further than to say, in fairness to defendant, that we do not find that the charges of official oppression and demanding and receiving illegal fees are sustained by the record.

For the reasons stated, the decree of the chancellor must be reversed, and a decree entered here, removing defendant from the office of sheriff of Shelby county.

In the record of this case, no effort has been made to comply with the rule requiring bills of exceptions [684] to state the evidence in narrative and condensed form. Nor has any abstract of the evidence been filed. The bill of exceptions consists of a literal transcript of what occurred on the trial, including numerous lengthy arguments by counsel, making six large volumes. It is insisted by defendant's counsel that the court ought not to examine the testimony, but should decide the case on the facts set out in the opinion of the chancellor. In view of the summary character of this proceeding and the expressed purpose of the legislature that it should speedily be disposed of on its merits, and the short time between the trials below and here, we have not done this, but have examined the entire record. Our conclusions in the main, are based however, on the facts found by the chancellor to be true.

But we do not think the additional cost resulting from failure to comply with the rule should be borne by the defendant. Three-fourths of the cost of the transcript will be taxed against Shelby county. The remainder of the costs of this court as well as the costs of the court below will be paid by the defendant.

ON PETITION FOR REHEARING.

(October 11, 1916.)

[685] FRIERSON, J.—In a very earnest petition to rehear we are asked to reconsider our opinion in which it was held that the defendant should be removed from the office of sheriff of Shelby county.

[689] When the cause was heard three members of the court were absent and their places occupied by special judges. In view of this fact, an oral argument of the petition has been permitted, and the conclusions now announced reached by the court, composed of four regular members and the writer sitting as a special judge.

As counsel seem to be under some misapprehensions, we will restate briefly what was decided.

The facts which we held justified defendant's removal were these:

(1) During the Tri-State Fair, which was held in September, 1914, in Shelby county outside the corporate limits of the city of Memphis, intoxicating liquors were sold openly on the fair grounds, and he was present and took no steps to prevent it, although he had previously said that to permit it would be to prostitute his office.

(2) During his term as sheriff, although, with the exception above stated, he made an honest effort to enforce the liquor laws in the rural districts, he did nothing toward enforcing them in the city of Memphis, except to serve such process as was placed in his hands, in spite of the fact that during at least a part of the time there were a great many open saloons running, and he knew that during a portion of his term the city authorities were doing nothing either to prevent or punish violations of the liquor laws, and during another part of his term they were merely [690] arresting liquor dealers, requiring, in each case, the payment of $50 to the city, and binding no one over to the grand jury, but leaving offenders undisturbed in their places of business, and immune from punishment under the laws of the State.

None of these facts have been challenged by the petition to rehear or the argument in support of it except it is insisted that, though liquor was being sold in many places, there is "no definite and sufficient proof" that any of these places were open saloons, or, if so, that defendant knew of them. But this contention does not deny that he knew that the city authorities were, in effect, shielding numerous offenders from prosecution by exacting tribute to the city and leaving them free to continue their unlawful business. He, therefore, knew that, to the extent of protecting them from punishment in the State courts, the city officials were in league with the offenders. We are, however, entirely satisfied that, at least for a considerable time before this proceeding was commenced, there were many open saloons in Memphis, not a few of them in the business section of the city, and some of them being conducted with such openness that sales over the bar could be observed from the street. The record shows that there were numerous places in Memphis where complete strangers could and did go, and, without question or difficulty, purchase intoxicating drinks, and have them served just as such drinks are ordinarily purchased and served in saloons, and that many of them had all the well-known [691] indicia of open saloons. And the evidence leaves no doubt that these facts were generally known in the community. We have accepted as true defendant's statement that he was not in a saloon during his term and did not actually see a sale of liquor. Indeed we have found, in the record, no reason to doubt his entire truthfulness as a witness. But his testimony, as a whole, admits a knowledge that the city authorities were permitting liquor dealers to continue their business upon the payment of an occasional $50, and contains no denial of the circumstances shown from which he could have had no doubt that these laws were being ignored and extensively violated. And the slightest effort would have given him actual knowledge of the conditions. The saloons were as open to him as to the public. In entering them, he would no more have been a trespasser than any other citizen. The record satisfies us that the persons in charge of these places felt perfectly secure from interference by the sheriff or his deputies, and that their appearance would have caused no suspension of operations and they could easily have seen what the other witnesses saw. The conclusion must be that he did not see open saloons and liquor sales because it was not his policy to see them. That this was, in fact, his attitude is obvious from the testimony that on one occasion he learned that the city authorities had arrested, for liquor selling, the keeper of a place where some of his deputies were accustomed to eat lunch and advised them not to go there any more. [692] Under these circumstances it cannot be unfair to hold him to the duties which rest upon a sheriff who knows that saloons are being run openly in his county. We have accordingly based his removal upon his total and intentional neglect of any effort to suppress saloons or other places where liquor was sold openly.

We have not undertaken to determine what degree of failure to suppress bootlegging or other secret methods of selling liquor would justify the removal of a sheriff. It is sufficient now to say that the law is not unreasonable and does not require impossibilities of the sheriff any more than of any other person. The inquiry always must be whether he has made an honest and reasonably intelligent effort to do his duty. If he has done this, the courts will not remove him, though his efforts may not have been wholly successful. In other words, his right to hold his office depends upon the good faith of his efforts rather than upon the degree of his success. The fact that a few or many violations of the law have occurred in his county will never, without more, justify his removal. His good faith, or lack of it, must be determined by the circumstances of each case. In the present case we are relieved of the necessity of going into these questions, because we are dealing with a defendant who expressly admits facts which show that, so far as the city of Memphis is concerned, he had every reason to believe that the law was being constantly violated and made no effort to do anything.

[693] In concluding that the facts stated above required defendant's removal, we made the following rulings as to the duties of a sheriff:

(1) He is the chief conservator of the peace in his county and expressly required to keep the peace, and to prevent and suppress public offenses and breaches of the peace.

(2) Ordinarily he may rightfully assume that the police officers of incorporated towns and cities will do their duty, and hence will be guilty of no serious neglect of duty if he gives but little attention to police matters in such places. But if he knows, or has reason to believe, that they are neglecting their duty or are in league with offenders, his duties are the same as in the rural districts.

(3) He is not a mere process server, but his duties require initiative on his part in the enforcement of laws against public offenses. It is therefore his duty to exercise the powers conferred upon him, and to use the means provided by law to accomplish the prevention and suppression of public offenses.

(4) He must use a reasonable degree of diligence to inform himself of conditions in his county, and will be derelict if he shuts his eyes to what is generally known in the community, or purposely avoids information, easily acquired, which will make it his duty to act.

(5) If he has notice of any public offense, it is his duty to act in its prevention.

[694] With respect to the means which the law affords for the performance of these duties, we held:

(1) For any public offense committed in his presence the sheriff may, without a warrant, arrest and take before a justice of the peace the offender for punishment.

(2) For a misdemeanor committed, but not in his presence, he has no authority to arrest without a warrant.

(3) To prevent any offense, which is also a breach of the peace, threatened in his presence, he may arrest without a warrant and use such force as may be reasonably necessary to prevent the threat being carried into execution.

(4) If he knows or has reason to suspect that any person is armed for the purpose of committing certain offenses, he may arrest without a warrant and take before a justice of the peace such person, to the end that a bond to keep the peace may be required.

(5) Except as just stated, he is in no case authorized to make an arrest without a warrant, upon suspicion or information received from others that a misdemeanor, whether also a breach of the peace or not, has been committed or is about to be committed.

(6) He has no authority to swear out a warrant merely upon facts of which he has been informed by others. In such cases he may report the matter to the grand jury, with the names of his informant and such other witnesses as may be known to him.

[695] (7) But if he knows of his own knowledge such facts as reasonably make a case, he may himself swear out a warrant and then arrest the offender.

The authorities were cited in our former opinion. And the rulings as stated are not now questioned, except in so far as they impose upon the sheriff the duty of taking the initiative. It is conceded that his powers are correctly set out above. But it is denied that he is under any positive duty to exercise these powers, at least when, though having notice of offenses, he does not actually see an unlawful act. But this involves a total misconception of the nature of the office of sheriff as it has been known to the law from time immemorial.

"The powers and duties of conservator of the peace exercised by the sheriff are not strictly judicial; but he may be said to act as the chief magistrate of his county, wielding the executive power for the preservation of the public peace." South v. Maryland, 18 How. 396, 15 U. S. (L. ed.) 433.

He is, "in his county or bailiwick, the representative of the king or sovereign power of the State to preserve the peace." 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) 662. The chief magistrate clothed, in his county, with the executive power of the State, the representative of the king, or, in America, of the sovereignty of the State, cannot be said, with any show of reason, to be a mere process server who may stand passive and see the laws of the State trampled upon unless some citizen places process in his hands directing him to [696] act. For the punishment of offenses which injure a citizen in his person or property we may sometimes expect the injured person to start the machinery of the law. But for the enforcement of those laws intended for the protection of the public at large, and in which no one citizen has any more direct interest than another, practically the sole reliance must be upon those officers who are made the guardians of the peace of the State, chief among whom is the sheriff.

Answering the suggestion that a sheriff could discharge his duty by standing ready to serve any warrants that might be issued, the Supreme Court of Michigan has said:

"We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that this has been a common excuse of sheriffs and other police officers for not enforcing this and other laws. It is the duty of the sheriff and police officers generally to enforce those laws which the people have enacted for the protection of their lives, persons, property, health, and morals." Scougale v. Sweet, 124 Mich. 323, 82 N. W. 1065.

That case is also authority for the statement that, when information comes to the sheriff that an offense is about to be committed, it is his duty to make an honest, and not a pretended, effort to ascertain the facts and be at the place to prevent the offense. This is all in accord with our ruling. And we are satisfied that we have not charged the defendant with any higher measure of duty than the law imposes on him. When the statute directs him to prevent and suppress [697] public offenses, and says that when he has notice of such offenses, it is his duty to act in prevention of them, it plainly intends that he must use all, or so much as may be necessary, of the means to that end which are at his command.

Applying these rules, we held that defendant was guilty of a distinct neglect of duty in making no effort to prevent the sale of liquor at the Tri-State Fair. The facts as we have stated them are not challenged by the petition to rehear. It cannot be said that this neglect was not knowing and willful, for he himself had previously said it would be a prostitution of his office. His removal could well have been rested upon this alone.

But it was not necessary to base our decision upon a single isolated failure to do his duty, occurring at the beginning of his term. In view of the facts, as we have found them, his admission that he did nothing in the city of Memphis toward enforcing these laws furnishes ample reason for his removal. State v. Howe, 134 Tenn. 89, Ann. Cas. 1917C 1125, 183 S. W. 510, L.R.A.1918D 1090.

When he learned, as he did, that the city was collecting tribute from numerous liquors dealers and leaving them otherwise undisturbed in their places, this was notice to him that the law was being constantly violated, and that no proper effort was being made to suppress the offenses or punish the offenders. The slightest desire to perform the duty which we have held was his would have suggested a visit to these places. His offense was in keeping away [698] from places where he had every reason to believe that the laws were being violated. It was the offense of willful neglect of duty rather than positive wrongdoing. For an officer to purposely avoid being where he has reason to believe that an offense will be committed is as serious and willful a neglect of duty as a failure to arrest for an offense committed in his presence. The decision could well be rested upon his failure, with the notice he had to locate these saloons or at least some of them. We do not mean that it was his duty to break open any doors, or to make a forcible entrance into any suspected residence or place of business for the purpose of searching. Dealing with the case before us, we merely hold that he had the same right that the general public had to enter these places and observe what was open to observation, and that it was then his duty to take such action as would be justified by what he saw. If he had taken this course, the result cannot be doubted. At least until some arrests had been made, we are satisfied that all he or his deputies had to do was to walk into these places, observe sales, and make arrests. He neglected to make the attempt. Of course, when it became known that the sheriff's office proposed to do its duty, precautions would be taken to avoid making sales in the presence of the officers. If then the officers should see no sales made, but should find a federal license displayed, and observe other facts reasonably showing that sales had been made, they could swear out warrants. If, however, [699] they should not discover facts sufficient to make a prima facie case, but found circumstances leading them to believe that the law had been violated, they could report the matter to the grand jury, with the names of such witnesses as they could furnish. And it would be their duty to do such of these things as might, under the circumstances, be necessary. In the present case the defendant neglected to take the first step by going or sending his deputies to the places where he had reason to believe liquor was being sold. But this neglect, of course, cannot excuse him for not doing the things which it would have been his duty to do if he had taken the first step. He must therefore stand convicted of a neglect of all the duties which would have been his if he had gone to these saloons. What has been said thus far applies whether the offense in question is or not also a breach of the peace. We have but stated the long-recognized duties of a sheriff with respect to all public offenses. But in the case of an open saloon, if no sale is made in the presence of an officer, if no federal license is displayed, and he acquires no such knowledge as will justify him in swearing out a warrant for past sales, but he finds a stock of liquors, complete bar equipment, and such a state of preparedness as to make it certain that sales will be made as soon as his back is turned, must he leave the person in charge undisturbed, and let the enforcement of the law await the slow process of an investigation by the grand jury? We cannot think so. In the presence of such an unequivocal [700] threat, must the chief law officer of the county, charged with the duty of preventing such offenses, wait until the offense has actually been committed? We cannot agree that the law is so impotent. The sheriff is expressly authorized by our statute to take preventive measures when a breach of the peace is threatened in his presence, and, to that end, to make an arrest without a warrant. After a review of the authorities, and a consideration of the manifest purpose of the legislature, throughout the history of the State, in the passage of liquor laws, we held that the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors is a breach of the peace which it is the duty of the sheriff to prevent when threatened in his presence, and that a saloon, stocked with liquors, fully equipped and ready for business, is such a threat. It is against this holding that the petition to rehear is chiefly directed.

If a violation of the law against the sale of liquor is a breach of the peace, it is conceded that an officer may, without a warrant, arrest for a violation of that law threatened in his presence. And it will scarcely be doubted that the maintenance of a saloon, ready for business, constitutes such a threat. It has been said that any act which reasonably threatens such a violation justifies an arrest as for a threat. Jones v. State, 100 Ala. 90, 14 So. 772. The inquiry then is narrowed to the question as to what constitutes a breach of the peace within the meaning of our statute.

It must be remembered that the term "breach of the peace" is not used to describe any specific crime [701] or offense. It is generic and embraces many acts which are indictable as separate offenses. Speaking generally, the definition adopted in Galvin v. State, 6 Cold. (Tenn.) 294, according to which it includes all unlawful acts and acts of public indecorum which disturb, or tend to disturb, public peace or good order, is that which is laid down in all text-books and accepted by practically all courts. It has been succinctly described as "a criminal act of the sort which disturbs the public repose." 1 Bishop's Criminal Law, section 536. A great multitude of cases, from almost every State in the Union, in which substantially this definition has been adopted, could be cited. But this is unnecessary, since, we believe, there is no dissent from the general definition. The only difficulty is in applying it to particular facts. It seems to be clear, then, that any act which is unlawful, and which disturbs or tends to disturb peace and good order, is within the accepted definition of a breach of the peace. And the word "peace" in this connection has also come to have a fixed meaning. It means, "the tranquility enjoyed by the citizens of a municipality or community where good order reigns among its members," or, "that invisible sense of security which every man feels so necessary to his comfort, and for which all governments are instituted." Davis v. Burgess, 54 Mich. 517, 20 N. W. 540, 52 Am. Rep. 828; State v. Coffin, 64 Vt. 27, 23 Atl. 632.

The difficulty in applying this general definition to particular facts will, we think, largely disappear if [702] we will bear in mind the distinction between those breaches of the peace which are offenses against individuals, and those which are offenses only against the public at large or the State, and remember that what is said of the one class is not necessarily true of the other. Thus it has been said:

"The offense may consist of acts of public turbulence or indecorum, in violation of the common peace and quiet, or of an invasion of the security and protection which the law affords every citizen, or of acts such as tend to excite violent resentment. Actual personal violence is not an element of the offense, but when the incitement of terror or fear of personal violence is a necessary element, the conduct or language of the wrongdoer must be of a character to induce such condition in a person of ordinary firmness." 5 Cyc. p. 1024.

By this we understand that there are some breaches of the peace in which the "incitement of terror or fear of personal violence is a necessary element," and, as to these, the act complained of must be such as to reasonably produce terror or fear. They consist of offenses which invade the security and protection which the law affords the individual citizen, and as to which it is sometimes, and probably generally, held that there must be some kind of violence, either actual or threatened. But the language quoted clearly implies that there is a class of breaches of the peace into which the element of incitement to terror or actual fear does not enter, but which are offenses merely [703] because they are incompatible with the tranquility and good order which governments are organized to maintain.

The distinction is well illustrated in Ware v. Branch Circuit Judge, 75 Mich. 493, 42 N. W. 998, where it was said:

"It is a significant fact that very few, and it may perhaps be said that none, of the recognized books of authority on the criminal law contain any such title as 'Breach of the Peace,' with a definition of it. The books almost universally divide crimes into classes; and breaches of the peace, so far as they are found defined at all, are found either as offenses against the lives and persons of individuals, or as public disturbances, except where for certain reasons they are made felonies."

And in the same case the court said:

"The only cases of breach of the peace, not involving upon disturbance in public places, and to the actual annoyance of the public at large, or persons employed, and actually engaged in public functions, require personal violence, either actually inflicted or immediately threatened."

Thus those acts which are breaches of the peace because they are disturbances in public places, or because they are an annoyance to the public at large or persons engaged in public functions, are carefully excluded from the rule requiring violence, actual or threatened, as an element of the offense. Those offenses described as an annoyance to the public at [704] large include those which are "a gross violation of decency and good order," People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 5 Am. Dec. 335; "acts which tend to corrupt the morals and debase the moral sense of the community," Lindenmuller v. People, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 548; and those which furnish an "evil example of a defiance of the law," State v. O'Rourke, 35 Neb. 614, 53 N. W. 591, 17 L.R.A. 830.

In Ware v. Branch, supra, the offense sought to be punished as a breach of the peace consisted of obscene language used by one in the home of another. There was no element of threat or fear. Speaking of the offense, the court said:

"As described, the performance was the vaporing of a filthy minded person whose tongue was loosed by drinking, and who was certainly an unsavory and undesirable visitor, but nothing legally worse."

There was no claim that the conduct complained of was a public disturbance, for it was said:

"The only ground on which relator has endeavored to base a claim of breach of the peace is that this language was calculated to provoke violence."

The court was therefore dealing with an alleged breach of the peace of the class which invades the rights of individuals. Hence what was said as to the necessity for violence must be referred to that class, and has no application to the class consisting merely of offenses against the public or the State. The courts have not always kept this distinction in mind, and to this fact is due whatever confusion may be found in the authorities.

[706] In England the sheriff was the keeper of the King's peace. In America he is the keeper of the peace of the sovereign people or the State. We think it cannot be said that this peace of the sovereign is not breached or disturbed by any infraction of the laws, at least those enacted for the purpose of preserving good order. It is in this broad sense, we think, that the term is used in the statute authorizing arrests for threatened breaches of the peace. We have no statute which undertakes to define breaches of the peace, and no statute attempting to enumerate all offenses which are breaches of the peace. But our Constitution (article 6, section 12) provides that all indictments shall conclude, "against the peace and dignity of the State." It is difficult to construe this otherwise than as a constitutional declaration that every indictable offense shall be regarded as against the peace of the State; that is, a breach of the peace. And when we remember that every unlawful act which tends to disturb good order is a breach of the peace, what can be more logical than to say that every violation of a criminal law is a breach of the peace of the State? How, in a country where law is supreme, can an act be at once orderly and criminal? If this be the meaning of the Constitution, then an officer is authorized to arrest for any indictable offense threatened in his presence. And this is the construction placed upon the statute of Alabama, from which ours was copied, by the courts of that [706] State. We quote from Jones v. State, 100 Ala. 90, 14 So. 773:

"It is alike the law and common knowledge that such officers may arrest without warrant, either to preserve peace and good order or to prevent a threatened violation of the law. . . . The officer may arrest upon seeing such acts as show a reasonable ground for making the arrest; and an act done in his presence which is violative of a general law, or of a municipal ordinance, or which reasonably threatens such violation, authorizes arrest without warrant."

We are aware, however, that there are authorities which recognize some violations of law as not involving a breach of the peace, and it is not necessary for us now to decide whether, under our Constitution and statutes, this distinction exists. Certainly it cannot be denied that a law enacted to preserve peace and good order is a legislative declaration that the prohibited act at least tends to disturb good order. And the infraction of such a law must be a breach of the peace.

That our liquor laws have been enacted for the preservation of peace and good order will scarcely admit of a doubt. From the earliest history of the State, the legislature has recognized the unrestricted retailing of intoxicating liquors as wholly inconsistent with peace and good order, and has placed upon it restrictions and regulations not deemed necessary in the case of any other business. As early as 1838, this court, speaking through Judge Turley, reviewed [707] the legislation on the subject from 1779 up to that date, and showed that the retailing of intoxicating liquors had always been regarded as dangerous to public peace and productive of disorder; that there had never been a time in Tennessee when persons were permitted to engage in it except under regulations intended to minimize the evils and disturbances known to flow from it; that, with ever increasing anxiety, the legislature was constantly imposing new regulations upon the traffic; that the effort at first was to confine "this dangerous privilege" to persons of probity and trust by permitting none to exercise it except persons who had obtained a license to keep an ordinary; that this proving insufficient "to control within proper limits the evils resulting from retailing spirituous liquors," it was confined to those who could satisfy the county court that they were of sufficient probity and not addicted to any gross immorality; that this failed to accomplish the desired purpose, and the legislature, "being determined to find a remedy for the evil," enacted that the privilege should be confined to those who could, by creditable witnesses, show that they were of good moral character and were provided with bedding, stables, and house room for the accommodation of lodgers and travelers, and that their design was in good faith to keep a house of public entertainment, and that the retailing of liquors was not the principal object in asking a license; that the taxing of the privilege was next tried; that almost immediately the placing of [708] further restrictions upon the business was begun by requiring an oath not to sell to slaves and not to permit gaming on the premises. Dyer v. State, Meigs (Tenn.) 250.

A mere recital of these acts leaves no doubt that the legislature was all the time struggling to guard against and minimize the breaches of the peace which it recognized as inevitably resulting from, at least, the unrestricted sale of intoxicating liquors. This view is confirmed by subsequent acts, too numerous to mention, by which sales were prohibited at places and on occasions when and where breaches of the peace would be most annoying and dangerous to the public, and peace and order most important.

It may be said that the chief purpose of the original four-mile law was the protection of the morals and habits of the youth of the State while attending colleges and universities. As the prohibition was only against sales within four miles of incorporated institutions of learning, this may be true, though, we think, there was also present in the legislative mind a purpose to protect these institutions from the disorders and disturbances of the peace which had been found to attend the sales of liquor in their vicinity. But whatever may be said of the purpose of the original act, no doubt can be entertained of the legislative purpose in passing the acts by which its operation was extended. It is a part of the history of the State that the object in the first extension, was to rid the people of crossroads groceries, with their attendant [709] turbulence and disorder, which had become a menace to the peace of almost every rural community, and that the idea of the four-mile law was seized upon to accomplish that result. So productive of disorder did the legislature evidently regard the business of selling liquor that it was thus confined to where the public could have the police protection afforded by incorporated towns and cities. These laws, as well as numerous ordinances passed by towns and cities, were upheld by this court as enacted for the preservation of peace and good order. And when, after years of trial, the legislature extended the law so as to make it apply to towns and cities, the conclusion would seem to be that it decided that, in the presence of liquor selling, even such police protection was not sufficient to preserve the peace as it should be preserved.

We are not unmindful that considerations of morals and health also enter into the passage of such measures. But the fact that other considerations have combined with a purpose to preserve the public peace and order do not denude them of their character as peace measures.

But, if any express legislative declaration was necessary to give these laws the character we have ascribed to them, we have such a declaration in a statute to which we have not yet referred. After prohibiting the retailing of liquor without a license, the legislature enacted, in effect, that a license should be issued to no person until he should have given a bond to keep the peace in his place of business. We [710] refer to Shannon's Code, section 993, subs. 2, by which the applicant for a license is required to give a bond, one of the conditions of which is that he will "keep a peaceable and orderly house." This act has never been repealed, and the present prohibition against selling liquors is confined to places within four miles of a schoolhouse. If, therefore, a place can be found not so located, the business may still be lawfully conducted, but no one is permitted to engage in it without giving the required bond. We thus have the legislature's characterization of the privilege of selling intoxicating liquors as a beverage as one attended with so much danger to the peace of the community that those who would exercise it must first protect the public by giving a bond to keep the peace.

There can, we think, be no doubt that an act which the legislature has, since the earliest days of the State, permitted to be done only under such restrictions as it was thought would preserve the peace, as a condition to the doing of which it has required a bond to keep the peace, and which it has finally prohibited altogether, is necessarily a breach of the peace. We can conceive of no clearer case of a breach of the peace than an act which the legislature has first permitted to be done only under a peace bond and then has prohibited.

Again, the legislature has by the act of 1913 declared the engaging in the sale of intoxicating liquors to be a public nuisance, and we cannot escape the conclusion that it belongs to that class of nuisances [711] which this court has always treated as tending to disturb the peace and good order of the community. Long ago it was held that such public nuisances as bawdyhouses "endangers the public peace and good order, by drawing together profligate and disorderly persons" (Childress v. Nashville, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 358), and that "generally any practices tending to disturb the peace and quiet of communities, or corrupt the morals of the people, are indictable as public offenses by the common law." State v. Graham, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 134. And the language last quoted was cited in the very recent case of Graham v. State, 134 Tenn. 285, 183 S. W. 983, in support of the holding that the conducting of moving picture shows on Sunday was a public nuisance and an indictable offense. In the latter case, replying to the contention that it was not shown that the public had been disturbed, the court, through Mr. Justice Buchanan, said:

"The proof in the present case makes it clear that the picture-show business of the plaintiff in error was conducted by him on successive Sundays, to the observance of passers-by in the matter of seeing the large crowds going in and out of the show, and the show was located on Market street, a leading thoroughfare of the city of Chattanooga."

Clearly, open saloons, at least when conducted in violation of law, in the same way as bawdyhouses, "endanger the public peace and good order by drawing together profligate and disorderly persons." And certainly, if the peace and quiet of the community [712] is disturbed by seeing crowds going in and out of picture shows on Sunday, less cannot be said of lawless saloons along public streets. On all days except Sunday, picture shows are lawful and the passing in and out of them of orderly crowds has no tendency to disturb peace and tranquility. A different rule applies on Sunday, because the law secures to the public a higher degree of peace and quiet on that day than on other days. The principle is that that is a disturbance of the peace which interferes with the degree of peace and quiet which the law contemplates shall prevail at a particular time and place; hence the well-recognized rule that what may not be a breach of the peace at one time and place may very well be such a breach at another time and place. Delk v. Com. 166 Ky. 39, Ann. Cas. 1917C 884, 178 S. W. 1129, L.R.A.1916B 1117. The constant violation of the Sunday laws, by acts entirely lawful and orderly on other days, disturbs the peace and tranquility of the community because it is a flaunting in the face of the public of a disregard for the laws of the land and the rules of organized government. The open violations of laws intended to preserve peace and good order necessarily breed in the public mind a feeling of insecurity, and thus disturb the peace and tranquility of the community. When we apply these principles to an open saloon, at a place where it is unlawful to sell liquor at any time, the conclusion is obvious. Such a place is a constant disturber of peace and good order. Nor are we without high authority [713] from other States for this conclusion. The Supreme Court of Georgia has said:

"A place where intoxicating liquors are sold in violation of law is a menace to the peace, good order, and happiness of any community, and legislation declaring such a place to be a public nuisance is wise and salutary." Legg v. Anderson, 116 Ga. 401, 42 S. E. 720. See also State v. Tabler, 34 Ind. App. 393, 72 N. E. 1039, 107 Am. St. Rep. 256.

It is said, however, that the act declaring a saloon a nuisance provided the method by which such nuisances should be abated, and that the sheriff is not authorized to institute proceedings for that purpose. But the remedy provided is merely cumulative and does not abrogate any other remedy. It is rather to be used when, through the neglect of officials or for other reasons, the law is not being enforced in the ordinary way. The sheriff's duties are therefore the same that they were before the passage of that act. And the declaration of the act that the conducting of a saloon is a nuisance was nothing more than a restatement of what was already the law. Ever since the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage has been unlawful, the open saloon has been a public nuisance of that class which disturbs the public peace.

Another line of authorities leads to the same conclusion. There can, we think, be no disagreement with the statement that the keeping of a disorderly house is a breach of the peace. The accepted definition of a disorderly house is, "Any place where illegal [714] practices are habitually carried on is a disorderly house." 2 Words and Phrases (Second Series) 76, citing numerous cases. These authorities establish the rule that a place in which liquors are sold in violation of either prohibitory or regulatory statutes is a disorderly house. And, as we have seen, when saloons were permitted under the law, our own legislature regarded them as so likely to be disorderly houses that every applicant for license was required to give bond to keep a peaceable and orderly house. We entertain no doubt, therefore, that in Tennessee a saloon open, equipped, and ready for business is a threat to breach the peace if it is not in fact, itself a breach of the peace.

Whatever may be thought of a single sale of liquor as a breach of the peace, there can be no doubt that the running of an open saloon in defiance of a law is a nuisance of the class that disturbs public order, and that such a place is a disorderly house. A bawdy-house, as we have seen, is a menace to peace and good order, and therefore a breach of the peace. And counsel for defendant themselves put the unlawful sales of liquor in the same class by coupling them with "the kindred and concomitant offenses of gambling and keeping bawdyhouses."

The argument is now made, however, that violence, actual or threatened, is a necessary ingredient of a breach of the peace, and several authorities are pressed upon our attention. If it is meant by this that the act complained of must either itself be violent, [715] or of such a nature as that its tendency is to provoke or incite or lead others to violence or turbulence of some kind, the contention is correct as to those breaches of the peace which invade the security and protection of individuals. But the insistence seems to be that no act can be a breach of the peace which has not in itself some element of violence. And to this we cannot agree. Such a holding would exclude the possibility of a breach of the peace by the use of words, no matter how certain it is that such words will provoke violence, and many other acts universally recognized as breaches of the peace. Replying to just such a contention, it has been said:

"Actual personal violence is not an essential element in the offense. If it were, communities might be kept in a constant state of turmoil, fear, and anticipated danger from the wicked language and conduct of a guilty party, not only destructive of the peace of the citizens, but of public morals, without the commission of the offense. The good sense and morality of the law forbid such a construction." Davis v. Burgess, 54 Mich. 517, 20 N. W. 542, 52 Am. Rep. 828.

Counsel quote from 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) 902, "Actual or threatened violence is an essential element of a breach of the peace." But this must be read in connection with the statement on the next page, "at any rate, various acts having a tendency to produce a breach of the peace are themselves breaches of the peace." And in a note to the portion of the text quoted by counsel it is said: "Actual personal violence, [716] is not an essential element in the offense of a breach of the peace;" and Davis v. Burgess, 54 Mich. 517, 20 N. W. 542, 52 Am. Rep. 828, is cited. Taken together, these quotations mean no more than that, while the author thinks violence an essential element of the offense, the necessary violence is present either when the act done is itself violent, or when, though not violent, it is of such a nature as to tend to result in or provoke violent acts, and thus threatens violence. This is manifest when we examine the two cases cited in support of the text quoted by counsel. Both cases expressly decide that the act itself need not be violent, but, if it is likely to result in violence, it is a disturbance of the peace. Thus in one of them (State v. Warner, 34 Conn. 276) the court said:

"It cannot be denied, and is not denied on the part of the accused, that his language was sufficiently scurrilous, abusive, and indecent, and calculated to stir up and provoke contention and strife, and so far to disturb the peace."

The other case is Ware v. Branch Circuit Judge, 75 Mich. 496, 42 N. W. 1000, which was a prosecution for a breach of the peace, and it was said:

"It is not necessary that the peace be actually broken to lay the foundation to such a proceeding. If what is done is unjustifiable and unlawful, tending with sufficient directness to break the peace, no more is required."

Counsel also refer to 8 Ruling Case Law, p. 285, where it is said:

[717] "Breaches of the peace generally manifest themselves by some outward, visible, audible, or violent demonstration, not from quiet, orderly, and peaceable acts secretly done, though such acts may be male prohibita. Hence the carrying of arms in a quiet, peaceable, and orderly manner, concealed on or about the person, is not a breach of the peace. Neither does such an act, of itself, tend to a breach of the peace."

The language quoted is taken from Roberson v. State, 43 Fla. 156, 29 So. 535, 52 L.R.A. 751, and reference is made to Judy v. Lashley, 50 W. Va. 628, 41 S. E. 197, 57 L.R.A. 413. And these two cases do so hold. There is, of course, force in the argument that that cannot be a breach of the peace which is done secretly and is known to no one except the offender. As long as he merely conceals weapons about his person, no one can be actually disturbed by his act. This is true, not because the act itself lacks violence, but because it is secret, and because one's peace cannot be disturbed by that of which he has no knowledge. But the case is very different when an unlawful act is done openly, and is of such a nature as, in the natural course of events, it is calculated to lead to disturbances of peace and good order. So whether we would hold the carrying of concealed weapons a breach of the peace or not, these cases are clearly not in point. Moreover, the statement quoted immediately follows a statement of the law applicable to breaches of the peace in almost [718] the exact language we have quoted from Davis v. Burgess. Nor is our own case of Hurd v. State, 119 Tenn. 584, 108 S. W. 1064, in point. In that case there was no effort to justify the attempted arrest upon the ground that Hurd was carrying a pistol. The attempt was to arrest for an assault committed, but not in the presence of the officer.

But counsel say that in Massachusetts and Kentucky it has been directly decided that the unlawful sale of liquor is not a breach of the peace. McLennon v. Richardson, 15 Gray (Mass.) 74, 77 Am. Dec. 353, it is said, is authority for this contention. We do not think so. The question in that case was whether an officer had the right to break open the doors of a shop in which, it was alleged, the proprietor sold intoxicating liquors contrary to law, and was at the time engaged in selling and drinking intoxicating liquors and in gaming, and to arrest, without a warrant, those found present. The court held that he did not, but called the attention to the fact that it was not alleged that, at the time, there was any noise or disorderly drinking going on in the shop. It was thus made plain that the officer acted merely upon suspicion or information received from others. There was therefore no offense either committed or threatened in his presence. And an officer has no more right to arrest on suspicion or information, without a warrant, for a breach of the peace than for any other offense. Hence there was no occasion to discuss, and the court did not discuss the question as to what constitutes a breach of the peace.

[719] Besides, it must be remembered that we have not held that an officer may break open doors and force an entrance into any place upon suspecting or being informed that a breach of the peace will then be committed or threatened in his presence.

The Kentucky case referred to is Cornett v. Com. (Ky.) 78 S. W. 858. But that case decides nothing except that the unlawful sale of liquor is not a breach of the peace to prevent which one could, under the law of Kentucky, be required to give bond to keep the peace. And this is exactly what we held under the Tennessee statutes. By the statute of Kentucky (Cr. Code Prac. sections 382, 391), such a bond can be required only to prevent an offense against the person or property of another, or a felony or an act of such violent character as to endanger human life. In holding invalid a bond which undertook to bind the defendant not to violate the liquor laws, the court said:

"Under these provisions, it has been held that a conviction of the defendant of an offense not amounting to a felony, and not involving a breach of the peace, is not a breach of the bond."

But this must be read in view of the case before the court. So read, it only means that the unlawful sale of liquor was not an offense against the person or property of another, or a felony, or an act of such violent character as to endanger human life, and hence did not belong to that class of breaches of the peace to prevent which the statute authorized a bond [720] to be taken. We are the more ready to put this construction upon the language quoted because that court, in later cases, is clearly committed to the rule that violence is not an essential element of a breach of the peace. The case of Delk v. Com. 166 Ky. 39, 178 S. W. 1129, L.R.A. 1916B 1117, holds that indecent and obscene language used in the pulpit by a preacher is a breach of the peace, and, after a most comprehensive review of the authorities, concludes that actual violence is not an essential element of the offense, and that "not only all violations of the public peace or order, but acts tending to the disturbance thereof," are breaches of the peace. To the same effect are 5 Cyc. p. 1024, Bishop's New Criminal Law, vol. 1, section 539, and Roberson's Criminal Law, vol. 2, section 581, and 8 Ruling Case Law, section 305.

This brings us to the case of Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549, 37 N. W. 21, the only case to which our attention has been called in which there is, in our opinion, a direct holding that the unlawful sale of liquor is not a breach of the peace. And in that case the court was divided on the question. The constitutionality of a statute of Michigan regulating the liquor traffic was involved (Laws 1887, No. 313). All of the judges agreed that some of its provisions were invalid. They disagreed, however, as to others. One of the sections (section 17) about which they differed was that providing that all places, excepting drug stores, where liquors were sold, should be closed on [721] certain days and during certain hours on all other days; that the officers should close all places found open at such times; that persons violating these provisions should be deemed guilty of a breach of the peace and arrested without process. The majority opinion held the provisions allowing the officers to close the places and make arrests without process invalid, saying:

"Under our system we have repeatedly decided, in accordance with constitutional principles as construed everywhere, that no arrest can be made without warrant except in cases of felony, or in breaches of the peace committed in the presence of the arresting officer. This exception, in cases of breaches of the peace, has only been allowed by reason of the immediate danger to the safety of the community against crimes of violence, and it was confined, even in such cases, to instances where the violence was committed in the presence of the officer. There are not many such cases. The common and statute law provide for very few specified breaches of the peace, and there are none that are not specified. An indictment charging a person as a peace breaker, and not with any specified crime, would be good for nothing. Assaults and riotous conduct make up the largest part of the list. But there can be no breach of the peace within the meaning of the law that does not embrace some sort of violent as well as dangerous conduct. The manifest purpose of this statute is to bring certain [722] things that are not breaches of the peace within that denomination to avoid the necessity of a warrant. But, as already suggested, the Constitution cannot be so evaded. The cases covered by the statute present some peculiar features. No doubt keeping open places of sale late in the evening may lead to breaches of the peace, and, when they actually occur in an officer's presence, arrest may be made for that."

In the face of the authorities we have cited, we cannot assent to the proposition that actual violence is necessary to constitute a breach of the peace. And this is the premise upon which the opinion is grounded, and without which both its reasoning and its conclusion are unsound. Nor can we agree that, if there is now a known list of breaches of the peace provided by "the common and statute law," that list cannot be added to by further legislative acts. If there are now offenses, which by "statute law" are breaches of the peace, and for which arrests may be made without a warrant, we perceive no reason why future statute law may not put other offenses in the same category. Moreover, the opinion quoted wholly ignores what, as we have seen, practically all the authorities hold, that an unlawful act which tends to produce or bring about a breach of the peace or to disturb good order is itself a breach of the peace. Otherwise the statement that "no doubt the keeping open places of sale late in the evening may lead to breaches of the peace," would have led to the conclusion that such unlawful keeping open was a breach [723] of the peace even without the aid of a statute so declaring.

We are clearly of the opinion that much the better reasoning and the sounder conclusion are to be found in the opinion of Chief Justice Sherwood in the same case. He held the provisions in question valid, but at the same time, as we think, fully recognized every constitutional right that belongs to the citizen. In addition to the provisions mentioned, there were also provisions authorizing officers to close such places if certain requirements as to bond, taxes, and other things had not been complied with. Speaking of these, the Chief Justice said:

"Neither do I think it competent, under our Constitution, for the legislature to authorize a sheriff, marshal, constable, or police officer to close up a man's business at a time and place where and when he is allowed, under the law, to carry on such business upon complying with certain precedent conditions, when they have been performed, because such officer thinks he has good reason to believe that the dealer has been or is carrying on his business unlawfully, or has incurred a penalty or forfeiture in the manner he is carrying it on, as is permitted under section 7 of this act. A lawful business can only be interfered with, or a person's property taken from him or destroyed, after the owner has been served with proper process, and he has had his day in court, and been allowed the benefit and advantages of due process of law, and judgment of condemnation has passed against [724] him. It is then, and not till then, the ministerial officer can act, and such action must always be confined to the execution of the judgment and mandate of the court. The protection the law gives to the business and property of the citizen is not left to the discretion of a sheriff, a marshal, or a policeman, but to the law of the land, with courts, and officers under their direction to execute it. Of this protection to private property no owner can be lawfully deprived for a single moment."

But after quoting section 17, which contained the provisions first referred to above, he said:

"This section prohibits the business being done at the time and in the places named, or the places being kept open, and a violation of the law in these respects is declared to be a breach of the peace, and the offense is punished accordingly. . . . The offense, too, is one that only needs to be seen to be detected. . . . If . . . the officer is not permitted to close the doors of places of this sort, where and when it is forbidden to open them, or to carry on the business, and the offense is a breach of the peace, under such circumstances it is very clear that the community and society would be deprived of the most beneficial results intended by the legislation. To close the doors of saloons opened during the hours specified in this section is not, as is contended, destroying a man's lawful business, but to prevent him from committing a breach of the peace by doing an unlawful act, one forbidden and made criminal by law. I think the [725] legislature may well authorize the officer to close the door of the saloon under such circumstances. I think this power is included in the power to prohibit, which has long since been adjudicated in this State to exist. I see nothing in this section unconstitutional or objectionable, nor anything more authorized than a reasonable exercise of the police power of the State will permit.

. . . There is no doubt that, under the law as established by this court, it is entirely competent for an officer to make arrests without warrant of a person who is committing a breach of the peace in his presence, or is about to commit the same. Such was the rule at common law, and in my judgment it is good common sense. . . . It is the common knowledge of mankind that frequent quarrels, violence, and crime are induced by the excessive use of intoxicating liquor in places where it is kept and sold. And it is impossible to say that, when such places are kept open in the nighttime until after peaceful citizens have retired to rest, it is not a breach of the peace, in fact, and is no less such when made so by law; and when the offense is observed by those charged with the duty of maintaining the peace and enforcing the law, and who may serve process, I have no doubt of their power to make the arrest of the offender without process, and I cannot therefore hold the seventeenth section of the act objectionable in that regard."

We think the clear distinction thus drawn between the protection which the law gives to one and his [726] property while engaged in a lawful business and the power which officers of the law may exercise toward him and his property to prevent him from using that property to breach the peace by committing an unlawful act is entirely sound. We would not detract, by one word, from the security which the Constitution guaranties to every man in his person and property. But when a man embarks himself and his property in the conduct of a business which it is unlawful to conduct, both become subject to such force as may be necessary to prevent his carrying out his unlawful purpose. The Constitution gives him no right to violate and defy the law, and when he has been prevented from doing that which is unlawful he has been denied no constitutional right. The business of selling intoxicating liquors as a beverage has been outlawed in Tennessee. He who engages in it makes himself subject to the penalties of the law just as any other lawbreaker. He cannot use his property in such business and expect it to be protected by the law with the same sacredness that property held and used for lawful purposes is protected. The majority opinion in the case referred to is the only case we have seen which we regard as deciding that the unlawful sale of liquor is not a breach of the peace. But believing that it is based on the fundamental error that actual violence is necessary to such an offense, and that it is therefore out of line with the overwhelming weight of authority, we find ourselves unable to follow it or adopt its conclusions. Moreover, [727] we do not think this majority opinion can be reconciled with the later ruling of the same court in Ware v. Branch, which we have already quoted. And in the still later case of Scougale v. Sweet, 124 Mich. 311, 82 N. W. 1061, the question was whether the playing of baseball on Sunday, which, by a statute similar to our Sunday statute, was made unlawful under a small penalty, but was not expressly declared to be a breach of the peace, could be held to be a breach of the peace. After a careful examination of the authorities, the court accepted the definition adopted by this court in Galvin v. State, 6 Cold. (Tenn.) 294, supra, and said:

"Where the statute prohibited the arrest of any person on Sunday, except in cases of treason, felony, and breaches of the peace, a ball game upon Sunday was held to be a breach of the peace. In re Carroll, 9 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 261, 12 Cinc. L. Bul. 9. Under our statute, and under the authorities referred to, this game of baseball was a breach of the peace."

Surely it cannot be said that a saloon, at a place where the law prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors, is less unjustifiable or less unlawful than a game of ball on Sunday, and undeniably it tends with no less directness to break the peace. It is true that in Yerkes v. Smith, 157 Mich. 557, 122 N. W. 223, the majority opinion in Robison v. Miner was quoted with approval. But Scougale v. Sweet was also approved. The holding was that a game of baseball on Sunday is not necessarily a breach of the peace, though it may be and is when played in a public [728] place and attended by a crowd assembled unlawfully and tumultuously so as to create disorder. This conclusion was reached because the statute did not make the playing of such a game an indictable misdemeanor, but only made it unlawful and subjected the offender to a penalty. For this reason it was said that, to authorize an officer to make an arrest, there must be some overt act of violence or disorder. This is far from a holding that an act which the legislature, for the purpose of preserving peace and good order, declares to be a misdemeanor, is not a breach of the peace.

True our prohibitory statutes do not, in terms, declare the unlawful sales of liquor to be breaches of the peace. But, ever since it was first found necessary to regulate the liquor business, this court has consistently held the statutes and ordinances providing such regulations to be peace measures; that is, measures adopted for the purpose of preserving peace and good order. At the same time it was declared, at least 50 years ago, in accord with practically all the authorities, that any unlawful act which disturbs or tends to disturb peace and good order is a breach of the peace. Certainly no strained or unreasonable construction is required to say that the violation of the law which the legislature found it necessary to enact in order to preserve peace and good order disturbs or tends to disturb peace and good order. And when, after this court had held these regulations to be for the preservation of peace and order, the legislature [729] deemed it necessary to entirely prohibit, by law, the business which it had previously permitted only under a bond to keep the peace, it cannot be doubted that the purpose of the latter law was the same, and that offenses under it must be placed in the same category.

In re Kellam, 55 Kan. 700, 41 Pac. 960, is pressed upon our attention. But that case is not in conflict with anything we have decided. It merely holds invalid an act which undertook to authorize officers to make an arrest, without a warrant, not only upon seeing an offense committed, but also "upon reasonable suspicion that an offense has been committed." We have not, however, held that an arrest, without a warrant, can ever be rightfully made on suspicion or on information received from others. On the contrary, we have held exactly the opposite, saying distinctly that, to authorize an arrest for a misdemeanor not committed in the presence of an officer, a warrant is always necessary. In fact, we have not held that it was the duty of the defendant to do anything on suspicion or information except to go to the places which he suspected or had reason to believe were being run as saloons, and to observe what any customer could observe, and then to take only such action as would be justified by what he saw.

Counsel argue that it cannot be said that the unlawful sale of liquor is a breach of the peace because, they say, a proper construction of the statutes excludes such a conclusion. The insistence is that because [730] the legislature has limited the right of the sheriff to arrest and require security to keep the peace to cases in which the accused is armed for the purpose of committing certain offenses, and has provided for such security in no other cases except upon the complaint, before a magistrate, of one whose person or property is threatened, an intention has been expressed that nothing else shall be considered breaches of the peace. We do not agree to this. Rather do we think the legislature, recognizing the great number and variety of acts which may constitute that offense, did not deem it necessary to the public peace that, in all cases, security should be required. Those offenses which were deemed to be most seriously menacing in their nature were selected, and as to them the sheriff was required to take steps to place the offenders under bond. In addition, a method was provided by which one whose person or property was threatened could himself take steps to that end. All other breaches of the peace were deemed sufficiently guarded against by requiring the sheriff to prevent and suppress them, and authorizing him to make arrests, without warrants, when they are threatened in his presence. Moreover, when the business of selling liquor was lawful, it was, as we have seen, only lawful after a bond had been given to keep the peace. Hence, even if counsel were right in the contention that in Tennessee the only breaches of the peace are those things as to which the legislature has protected the public by providing means of requiring a bond [731] to keep the peace, the conducting of a saloon would come clearly within the rule. It is, in fact, conspicuously within the rule; for it furnishes, we believe, the only example of requiring a peace bond without some sort of judicial proceeding.

Counsel complain that our opinion leaves them in doubt as to what the sheriff should do after arresting a man for a threatened sale of liquor. But if it is borne in mind that such arrests are preventive rather than punitive measures, we think there can be no difficulty on that score. Circumstances can be fancied or imagined under which the performance of any of the duties devolving on the sheriff may become embarrassing and irksome. But practically there is no serious trouble. We have held that the duty of the officer to make these preventive arrests arises only when he finds one under such circumstances as amount to a threat to sell liquor unlawfully. We have not and cannot undertake to set out all the circumstances which will amount to such a threat. We have, however, used a saloon equipped, open, and ready for business as an example, and held that it was the duty of the officer to arrest the person in charge for the purpose of preventing the threatened sales of liquor. We do not mean to say that there are not other circumstances which would justify such arrests. We selected open saloons for an illustration because the record showed that they existed and ought to have been dealt with by the defendant. We have not held that such arrests should be followed by confining the [732] offender in jail. We said in the course of argument that the Alabama court had held that there might be circumstances under which a person arrested to prevent a breach of the peace might be rightfully confined in jail. But this was said merely to illustrate the point that such, and only such, force is justified as is reasonably necessary to prevent the threatened offense. We can well imagine circumstances under which, in times of great excitement, such imprisonment might be the only practicable means of preventing great disorder and turbulence. But we think it can rarely, if ever, be necessary to prevent threatened sales of liquor, and we do not now hold that it can ever be justified in such cases. The duty of the sheriff, when he has seen no sales made, but makes an arrest to prevent sales threatened in his presence, is to prevent the sales which the offender is then ready and equipped and threatening to make. When this is accomplished, his duty for that occasion is ended. He may do this by removing the liquors from the place. The proprietor will then not be equipped to sell and the sales threatened in the presence of the officer will have been prevented, and there will be no further occasion to detain the person arrested. Or he may close the place, and thus prevent the sales, and then let the person arrested go free. We said in our former opinion that he will have the right to close the place and keep it closed until the purpose to conduct it as a saloon is abandoned. This perhaps does not quite accurately express what we meant to say. [733] He should keep it closed until the danger of the sales then threatened has passed. This will be accomplished when the liquors have been removed and the necessity of keeping the place closed will no longer exist and that particular incident will be ended. In other words, he must do what is necessary to prevent the sales then threatened, and leave future sales and future threats to be dealt with as they arise. In practice, a few such arrests will effectually put an end to open saloons, and the same good judgment which is necessary to the discharge of his other duties will enable him to perform these duties without serious difficulty.

These are the things which it is the duty of a sheriff to do to prevent violations of law. They involve the exercise of the undoubted power of the government to prevent unlawful acts as well as to punish for offenses committed. Speaking of this power and the wisdom of its use, the Supreme Court of the United States has said:

"Certainly it seems to us to be quite as wise to use the processes of the law and the powers of the court to prevent the evil as to punish the offense as a crime after it has been committed." Eilenbecker v. District Ct. 134 U. S. 31, 10 S. Ct. 424, 33 U. S. (L. ed.) 801.

But it seems to be argued by counsel that it is a serious invasion of the rights of citizens to permit the sheriff, without process, to seize liquors or close places of business for the purpose of preventing breaches of the peace. But if, for that purpose, a [734] man may be arrested, and thus deprived of his liberty, he certainly cannot complain because he is deprived of a mere property right which he is using as a means of breaching the peace. That, for the purpose of preventing a public offense, an officer may seize and detain the things about to be used in the commission of the offense, is no new doctrine. The rule is well stated in a headnote to Spalding v. Preston, 21 Vt. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 68, which fairly interprets the decision in that case as follows:

"The officers of government have authority, derived from the general rights of the government, without any statute whatever upon the subject, to exercise all necessary force for the prevention of crime, either by the arrest of individuals, or by the seizure and detention of the instruments for committing crime."

More or less to the same effect are Shanley v. Wells, 71 Ill. 78; O'Connor v. Bucklin, 59 N. H. 589; Ross v. Leggett, 61 Mich. 445, 28 N. W. 695, 1 Am. St. Rep. 608; Ex p. Morrill, 35 Fed. 261.

In a supplemental brief, counsel for defendant have quoted from Quinn v. Heisel, 40 Mich. 578, as follows:

"We are of opinion that a threat or other indication of a breach of the peace will not justify an officer in making an arrest, unless the facts were such as would warrant the officer in believing an arrest necessary to prevent an immediate execution thereof, as where a threat is made coupled with some overt act [735] in attempted execution thereof. In such cases the officer need not wait until the offense is actually committed. To justify such arrest the party must have gone so far in the commission of an offense that proceedings might thereafter be instituted against him therefor, and this without reference to any past similar offense of which the person may have been guilty before the arrival of the officer. The object of permitting an arrest under such circumstances is to prevent a breach of the peace, where the facts show danger of its being immediately committed."

The only thing in this quotation which is not fully in accord with what we have held is the statement that, "to justify such an arrest, the party must have gone so far in the commission of an offense that proceedings might thereafter be instituted against him therefor." We have not had access to the statutes of Michigan, but the numerous Michigan cases to which our attention has been called make it plain that there is, in that State, no statute like ours, expressly authorizing an arrest for a threatened breach of the peace. Viewed in the light of this fact, the language quoted strongly supports our conclusion in this case. Regarding the right of an officer, by the common law, to make an arrest, without a warrant, as confined to breaches of the peace actually committed in his presence, the court nevertheless recognized his preventive duty to the extent of holding that his duty to interfere begins whenever any act is done which amounts to an attempt to commit the offense. But treating this as a [736] correct statement of the common-law rule, our legislature evidently intended to enlarge the preventive duties of the officer when it authorized him to arrest for a threatened breach of the peace. Under the common law, the Michigan court held that an attempt would justify an arrest. Under our statute, a threat is put in the same category.

It is insisted that the sheriff is not the only peace officer, that the judges and others are also conservators of the peace, and that, if the sheriff is onerated with the duties we have held belong to his office, the same duties rest upon these other conservators of the peace. Of course, we are not now called on to define the duties of any officer except a sheriff. But we may remark that, while there are many officers who, by virtue of their offices, are also conservators of the peace, our statutes, in line with the nature of the office from the most ancient times, make the sheriff the chief conservator of the peace in his county. His official character has been shown by the authorities already quoted. We have held that he is charged with the duties described not merely because he is called by the statute a conservator of the peace, but because they have always belonged to his office, and because, in express terms, our statutes make it his duty to suppress and prevent public offenses and breaches of the peace. It is sufficient now to say that not all conservators of the peace are charged with all the duties of the sheriff. The making of an arrest is only one of the things to be done for the purpose [737] of preserving the peace.

Every officer charged with the duty of doing any of these things is, to that extent, a conservator of the peace. But, in order to determine what are his duties, we must look not only to the fact that he is a conservator of the peace, but to the particular duties which the law attaches to his office.

It is insisted that the case of McCrowell v. Bristol, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 685, is authority against the right of an officer to close a saloon. But that case was decided when the saloon business was lawful in Tennessee, and all that was held was that municipal authorities could not, without judicial proceedings, declare a saloon a nuisance on account of the manner in which it was conducted, and abate it. But now the saloon business is unlawful. And it has never been the law in Tennessee that officers could not stop any public offense committed or about to be committed in their presence.

It is finally insisted that no willful neglect of duty has been shown. On this question defendant is precluded by his admission that he did nothing in Memphis except to serve process. He may not have understood some of his duties as we have defined them. We have not, however, removed him merely because he failed to make arrests for threatened violations of the law. In view of the advice given him by counsel, and of the fact that there had been no previous decision of the question, if he had made an honest effort to suppress and prevent violations of the law by doing the other things we have held it was his duty [738] to do, we would probably hold that his failure in this respect was not a willful neglect of duty, and that he should not be removed. But the record shows and he admits that he did nothing but serve such process as was placed in his hands. And any man of intelligence, who, as sheriff, under the conditions disclosed by this record, did nothing but serve process, must be deemed to have willfully failed and neglected to perform the duties of his office.

There is nothing in what we have decided to justify the excited statement of counsel that there is involved a "controversy between the people and their liberties, and a doctrine which would seriously oppress the one and impair the other." We have only applied to the class of offenses under consideration the same rule that has from time immemorial been applied to other offenses of no more gravity and fraught with no more danger to the public. We have merely said that it is the duty of the faithful officer to interfere to prevent offenses of this kind, just as he has always interfered when similar offenses were threatened in his presence. The rules we have laid down authorize the interference with a citizen only when he is about to do that which the law denounces. And we refuse to recognize as one of the liberties guaranteed by any government to its citizens the privilege of violating its laws. Nor is there any element of oppression of the people in making effective the mandate of their own laws that, for the good of the public, they shall not do certain things.

[739] After examining the questions involved with the care merited by their importance and the earnestness and ability of counsel, we are satisfied with the conclusions heretofore announced, and the petition to rehear will be dismissed.

NOTE.

In the reported case the court, in removing a sheriff from office for a failure to enforce the laws against the sale of intoxicants, enters on a most comprehensive discussion of the duty of a sheriff to act of his own initiative for the enforcement of the law. It is held that while he need not "patrol the county" or employ detectives to ferret out crime, he is more than a mere process server, and is charged with an affirmative duty to prevent public offenses and suppress breaches of the peace. He must be reasonably alert with respect to possible violations of the law and is not entitled to wait until they come to his personal knowledge but must follow up information received from any source. It is also held, after a full discussion, that the open sale of liquor in violation of law is a breach of the peace which the sheriff as the chief peace officer of the county is empowered and required to suppress without awaiting the initiation of a prosecution by others or the issuance of a warrant. The failure of a public officer to enforce the law as a ground for his removal is fully discussed in the note to State v. Donahue, Ann. Cas. 1913D 18. See also the more recent case of State v. Howse, Ann. Cas. 1917C 1125, and State v. Linn, reported ante, this volume, at page 139.

PEUSER

v.

MARSH.

New York Court of Appeals—July 11, 1916.

218 N. Y. 505; 118 N. E. 494.

Conditional Sales — Remedies of Vendee — Breach of Warranty.

Where the seller of a chattel by conditional sale seeks to reclaim it by means of an action of replevin, the buyer may defend by pleading a breach of warranty by way of recoupment in diminution or extinction of the price, as provided by the Uniform Sales Act (Laws 1911, c. 571) § 150.
Ann. Cas. 1918B.—58.

[See note at end of this case.]

Peuser v. Marsh, 167 N. Y. App. Div. 604, affirmed.

Appeal from Appellate Division of Supreme Court, Third Judicial Department.

Action by Peter C. Peuser, plaintiff, against Elizabeth D. Marsh, defendant. Judgment for defendant at Special Term of Supreme Court. Judgment reversed by Appellate Division of Supreme Court. Plaintiff appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Thomas B. Merchant for appellant.

H. J. Hennessy for respondent.

[507] WILLARD BARTLETT, Ch. J.—This appeal presents the question whether in the case of a conditional sale, where the seller seeks to reclaim the goods by means of an action of replevin, the buyer may defend by pleading a breach of warranty by way of recoupment in diminution or extinction of the price. By the Uniform Sales Act, adopted in this state in 1911 and made article V of the Personal Property Law (Laws of 1911, ch. 571), it is expressly provided that where there is a breach of warranty by the seller the buyer may at his election "accept or keep the goods and set up against the seller the breach of warranty by way of recoupment in diminution or extinction of the price." (§ 150.) It is contended, however, that this provision does not apply to conditional sales at all where the title has not passed from the seller to the buyer; or, if it does apply to conditional sales, it is only where the seller sues for the purchase price of the goods and not where he is endeavoring to get them back.

In the present action the plaintiff sues to recover possession of a piano, together with a stool and scarf. The complaint alleges that the said chattels were purchased by the defendant from an agent of the plaintiff under a contract of conditional sale whereby the title was not to vest in the defendant until the payment of $260, of which $25 was to be paid in merchandise, $16 in cash, and the balance in monthly installments of $6 each, and that the defendant has failed to pay the sum of $141, with accrued interest thereon, which was due and payable on the 1st day of August, 1914. Each of the defenses which is assailed by the demurrer sets up certain warranties and the breach thereof to the defendant's damage in the sum [508] of $200. The defendant further avers that, relying upon the warranties, she had paid to the plaintiff $119 to apply upon the purchase price, and that by reason of the premises the defendant has become the owner of the piano and the plaintiff is indebted to her in the sum of $59. This is in effect a plea that the breach of warranty has operated to extinguish any further liability on account of the purchase price. The position of the defendant is that she has paid all that she is legally obligated to pay under the contract, and, therefore, that she is entitled to consider and does consider the goods as her own. She claims to be exercising the right given by the statute to the buyer where there is a breach of warranty by the seller, namely, to keep the goods and set up the breach of warranty by way of recoupment in extinction of the price.

It is clear that conditional sales fall within the purview of the Uniform Sales Act (§ 82). Although replevin is strictly a possessory action Roach v. Curtis, 191 N. Y. 387, 84 N. E. 283, and the term recoupment generally signifies a deduction from a money claim (Deeves v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 195 N. Y. 324, 336, 88 N. E. 395) the right to possession in a case like this depends upon the payment of the purchase price; and as the statute provides that the purchase price may be extinguished (which is equivalent to saying it may be paid) by recouping such damages as the buyer may have sustained by the seller's breach of warranty, we can see no sufficient reason for holding that such a defense is not available in a replevin suit. Where a question as to the construction of a statute relating to legal procedure is evenly balanced in other respects, that view should prevail which tends to promote the welfare of litigants by preventing circuitry of action. It is obviously to the interest of both parties to a contract of conditional sale like that in suit here to have their respective claims adjusted and determined in one law suit; and we think that the legislative intent to permit this to be done is discoverable in the language of the statute—whether the [509] seller sues for the purchase price or sues to recover back the goods.

The judgment of the Appellate Division should be affirmed, with costs, and both questions certified answered in the negative.

Hiscock, Chase, Cuddeback, Hogan, Cardozo and Pound, JJ., concur.

Judgment affirmed.

NOTE.

Right of Conditional Vendee to Recover Damages for Breach of Warranty.

In New Hamburg Mfg. Co. v. Webb, 23 Ont. L. Rep. 44, 20 Ann. Cas. 817, it was held that a conditional vendee cannot, before title has vested in him, recover general damages for a breach of warranty. The same rule has been laid down in several recent cases.

Thus in Bunday v. Columbus Mach. Co. 143 Mich. 10, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 475, wherein it appeared that certain machinery was sold on the instalment plan, the title to remain in the seller until the price thereof should be paid in full, it was held that the contract was executory in character and that an action for a breach of warranty would not lie in advance of the actual transmission of title.

So in an action of replevin by the vendor to enforce a breach of the condition by a recovery of the property, it has been held that the vendee could not defend by recoupment or set-off for a breach of warranty, under a code provision allowing to be set off "any matter arising out of the plaintiff's demand, and for which the defendant would be entitled to recover in a cross action;" or "any matter growing out of the original consideration or any written instrument, for which the defendant would be entitled to recover in a cross action." Blair v. Johnson, 111 Tenn. 111, 76 S. W. 912, wherein the court said: "In these actions it is contemplated that the plaintiff's demand shall be abated or lessened by that of the defendant. But how can this be, when the two actions proceed on wholly different lines, the plaintiff, by a possessory action, demanding the possession of certain property, and the defendant demanding damages by reason of the breach of a contract concerning that property? Take, for illustration, the facts of the present case. The sale of the wagon was upon a condition. The condition has failed, and the plaintiff has, undoubtedly, a right to the possession of the property. There was a warranty of soundness, and, assuming as true the matters which were offered to be proven, the warranty was broken, and the defendant is entitled to damages, to the extent, at least, of the difference in value between the article as represented and as it actually turned out to be. Smith v. Cozart, 2 Head (Tenn.) 528. There would be a judgment then for the plaintiffs to the full extent of their claim, also one for the defendant for the full amount of damage to which he would be entitled under his warranty, and neither would abate or lessen the other, or bear any relation thereto, except that they originated in a dealing in and about the same article of personal property." In like manner, it was held in People's Electric R. Co. v. McKeen Motor Car Co. 214 Fed. 73, 130 C. C. A. 513, that in an action of replevin by the vendor in a contract of conditional sale to recover the property because of the buyer's default, the latter could not successfully assert damages for a breach of warranty in defense. Compare W. W. Kimball Co. v. Massey, 126 Minn. 461, 148 N. W. 307, wherein the court said: "The sale was conditional and executory, and upon a breach by one the other was entitled to rescind. If defendant was justified in rescinding for the breach of warranty, he was entitled to a return of the instalments paid. That was all he asked by the counterclaim. The defendant did not seek to retain the possession, nor ask for the return of the piano. The provision that a counterclaim is proper when it is 'connected with the subject of the action' should receive a liberal construction."

Damages have been allowed for a failure of the goods to conform to the contract where the contract of sale was conditional although the buyer returned the goods after giving the seller notice that the goods were defective. First Church of Christ, Scientist v. Southern Seating, etc. Co. 76 Wash. 367, 136 Pac. 127, wherein the court said: "Neither can the fact that the pews have been left in the possession of plaintiff militate against its right of recovery. If the pews had been sold under an ordinary contract of sale and title had passed and the action had been for damages as for breach of warranty, the retention and use of the pews would have been inconsistent with the measure allowed in this case. The terms of the contract, however, preclude the application of this principle. The title was reserved in the vendor and the pews have been at all times subject to its order."

In New York it was held in several cases prior to the enactment hereinafter referred to that a warranty was an incident only of consummated or completed sales, and that an action for the breach of warranty could not be maintained by the buyer until the title to the property had fully passed to the buyer. Spaus v. Stolwein, 75 Misc. 1, 134 N. Y. S. 603; Hauss v. Savarese, 87 Misc. 330, 149 N. Y. S. 938; Carpenter v. Chapman, 139 N. Y. S. 849; Osborn v. Gantz, 60 N. Y. 540; Levis v. Pope Motor Car Co. 202 N. Y. 402, 95 N. E. 815. An amendment to the Personal Property Law of New York (Laws 1911 c. 571; Personal Property Law, § 150, McKinney's Consol. Laws, Book 40, p. 246) provides as follows: "(1) Where there is a breach of warranty by the seller, the buyer may, at his election, (a) accept or keep the goods, and set up against the seller the breach of warranty by way of recoupment in diminution or extinction of the price; (b) accept or keep the goods and maintain an action against the seller for damages for the breach of the warranty; (c) refuse to accept the goods, if the property therein has not passed, and maintain an action against the seller for damages for the breach of warranty; (d) rescind the contract to sell or the sale and refuse to receive the goods, or if the goods have already been received, return them or offer to return them to the seller and recover the price or any part thereof which has been paid." Under that provision it has been held that in an action on a conditional sale note which was given as part of the purchase price of a piano, the buyer might counterclaim and show in support of the counterclaim that the seller warranted that the piano sold would not break and was fit for the purpose for which it was intended and that the warranty had been breached. G. B. Shearer Co. v. Kakoulis, 144 N. Y. S. 1077. See also Ohl v. Standard Steel Sections, 167 N. Y. S. 184. In the reported case it is decided that in an action of replevin by the seller of a chattel on conditional sale, the buyer may recoup such damages as he may have sustained by the seller's breach of warranty.

THOMPSON

v.

CITY AND COUNTY OF DENVER.

Colorado Supreme Court—May 1, 1916.

61 Colo. 470; 158 Pac. 309.

Public Officers — Officer de Jure — Right to Compensation — Payment to de Facto Officer.

The rule that an officer de jure cannot recover from a municipal corporation salary for the period he was deprived of his office where it was paid to an officer de facto applies to a police operator, declared by the city charter to be an officer; it being immaterial that he was an appointive officer, and that he was wrongfully discharged.

[See note at end of this case.]

Right of de Facto Officer to Compensation.

A city's unqualified acceptance of services performed by one as officer estops it to invoke any rule of law to defeat payment of his salary for such period.

Error to District Court, City and County of Denver: SHEAFOR, Judge.

Action by James Thompson, plaintiff, against City and County of Denver, defendant. To review judgment rendered, plaintiff brings error. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Robert H. Kane for plaintiff in error.

James A. Marsh and William R. Kennedy for defendant in error.

[470] BAILEY, J.—James Thompson, plaintiff below and plaintiff in error here, was one of the police operators of the City and County of Denver for three years prior to the 1st day of February, 1910, and on or about that date was suspended upon charges filed against him by the Fire and Police Board. On March 14th, 1910, a hearing was had before the board, the charges sustained, and plaintiff discharged from the service. Thompson took that decision on appeal to the City Civil Service Commission, where the matter rested for over two years. About the 31st day of May, 1912, upon request of the Fire and Police Board, the commission forthwith ordered that the appeal be sustained, and Thompson reinstated, which was accordingly done by formal order of the board on June 1st, 1912. Upon reinstatement he served only fifteen days, when the same charges were filed against him by newly installed members of the Fire and Police Board, resulting [471] in his second discharge from the service. Thereupon this action was brought to recover damages, consisting of the salary which plaintiff was thus deprived of earning during the period of discharge, and for the period from June 1st to June 15th after reinstatement, less what he actually earned in that time in other pursuits, the amount of the claim being $1,815.97 with interest. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $46.86, the amount of salary from the date of reinstatement to the date of removal, but refused to award anything for the period of discharge, on the ground that another had been paid the salary for the same period, one Kaiser having occupied the position meanwhile, discharged the duties and received the salary therefor.

Prior to the time the charges were made plaintiff received his appointment by examination in the regular way, served his probationary period of six months, and then became a permanent appointee, in conformity with the provisions of section 200 of the charter of the municipality, concerning appointments in the classified service, which reads as follows: "Every original appointment in the classified service shall be for six months, at the end of which time, if the conduct and capacity of the person appointed have been satisfactory, he shall be permanently appointed; otherwise he shall be out of the service."

The duties of police operator, as outlined in the brief of counsel for defendant in error, are to receive reports from policemen on the beats within the municipality, at a telephone switch board, make records of the same, receive calls for the patrol wagon, and generally to exercise the duties of a central operator with reference to the police telephone system. Section 65 of the city charter provides that the police force shall be composed of the chief of police and such subordinate officers, policemen and other employees, to be appointed by the board, as may be necessary, etc. Section 153 thereof provides that all persons in the employ of the [472] city and county, or any department thereof, whose salary or compensation is not fixed by this charter, are hereby declared to be employees, and in enumerating the members of the police department and fixing their respective salaries it names, among others, police operators at an annual salary of $1020.

The judgment is affirmed upon the authority of El Paso County v. Rohde, 41 Colo. 258, 95 Pac. 551, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 794, 124 Am. St. Rep. 134, and Henderson v. Glynn, 2 Colo. App. 303, 39 Pac. 265, which hold that an officer de jure cannot recover from a municipal corporation salary paid by it to an officer de facto during the period the officer de jure was deprived of his office; in other words, that payment of salary by the municipality to an officer de facto, who discharges the duties of the office is a good defense to an action therefor against it by the officer de jure.

Counsel not only assail the soundness of this rule, but contend further that even though the propriety of its application be admitted in cases like those cited, involving respectively the salary of County Treasurer and District Judge where the loss thereof was occasioned by the intrusion of a third party, it cannot properly be applied to a case like the present, involving salary of a police operator the loss of which was occasioned by wrongful discharge. The argument and citation of authority in support of this contention confirms the statement in the Rohde case to the effect that there is noticeable conflict in the decisions upon the subject. The rule adopted in this state is based on public policy, to the effect that the people cannot be compelled to pay twice for the same service, and in principle we do not see how the instant case can be fairly distinguished from those in which this court has applied it.

Section 153 of the charter of the municipality in effect declares police operators to be officers, and it therefore follows that they are, at least in some respects, public officers, their duties being intimately connected with and a part of [473] the police system. The question presented is whether there is anything for consideration in this case of sufficient weight and clearness to distinguish the character of the plaintiff's relation to the municipality from that of a County Treasurer or District Judge, in respect to a claim for salary paid another, so as to take it out of the operation of the rule laid down in the two cases to which reference has been made. Certainly no such distinction can be safely made upon a basis of comparative dignity between offices, nor does it lie within the fact that some officers are appointive and others elective. Logically the rule should, we think, be applied alike to all public officers.

The case of Denver v. Burnett, 9 Colo. App. 531, 49 Pac. 378, is cited and relied upon by plaintiff in error to support his contention.

Burnett recovered judgment against the city for one year's pay as a policeman, which was reversed because the bill of exceptions, which purported to contain all the evidence, failed to show any proof of the compensation to which he may have been entitled, that the prerequisites of the appointment had been complied with, or action upon the part of the city by which its liability might be established. That was a complete disposition of the matter on review, and expressions of the court beyond that point are mere dicta.

Upon the assignment of cross-error to the finding in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $46.86, salary from the date of his reinstatement to the date of removal, that is June 1st to June 15th, 1912, we are of opinion that by the city's unqualified acceptance of services performed by plaintiff during that period, it is estopped to invoke any rule of law to defeat payment of the sum so earned and claimed.

The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

Gabbert, C. J., and White, J., concur.

Rehearing denied July 3, 1916.

NOTE.

The reported case adheres to the rule prevailing in the majority of American jurisdictions that a municipality which has paid to a de facto officer the salary of the office during the period of his occupancy is not liable to the de jure officer for salary for the same period. That rule, the court says, is applicable to appointive as well as to elective officers, and no distinction is to be made with respect to the grade or dignity of the office. The cases passing on the right of a de jure officer to recover from the state or municipality salary paid to a de facto officer during the latter's incumbency are reviewed in the notes to Nall v. Coulter, 4 Ann. Cas. 671; Tanner v. Edwards, 10 Ann. Cas. 1091; Cleveland v. Luttner, Ann. Cas. 1917D 1134; and Andrews v. Portland, 10 Am. St. Rep. 280. The closely related question of the right of the de jure officer to recover from the de facto officer salary paid to him is discussed in the notes to Chubbuck v. Wilson, 12 Ann. Cas. 888; Jones v. Dushman, Ann. Cas. 1916D 472; Andrews v. Portland, 10 Am. St. Rep. 280; and Howard v. Burke, 140 Am. St. Rep. 159.

STRATTON ET AL.

v.

WILSON.

Kentucky Court of Appeals—May 9, 1916.

170 Ky. 61; 185 S. W. 522.

Husband and Wife — Antenuptial Agreement — Validity — Concealment of Facts.

To be bound by the terms of an antenuptial settlement, the prospective wife, before entering into the contract, and at the time, must have been apprised without misrepresentation or concealment of the nature and extent of her prospective husband's estate and the value of her marital rights therein which she by its terms is surrendering.

Same.

An antenuptial settlement as to which all the facts were fully stated to the bride before the marriage is not invalidated because she signed it before being so advised.

Provision Contemplating Divorce — Validity.

A stipulation in an antenuptial settlement providing for a fixed sum for alimony in the event of divorce or separation is void, as providing for a future separation after marriage.

Effect of Partial Invalidity.

Where the consideration is valid and several separable promises are based upon it, some of which are legal and others illegal, while the illegal promises are void, the legal ones will be enforced.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

An antenuptial settlement of $25,000 to the wife as widow and $10,000 to her if divorced or separated, where the marriage is consummated, will be enforced on the death of the husband as to the $25,000 settlement, notwithstanding the illegal promise to pay alimony.

[See note at end of this case.]

Contract Favored in Law.

Contracts for antenuptial settlements are favored by the law, and will not be held invalid for trifling or technical reasons.

Executors and Administrators — Allowance to Widow.

Where there is protracted litigation between the next of kin living outside the state and a widow appointed administratrix, during which the widow, although confined by a marriage settlement to a cash provision in lieu of widow's rights, occupied the home-stead, allowances for minor housekeeping expenses and court costs may be allowed in the discretion of the trial court.

Compensation of Administrator.

Under Ky. St. § 3883, as to allowance to a personal representative, where the property of the estate is distributed in kind, and the administrator is put to little or no trouble, he should not be allowed the maximum sum of five per cent of the value of the property thus distributed.

Same.

Under Ky. St. § 3883, because the personality is distributed by the administrator in kind, it does not necessarily follow that he should not be allowed anything for his services, but a reasonable allowance should be made to him.

Counsel Fees of Administrator.

Counsel fees of an administratrix are necessarily left largely to the discretion of the trial court.

Gifts — Between Husband and Wife — Death of Husband.

Where a husband had on a trip abroad given his wife express checks for their expenses amounting to $800, and at another time had sent her $2,000 in a draft, and there is no showing that he intended that she should account therefor, she is entitled to retain the same on his death.

Executors and Administrators — Rights of Widow — Occupation of Homestead.

Under statutes providing that the widow may occupy the homestead until allotment of dower, homestead, or the estate is otherwise distributed, the widow is not by an antenuptial settlement deprived of such right of occupation, especially where the only other person interested in the estate is a nonresident living a great distance from the homestead and it is necessary to the preservation of the property that it should be occupied.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Oldham county.

Action by Julia E. Stratton et al., plaintiffs, against Ada Stratton Wilson, defendant. From judgment rendered, all parties appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFIRMED.

Alexander Scott Bullitt, William Marshall Bullitt and Keith L. Bullitt for plaintiffs.

David & Davis and D. H. French for defendant.

[62] THOMAS, J.—The questions presented for determination on this appeal grow out of litigation to settle and distribute the estate of Wilton A. Stratton, who died intestate on October 18, 1913, at Los Angeles, California, but domiciled [63] at the time in Oldham county. Previous to 1912, the decedent had lived for a great number of years in the city of Louisville, and in the spring of that year he purchased a country home near Crestwood, in Oldham county, where he made his home for the rest of his life. He was married to the appellant, who was then Miss Julia Eschmann, on February 24, 1913, the wedding taking place in the city of New York. On the 18th day of February preceding the marriage, the parties signed and executed the following contract, omitting signatures:

"THIS AGREEMENT made and entered into this 22d day of February, 1913, by and between Wilton A. Stratton, party of the first part, and Julia Eschmann, party of the second part, both of Oldham county, in the State of Kentucky.

"WITNESSETH: That whereas the said first and second parties are about to enter into a contract of marriage, and whereas it is desired between them to settle and adjust all property right or claims between them arising out of said proposed marriage, and whereas the said party of the first part, Wilton A. Stratton, wishes to make provision for said Julia Eschmann in lieu of dower or distributive share of his estate, both real and personal, and whereas said parties have agreed between themselves upon a provision for said second party, Julia Eschmann, and she has agreed and binds herself to accept same in lieu of any and all claims upon the estate of said Wilton A. Stratton during his life, or after his life should he die before her.

"Now, THEREFORE, this contract and agreement between said Wilton A. Stratton, party of the first part, and Julia Eschmann, party of the second part.

"WITNESSETH: That the said Wilton A. Stratton hereby agrees and binds himself, his heirs, administrators and assigns to pay to the said Julia Eschmann upon his death, if she survives him, she then being his wife, the sum of twenty-five thousand ($25,000.00) dollars out of his estate in full settlement of any and all claims of dower or distributable share of said estate, real and personal, and should said Julia Eschmann die before said Wilton A. Stratton, then nothing shall be paid to her heirs, executors, administrators or assigns; and he further binds himself that if at any time after the solemnization of said marriage, he and said Julia Eschmann [64] should become separated or divorced, he will pay to her upon such divorce being obtained by either of them the sum of ten thousand ($10,000.00) dollars in full of any and all claims said Julia Eschmann might hold against him for alimony, or maintenance, or attorneys' fees in any such divorce proceedings.

"The said Julia Eschmann agrees to accept said sum of twenty-five thousand ($25,000.00) dollars upon the death of said Wilton A. Stratton in full settlement of any and all claims she might have as his widow for dower or distributable share of his estate, or should she become divorced from him at any time to accept said sum of ($10,000.00) dollars above set forth in full settlement of any and all claims for alimony or maintenance, or attorneys' fees.

"Said Wilton A. Stratton furthermore agrees and binds himself during the continuance of the marital relationship between him and the said Julia Eschmann to provide for her a good and comfortable living, so long as she lives and resides with him, but should she abandon him for any reason and refuse to live with him, then his responsibility from the time of said abandonment or refusal to live with him shall be limited to the sum of ten thousand ($10,000.00) dollars above provided for, and only upon the conditions there provided for the payment of said ten thousand ($10,000.00) dollars.

"IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, witness the signatures of said first and second parties, the day and year above written."

The contract was executed in duplicate but each party was not delivered a copy until the day they left Louisville for New York, which was the 22nd of February; and thus, although the contract had been signed by each of them on the 18th, it bears the date of actual delivery.

Briefly stated, the circumstances under which the marriage was agreed to and the contract executed, are these: Neither party had ever been married. Mr. Stratton was about 62 years old and Miss Eschmann about 52 years old. She was then and had for some considerable time immediately previous, been employed by Mr. Stratton as housekeeper at a salary of $35.00 per month. He was not in the best of health and to regain and repair it he concluded to take a trip abroad. [65] He seems to have become very much pleased with the services of Miss Eschmann, not only as a housekeeper but in her attentions to his personal welfare as well, and he desired that she attend him upon his contemplated trip. To avoid any grounds for suspicion or scandalous gossip, he conceived the idea of marrying Miss Eschmann before starting on the trip and suggested it to his cousin and personal friend, Edward T. Farmer, but at the time stated that he would be unwilling to enter into the marriage unless there could be an understanding between himself and Miss Eschmann as to property rights growing out of the marriage. The deceased at that time was worth something like $230,000.00, thirty thousand dollars of which was real property situated in Jefferson and Oldham counties, and the remainder was personal property, almost the entire portion of which consisted of solvent bonds and corporation stock, each being a well-paying investment.

The first conversation with Farmer concerning the proposed marriage occurred about February 7, of that year, and the subject was further discussed between them some four or five days thereafter. On the 17th day of February the matter was discussed by the three, Stratton, Farmer, and Miss Eschmann, and the terms of it, as afterwards incorporated into the writing, were each and all agreed to and the writing drawn up and subscribed by the parties the next day as we have stated, but not delivered until the 22nd. The attorney who drafted the contract, Mr. John J. Davis, realizing that Miss Eschmann should be apprised of the extent of the property of her contemplated husband, went to the home of Mr. Stratton on the 19th day of February, and there fully informed her of the amount of the property which Mr. Stratton owned; and, as the attorney states, of her rights in and to such property as surviving widow. To this she replied: "I didn't know that he had so much or that I was entitled to so much," whereupon the attorney replied: "Well, you know it now. The marriage has not been consummated and there is nothing that you couldn't withdraw from at this time," whereupon she replied, "It is too late. I have already signed the contract. I signed too quick." The marriage was afterwards consummated as we have stated, and the trip abroad was made lasting until some time in October. [66] Upon their return they did not come direct to their home but proceeded to the city of Chicago, where a stop of a few days was made, after which they went to Los Angeles, California, where, on October 18, the death of the husband occurred. The only heir at law of the decedent is the appellee, Mrs. Ada Stratton Wilson, who is the only child of a brother of the deceased. After the death of her husband, the appellant as his widow, returned to the Crestwood home and has since occupied it, in the meantime qualifying as the administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband.

The litigation in which the judgment was rendered from which the appeal is prosecuted, consists of several separate suits and proceedings concerning the estate, all of which were consolidated in the court below, and for the purpose of this opinion, it is not necessary that they be either separately stated or noticed. The chief controversy between the parties and the storm center of this litigation is, as to the validity of the antenuptial contract which we have herein copied, the widow contending that she is not bound by it, and that she is therefore entitled to her distributable share of her husband's estate as though no contract was made; while the heir is insisting that the contract is valid, and was at the death of the decedent in full force, and the widow is, therefore, entitled to but $25,000.00, the amount named in the contract. This latter view is the one taken by the trial court, and from the judgment so holding the widow has appealed.

In the court below there were three grounds urged by the widow as to why the contract is not binding upon her, they being: (1) That the contract is void on its face; (2) that before signing it she was not aware of the value of the estate of her future husband, and that she was therefore induced by this fraudulent concealment to place her name to it and to agree to its terms, and, (3) that the contract after their marriage was orally rescinded by herself and her husband before his death.

We will consider these in the reverse order. As to the third ground stated, without passing on the question as to whether this character of contract can be orally rescinded, it is sufficient to say that there is no evidence of any character of a rescission, except the testimony of the widow, which is manifestly incompetent under section 606 of the Civil Code of Practice. [67] This is so apparent that counsel for her did not mention it in the argument of the case, nor does he refer to it in his brief. We, therefore, do not deem it necessary to give this contention further consideration.

As to the second ground urged against the contract, it cannot be denied but that it is the settled rule that the prospective wife, in contracts of this character, in order to be bound thereby, should, before entering into the contract and at that time, be apprised "of the nature and extent of her prospective husband's estate and the value of her marital rights therein which she by its terms is surrendering." Tilton v. Tilton, 130 Ky. 281, 113 S. W. 134, 132 Am. St. Rep. 359. Other cases in point are: Daniels v. Banister, 146 Ky. 48, 141 S. W. 393; Redwine v. Redwine, 160 Ky. 282, Ann. Cas. 1917A 58, 169 S. W. 864, and Gaines v. Gaines, 183 Ky. 260, 173 S. W. 774. These cases very properly hold that such a contract to be binding on the prospective wife must be free from fraud, misrepresentation, deceit or concealment; but they do not go farther than this. The fact that the contract had been signed before the appellant had been placed in possession of all the facts, cannot militate against the validity of the contract, provided all the facts were freely and fairly stated to her before the marriage was consummated. Up to that time nothing had occurred to which any of the provisions of the contract could attach, and all that was necessary for the status of the parties to remain as it was then, was a refusal to marry. It was not necessary even that the signed contract providing for the payment of alimony, should be destroyed. Appellant by her action, in subsequently marrying the deceased, plainly manifested her willingness to accept the provisions of the contract, and this, too, after she had been informed as to the extent of her prospective husband's estate, as well as what would be her rights as his widow if no contract was entered into. This, we conclude, effectually disposes of the second contention.

The first ground urged against the validity of the marriage contract presents a more serious question and will require from us a more extended consideration. This contention is based upon the insistence of counsel for appellant that all of that portion of the contract providing for the payment of alimony, should a separation of the parties occur after marriage, followed by a divorce, is absolutely void, and that this void stipulation invalidates the entire contract. At the threshold [68] it may be conceded, and indeed is conceded by counsel for appellee, that the stipulation as to alimony is void, as the law will not permit parties contemplating marriage to enter into a contract providing for, and looking to, future separation after marriage. This principle of law appears to be well settled and is supported by an unbroken line of authorities. Those from this court are: Gaines v. Poor, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 503, 79 Am. Dec. 559; Loud v. Loud, 4 Bush (Ky.) 453; and Evans v. Evans, 93 Ky. 510, 20 S. W. 605.

The rule so announced is but a manifestation of a long settled policy of the law, to the effect that it is beneficial to society that the marital relation should not be disturbed or its happiness marred, but that it should be upheld and encouraged, and that the parties to it should not be led into the breaking of its vows by the allurements of any stipulations which they may enter into before marriage. So the question is: What effect does the stipulation as to alimony, which is conceded to be void, have upon the other stipulation for the payment of $25,000.00 upon the death of the husband, in lieu of all other interests of the widow which she would otherwise obtain from his estate, and which stipulation is conceded to be valid?

The rule is, if there is a single promise based upon a single consideration and both of them are void, the contract is wholly unenforceable; but where the consideration is valid, and several promises are based upon it, some of which are legal and others illegal, so that they may be separated, the legal ones will be enforced while those which are illegal will not, and the illegality of the latter will not prevent the enforcement of the former. So in Volume 9, Cyc. 564, we find it stated:

"Where an agreement founded on a legal consideration contains several promises or a promise to do several things, and some only of the things to be done are illegal, the promises which can be separated, or the promise so far as it can be separated, from the illegality, may be valid. The rule is that a lawful promise made for a lawful consideration is not invalid merely because an unlawful promise was made at the same time and for the same consideration. Thus if the terms of a contract in restraint of trade can be construed divisibly as to the limits, it may be valid as to the limits which are reasonable, although other limits imposed are excessive, unreasonable and void."

[69] This court has approved the text in the following cases: Brown v. Langford, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 497; Swan v. Chandler, 8 B. Mon.

(Ky.) 97; Collins v. Merrell, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 163; Kimbrough v. Lane, 11 Bush (Ky.) 556; Averbeck v. Hall, 14 Bush (Ky.) 506; Bugg v. Holt, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1208, 97 S. W. 29; McLane v. Dixon, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 683, 99 S. W. 601; Smith v. Corbin, 135 Ky. 727, 123 S. W. 277; Newport Rolling Mills Co. v. Hall, 147 Ky. 598, 144 S. W. 760.

A few references to what this court said in some of the cases referred to will serve to illustrate the rule as adopted in this State. In the Kimbrough case, it is said: "And it is equally well settled that if any part, however small, of the entire consideration of a contract be vicious, the whole contract is void." And in the Averbeck case, it is said: "It is well established that if a contract, the consideration of which is an agreement to impede, hinder or defeat the administration of the criminal or penal laws, is void as against public policy. It does not avail that, in this instance, there is a sufficient consideration, independent of this vicious agreement, to support the contract. A part of the entire consideration being vicious, the whole contract is void." In the still later case of Newport Rolling Mill Co. v. Hall, supra, this court quoting with approval from other of the cases, supra, said:

"The general rule is that if the obnoxious feature of a contract can be eliminated, without impairing its symmetry as a whole, the courts will be inclined to adopt this view as the one most likely to express the intention of the parties; but if the good and bad are so interwoven that they cannot be separated without altering or destroying the general meaning and purpose of the contract, the good must go with the bad and the whole contract be set aside. In Smith v. Corbin, 135 Ky. 727, 123 S. W. 277, it is said:

"In other words, it is a well known rule of law that where there are contained in the same instrument distinct engagements or covenants, by which a party binds himself to do certain acts, some of which are legal and some illegal, the performance of those which are legal may be enforced, although the performance of those which are illegal may not."

"In Brown v. Langford, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 497, the court said:

"Where there is a condition or covenant to do several things, a part of which is against the common law and the rest lawful, the condition or covenant will be [70] void as to so much as is unlawful, and good for the residue. But this does not hold where a part of the consideration is unlawful. There is no question but that a promise founded upon several considerations, one of which is vicious, is void; and the same principle requires that a covenant should be held to be so if the consideration be in part affected with turpitude.' To the same effect is McLane v. Dixon, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 683, 99 S. W. 601; Averbeck v. Hall, 14 Bush (Ky.) 506; Collins v. Merrell, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 163; Swan v. Chandler, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 97.

"We are disposed to the view that this contract may be treated as a severable one, and that the objectionable clause may be stricken from it without affecting the validity of the remainder of the contract. The clause in question does not particularly concern the consideration specified in the contract, and it is generally in reference to contracts in which a part of the consideration is illegal that the courts have ruled that the entire contract was tainted. Where a part of the consideration upon which the contract rests is vicious, the courts as may be seen from the cases cited will not undertake to separate the good consideration from the bad, but will discard it as a whole."

It then becomes necessary to determine what constitutes the consideration for the two promises made by the prospective husband and found in this marriage contract. The two promises being, to pay the appellant in the event of a separation and divorce the sum of $10,000.00 in lieu of all alimony, and to pay her $25,000.00 in the event of the death of her prospective husband in lieu of all interests in his estate. That the marriage was the consideration for these two promises, there can be room for but one opinion. In volume 21 Cyc. page 1246, it is said: "Marriage is a good consideration for antenuptial settlement of property on the intended wife. It has been said indeed that it is not only a valuable consideration, but a consideration of the highest value." This text is supported by numerous authorities from almost every State in the Union and in England, as well as by many text-writers upon the subject. The cases from this court so holding are: Forwood v. Forwood, 86 Ky. 114, 5 S. W. 361; Sanders v. Miller, 79 Ky. 517, 42 Am. Rep. 237; Mallory v. Mallory, 92 Ky. 316, 17 S. W. 737. This being so, it would seem under the rule, supra, that as the consideration of marriage in the instant case is an entire, [71] as well as a valid one, the conceded legal promise to pay $25,000.00 based upon it, should be upheld and enforced, notwithstanding the associated illegal promise to pay alimony which is based upon the same valid consideration. Indeed, there is no escape from this conclusion unless the facts of this case are to be differentiated in some way from those in the cases supra. We have given unsparing pains to the investigation of the authorities, not only those herein given, but the ones to which counsel refer us as well, and we fail to find in any of them any justifiable grounds for making a distinction between the facts therein and those here.

As we view the authorities, the error, to our minds, in the contention of counsel for appellant lies in the fact that he confuses the promises in the contract with the consideration therefor. In other words, he insists that the two promises found in the contract, the one being legal and the other illegal, as we have found, constitute the consideration for the marriage contract, which, as we have seen, is contrary to all the authorities, including the opinions of this court. As illustrating this, he strongly relies on the opinion of this court in the case of McLane v. Dixon, supra. In that case, McLane, a white man, was living in a state of concubinage with a negress named Motina Dixon. By him she had given birth to some illegitimate children, and he was about to be proceeded against in a bastardy proceeding to provide maintenance for the children. It is shown that at this juncture he entered into a contract with the mother to support the children and at his death make provision for them in his will, provided, however, the mother of the children would continue to live with him as theretofore. He failed to make the provision for the children in his will as agreed, which it was claimed was to be a house and lot worth $800.00, and his estate was sued to recover the value of the house and lot. But this court, denied the plaintiff the right to recover, not because the agreement to provide for the children was illegal, but because a part of the consideration for the promise to make the devise upon which the suit was based, was illegal, in that it contracted for the continued existence of an unlawful relation between the plaintiff and the decedent. The opinion was proper and in perfect accord with the rule herein stated. If, in that case, the consideration for the promise had not been tainted [72] with the worst form of illegality, there would have been no obstacle in the way, as far as the contract was concerned, of rendering judgment in favor of the plaintiff. But, as we have seen, we are dealing with no such case. The consideration here has been entirely executed, which in some jurisdictions materially affects the case, even should the rule contended for by appellant's counsel be applied. Appleby v. Appleby, 100 Minn. 408, 10 Ann. Cas. 563, 111 N. W. 305, 117 Am. St. Rep. 709, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 590, and authorities therein cited.

It must also not be forgotten that the contract under consideration not only contained two promises on behalf of the future husband, but they related to entirely separate and distinct events; the events to which the illegal promise related never occurred and there has been no occasion to invoke the aid of the court to enforce it. The event, however, to which the other promise related, has occurred, and its enforcement is sought in this suit. Many of the authorities relied upon for reversal had under consideration only the enforcement of the illegal promise therein, which was similar to the one here, and of course, the courts in this instance, denied the relief which was demanded, just as we would if the stipulation as to the payment of $10,000.00 alimony was before us in proceedings wherein either of the parties was seeking to enforce it. This is particularly so as to the case of Neddo v. Neddo, 56 Kan. 507, 44 Pac. 1, upon which considerable stress is made in appellant's brief. Moreover, in the case of Appleby v. Appleby, supra, the antenuptial contract had in it a stipulation referring to future separation, it being as follows:

"Provided always, and this promise and covenant is made with the reservation, that in the event said marriage does not take place, or said party of the second part shall not be my husband at the time of my death, or in the event at the time of my death the parties signing said Exhibit A. are not living together as husband and wife . . . then all and every claim and right on the part of said party of the second part to demand or receive said annuity or take any benefit under this agreement or in my estate shall thereupon and forthwith cease and be of no force or effect."

The provision was being made by the contemplated wife for the future husband and it was to be an annuity of $10,000.00.

[73] There was as much of an inducement for the wife in that case to bring about such a state of affairs as to cause a divorce, and thus save to her estate the annuity of $10,000.00 for the life of her husband, as there is in this case (as argued by appellant's counsel), for the deceased (Stratton) to be guilty of conduct causing a separation and thereby save to his estate $15,000.00. However, in disposing of this feature of that contract the court very pertinently said:

"The second proposition of appellant is that the antenuptial contract was void, because it tended to induce a separation between husband and wife. This contention is founded upon that part of the contract, repeated in the will, wherein it was provided that if, at the death of Mrs. Appleby, appellant should not be her husband, or in the event they 'shall not then be living together as husband and wife,' any and all right to the annuity shall 'cease and be of no force or effect.' It is elementary that contracts which tend to induce a separation of husband and wife are, upon the same principle of public policy which discountenances contracts in restraint of marriage, utterly void and of no force or effect. There is but one voice in the decisions upon this question. Cartwright v. Cartwright, 22 L. J. Ch. (Eng.) 841; H— v. W—, 3 Kay & J. (Eng.) 382; Brown

v. Peck, 1 Eden (Eng.) 140; Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563; Boland v. O'Neil, 72 Conn. 217, 44 Atl. 15; Hutton v. Hutton, 3 Pa. St. 100. But the contract under consideration does not bring the case within this principle. A broad view of its provisions will not justify or warrant the conclusion that its purpose was to facilitate, or that it tended in any measure to induce, a separation of the parties. On the contrary, it is clear that its purpose and tendency was to induce continued cohabitation as husband and wife. Appellant was firmly obligated to comply with the contract in this respect, and a failure forfeited the annuity. It was not incorporated in the contract to furnish the wife, upon some whimsical or capricious notion, induced, perhaps, by a condition of not unusual occurrence, a family jar, not ordinarily of long duration, an excuse to separate from her husband. The contract held out to her, as in many of the cases cited by appellant, no pecuniary or other inducement to bring about a separation. Causing one would result in no benefit or advantage to her. The [74] result would in such an event only increase the charity fund to which she devoted her estate.

"It is unnecessary to enter into an extended discussion of the authorities upon this subject. Many analogous cases are found in the books, but the decisions all turned where the contracts were held void, upon the construction of the particular language and phraseology of each. The case of In re Hope Johnstone [1904] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 470 is an instructive one, and may be referred to. In that case, Hope Johnstone, the husband, conveyed certain property in trust for the benefit of his wife for life, 'or so long as she shall continue the cohabiting wife or widow.' It was there contended that this was an inducement to separation, and hence void; that a separation would result beneficially to the husband; and that he could, by improper treatment of the wife, bring about a separation and reap the benefit of his wrongful conduct. The court brushed these arguments aside and sustained the contract. The case is squarely in point."

The character of contract with which we are dealing is a favorite of the law and will not be held invalid for trifling or technical reasons. Wherever they are fair and free from fraud and concealment, the courts delight to enforce them when it can be done by reconciling the facts under which they are executed with the well recognized rules of law governing the execution and validity of contracts. Hence, it is stated in 21 Cyc. page 1242: "Such settlements have long been favored by courts of equity, provided that the rights of third persons have not been infringed." And, in the notes to the case of Becker v. Becker [241 Ill. 423, 89 N. E.

737], 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 858, upon this and other points considered in this case, it is said:

"Marriage is a sufficient consideration to support an antenuptial agreement, either between the immediate contracting parties or third persons. Indeed it is ranked as among the most valuable of considerations, although distinguishable from other valuable considerations in that it is not capable of being reduced to a value which can be expressed in dollars and cents, and also in that, after the marriage, the status cannot be changed by setting it aside, rescinding, or canceling it, and hence the parties cannot be placed in status quo. Therefore sound policy requires the enforcement of contracts entered into prior thereto and which induced the marriage. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 2 Myl. & C. (Eng.) 192; North [75] v. Ansell, 2 P. Wms. (Eng.) 618; Mitford v. Mitford, 9 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 87; Corbie v. Free, C. & Ph. (Eng.) 64; Burridge v. Row, 1 Y. & C. Ch. (Eng.) 583; Turner v. Warren, 160 Pa. St. 336, 28 Atl. 781; Metz v. Blackburn, 9 Wyo. 481, 65 Pac. 857; Barnes v. Barnes, 110 Cal. 418, 42 Pac. 904.

"It is a rule of law established at an early time that, in the interpretation of covenants, they will be construed to be either dependent or independent of each other, according to the intention and meaning of the parties and the good sense of the case, and technical words will be construed according to such intention. So, where a covenant goes only to part of the consideration on both sides, and a breach of such covenant may be paid for in damages, it is an independent covenant, and an action can be maintained for the breach of the covenant on the part of the defendant without averring performance in the declaration. This rule is enforced with great liberality as to covenants contained in marriage settlements, and such covenants will be held to be independent rather than dependent, unless the clear language of the contract requires a contrary holding, at least where, to hold that the covenant was dependent would be to defeat the right to the performance of an antenuptial marriage settlement, the primary consideration of which was marriage."

We have read with great care and interest the brief of counsel for appellant, manifesting as it does, great earnestness and zeal in behalf of his client to the effect, that the provision in the contract under consideration, for alimony, being void, vitiates the entire contract, but we must confess that he has failed to convince us with his views. On the contrary, we are constrained to the conclusion that the trial court in holding the stipulation for the payment of the $25,000.00 to the appellant as the widow of her deceased husband in lieu of all other property in his estate, is the correct view of the law as applicable to the facts found in this record.

By the judgment, the court allowed to appellant as administratrix certain items which are contested by cross-appeal prosecuted by appellee. The matters thus drawn in question by the cross-appeal are: A credit for poultry feed amounting to $40.05; one paid to Otto Breen for taking care of the home place at Crestwood, $115.00; bill of costs paid to the clerk of the Oldham circuit court, $29.20; $800.00, which is alleged to be a [76] balance of some express checks carried by the couple on their trip abroad, and which were made payable to Mrs. Stratton before their departure; $2,000.00 being the amount of a draft which had been ordered by the husband to be sent to the wife at Chicago and made payable to her; $6,055.00 as commission allowed to her as administratrix, and $1,000.00 allowed to her as attorneys' fee. There is also complaint on the cross-appeal that the court refused to charge the appellant as administratrix with rents for the homestead during the time that she has occupied it since her husband's death.

As to the first three of these items it is sufficient to say, that, as we have stated in the beginning, there has been much bitter and protracted litigation between the appellant and appellee concerning the estate of Mr. Stratton. Even the right of the appellant to administer upon his estate is questioned and was bitterly fought. There is a total absence of harmony or kind feelings existing between the parties. The trial court was fully aware of all of this and with the entire record before him he made the allowances in question, and we are not disposed, especially in view of their comparative insignificance, to question his ruling in this particular.

As to the item of $6,055.00 for commissions, section 3883 of the Kentucky Statutes provides, that the allowance to a personal representative shall not exceed five per cent on the amounts received and distributed by him. It is further therein provided, however, that allowance may be made to him for extraordinary services in the discharge of his duties in attending to, and administering the estate in his hands, but such allowance shall not exceed the amount of a fair compensation "for the time occupied and expenses incurred in protecting, attending to, collecting, and settling such estate, and five per cent on all amounts received and distributed." This court has held in a number of cases that where the property was distributed in kind, and the administrator was put to no trouble or comparatively none, he should not be allowed the maximum sum of five per cent of the value of the property thus distributed. (Stanberry v. Robinson, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 309, 27 S. W. 973; Fidelity Trust, etc. Co. v. Watkins, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 957, 42 S. W. 753; Garr v. Roy, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1697, 50 S. W. 25; Glover v. Cheek, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1281, 71 S. W. 438; Reed v. Reed, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2186, 66 S. W. 819; Clark v. Young, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2395, 74 S. W. 245.) It was furthermore held [77] in these cases that because the personalty was distributed in kind, it did not necessarily follow that the personal representative should not be allowed anything for his services, but that in such cases the court should make a reasonable allowance to him to be governed by the facts of each case. In the Glover case, supra, there came into the hands of the personal representative for actual distribution, only $52,797.09. Bequests in the will were satisfied by the transfer to the devisees, shares of the capital stock of certain corporations. There was also some litigation concerning the estate, but this court determined that the personal representative should be allowed $5,000.00, which was nearly ten per cent of the amount which actually came into his hands for distribution. To have allowed five per cent on the entire amount of personal property belonging to the decedent would have amounted to much more than this.

In the Stanberry case, supra, there came into the hands of the personal representative stocks and bonds of the value of $213,924.23, which he distributed in kind, and the court made him an allowance for these services the sum of $6,000.00, which, upon appeal to this court, was affirmed.

The allowance complained of here is substantially the same as that in the Stanberry case, although the amount of the property involved is not quite so large. In view of these decisions and the size of this estate, after reviewing the record, we are not inclined to dispute the correctness of the judgment of the court in fixing this allowance.

As to the attorneys' fee, what we have said will largely apply to it. Matters of this character are necessarily left largely to the discretion of the trial court. That the appellant was entitled to have a reasonable attorneys' fee allowed to her cannot be questioned, and without further elaborating this opinion we are not disposed to criticize the action of the court below in fixing this fee at $1,000.00.

As to the two items of $800.00 and $2,000.00, the proof shows that these sums were given to the appellant by her husband, and although it might have been the expectation that they would be consumed in paying the expenses of their trip, still there is nothing to show that he intended or expected that his wife should account to him for any of this money upon their return, or that [78] he had any other purpose in view than to divest himself of these sums and to vest his wife with absolute ownership therein. We are acquainted with no law whereby the wife should be charged by her husband's estate with money which he may have advanced to her in his lifetime, in the absence of some kind of understanding to that effect.

As we have seen, the only person interested in this estate, besides the widow, is the appellant, whose home is in the State of Oregon. The statutes provide that the widow shall have a right to occupy the homestead of the deceased husband until allotment of dower, homestead, or the estate is otherwise distributed. We are not inclined to the opinion that, because there was an antenuptial contract, the widow was thereby deprived of this right given to her by the statutes. The effect of the contract is to limit the estate which the widow, as one of the distributees of decedent, may take in her deceased husband's property. It does not affect any other right which she may have as widow. Moreover, as the only other interested person in the estate of the decedent was a non-resident and lived a great distance from the homestead, and it being necessary to the preservation of the property that it should be occupied and looked after, all of which was beneficial to the heir, we are not disposed to permit the latter under such circumstances to charge the widow with rent when her occupancy was beneficial to the property which was inherited by the heir.

It results, therefore, that the judgment on both the appeal and cross-appeal should be, and it is affirmed.

Whole court sitting.

NOTE.

Effect of Partial Invalidity of Antenuptial Contract.

There appears to be but little authority with respect to the effect on an antenuptial contract of the invalidity of one of the provisions embodied therein.

In the reported case it appeared that the parties to a proposed marriage entered into an antenuptial agreement containing a stipulation for the payment of a certain sum to the wife on the death of the husband, in lieu of all other interests which she would otherwise obtain from his estate. The agreement also contained a void stipulation for the payment of alimony in case the parties should become divorced. The court holds that as the agreement was based on a valid consideration, namely that of marriage, the promise to make the payment in lieu of the widow's dower interest was enforceable, notwithstanding there was associated with it the illegal promise to pay alimony which was based on the same consideration as the other promise.

In Bibelhausen v. Bibelhausen, 150 Wis. 365, 150 N. W. 516, an action by a widow to impeach and cancel an antenuptial agreement, it appeared that by the terms of the agreement she released all her future claims to her intended husband's property or estate, including the dower right, in consideration of the marriage and of $500. The release was to be operative in case of his death or the parties otherwise separating. Holding that under the circumstances of the case the release was not invalid, the court said: "It is observed that counsel claim the trial court pronounced the release void as against public policy, because of the feature designed to preclude the intended wife from having any claim on Mr. Bibelhausen's estate in addition to the stipulated $500, in the event of a separation of the parties after marriage. If such be the case, we are unable to discover it from the court's opinion, nor does it seem to have support, as an original proposition. . . . Such an agreement might be an inducement to separate, and might promote continuance of the marriage relations, according to circumstances. In the particular case, the added clause might not have been binding upon the condition happening requisite to its vitality. Such condition did not happen, and the particular feature does not, necessarily, militate against the dominant purpose of the instrument."

The case of Appleby v. Appleby, 100 Minn. 408, 10 Ann. Cas. 563, 111 N. W. 305, 117 Am. St. Rep. 709, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 590, is based on the same principle as that of Bibelhausen v. Bibelhausen, supra, and is set out at length in the reported case.

As to the general validity of an antenuptial agreement for the release of dower or a like interest in the property of the intended spouse, see the notes to Kroell v. Kroell, 4 Ann. Cas. 801; Rieger v. Schaible, 16 Ann. Cas. 700; Hannon v. Hannon, Ann. Cas. 1914B 616. The effect on an antenuptial agreement for the release of dower or a like interest, of the failure of the consideration for the agreement, is discussed in the note to Dickason v. English, Ann. Cas. 1918A 1165.

BABB ET AL.

v.

STATE.

Arizona Supreme Court—February 26, 1917.

18 Arizona 505; 163 Pac. 259.

Witnesses — Credibility — Effect of False Testimony — Instructions.

In prosecution for stealing horses, where impeaching testimony was taken, it is error to instruct that the testimony of impeaching witnesses should be weighed in the same manner as that of other witnesses, and, when impeaching witnesses attack the credibility of others and testify falsely, the jury might disregard entirely the impeaching testimony in so far as false and give to the testimony of the witnesses attacked such weight and credence as is deserved.

Same.

An instruction to disregard false testimony must be conditioned on the witness wilfully or knowingly swearing falsely, and the omission of the qualifying words "wilfully and corruptly" is error.

Instruction as to Credibility — Singling Out Particular Witness.

In prosecution for horse stealing, instruction that if testimony of a witness, naming him, had been attacked through bias, and that if beyond a reasonable doubt such witness testified truthfully, his testimony should have the same weight and credence as that of any other witnesses, is erroneous and prejudicial as singling out the testimony of a single witness and giving undue prominence to an isolated fact.

Invasion of Province of Jury — Positive and Negative Testimony.

In prosecution for horse stealing, instruction that positive evidence of one credible witness is entitled to more weight than the testimony of several witnesses who testify negatively or to collateral circumstances is erroneous, as invasive of the jury's province to determine the weight of evidence.

Jury — Custody and Conduct — Reading Newspapers.

Under Pen. Code 1913, § 1063, providing that the jury may be placed in charge of officer, whose duty it is to keep jurors together until reconvention of court, to suffer no person to speak to them, nor to do so himself on any subject connected with the trial, and section 1064, requiring the jury to be admonished not to converse among themselves on any subject connected with the trial, or to anyone else, or to form or express any opinion until the cause is finally submitted, it is error to permit one juror to have in his possession and read to the others a newspaper account, reciting a former charge of larceny against one of the defendants.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Maricopa county: PHILLIPS, Judge.

Criminal action. Harry Babb et al., convicted of horse stealing, and appeal. REVERSED.

[506] The appellants ask for a reversal of this case on the ground that the court misdirected the jury as to the law and for misconduct of the jury. The instructions complained of are as follows:

"(1) Where witnesses have appeared and sworn to matters tending to impeach the veracity of other witnesses, you will judge and weigh the testimony of said impeaching witnesses in the same manner as that of any other witness, and when such witnesses have attacked the credibility of any other witness and you believe from the evidence in this case that said impeaching witnesses have testified falsely, you may disregard entirely such impeaching testimony as appears to you to be false, and give to the testimony of the witnesses who have been attacked such weight and credence as you believe he deserves.

[507] "(2) And I charge you, gentlemen of the jury, that if you believe that the testimony of the witness Dean Becker has been attacked by witnesses through prejudice and bias or some special interest in this case, you may consider that fact in determining how much weight and credence you will give to the testimony of said impeaching witnesses, and I charge you, further, that in considering the testimony of said witness Dean Becker you should take into consideration all the surrounding facts and circumstances, and in connection therewith, and taking into account the probability or improbability of the truth of his story, and if from all the evidence, facts and circumstances brought out on this trial it appears to you beyond a reasonable doubt that the said witness Dean Becker has testified truthfully, then you should give his testimony the same weight and credence as any other witness

"(3) The positive testimony, gentlemen of the jury, of one credible witness to a fact, which in the light of all other evidence in the case appears reasonable and believable, is entitled to more weight than the testimony of several witnesses, equally credible, who testify negatively, or to collateral circumstances merely persuasive in their character from which a negative may be inferred."

(4) The misconduct of the jury is presented in the form of an affidavit of one of the appellants upon motion for a new trial. In the affidavit it is stated that the trial of the cause was begun on the twelfth day of February, 1914, and continued from day to day until the afternoon of the nineteenth day of February, when the case was finally submitted to the jury; that the verdict of guilty was returned on the twentieth day of February; that the jury was ordered to be kept together, that officers were sworn to take charge of it and keep it together during the trial; that on the nineteenth day of February, 1914, a certain article was published in the "Arizona Republic" purporting to relate certain facts of and concerning the commission of the offense charged and that the following statement appearing in said article, among others, to wit:

"Phillips has formerly been in trouble in Yuma, where it is alleged he embezzled several dollars from a former employer [508] and was saved from the penitentiary only because he made good on the cash taken."

That the things contained in said statement were not presented to the jury in the course of the trial, either before or after the above publication, in any other manner than through the newspaper; that on the day of its publication and while the case was still pending before the jury a copy of the "Arizona Republic," containing said article, came into the possession of the jury, and that they and each of them read said article; that one of said jurors read said article aloud to the other jurors while they were being held together, and before they had arrived at the verdict.

Alexander & Christy for appellants.

Wiley E. Jones, George W. Harben and R. W. Kramer for appellee.

Ross, J. (after stating the facts).—1. The appellants were charged with stealing five head of horses. The evidence relied upon by the prosecution for conviction was both direct and circumstantial, and both the prosecution and defense introduced a great deal of impeaching evidence. Just why it was thought necessary by the court to limit the application of the rule "Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," to the impeaching testimony it is difficult to determine. Certainly the basis for such an instruction does not exist in this record, as there was a sharp and irreconcilable conflict in the direct evidence of the witnesses, as well as in the impeaching evidence. We see no reason why the application of this principle of law should have been restricted to one fragment of the testimony instead of the whole testimony.

The first instruction is subject to further criticism, in that it omits the element of knowledge or willfulness. "An instruction to disregard false testimony must be conditioned on the witness willfully or knowingly swearing falsely, and the omission of the qualifying words 'willfully and corruptly' is error." Blashfield's Instructions to Juries, § 383. The jury ought not to be advised that they may disregard the testimony of a witness who has testified falsely to one fact or in [509] respect to one fact, for the reason that the rest of his testimony may be true and fully supported by credible corroboration. The instruction calls the attention of the jury to their right to disregard the impeaching testimony when it appears to be false, and at the same time enjoins on them the duty of weighing the impeached or attacked evidence. The same rule should be applied to both; neither should be given prominence over the other.

2. The appellants say that the second instruction is erroneous—"because the evidence in the case was conflicting, and the court in said instruction singled out the witness Becker for the prosecution in the instruction, and made the acquittal of the defendants upon whether or not the jury believed him."

The vice in the first instruction is greatly intensified by the language of this instruction, for, in addition to directing the jury's attention to particular facts and phases of the testimony, this instruction singles out the most important witness for the prosecution, and practically tells the jury that if they believe his testimony, they should convict the appellants. Becker had testified that he lived at the home of appellant Babb; that he had seen the stolen horses in Babb's field; that he had assisted the appellant Phillips at night in taking the horses out of the field and removing them some twelve or fifteen miles therefrom in order to avoid detection. Both of the appellants deny this, and several witnesses for the defense testify that at the time mentioned the horses were not in appellants' possession or field. The importance of Becker's testimony is apparent—should the jury believe it, there were circumstances in the case that made the appellants' guilt inevitable.

The instruction, after directing the jury's attention to the possible bias and prejudice or special interests of the witnesses whose testimony conflicted with Becker's, advised them that if they believed Becker beyond a reasonable doubt, they "should give his testimony the same weight and credence as any other witness." Of course the "weight and credence" given to any witness believed "beyond a reasonable doubt" is absolute verity. In effect, therefore, the jury were told that if they believed Becker, they should convict the appellants. It is hard to imagine an instruction more damaging [510] or prejudicial than this one. In 12 Cyc. 649, the rule is stated as follows:

"The court should be careful in charging the jury and stating the evidence not to give undue prominence to any phase or facts which the evidence tends to establish, but to leave the jury to determine its weight and importance. It is therefore proper to refuse, and generally error to give, an instruction which singles out or emphasizes particular parts of the evidence or gives undue prominence to isolated facts, or which directs the attention of the jury to a particular fact among a great number of facts. An instruction which singles out certain witnesses and makes an acquittal depend upon whether or not the jury believe them is error where the evidence is conflicting. So the court cannot select a particular witness, or class of witnesses, and instruct that if the jury believe he, or they willfully testified falsely as to any material fact, they may reject or distrust all their evidence."

The instruction gave undue prominence to "an isolated fact," the testimony tending to impeach Becker and to "a particular fact among a great number of facts." It singled out a certain witness and made the acquittal of appellants depend upon his testimony; the evidence being conflicting. In Schultz v. State, 125 Wis. 452, 104 N. W. 90, the court said:

"It is not proper for the court to select one witness from several and apply to him or his testimony exclusively rules of consideration equally applicable to others." 38 Cyc. 1680; Loose v. State, 120 Wis. 115, 97 N. W. 526; Wastl v. Montana Union R. Co. 17 Mont. 213, 42 Pac. 772.

3. In the third instruction the court clearly comments upon the weight of the testimony, wherein he tells the jury that the positive evidence of one credible witness is entitled to more weight than the testimony of several witnesses who testify negatively or to collateral circumstances. In those jurisdictions wherein the judge is not prohibited by statute or organic law from instructing the jury with respect to matters of fact, nor from commenting on matters of fact, instructions with reference to the relative weight of positive and negative testimony, when properly qualified or limited to the facts of the case, are allowed, but, even in those jurisdictions, if the witnesses who testify positively and those who testify negatively have equal opportunities of seeing and hearing, the rule that positive [511] evidence is the better must be so modified and explained as that the jury, if they so choose, may resolve the controversy in favor of the negative testimony. It is said in one case:

"Evidence of a negative nature may, under particular circumstances, not only be equal, but superior to positive evidence. This must always depend upon the question whether the negative testimony can be attributed to inattention, error, or defect of memory, and whether the witnesses had equal means and opportunities for ascertaining the facts to which they testify and exercise the same. . . . It has been often held that it is not true, as a matter of law, that negative evidence may not be sufficient to overbalance positive testimony (citing authorities). In such cases, the jury or judge have to weigh, consider, and decide for themselves somewhat regardless of general rules." State v. Chevalier, 36 La. Ann. 81.

Blashfield's Instructions to Juries, section 337, says:

"In the jurisdictions where the statutory or organic provisions exist, prohibiting the trial court from expressing any opinion as to the weight of evidence, such an instruction is erroneous."

Our Constitution (section 12, article 6) provides:

"Judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact nor comment thereon, but shall declare the law."

To tell the jury that positive evidence is stronger than negative evidence, or that the evidence of one witness may outweigh the evidence of several witnesses, is clearly a charge upon matters of fact and a comment thereon. It is a usurpation of the powers and duties of the jury. The court's duties are limited to a declaration of the law. When evidence has been admitted as competent and material in a case, it is the exclusive function of the jury to pass upon its weight and credibility. Erickson v. State, 14 Ariz. 253, 127 Pac. 754; Lujan v. State, 16 Ariz. 123, 141 Pac. 706; Blashfield's Instructions to Juries, § 116; 12 Cyc. 599-632; Haun v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. 22 Utah 346, 62 Pac. 908; Russell v. Oregon R. etc. Co. 54 Ore. 128, 102 Pac. 619.

4. Under the order of the court the jury was placed in charge of a sworn officer, whose duty it was "to keep the jurors together until the next meeting of the court, to suffer no [512] person to speak to them or communicate with them, nor to do so himself, on any subject connected with the trial." Section 1063, Penal Code 1913.

It is further provided that: "The jury shall also, at each adjournment of the court, whether permitted to separate or kept in charge of officers, be admonished by the court that it is their duty not to converse among themselves, or with anyone else, on any subject connected with the trial, or to form or express any opinion thereon until the cause is finally submitted to them." Section 1064, Id.

Thus it will be seen that the law has provided by very strict rules that the jury shall not, after being sworn, receive any evidence outside of the court in the due course of the trial or be subject to any extrajudicial influences or suggestions whatever during the pendency of the case. Notwithstanding these precautions of the law, the jury was permitted to obtain on the last day of the trial, that had lasted six days, a copy of a newspaper, stating that one of the appellants had been guilty of a felony, to wit, embezzlement, and that he was saved from the penitentiary only because he made good on the cash taken. One of the jurors, it is shown, read the article aloud to all the other jurors. It was new matter, foreign to the issue on trial, and could not, by any rule of evidence, have been introduced before the jury. The natural and inevitable result, it would seem, of permitting such a charge to come before the jury without any opportunity to explain it away, even if it had been competent evidence, would be to influence and prejudice the jury against the appellants. They might well have reasoned that if the appellant, Phillips, was a common criminal, the probabilities were that he was guilty of the crime for which he was on trial.

While it is not a commendable practice to permit juries to read from newspapers detailed statements of the evidence when correctly reported, it is not apparent that any prejudice would be created in the minds of the jury against the defendant; therefore courts have uniformly refused to grant new trials by reason thereof. But where a newspaper report has departed from a fair and honest statement of the evidence and has interpolated facts derogatory to the defendant and likely to excite passion and prejudice on the part of the jury [513] against the defendant, the courts, as a general rule, have not hesitated to grant new trials. As was said in Capps v. State, 109 Ark. 193, Ann. Cas. 1915C 957, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 741, 150 S. W. 193; quoting from Styles v. State, 129 Ga. 425, 12 Ann. Cas. 176, 59 S. E. 249.

"When a juror enters upon the trial of a criminal case, the law contemplates his withdrawal from the public, and makes no provision for addresses to him from outside sources, for his entertainment or otherwise, which are calculated, directly or indirectly, to excite any passions or emotions with respect to the matter upon which he is to sit in judgment. Perfect impartiality in the juror is the object of the law. Anything not legitimately arising out of the trial of the case, which tends to destroy the impartiality of the juror, should be discountenanced."

See also U. S. v. Ogden, 105 Fed. 371; State v. Tilden, 27 Idaho 262, 147 Pac. 1056; People v. Stokes, 103 Cal. 193, 42 Am. St. Rep. 102, 37 Pac. 207; People v. Leary, 105 Cal. 486, 39 Pac. 24; People v. Chin Non, 146 Cal. 561, 80 Pac. 681.

It is claimed by the respondent that the jury in this case could not have honestly or intelligently returned any other verdict than the one they did, and therefore this court should affirm the judgment. It is difficult for this court to say what the verdict of the jury might have been if they had been correctly instructed as to the law, or if they had not read the newspaper article complained of. The evidence consists of 800 pages of typewritten matter; we have read it sufficiently to discover that there is great conflict of testimony. We do not feel like assuming the functions of the jury and determining the weight of the testimony, especially in view of the palpable misdirection of the jury as to the law and the possible and indeed probable, prejudice and bias created in the minds of the jury against the appellants by reason of the very damaging statement contained in the newspaper.

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—59.

Judgment of the lower court is reversed and cause remanded, with the directions that appellants be granted a new trial.

Franklin, C. J., concurs.

NOTE.

It is held in the reported case that the reading by the jury in a criminal case of a newspaper which contains a statement derogatory to the accused with respect to a matter wholly extraneous to the issue on trial is ground for a new trial. The reading of newspapers by a jury during the trial as a ground for setting aside the verdict is discussed in the notes to the following cases: Fields v. Dewitt, 6 Ann. Cas. 349; Styles v. State, 12 Ann. Cas. 176; Capps v. State, Ann. Cas. 1915C 957; and Com. v. Fisher, 134 Am. St. Rep. 1027.

POOLE

v.

POOLE ET AL.

Kansas Supreme Court—July 10, 1915.

96 Kan. 84; 150 Pac. 592.

Husband and Wife — Power of Husband to Dispose of Personality.

The general rule is that the law has placed no restriction or limitation on the husband's right to make such disposition of his personal property during his lifetime as he may elect. [See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Where the transfer or gift is colorable and there is a voluntary transfer or conveyance by which the husband reserves to himself an interest in or a power to dispose of the property, it may be declared void as against the widow and she may participate in its distribution upon the theory that the title still remained in the husband at his death.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

A widow sued as an heir of her deceased husband to set aside gifts and transfers of personal property made by him to the defendants, who are his sons by a former marriage. The transfers were made without the wife's knowledge, when the husband was eighty-three years of age and possessed of no other property, and immediately following the dismissal of an action brought by her for separate maintenance, that action having been settled upon his conveying to her certain real estate and agreeing to pay her a monthly allowance. The court found that he made the gifts and transfers to his sons in anticipation that he would not live long and to prevent the plaintiff from inheriting a share in the property as his widow, and in the further anticipation of the probability that the resumption of the marriage relation with plaintiff would not last long or be permanent, and that she might separate from him and bring another action for alimony or divorce, and to defeat her right to a division of his property, held, following Small v. Small, 56 Kan. 1, 42 Pac. 323, 30 L.R.A. 243, 54 Am. St. Rep. 581, that the gifts to the sons not being colorable but absolute transfers of the title to the property, binding upon the grantor, are binding upon the heirs, and cannot be attacked by the widow as made in bad faith because of the intent thereby to deprive her of an interest in the property either as wife or widow.

[See note at end of this case.]

Gifts — Property Subject — Note Payable to Donor's Estate.

Where a person takes a note payable to his estate he does not thereby deprive himself of the right to dispose of it during his lifetime.

Witnesses — Competency — Transaction with Person Since Deceased — Waiver.

The incompetency of a witness to testify concerning communications or transactions had with a person since deceased is waived by the objecting party showing on cross-examination the fact that such a communication or transaction occurred.

(Syllabus by court.)

Appeal from District Court, Geary county:
KING, Judge.

Action by Emaline D. Poole, plaintiff, against John Poole et al., defendants. From judgment rendered, all parties appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Lee Monroe and W. S. Roark for plaintiff.

John E. Hessin and J. V. Humphrey for defendants.

[85] PORTER, J.—This suit was brought by Emaline D. Poole as administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband, William D. Poole, and in her own right as his widow and heir at law. The defendants are the four sons of the deceased. The plaintiff seeks to cancel certain releases, transfers and surrenders of property made by William D. Poole in his lifetime to the defendants, and the prayer of the petition asked for judgment in her own right for the sum of $8,000 and interest upon a note executed by the defendants to William D. Poole, and for the foreclosure of a mortgage securing the note.

In addition to the general denial the answer pleaded a written release of the note and mortgage by William D. Poole in his lifetime and denied that the defendants had in their possession or control any property belonging to their father at the time of his death. The court made findings of fact in substance as follows:

1. In 1903 William D. Poole was a widower and owned 2,400 acres of farm land in Geary county where he resided, and also owned about 200 head of cattle. On March 26, 1903, he conveyed 843 acres of the land to his four sons, reserving a life estate to himself, and at the same time conveyed to them the balance of the 2,400 acres without any reservation. On the same date the sons gave him their note by which they promised at his death to pay to his estate the sum of $8,000 with eight per cent interest per annum from maturity. The note was secured by a mortgage upon the 843 acres of land in which he had reserved the life estate.

2. In May, 1904, William D. Poole turned over to his sons, the defendants, about 200 head of cattle under an oral agreement [86] by which the sons at the end of five years were to turn back to him cattle of like kind or value, and on the same day he rented to his sons the 843 acres of land subject to his use of the homestead and dwelling house thereon, in consideration of which the sons agreed to pay him thereafter an annual rental of $1,630. The sons were partners and carried on a farming and stock business under the name of Poole Brothers and continued in this during all the times mentioned in the findings.

3. In October, 1904, when William D. Poole was seventy-six years of age and the plaintiff was fifty-four years of age, they were married, the plaintiff at the time having full knowledge of the transfer and conveyance of the property mentioned in findings 1 and 2.

4. In May, 1907, William D. Poole gave to his sons all his interest in the 200 head of cattle and released them from the payment of the annual rent for the 843 acres of land, in consideration of which the sons agreed to pay him from time to time such sums of money as he should require or ask for, and under this arrangement the sons paid him at different times from March, 1910, to May, 1911, sums aggregating $3,485.

5. In November, 1910, William D. Poole and his wife went to California for the benefit of his health and remained there about nine months.

6. While in California they had domestic troubles and separated and the wife brought suit there for alimony and separate maintenance, claiming in the action that he owned the $8,000 note and mortgage and five shares of stock in a bank at Manhattan and other property in Geary county, Kansas. The old gentleman telegraphed for his youngest son, Grover, to come to him, and in response the son went to California and negotiated a settlement with the plaintiff of the suit for alimony. In the settlement William D. Poole conveyed to her four unimproved lots in Junction City of the value of $1,200 or $1,300, and agreed to pay her $25 a month for her use and benefit and to pay the taxes on the Junction City property, and also paid her attorney's fees in the action amounting to $250. The action was then dismissed and the parties resumed their relations as husband and wife and shortly thereafter returned to Kansas. The court expressly found that the plaintiff insisted [87] in the settlement of the California case that the note for the $8,000 should be transferred to her for her security and protection, but that this was not acceded to by William D. Poole and that it was not included in the settlement.

7. Soon after the settlement of the suit for alimony, and while William D. Poole and his son Grover were still in California, William D. Poole secretly, without the knowledge of the wife, transferred and delivered the certificate for the five shares of bank stock to Grover Poole, in the name of and for the use and benefit of Poole Brothers, and at the same time delivered to him a written release of the $8,000 note secured by the mortgage on the 843 acres of land. The shares of bank stock and the mortgage in question constituted all the property that William D. Poole owned or had left. This transfer, at the time he was eighty-three years of age and in poor health, was made without consideration and in contemplation and expectation on his part, and on the part of his son Grover, that the old gentleman would not live long and that his wife would probably survive him and be one of the heirs to whatever property he owned at his death, and were also made by William D. Poole in consideration of the probability that the resumption of the marriage relation with plaintiff would not last long or be permanent, and that she might separate from him and bring another action for alimony, or divorce and alimony, for which reasons the transfer of the bank stock and the release of the mortgage were made in bad faith by William D. Poole and were accepted by Grover Poole on behalf of the defendants in order to defeat the plaintiff's right as an heir to this property in case she survived him, or to defeat her right to a division of this property in case another suit should be brought by her for alimony, or divorce and alimony.

8. The note and mortgage having been lost, were not delivered to the defendants. The plaintiff offered testimony tending to show that the signature of William D. Poole to the release was a forgery. On this issue the court found the signature to be genuine.

9. The transfer of the property mentioned in finding No. 1. and the gift of the cattle and also the release of Poole Brothers from payment of rent on the 843 acres were all made in good faith at the time when there was no difficulty or domestic [88] trouble between the plaintiff and William D. Poole, and with no intention to defraud the plaintiff.

10. After the parties returned from California to Kansas the plaintiff again separated from her husband and brought an action for divorce and alimony, which action was never tried but abated by the death of the husband.

11. William D. Poole died November 24, 1911, intestate, the few debts that he owed being fully paid by his sons. He left surviving him as his heirs the parties to this suit.

12. A half interest in the amount due on the $8,000 note is $4,487.08, and a half interest in the value of the bank stock is $545.64.

13. There was no completed gift, transfer or delivery of the $8,000 note by William D. Poole, to the plaintiff.

14. Defendants John, William and Bryant Poole, ratified all that their brother Grover did in taking and receiving the written release and transfer of the bank stock.

As conclusions of law the court found that the plaintiff has no interest in the 2,400 acres of land nor in the cattle and rents; but that she is entitled as an heir to a half interest in the note and mortgage and the same interest in the bank stock. She was therefore given judgment against defendants for one-half of the amount due on the note, for the foreclosure of the mortgage, and for one-half the value of the bank stock.

There are two appeals, neither side being satisfied with the judgment. The defendants' main contention, briefly summarized, is that the plaintiff's suit is grounded upon her rights under the statute of descents and distributions; that since she is not a creditor of the deceased her suit must fail because as an heir she is only entitled to one-half the property belonging to the husband at the time of his death; that he had the right in his lifetime to dispose of it as he pleased since it belonged to him.

The findings of fact exclude the idea that the gifts were "colorable," and, on the contrary, show an actual transfer of the title and ownership of the property to the sons. In Small v. Small, 56 Kan. 1, 42 Pac. 323, 54 Am. St. Rep. 581, 30 L.R.A. 243, it was held that the statute of descents and distributions is in no respect a limitation on the right of the husband while living to dispose of his personal property by gift in accordance with his wishes and with the [89] express intent of depriving his widow of any interest therein as an heir. The syllabus in that case reads:

"Subject to certain limitations not applicable to this case, and as against any post-mortem claim of his widow, a married man, in Illinois or in Kansas, may, during coverture, give away to his children absolutely the bulk of his property, when the known effect of the gift will be to deprive the widow of the fair share of the property which otherwise would have fallen to her."

The case of Small v. Small, supra, is reported with annotations in 30 L.R.A. 243, and in 54 Am. St. Rep. 581. The general rule is that the law has placed no restriction or limitation on the husband's right to make such disposition of his personal property during his lifetime as he may elect. In Padfield v. Padfield, 78 Ill. 16, it was said:

"To hold that a feme covert has a vested interest in her husband's personal estate, that he is unable to divest in his lifetime, would be disastrous in the extreme to trade and commerce." (p. 20.)

The general rule is not recognized, however, in some jurisdictions. The decisions of some of the courts are based upon statutes giving the wife dower in personal property. (See cases cited in Note, 10 Ann. Cas. 1053.) Where the transfer or gift is merely colorable and there is a voluntary transfer or conveyance by which the husband reserves to himself an interest in or a power to dispose of the property, it may be declared void as against the widow and she may participate in its distribution upon the theory that the title still remained in the husband. (Small v. Small, supra; Padfield v. Padfield, supra; Thayer v. Thayer, 14 Vt. 107, 39 Am. Dec. 211; Cameron v. Cameron, 10 Smedes & M. (18 Miss.) 394, 48 Am. Dec. 759; Lightfoot v. Colgin, 5 Munf. (Va.) 42; Stewart v. Stewart, 5 Conn. 317; Dunnoch v. Dunnoch, 3 Md. Ch. 140; Jones v. Somerville, 78 Miss. 269, 28 So. 940, 84 Am. St. Rep. 627.)

At the time the note and mortgage and the bank stock were transferred to the sons the plaintiff and William D. Poole had settled their domestic difficulties, and so far as the evidence shows lived together amicably for several months thereafter. She had dismissed her action for separate maintenance and by the settlement had obtained from her husband valuable property rights and an agreement for the payment of a monthly allowance. Aside from the facts that they had had domestic [90] difficulties and that she had brought her suit in California there was no evidence, at least none is set forth in the abstracts, tending to show that either the husband or the sons anticipated that she would begin another suit for support or for divorce and alimony. It must be said, therefore, that the evidence to sustain the finding that the gifts were made in anticipation that she would begin another suit is very slight, and of course the burden of proof was upon plaintiff to show that the transfers were fraudulent.

We are not left in any doubt as to the exact theory upon which the trial court proceeded in arriving at the conclusion that the transfers should be set aside. The written opinion of the court is set forth in the abstract, from which it appears that the court held the transfers fraudulent because their purpose was to defeat the marital rights of the wife and to deprive her of rights as an heir. The court in the opinion stated the law to be as declared in 14 Cyc. 68, under the title "Descents and Distributions," as follows:

"A sale, gift, or other transfer of personal property, however, made fraudulently for the mere purpose of depriving the wife of her distributive share is invalid as to her."

In the same paragraph in Cyc. it is stated that:

"As to personal property, the rule is that the husband may deprive his wife of her distributive share by a sales gift, or other transfer made in good faith during his lifetime."

Then follows the excerpt quoted by the court. In the opinion the trial court further said that the case of Small v. Small "is not at variance with the authorities above referred to for the decision in the Small cases states that the transfers in question there were made in good faith." The cases cited in Note 37 (14 Cyc. 68) in support of the text relied upon by the trial court are directly opposed to Small v. Small so far as they hold that the intent to deprive the wife of her distributive share is of itself a fraud upon her. That was the purpose of the husband in the Small case. The "good faith" to which Chief Justice Martin refers in the Small case was not affected in the slightest degree by the fact that the husband made the gifts with the secret intent to deprive the wife of her distributive share. It was in "good faith" notwithstanding such intent because he actually parted with his title; he did not reserve an interest in the property [91] in himself; in other words, the transfer was not colorable. The cases which are fully in accord with Small v. Small are cited in the same page of 14 Cyc. (68) under note 36, from the courts of a dozen states which have held that, although the transfer is made to defeat the rights of the wife, it is not fraudulent if a bona fide transfer is made for that purpose. Among the decisions cited in the note are Padfield v. Padfield, 78 Ill. 16, and Richards v. Richards, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 429. In the Tennessee case the husband gave his property to his children for the purpose of excluding his widow from any share therein and she was held to be without remedy.

Counsel for plaintiff cite a number of cases where in actions brought by the wife for alimony courts have set aside transfers of property made by the husband for the purpose of defeating her action, and in some of the cases cited the transfers were made prior to the commencement of any suit by her. We have examined most of these cases. In some of them the court found that the transfers were fraudulent because the husband retained an interest in the property. (Platner v. Platner, 66 Ia. 378, 23 N. W. 764.) In others the husband had obtained conveyances of his wife's property which he subsequently conveyed fraudulently to a third person. In an action afterwards brought by her for divorce and alimony the transfers were set aside as fraudulent. All of the cases cited were suits where the wife sued the husband. We have found no cases and have been referred to none where the widow claiming under the statute of descents and distributions has been permitted to defeat an actual transfer of personal property made by the husband in his lifetime, on the ground that his purpose was to defeat her marital rights, or to defeat her right to share in the property as his widow and heir. The jus disponendi, which is an incident to the ownership of personal property, is jealously guarded by the courts because it lies at the foundation of trade and commercial transactions; and to restrict or cut down this inherent right of the owner in order to accomplish an equitable division of property between the widow and other heirs is not in accord with sound public policy. (Small v. Small, 56 Kan. 1, 42 Pac. 323, 54 Am. St. Rep. 581, 30 L.R.A. 243; Richards v. Richards, supra.)

It may be conceded that the trial court arrived at a judgment [92] which results in an equitable division between the widow and sons of the property in controversy if it belonged to the deceased at the time of his death. But this is one of the cases where the maxim that "equity follows the law," a maxim said to be quite restricted in scope, must be held to apply. It presents a situation where the rights of the parties are clearly defined and established by law, first, by the statute of descents and distributions under which the plaintiff seeks to recover, and second, by the settled rule of law upon which rests the decision in Small v. Small, supra.

"Wherever the rights or the situation of the parties are clearly defined and established by law, equity has no power to change or unsettle those rights or that situation, but in all such instances the maxim equitas sequitur legem is strictly applicable." (Magniac v. Thomson, 15 How. (U. S.) 281, 299.)

The opinion in Small v. Small quotes with approval (p. 16) the following statement from Williams v. Williams, 40 Fed. 521:

"Of course, the sale or gift must be absolute and bona fide, and not colorable only. And if the sale or gift would bind the grantor, it would bind his heirs." (p. 522.)

The findings show conclusively that there was an actual gift of the cattle to the sons accompanied by delivery; that there was a written release of the note and mortgage; that these transfers were not "colorable." They were bona fide transfers. That they were secret or that knowledge of them was purposely withheld from the wife or that the sons paid no consideration can make no difference. (Small v. Small, 56 Kan. 1, 42 Pac. 323, 54 Am. St. Rep. 581, 30 L.R.A. 243.)

Reliance is placed by plaintiff upon McKelvey v. McKelvey, 79 Kan. 82, 99 Pac. 238, but that case is not in point. The property there was not personalty but real estate, which the husband attempted fraudulently to dispose of by a judicial sale upon a collusive judgment obtained against him, intending, however, to dispose of the land in a way that he could get it back. The transaction was colorable and not an actual one, besides being fraudulent for other reasons.

It must be held, therefore, that the court erred in awarding plaintiff a widow's share in the note, the mortgage securing it, and the bank stock.

In the cross-appeal of the plaintiff she contends that she is [93] entitled to recover her interest as an heir in the value of the cattle and the rentals of the 843 acres of land; that there was no competent evidence to sustain the finding that William D. Poole released the sons from their obligation to pay rent or that he made them a gift of his interest in the cattle. This contention is based upon the claim that the court permitted the sons to testify concerning transactions with a deceased person. The trial court followed the correct rule in permitting the witnesses to testify on the express ground that in the cross-examination plaintiff had brought out the fact that there was some kind of an agreement between the father and sons, and that this opened the door and permitted defendants to show what the agreement was. (Nicolls v. Esterly, 16 Kan. 32; Plowman v. Nicholson, 81 Kan. 210, 105 Pac. 692, 106 Pac. 279.)

Evidence of the agreement having been properly admitted, it is of little consequence whether the other testimony objected to was admissible or not, since the trial was by the court. However, the testimony of the sons denying that they had in their possession or control any property or money belonging to the deceased at his death negatives rather than affirms that there was a communication or transaction with the father in his lifetime. (Murphy v. Hindman, 58 Kan. 184, 48 Pac. 850; Gaston v. Gaston, 83 Kan. 215, 109 Pac. 777; Kerr v. Kerr, 85 Kan. 460, 461, 116 Pac. 880; Coblentz v. Putifer, 87 Kan. 719, 125 Pac. 30, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 298.)

Nor is this testimony open to the objection that it was merely a conclusion of law; it involved at most a mixed question of fact and law.

There is a further contention that the case must be distinguished from Small v. Small, 56 Kan. 1, 42 Pac. 323, because it is said there was an agreement, tacit and expressed, both prior and subsequent to the marriage, that plaintiff should receive one-half this property at his death in compensation for the unusual care and attention he required, and a further express agreement of the same kind as an inducement to the dismissal of the California case. The answer to this is that the findings which the court made exclude the idea that there was any such understanding or agreement. The fact is, the court found against the plaintiff's contentions in this respect. There is an express finding that William D. Poole never acceded to [94] her request that the note and mortgage should be included in the settlement of that action. We find no substantial reason for setting aside the findings. The plaintiff makes another contention rather inconsistent with the last mentioned, namely, that the note having been made payable to the estate of William D. Poole, it was beyond his power to dispose of it. None of the many cases cited supports the contention. Some of them are cases where a person in his lifetime took a note payable direct to his heirs after his decease, or to some third person named. Some of the others are cases where the note was not executed until after the death of the person owning the estate, and was made payable direct to the administrator or to the estate. All that the court decided was that the administrator could maintain an action to recover on the note. We think that there is no force in the contention that William D. Poole constituted himself a trustee for his heirs when he took the note payable to his estate. It was executed eighteen months before he married the plaintiff, and at a time when the only heirs in being were the defendants. As suggested, the contention of the plaintiff is directly opposed to her claim that she is entitled to a share in the note by reason of an agreement made long afterwards. We hold, however, that where a person takes a note payable to his estate he does not thereby deprive himself of the right to dispose of it during his lifetime by accepting payment or by releasing and discharging the obligators. In this case the note was delivered to William D. Poole and remained in his possession and control, so far as the findings show, until it became lost or mislaid.

It follows from what has been said that plaintiff's contentions cannot be sustained, and that the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded with directions to render judgment in favor of defendants.

Burch and Mason JJ., dissenting.

NOTE.

Right of Husband, as against Wife, to Dispose of His Personalty during Coverture.

In General, 934.

Disposition as Affecting Widow's Distributive Share, 935.

Disposition as Affecting Alimony, 936.

In General.

The purpose of this note is to review the recent cases passing on the right of a husband, as against his wife, to dispose of his personalty during coverture. The earlier cases are collected in the notes to Robertson v. Robertson, 10 Ann. Cas. 101; and Lines v. Lines, 24 Am. St. Rep. 487.

The correlative right of a wife to make a gift of her personalty to another than her husband is discussed in the notes to Wright v. Holmes, 4 Ann. Cas. 583; Vosburg v. Mal-lory, Ann. Cas. 1914C 880; and Johnson v. Calley, 99 Am. St. Rep. 884.

No restriction or limitation is made by the law on the power of a husband to make such disposition of his personal property during his lifetime as he may elect. In re Warner, 167 Cal. 686, 140 Pac. 583; Sheckells v. Sheckells, 42 App. Cas. (D. C.) 131; Petty v. Petty, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 215, 39 Am. Dec. 501; Brown v. Fidelity Trust Co. 126 Md. 184, 94 Atl. 523; Poole v. Poole, 129 (Md.) 287, 99 Atl. 551; Schmoltz v. Schmoltz, 116 Mich. 692, 75 N. W. 135; Griffith v. Griffith, 74 Ore. 225, 145 Pac. 270. And see reported case.

In the case of In re Warner, supra, the court said: "The general rule of common law is well stated in 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 834, as follows: 'It may be stated as a general rule that at common law the husband, as against every person except his creditor, has a right to dispose of his personalty in any manner he thinks proper during his lifetime, and during coverture the wife has no interest in the property except so far as the husband may be liable for her support and maintenance.'"

Quoting from Dunnock v. Dunnock, 3 Md. Ch. 146, it was said in Brown v. Fidelity Trust Co. supra: "To hold that either a husband or wife has a vested interest in the other's personality that the one is unable to divest in his or her lifetime, would be disastrous in the extreme to trade and commerce. Owing to commercial necessities, personality must be left free for exchange, and to be so, some one must be vested with full power to sell and transfer it free from any latent or contingent claims."

In Beach v. Fireovid, 84 Kan. 357, Ann. Cas. 1912A 670, 114 Pac. 206, there was involved the following statutory provision: "It shall be unlawful for either husband or wife (where that relation exists) to create any lien, by chattel mortgage or otherwise, upon any personal property owned by either or both of them, and now exempt by law to resident heads of families from seizure and sale upon any attachment, execution or other process issued from any court in this state, without the joint consent of both husband and wife." It was held that the statute did not prevent the owner of exempt property from turning it over in good faith to a creditor in payment of a debt without the consent of his wife since the transaction was in legal effect an absolute sale and not a mortgage. See to the same effect Barker v. Kelderhouse, 8 Minn. 207; Kelly v. Fleming, 113 N. C. 133, 18 S. E. 81.

Under a statutory provision that "a chattel mortgage by the husband on the household and kitchen furniture shall be void unless the wife join therein and her privy examination be taken in the manner prescribed by law, as on conveyances of real estate," it has been held that a piano owned by a husband and placed in his home for the use of his wife and daughters, was within the purview of the statute and that a chattel mortgage thereof by the husband was invalid unless the wife signed it. Thomas v. Sanderlin, 173 N. C. 329, 91 S. E. 1028.

Disposition as Affecting Widow's Distributive Share.

The statutory provision under consideration in Jordan v. American Security, etc. Co. 38 App. Cas. (D. C.) 391, was as follows: "Where a testator bequeathes or devises a considerable part of his personal estate to his wife, and it appears not in any part of his will or codicil that he intended his said devise as a legacy only to his wife, and that she might nevertheless have the third part of his remaining estate, it shall be at the election of such wife . . . to make her election." It was held that where a husband who owned personality of the value of about $20,000, half of which his wife would take on his death in the absence of a will, bequeathed his wife $10 by a will falsely reciting that she had already been satisfactorily provided for, the wife need not renounce the bequest in order to take the share of the estate which the law gave her.

In Ellmaker v. Ellmaker, 4 Watts (Pa.) 89, it was held that a contract by which the wife agreed to relinquish all right of dower in law or in equity in consideration of a certain sum to be paid to her in lieu of interest in the husband's estate, did not operate to exclude the widow from a share of the personal estate under the statute of distribution. The court said: "Who so ignorant as not to know that a husband may dispose of his chattels during the coverture without his wife's consent, and freed of every post mortem claim by her; or that he can dispose of his land freed of her dower but with her concurrence? The current transactions of life publish the former; and a knowledge of the latter is proved by experience to be universal. The effect of the marriage settlement, therefore, is not to exclude the wife from a share of the personal estate under the statute of distribution."

The recent decisions are in accord in holding that a voluntary transfer or conveyance by which a husband, reserving to himself a benefit from or power of disposal over the property, parts with its ownership for the purpose of defeating his wife's interest in his estate, is invalid as against the wife. Justh v. Wilson, 19 D. C. 529; Blankenship v. Hall, 233 Ill. 116, 84 N. E. 192, 122 Am. St. Rep. 149; Smith v. Corey, 125 Minn. 190, 145 N. W. 1067; Donaldson v. Donaldson, 249 Mo. 228, 155 S. W. 791; Pollman v. Schaper, 258 Mo. 710, 167 S. W. 953; Snayberger's Estate, 62 Pa. Super. Ct. 390. And see the reported case.

In Pollman v. Schaper, supra, it was held that in a suit by a widow to avoid gifts of money made in his lifetime by her deceased husband, the evidence must show that the gifts were given with the fraudulent intent to defeat her right to dower.

A wife may complain of frauds done in contemplation of marriage and avoid conveyances made by the husband in fraud of her marital rights since she stands on the same footing as a creditor in this regard, but she must show that the transfer of the property was made with a view of defrauding her. Donaldson v. Donaldson, 249 Mo. 228, 155 S. W. 791.

In Snayberger's Estate, 62 Pa. Super. Ct. 390, it appeared that a husband three years before his death gave to each of his nine children by a former wife a promissory note not under seal and without consideration. It was held that the notes could not be paid out of the assets of the estate to the detriment of the widow.

Where a sale of personality by a husband was for an adequate consideration and the evidence tended to show that the sale was open and fair, the fact that it was made to a son who provided for his father and took care of the home, was held not to establish an intent to defraud the wife, there being no evidence of any undue influence on the part of the son. Lusse v. Lusse, 140 Mo. App. 497, 120 S. W. 114.

It has been held that if the husband's purpose in making a gift to his children of his personalty, is to prevent his wife from obtaining her distributive share of the property the gift will be declared illegal. But the widow must show not only that the effect of the gift is to prevent her obtaining her distributive share but also that the gift is illegal. Evans v. Evans (N. H.) 100 Atl. 671.

In Smith v. Corey, 125 Minn. 190, 145 N. W. 1067, the court said: "We are met by a finding of the trial court that there was no fraud on the part of Gorey and it is supported by the evidence. A court cannot say with minute exactness just how much the husband may give away without subjecting himself to a just charge of fraud. He may make gifts. He is not required to keep one-third of his property intact for his wife. Fraud is the basis of the relief which the widow gets. It is entirely clear that Corey, as far back as 1905, when the trust deed was made, had in mind that his wife should not have so much as one-third of his property. There were reasons for this which appealed to him. He had four living children by his first and second wives. He had none by his third. She had three by her first husband. He was unwilling that her children should have much of his property."

It is generally held that a husband cannot by a gift causa mortis defeat the statutory right of his wife to a part of the personal estate whereof the husband dies seized or possessed since the gift does not take effect until the death of the donor. Delta, etc. Land Co. v. Benton, 171 Ill. App. 635; Crawfordsville Trust Co. v. Ramsey, 55 Ind. App. 40, 102 N. E. 282; Weber v. Salisbury, 149 Ky. 327, 148 S. W. 34.

The mere fact that the gift is made in contemplation of death does not make it invalid as depriving the donor's widow of her share where the gift is not colorable but is absolute and in consideration of love and affection and sufficient provision is made for the widow. Delta, etc. Land Co. v. Benton, 171 Ill. App. 635.

Where a wife was made the donee of one-fourth of a gift causa mortis by the husband and was the beneficiary of a life insurance policy amounting to as much as her statutory share of the money given away, it was held that no fraud could be inferred. Weber v. Salisbury, 149 Ky. 327, 148 S. W. 34.

Disposition as Affecting Alimony.

A conveyance of personalty by a husband with the intent to deprive the wife of alimony is fraudulent and will be set aside in a suit instituted by her for that purpose. Sheckells v. Sheckells, 42 App. Cas. (D. C.) 131; Dieke v. Dieke, 182 Ill. App. 13; Griffith v. Griffith, 74 Ore. 225, 145 Pac. 270.

In the case first cited it appeared that a husband executed a bill of sale of his interest in his deceased father's personal estate a year before his wife brought a suit for divorce. In the divorce proceedings the wife attacked the bill of sale as fraudulent. It was held that the burden of proving a fraudulent intent was on the wife, and the mere fact that the transfer of the personalty was not recorded did not affect her rights where the property was in the actual possession of the transferree.

It has been held that an assignment by a husband of his interest as devisee in an estate made to evade payment of alimony might be declared void in the wife's proceeding for separate maintenance after the decree awarding a weekly allowance, but that where the order for the payment of alimony did not make the allowance a lien on the husband's interest in the estate, the husband's assignment thereof pending the wife's petition to have that interest subjected to the payment of alimony was valid if it was made in good faith and for a valuable consideration. Dieke v. Dieke, 182 Ill. App. 13.

IN RE HAYES ET AL.

Florida Supreme Court—December 20, 1916.

72 Fla. 558; 73 So. 362.

Constitutional Law — Liberty of Speech and of Press.

The thirteenth section of the declaration of rights of the constitution of Florida, which provides that "every person may fully speak and write his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right, and no laws shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press," etc., does not secure immunity from punishment to any citizen who falsely and with the purpose to defame, attacks in the newspapers the character of any other citizen, or impugns the integrity, honor and authority of the courts.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The exercise of the right to "fully speak and write" one's sentiments on all subjects, a right secured by our constitution, is always subject to the preservation of the governmental authority of the state as conferred by law.

[See note at end of this case.]

Contempt — Inherent Power to Punish.

This court has the inherent power, independent of statutory authority, to punish as for a direct contempt any person who during the pendency of a cause before this court publishes an article referring to such cause which reflects upon the efficiency and integrity of the court.

[See 16 Ann. Cas. 759; 117 Am. St. Rep. 950.]

Newspaper Publication as Contempt.

Publishers of newspapers have the right, but no higher right than others, to publish the conduct of the courts, but such right is limited by the obligation to observe respect for truth and fairness.

[See 50 Am. St. Rep. 573.]

Constitutional Law — Liberty of Speech and of Press.

Under the right of freedom of speech and of the press, the public have a right to know and discuss all judicial proceedings, but this does not include the right to attempt, by wanton defamation and groundless charges of unfairness and partisanship, to degrade the tribunal and impair its efficiency.

[See note at end of this case.]

(Syllabus by court.)

Original contempt proceedings against Percy S. Hayes and Bryan Mack. The facts are stated in the opinion. MOTION TO QUASH DENIED.

John P. Stokes for motion.

[559] PER CURIAM.—This is the first time in the history of Florida that this court has issued a rule against the editor and reporter of a newspaper to show cause why [560] they should not be attached for contempt because of the publication of a libelous article impugning the integrity, dignity and authority of this court. It is to be hoped that the good sense of our people, their love of order and respect for the institutions of our government will operate to restrain the impulsive and ill-natured words of those among us who seem to be so alert to suspect and ready to condemn and that proceedings of this nature may not become necessary in the future to restrain the vicious tendencies of those who traffic in scandal and sensation and which lead them to attacks upon the integrity and authority of our institutions.

It is true that respect to the courts is the voluntary tribute which the people pay to worth, virtue and intelligence and every man who has the honor to occupy judicial position in our government should strive to attain to that standard of judicial purity and efficiency which right thinking people require of their judicial officers; but it is also true that malicious, designing persons may greatly impair the authority and efficiency of our courts by using the powerful arm of the press to scatter abroad suspicion and distrust by unfounded accusations against the intelligence, impartiality, integrity and mental honesty of the judges of our courts of justice.

Such accusations are an insult to the people whose agents the courts are; the injury accomplished is to the institution which the people by their government have established. The author and distributor of such publications therefore is an enemy to his people, a veritable traitor to his government whose protection he enjoys.

Mr. Chief Justice English in the case of State v. Morrill, 16 Ark. 384, said: "It was well remarked by counsel, that no court could coerce public respect for its decisions; and we may add that no sane judge would attempt [561] it. If it were the general habit of the community to denounce, degrade and disregard the decisions and judgments of the courts, no man of self-respect and just pride of reputation would remain upon the bench, and such only would become the ministers of the law, as were insensible to defamation and contempt. But happily for the good order of society, men, and especially the people of this country, are generally disposed to respect and abide the decisions of the tribunals ordained by government as the common arbiters of their rights. But where isolated individuals, in violation of the better instincts of human nature, and disregardful of law and order, wantonly attempt to obstruct the course of public justice, by degrading and exciting disrespect for the decisions of its tribunals, every good citizen will point them out as proper subjects of legal animadversion." "The court looks to the sober judgment of all reflecting and intelligent men, and to none with more confidence than the enlightened and liberal conductors of the press, who, as before remarked, have generally manifested a disposition to maintain public respect for the judicial tribunals of the country."

In the case of Watson v. Williams, 36 Miss. 341, the court said: "In this country all courts derive their authority from the people, and hold it in trust for their security and benefit. In this State all judges are elected by the people, and hold their authority in a double sense directly from them; the power they exercise is but the authority of the people themselves exercised through courts as their agents. It is the authority and law emanating from the people, which the judges sit to exercise and enforce. Contempts against these courts in the administration of their laws are insults offered to the authority of the people themselves and not to the humble [562] agents of the law whom they employ in the conduct of their government. The power to compel the lawless offender against decency and propriety, to respect the laws of his country and submit to their authority (a duty to which the good citizen yields hearty obedience without compulsion) must exist, or courts and laws operate at least as a restraint upon the upright who need no restraint, and a license to the offenders whom they are made to subdue." How appropriate is this language to our State government whose constitution provides for the election by the people of the judges of our Supreme Court.

In the case of State v. Frew, 24 W. Va. 416, 49 Am. Rep. 257, the court said: "We are well aware that the trust reposed in us to protect the people's court from degradation is a delicate as well as a sacred trust. The power claimed, it is said, is arbitrary and liable to abuse. That is no reason why the power should not exist and be reposed somewhere. The few instances in which this power has been used during the last century shows that it was wisely placed and may be safely left in the hands of the courts. It is well established by the authorities that the power is inherent in courts of justice to summarily punish constructive as well as direct contempts. And in this country, where the courts are in the divisions of power by the Constitutions of the several States constituted a separate and distinct department of government clothed with jurisdiction and not expressly limited by the constitution in their powers to punish for contempt the inherent power that is thus necessarily granted them cannot be taken away by the legislative department of the government."

For seventy-one years this State has enjoyed the advantages and benefits of Statehood in the government [563] of the United States and as pointed out herein this is the first time in its history that this court has felt the necessity for the exercise of the power to bring any one before it and punish him for seeking through the public press to destroy its efficiency by shaking the confidence of the people in its integrity. There has been no disposition and there is none now on the part of this court to seek opportunities to exercise this power. It has passed unnoticed some ill-advised criticisms and untrue statements regarding its decisions, deeming them to have originated in the disappointment and poignancy of defeat which calm deliberation and sober thought would rectify in the minds of our people, but this is the first time that it has met a deliberate and meditated insult from the editor and reporter of a newspaper who published an article charging this court with hostility toward counsel, stubbornness, partiality and partisanship in a cause then pending in and being heard and considered by the court. In the conclusion at which we have arrived, we have not forgotten that we have no right in this manner to avenge individual wrongs, although the best years of the lives of some of the judges of our Supreme Court have been given conscientiously to an honorable discharge of the duties devolving upon them; a fair and just consideration of all causes brought before us, and into whose hearts the unkind and malicious thrust of this contemptuous article has sunk with bitter cruelty we remember only the studied injury to the people's court, for as Judge Okey Johnson of West Virginia said, "It is a matter of stern and inflexible duty from the performance of which under our official oaths we dare not shrink. For we well know that as the ermine was spotless when we put it on, the people expect us to leave it as untarnished for our successors."

[564] The profession of journalism is a great profession. It has enrolled in its membership some of the brightest minds in the history of our country. It has claimed men of the highest standard of integrity, indefatigable workers for the upbuilding of our common country and the establishment of our splendid institutions. They use the "liberty of the press" as a means for the promotion of all that is good and noble among their fellow men; they discuss in the columns of their publications public questions in a spirit of fairness and always abhor and loathe the methods of those scandal mongers who traffic in sensational stories to their sordid profit. Our people have nothing to fear from the true journalist, our government and our institutions are safely guarded by them in the field of their labors. Nor has the freedom of the press anything to fear from the judiciary in this State. It may be said to the credit of the press in this State that except in very few instances it has upheld and maintained respect for the judiciary. But it is from the operations of the pseudo-journalist that the people expect and receive injury and insult. That class who claiming the protection of that clause in our constitution which provides that "Every person may fully speak and write his sentiments on all subjects" (Declaration of Rights Section 13), dips his pen in the ink of morbid thoughts and with the recklessness born or irresponsibility attacks the integrity and honor of governmental institutions, and the characters of men and women with equal abandon, ignoring the admonition contained in the same section of the Declaration of Rights, viz: that they shall be held "responsible for the abuse of that right" to speak and write their sentiments on all subjects.

It was not the purpose of the framers of our constitution nor the people in adopting it to permit any citizen [565] to attack unjustly in the public prints the character of any other citizen nor to impugn the integrity, honor and authority of our courts with impunity. "There is nothing in the language of the constitution which authorizes one man to impute crimes to another for which the law has provided the mode of trial and the degree of punishment. . . . The true liberty of the press is amply secured by permitting every man to publish his opinions; but it is due to the peace and dignity of society to enquire into the motives of such publications, and to distinguish between those which are meant for use and reformation and with an eye solely to the public good and those which are intended merely to delude and defame. To the latter description, it is impossible that any good government should afford protection and impunity." Chief Justice McKean in Republica v. Oswald, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 319, 1 U. S. (L. ed.) 155.

Our government is one of laws. The exercise of any right secured by the organic law is always subject to the lawful rights of other persons in the premises and especially is the exercise of a right by any person subject to the preservation of the governmental authority of the State as conferred by law.

It is of paramount importance that each department of our government should be protected and preserved against the attempts of designing persons to undermine its authority and destroy its efficiency. The Executive branch of our government is charged with the duty of enforcing the law as made by the Legislature and construed by the courts, yet the officers of that branch of the government whose duties are largely, if not entirely, ministerial, are protected by law from interference with the discharge of their duties. The Legislative branch whose acts are subject to the courts' construction has the power vested in it by constitutional provision to punish [566] by fine and imprisonment any contempt committed in its presence, and so the courts whose duty it is to construe the law and upon whom there is no check save the sovereign power of the people and the conscience, honor, ability and mental honesty of the judges have the inherent power to punish summarily any effort on the part of a citizen to destroy their authority and efficiency. As was said by this court in Ex p. Edwards, 11 Fla. 174, "It is not to be denied (and the numerous authorities cited at the hearing by the counsel for the contestants abundantly establishes the position), that, in the absence of any statutory limitations or restrictions, the power of the several courts over 'contempts' is omnipotent and its exercise is not to be enquired into by any other tribunal. This is the great bulwark established by the common law for the protection of courts of justice, and for the maintenance of their dignity, authority and eficiency, and neither in England nor in the United States has this unrestricted power been seriously questioned." The Justices of the Supreme Court and Judges of the Circuit Court are liable to impeachment by the House of Representatives for any misdemeanor in office, but for the possession of ability and the exhibition of fairness, impartiality and mental honesty in the trial of causes before them they are responsible to the sovereign people.

The trust reposed by the people of the State of Florida in the Justices of our Supreme Court is the highest and most sacred of all trusts. The property, the liberties and lives of our citizens are rights which constantly are before this court for adjudication and in any cause pending before this court the exhibition by the justices of ignorance, stubbornness, hostility to any party to the cause or his representatives, unfairness, partiality and partisanship would destroy the efficiency and authority of [567] this court, bring it into contempt of the people and prepare the way for breaches of the peace and possible bloodshed among our citizens. Is it reasonable to suppose that any man who has been honored by the people of his State with a position upon this tribunal is unmindful of the sacred trust reposed in him? Would any fair minded, honorable citizen of this State having the best interests of his government at heart seek to destroy the dignity, influence and efficiency of this court by imputing to the justices thereof infidelity to their trusts merely because a decision upon a point of evidence, admitted by opposing counsel before the court to be correct, happens to run contrary to the preconceived idea and wishes of some interested spectators? Yet the defendants in this proceeding have in a published article referring to a cause then pending in and being considered by this court, unhesitatingly laid at the door of our Supreme Court the charge of hostility to counsel, stubbornness, ignorance of the law, partiality and partisanship. That charge reduced to its last analysis is nothing less than a charge of prejudice, partiality and partisanship practiced by the judges of this court in their official capacity, and if true deserves the severest condemnation and seriously impairs the efficiency and authority of this court. So long as this court is constituted of men who sincerely desire to administer justice according to the rules of law it will jealously guard its integrity by purity of conduct, fairness and impartiality in its decisions and the exercise of the best judgment which their abilities command. That judgment may not meet with the approval of self appointed censors of public morality and civil virtue, but when such persons so far ignore their loyalty to the government as to attempt the destruction of the efficiency of this court by imputing to its judges a lack of integrity and honest purpose, [568] it will rebuke such conduct to the end that the people may be protected from further insult and injury at the hands of such persons, that due respect for propriety and decency be maintained and the dignity of the court vindicated from the disrespect shown to it.

The Supreme Court has, independent of statutory authority, inherent power to punish for contempt of court. Coleman v. Roberts, 113 Ala. 323, 21 So. 449, 59 Am. St. Rep. 111, 36 L.R.A. 84; State v. Morrill, 16 Ark. 384; In re Shortridge, 99 Cal. 526, 34 Pac. 227, 37 Am. St. Rep. 78, 21 L.R.A. 755; People v. Stapleton, 18 Colo. 568, 33 Pac. 167, 23 L.R.A. 787; In re Clayton, 59 Conn. 510, 21 Atl. 1005, 21 Am. St. Rep. 128, 13 L.R.A. 66; Bradley v. State, 111 Ga. 168, 36 S. E. 630, 78 Am. St. Rep. 157, 50 L.R.A. 691; Dahnke v. People, 168 Ill. 102, 48 N. E. 137, 39 L.R.A. 197; Fishback v. State, 131 Ind. 304, 30 N. E. 1088; Dunham v. State, 6 Ia. 245; In re Wolf, 52 Kan. 366, 34 Pac. 1048; Arnold v. Com. 80 Ky. 300, 44 Am. Rep. 480; Cartwright's Case, 114 Mass. 230; In re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 588, 67 N. W. 1071; Watson v. Williams, 36 Miss. 331; Ex p. Crenshaw, 80 Mo. 447; In re Moore, 63 N. C. 397; Hale v. State, 55 Ohio St. 210, 45 N. E. 199, 60 Am. St. Rep. 691, 36 L.R.A. 254; State v. Frew, 24 W. Va. 416, 49 Am. Rep. 257; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 15 S. Ct. 900, 39 U. S. (L. ed.) 1092; Ex p. Terry, 128 U. S. 289, 9 S. Ct. 77, 32 U. S. (L. ed.) 405; Ex p. Edwards, 11 Fla. 174. Publications concerning a pending cause which reflect upon the court constitute contempt. People v. Stapleton, supra; People v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 195, 16 Am. Rep. 528; Field v. Thornell, 106 Ia. 7, 75 N. W. 685, 68 Am. St. Rep. 281; Burdett v. Com. 103 Va. 838, 48 S. E. 878, 106 Am. St. Rep. 916, 68 L.R.A. 251; State v. Tugwell, 19 Wash. 238, 52 Pac. 1056, 43 L.R.A. 717.

Publishers of newspapers have the right, but no higher right than others to bring to public notice the conduct of [569] the courts, provided the publications are true and fair in spirit. The liberty of the press secures the privilege of discussing in a decent and temperate manner, the decisions and judgments of a court of justice, but the language should be that of fair and honorable criticism, and should not go to the extent of assigning to any party or the court false or dishonest motives. There is no law to restrain or punish the freest expression of disapprobation that any person may entertain of what is done in or by the courts. Under the right of freedom of speech and of the press the public have a right to know and discuss all judicial proceedings, but this does not include the right to attempt by wanton defamation, groundless charges of unfairness and stubborn partisanship to degrade the tribunal and impair its efficiency. 6 R. C. L. pp. 254-512. "The liberty of the press is subordinate to the independence of the judiciary and it is not expedient that any class in the community should be privileged to attack the courts with the view to interfere with the rights of litigants or to embarrass the administration of justice. Liberty of the press must not be confounded with license or abuse of that liberty." 6 R. C. L. p. 510. Our statute provides that "Every court shall have power to punish contempts against it" etc. Sec. 1345 Gen. Stats. of 1906, Florida Compiled Laws 1914.

The conduct of unprincipled men traducing the institutions of a State to the end that their political ambitions may be realized is an unsafe guide for the young man who desires to succeed in the honored field of journalism and is an example too degrading to be imitated and too vicious to be condoned by the self respecting journalist. He can not fan the flames of suspicion and distrust by printing a false article relating to a cause then pending in court, and imputing to that court a lack of [570] integrity, without violating the law and transgressing every conception of decency. Newspaper editors and reporters have the right to publish the proceedings of the courts, including the pleadings, proofs and remarks of the court and counsel, yet they must see to it that they publish them truthfully and correctly. But they have no right to give publication to the impressions made by such court proceedings upon their minds by the use with reference to the court itself of such contemptuous and opprobrious adjectives as that the court was "partisan," "stubborn," "hostile to counsel" and "ignorant."

It is the judgment of the court that the writing and publication of the article mentioned and referred to in the rule issued in these proceedings constitute a contempt of court and that the defendants Percy S. Hayes and Bryan Mack are guilty of contempt of this court because of the writing and publication of said article.

The respondents through their counsel interposed a demurrer to the rule issued in this cause which will be treated as a motion to quash. The points presented by the motion are not well taken. The rule is not "process," nor does it come within the provisions of Section 22 of the Declaration of Rights. See State v. Frew, 24 W. Va. 416, text 471, 49 Am. Rep. 257; In re Moore, 63 N. C. 397; State v. Morrill, 16 Ark. 384. The truthfulness of the publication and a good motive inspiring it need not be negatived by the rule any more than ignorance of the meaning of words should be. The quoted extracts from the publication constitute the gist of the offense and general statements following may be treated as surplusage. Such a publication as the one under consideration does not come within the constitutional provisions securing the freedom of the press. So the motion to quash is denied.

[571] Taylor, C.J., and Cockrell, Whitfield and Ellis, JJ., concur.

Shackleford, J., absent.

NOTE.

The reported case, in holding that a newspaper publication reflecting on the integrity of the supreme court constituted a contempt of court, discusses at length the scope of the constitutional guaranty of liberty of speech and of the press, saying that "it was not the purpose of the framers of our constitution nor the people in adopting it to permit any citizen to attack unjustly in the public prints the character of any other citizen nor to impugn the integrity, honor and authority of our courts with impunity." The constitutional liberty of speech and of the press is discussed in the notes to Ex p. Harrison, 15 Ann. Cas. 1; Schwartz v. Edrington, Ann. Cas. 1915B 1180; and Booth v. People, 78 Am. St. Rep. 229, 260.

HOLSTEIN

v.

BENEDICT.

Hawaii Supreme Court—January 22, 1915.

22 Hawaii 441.

Appeal and Error — Questions Presented by Record.

The general rule applied, that on exceptions to instructions given or requests therefor refused, the charge given to the jury should be in the record.

Same.

Only errors of law apparent on the record are reviewable on error. Facts which do not appear in the record may not be brought to the attention of the supreme court by means of exhibits attached to briefs of counsel.

Implied Contracts — Services by Member of Family.

Where maintenance and services are rendered between relatives living together as one household there is a presumption that they were intended to be gratuitous. In order to recover therefor the plaintiff must overcome this presumption by proving affirmatively either an express contract for remuneration or circumstances showing a mutual understanding or expectation between the parties that there would be compensation.

[See 8 Ann. Cas. 203; Ann. Cas. 1913C 307.]

Scintilla of Evidence — What Amounts to More than Scintilla.

To amount to more than a scintilla the evidence must be of a character sufficiently substantial, in view of all the circumstances of the case, to warrant the jury, as triers of the facts, in finding from it the fact to establish which the evidence was introduced.

[See note at end of this case.]

(Syllabus by court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Second Circuit: EDINGS, Judge.

Action by Thomas Holstein, plaintiff, against Paul H. Benedict administrator of Estate of Kelupe Silva, deceased, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Enos Vincent for plaintiff in error.

E. R. Bevins for defendant in error.

[442] ROBERTSON, C. J.—The defendant in error recovered judgment in the circuit court of the second circuit for the sum of $158, and costs and attorney's fees, against the plaintiff in error in an action of assumpsit for maintenance and support furnished and services rendered, as it was alleged, to one Kelupe Silva, since deceased, of whose estate the plaintiff in error was the administrator.

Three of the assignments of error relate to the giving or refusing of certain instructions. These cannot be considered for the reason that the court's charge to the jury is not in the record. Kaupena v. Kaio, 20 Hawaii 653, 655.

Another assignment questions the validity of the judgment on the ground that after verdict but before judgment was entered, Benedict had been discharged as administrator and one Lufkin appointed in his place. It does not appear that those facts were brought to the attention of the court below. Counsel for the plaintiff in error has attempted to bring them before this court by attaching to his brief a certified copy of an order approving the accounts of Benedict, discharging him, and appointing Lufkin in his place. Facts which do not appear in the record may not be laid before this court in any such manner upon the expectation that they will be considered. Only errors of law apparent on the record are viewable on error. Vierra v. Hackfeld, 8 Hawaii 436; R. L. Sec. 1871. The action [443] of counsel in attaching a copy of the order mentioned to his brief is disapproved.

The principal assignments of error go to the merits of the case and raise the question whether the verdict was supported by the evidence. Undisputed testimony showed that on the day of the death of her husband, June 13, 1912, Kelupe Silva went to the home of Thomas Holstein at Waikapu, Maui, and continued to live there until November 18, 1912; that Mrs. Silva was an elderly woman and suffered from asthma; and that she was the grand-aunt by marriage of Mrs. Holstein, plaintiff's wife. The plaintiff's claim was for one dollar a day as the reasonable value of the food and attendance furnished to Mrs. Silva by the plaintiff and his wife during the period stated. The plaintiff testified that he took care of Mrs. Silva believing that he would be paid by her in some way, though there was no promise on her part to pay any sum, and he never informed her that he intended to charge her anything. There was no evidence of any conversation between the plaintiff and Mrs. Silva with reference to her living at his home. Against the objection of the defendant the wife of the plaintiff testified to a conversation she had had with Mrs. Silva, as follows: "After she had lived with us a couple of months, one day I spoke to her: 'Perhaps it may be well for you to return to your own house now, we go and fix your house,' and she said 'I hope you will be kind enough to let me stay with you—you will be paid some day.'" We may assume that the evidence was admissible either as part of the res gestae or as a declaration against interest, and that, if there was anything else in the case to support the plaintiff's claim, it might be regarded as of some probative force. But the question arises whether that testimony standing alone constitutes more than a mere scintilla of evidence to support the verdict, there being nothing else in the case to meet the principles of law applicable to cases of this kind. Those principles are stated in 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) 1083 et seq., thus: "Ordinarily [444] where services are rendered and voluntarily accepted, the law will imply a promise on the part of the recipient to pay for them; but where the services are rendered to each other by members of a family living as one household, there will be no such implication from the mere rendition and acceptance of the services. On the contrary, the presumption is that the services are intended to be gratuitous, and in order to recover therefor the plaintiff must affirmatively show either that an express contract for remuneration existed or that the circumstances under which the services were rendered were such as exhibit a reasonable and proper expectation that there would be compensation. The reason for this is that the household family relationship is presumed to abound in reciprocal acts of kindness and good will which tend to mutual comfort and convenience of the family; and the rule stated applies not only to members of a family who are related by blood, but to those distantly related, and to those who are in fact not related at all, provided they live together as members of one family. The presumption that services rendered by one member of a family to another were gratuitous is not a conclusive one. It may be overcome by showing an express agreement for payment, or by showing circumstances which will support the implication that the services were to be paid for. The burden is, of course, on the person rendering the services to overcome the presumption which the law raises that such services were rendered gratuitously." The case of Luka v. Fyfe, 4 Hawaii 569, is in point, and it was there pointed out that the rule is peculiarly applicable to the hospitable habits of the Hawaiians. Mrs. Silva was a Hawaiian, and the plaintiff is part Hawaiian.

The burden was upon the plaintiff to prove by more than a scintilla of evidence either an express agreement, or circumstances, beyond the fact that the services were rendered, showing a mutual understanding or expectation that payment would be made for the services. An express agreement was not claimed. [445] Did the statement of Mrs. Holstein constitute evidence from which a mutual understanding between the parties could reasonably be inferred? The cases are not in harmony on the point as to what constitutes a scintilla of evidence. "A mere scintilla of evidence, if it means anything, means the least particle of evidence—evidence which, without further evidence, is a mere trifle." Offutt v. World's Columbian Exposition, 175 Ill. 472, 476, 51 N. E. 851. "A scintilla of evidence is any material evidence which, taken as true, would tend to establish the issue in the mind of a reasonable juror." Crosby v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. 81 S. C. 24, 61 S. E. 1064, 1067. "Evidence may go beyond a mere scintilla, and yet not be substantial." Jenkins, etc. Co. v. Alpena Portland Cement Co. 147 Fed. 641, 643, 77 C. C. A. 625. This court has held that the expression "more than a scintilla of evidence" means "some substantial evidence." Robinson v. Honolulu Rapid Transit etc. Co. 20 Hawaii 466. For illustrations of the application of the rule that a judgment must be supported by more than a mere scintilla of evidence, see Richards v. Ontai, 19 Hawaii 451, 458; Tyler v. Wise, 21 Hawaii 148, 153; Scott v. Hawaiian Tobacco Plant, 21 Hawaii 493, 497. In Smith v. Hamakua Mill Co. 14 Hawaii 669, 677, the evidence which was held not to amount to more than a scintilla was described as "very slight" and "very unsatisfactory." Each case must turn upon its own circumstances, and we are not prepared to say that in every case where, in the opinion of the appellate court, the evidence in support of a claim was very slight and unsatisfactory it is to be regarded as an insufficient foundation for a verdict. To amount to more than a mere scintilla the evidence must be of a character sufficiently substantial, in view of all the circumstances of the case, to warrant the jury, as triers of the facts, in finding from it the fact to establish which the evidence was introduced. In the case at bar the plaintiff, to prove his case, was obliged to overcome a rebuttable presumption which the law raises in this class of cases. The statement made by Mrs. Silva after she had been living at the plaintiff's [446] home for two months, "I hope you will be kind enough to let me stay with you—you will be paid some day," was brought out by the suggestion of Mrs. Holstein that the time had come for Mrs. Silva to return to her own home. It clearly could not be construed as an admission that she had expected from the start to pay for the board and attendance rendered her, and, we think, could not reasonably be regarded as evidence of a mutual understanding between her and the plaintiff that she was to make compensation therefor from and after the time of the statement.

We are of the opinion that the verdict was not supported by more than a scintilla of evidence, and that it must be vacated. The case is remanded to the circuit court with instructions to set aside the judgment to grant the defendant's motion for a non-suit, and to enter judgment thereupon for the defendant.

NOTE.

What Constitutes Scintilla of Evidence.

Generally, 943.

Illustrations:

Evidence Held to Amount to Scintilla, 944.

Evidence Held to Amount to Less than Scintilla, 949.

Evidence Held to Amount to More than Scintilla, 951.

Generally.

In some jurisdictions there is in force what is known as the "scintilla of evidence rule," whereby, whenever there is any evidence, however slight, tending to prove an issue, it must be submitted to the jury; or, as it has been stated, a verdict may be directed only where there is no evidence, however slight, and no inference to be drawn from the facts, which will support the opposite theory. Under that rule, if a party produces a scintilla of proof in his favor, he is entitled to have his case submitted to the jury. The doctrine grew out of the extreme reluctance of the courts to invade the province of the jury by sanctioning the practice of directing a verdict, but according to the more modern and more reasonable view the scintilla rule fails to discriminate carefully between prerogatives of the court and jury, and is deemed to require the submission of evidence to a jury which might afford no reasonable justification for a verdict. See 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Pl. & Pr. 675, et seq. In a few of the cases arising under the so-called "scintilla rule," the courts have indicated the quantum of evidence sufficient to constitute a "scintilla" of evidence, but it is to be observed that the cases are not in harmony.

Thus, the words "scintilla of evidence" have been interpreted by the South Carolina court to mean such evidence as is sufficient to warrant a reasonable jury in rendering a verdict on it. Dutton v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 104 S. C. 16, 88 S. E. 265. Or, as was said in Taylor v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 78 S. C. 552, 59 S. E. 641 (quoted in Crosby v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. 81 S. C. 24, 61 S. E. 1064): "A scintilla of evidence is any material evidence that, if true, would tend to establish the issue in the mind of a reasonable juror."

In the reported case it is held that to amount to more than a mere scintilla the evidence must be of a character sufficiently substantial, in view of all the circumstances of the case, to warrant the jury, as triers of the facts, in finding from it the fact to establish which the evidence is introduced.

In Oliver v. State, 34 Ark. 632, the court held that "any evidence whatever," however weak, to support the verdict, was a "scintilla" of evidence, but stated that the scintilla doctrine did not prevail in that state. And in Catlett v. St. Louis, etc. R. Co., 57 Ark. 461, 21 S. W. 1062, 38 Am. St. Rep. 254, in discussing the foregoing statement, the court said that they took it, therefore, that the phrase "any evidence however slight," did not mean a scintilla merely.

So, it has been said that a "scintilla" of evidence is a "spark" of evidence, Conely v. McDonald, 40 Mich. 150; Cunningham v. Union Pac. R. Co., 4 Utah 206, 7 Pac. 795; see also Minahan v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. 138 Fed. 37, 70 C. C. A. 463; or "the least particle" of evidence, Conely v. McDonald, 40 Mich. 150; see also Offutt v. World's Columbian Exposition Co., 175 Ill. 472, 51 N. E. 651, reversing 73 Ill. App. 231; Boyle v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 88 Ill. App. 255; Nolan v. Morris, 108 Ill. App. 261; or a "crumb," the "dust of the scales," Connor v. Giles, 76 Me. 132. In Offutt v. World's Columbian Exposition Co. supra, by way of dictum, since the "scintilla of evidence rule" is not in force in Illinois, the court said: "A mere scintilla of evidence," if it means anything, means the least particle of evidence—evidence which, without further evidence, is a mere trifle."

The word "scintilla," however, as applied in the Kentucky practice does not mean that the case must be submitted to the jury where there is merely a "spark" or a "glimmer" of evidence, but means that when there is some evidence to support the plaintiff's case, the court will not undertake to determine either its weight or sufficiency by taking the case from the jury; nor will the court, on all the evidence, take the case from the jury merely because the evidence on one side may be stronger, both numerically and in probative value, than the evidence on the other side, but will, when there is conflict in the evidence, leave the disputed question of fact to the jury. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 161 Ky. 824, 171 S. W. 847. So, it has been held that it is the essence of the "scintilla rule" that there must be some evidence, however slight, on which the jury may rationally find a verdict for the party producing it. Clark v. Young, 146 Ky. 377, 142 S. W. 1032; Louisville, etc. R. Co. v. Chambers, 165 Ky. 703, Ann. Cas. 1917B 471, 178 S. W. 1041.

In Denny v. Williams, 5 Allen (Mass.) 1, in determining that there was not a scintilla of evidence tending to show a delivery or acceptance of goods sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds, and to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff, the court said: "What this 'scintilla' is, needs to be stated a little more definitely; otherwise it may be understood to include all cases where, on a motion for a new trial, a verdict would be set aside, as against the weight of the evidence. It would be impossible to draw a line theoretically, because evidence in its very nature varies from the weakest to the strongest by imperceptible degrees. But the practical line of distinction is, that if the evidence is such that the court would set aside any number of verdicts rendered upon it, toties quoties, then the cause should be taken from the jury, by instructing them to find a verdict for the defendant. On the other hand, if the evidence is such that, though one or two verdicts rendered upon it would be set aside on motion, yet a second or third verdict would be suffered to stand, the cause should not be taken from the jury, but should be submitted to them under instructions. This rule throws upon the court a duty which may sometimes be very delicate; but it seems to be the only practicable rule which the nature of the case admits."

In Bagley v. Bowe, 105 N. Y. 171, 11 N. E. 386, 59 Am. Rep. 488, reversing 50 N. Y.

Super. Ct. 100, it was held that in a case which of right was triable by a jury, the court could not take from that tribunal the ultimate decision of the fact, unless the fact was either uncontradicted or the contradiction was illusory, or where to use the current word, the answering evidence was a "scintilla" merely.

In Wittkowsky v. Wasson, 71 N. C. 451, it was held that under the rule that where there is any evidence to support a plaintiff's claim, it is the duty of the judge to submit the question to the jury, "any evidence" does not mean the slightest scintilla of evidence, but evidence from which a jury may reasonably infer the existence of the alleged fact.

Illustrations.

EVIDENCE HELD TO AMOUNT TO SCINTILLA.

In each of the following cases, the evidence was held to amount to a scintilla, but not to be sufficient to take the case to the jury:

In Ellis v. Oliphant, 159 Ia. 514, 141 N. W. 415, it appeared that on the day on which some of the defendant's sheep had been killed by dogs which were said by a witness to have been all dark colored, the defendant dragged the carcass of one of the sheep to a ditch in the pasture where the sheep had been kept, and surrounded it with several traps. On the second day thereafter the plaintiff's collie dog, which was light in color, was caught in one of the traps and killed by the defendant in order to end its misery. It was not claimed that the dog was in the act of chasing, worrying or injuring sheep at the time he was caught, but it was insisted that his presence there was an indication that he had been one of the group of dogs which did the original damage. In an action for damages for the wrongful killing of the dog, it was held that there was but a mere scintilla of evidence, not regarded as sufficient to take the case to the jury, on the theory that any of the damage to the sheep had been done by the plaintiff's dog.

In Alderson v. Hume, 40 Okla. 533, 139 Pac. 955, an action of replevin, the plaintiff alleged that he was the owner of the property seized on execution and entitled to its immediate possession, and introduced evidence which clearly established his ownership. The defense was that the plaintiff fraudulently claimed to be the owner of the property for the purpose of protecting the real owner against the executions issued. The testimony of the plaintiff on direct examination was that he was the absolute owner of the property at the time it was levied on as the property of the judgment debtor, and the only evidence relied on to create an inference to the contrary was the cross-examination of the plaintiff himself. It was held that as there was no more than a mere scintilla of evidence, the trial court should have withdrawn the case from the jury.

Schoepfiin v. Coffey, 162 N. Y. 12, 56 N. E. 502, was an action for both slander and libel. In the complaint, after stating the slanderous words which were alleged to have been spoken in the presence of two named persons, and the fact that they were reporters, the plaintiff alleged that thereby the defendant caused these statements to be printed and published, thus containing no direct allegation as a fact that the defendant caused them to be printed and published, but averring it as a conclusion from the preceding allegations. The most that the proof established was that a person whom the defendant knew to be a reporter, asked him as to a report which was in circulation concerning the matters alleged in the complaint, stating that he understood the defendant had asserted the facts, which were subsequently published, and the latter admitted having done so. This statement was not made for publication and there was other evidence tending to show that he did not intend and had no design to procure its publication. It was held that the trial judge erred in not directing a verdict for the defendant, as it was not enough to authorize the submission of a question as one of fact to the jury, that there was a scintilla of evidence or a mere surmise.

In Strauss v. American Chewing Gum Co. 134 Mo. App. 110, 114 S. W. 73, an action for the price of goods sold, the defense was that the articles were sold on a warranty as to the quality, and that the plaintiffs had breached the warranty. There was no substantial evidence that the articles were sold on a warranty. The plaintiffs' evidence was positive, direct, and uncontradicted by the defendant that the articles were sold by sample, and that those furnished were equal in quality to the sample. It was held that while there was a mere scintilla of evidence that it was agreed that the articles should be as good as another like article, there was no substantial evidence to that effect sufficient to warrant a jury in finding that they were represented or warranted to be equal in quality to the other article. Hence it was held that it was the duty of the trial judge peremptorily to instruct the jury to find for the plaintiff.

In Holland v. Kindregan, 155 Pa. St. 156, 25 Atl. 1077, an action of ejectment for a strip of land, formerly part of a public road, it appeared that in 1846 certain land was conveyed to James Holland described in one of its courses as running along "the southwest side of Mill road." In 1852, a report of commissioners was filed vacating Mill road. In October, 1853, James Holland conveyed a piece of ground to the defendants' predecessor in title, describing it "as beginning at a stake on the southwest side of Mill road, a corner, etc., and thence along the southwest side of said Mill road," etc. In 1883, James Holland conveyed a piece of ground to the plaintiff, describing one of the courses as beginning on a corner "formerly the middle of the Mill road, which was vacated by order of court about 1852, thence along the same," etc. In 1891, James Holland conveyed to the plaintiff the land in controversy which is the southern half of the bed of the old Mill road. The plaintiff claimed that before the deed of October, 1853, the Mill road had been actually closed, and in support of this claim James Holland testified that in that year he put a fence in the middle of the road to mark the line of his property. The court held that the evidence of James Holland amounted at most to but a scintilla, and that the action of the judge below in entering a judgment for the defendants non obstante veredicto, was correct.

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—60.

Fadden v. McKinney, 87 Vt. 316, 89 Atl. 351, was an action of trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close, to which a count in trover was joined for taking and carrying away certain household goods owned by him. It appeared that a daughter of the plaintiff, with whom he had disagreed, sent a truckman to the plaintiff's house to remove her and her husband's furniture, and it was claimed that in the moving of these things the plaintiff's furniture and personal effects were taken also. There was no direct evidence to connect the daughter's husband with the transaction. He had given her the money to pay for removing their personal effects and had been told by his wife when and where they were to move and whom she had employed to move their goods, and had left the house in the morning for his work before the work of moving was begun. It was held that, so far as his liability was concerned, something more than a mere scintilla of evidence was required to support a verdict for the plaintiff, and that where, as here, liability rested entirely on circumstantial evidence which did not reasonably tend to support his connection with the trespass, he was entitled to have a verdict in his favor directed.

In Baulec v. New York, etc. R. Co. 59 N. Y. 366, 17 Am. Rep. 325, an action for damages for the death of a fireman, alleged to be due to negligence, it appeared that the accident occurred at a junction of the defendant's road with the New Haven road, and, as the evidence tended to show, was occasioned by the negligence of the defendant's switchman at that point, who, after the passage of a New Haven train, changed the signal so that it indicated that the switch was right for the Harlem train, on which the plaintiff's intestate was a fireman, without in fact changing the switch. The plaintiff produced evidence that some six or seven months before this accident a New Haven freight train met with a similar accident at this same switch, but the proof as to the accident left the question in doubt whether it was chargeable to the same switchman or to the engineer on the train. It was a dark night. The tracks of the two roads ran parallel for some distance. The switchman had set the switch for the New Haven road. It did not appear that the bell on the engine of the New Haven train was rung or its whistle sounded. The switchman not hearing it supposed it was a special on the Harlem road and changed the switch and the train ran off. It appeared that the general agent of the road having authority to employ and discharge switchmen investigated the occurrence, and after the evidence of the facts continued the switchman in his position, which retention was alleged to exhibit a want of proper care and prudence on the part of the defendant. The court held that there was not sufficient evidence to carry the case to the jury, saying: "It is not enough to authorize the submission of the question, as one of fact, to a jury, that there is 'some evidence. A scintilla of evidence, or a mere surmise that there may have been negligence on the part of the defendants, would not justify the judge in leaving the case to the jury.' (Per Willaims, J., Toomey v. London, etc. R. Co. 3 C. B. N. S. 146, 91 E. C. L. 146.)" It is, however, to be noted that the scintilla rule is not in force in New York. Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co. 103 N. Y. 341, 8 N. E. 654, 57 Am. Rep. 729.

In Toomey v. London, etc. R. Co. 3 C. B. N. S. 146, 91 E. C. L. 146, 27 L. J. C. Pl. 39, 6 W. R. 44, 140 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 694, the facts were as follows: The plaintiff, an illiterate person, went to a railway station, and while waiting for the train, inquired of a person on the platform, unconnected with the railway, where he should find a urinal. This person told him to go to the right: he did so, and found two doors, on one of which was painted the words "For Gentlemen," and on the other the words "Lamp-room," there being a light over the former, but none over the latter. The plaintiff, being in a hurry and unable to read, opened the wrong door, stepped forward, and fell down some steps, seriously injuring himself. Williams, J., said: "I think there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the company or their servants which ought to have been submitted to the jury. It is not enough to say that there was some evidence; for, every person who has had any experience in courts of justice knows very well that a case of this sort against a railway company could only be submitted to a jury with one result. A scintilla of evidence, or a mere surmise that there may have been negligence on the part of the defendants, clearly would not justify the judge in leaving the case to the jury: there must be evidence upon which they might reasonably and properly conclude that there was negligence. All that appeared, was, that the plaintiff inquired of a stranger the way to the urinal, and, being told to go in a particular direction where there were two doors, unfortunately opened the wrong one, and through his own carelessness fell down some steps. If there had been any evidence to show that these steps were more than ordinarily dangerous, that possibly might have led to a different conclusion. But all that appears is, that the door in question led down some steps into a room which was used for the purposes of the company, and not for the convenience of the public. I cannot say that there was such evidence of negligence in the defendants as the learned judge was bound to leave to the jury."

Where the only evidence on which a party rests his right to succeed consists of a statement of facts, inherently impossible and absolutely at variance with well-established and universally recognized physical laws, that which purports to be evidence is insufficient to institute a compliance with the requirements of the scintilla rule as to the quality of evidence necessary to convey a case to the jury and a verdict of the jury thereon will be reversed. Louisville, etc. R. Co. v. Chambers, 165 Ky. 703, Ann. Cas. 1917B 471, 178 S. W. 1041.

In each of the following cases, the evidence was held to amount to a scintilla and to be sufficient to take the case to the jury:

In Mason, etc. Co. v. Highland (Ky.) 116 S. W. 320, it appeared that the plaintiff was employed as a day laborer in the construction of a tunnel and alleged that while he was engaged in removing rafters supporting the temporary walls used in constructing the tunnel, he was thrown to the ground and seriously injured through the negligence and carelessness of the defendants, their agents and servants. In the defendants' answer, they pleaded that the plaintiff was not employed by them but that, if he was injured at all, it was while in the service of an independent contractor who was engaged in lining the tunnel with brick. The evidence as to whether the contractor was an independent contractor, within the usually accepted meaning of the term, or whether he was, in part, a servant occupying the position of general manager or supervisor for his employer, was held, under the scintilla rule, to be enough to warrant the trial court's submission of the question to the jury. See also Louisville R. Co. v. Buckner (Ky.) 113 S. W. 90, set out at length infra in the subdivision Evidence Held to Amount to More than Scintilla.

In American Dist. Tel. Co. v. Oldham, 143 Ky. 320, Ann. Cas. 1913E 376, 146 S. W. 764, it appeared that the plaintiff, a fireman, in responding to an alarm, jumped off the reel with another man, each having hold of the hose, for the purpose of unwinding it from the reel, which was driven on up the street. They wrapped the hose around a guy post some ten or twelve feet in height for the purpose of holding the hose, and after this had been done and in going from the guy post to the engine, the post fell on him and inflicted injuries. Some twelve years prior, the city's fire alarm service had an alarm box on this post and about that time the American District Telegraph Company placed one of its wires thereon. Four or five years later, the wires and box of the fire alarm service were removed from the post and it was used only by the telegraph company. The post was hollow at the ground and rotten. It was held that, under the scintilla rule, there was sufficient evidence for the plaintiff as to the liability of the city, to take the case to the jury.

In Barr v. Poor, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 257, the court said that though the record hardly presented a meritorious action, or a case where a verdict, had there been one for the plaintiff, could be permitted to stand, yet, as an examination of the evidence showed that there was a scintilla of evidence on all the essential points, it should have been submitted to the jury.

In each of the following cases, it was held that the evidence amounted to a scintilla, and, while sufficient to take the case to the jury, was not sufficient to support a verdict:

In Louisville, etc. R. Co. v. Hall, 94 S. W. 26, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 584, it appeared that the plaintiff was an engineer in the service of the defendant. One day he pulled an extra train from Henderson to Owensboro reaching Owensboro at 11:30 P.M. The extra had in it a dead engine and some work cars with the working crew upon them. When he reached Owensboro he was ordered to run from there eastward as the third section of No. 64. About thirteen miles east of Owensboro he ran into the second section of No. 64 and in jumping from the engine at the time of the collision received serious injuries. He brought suit to recover damages on the ground that the servants in charge of the second section were guilty of gross negligence in stopping it upon the track and failing to give any signal or warning to him. The company pleaded that the collision was by reason of his own negligence and asserted a counterclaim against him for the loss it sustained in the injury to its engine and cars by reason of the collision. The proof showed that the first section of No. 64 had left Owensboro more than an hour before the second section left. It was required by the rules of the company that the third section should leave ten minutes behind the second section and, as they were both to run on the time of No. 64, they should have kept ten minutes apart at all points on the road. If for any reason No. 64 stopped upon the track it was incumbent upon those in charge of that train immediately to send a flagman back a given distance and give certain signals. The plaintiff testified that after leaving Owensboro he ran at the speed allowed him by the time card and that about thirteen miles from Owensboro he ran into the second section standing on the track, and the required signals had not been given. That the signals were not given was conceded, but the men on the second section testified that their train broke in two; that they made an emergency stop and before any signal could be given to the plaintiff he dashed into them by reason of the fact that he was running so close to them as to give no time for the signals. The company insisted that under all the evidence a peremptory instruction should have been given the jury to find for the defendant. The plaintiff testified for himself placing the blame for the accident on the second section. He then introduced on his own behalf the men in charge of the second section and they all placed the blame for the accident on him. It was held that while, in view of the plaintiff's testimony, there was a scintilla of evidence sufficient to take the case to the jury, it did not follow that a scintilla was sufficient to support a verdict in his favor.

In Cincinnati, etc. R. Co. v. Zachary, 106 S. W. 842, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 678, an action for damages for death alleged to be due to the defendant's negligence in failing to keep a connecting track in a reasonably safe and fit condition for use, whereby a car was derailed and the decedent thereby thrown from it and killed, but for the testimony of a witness which tended to prove, circumstantially, that the decedent was thrown from the car by its derailment, there was no evidence of actionable negligence on the part of the defendant. It was held that while the "scintilla rule" obtained in the state, under which it was the duty of the trial court to submit the case to the jury if there was a scintilla of evidence to sustain the plaintiff's case, yet there was no rule permitting a verdict to stand on a scintilla of evidence against overwhelming and credible evidence to the contrary.

In each of the following cases, the evidence therein was held to amount to a mere scin-tilla, and to be insufficient to support a verdict:

In Smith v. Hamakua Mill Co. 14 Hawaii 669, an action for ejectment, in which the defense was adverse possession, the evidence which was pointed to as tending to support the verdict either by showing weakness in the defendant's proof of hostility or as independent proof by the plaintiff of a recognition of title in the true owners, was held to be so very slight and so very unsatisfactory as to be insufficient to sustain the verdict and to amount to a mere "scintilla" of evidence.

In Georgia R. etc. Co. v. Harris, 1 Ga. App. 714, 57 S. E. 1076, an action for damages for injuries alleged to have been inflicted on his horse by a street railway company, the plaintiff attempted to substantiate his case by the following proof only: At about eleven o'clock one morning the horse escaped from the plaintiff's lot. At about six or seven o'clock the next morning, the horse was found standing under a tree about thirty or forty feet away from the track of the company's "river line," and the ground was pawed up around where it was standing. Its hip was broken about where the breeching usually strikes a horse, but there were no marks of external violence or bruises of any kind on its skin or flesh, nor had the hair been knocked off. The plaintiff testified that between the rails of the car line he saw one horse track pointing in the direction of the place where the horse was found; but between this place and the place where the horse was standing there were no other signs. The city inspector corroborated his testimony as to the injury to the horse. It was held that in such a case of circumstantial evidence, a mere inconclusive inference, or, as the English courts have expressed it, a mere scintilla, was not to be regarded as any evidence, so as to require the submission of its sufficiency to the jury, and a verdict for the plaintiff.

In Richards v. Ontai, 19 Hawaii 451, an action of assumpsit to recover a sum alleged to be due for rent under a lease of certain premises, the defendants pleaded by way of set-off a claim for compensation for the use of water furnished to the plaintiff. There was some evidence, including a series of three letters, adduced on the subject of the acceptance of an oral contract with respect to the water rates by the tenants, one of whom in a letter had imposed a term with respect to the cutting of the grass on a certain field, which was rejected by the plaintiff. The plaintiff testified that the tenant had, some time subsequent to the date of the letter rejecting the term, said that "it was all right." The court held that the remark must be regarded as a mere scintilla, insufficient to support a finding of acceptance in view of other evidence, and standing alone. It was further held that even if it could be said that the scrap of evidence under consideration was not a mere scintilla, but was sufficient to support a finding of an oral acceptance of the contract by the tenant, still the undisputed evidence showed a cancellation of the contract by the plaintiff, concurred in by the tenant.

In Tyler v. Wise, 21 Hawaii 148, the undisputed evidence showed that a contract, complete in its terms, was entered into between the parties by telegraph and letter while the plaintiff was in Chicago. The defendants were to furnish the plaintiff employment as a singer in Honolulu for a period of at least twelve weeks at a salary of $35 per week and were to furnish her transportation from San Francisco to Honolulu and return and advance to her the cost of transportation from Chicago to San Francisco, the latter amount to be repaid by her in weekly instalments of $10. The plaintiff sang under her contract at a theatre operated by the Honolulu Amusement Company until it refused to permit her to sing. She was told before leaving San Francisco that the amount of time would be twelve weeks "if I (defendant) finished out with the Honolulu Amusement Company." It was held that assuming that it was within the power of the trial court to construe this qualification as having been intended to refer to the plaintiff's contract with defendants, rather than the defendants' contract with the Honolulu Amusement Company, it was at best a mere scintilla of evidence, and not sufficient to support a finding that the contract as originally entered into was modified to that extent in San Francisco.

In Scott v. Hawaiian Tobacco Plantation, 21 Hawaii 493, an action of assumpsit for labor performed in clearing certain land, a document was introduced in evidence which was described as being a "statement of account due" the plaintiff's assignors "for clearing land," and which set forth their claim to be "by clearing of guavas, root and branch, clearing and placing in shape for cultivation (5 1/20) five and one-twentieth acres of land @ $50.00 per A. $260," and was signed "Correct: Hawaiian Tobacco Plantation, Ltd., by Wm. B. Schrader, Mgr." In an attempt to deprive this document of the character of an account stated, Schrader testified that he did not intend it to be an admission of the amount due, but merely of the fact that the work had been done. It was held that in view of the language of the document signed by Schrader and of all the other evidence, that the statement that he merely intended to certify that the land had been cleared, must be regarded as a mere scintilla of evidence and that the finding that the paper was not an account stated was unsupported by the evidence.

For evidence which, standing alone, is held not to constitute more than a mere scintilla of evidence, and so not to support a verdict in an action of assumpsit against an estate for maintenance and support furnished and services rendered to the deceased, see the decision in the reported case.

In Ewing v. Goode, 78 Fed. 442, an action against a surgeon and oculist for want of proper skill and care, it was held that the evidence that the plaintiff, who was undergoing treatment by the defendant, suffered any injury from the latter's failure to supply another physician during his absence, because of his office girl's neglect (if she was guilty of any), was not more than a scintilla, if that.

In Gould v. Gilligan, 181 Mass. 600, 64 N. E. 409, an action of tort for personal injuries caused by the running away of a pair of horses with a cart belonging to the defendant and then striking the plaintiff eight hundred and fifty feet away from the point where they started, all the evidence from eyewitnesses as to how the horses came to run away showed that the driver was at the tail of the cart when the horses started, and that they were suddenly frightened by a barrel being rolled against their heels by a boy. There was no evidence that the driver was not there unless by a remote and uncertain inference from the testimony of some witnesses that he did not appear for fifteen or twenty minutes upon the scene of the accident, which was eight hundred and fifty feet away from the point from which the horses started. Naturally, on such evidence, the argument for the plaintiff said nothing about the driver's being away from his horses, but was directed to the way of leaving the reins, to the failure to see the barrel more quickly, and so forth. Naturally also, the court in its charge followed the course of the argument and instructed the jury on the aspects of the case which had been discussed. But at the end of the charge the counsel for the plaintiff objected that the judge had assumed that the driver was by his cart when the horses started, and requested him to call the jury's attention to the position that the driver was not by his cart at that time. It was held that the judge was justified in refusing to put forward for the first time at the end of his charge a view of the case for which there was but the merest scintilla of evidence, if it fairly could be said that there was any evidence at all.

In Canode v. Sewell (Tex.) 182 S. W. 421, an action for the death of an employee alleged to have been produced by the negligence of the master, on account of a defective elevator, it appeared that there was a noise of falling glass, or tools, and dust was first seen falling down the elevator shaft. Then, within some inappreciable length of time, the elevator hoive in sight with a fellow servant desperately attempting to stop it, and the deceased practically dead on top of the cage. It was held that the evidence was insufficient to support a verdict for the plaintiff as there must be more than a scintilla of evidence; there must be "evidence sufficient to warrant a reasonable belief of the existence of the fact which is sought to be inferred."

The doctrine of "scintilla" of testimony for the purpose of submitting an issue to the jury or granting a motion for a new trial on such testimony has, however, been abandoned in Texas. U. S. Express Co. v. Taylor, 156 S. W. 617.

EVIDENCE HELD TO AMOUNT TO LESS THAN SCINTILLA.

In each of the following cases, the evidence was held to amount to less than a scintilla:

In Taylor v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 78 S. C. 552, 59 S. E. 643, the plaintiff alleged that after having been carried beyond and then brought back to her station, on an excursion trip, and while leaving the cars thereat, she, in the presence of the employees of the defendant company at the depot of said station, was surrounded by a drunken crowd of colored people, who violently pushed and jolted her and abused her with menacing speeches, using profane, violent and obscene language, and that one of the employees of the defendant company ran off, telling plaintiff that he was going for his pistol in order that he might protect her and at the same time leaving her alone in the midst of a great throng of negroes and never returned. The plaintiff was carried by a colored woman, to a house a distance of at least two hundred yards where she begged to be cared for during the night and was given lodging. There was nothing in the testimony tending to show the allegations of the complaint. No one threatened, abused, molested, assaulted or injured her. She merely touched, "caught against," some of the negro men as she made her way through the crowd at night. There was no suggestion that they purposely subjected her to any personal indignity. The crowd of excursionists and their friends were doubtless noisy; no doubt some of them were more or less intoxicated, and their language was offensive to the plaintiff. The agent, it appeared, endeavored to remedy this, enjoining them to be quiet in the presence of the lady. It was held that there was not even a scintilla of evidence to support a verdict for her.

In Territory v. Mackey, 8 Mont. 168, 19 Pac. 395, an indictment based on a statute (Comp.

St. Mont. § 1482, p. 1055) declaring it a misdemeanor for any person to obliterate, deface or destroy any notice placed on a mining claim, the established definition of a mining claim being "a parcel of land containing precious metal in its soil," a witness testified that he was the locator of the claim, and in starting to mine a cross-cut found quartz and vein matter, which was the whole of the testimony on this point. It was held that, tested by the foregoing definition of a mining claim, there was not a scintilla of evidence that there was a particle of precious metal in the "quartz" or "vein matter."

In each of the following cases, it was said that the evidence amounted to less than a scintilla:

While the statements to that effect are dicta, for the reason that in the jurisdictions cited the scintilla doctrine has been held not to apply (Ozanne v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 151 Fed. 900, affirmed 157 Fed. 1004, 85 C. C. A. 678; Simmons v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 110 Ill. 347; Bartelott v. International Bank, 119 Ill. 259, 9 N. E. 898; Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co. 103 N. Y. 341, 8 N. E. 654, 57 Am. Rep. 729; Heffernan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 88 Misc. 93, 150 N. Y. S. 644; Hyatt v. Johnston, 91 Pa. St. 196; Cover v. Manaway, 115 Pa. St. 338, 8 Atl. 393, 2 Am. St. Rep. 552), they are, nevertheless, of interest in determining the quantum of evidence constituting a scintilla of evidence.

In Hyatt v. Johnston, 91 Pa. St. 196, it was conceded by the defendant that the first firm of which he was a member was indebted to the plaintiff for merchandise, in a larger sum than that claimed in the suit, and it was contended that acceptances of the second firm, of which the draft in suit was one, were taken by the plaintiff in absolute payment of the original indebtedness, and that the plaintiff was thus released therefrom. For the purpose of proving these facts certain letters were offered and admitted, one of which, even if it could be regarded as an admission that the acceptances were those of the second firm, could not be construed to mean that they were taken in absolute payment. It was said that there was scarcely a scintilla of evidence to show that the acceptance was taken in absolute payment.

In Hathaway v. East Tennessee, etc. R. Co. 29 Fed. 489 (applying Georgia rule), the following facts appeared: The plaintiff was an employe of the defendant corporation, as flag-man. He was injured, while in the performance of his duty, in the following manner: The freight train was moving slowly from the station. The engineer told the plaintiff, who was on the track, that he was going to move out slowly, and to get aboard. The plaintiff replied: "All right; I will signal you to go ahead fast, as soon as I get on the cab." The plaintiff went down the side track until the cab was opposite to him. It was not really a cab, but a box car used in lieu of a cab. There was a ladder by the door, and an iron loop or step fastened to the car, under the door of the car, used as a cab. The plaintiff caught hold of the ladder with his hands, and attempted to get into the door. Before he made his step, as he testified, his feet struck a pile of sand. He lost hold of the ladder, and, falling on the pile of sand, rolled under the moving cars, and was injured as described. It was a dark night, with a "drizzly" rain. The plaintiff had a lantern on his arm. He stopped, to await the cab, near the pile of sand, and at that end in the direction from which the train was going. The sand, it was stated in the declaration, had been put there since he made "his last trip down the road." That, he testified, was the day before the accident. The plaintiff's witnesses testified that there were one or two carloads of sand in the pile; that it had been brought there to fill a depression or sink in the roadbed and between the tracks. The evidence was clear and undisputed that the pile of sand was only from one and a half to two feet high; that the construction train brought the sand to this spot, and the section hands were to see that it was properly distributed. There was no evidence to show that the sand was improperly placed. There was no satisfactory evidence as to when the sand was dumped at this spot. The plaintiff's witnesses said that there was a sink there that had to be filled. The declaration averred that the sand was unnecessarily placed at this spot, and unnecessarily kept there. It was said that there was literally no scintilla of evidence to support this statement.

In Allen v. U. S. Fidelity, etc. Co. 269 Ill. 234, 109 N. E. 1035, affirming 193 Ill. App. 193, an action on an indemnifying bond given to the sureties on a county treasurer's official bond, it appeared that the county treasurer who was also ex officio supervisor of assessments in his county, had retained a certain sum as his compensation for acting in the latter capacity, illegally, it was alleged. There was no evidence in the record that showed, or even tended to show, that he was guilty of larceny or embezzlement in retaining this money. Not only his testimony, but all the evidence found in the record and all the facts bearing on this question in the record of the chancery suit instituted by the county board against him and the sureties on his bond, to reform it and recover the amount, and which was introduced in evidence, proved beyond question that he kept the money because he was advised by competent attorneys, who represented the sureties on his official bond in the case at bar, that he was entitled to retain it as compensation for his services as supervisor of assessments. The revenue statute then in force, as amended subsequently, stated that he should receive such compensation, but at the time he went out of office there might have been an honest difference of opinion as to whether the statute did not give him that right. The court said that they did not find even a scintilla of evidence in the record that indicated that the acts of the county treasurer in keeping the money involved moral turpitude on his part, and that under the rule in that state that if there was no evidence, or but a scintilla of evidence, tending to prove the averments of the declaration, the jury should be directed to return a verdict for the defendant, the trial court had rightly directed a verdict in their favor.

In Fisick v. Lorber, 95 Misc. 574, 159 N. Y. S. 722, an action for injuries received from the operation of the defendant's automobile by his chauffeur, the question was whether or not, after he had finished his meal at his home, the chauffeur was proceeding to the garage directly for the purpose of storing the car for the night, or was about to take him family to visit some one or for a ride. The court held that the mere fact that he went by one street rather than another, for a short distance, amounted merely to a negligible deviation from the direct route. It held that it could not find in this fact even the proverbial "scintilla" of evidence that he was entering on a joy ride or for any purpose of his own; and that even such a scintilla furnished no adequate foundation on which to base a finding.

Lonzer v. Lehigh Val. R. Co. 196 Pa. St. 610, 46 Atl. 937, was an action for the death of the plaintiff's husband, an engineer, killed by the derailling of his train, due to a subsidence of the track. The recognition of the dangerous condition of the track was such that the company had begun a change of location, and pending the completion of the work had posted a notice on the bulletin board in the assistant trainmaster's office for nearly three weeks before the accident that "All trains will run slow between Sugar Loaf Switch and South Sugar Loaf, account track settling." It was the duty of deceased to examine this bulletin board before starting and at the end of each run, that is, six times every day that the notice was up, and the inference was irresistible that he must have seen it. But beyond this there was the positive testimony of the fireman that the deceased had a copy of the order which he showed to the witness. The plaintiff made an effort to show that the notice was not posted until after the accident, and a single witness, the engineer of a shifting engine, was called to this point in rebuttal. It was said, however, that this evidence hardly amounted to a scintilla.

In Henderson v. Northam (Cal.) 168 Pac. 1044, the action was for injuries alleged to have been sustained as the result of the negligent operation of an automobile. For the purpose of showing the existence of a copartnership, engaged in the enterprise of racing the car for money, between the owner and her drivers and that the owner of the car had taken it to that city for the purpose of entering it in races to be run there as a partnership adventure, the court, over the defendant's objection, received evidence to the effect that on the afternoon of April 26th, some one paraded the track in front of the grand stand, and by means of a megaphone announced to the large crowd assembled on the grounds that the defendant had entered her car with Toft as driver in a fifty-mile race to be run the next day for a wager of $2,500; the announcer introducing some one unknown to the witness as Toft. While the witness could not say that the owner was present and heard the announcement, he did see her in her car at one end of the grand stand about fifteen minutes before the announcement, and later, about fifteen minutes after the announcement had been made, saw her drive away. In answer to the contention that her conduct and silence constituted an admission by acquiescence, the court said: "Conceding, however, that she did hear the statement made and that it was her duty to contradict the same, there is not a scintilla of evidence in the record which tends to prove that she remained silent. Indeed, for aught that appears to the contrary, she may by like use of a megaphone have repudiated the declaration as being false and untrue."

EVIDENCE HELD TO AMOUNT TO MORE THAN SCINTILLA.

In each of the following cases, the evidence was held to amount to more than a scintilla:

In Whitehead v. Valley View Consol. Gold Min. Co. 26 Colo. App. 114, 141 Pac. 138, it appeared that the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant company and certain officers of the company in their official capacity, alleging that she was the owner of a certain certificate of stock calling for 10,000 shares of the capital stock of the company; that she delivered the same to the president of the company for the sole purpose of having it transferred to her on the books of the company; and that she had demanded of the president and each of the individual defendant officers of the company the certificate to be issued in lieu of the original certificate, but that they had refused to deliver it to her. The evidence showed conclusively that the certificate of stock was delivered to the president of the company by the plaintiff; on his solicitation and request, and on his representation that the plaintiff ought to have that certificate of stock taken up and new stock issued to her in lieu thereof. It also showed that the president caused the same to be canceled by the secretary of the company, and in lieu of it various certificates of stock, representing the same amount in the aggregate as the original certificate, were issued to the president, the secretary, and other officers of the company who were made defendants. It was held that the trial court had erred in granting a nonsuit at the close of the plaintiff's testimony, as there was more than a scintilla of evidence in support of her case.

In Louisville R. Co. v. Buckner (Ky.) 113 S. W. 90, it appeared that the plaintiff's intestate was in the employ of the city as a street sweeper; and it was the contention of the plaintiff that, while standing in the south track of the defendant's railway at its intersection with another street, looking eastwardly and engaged at work, he was struck and so injured by one of the defendant's cars, approaching him from the rear, as to cause his death. On the other hand, it was the defendant's contention that, just before the car struck the employee, he was knocked in front of it by lumber projecting from a passing wagon, and that the car could not be stopped in time to prevent its striking him. It was conceded by the defendant's counsel that there was a scintilla of evidence which authorized the submission of the case to the jury, and it was held that there was some evidence, and more than a scintilla, to sustain the plaintiff's theory of the manner in which the employee received his injuries, and to support a verdict in his favor.

In Washington v. Missouri, etc. R. Co. 90 Tex. 314, 38 S. W. 764 (reversing 36 S. W. 778), the action was for damages for death due to negligence. The evidence showed that the plaintiff's intestate was seen walking along a footpath on the defendant's right of way, which people were in the habit of using and which was in a deep cut. Shortly afterward there was a wreck caused by the collision of two sections of a freight train which had become uncoupled, and the body of the intestate was found under the tank of an oil car in the train, which had been derailed, a few feet from the track. It was held that there was more than a mere scintilla of evidence and that the case ought to have been submitted to the jury.

In Butts v. Atlantic, etc. R. Co. 133 N. C. 82, 45 S. E. 472, an action to recover damages for personal injuries received by being struck by a train, there was testimony tending to prove that the plaintiff was traveling along a public highway within the corporate limits of the city where the highway crossed the track at an acute angle, both the plaintiff and the train going in the same relative direction; that no signal for the crossing was given either by bell or whistle; and that the plaintiff stopped, looked, and listened, and heard nothing. It was held that, taking the plaintiff's evidence as true, and construing all the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, there was more than a scintilla of evidence tending to prove his contention.

In Craft v. Norfolk, etc. R. Co. 136 N. C. 49, 48 S. E. 519, the plaintiff testified that the defendant cut a canal whereby the waters of a branch, which previously thereto flowed into a creek below his land, were turned into that creek at a point above his land; that this diversion caused the water in the creek, which was his eastern boundary, to rise and overflow his land to such an extent as to destroy his crop for two previous years. Another witness testified for the plaintiff in substantial corroboration. It was held that there was more than a scintilla of evidence tending to prove the plaintiff's contention.

In Cox v. High Point, etc. R. Co. 147 N. C. 353, 61 S. E. 183, the evidence showed that in the morning a mail clerk, in his usual health, who had been found by a physician less than a month before to be in normal condition, left his home in the discharge of his duty to enter and remain in the mail car from Ashboro to High Point, not exceeding twenty-eight miles; that he was in the car at the time it jumped the track and by striking or being thrown against iron racks or tables was bruised on his body and in the region of his kidneys. Acute Bright's disease developed resulting in pneumonia and causing his death. It was held that his administrator in an action for damages for his death had introduced evidence which was very much more than a mere scintilla, and that the issue should have been submitted to the jury.

In Currie v. Gilchrist, 147 N. C. 648, 61 S. E. 581, an action to recover the possession of land, wherein the evidence showed a lapse of the two titles, it was held that there was more than a scintilla of evidence as to the location of the boundaries described in the grant and deeds on which the plaintiff relied to show title.

In Forayth v. Zebulon Cotton Oil Mill Co. 167 N. C. 179, 83 S. E. 320, the evidence tended to prove that the plaintiff was employed in the cotton seed room of the defendant to put cotton seed in the seed conveyor, in which position the plaintiff had been working for several weeks. The room in which the conveyor was operated was a large room with a revolving shaft above, which operated the machinery. The room was usually filled with cotton seed, piled up high. The evidence showed that this was necessary in the operation of the defendant's business, for the purpose not only of storing the cotton seed, but of feeding the conveyor. At the time of the injury the cotton seed was piled up in the room so that the plaintiff, after work hours, crawled on his all-fours between the end of the shafting and the side of the house, and, coming in contact with the shafting, was injured. The alleged negligence consisted in the failure of the defendant to provide a reasonably safe way for the plaintiff to get out of the building without climbing over the cotton seed near the revolving shaft in the manner in which he did. There was evidence tending to prove that there was a way provided for the plaintiff and other employees to get out, and that it was possible for them to go from the place where plaintiff was working and cross over to the other side of the building, across the cotton seed, and in that way avoid the shafting and get to the door. There was other evidence tending to prove that the plaintiff, with a few minutes' work with a shovel, could very easily have shoveled aside the cotton seed and thus made his way to the door. It was held that there was more than a scintilla of evidence tending to prove the plaintiff's contention that his injury had been caused by the defendant's negligence.

In Zollicoffer v. Zollicoffer, 168 N. C. 326, 84 S. E. 349, it appeared that the owner of a certificate of stock requested the plaintiff to take and keep it for his daughter, but he declined to do so, stating that she was the one to hold it. Thereupon she indorsed it to the daughter and placed it in her Bible. It was held that the evidence on the question of delivery, while very slight, was more than a scintilla and was sufficient to carry the case to the jury.

The Hawaiian statute (R. L. sec. 1798) requires that all questions of fact shall be submitted to the jury for their determination without any comment on the reliability of the witnesses or the weight of the evidence by the trial judge. It, however, contains a provision that it shall not "be construed to prohibit the setting aside of a verdict rendered by such jury, in a proper case, as being against the weight of evidence, and the granting of a new trial therein." In Robinson v. Honolulu Rapid Transit, etc. Co. 20 Hawaii 466, the court held that the foregoing proviso could not be construed as authorizing a trial judge to set aside a verdict simply because in his judgment it was against the weight of evidence, when there was some substantial evidence to support it, and the verdict had not been attacked on any other ground. In other words, it was held that, in a case where the verdict was supported by more than a scintilla of evidence, it was not "a proper case" in which to set aside the verdict on the sole ground that it was against the weight of the evidence.

STATE EX REL COLLINS

v.

SENATOBIA BLANK BOOK AND STATIONERY COMPANY.

Mississippi Supreme Court—July 9, 1917.

115 Miss. 254; 76 So. 253.

Printing — Public Contract — Limitation to Residents — Validity.

Laws 1916, c. 135, § 3, prohibiting the letting by boards of supervisors of counties of contracts to furnish the county with blank books, stationery, etc., to any bidder who is a nonresident of the state, who has not a printing plant in the state or who is not a bona fide resident of the state actually engaged in the printing business is not violative of Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8 (8 Fed. St. Ann. 363), giving Congress the right to regulate commerce among the several states, since such provision of the constitution is not intended to affect contracts which have an indirect or remote bearing on commerce between the states, and a state in the exercise of its police power may make regulations which indirectly affect interstate commerce; it being only direct interferences with the freedom of such commerce that bring the case within the exclusive domain of federal legislation.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Laws 1916, c. 135, § 3, is not violative of Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2 (9 Fed. St. Ann. 158), providing that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states, since counties are mere political subdivisions of the state for the purpose of exercising a part of its powers and may exert only such powers as are expressly granted to them or necessarily implied from those granted, so that regulation of their contracts is a regulation of the contracts of the state, and no person engaged in stationery business is entitled to absolute right to contract with the state.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Laws 1916, c. 135, § 3, is not violative of Const. U. S. Amend. 14 (a) (9 Fed. St. Ann. 392, 416, 538), providing that no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States, nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of laws.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Laws 1916, c. 135, § 3, is not violative of Const. § 107, providing that stationery, printing, etc., used by the legislature and other departments of the government shall be performed under contract subject to the approval of the governor and state treasurer, since a county is not a department of the state but a political subdivision.

[See note at end of this case.]

Constitutional Law — Policy of Statute.

The wisdom of laws, etc., is a matter for the legislature, and it is the sole duty of the courts to say whether the act as passed is violative of the state or federal constitutions.

Quo Warranto — Violation of Charter by Corporation.

Quo warranto is the proper remedy for the attorney general of the state to pursue, where a corporation practiced fraud in obtaining its charter and the acts of the alleged corporation under the charter have been all in violation of law.

Demurrer — Effect as Admission.

A demurrer to an information in quo warranto proceeding admits all the allegations contained in the information, and it is the duty of the appellate court in reviewing the case to assume that the allegations are true as stated.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Tate county:
DINKINS, Judge.

Quo warranto proceeding. Ross A. Collins, Attorney General, relator, and Senatobia Blank Book and Stationery Company, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Relator appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

R. H. & J. H. Thompson, Fulton Thompson and Ross A. Collins for appellant.

Mayer, Wells, May & Sanders for appellee.

[256] SYKES, J.—This was a quo warranto proceeding instituted in the circuit court of Tate county by the state of Mississippi, on the relation of the Attorney-General, against appellee, a corporation, organized under the laws of Mississippi, domiciled in Tate county. The defendant demurred to the information, which demurrer was sustained by the circuit court, and the cause dismissed; from which judgment sustaining the demurrer, this appeal is prosecuted.

Among other things, the information alleged: That shortly after the passage of chapter 135, Laws of 1916 (p. 193), prohibiting the letting by boards of supervisors of the several counties of contracts to furnish the counties with blank books, stationery, etc., to any bidder who is a nonresident of the state of Mississippi, who has not a printing plant in the state, or who is not a bona fide resident of the state actually engaged in the printing business, the charter of incorporation of appellee was applied for and granted. That the objects and purposes of the application for this charter of the appellee were not to enable it to do a lawful business in the state, but that its objects and purposes were unlawful and fraudulent; its objects and purposes were to circumvent the statutes of the state and to perpetrate a fraud on the laws of the state. That the objects and purposes of the incorporators were to enable Geo. D. Bernard & Co., of St. Louis, Mo., a nonresident printing, blank book, and stationery company, to make contracts with the various boards of supervisors of the counties of the state in the name of the appellee company for the furnishing of the blank books and stationery and necessary printing required by law to be done by them.

A part of the information reads as follows:

"In short, the defendant company was incorporated to be, and is, a mere dummy of the said Geo. D. Barnard & Co. Defendant company never has had, and has not now, a printing nor a blank book nor a stationery plant [257] in this state of sufficient capacity to execute the contracts which it has obtained formerly from several counties of the state, as hereinafter shown, nor to execute the several contracts which it has sought to obtain from any other counties. Its entire purpose has been to obtain contracts for blank books, stationery, and printing from the counties in its name and to have the said contracts executed by Geo. D. Barnard & Co., the aforesaid nonresident printing, stationery, and blank book company.

"In pursuance of such fraudulent intent and purpose, and with the design and intent to defeat the laws of this state, the said defendant corporation, falsely pretending to be a bona fide resident of this state and a domestic printing, blank book, and stationery company, has deceived and defrauded the boards of supervisors of various counties of this state."

The information prays for judgment of forfeiture and ouster against the appellee.

The demurrer admits the allegations alleged in the information, and its sole object and purpose is to challenge the constitutionality of chapter 135 of the Laws of 1916 (p. 193).

Section 1 of this act provides the method to be followed by the board of public contracts in the making of contracts for the state printing proper and for the different departments of the state government. That section of the act does not deal with the contracts for printing stationery, etc., for the counties. Section 3 of the act relates to the letting of the contracts by the various boards of supervisors and is the act before us for construction. As amended, this act now reads as follows:

"The boards of supervisors of the several counties of the state shall, on the last Monday in July, 1916, or as soon thereafter as practicable, and on a corresponding date every two years thereafter, after having advertised in some local newspaper for thirty days inviting sealed proposals, let to the lowest responsible bidder [258] contracts for the purpose of record and blank books, tax receipts, warrant books, pay certificates, stationery, office supplies, legal form and such other books and blanks as are used by the county and district officers. They shall classify same into the following classes: (1) Blank books and record books; (2) printed blanks and printed stationery; (3) ruled and printed blanks; (4) tax receipts, warrants and such forms in simple binding; (5) stationery and office supplies and furniture, not including specially ruled or printed work; and the same shall be let by classes, and all contracts for county printing of the second and third classes shall be by the supervisors and awarded to the lowest responsible bidder of local printing establishments in the respective counties, provided the same can be satisfactorily done there. Also local dealers of the various counties shall be allowed the same privileges of bidding for the furnishing of files, furniture, etc., in the fifth class, as is herein provided for the local printing establishments for the second and third class. If no contract is made for any one of the schedules except those held by the local printers of the respective counties, the officers shall buy supplies not contracted for through the contractor, provided his prices are equal to those of other printing establishments. Contracts for other classes may be awarded to worthy and capable printing establishments of this state, actually engaged in the printing business, and paying taxes thereon in the state, and classified schedules shall be furnished by the board of supervisors to prospective bidders on request, clearly showing and clearly defining what is wanted of each of said classes of work, and besides, the clerk of the board of supervisors shall, at least ten days before the awarding of contracts, forward by mail, postage prepaid, such classified schedules to at least twelve printers or printing establishments of character and ability, all of whom shall be residents of this state. Proposals shall be addressed [259] to the clerk of the board of supervisors and shall be so marked as to designate what it is."

The demurrer in this case challenges: First, the constitutionality of this act, alleging that it violates the commerce clause, section 8, article 1, of the federal Constitution; second, that it violates section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution; and, third, that it violates section 107 of the Constitution of Mississippi; fourth, that said information does not charge any present or past violation of any law. It is also argued in the brief of the appellee that this act is violative of article 4, section 2, of the federal Constitution. There are other assignments in the demurrer, but they are not seriously pressed upon us by the appellee, and we do not think it necessary to notice any save those above enumerated.

We shall first consider the question as to whether or not this act is violative of any of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States above mentioned. Article 1, section 8, gives Congress the right "(3) to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes." (8 Fed. St. Ann. 363). Article 4, section 2:

"(1) The citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states." (9 Fed. St. Ann. 158).

Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment:

"(a) No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." (9 Fed. St. Ann. 392, 416, 538).

That the legislature has the power to enact laws regulating the letting of contracts for its printing and that of its subdivisions is not and cannot be questioned. That the county is a subdivision of the state is also not questioned.

[260] The first question, then, is: Does this act violate any of the enumerated provisions of the federal Constitution? The act in question does not attempt to regulate any contracts save those of the state itself and its subdivisions, which are, upon the last analysis, contracts of the state. In other words, by this act the state is but regulating and saying with whom it will make its own contracts for work of this character. It is well also to bear in mind that an individual has a perfect right to make a contract with any one whom he pleases. It follows, also, that the state has a right to make a contract with any one whom it pleases unless it contravenes in some way either the federal or the state Constitution. The law in question in no way attempts to regulate interstate commerce. The section of the act in question is a direction to the officers of the counties prescribing the manner and from whom they shall receive bids for the county supplies mentioned in the act. These county officers are agents of the county and can only act by legislative authority, and in the making of these contracts these acts only relate to the regulation of the state's and its subordinates' own business. Neither the state nor any county can be forced, without its permission, to enter into a contract with an individual or a corporation without its (the state's) permission, unless there is some provision in one of these Constitutions requiring it to do so. There is no such express provision in either of the Constitutions. While the state cannot be compelled without its consent to enter into a contract with any individual or corporation, yet the act in question expressly provides how both resident and nonresident citizens or corporations may qualify to bid for the work provided for under this act. The sum and substance of the act is merely to compel those who desire to do this work for the state or its subdivisions to become amenable to the process of the courts of the state and to do certain of the work within the limits of the state. These are reasonable regulations for the welfare of the state and its [261] subdivisions; the object being to protect the state from bidders who are without the jurisdiction of the state and also having in view the upbuilding of the state by the construction within its limits of the establishments necessary to do this work. This may very well be classed as a police regulation.

In these days of quick communication and transportation among the states of the Union, in its broadest sense, any contract made by a state or its subdivision may in some way indirectly affect interstate commerce. That is to say, most likely some of the raw or manufactured material which may be used in its public buildings or in the furnishing or outfitting of any of the county or state offices, may be transported into the state from another state. This in no way is an interference with interstate commerce. The supreme court of the United States, in a case which is directly in point on this proposition, has stated the law in these apt terms:

"The right of a state, in the exercise of the police power, to make regulations which indirectly affect interstate commerce, has been frequently sustained. In the present case it may be that the use of this kind of asphalt, under municipal authority conferred by the state, will in a limited degree affect interstate commerce; but it certainly is not one of those direct interferences with the power over, and express control of, the subject given by the Constitution to Congress. In this day of multiplied means of intercourse between the states there is scarcely any contract which cannot, in a limited or remote degree, be said to affect interstate commerce. But it is only direct interferences with the freedom of such commerce that bring the case within the exclusive domain of federal legislation." Field v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 194 U. S. 618, 24 S. Ct. 784, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1142.

In the case above quoted from, in further discussing the question as to whether or not the commerce clause of the federal Constitution was violated, the court says:

[262] "It is not intended to affect contracts which have a remote and indirect bearing upon commerce between the states."

It was necessary to transport into the state of Missouri the asphalt contracted for in that work.

The remaining objections to this law, under the federal Constitution, are disposed of in the case of Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 24 S. Ct. 124, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 148. The state of Kansas passed laws making it a criminal offense for a contractor to permit or require an employee to perform labor upon public works in excess of eight hours a day. This law was violated by the appellant, who was convicted, and prosecuted an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. The appellant Atkin, when he violated this law, was constructing a brick pavement for the municipality of Kansas City. The contention of the appellant in that case was that the law in question violated the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment.

"These questions—indeed, the entire argument of defendant's counsel—seem to attach too little consequence to the relation existing between a state and its municipal corporations. Such corporations are the creatures—mere political subdivisions—of the state, for the purpose of exercising a part of its powers. They may exert only such powers as are expressly granted to them, or such as may be necessarily implied from those granted. What they lawfully do of a public character is done under the sanction of the state. They are, in every essential sense, only auxiliaries of the state for the purposes of local government. They may be created, or, having been created, their powers may be restricted or enlarged or altogether withdrawn at the will of the legislature; the authority of the legislature, when restricting or withdrawing such powers, being subject only to the fundamental condition that the collective and individual rights of the people of the municipality shall not thereby be destroyed. (Citing authorities.) In the case last [263] cited (Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 304, 310, 19 S. Ct. 617, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 1047, 1049), we said that 'a municipal corporation is, so far as its purely municipal relations are concerned, simply an agency of the state for conducting the affairs of government, and as such it is subject to the control of the legislature.' . . .

"The improvement of the boulevard in question was a work of which the state, if it had deemed it proper to do so, could have taken immediate charge by its own agents; for it is one of the functions of government to provide public highways for the convenience and comfort of the people. Instead of undertaking that work directly, the state invested one of its governmental agencies with power to care for it. Whether done by the state directly or by one of its instrumentalities, the work was of a public, not private, character.

"If, then, the work upon which the defendant employed Reese was of a public character, it necessarily follows that the statute in question, in its application to those undertaking work for or on behalf of a municipal corporation of the state, does not infringe the personal liberty of any one. It may be that the state, in enacting the statute, intended to give its sanction to the view held by many that, all things considered, the general welfare of employees, mechanics, and workmen, upon whom rest a portion of the burdens of government, will be subserved if labor performed for eight continuous hours was taken to be a full day's work; that the restriction of a day's work to that number of hours would promote morality, improve the physical and intellectual condition of laborers and workmen, and enable them the better to discharge the duties appertaining to citizenship. We have no occasion here to consider these questions, or to determine upon which side is the sounder reason; for, whatever may have been the motives controlling the enactment of the statute in question, we can imagine no possible ground to dispute the power of the state to declare that no one undertaking work for it or [264] for one of its municipal agencies should permit or require an employee on such work to labor in excess of eight hours each day, and to inflict punishment upon those who are embraced by such regulations and yet disregard them. It cannot be deemed a part of the liberty of any contractor that he be allowed to do public work in any mode he may choose to adopt, without regard to the wishes of the state. On the contrary, it belongs to the state, as the guardian and trustee for its people, and having control of its affairs, to prescribe the conditions upon which it will permit public work to be done on its behalf, or on behalf of its municipalities. No court has authority to review its action in that respect. Regulations on this subject suggest only considerations of public policy. And with such considerations the courts have no concern.

"If it be contended to be the right of every one to dispose of his labor upon such terms as he deems best—as undoubtedly it is—and that to make it a criminal offense for a contractor for public work to permit or require his employee to perform labor upon that work in excess of eight hours each day is in derogation of the liberty both of employees and employer, it is sufficient to answer that no employee is entitled, of absolute right and as a part of his liberty, to perform labor for the state; and no contractor for public work can excuse a violation of his agreement with the state by doing that which the statute under which he proceeds distinctly and lawfully forbids him to do.

"So, also, if it be said that a statute like the one before us is mischievous in its tendencies, the answer is that the responsibility therefor rests upon legislators, not upon the courts. No evils arising from such legislation could be more far-reaching than those that might come to our system of government if the judiciary, abandoning the sphere assigned to it by the fundamental law, should enter the domain of legislation, and, upon ground merely of justice or reason or wisdom, [265] annul statutes that had received the sanction of the people's representatives. We are reminded by counsel that it is the solemn duty of courts in cases before them to guard the constitutional rights of the citizen against merely arbitrary power. That is unquestionably true. But it is equally true—indeed, the public interests imperatively demand—that legislative enactments should be recognized and enforced by the courts as embodying the will of the people, unless they are plainly and palpably, beyond all question, in violation of the fundamental law of the Constitution. It cannot be affirmed of the statute of Kansas that it is plainly inconsistent with that instrument; indeed, its constitutionality is beyond all question." Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 24 S. Ct. 124, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 148.

The same contentions so earnestly and ably insisted upon by the appellee in the present case were insisted upon in the Atkin Case, so liberally quoted from. Paraphrasing part of the above quotation, a complete answer to the argument in this case of appellee is as follows: It is sufficient to answer that no person engaged in the stationery business is entitled, of absolute right and as a part of his liberty, to contract with or to perform labor for the state; and no contractor for public work can excuse a violation of his agreement with the state by doing that which the statute under which he proceeds distinctly and lawfully forbids him to do.

The act in question in no way violates any provision of the Federal Constitution.

It is contended by the appellee that the act violates section 107 of the Constitution of the state of Mississippi, which reads as follows:

"All stationery, printing, paper, and fuel, used by the legislature, and other departments of the government, shall be furnished, and the printing and binding of the laws, journals, department reports, and other printing and binding, and the repairing and furnishing the halls and rooms used for the meeting of the legislature and its committees, shall be performed under contract, to be [266] given to the lowest responsible bidder, below such maximum and under such regulations as may be prescribed by law. No member of the legislature or officer of any department shall be in any way interested in such contract, and all such contracts shall be subject to the approval of the Governor and State Treasurer."

A complete answer to this contention is that section 107 is not in question here. It only relates, according to its plain provisions, to contracts for the stationery, etc., of the legislature and other departments of the state government, which contracts are subject to the approval of the Governor and the State Treasurer. The contracts of subdivisions of the state, such as counties, are not intended to be approved by the Governor and the State Treasurer. They are not departments of the state, as are contemplated by the above section, but are mere subdivisions of the state. This is manifest when we consider the laws of the state relating to these various state contracts contemplated by section 107. Section 1 of the act here in question relates to those contracts covered by section 107 of the Constitution. The construction of that section is not here involved, and for that reason we do not feel called upon to consider its constitutionality in this case.

Kindred acts of other states have been held not violative either of their state or the federal Constitutions, in the cases of Tribune Printing, etc. Co. v. Barnes, 7 N. D. 591, 75 N. W. 904, and In re Gemmill, 20 Idaho 732, 119 Pac. 298, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 711, Ann. Cas. 1913A 76. In the latter case there is quite an extended case note discussing the constitutionality of these various acts.

The able counsel for appellee severely criticize and arraign the wisdom of this act. They say it is but a shallow pretense to give a monopoly to resident printers and stationers of Mississippi. With the wisdom of the act this court has nothing to do. That is a matter entirely for the lawmaking body. It is solely our duty to say whether or not the act as passed by the legislature is violative of any of the provisions of the state or federal [267] Constitutions. We find none of the provisions of either Constitution violated.

It is further contended that an information by quo warranto was not the proper remedy for the attorney-general to pursue. The information alleges that the incorporators obtained this charter for fraudulent purposes; that the charter was fraudulently obtained; that all of the acts of the corporation and of its incorporators are violations of the law of the state. We find in the brief of appellee a quotation from the case of State v. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. 40 Minn. 213, 41 N. W. 1020, 3 L.R.A. 510:

"But we think it may be safely stated as the general consensus of the authorities that, to constitute a misuser of the corporate franchise such as to warrant its forfeiture, the ultra vires acts must be so substantial and continued as to amount to a clear violation of the condition upon which the franchise was granted, and so derange or destroy the business of the corporation that it no longer fulfills the end for which it was created. But in case of excess of powers it is only where some public mischief is done or threatened that the state, by the attorney-general, should interfere."

The information in this case not only alleges that a fraud was practiced upon the state in obtaining the charter, but that the acts of this alleged corporation under this charter are all violations of the law. Under the facts alleged in the information, and under section 4017 of the Code of 1906, quo warranto was eminently the correct procedure. The demurrer, of course, admits all the allegations contained in the information, and it is our duty to assume, in reviewing this case, that these allegations are true as stated. The information should have been answered.

The judgment of the lower court is reversed, and the cause remanded, with leave to the appellee to answer within thirty days after the mandate of this court is filed in the lower court.

Reversed and remanded.

NOTE.

It is held in the reported case that a statute forbidding the letting of any county contract for blank books, stationery or the like to any person who has not a printing plant in the state or is not a resident of the state engaged in the printing business is neither an interference with interstate commerce nor an abridgement of the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the several states. The validity of a statute requiring public printing, etc., to be done within the state is discussed in the note to In re Gemmill, Ann. Cas. 1913A 76.

170 Ky. 512.

AMERICAN SOUTHERN NATIONAL BANK

v.

SMITH ET AL.

Kentucky Court of Appeals—June 1, 1916.

170 Ky. 512; 186 S. W. 482.

Banks — Banking Commissioner — Status and Powers.

Under Laws 1912, c. 4, § 2, providing for a banking commissioner and prescribing his powers and duties, the commissioner is not a "receiver" nor an "assignee for the benefit of creditors," the powers of a receiver being limited by the appointing court, and of the assignee by the powers and rights of his assignor, but those of the commissioner are limited only by the statute.

Power to Regulate.

Banks are proper subjects of regulation by the police power, since they are the chief repositories of the money of the country, and their solvency should be safeguarded.

Powers of Banking Commissioner — Bringing Action.

Under Laws 1912, c. 4, § 2, creating the office of banking commissioner and prescribing his duties and powers, the commissioner, on taking charge of an insolvent bank, may sue to recover its assets, the purpose of the act being to properly administer the affairs of insolvent banks, in doing which collection of assets is necessary.

Corporations — Ultra Vires Contracts.

"Ultra vires contracts" include not only those entirely without the scope and purpose of the charter privileges and objects, but also those beyond the limitation of the charter powers, though within the purposes contemplated by the articles of incorporation.

Exceeding Debt Limit — Effect.

A bank which lends money to another bank in excess of the borrower's charter powers cannot defeat recovery by the banking commissioner of assets pledged to secure such loan, on the ground that the contract is wholly void, and neither party can obtain relief under it, since the contract was merely in excess of charter powers, and not outside of the corporation purposes.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

A bank which lends money to another bank in excess of the borrower's charter powers cannot claim the right to be placed in statu quo, though it had no actual notice of the charter limitation, since the doctrine of constructive notice of such limitations applies.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The receiver, or the banking commissioner who has taken charge of an insolvent bank, may disaffirm a contract under which the bank borrowed money in excess of its charter powers and pledged certain assets, and sue to recover the assets without returning the money borrowed, since he represents the creditors of the bank.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The right of the banking commissioner in charge of an insolvent bank to disaffirm an ultra vires contract by which the bank borrowed money in excess of its powers and pledged assets, and to sue to recover the assets, cannot be defeated on the ground that the bank received full value when the loan was made, so that its assets were not impaired and creditors could not complain.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The rule, upholding the liability of a bank which loaned money to another bank in excess of the borrower's charter powers and accepted a pledge of assets in security, to return such assets, without return of the money loaned, is the same regardless of how the creditor bank comes into court.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson county, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

Action by Thomas J. Smith, Banking Commissioner, et al., plaintiffs, against American Southern National Bank, defendant. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Henry Burnett, W. H. Batson and Graddy Cary for appellant.

John J. Williams and John M. Lassing for appellees.

[513] THOMAS, J.—In 1906, the George Alexander & Company bank was duly incorporated as a banking institution with its principal office and place of business at Paris, Ky., and had a capital of $40,000.00, divided into shares of $100.00 each; and by its charter, which was executed on the 11th day of April of that year, it was authorized to engage in and conduct a general banking business in the State of Kentucky. Since that time its charter has been amended to the extent of changing its name to "George Alexander & Company State Bank." In all other respects its articles of incorporation are the same as when first executed, [514] and reference will hereafter be made to it as the Alexander bank. The eighth clause of its charter is in these words:

"8th. The highest amount of indebtedness or liability which the corporation may incur, shall not at any time exceed ten thousand dollars ($10,000.00), over and above its liabilities to depositors and its liabilities upon bills of exchange, checks or drafts upon other banks having its funds upon deposit."

The appellant (whom we shall hereafter refer to as defendant), is a banking institution with its principal place of business located in the city of Louisville, and when first organized, its name was American National Bank, but since then its name has been changed by proper proceedings to the one it now has, American Southern National Bank.

On July 1, 1907, the Alexander bank borrowed from the defendant the sum of $15,000.00, executing its note therefor, and on December 31, of the same year, it borrowed an additional $18,000.00, for which it executed its note, and to secure the payment of both these notes, it entered into a contract with the defendant by which it pledged to the latter, solvent notes to the aggregate amount of $35,000.00, and in addition thereto, agreed to keep on deposit with the defendant until the payment of the two notes, a sum of not less than $10,000.00. The indebtedness represented by these two notes was not reduced by the Alexander bank, nor was there any change in the collaterals except, perhaps, that some of them were from time to time removed, and other collaterals with equal solvency would be substituted for the originals.

With matters in this condition, the Alexander bank was, on May 19, 1914, under the Act of the Legislature of 1912, relating to banks and providing for a Banking Commissioner, duly and regularly placed in the hands of the appellant, who was then and is now the Banking Commissioner for this State. There is no question made in the case but that the Alexander bank was at that time hopelessly insolvent, it being agreed that its indebtedness to its depositors and some other creditors amounted to more than $100,000.00 above its assets. After taking charge of the Alexander bank, the plaintiff demanded of the defendant the payment to him of the deposits which the Alexander bank had with defendant, [515] then amounting to $10,837.45, and further demanded that it deliver to him the collaterals which it held to secure the payment of the two notes mentioned, but both of these requests were refused. The plaintiff, as such commissioner, in making these demands, proceeded upon the theory that inasmuch as the two notes aggregating $33,000.00 exceeded the limitation provided for in clause eight of the charter of the Alexander bank, supra, it was ultra vires and void, and that he was entitled to recover, not only the deposit, but the collaterals as well, all to go into the general fund for distribution among the creditors.

After the refusal of the defendant to comply with these requests, this suit was instituted against it for the purpose of compelling it to do so, which resulted in a judgment against it for the excess of the combined sum of the collaterals which it had collected, plus the deposits over $10,000.00, the limit of the indebtedness which the Alexander bank could contract. The defendant, after the declared insolvency of the Alexander bank, had collected a sufficiency of the collaterals, together with the deposit to pay its entire indebtedness, and it delivered to the plaintiff the remaining collaterals, which it had not collected; the total amount of the judgment being $25,573.64, with interest from January 5, 1916, the date of its rendition.

It is first insisted that the right to bring this character of action, if one exists at all, is not vested in the Banking Commissioner; but the relief sought, if available at all, can be prosecuted only by a creditor, or creditors. In other words, that the Act of 1912 and the general laws of the land, as is announced by the courts and text-writers, do not vest the Commissioner with any greater powers or rights than were possessed by the insolvent bank, whose business he is engaged in winding up, and that the bank, as such, would not have had the right to maintain this action without at least tendering back to the defendant the consideration which it received for the two notes. It seems to be conceded that the execution of the two notes by the Alexander bank was ultra vires at least as to the excess of $10,000.00. The decisions of the courts in regard to the powers and rights of a receiver, or an assignee for the benefit of creditors, are not by any means binding precedents in the determination of the question which we have before [516] us. The Banking Commissioner is not a receiver appointed by the court, nor is he an assignee for the benefit of creditors in the ordinary acceptation of that term. In the one case, the authority, rights, and powers of the receiver are qualified and restricted by the court appointing him, while the assignee for the benefit of creditors obtains his authority, rights and powers from his assignor; and in the very nature of things, he cannot confer upon his assignee that which he did not possess. The banking business throughout the country has in modern times grown to such an extent that almost the entire commercial activities of the country are conducted through and by banks. They are the repositories of the larger per cent of all the money of the country, and because of these and other conditions, through and by which they are so intimately associated with business and with the individual citizen, the countries under which they are organized have long since considered them appropriate institutions for statutory regulation, to the end that their solvency may be safeguarded, and that the citizen depositing his money therein may be assured, as much as possible, that upon demand it will be forthcoming. Sound public policy, therefore, has long since determined that this character of corporations are subject to the visitatorial powers of the government creating them, which is manifested by the character of legislation embodied in the Act of 1912, passed by our legislature. These observations are fortified by the author of Thompson on Corporations, 1st ed., sec. 460, wherein it is said:

"Perhaps no class of corporations are more completely under police regulations of the States than banking companies. The police power, in its visitatorial aspect, as exercised by Congress and the several States, extends to the minutest details of the banking business. These corporations are not, strictly speaking, quasi public in their nature; but they are of such a character that the State can and does protect the public by any and all reasonable regulations necessary to that end. The peculiar relation that banks sustain to the public, and by this is meant their depositors, is such that it is the business and the duty of the State to see that corporations embarking in such an enterprise are entitled to the confidence of the public, and that depositors who in good faith entrust their money to these institutions shall be [517] protected. It was said by one court that 'it is conceded that the business of banking, by reason of its very intimate relations to the fiscal affairs of the people, and the revenues of the State, is, and has ever been considered a proper subject of legislative control, and strictly within the domain of the internal police power of every State.'"

And in the same section, quoting with approval from Blaker v. Wood, 53 Kan. 499, 36 Pac. 1115, 24 L.R.A. 854, it is said:

"Enactments controlling the loaning of money, and regulating the rate of interest upon the same, have been sanctioned from the earliest times, and the nature of the business done by banks in dealing in money, receiving deposits for safekeeping, discounting paper, and loaning money, is such, and is so affected with a public interest, as to justify reasonable regulation for the protection of the people. The confidential and trust relations which exist between the bank and its patrons, and the difficulty that depositors and those dealing with the bank necessarily encounter in detecting irregular practices and in ascertaining the real financial condition of banks, are sufficient to justify inspection and control."

In furtherance of these general purposes which it is evident the statute was intended to foster and encourage, we are disposed, if the question was one of first impression, to construe the statute so as to vest the Banking Commissioner, when winding up the affairs of an insolvent bank, with all the power and authority in the collection of the distributable assets of the bank, that a creditor himself would have in a proceeding which he might institute for that purpose. As illustrating the general doctrine in regard to the powers, rights, and authority of those entrusted with the duty of winding up the affairs of insolvent corporations, as well as the modern tendency of the courts in extending and enlarging those powers so as to accomplish the purpose in view, and to avoid a multiplicity of suits, reference may be had to sections 2850, 5158, 5159, 5360, and 6396 of Thompson on Corporations. From section 5158, we quote:

"But this rule (that the receiver takes no greater right than the corporation) is subject to the exception that a receiver so far represents the general creditors that he is authorized to avoid transactions in fraud of their rights."

[518] And again from section 5159:

"However, the receiver's powers and authority have been necessarily and beneficially enlarged in some States by statute, and in other States by judicial interpretation. . . . Other cases illustrate the doctrine that a receiver may assert rights which the corporation or its management could not enforce."

In section 6396 of the same works, we find it stated:

"Some of the courts take the view that the receiver stands in the shoes of the corporation itself, the same as a voluntary assignee stands in the shoes of his assignor, and cannot maintain any action or set-off in defense which the corporation itself could not have maintained or set-off. But this is generally regarded as a narrow view, for the receiver is generally given the right to litigate for the benefit of creditors where acts have been done in fraud of their rights, though the act in question may be valid as to the corporation itself."

Numerous authorities are cited to support these various texts, but this court upon at least three occasions has had under consideration our banking act relative to the powers which it confers upon the Banking Commissioner, in which it used language impliedly, if not expressly, upholding the right of the Commissioner to prosecute this character of suit. These are to be found in the three cases of Commercial Banking, etc. Co. v. Citizens' Trust, etc. Co. 153 Ky. 566, Ann. Cas. 1915C 166, 156 S. W. 160, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 950, and Cartmell v. Commercial Bank, etc. Co. 153 Ky. 798, 156 S. W. 1048, and Ex p. Smith, 160 Ky. 83, 169 S. W. 582.

In the first case mentioned the Commercial Bank & Trust Company, organized under the laws of this State with powers to conduct a general banking business, and engaged in such business in the city of Louisville, arranged with Lloyd W. Gates, the Treasurer of Jefferson county, for him to deposit the money which he held as treasurer with it, and to secure him in such deposit, it executed to him a bond with the Citizens Trust & Guaranty Company of West Virginia, as its surety, but deposited with its surety, under an agreement to do so, in pledge, the sum of $100,000.00 of its assets, consisting of certificates of deposits and negotiable notes. Subsequently, and on January 13, 1913, the Commercial Bank & Trust Co. was placed in the hands of the Banking Commissioner, under the provisions of the Act of [519] 1912. A controversy arose as to whether the Guaranty Company could hold these collaterals, and if not, whether they could be recovered by the Banking Commissioner. It was alleged by the surety of the bank, the Guaranty Company, that its liability as such surety would be greater than the collaterals which it held, but the commissioner insisted that these collaterals were a part of the assets of the defunct Commercial Bank & Trust Company, upon the ground that it had no authority to so use them. He further insisted that he, as such commissioner, had the right to recover them for the benefit of creditors. The case was decided against him by the lower court, but upon appeal to this court the judgment was reversed and the contention of the commissioner was upheld. In a very exhaustive and lucid opinion, the court upon the questions which we have discussed, said:

"There being no express authority given to a bank to secure a deposit, by pledge of its assets, and it being apparent that such a practice would have a tendency, and pave the way, to the perpetration of fraud, by putting it in the power of the officers of a bank to give a preference to favored customers, it cannot successfully be maintained that a bank has the implied right or power to do so. Banks undoubtedly have the right to do many acts and things not expressly authorized by their charters, or specifically designated in the general laws adopted for their organization, regulation and government. These are termed implied powers, but such powers are those found necessary to enable the banks properly and expeditiously to carry out and enjoy the powers, rights and privileges, expressly given them. Before a bank should be adjudged entitled to exercise any power, not expressly given, it should be clearly established that such power is essential to the proper conduct of its business and necessary to enable it properly to enjoy, use and carry out its express powers. When such test is applied to the claim of right, on the part of a bank, to prefer one of its depositors over another, it is apparent that the right should be denied. The exercise of such a power would necessarily be fraught with great possibilities for the perpetration of fraud, and would undoubtedly have a tendency to destroy the faith of the depositing public in banking institutions."

[520] And further on in the opinion it is said:

"The rigid enforcement of this principle will not deprive banks of the right to exercise any of their legitimate functions; but, on the contrary, will build them up in the confidence of the depositing public; for, when depositors know that the bank not only may, but must, deal fairly with them, banks will take that position in the confidence of the public in which these great institutions deserve to be held. . . . If banks are made to observe strictly the law and not allowed to divert their assets from their proper and legitimate channel, it will be in rare instances indeed that depositors will feel the need of special security for their funds when placed in banks."

In the latter case referred to, a number of depositors of a bank sought to oust the Banking Commissioner after taking charge of an insolvent bank which had properly gone into his hands and to substitute in his place a receiver to be appointed by the court. The opinion goes into a thorough consideration of the object and purposes of the legislature in passing the banking act of 1912, as well as the ends to be accomplished and the means by which they should be accomplished, and concludes by holding that the method provided by the act for the winding up of an insolvent bank, though the commissioner therein provided, is exclusive, and the right contended for, to have a receiver appointed after the Banking Commissioner had taken charge, was denied. In the course of the opinion it is said:

"This legislation has, as its ultimate aim, the protection of the depositing public, and it is doubtful if any legislation enacted in recent years is calculated to have so beneficial an influence and effect. . . . The object and aim of the law, in the appointment of a receiver, is to see that the assets of the institution in charge of which he is placed, are properly, honestly, and economically administered. The ends of the law are satisfied, if the estate is administered in this way, whether the person charged with its administration be termed a banking commissioner, a trustee or an assignee."

In the Smith, Ex p. case, the question was, whether the Banking Commissioner had a right to sell the real estate belonging to the defunct bank without an order of court directing him to [521] do so. It was held that although the act was silent upon that question, still the general purposes of the act were broad enough to give him that power, the language used being as follows:

"The banking act is silent upon these matters except that as it authorizes and directs the Banking Commissioner to liquidate insolvent banks, by implication it authorizes him to dispose of the real estate belonging thereto.

The banking act confers upon the commissioner extraordinary powers, and it should be given a broad and liberal interpretation."

Considering the purposes and intention of the legislature in enacting the law, as well as the tendency of the courts to facilitate as much as possible, and with as little cost as possible, the winding up of insolvent banks, as well as the trend of this court, as exhibited in the opinions, supra, we are convinced that this action was properly brought by the Banking Commissioner.

Strictly speaking, a corporate contract was at first declared to be ultra vires only when it was entirely without the scope and purpose of its charter privileges, and did not pertain to the objects for which the corporation was chartered. (Section 2768, Thompson on Corporations, vol. 10, Cyc. 1146.) For a long time this restrictive definition prevailed, and the courts holding to this narrow definition declined to enforce the contract at the instance of either party upon the ground that it was wholly void, but would leave the parties where it found them. But the modern definition of such a contract has been broadened so that the designation now includes, not only those contracts just mentioned, but also others which are beyond the limitations of the powers conferred by the charter, although within the purposes contemplated by the articles of incorporation. That the contract in question, at least to the extent of the loan to the Alexander bank of more than $10,000.00, comes within the latter definition, is clearly beyond question. It is so held by a great many courts, and most of all the text-writers, and by this court in at least the two cases of the Covington First Nat. Bank v. D. Keifer Milling Co. 95 Ky. 97, 23 S. W. 675, and Bell, etc. Co. v. Kentucky Glass Works Co. 106 Ky. 7, 50 S. W. 2, 1092, 51 S. W. 180.

Having, then, seen that the suit can be maintained by the Banking Commissioner, and that at least to the [522] extent of $23,000.00 the debt which the Alexander bank created with the defendant was ultra vires, it remains to determine what are the rights of the parties under the conditions presented by the record. It is earnestly insisted by counsel for appellant: (1) That the contract, being ultra vires, is void and that neither party can obtain any relief under it from the courts, and (2) that if this should be incorrect, that the Alexander bank, or the Banking Commissioner who represents it, should be required to return the consideration for the ultra vires portion of the contract before any relief should be given.

As to the first contention, it might be correct, which, however, is not decided, if the contract was of the ultra vires nature within the first definition given above, but not being of that character, the position of counsel is wholly untenable.

In support of the second contention, it is earnestly insisted that the defendant is an innocent party, and that it had no notice of the limitations in the articles of incorporation of the Alexander bank, and that it is, therefore, entitled to be placed in statu quo by either the consideration of the ultra vires portion of the contract returned to it, or that it should be permitted to recover against the plaintiff on a claim for money had and received by the Alexander bank. It may be true that the defendant did not have actual notice of the limitations in the charter of the Alexander bank, but under all of the authorities, including the cases upon the subject from this court, it was charged, at the time of the lending of the money with constructive notice of such limitations. This principle is stated in Thompson on Corporations, section 2802, thus:

"The rule (of constructive knowledge) also applies where a corporation having apparent power to do so purchases paper or borrows money, and without the knowledge of the other party, does so for an unauthorized purpose, or in excess of the lawful debt limit."

In the Keifer Milling Company case, supra, upon this point, this court said:

"The articles of incorporation were, as required by statute, recorded and independent of presumed notice by the First National Bank of Covington, of the provision in regard to the limit of indebtedness, the D. Keifer Milling Company was empowered to contract, it is a well settled rule that a person dealing with a corporation [523] must, at his peril, take notice of its charter or articles of incorporation. (See Morawetz on Private Corporations, volume 2, sections 591, 592.)"

And in the Kentucky Glass Works Co. case, supra, upon the same point, it said:

"Independent of the fact that its articles are accessible in the county clerk's office or in the office of the Secretary of State, every one dealing with it is bound, at his peril, to know the limitations of its powers, just as a person dealing with an agent, must, at his peril, ascertain the extent of the agent's authority."

The rule was reiterated by this court in the case of Citizens' Bank v. Waddy Bank, 126 Ky. 169, 103 S. W. 249, 128 Am. St. Rep. 282, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, wherein it was said:

"The limit of indebtedness for borrowed money which the Bank of Waddy could contract was $7,500.00, and every person dealing with the corporation is charged with notice of its powers under its articles of incorporation."

We must, then, deal with the question as though the defendant, when it loaned the money, knew at the time that the Alexander bank did not have power under its charter to borrow money in any sum exceeding $10,000.00. We are cited to a great number of cases from many states, as well as from the Federal courts, to the effect that a corporation, as such, when sued upon the character of contract under consideration cannot rely upon the want of its power to make the contract without returning to the other party the consideration which it received, but in each case, the facts were, that the corporation which had exceeded its powers and which the courts said must do equity by returning the consideration, was a solvent and going concern. No question as to the rights of creditors was involved, and the holding of the courts in such cases may be conceded to be correct, especially so far as this case is concerned, because those composing the corporation, being the stockholders, could not complain, as they had received the consideration and perhaps appropriated it for corporate purposes. The creditors of such corporations could not complain because they were only interested to the extent of their respective debts, and as the corporation was solvent, thus guaranteeing the payment of its debts, there remained nothing upon which the ultra vires nature of the contract could operate. As neither [524] the corporation nor the stockholders in such a case could complain, and there being no necessity for a creditor to complain, there existed no obstacle in the way of applying the doctrine contended for. The rule, however, is altogether different when the borrowing corporation to such an ultra vires contract is insolvent. In section 2850, Thompson on Corporations, it is said:

"Certainly in the case of an insolvent corporation, the act may be disaffirmed by the receiver in behalf of the creditors." See also Covington First Nat. Bank v. D. Kiefer Milling Co. 95 Ky. 97, 23 S. W. 675; Bell, etc. Co. v. Kentucky Glass Works Co. 106 Ky. 7, 50 S. W. 2, 1092, 51 S. W. 180; Citizens' Bank v. Waddy Bank, 126 Ky. 169, 103 S. W. 249, 128 Am. St. Rep. 282, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 598; Casey v. Cavarve, 96 U. S. 467, 24 U. S. (L. ed.) 779; Kraniger v. People's Bldg. Soc. 60 Minn. 94, 61 N. W. 904; Chattanooga Bank v. Memphis Bank, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 408; Morse on Banking, sec. 749b.

In the Keifer Milling Company case, supra, the milling company, being a corporation, was not authorized to become indebted by its charter in a sum exceeding $30,000.00. It had, however, become indebted to the First National Bank of Covington in the sum of $77,000.00. The milling company made an assignment, and the bank filed its claim for the amount of the debt, and sought a pro rata upon the entire amount of it, but this court refused to allow it to participate in the assets only to the extent of $30,000.00, being the amount of the indebtedness which the milling company was authorized to contract, and in doing so, said:

"Whether if this was simply a contest between the bank and the milling company, violation and disregard by the latter of the provision of the articles of incorporation would be a sufficient defense, we need not determine; but the enforcement of that provision is demanded by the assignee for benefit of other creditors, who have been prejudiced by the unauthorized and illegal dealing of the bank with an unfaithful officer of the milling company, whereby its insolvency was precipitated, if not actually caused; and in such case, a participant in the fraudulent transaction, not other innocent creditors, should suffer."

In the Kentucky Glass Works Company case, there was a provision in the articles of incorporation of the borrowing corporation, that: "The highest amount of indebtedness, or liability to which said corporation should at any [525] one time subject itself shall be $8,000.00." This corporation was the Kentucky Glass Works Company, and being insolvent, it made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors, which was followed by a suit to settle its estate. It had before that time contracted an indebtedness by borrowing money from the Kentucky National Bank, amounting to $48,600.00, to secure which it had executed a mortgage upon its property, and in the settlement suit, the bank attempted to enforce its mortgage, but this court declined to give it the relief which it sought, because, and only because, its debt exceeded the limit prescribed in the charter of its borrower, the Kentucky Glass Works Company; the court saying:

"Were this question between the corporation and the bank, there would be little difficulty. In this case, it appears that the money was actually received by the company, and used in its business, and the company would be estopped from refusing to make restitution of that whereof it had received the benefit. . . . A creditor whose own debt against the corporation does not transgress the limitation—who does not know, and has no reason to know, that the limitation had been exceeded, has a right to rely upon the 'implied warranty on the part of the corporation through its officers, that the power has not been exhausted, and that the conditions do not exist which render it unlawful for the corporation to contract the debt.' And this reason, it seems to us, applies equally as against the creditor who participated in creating the excessive indebtedness, and was bound to know that it was so doing. The bank was charged with knowledge of the indebtedness limit in the articles of incorporation of the company. In the face of that knowledge, it joined with the company in the creation of an indebtedness against it far in excess of what the company was authorized to incur. The bank knew that the indebtedness was being exceeded; the other creditors did not; and this puts them, in our judgment, upon an entirely different footing.

"An immense number of citations have been made by counsel; most of them are cases between the corporation and the creditor, or between the shareholders and the creditor, in which the corporation or shareholders sought to evade the payment of the excessive indebtedness on the ground that it was ultra vires."

[526] The court then proceeds to the consideration of many questions now urged upon us by counsel for defendant deciding each of them against his contention, one of which is, that the only effect to be given to the limitation of indebtedness in the articles of incorporation is, that it might afford grounds for a proceeding by the State to annul the charter, and that this should be the only effect given to it, but this court in the opinion, supra, in answering that contention, said:

"In this Commonwealth such a doctrine would render the inhibition of the statute an absolute dead letter. Of what avail would it be to obtain a judgment of ouster and dissolution of the corporation at the suit of the State, when it could be reincorporated in half an hour's time? What attention would be paid to this inhibition in the statute by persons contracting with corporations, if the only penalty for a violation of the statute were a possible dissolution of the corporation? Moreover, it is hard to discover what ground the Attorney General would have for hoping to succeed in a suit for ouster and dissolution of a corporation for the offense of making a valid contract.

"But it is sufficient to say that this is not the doctrine in Kentucky. In this State it has been adjudged that such a contract, made in violation of law, while enforceable as between the parties, is not enforceable by either participant as against the rights of third persons."

It is, however, contended that the creditors of the Alexander bank have not been deprived of anything, and their rights, consequently, not impaired, because that bank, at the date of the borrowing of the money, got value received, and consequently the assets of the banks were not depleted, or impaired, and therefore the creditors have no equities justifying the plaintiff as their representative, in prosecuting this action. In reply it may be said, that it is exceedingly likely that many of the creditors of the Alexander bank, at the time the commissioner took charge of its affairs, may not have been such in 1907, at the date of the borrowing of the money. Furthermore, the purpose of the limitation is to not allow the officers of the bank to have an opportunity to misappropriate by way of unauthorized dividends, or otherwise, the proceeds of an unauthorized borrowing, and thus imperil the security of creditors by [527] unlawfully increasing the indebtedness of the corporation. However this may be, it is sufficient to say that in the cases from this State supra, the rule is held to be as indicated and not to be affected by this circumstance.

We are earnestly urged to retract the doctrine of the two cases of Covington First Nat. Bank v. D. Kiefer Milling Co. 95 Ky. 97, 23 S. W. 675, and Bell, etc. Co. v. Kentucky Glass Works Co. 106 Ky. 7, 50 S. W. 2, 1092, 51 S. W. 180, from this court, but we are by no means convinced that it is our duty to do so. Aside from the fact that the doctrine therein announced has remained in this state unimpaired for more than twenty years, during which time many legislatures have met without making any effort to change the rule, we are convinced that the rule announced by those cases is both a wholesome and sound one, and especially so when applied to banking institutions. As stated in an earlier part of this opinion, they are the arteries of commerce, and the laws looking to the preservation of their financial integrity should be strengthened rather than weakened. Many of them hold in their coffers the accumulations of a lifetime in the way of deposits, and if those dealing with them are not to be charged with a knowledge of the limitations found in their articles of incorporation, and visited with some penalizing consequences should such limitations be violated, the door would be opened for a diversion of the assets of the corporation from their proper and legitimate channels, and the security of creditors, including depositors, would be rendered exceedingly hazardous, and the healthful condition and prosperity of the bank would be endangered. It is better that the rule should be adhered to, even though in isolated cases it might work a hardship, than for it to be withdrawn, followed by the possible consequences which we have considered.

This will impose no onerous burden upon the prospective creditor. In fact, it is but requiring him to do that which, from time immemorial, has been a rule observed and followed by the prudent business man, and that, too, at a time when there was no sort of limitation upon the authority of his prospective debtor to become indebted. This business rule says to the lender of money to be secured by real estate liens, "examine the title by referring to the abstract." It also says to the prospective creditor, when taking personal security for his debt, "investigate the solvency of the makers of the [528] note." It says to the prospective purchaser, "look well to the title;" and it says to the ordinary transaction whereby an obligation is assumed to another, for the latter to require and obtain security from the former that he will fully perform his contract. If, without any law imposing limitations upon the authority to contract, business prudence demands these precautions, it is difficult to see how it could be considered exacting for the law, in order to protect others who are entirely innocent, and who confide, and have a right to confide, in the belief that the required limitation is intended to have some purpose, the most feasible of which was for their protection, to deny to the derelict creditor the full fruits of his bargain as against other innocent ones. There are three ways by which the contemplated creditor may inform himself; he can investigate the records of the county court at the home of the corporation; the same information can be obtained from the office of the Secretary of State, at Frankfort, and lastly, he can say when applied to, "although I am not from Missouri, show me." We are convinced that it is no difficult task to see upon which side of the proposition the interest of public policy lies.

There can be no difference in the application of this rule upholding the liability as to how the offending creditor gets into court. It is equally applicable to him when he is brought into court by process, as when he voluntarily enters there for the purpose of enforcing his debt. The remedy given is not for the purpose of punishing him for voluntarily coming into court, but to divest him of property wrongfully obtained and withheld as against the corporate creditors.

We, therefore, conclude that the judgment appealed from is correct, and it is affirmed. Whole court sitting.

NOTE.

Construction of Debt Limit Provision in Charter of Private Corporation.

Introductory, 966.

Validity of Debt in Excess of Limit:

General Rule, 966.

Rule in Kentucky, 969.

Rule in England, 970.

Effect of Failure to Pay in Capital Stock, 972.

Effect of Increase of Limit on Pre-existing Debt, 973.

Effect of Impairment of Assets of Corporation, 973.

Introductory.

A private corporation organized for pecuniary profit, unless forbidden by its charter, may as one of the powers necessarily implied from its creation incur indebtedness for any purpose connected with the business which it is authorized to transact. See 7 R. C. L. tit. Corporations, p. 590. As a check on improvident management a debt limit is, however, sometimes imposed by the charter, and the present note is devoted to a discussion of the construction of such a provision.

Validity of Debt in Excess of Limit.

GENERAL RULE.

The rule supported by the greater weight of authority is that the indebtedness of a private corporation in excess of the limit fixed by the charter is valid at least to the extent of the consideration received by the corporation. Sioux City Terminal R. etc. Co. v. Trust Co. of North America, 173 U. S. 99, 19 S. Ct. 341, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 628 (construing Iowa statute and following decisions of that state); Allis v. Jones, 45 Fed. 148; Humphrey v. Patrons' Mercantile Assoc. 50 Ia. 607; Garrett v. Burlington Plow Co. 70 Ia. 697, 20 N. W. 395, 59 Am. Rep. 461; Heuer v. Carmichael, 82 Ia. 290, 47 N. W. 1034; Peatman v. Centerville Light, etc. Co. 100 Ia. 245, 69 N. W. 541; Marshall Field Co. v. Oren Ruffcorn Co. 117 Ia. 157, 90 N. W. 618; Traer v. Lucas Prospecting Co. 124 Ia. 107, 99 N. W. 290; Sherman Center Town Co. v. Morris, 43 Kan. 282, 23 Pac. 569, 19 Am. St. Rep. 134; Auerbach v. Le Sueur Mill Co. 28 Minn. 291, 9 N. W. 799, 41 Am. Rep. 285; Perry, etc. Co. v. Holbrook Opera House Co. 91 Neb. 19, 135 N. W. 219. See also Oswald v. Minneapolis Times Co. 65 Minn. 249, 68 N. W. 15.

In Auerbach v. Le Sueur Mill Co. supra, applying this rule, the court said: "The ends of justice may require, as in this case, that the corporation which has exceeded its powers should be estopped by its own acts from pleading, in defense of its assumed obligations, that they were ultra vires. . . . In this case the defense sought to be made to the note is that in giving it the article of the defendant's incorporation, limiting the amount of its indebtedness, was violated. The debt was incurred in the ordinary prosecution of the business of the corporation. The defendant received and appropriated the money which was the consideration of the note, and, having authority to issue negotiable paper, it put forth the note in question, negotiable, calculated to circulate as, and perform the office of, commercial paper, and expressing upon its face the obligation and promise of the maker to pay to the bearer, at all events, the sum named. It has come into the hands of a bona fide purchaser, and simple justice, as well as plain principles of law, forbid that courts should listen to the plea that in this particular case the corporation had not authority to issue its note. It ought to be and it is estopped. To so hold does not weaken the sanction of the law which restrains the exercise of corporate power within the limits prescribed by the creative act. To refuse to recognize and enforce, when necessary to the attainment of justice and prevention of wrong, such contracts, made in violation of the corporate charter, is not to afford a remedy for the wrongful acts of the corporation. When, in a case like this, the unauthorized contract has been executed by the corporation, and it has reaped the benefits of it, public policy does not require the courts to refuse to administer justice between the parties in accordance with the plain principles of law. In such a case, the remedy for the violation by the corporation of its charter power lies elsewhere. We are here seeking to administer justice as between these contracting parties. If justice did not invoke the application of other principles of law, the defense of ultra vires might be sufficient; but the doctrine of estoppel, as a principle of law, is as positive and well-recognized as is the law that a corporation may not exceed its corporate powers, and, although the defendant exceeded its authority, it should be denied the right to assert the fact of its own wrong, when to allow its plea would work injustice and wrong to him who has been misled by its acts performed within the general scope of its powers. What has been said should be regarded only as said with reference to this case, and should not be considered as stating a rule of law which should prevail generally in the case of contracts not negotiable. While the broader ground last referred to was considered by the court below, and discussed by counsel in this court, yet upon the facts found by the court such was not this case, and, the question being an important one, we ought not to anticipate its presentation for adjudication by an opinion not called for by the facts in this case."

So in Sherman Center Town Co. v. Morris, 43 Kan. 282, 23 Pac. 569, 19 Am. St. Rep. 134, affirming a judgment against a corporation in an action to recover a sum which exceeded the debt limit created by its charter, the court said: "If we could ascertain from the testimony that the town company had not received the benefit or proceeds of the merchandise purchased by its president and secretary, we would have no hesitation in saying that the plaintiff below was not entitled to recover. It does not appear from the charter that the corporation had any authority or power to engage in buying and selling general merchandise. It appears, however, from the testimony, that, at the time the contract was executed, the stock of merchandise was at Voltaire, in Sherman county. After the contract was executed and a part of the purchase money paid, the merchandise was removed from Voltaire to Sherman Center, where the business of the town company was carried on, and where a majority of the directors of the company reside. There is testimony tending to show that the company sold the merchandise and appropriated its proceeds to its own use and benefit. The town company did not show or offer to show, that the president and secretary of the company purchased or received the merchandise for their own use and benefit, or that they applied the proceeds to their own use and benefit. The general rule is, that where a contract executed by a corporation is ultra vires, and the corporation received the money or property paid upon such contract, the money or the value of the property may be recovered to prevent injury resulting from the application of ultra vires upon a corporate contract, if no fraud is intended or has been committed. . . . We think that the limitation of $500 in the charter of the corporation cannot be regarded of any more force than a by-law. The statute of the state provides that the charter of an ordinary private corporation shall set forth the amount of its capital stock, but does not require its indebtedness shall have other limit. Therefore the limitation of $500 is for the direction of the officers and agents of the corporation, and may be considered directory only. It does not annul the contract."

In Humphrey v. Patrons' Mercantile Assoc. 50 Ia. 607, it appeared that the amended articles of incorporation of a corporation provided that its indebtedness should be limited to $2,000. The plaintiff as the manager of the defendant corporation had borrowed $1,000 for it and became personally responsible for the debt. The loan was used for the payment of goods purchased on credit by the corporation, but at the time of the transaction the company's indebtedness exceeded the limit allowed by its articles of incorporation. The loan being paid by the plaintiff, he brought suit against the defendant for a recovery of the amount loaned. Discussing the effect of the limit imposed by the charter on the company's power to contract indebtedness, the court said: "In our opinion, however, the limit imposed by the amended articles upon the company's power to contract indebtedness would not necessarily have the effect to exempt the company from liability for indebtedness assumed to be contracted in excess of the limit. It has been held, it is true, that a municipal corporation is not liable for indebtedness assumed to be contracted in excess of the limit fixed by the constitution. Carter v. Dubuque, 35 Ia. 416. But we know of no case where a private corporation has not been held, at least to the extent of the consideration received, for indebtedness assumed to be contracted in excess of the limit imposed by the articles of incorporation. There is good reason for making a distinction between municipal and private corporations in this respect. The creditor of a municipal corporation may, far more properly than the creditor of a private corporation, be required to take notice at his peril as to when the limit is reached. . . . A private corporation incurs indebtedness daily, and that, too, which is not to be offset by prospective current income, but which helps swell the indebtedness to which the limitation applies. It incurs the indebtedness in the transaction of its ordinary business, and through its various agents. No specific formal action of its directors in advance would ordinarily be practicable. Its records, therefore, so far as they may be presumed to be accessible to creditors, would not ordinarily show, even if well kept, more than an approximation at a given time to the corporate indebtedness; nor has it any officer charged by law with the duty of keeping a record of the indebtedness, or of any action through which the indebtedness was contracted. Unless, therefore, the corporation is estopped from setting up the limit where the consideration has been received, it would properly be without credit, the very thing for which private corporations largely are organized. This result is to be avoided, if it can be consistently with the protection which the limitation is designed to afford to stockholders, and we think it can be. The stockholders must be regarded as at least partially protected by the receipt of consideration, and if not fully so in every case, they may doubtless have an action (or the corporation may, which represents their interest) against the officers or agents who, without authority, have imposed upon them a liability which has resulted in their loss. . . . The limit of indebtedness was fixed at $2,000. Within that limit it was authorized to do business upon credit, and although the limit, as appears, was exceeded, yet we are of the opinion, in view of the importance of upholding corporate credit and protecting creditors who have parted with their property in ignorance of the fact that the limit had been exceeded, that the corporation should be estopped from setting up such fact. We conclude, then, that the defendant was liable for the goods bought; and the money advanced by the plaintiff, so far as it was used in paying for the goods, was used in paying obligations which the defendant could not have escaped."

In Garrett v. Burlington Plow Co. 70 Ia. 697, 29 N. W. 395, 59 Am. Rep. 461, the question presented for decision was as follows: "Do the facts alleged in the answer, that the holders of the notes, as directors of the company, in the management of its affairs, contracted indebtedness beyond the limit prescribed by the articles of incorporation, and caused the mortgage to be executed to secure the amount due them, defeat their security, and give other creditors a right to share in the proceeds of the property mortgaged?" Answering the question in the negative the court said: "We do not understand counsel for defendants to claim that a debt of a corporation beyond the prescribed limits of its indebtedness is invalid, and, if held by a director of the corporation, cannot be enforced for that reason alone. It may be that a director would be answerable to stockholders or others for negligence or mismanagement of the affairs of a corporation whereby debts were contracted in excess of the limitation prescribed in the articles of incorporation; but it cannot be claimed that such a debt, for a consideration received by the corporation, cannot be enforced against it. May a director enforce such a debt? We understand that he may become a creditor of the corporation, may advance it money, or sell it property, and obligations of the corporation executed therefor may be enforced by him. In this regard he occupies no different position from that of any other creditor; and, if the debt he holds was contracted in good faith, and there is an absence of fraud on his part, he may take security or payment, though the corporation be insolvent, and he may thereby acquire priority in the payment of his claim. Counsel for defendants admit this proposition, with an exception in the case of the insolvency of the corporation. They insist that the directors of an insolvent corporation cannot take it from security, by mortgage or other conveyance creating a lien upon its property, even though given in good faith, and without fraud in the transaction. We are not prepared to admit this proposition. A creditor may accept payment or security from an insolvent debtor free from any claim of other creditors. A corporation may make payment of its debts, or give its property in security therefor, just as a natural person may do. If, therefore, a director holds the indebtedness of an insolvent corporation, he may take payment or security in a good faith and honest transaction. No reason can be given why a director who holds a valid debt against his corporation may not, though it be insolvent, in a fair and honest way, take its property in security. If the property, money, or other consideration of the debt, was fairly used for the benefit of the corporation, was added to its assets, or used in its business, it would be unreasonable to hold that the director is deprived of rights and remedies held by other creditors. It is not shown in the answer of defendants that there was any bad faith or dishonest practices on the part of the creditors for whom plaintiff is trustee, in becoming creditors of the plow company, and taking security from it. It is true that the courts will scan with care, and even with suspicion, such transactions, and demand that they be accompanied by the utmost good faith. Defendants' answers make no charge of bad faith or fraud in the creation of the debt, or the execution of the mortgage. It is averred that the directors unlawfully contracted indebtedness of the corporation in excess of the limit prescribed by its articles of incorporation. But this has nothing to do with the directors' claims in controversy. As we have before said, they may be liable to proper parties for their negligence or unlawful acts, but honest contracts made with them are not defeated thereby."

In Perry, etc. Co. v. Holbrook Opera House Co. 91 Neb. 19, 135 N. W. 219, an action brought against a corporation on a note, the defense was that the note represented the balance of an indebtedness due the plaintiff, and that the amount of the entire indebtedness exceeded the limit authorized by its articles of incorporation. It appeared that at the time the indebtedness was incurred the corporation had on hand sufficient funds to pay the plaintiff's claim, but the money was used for other purposes. Affirming a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the court said: "In disposing of defendant's contentions, it is sufficient to say that from a careful reading of the bill of exceptions we are satisfied that the defendant failed to establish any of the several defenses set forth in its answer. It is apparent that at the time the defendant purchased the materials used in the construction of its opera house, and contracted to pay the plaintiff therefor, it was not indebted in any sum whatever, and had a sufficient amount of money in its treasury to pay for the same in full; and the fact that defendant used the funds which had been raised for the payment of the plaintiff's claim for other purposes cannot be successfully urged as a reason for defeating the payment of its just debt. Finally, it may be said that the defendant lawfully procured the material furnished to it by the plaintiff, has received and retained the benefit thereof, and has established no valid or legal defense upon which it can escape payment for the same."

In Allis v. Jones, 45 Fed. 148, the case made by the petition was stated by the court as follows: "The plaintiff, alleging that he is a general creditor of the defendant corporations the Red Cloud Milling Company and the Alma Milling Company in the sum of $11,950, files this bill to annul certain mortgages executed by these milling companies to the Red Cloud National Bank and the First National Bank of Denver, and prays that the affairs of the milling companies may be wound up, and their assets distributed." Holding that as to the plaintiff no ground was shown for the annulment of the mortgages, the court said: "The mortgages were given to secure an indebtedness in excess of the amount of debts the companies, by their charters, were authorized to contract, and it is said this renders the evidences of the indebtedness, and the mortgages given to secure it, ultra vires and void. But on the facts of this case this position cannot be maintained. The money was received by the companies, and used in conducting and carrying on their legitimate corporate business, with the knowledge and consent of all the officers and stockholders. On these facts the banks are entitled to be repaid their money, and the companies could execute a valid security for its payment. Mor. Priv. Corp. §§ 714-716; Jones, Mortg. § 127; Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621 [25 U. S. (L. ed.) 188]; Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 188, 2 S. Ct. 336 [27 U. S. (L. ed.) 401]; Ohio, etc. R. Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 267 [24 U. S. (L. ed.) 693]. Skeen cannot be heard to urge this objection, because he is not a creditor of the milling companies, and Allis became such, if at all, after the debts to the banks had been created, and it would seem, therefore, that he is in no plight to raise the question. The written promise of the milling companies, executed by their secretary and treasurer, to pay the plaintiff's debt, under all the circumstances of this case, made it the debt of the companies. But an application to the plaintiff's case of the strict rules which he seeks to have applied to the bank's claims and mortgages would undoubtedly undermine his own case, and leave him without any claim against the companies."

In Traer v. Lucas Prospecting Co. 124 Ia. 107, 99 N. W. 290, it was held that where a corporation borrowed money in excess of its authorized indebtedness, and received the full benefit of the money, a suit on notes representing the loan could not be defended on the ground that the money borrowed was used for an ultra vires purpose.

RULE IN KENTUCKY.

In Kentucky the rule obtains that where a corporation borrows an amount in excess of the debt limit imposed by its charter, the loan is ultra vires, and an action cannot be maintained on it to the prejudice of other creditors of the corporation except for a sum within the debt limit. As between the parties to the loan, however, it may be enforced. Covington First Nat. Bank v. D. Kiefer Milling Co. 95 Ky. 97, 23 S. W. 875; Bell, etc. Co. v. Kentucky Glass Works Co. 106 Ky. 7, 50 S. W. 2, 1092, 54 S. W. 180, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1684, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 133, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 156, modifying 48 S. W. 440, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1089; Citizens' Bank v. Waddy Bank, 126 Ky. 169, 103 S. W. 249, 128 Am. St. Rep. 282, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 365. And see the reported case.

In Covington First Nat. Bank v. D. Kiefer Milling Co. supra, a suit was brought against a corporation for a judgment on demands aggregating about $7,700, and an attachment was obtained. It appeared that the corporation had made a deed of assignment of its property. The articles of incorporation limited the amount of indebtedness which the corporation could incur to $30,000. On the trial of the suit the attachment was dissolved and the proceeds of the property conveyed by the deed of assignment was directed to be distributed pro rata to the creditors of the corporation, only $30,000 of the amount claimed by the plaintiff, however, being adjudged to be ratably paid. Affirming the decree the court said: "It appears that there was in the articles incorporating 'The D. Kiefer Milling Company,' a provision that the company should not, in any event, incur any liability or indebtedness in the aggregate in excess of one-half its capital stock bona fide subscribed, which was $60,000. The articles of incorporation were, as required by statute, recorded, and, independent of presumed notice by The First National Bank of Covington, of the provision in regard to the limit of indebtedness The D. Kiefer Milling Company was empowered to contract, it is a well settled rule that a person dealing with a corporation must, at his peril, take notice of its charter or articles of incorporation. (See Morawetz on Private Corporations, vol. 2, §§ 591, 592.) Whether if this was simply a contest between the bank and the milling company, violation and disregard by the latter of the provision of the articles of incorporation would be a sufficient defense, we need not determine; but the enforcement of that provision is demanded by the assignee for benefit of other creditors, who have been prejudiced by the unauthorized and illegal dealing of the bank with an unfaithful officer of the milling company, whereby its insolvency was precipitated, if not actually caused; and, in such case, a participant in the fraudulent transaction, not other innocent creditors, should suffer."

In Bell, etc. Co. v. Kentucky Glass Works Co. 106 Ky. 7, 50 S. W. 2, 1092, 51 S. W. 180, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1684, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 133, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 156, modifying 48 S. W. 440, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1089, it appeared that a corporation which was indebted to one of its creditors for a sum exceeding the debt limit authorized by its charter, executed a mortgage to secure the indebtedness. Afterwards the corporation executed an assignment of its property for the benefit of its creditors. In an action to settle the claims of the various creditors of the corporation it was held that the mortgage creditor could enforce the mortgage as against the other creditors only to the extent of the amount of the authorized indebtedness of the corporation. It appeared also that some payments were made on the debt secured by the mortgage, both before and after the execution of the deed of assignment. It was held that the payments made before were to be credited on that part of the debt as to which the mortgage was not a valid security; but as to the payments made after, they were to be credited to that part of the debt as to which the mortgage was a valid security.

A creditor whose own debt against the corporation does not exceed the limit, and who has no reason to know that the limit has been exceeded, is not affected by the fact that there are other debts of which he has no notice, which when added to his own make an aggregate indebtedness greater than the corporation may legally incur. Bell, etc. Co. v. Kentucky Glass Works Co. 106 Ky. 7, 50 S. W. 2, 1092, 51 S. W. 180, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1684, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 133, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 156, modifying 48 S. W. 440, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1089; Citizens' Bank v. Waddy Bank, 126 Ky. 169, 103 S. W. 249, 128 Am. St. Rep. 282, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 365.

In Randolph v. Ballard County Bank, 142 Ky. 145, 134 S. W. 165, it was held that where the directors of a corporation permit the indebtedness of the corporation to exceed the limit provided for in the charter, they are personally liable for the amount of the debt exceeding the authorized limit, their liability being imposed by a statute (Ky. Stat. § 550). To the same effect see Stafford v. Cain, 13 Ky. L. Rep. (Abstract) 639.

In Fidelity Trust Co. v. Louisville Gas Co. 118 Ky. 588, 81 S. W. 927, 111 Am. St. Rep. 302, it was held that a provision in the charter of a corporation authorizing it to issue bonds for a specified amount and to execute a mortgage to secure them, did not place a limit on its power to contract other indebtedness which it might incur in the execution of the purposes for which it was organized.

RULE IN ENGLAND.

In England the rule obtains that where a corporation borrows a sum of money in excess of the amount which by its articles of incorporation it is permitted to borrow, the transaction is ultra vires, and no recovery can be had against the corporation for the amount in excess of the authorized limit.

English Channel Steamship Co. v. Rolt, 17 Ch. D. 715, citing Wenlock v. River Dee Co. L. R. 10 App. 354, 54 L. J. Q. B. 577, 53 L. T. N. S. 62, 49 J. P. 773; In re Pooley Hall Colliery Co. 18 W. R. 201; Fountainaine v. Carmarthen R. Co. L. R. 5 Eq. 316.

In the case last cited it appeared that a corporation was empowered by its incorporation act to borrow a specified sum on debentures. After the whole of the amount was raised by the issue of debentures another debenture was issued. After the issuance of this debenture some holders of the original debentures obtained a judgment thereon and had their claims satisfied by execution. Subsequently the company issued other debentures in place of those which were paid. Briefly discussing the rights of the holders of the various debentures, the court said: "It appears that debentures were issued to the full extent of the powers which the directors had of issuing debentures under their act. That being so, they afterwards granted one debenture for £500 to a Mr. Weeks, before any of the other debentures were paid off. Afterwards two of the debenture creditors obtained judgments, and by that means obtained possession of the plant of the railway, and out of the money arising from the sale of the property so taken in execution, several debentures were paid off. When these debentures were so paid off, the directors had a power, subject to certain directions contained in the companies' clauses act, either, on the one hand, of renewing the old debentures, or, on the other hand, of issuing fresh debentures to the same amount; provided that the total limit prescribed by the act was not overstepped."

In the case of In re Cork, etc. R. Co. L. R. 4 Ch. 748, it appeared that a railway company was empowered to borrow £131,000 on mortgages or bonds. In June, 1862, the company had issued mortgages for the whole of that £131,000. One D. L. Lewis had been financing the company from April, 1861, and had advanced them moneys upon bills accepted by them, which moneys were applied in discharging liabilities of the company. In August, 1862, the borrowing powers of the company being then exhausted, he represented to the directors that he had great difficulties in renewing the company's bills, and that, if the company would issue to him Lloyd's bonds, he would be able to raise money upon them with greater facility, and would be able to supply the company with funds. The directors accordingly issued and gave to him Lloyd's bonds for various sums. Lewis parted with the Lloyd's bonds to various persons, and claims were made by the holders, and the question in the case was whether the bonds were valid. In giving judgment, Lord Hatherly, L. C., said: "Then comes the question, whether the present holders can be said to be entitled, under any circumstances, to claim payment upon these bonds. Now, first, it was said by Mr. Jessel that, taking these bonds at the best as a chose in action, even taking them to be that which they really are, a mere acknowledgment of a debt due apparently on a legitimate ground, those who took them must be exactly in the same condition as Mr. Lewis, the original holder, was in; and, therefore, if Mr. Lewis, the original holder, could not recover, on account of the position in which he was placed, with a full knowledge of all the circumstances, and of the manner in which the company had proceeded for the purpose of raising money, then no more could the holders of these choses in action be able to recover, nor could they be entitled to place themselves in a better position than he was in. That would be so if, as between Mr. Lewis and the company, there were really no debt at all, or that this was all a mere sham, and that the directors had not in any way borrowed the money, or authorized the borrowing of the money, and had not been in any way parties to the transaction, or that the company had been in no way parties to the transaction. But if the money was really applied for the legitimate benefit of the company, can it be possible that the company can hold this money as a surplus which is directed to be paid to them under the act, and treat these bonds as constituting no debt whatever by which they are in any way to be affected? They knew that there was a large sum of money which must be raised by some means, and for which the borrowing powers and subscription powers were not adequate; and although the bonds themselves may not be the proper instruments or mode by which that money ought to be raised, still they are instruments issued for the express purpose of inducing others to give faith and credit to Mr. Lewis, as being a person to whom money was owing for the legitimate purposes of the company. And the money having been de facto so applied to the legitimate purposes of the company, is it possible that the company should be allowed to derive the benefit of all the expenditure which has been thus incurred, and claim the surplus for the benefit of the shareholders? Can the shareholders be allowed to say to the bondholders, 'It is true that the debts have been cleared off by means of your money, but you are not the persons who have cleared them off, and you are not to receive the benefit of it, for we are the persons to receive the benefit?' The proper course to be taken seems to me to be this: that, so far as the company have adopted the proceedings of their directors by allowing these moneys to be raised on the issue of these debentures, and so far as the money raised by the issue of the debentures has been applied in paying off debts which would not otherwise have been paid off, those who have advanced the moneys ought to stand in the place of those whose debts have been so paid off. It is not simply that the bondholders stand as assignees of the debts, which, no doubt, have not actually been assigned, but it has been represented by the directors that the persons who have lent their money on these acknowledgments were lending their money for the purpose of clearing off the debts; in fact, that they were to be put in the position of assignees of the debts."

Effect of Failure to Pay in Capital Stock.

In Commonwealth's Appeal, 24 W. N. C. (Pa.) 530, it appeared that the articles of incorporation of a street railway company provided that "the said company shall have the power and authority to borrow money in any sum or sums not exceeding in amount one-half of the par value of the capital stock." Only ten per cent of the capital was paid in, and the company proposed to issue bonds for a sum not equal to one-half of its authorized capital, but greatly exceeding that proportion of the amount of capital actually paid in. A suit was brought to enjoin the issuance of the bonds except for a sum equal to one-half of the capital paid in, and it was held that the suit could be maintained. The court said: "Whether it be for the purpose of adjusting and paying dividends to stockholders, or of regulating the amount of taxes due to municipalities having the right and power to tax, the amount of stock actually paid is the capital stock of the company. (Citizens' Pass. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 49 Pa. St. 251.) Neither the cost of the road, nor the authorized capital can be made the basis of dividends or of taxation, but these must rest on the amount of capital stock actually paid in. . . . The company appellant propose to exercise a power, and incur a liability upon the basis of its capital stock, and for this purpose, as for purposes of taxation or payment of dividends, its rights must be measured not by nominal or authorized capital, but by the actual amount of capital paid in. . . . The Lehigh Avenue Railway Company has received just $100,000 from the subscribers to its stock. So far as the paper books advise us, this is all it has ever asked for in the more than fifteen years of its corporate life, and all it expects to receive. The other $900,000 of authorized capital are uncalled and unpaid. The par value of all its shares taken together is $100,000, because that is the sum paid upon them, the value they represent. The par value of each share is fixed in like manner. Its value is the equal or par of the corporate capital it represents, which is the amount paid upon it by the subscriber, or applied to it out of the earnings of the corporation. . . . It has $100,000 in its treasury, and no more, yet it asks us to hold that the par value of the stock is $1,000,000, and permit it to exercise an important power on that basis. This we decline to do. The par value of its shares is measured by the money it has received upon them, and not by the broken promises of those who subscribed for them."

But in English Channel Steamship Co. v. Rolt, 17 Ch. D. (Eng.) 715, it appeared that a corporation was authorized by its articles of incorporation to borrow "any sum of money not exceeding two-thirds of the capital of the company for the time being not called up." Only about a third of the number of shares authorized were actually issued. The company executed a mortgage of a ship to secure a loan for a sum exceeding two-thirds of the amount not called up on the shares issued, but not exceeding the authorized capitalization of the company. An action was brought by the liquidators of the company to have the mortgage declared invalid. Holding that the action could not be maintained, the court said: "The capital of the company is £100,000, but Mr. Pearson said, 'How can you reckon as capital that which has not been issued?' It is a very common thing indeed for companies to do so, and it is not at all contrary to usage in companies to consider that where they have a power of issuing capital they have a right to treat it as capital. If they believe there to be a prospect of getting the capital issued, as no doubt all these gentlemen did, that is the capital within the meaning of this article. They are not to borrow a sum of money 'exceeding two-thirds of the capital of the company for the time being not called up.' That may mean shares not issued or shares issued and not called up. In my opinion, looking at the nature of the transaction—looking at the fact that the directors of every joint stock trading company ought to be armed with the power of borrowing for the purpose of carrying on business as long as they keep within the limits, they were right in doing what they did. Mr. Pearson agreed with the law as laid down by myself in Gibbs and West's Case, L. R. 10 Eq. 312. He is content to take it as I laid it down there, that it is to be a reasonable sum, but he says that this is an unreasonable sum. In my opinion, considering the situation of the parties at the time, it was a perfectly reasonable sum; and therefore the case falls within the rules there laid down. If it had been the object of the shareholders that the directors should only borrow to the extent of two-thirds of the shares actually issued, the articles ought to have said so. I am therefore of opinion that this action brought to set aside this mortgage entirely fails, and must be dismissed with costs in the usual way to be paid by the liquidator out of the assets of the company."

Effect of Increase of Limit on Pre-existing Debt.

In the case of In re Benedict Tea, etc. Co. 192 Fed. 1011, it appeared that a corporation while indebted to a creditor for a sum in excess of the amount of indebtedness authorized by its charter, amended its articles of incorporation, and increased the amount of indebtedness which it could incur, to a sum exceeding the amount owed. After the amendment of the articles the corporation executed a promissory note for the amount of the indebtedness. Other creditors of the corporation having filed a petition of involuntary bankruptcy against it, it was held that the note was a valid claim. The court said: "It entered into the contract evidenced by the note for $4,559.79, and manifestly there was good and valuable consideration for it. Neither the statute nor the articles of incorporation nor justice, nor good morals, in May, 1911, forbade the recognition by the bankrupt of an obligation such as rested upon it fairly to pay for the merchandise it had bought and used. There are not wanting signs that one of the main objects of the stockholders in amending the articles was to enable the corporation to pay the debt. This was a meritorious intention. Certainly it was by no means a vicious one. We think there was no right in the then existing creditors to prevent the amendment or to put conditions upon it. Their right under the circumstances then existing to say that they were to be paid in full as a condition precedent to the amendment becoming effective is not provided for in the statute, nor has it ever been established by any decision of any court in Kentucky. Such right does not exist, and we think should not. At that stage in the affairs of a going concern (as the bankrupt then was), the rights of general creditors resulting from an amendment, if any exist at all, are too vague and indeterminate to be the basis of a claim to priority in any subsequent distribution should the corporation become bankrupt. As the statute does not provide otherwise, we think all general creditors in this instance must share equally. Their rights are to be determined as of the date of filing the petition in bankruptcy."

Effect of Impairment of Assets of Corporation.

In Cunningham v. German Ins. Bank, 101 Fed. 977, 41 C. C. A. 609, it appeared that the articles of incorporation of a company limited its liability to one-half of the capital stock paid up. Paid up stock had been issued to the amount of $138,000. There being an impairment of the assets so that only $50,000 was left an entry was made by the bookkeeper charging the capital stock with the loss, but there was no actual reduction of the certificates of stock. After this entry, the company executed a mortgage for $35,000 to secure a debt due a bank. In proceedings in bankruptcy against the company it was contended that the mortgage was not a valid lien because it secured a debt in excess of the limit authorized by the charter of the company, but the contention was overruled. The court said: "We are of opinion that there was no violation of the law in the creation of the indebtedness here in question. At the time when it was incurred the articles had been so amended as to authorize the increase of capital stock to $150,000, and there had been taken $138,000, which had been paid for. The amount of indebtedness is much less than one-half of the latter sum. We attach no importance to the act of the bookkeeper in charging the depreciation of the assets to the capital stock. It was not recognized by any act of the stockholders or of its officers as a reduction of the capital stock. No amendment of the articles was filed or recorded, nor was any stock, or fraction thereof, called in or surrendered. It was a mere matter of bookkeeping, and ended with that. The issuing of stock in lieu of dividends was not unlawful. It was the same thing as if the dividends had been actually paid over, and then, by the stockholders, repaid to the company for the stock."

DWYER

v.

LIBERT.

Idaho Supreme Court—June 30, 1917.

30 Idaho 576; 167 Pac. 651.

Libel and Slander — Actionable Words — Distinction between Libel and Slander.

In determining whether particular words are actionable per se, the same rule does not apply to libel as to slander.

[See 116 Am. St. Rep. 804.]

Words Libelous per Se.

A written communication of a character conducive to blacken the reputation of the person referred to, or excite ridicule or wrath against him, or destroy public confidence in him, is actionable, without proof of special damage.

Same.

A written publication, charging one with wilful falsehood in the matter of a serious business transaction, must necessarily expose him to contempt and lower him in the common estimation of citizens, and is therefore actionable per se.

Privilege — Complaint against Public Officer.

A complaint against a public officer, filed with a body having a right to discharge him, is conditionally privileged upon good faith and the absence of malice.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Where a complaint has been made against D., a public officer, who thereupon requests that the complaint be filed in writing, in order that he may be heard thereon, thereby creates a privilege in the plaintiff, conditioned upon good faith and the absence of malice.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The question of good faith and malice is one for the jury.

[See note at end of this case.]

Pleading — Averments Sufficient to Warrant Exemplary Damages.

Where the general allegations of a complaint are sufficient to show that the wrong complained of was inflicted with malice or oppression, or like circumstances, the complaint will be sufficient to authorize the infliction of exemplary damages.

Damages — Exemplary Damages — Elements Considered — Wealth of Defendant.

Where, under the pleadings of a case, exemplary damages may be allowed, the pecuniary ability of the defendant is a proper matter for the consideration of the jury.

Appeal from District Court, Nez Perce county: STEELE, Judge.

Action by William Dwyer, plaintiff, against W. A. Libert, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Miles S. Johnson and Jas. F. Aitshie for appellant.

Clay McNamee and Palmer H. McIntyre for respondent.

[580] RICE, J.—This is an action for libel brought by the respondent William Dwyer against appellant W. A. Libert. The respondent, shortly prior to the time the action arose, was employed by the city of Lewiston in the capacity of patrolman. Certain charges were made by the appellant to the mayor and city council of the city of Lewiston, resulting [581] in the discharge of the respondent.

Respondent's attorney thereupon appeared before the council and requested that body to request the appellant to file his charges in writing and to have a date set so that respondent might be there for the purpose of a hearing. The council reconsidered its action and requested appellant to file his charges in writing. Appellant thereupon had his charges prepared and filed with the city council, which writing contained the following matter alleged to be libelous, to wit:

"Complainant had several talks with William Dwyer during the few days following and on or about the 30th day of September, 1915, the said William Dwyer informed the complainant that Kittie Begle would be down on Saturday following, at which time the matter would be fixed up by securing the indebtedness with a mortgage, which said conversation was later confirmed by Mr. Dwyer in a conversation with Center Alexander, acting as the agent of Joseph Alexander. That at the time of making this statement to W. A. Libert and confirmation of same to Center Alexander the said William Dwyer was knowingly making false statements in, to wit: That on the 22d day of July, 1915, the said Kittie Begle had redeeded to Kittie Dwyer as her sole and separate property the real property in question, which deed had been held and was so held by said parties at the time of the conversation of September 25th, and was together with a homestead declaration of Kittie Dwyer placed on record in the office of the county recorder on the 28th day of September, 1915, and was so of record at the time the said William Dwyer was promising W. A. Libert to have the said Kittie Begle come down and secure the indebtedness with a mortgage on or about the 30th day of September. That the entire question of having the said Kittie Begle enter into the matter was held out by the said William Dwyer falsely, for the reason that on the 22d day of July, 1915, over two months before the 25th day of September, 1915, the said Kittie Begle had ceased to have any interest legal or otherwise to said property."

The complaint contained no colloquium or innuendo, and no special damages were claimed in the complaint.

[582] It is urged that the complaint does not state a cause of action; that the written charge does not contain language which is libelous per se, and that the complaint contains no innuendo showing that on account of the circumstances the matter was libelous as against respondent.

Criminal libel is defined by sec. 6737, Rev. Codes, as follows: "A libel is a malicious defamation, expressed either by writing, printing, or by signs or pictures, or the like, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation, or publish the natural or alleged defects, of one who is alive, and thereby to expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule." In the case of State v. Sheridan, 14 Idaho 222, 93 Pac. 656, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 497, it was noted that in determining whether particular words were actionable per se, the same rule does not apply to libel as to slander. In the case of Farley v. Evening Chronicle Pub. Co. 113 Mo. App. 216, 87 S. W. 565, at p. 568, the supreme court of Missouri said: "But written or printed matter which is communicated to third parties stands on a different footing and is often actionable when it would not be if spoken. As intimated, if it is of a character conducive to blacken the reputation of the person referred to, or excite ridicule or wrath against him, or destroy public confidence in him, it is actionable without proof of special damage. The reason assigned for this legal difference between written and spoken language is that writing or printing injurious statements about a person implies a deliberate purpose to do harm, whereas detrimental words are often spoken thoughtlessly or in a passion. Weight is allowed, also, to the more enduring character and wider vogue of published statements. Odgers, Libel and Slander, 4th ed. p. 4." (See, also, Cooley on Torts, 3d ed. p. 399.)

We have no doubt that the written publication of the words alleged in the complaint is actionable per se. Truthfulness is one of the basic virtues, perhaps the most fundamental of all. To charge a man in a written publication with wilful falsehood in the matter of a serious business transaction must necessarily expose him to contempt, and have a [583] tendency to lower him in the common estimation of citizens. (Riley v. Lee, 88 Ky. 603, 21 Am. St. Rep. 353, 11 S. W. 713; 25 Cyc. 255; Hatt v. Evening News Assoc. 94 Mich. 114, 53 N. W. 952; Lindley v. Horton, 27 Conn. 58; Paxton v. Woodward, 31 Mont. 195, 107 Am. St. Rep. 416, 3 Ann. Cas. 546, 78 Pac. 215; Monson v. Lathrop, 96 Wis. 386, 65 Am. St. Rep. 54, 71 N. W. 596.)

Appellant next contends that there was no evidence of the falsity of the publication, but that, on the contrary, the proof of the truth of the publication was conclusive. The gist of the libel is contained in the statement that at the time of making the statement to appellant, and to one Alexander, that "Kittie Begle would be down on the Saturday following at which time the matter would be fixed up by securing the indebtedness with a mortgage," the respondent was knowingly making a false statement, in that at that time Kittie Begle had reconveyed the property to the wife of respondent, who had filed a homestead declaration upon the same, and therefore Kittie Begle would be entirely unable to give the mortgage security. The testimony of respondent was to the effect that appellant at the time of the conversation referred to was threatening to bring suit against Kittie Begle, and that respondent had told appellant that he need not send the summons to the town of Nez Perce to serve upon her and thus interfere with her duties, as she would be down to Lewiston on the following Saturday. Respondent denied that he stated to appellant, or Alexander, that she would give a mortgage as security. The wilful falsehood charged was in misleading appellant into believing that he would receive mortgage security for his indebtedness. On this matter the evidence was conflicting, and the determination of the fact was properly left to the jury.

It is next contended that the communication was privileged, for the reason that it was filed with a body that had the right to discharge a public officer. In a case of this kind the communication is qualifiedly privileged, and in order for one who makes such publication to claim the benefit of the [584] privilege, the statement must be made in good faith and in the absence of malice.

In the case of Foster v. Scripps, 39 Mich. 376, 33 Am. Rep. 403, we find the following: "But where a person occupies an office like that of a city or district physician, not elected by the public, but appointed by the council, and subject only to removal by the council, we have found no authority, and we think there is no reason, for holding any libel privileged except a bona fide representation made without malice to the proper authority, complaining on reasonable grounds." (Bodwell v. Osgood, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 379, 15 Am. Dec. 228; Finley v. Steele, 159 Mo. 299, 60 S. W. 108, 52 L.R.A. 862; Howarth v. Barlow, 113 App. Div. 510, 99 N. Y. S. 457.)

The question of the good faith of the publication and the absence of malice, under the evidence, was properly left for the jury to determine.

It is next contended that as respondent requested the mayor and city council to have appellant file his charges in writing, he thereby consented to the publication of the libelous matter, and is in no condition to complain.

If the only publication that can be proved is one made by the defendant in answer to an application from the plaintiff, or some agent of the plaintiff, demanding explanation, such answer, if fair and relevant, will be held privileged, for the plaintiff brought it upon himself; but a person cannot take advantage of an opportunity given by request of the plaintiff to gratify his malice. (Laughlin v. Schnitzer (Tex.) 106 S. W. 908.)

In the case of Luzenberg v. O'Malley, 116 La. 699, 41 So. 41, at p. 44, the following language is used: "It would seem to be too plain to allow of difference of opinion that, when plaintiff challenged defendant to name the 'reasons too numerous to mention' why he was unfit to be district attorney, or even to practice law, he did not request defendant to publish malicious falsehoods about him." (See, also, Schultz v. Guldenstein, 144 Mich. 636, 108 N. W. 96.)

In this case it cannot be said that plaintiff requested the publication for the purpose of bringing an action thereon, [585] or consented to the publication of a libel against himself by appellant. Appellant had made verbal charges against him to the proper authorities, upon which charges it seems respondent was dismissed. In order that he might have an opportunity to answer the charges, of which he may have been more or less ignorant, he requested that the appellant file the charges in writing in order that he might be heard thereon. It cannot be said that the respondent requested the appellant to publish libelous matter about him. The request amounts to this, that if appellant in good faith and without malice had any charges to make against him, he would like to have such charges made in writing.

The question of the good faith of the appellant in filing the charges, and as to whether he was actuated by malice, was under instructions of the court, properly left to the jury, and its finding thereon will not be disturbed.

Appellant objected at the trial to the following question, which objection was overruled and exception saved: "Q. Mr. Dwyer, are you generally acquainted with the financial standing and responsibility of Mr. Libert, that is, whether or not he is a poor man or a wealthy man?" Appellant assigns the overruling of defendant's objection as error.

"In actions for libel the weight of authority is conceded to be in favor of the rule that the pecuniary circumstances of the defendant are admissible in favor of the plaintiff as tending to show the influence his words would have and the consequent extent of the injury." (25 Cyc. 508.)

In 2 Sutherland on Damages, 4th ed., p. 1315, that authority says: "In other cases it has been held, and the better doctrine from its intrinsic reasonableness is, that so far as the cause of action rests upon an injury to character or an insult to the person compensatory damages may be increased by proof of the wealth of the defendant. This is upon the ground that wealth is an element which goes to make up his rank and influence in society, and thereby renders the injury or insult resulting from his wrongful act the greater. But in such cases as it is rather the reputation for, than the possession of, wealth which is the cause of this increased rank, [586] the testimony should correspond and only the general question as to his circumstances can be asked, and not the details."

In the instant case, the allegations of the complaint would justify the jury in bringing in a verdict, not only for compensatory damages but also for exemplary damages. The complaint alleges that the charges were false and malicious, and published by the defendant with the deliberate purpose and intention of injuring the defendant in his good name and reputation and causing his dismissal as said patrolman of said city of Lewiston, Idaho.

In the case of Stark v. Epler, 59 Ore. 262, 117 Pac. 276, the court said: "The rules of pleading do not require that the allegation relating to exemplary damages should be set out separately from the other averments of the complaint. Special damages must be grounded upon separate allegations, but exemplary damages are so intimately connected with general damages that if the general allegations are sufficient to show the wrong complained of was inflicted with malice or oppression or other like circumstances, the complaint will be sufficient to authorize the infliction of punitive or exemplary damages." (Sullivan v. Oregon R. etc. Co. 12 Ore. 392, 53 Am. Rep. 364, 7 Pac. 508; San Francisco, etc. Home Bldg. Soc. v. Leonard, 17 Cal. App. 254, 119 Pac. 405; Isagar v. Metcalf, 11 Ariz. 283, 94 Pac. 1094; Martin v. Corscadden, 34 Mont. 308, 86 Pac. 33.)

It is not necessary to the recovery of exemplary damages that they should be specially claimed in the complaint, but such damages may be recovered under a claim for damages generally. (Harmening v. Howland, 25 N. D. 38, 141 N. W. 131; Shoemaker v. Sonju, 15 N. D. 518, 11 Ann. Cas. 1173, 108 N. W. 42; Nashville, etc. Ry. v. Blackmon, 7 Ala. App. 530, 61 So. 468; Davis v. Seeley, 91 Ia. 583, 51 Am. St. Rep. 356, 60 N. W. 183.)

In 2 Sutherland on Damages, p. 1316, the author says: "But when exemplary damages are claimed a different question is presented. The defendant's pecuniary ability is then a matter for the consideration of the jury, on the ground that a given sum would be a much greater punishment to a man of [587] small means than to one of larger. For this purpose the reputed wealth of the defendant may be proven, subject to his right to controvert the plaintiff's evidence, and the proof may be directed to his wealth at the time of the trial."

From the issues presented by the pleadings in this case, therefore, the question complained of was not objectionable. (Binford v. Young, 115 Ind. 174, 16 N. E. 142; Marriott v. Williams, 152 Cal. 705, 125 Am. St.

Rep. 87, 93 Pac. 875; Barkly v. Copeland, 74 Cal. 1, 5 Am. St. Rep. 413, 15 Pac. 307.)

The other errors assigned by appellant we do not deem necessary to discuss. The judgment is affirmed. Costs awarded to respondent.

Morgan, J., concurs.

Budge, C. J., sat at the hearing but took no part in the decision.

Petition for rehearing denied.

NOTE.

The reported case holds that a written complaint of misconduct on the part of a police officer, made to the mayor and council who had power to remove him, was qualifiedly privileged and would not sustain an action for libel in the absence of proof of bad faith on the part of the complainant. As to whether a complaint against a public officer or employee, made to a person or body having the power to remove him, is privileged within the law of libel and slander, see the notes to Jozsa v. Moroney, 19 Ann. Cas. 1193; Farr v. Valentine, Ann. Cas. 1913C 821; and Holmes v. Clisby, 104 Am. St. Rep. 103, 122. The privilege attaching to a petition for executive or legislative action is discussed in the note to McKee v. Hughes, Ann. Cas. 1918A 459.

PAUL JONES AND COMPANY

v.

WILKINS.

Tennessee Supreme Court—May 13, 1916.

135 Tenn. 146; 185 S. W. 1074.

Contracts — Validity — Sale of Liquor — Knowledge of Purpose to Resell Illegally.

Mere knowledge on the part of a seller of intoxicants that the buyer intends illegally to resell the liquors will not render the contract void, so as to bar the seller's action for the purchase price, though if the seller participates in or contributes to the purchaser's intention to sell illegally, or does any act to facilitate or further the design to transgress the law, or has an interest therein, the right to recover the price is lost.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Where the seller of liquors knew through its local agent that the buyer was running a wide-open liquor saloon in violation of law, and made the shipment to a transfer company, not to the consignee, marked merely with his initials, so that the public would not know to whom it was to be delivered, such seller cannot recover the price, having aided the buyer's design to transgress the law and circumvented the legislature's object in passing acts (Ex. Sess.) 1913, c. 1, requiring common carriers to cause all consignees of liquor to sign, before delivery, an affidavit setting out his name, etc.
Ann. Cas. 1918B.—62.

[See note at end of this case.]

Certiorari to Court of Civil Appeals.

Action by Paul Jones and Company, plaintiff, against T. B. Wilkins, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff petitions for certiorari. The facts are stated in the opinion. WRIT DENIED.

M. A. Hall and R. H. Stickley for plaintiff.
A. J. Calhoun for defendant.

[147] WILLIAMS, J.—This suit was commenced by Paul Jones & Co., a wholesale liquor concern of Louisville, Ky., to recover the sale price of thirty-five cases of whisky sold to Wilkins and shipped to Memphis. The defense was based on the ground that the liquor was sold to Wilkins and by him retailed in Shelby county, in violation of the prohibition laws of this State in force in that city. The trial judge and the court of civil appeals have concurred in a denial of a remedy to plaintiff in the suit; and the cause is before us for review on a petition for certiorari.

The fundamental principles that must govern the controversy are those announced in the case of Bank of Commerce, etc. Co. v. Burke, 135 Tenn. 19, 185 S. W. 704, at this term of court. That case involved the legality of a contract of lease, but the opinion also discussed contracts of sale.

[148] The general rule is that in case of the sale of intoxicating liquors mere knowledge on the part of the seller that the purchaser intends illegally to resell such liquors will not render the contract void so as to bar the seller's action for the purchase price. Tracy v. Talmage, 14 N. Y. 173, 67 Am. Dec. 132; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assoc. v. Mason, 44 Minn. 318, 46 N. W. 558, 9 L.R.A. 506, 20 Am. St. Rep. 580; Washington Liquor Co. v. Shaw, 38 Wash. 398, 80 Pac. 536, 3 Ann. Cas. 153, and note; Frankel v. Hillier, 16 N. D. 387, 113 N. W. 1067, 15 Ann. Cas. 265 and note; 9 Cyc. 571.

However, if the seller participates or contributes to the intention of the purchaser to sell in violation of law, or does any act, however slight, to facilitate or in furtherance of the design to transgress, or has an interest therein, the right to recover for the price is lost. The participation in the illegal purpose or act must be in some manner other than the mere act of making the sale. Authorities, supra.

We are of opinion that the facts in this case show such a participation on the part of the plaintiff vendor as to bar him of any remedy. The plaintiff knew through its local solicitor in Memphis that Wilkins was running a "wide-open" retail liquor saloon; the solicitor had bought drinks for himself and others over the bar. The shipment represented by the account in suit was not made to Wilkins as consignee, but to the Lewis Transfer Company for delivery—so agreed in order that the public would not know to [149] whom it was to be delivered. The cases were not marked with the name of T. B. Wilkins, but with the initials, "T. B. W."

The manager of the vendor company testifies that the shipment to the transfer company as consignee was for the purpose of insuring delivery to Wilkins. We fail to see how that end could have been more safely attained by the marking of the outside of the cases with mere initials, rather than with the name and street address of the purchaser, even though it was desirable thus to use the transfer company.

Where it appeared that the plaintiff, a wholesale liquor dealer, supplied a retailer in another State with intoxicating liquors, and aided the latter by shipping to a fictitious consignee part of the liquors, and by packing other portions so as to conceal their true character, it was held that his account could not be recovered. Kohn v. Melcher, 43 Fed. 641, 10 L.R.A. 439; Feineman v. Sachs, 33 Kan. 621, 7 Pac. 222, 52 Am. Rep. 547; Corbin v. Houlehan, 100 Me. 246, 61 Atl. 131, 70 L.R.A. 568.

In Gaylord v. Soragen, 32 Vt. 110, 76 Am. Dec. 154, it was held that an action by the seller could not be maintained when, at the defendant's request, the plaintiff marked the packages in a peculiar way, omitting the defendant's name so as to enable the defendant with greater facility to save them from seizure.

Particular pertinency is given to these authorities by the fact that we have in this state a statute (Act [150] Extra Session 1913, chapter 1) that requires common carriers to cause all consignees of liquors to sign, before delivery of goods, an affidavit setting out his name, address, the fact of consignment to affiant, the use to be made of the liquors, etc. It is manifest that the manipulation resorted to by the plaintiff was to circumvent the object sought to be attained by the legislature in the passage of this act.

A correct result has been reached in this case.

Writ denied.

NOTE.

Validity of Sale of Liquors Where Seller Knows Same Will Be Illegally Resold.

Introductory, 978.

Knowledge by Seller of Unlawful Purpose:

View that Sale Is Valid, 978.

View that Sale Is Invalid, 980.

Participation by Seller in Unlawful Purpose, 981.

Introductory.

The earlier cases passing on the validity of a sale of liquors where the seller knows that the same will be illegally resold are discussed in the notes to Washington Liquor Co. v. Shaw, 3 Ann. Cas. 153; Frankel v. Hillier, 15 Ann. Cas. 265; and State v. Wilson, 117 Am. St. Rep. 479, 502. This note reviews the more recent cases.

Knowledge by Seller of Unlawful Purpose.

VIEW THAT SALE IS VALID.

The weight of authority is to the effect that as a general proposition the mere knowledge by the seller of liquors of the fact that the buyer intends to resell the same in violation of law is not sufficient to invalidate the contract of sale. Green v. Collins, 3 Cliff. 494, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,755; Sortwell v. Hughes, 1 Curt. 244, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,177; McWhorter v. Bluthenthal, 136 Ala. 568, 33 So. 552, 96 Am. St. Rep. 43; F. W. Cook Brewing Co. v. Vaccaro, 188 Ill. App. 387; F. W. Cook Brewing Co. v. Rodasta, 188 Ill. App. 397; Moore v. Winstead, 24 Ind. App. 56, 55 N. E. 777; Brown v. Wieland, 116 Ia. 711, 89 N. W. 17, 61 L.R.A. 417; Hamilton v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. 129 Ia. 172, 105 N. W. 438, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1078; Sioux Falls Brewing, etc. Co. v. Kitterman, 116 Minn. 204, 133 N. W. 468; Curran v. Downs, 3 Mo. App. 468; Storz v. Funklestein, 48 Neb. 27, 66 N. W. 1020; Taylor v. Steinman, 95 Neb. 217, 145 N. W. 358; Corning v. Abbott, 54 N. H. 469; Jones v. Sanborn, 68 N. H. 602, 40 Atl. 393; Conemaugh Brewing Co. v. Bennett, 60 Pa. Super. Ct. 543; Blandi v. Pellegrini, 60 Pa. Super. Ct. 552; Bowie v. Gilmour, 24 Ont. App. 254. And see the reported case. Compare Terre Haute Brewing Co. v. Hartman, 19 Ind. App. 596, 49 N. E. 866; Gassett v. Godfrey, 26 N. H. 415. Compare also Lane v. Lynch, 38 Fed. 489, 4 L.R.A. 831, wherein the court followed the decision in Jones v. Surprise, 64 N. H. 243, 9 Atl. 384, holding the contrary doctrine by virtue of a statute which was subsequently declared invalid in Durkee v. Moses, 67 N. H. 115, 23 Atl. 793.

There must be something more than understanding or knowledge on the part of the seller of the buyer's illegal design with respect to a resale in order to render a sale of liquors invalid. Green v. Collins, 3 Chff. 494, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,755, wherein it appeared that the parties entered into a contract for the sale of liquor in Rhode Island, which was valid by the laws of that state, but the seller knew that the liquor was intended by the buyer to be resold in the state of Massachusetts, where the sale was prohibited by statute. In an action of assumpsit for the price, it was said: "Provision was made by § 61 of chapter 86, Gen. Stat. Mass., that all payments or compensations for spirituous or intoxicating liquors sold in violation of law shall be held to have been received without consideration, and against law, equity, and good conscience. No action of any kind, it is also therein provided, shall be had or maintained in any court for the price of any liquors sold in any other state for the purpose of being brought into this commonwealth, to be here kept or sold in violation of law, under such circumstances that the vendor would have reasonable cause to believe that the purchaser entertained any such illegal purpose. Gen. Stat. Mass. p. 448. Whether the plaintiffs knew or had reasonable cause to believe that the defendant purchased the liquors with the intention of transporting the same into this state, 'to be here kept or sold in violation of law,' was a matter in issue between the parties at the trial, and there was some evidence introduced on both sides of the question. Strong doubts were entertained by the court whether the affirmative of the issue was proved; but it must be assumed, for the purpose of this investigation, that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the jury in finding the issue for the defendant. Conceding as the fact is, that the contract of sale and purchase was valid at the place where it was made, it is unnecessary to enter into any inquiry or discussion upon that subject; and the plaintiffs contend, inasmuch as the sale of the liquors was valid where it was made, that the evidence introduced by the defendant is not an answer to the action, even if it does show that they had knowledge at that time that he intended to remove the liquors into this state, to be kept and sold in violation of the law of the state. . . . The defendant contends that they are not entitled to any remedy in the circuit court, sitting in this district, because they knew or had reasonable cause to believe, at the time they sold the liquors, that he, the defendant, intended to transport the same into this state, to be here kept and sold in violation of that enactment of the state legislature. Stated as above, the proposition is not in the precise language of the prayer for instruction; but it is not contended that the prayer for instruction meant anything more than the proposition, as the sale was an absolute one, and it is not pretended that there was any arrangement between the parties as to the place where the liquors should be sold. Generally speaking, the validity of a contract is to be decided by the law of the place where it was made, unless it was agreed, either expressly or tacitly, that it should be performed in some other place, and then the general rule is that the contract, 'as to its validity, nature, obligation, and interpretation, is to be governed by the law of the place of performance.' Story on Conf. of L. §§ 242, 280; U. S. Bank v. Donally, 8 Pet. 372 [8 U. S. (L. ed.) 974]; Wilcox v. Hunt, 13 Pet. 379 [10 U. S. (L. ed.) 209]; Andrews v. Bond, 13 Pet. 65 [10 U. S. (L. ed.) 61]; Don v. Lippmann, 5 Cl. & F. (Eng.) 13; Fergusson v. Fyffe, 8 Cl. & F. (Eng.) 121. Contracts valid by the law of the place where they are made are generally valid everywhere jure gentium, and by tacit assent. 2 Kent. Com. (ed. 1866) 454. Remedies, therefore, are the same whether the suit is brought in the district where the contract was made, or in another district of the same circuit, or in any other federal court having jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter in controversy. Viewed in the light of these several suggestions, the principal question presented is whether the evidence which shows that the plaintiffs knew, or had reasonable cause to believe, that the defendant at the time of the sale intended to transport the liquors into this state, to be here kept and sold in violation of the law of the state then in force and unrepealed at the time the suit was commenced, constituted a defense. Marked differences of opinion are observable in the determination of courts of justice in cases where the facts were in most respects the same as in the case before the court; but the better opinion appears to be that the mere knowledge by the vendor that the vendee at the time of the purchase of property intends to use it for an illegal purpose will not, as a general rule, prevent the vendor from recovering from the vendee the value of the property. Exceptional cases may arise in which a different rule must be applied, as where the property purchased is intended for treasonable purposes, or to commit murder, or to promote some other offense of such enormity, and so violative of the fundamental laws of society that silence on the part of the citizen is itself a crime, or would be evidence tending to show that the seller was an accessory before the fact to the commission of the offense. Many cases may doubtless be cited where it is held that a contract cannot be enforced which contemplates what the law forbids, whether the act forbidden be malum in se or only malum prohibitum, but those cases do not apply to a contract of sale which is valid by the law of the place where it is made, and where the only circumstance imputed as affecting its validity, is the mere fact that the seller knew, or had reason to believe, that the purchaser intended to remove the property purchased into another jurisdiction, and to sell it there in violation of the law of that jurisdiction. U. S. Bank v. Owens, 2 Pet. 527 [7 U. S. (L. ed.) 508]; Harris v. Runnels, 12 How. 79 [13 U. S. (L. ed.) 901]; Kennett v. Chambers, 14 How. 38 [14 U. S. (L. ed.) 316]. Such exceptional cases may doubtless arise, but the general rule, and the one by which this case must be governed, is that in an action to recover the price of goods sold, it is no defense that the vendor knew that they were purchased to be sold in another jurisdiction, in violation of the law of that jurisdiction, provided it was not a part of the contract that they should be used for that purpose, and provided also that the vendor neither did nor agreed to do anything in aid or furtherance of the unlawful design, beyond the mere sale, with knowledge of the intent of the purchaser."

It was held in McWhorter v. Bluthenthal, 136 Ala. 508, 33 So. 552, 96 Am. St. Rep. 43, that it was proper for the court to refuse the following instruction to the jury: "If from the evidence you are reasonably satisfied that at the time of the sale of the liquors or any part of them, the consideration of the note sued on, the defendant bought the same or any part thereof for the purpose of selling the same in Hayneville, Lowndes county, Alabama, and that the plaintiffs knew the defendant was purchasing the same for that purpose, and if in pursuance of such purpose defendant did sell said liquors in violation of the prohibition laws of Lowndes county, Ala. at Hayneville, Ala. you should find for defendant." The court said: "Mere knowledge on the part of the plaintiffs of the purpose of the defendant to sell the liquor in violation of the prohibition law in Lowndes county, and the fact that it was sold by the defendant in violation of such law, did not, as matter of law, constitute a participation by the plaintiffs in the defendant's act."

So in Wind v. Iler, 93 Ia. 316, 61 N. W. 1001, 27 L.R.A. 219, it was said: "It is no doubt true that if a nonresident makes sales of liquors in another state to a resident of this state for the purpose and intent of enabling the purchaser to violate the liquor laws of this state, or participates or assists in a design on the part of the purchaser to dispose of them unlawfully in this state, his complicity in the illegal scheme will prevent him from recovering the price in an action against the purchaser . . . and it is also true that, while mere knowledge on the part of the vendor that the purchaser intends to violate the law may not vitiate the sale, yet it is a fact from which the jury might infer an intent to violate the law."

VIEW THAT SALE IS INVALID.

In some jurisdictions the courts regard a sale of liquors, with knowledge that the buyer will resell the same illegally, as invalid, and deny a recovery for the price thereof. Small Grain Distilling Co. v. Davis, 11 Ga. App. 114, 74 S. E. 897; Crigler, etc. Co. v. Laramore, 18 Ga. App. 132, 88 S. E. 901; Taber v. Barton, 108 Me. 338, 80 Atl. 836; Bligh v. James, 6 Allen (Mass.) 570; Frank v. O'Neil, 125 Mass. 473; Wasserboehr v. Morgan, 168 Mass. 291, 47 N. E. 126; Pfeifer v. Israel, 161 N. C. 409, 77 S. E. 421; Bluthenthal v. Kennedy, 165 N. C. 372, 81 S. E. 337; Pfeifer v. Love's Drug Co. 171 N. C. 214, 83 S. E. 343; Binswanger v. Stanford, 28 Okla. 429, 114 Pac. 621; Pabst Brewing Co. v. Smith, 39 Okla. 403, 135 Pac. 381; Klein v. Keller, 42 Okla. 592, Ann. Cas. 1916D 1070, 141 Pac. 1117; Wilkins v. Wallace, 38 N. Bruns. 80; Ross v. Morrison, 36 Nova Scotia 518. See also Somers v. Cranston (Ga.) 92 S. E. 772; Richards v. Woodward, 113 Mass. 285.

In Crigler, etc. Co. v. Laramore, supra, it was held that where a salesman in the plaintiff's employ sold the defendant whisky, and was informed at the time of taking the order that "the defendant was buying the whisky for the purpose of selling it in Georgia in violation of the prohibition law" the sale was invalid and that a promissory note given by the defendant for the purchase price was not enforceable. To the same effect see Pfeifer v. Israel, 161 N. C. 409, 77 S. E. 421.

So it was said in Small Grain Distilling Co. v. Davis, 11 Ga. App. 114, 74 S. E. 897: "The distillery company knew that it was a violation of law to sell whisky in the state of Georgia, and in thus endeavoring to evade the law of this state, the loss of both the whisky and the value thereof was only what it justly deserved."

But knowledge on the part of the seller that the buyer is a liquor dealer does not necessarily prove knowledge on his part that the buyer intends to resell illegally. Frank v. O'Neil, 125 Mass. 473.

In Maine the statute (R. S. c. 29, § 64) provides that "no action shall be maintained upon any claim or demand, promissory note or other security contracted or given for intoxicating liquors sold in violation of this chapter, or for any such liquors purchased out of the state with intention to sell the same or any part thereof in violation thereof." Under that statute recovery is barred irrespective of knowledge on the part of the seller respecting the purchaser's intention. Taber v. Barton, 108 Me. 338, 80 Atl. 836. Compare Torrey v. Corliass, 33 Me. 333.

Participation by Seller in Unlawful Purpose.

Even in jurisdictions where the mere knowledge of the illegal purpose for which liquor is purchased will not invalidate a contract of sale, it is held that if it enters at all as an ingredient into the contract between the parties that the liquor shall be transported to another state, where its sale is illegal or that the seller shall do some act to assist or facilitate the illegal intention of the purchaser, such as packing the liquors in a way to conceal their character, then the seller will be deemed a participant in the illegal transaction and the contract is invalid. Green v. Collins, 3 Cliff. 494, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,755. And see the reported case. See also Winkelmeyer Brewing Assoc. v. Nipp, 6 Kan. App. 730, 50 Pac. 956.

In Conemaugh Brewing Co. v. Bennett, 60 Pa. Super. Ct. 543, the court said: "The defendant illegally sold these liquors at that place. During the progress of this business, he told appellant's secretary that he was having trouble with the officers of the law in Westmoreland county, as to his manner of disposing of the beer sent to him, and requested that it be consigned to persons whose names he would furnish. A list of names was given appellant, and when an order for beer was received, appellant would start down the list, select certain names therefrom, and make shipment in these names, being careful not to ship too many packages to any one man, as 'it would not do to have fifty or 150 or 200 packages sent to one man, because it would be readily understood that no one man would be using that amount of beer.'" In an action to recover for the liquor sold it was said: "When the vendor selected the names from the list, regardless of who ordered the beer, made out the bills of lading and shipped the beer in those names to the defendant, knowing that he was openly violating the law, it thereby aided Barnett in the commission of an illegal act and made its officers and agents thus acting particeps criminis. When the plaintiff, to establish its case, offered in evidence the bills of lading in the names of parties other than the defendant, it became pertinent to inquire why the shipments were thus made. This inquiry developed all the facts and circumstances which were a part of the continuous transaction. Its claim was therefore made to rest on an illegal foundation. It would have been a travesty on the integrity of the law for the court to have submitted the case to the jury when this evidence was developed in the plaintiff's case. That the vendor did not receive or was not to receive any of the money due from the purchasers to the defendant, does not lessen its criminal liability in furnishing the assistance whereby the defendant was enabled to violate the law." In the same case the court further said: "Courts will not enforce contracts which are contrary to the policy of the law restraining and regulating the sale of liquor, or which are against public good, or which will encourage violations of the law. In civil actions involving directly the consideration of such agreements, the measure of proof necessary to establish the existence of such illegal act is not the same as it would be in a criminal action; and when, from the plaintiff's evidence, a contract is shown to be founded on an illegal transaction, which is known as such and participated in by the plaintiff, it is the duty of the court to withdraw from the jury any consideration of the contract and direct a compulsory nonsuit." See to the same effect Blandi v. Pellegrini, 60 Pa. Super. Ct. 552.

In Sioux Falls Brewing, etc. Co. v. Kitterman, 116 Minn. 204, 133 N. W. 468, it was held to be error to direct a verdict for the seller of liquor in an action for the price where it appeared that he with knowledge of the fact that the buyer had no license for the sale of intoxicating liquors requested, advised and encouraged him to engage in the sale at retail of the liquor sold, a beverage called "Hop Tea" which was in fact ordinary lager beer.

An agreement whereby the seller is to participate and profit in the illegal resale of the liquor, is sufficient to render the sale invalid and to bar a recovery for the price. Storz v. Finklestein, 48 Neb. 27, 66 N. W. 1020.

There is such a participation by the seller in the illegal purpose of the buyer as to invalidate the sale where the seller expressly stipulates that he will allow the buyer to use his license and thus appear to sell as his agent. Bowie v. Gilmour, 24 Ont. App. 254.

Where the real buyer is unable to procure a license because he is not a citizen, a sale of liquor ostensibly to another for the benefit of the real buyer, in order to circumvent the law, is invalid, and an action for the price is not maintainable. Scheeline v. Pezola, 29 Cal. App. 266, 155 Pac. 127.

While the unlawful participation of a seller of liquor in the illegal design of the purchaser will defeat an action by the seller to recover the purchase price of the liquors sold, it will not enable the purchaser to recover the payments made under such a contract. Wind v. Iler, 93 Ia. 316, 61 N. W. 1001, 27 L.R.A. 219.

WOLL

v.

JENSEN.

North Dakota Supreme Court—March 26, 1917.

36 N. Dak. 250; 162 N. W. 403.

Elections — Ineligibility of Candidate Receiving Majority Vote — Rights of Minority Candidate.

A minority vote for a qualified candidate does not entitle such candidate to the office, even though the candidate receiving the highest number of votes was disqualified to hold the office and such fact was known to the voters at the time of the election. However, the failure of the qualified candidate to receive a plurality of the votes cast renders the election a nullity.

[See note at end of this case.]

(Syllabus by court.)

Appeal from District Court, Morton county: HANLEY, Judge.

Action by H. L. Woll, plaintiff, against H. K. Jensen, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Langer & Nichols and O. F. Kelsch for appellant.

Sullivan & Sullivan for respondent.

[252] BRUCE, Ch. J.—This is a proceeding to contest the election and determine the right to the office of county superintendent of schools of Morton county. There were but two candidates for the office. The plaintiff received 2,318 votes, and the defendant, 3,215 votes. A motion to dismiss was filed and treated as a demurrer.

The petition alleges that the defendant has not had two years' successful experience in teaching, and has not taught school for two years, and has not had two years' experience in teaching schools, and is therefore ineligible to hold the office of county superintendent under the provisions of § 1122 of the Compiled Laws of 1913. Section 1122 of the Compiled Laws of 1913 provides that "no person shall be deemed qualified for the office of county superintendent in any county, who is not a graduate of some reputable normal school or higher institution of learning, or does not hold at least a second grade professional certificate, and who has not had at least two years' successful experience in teaching, one year of which shall have been in this state."

We refrain from discussing the question of the qualification and title of the defendant, as it is not necessarily before us. Even if disqualified, the controlling question of the right of the plaintiff to the office remains and must be met. Specifically stated it is, whether one who has received less than the majority of the votes which are cast [253] at an election is elected to such office so that he can claim the same when the voters knowing of the disqualification of his opponent chose to elect the latter by a majority of the votes cast.

We are satisfied that, though the election was a nullity, the plaintiff and appellant is not entitled to the office in question, and that, therefore, the trial judge was justified in dismissing the complaint.

The question before us has been the subject of no little discussion. It seems to be generally conceded that, where the voters do not know of the disqualification, the votes cast for the disqualified candidate cannot be credited to the defeated party, and that the whole election will be deemed a nullity. The only doubt in the minds of the writers has been whether this is true when the disqualification is known. The English rule and the rule of Indiana seems to be that where the disqualification is known the party receiving the minority vote will be entitled to the office, and this on the theory that the voters have wilfully thrown away their votes, and that the office should not go begging on that account.

The weight of American authority, both legislative and judicial, seems to be that no such intention to throw away the vote can be imputed, but that rather the vote for the disqualified candidate must be considered as a protest against the qualified person, and especially should this be the case where there are only two candidates. The authorities lay stress, indeed, upon the proposition that government by the majority seems to be an American maxim, and that no one should be deemed elected against the protest of that majority. It is true that many of the authorities are purely legislative. It is also true that perhaps in no adjudicated case has the question been fairly presented. The dicta of the courts, however, and the positive rulings of the legislative tribunals, are almost unanimous on the proposition that, where there is no statute declaring votes cast for ineligible candidates to be absolutely void, no right to the office can be presumed in the defeated candidate. We hold, therefore, that the plaintiff was not elected to the office. See McCrary, Elections, 4th ed. § 327; Privett v. Bickford, 26 Kan. 52, 40 Am. Rep. 301; Throop, Pub. Off. § 163; Dillon, Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 373; Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 145; State v. Giles, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 112, 52 Am. Dec. 149; State v. Smith, 14 Wis. 497. Such being the case, the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

NOTE.

The reported case holds that a minority candidate is not entitled to the office because of the ineligibility of the candidate receiving the majority vote. Repudiating a distinction suggested by some courts, it is held that the fact that the disqualification is known to the voters at the time of the election does not affect the rule. The cases passing on the rights of the minority candidate under such circumstances are reviewed in the notes to Sheridan v. St. Louis, 2 Ann. Cas. 480; Dobbs v. Buford, 11 Ann. Cas. 117; State v. Bateman, Ann. Cas. 1915B 515; and State v. Bell, 124 Am. St. Rep. 203.

COMPTON

v.

AKERS ET AL.

Kansas Supreme Court—July 10, 1915.

96 Kan. 229; 150 Pac. 219.

Wills — Election by Widow — Rights as to Intestate Property.

A widow who elects to take under her husband's will thereby bars herself and her heirs from inheriting property of the husband undistributed of by the will.

[See note at end of this case.]

(Syllabus by court.)

Appeal from District Court, Sumner county: SWARTS, Judge.

Action by L. D. Compton, plaintiff, against Everett Akers et al., defendants. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

W. W. Schweinn for appellants.

W. T. McBride and Harold W. Herrick for appellee.

[229] WEST, J.—James Pierce devised to his wife his quarter section of land for life and an undivided one-half at her death to his friend L. D. Compton. After his death and the death of his widow, who had elected to take under the will, Compton took possession of the entire quarter section, and by this suit attempted to quiet his title against the heirs of Mrs. Pierce on the theory that by her election she barred herself and her heirs from all interest in the land except her life estate. The appeal presents the one question whether or not, such election having been made, her heirs can inherit.

There is no dispute that under ordinary circumstances the election by the widow precludes her from all rights of inheritance under the law, and this is made plain by the statute of wills. (§ 42, Gen. Stat. 1909, § 9819.) But the real question concerns the effect of such election upon property not disposed of by will. The court below held that the widow's heirs could not inherit.

While the matter of election has been ruled on, the point now raised has not been previously presented in this state. (Allen v. Hannum, 15 Kan. 625; Noecker v. Noecker, 66 Kan. 347, 71 Pac. 815; Moore v. Herd, 76 Kan. 826, 93 Pac. 157; Ashelford v. Chapman, 81 Kan. 312, 105 Pac. 534; Pittman v. Pittman, 81 Kan. 643, 107 Pac. 235, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 602; Martin v. Battey, 87 Kan. 582, Ann. Cas. 1914A 440, 125 Pac. 88.)

[230] Of the numerous cases cited and examined and others which have come to our notice, quite a number are governed by the provisions of statutes which make it a matter of merely giving effect to legislative direction, while others involve an election to take under the law and cannot therefore furnish much light or assistance. Those most nearly parallel and applicable will be briefly noticed. Ragsdale v. Parrish, 74 Ind. 191, involved an election by a widow to take under the will of her husband which gave her only a life estate in certain of his land, and it was claimed that this did not preclude her from inheriting other land not disposed of by the will, but it was held that the statutes governing the matter were such that when construed together must be held to mean that when a substantial provision was made for the widow by the will she could not, in the absence of a plainly expressed intention to the contrary, take both under the will and under the statute, and the case was distinguished (p. 196) from Armstrong v. Berreman, 13 Ind. 422, to be noticed later. In Langley v. Mayhew, et al. 107 Ind. 198, 6 N. E. 317, it was held that when a widow accepts the provision made by the will which declares that it shall be in lieu of all other interest she may have in the state, and she gives a receipt expressly agreeing to take under the will in lieu of all other claims, she cannot take under the statute. On rehearing the original opinion was adhered to (107 Ind. 204, 8 N. E. 157), the court stating that as then constituted it would not follow some of the decisions previously made, but was inclined to accept the rule laid down in Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 337. That rule is that "if the husband, by his will, undertakes to dispose of the wife's half of the common property, as well as his own, to her and others, and she elects to accept the benefits intended and provided for her by the will, she thereby becomes divested of her title in and to the undivided half of the common property, provided an assertion of her community right and interest would necessarily defeat the objects of the will." (Syl. ¶ 3.) This is a well-considered opinion citing and relying largely upon Jarman, Story, and Kent, besides numerous early decisions discussed and followed. In Jackson's Appeal, 126 Pa. St. 105, 17 Atl. 535, the testator gave one-third of the estate to his wife, and gave certain other legacies to others, and died without issue, leaving property undisposed [231] of. Shortly thereafter the widow died without having made an election. It was held that as she would be presumed to take under the will her administrator could claim only one-third of the entire estate and was not entitled to any part of that left undisposed of by the will. In Matter of Hodgman, 140 N. Y. 421, 35 N. E. 660, it was decided that:

"Where a testator bequeaths his widow a certain sum 'in full satisfaction and recompense of and for her dower or thirds' in his estate, and the widow accepts such bequest, she is estopped from claiming a share as distributee in certain legacies of the testator that had become lapsed." (35 N. E. 661, headnote, ¶ 4.)

In Walker v. Upson, 74 Conn. 128, 49 Atl. 904, it was ruled that when a testator gives his wife one-half his estate, allowing her to select it as she may choose, and dies intestate as to the residue, her acceptance under the will precludes her from sharing in such residue. In Smith v. Perkins, 148 Ky. 387, 146 S. W. 758, it was held that a widow who received a provision made for her in her husband's will, and took no steps for more than a year to repudiate such provision and take dower, could not thereafter recover dower in lands as to which her husband died intestate, the statute requiring that such relinquishment given by the will must be made within twelve months, and the court said:

"The mere fact that the amount devised to the widow is less than her dowerable and distributable share would have been in her husband's estate cannot alter the legal effect of her act in failing to renounce the provisions of the will." (Bayes v. Howes, 113 Ky. 465, 68 S. W. 449.)" (p. 391.)

In another part of the opinion it was said:

"It is wholly immaterial whether the will disposes of the entire estate of the husband or not, for, having made such provision for her as he desired her to have, if she is not satisfied with it, she must renounce it and take under the law. Failing to do this, she loses her rights." (p. 393.)

In Ellis v. Dumond, 259 Ill. 483, 102 N. E. 801, it was held that:

"Acceptance by the widow of the provisions made for her in the will bars her right to dower, not only in the estate disposed of by the will, but also in intestate property which the testator acquired after the will was made but did not dispose of." (Syl. ¶ 1.)

There certain statutes referred to provided in substance [232] that any provision in the will made for the wife should, unless otherwise therein expressed, bar the right of dower in the lands of the deceased, unless such provision should be renounced. In Malone v. Majors, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 577, the statute provided that unless the widow within six months declared her dissent from the provision made by the will, the will would be considered fully satisfactory, and it was decided that she could not thereafter claim any portion of the property as to which her husband died intestate. In Armstrong v. Berreman, 13 Ind. 422, the facts were that Armstrong died leaving his widow, Sarah, and no children, having made a will by which he bequeathed to his wife "all the rest of his estate, both real and personal, during her life, and to be disposed of by her at her pleasure." (p. 423.) He also appointed her his executrix. Sarah qualified and returned an inventory showing that the personal estate amounted to $7,540, with practically no debts. In a short time she died intestate, and it appeared that certain real estate was left by the husband, and out of the controversy over the estate it became necessary to construe the following provision of the statute:

"If a husband or wife die intestate, leaving no child, and no father or mother, the whole of his or her property, real and personal, shall go to the survivor." (Syl.)

The court said:

"Suppose a man die, leaving no child, nor father or mother, but having made a will bequeathing a small portion of his estate to a friend, there being a large residuum undisposed of. Shall the surviving wife not take it under the provisions of the section quoted, because of the bequest? As before remarked, we think that, in such case, the surviving wife should be held entitled to the property, so far as it was not otherwise disposed of by a will." (p. 424.)

This was said to be in accordance with the spirit of the statute and the intention of the legislature, and it was suggested that in case of a person dying intestate, disposing of a small part of his property by will and leaving all the remainder undisposed of, it should descend to his children as property of the person dying intestate. The court took up then the question of escheat and said:

"But suppose a will be made in such case, disposing of a part only of the estate, where shall the remaining portion go? Will the state not be entitled to it for the support of schools, under this section, although the [233] deceased did not literally die intestate?

... We are of the opinion that the simple fact that Benjamin Armstrong made a will, is no reason why the provision first above quoted, should not apply in favor of his surviving widow. So far as the property was undisposed of by will, the deceased may be said to have died intestate." (p. 425.)

The court then discussed the matter of election, which was practically the same as now provided by section 9818 of our General Statutes of 1909, and held that it had no application to the case of the surviving wife, who claimed the whole estate as an heir, there being no others capable of inheriting before her, the result of the entire decision being that the widow inherited the property not disposed of by the will. In Lindsay v. Lindsay, 47 Ind. 283, in considering a case of an election under the law the rule in Armstrong v. Berreman, 13 Ind. 422, was followed, and it was said:

"We are entirely satisfied with Armstrong v. Berreman, supra, and adhere to it. We think that section 26, supra, should be construed as if it provided that if a husband or wife die, leaving any estate undisposed, and leaving no child, and no father or mother, the whole of such estate shall descend to the survivor." (p. 285.)

In Dale v. Bartley, 58 Ind. 101, considering a case of election to take under the law, the court cited (p. 105) with approval Armstrong v. Berreman and Lindsay v. Lindsay. Collins v. Collins, 126 Ind. 559, 564, 25 N. E. 704, 28 N. E. 190, was a case in which a husband devised all his real estate to his wife for life and a certain portion of the fee to his son and daughter. The daughter and her only son died in the testator's lifetime, and the son soon after the father. The widow elected to take under the will. It was held that the devise to the daughter lapsed, and as to the real estate devised to her the testator died intestate. It was held that as to the land devised to the daughter, the will being inoperative, the same was cast upon the heirs of the decedent, one-half going to the widow, the other half to the son; that the election to take under the will divested her of her one-third of the land devised to the daughter, but she still retained her interest in excess of the one-third which was the one-sixth. In Sutton v. Read, 176 Ill. 69, 51 N. E. 801, the will gave all the property to the wife to be accepted by her in lieu of dower during her natural life. There was no further disposition made of the real estate, and there was no residuary [234] clause, the fee in the realty being left undisposed of. It was held that the statute applied that all estate not devised or bequeathed should be distributed in the same manner as the estate of an intestate, and that her failure to elect under the statute relating to dower could effect none of her interest except her dower. It was further held that the provision of the statute that if one died testate, leaving no descendants, the surviving spouse may in lieu of dower take one-half of the realty, did not bar the widow who took under the will from also taking under the statute as to the realty as to which testator dies intestate.

It is laid down as the general rule that unless there is a manifest intention to the contrary the presumption is that the testator intended that his property should go in accordance with the laws of descents and distributions, and that heirs at law will not be disinherited by mere conjecture, but only by express words in the will or by necessary implication arising from them. (40 Cyc. 1412, 1498.) It is also stated that the widow is not put to her election between the provision for her under the will and her rights as heir to the property undisposed of unless "she is put to her election by statutes providing for such cases. But a widow taking under the will is barred of her dower in the property undisposed of, and the widow is not entitled to take both her dower interest and her interest as heirs or distributee of property not disposed of." (40 Cyc. 1970.) Gardener on Wills says:

"The prevailing rule is that, where a widow elects to take under the will, she thereby loses all interest in property in regard to which the testator died intestate, as well as in that upon which the will operates other than that given her in lieu of dower." (p. 611.)

The will itself after giving the wife all of his personal property except one large bay horse, named Charley, provides as follows:

"2nd. I also give and bequeath unto her the rents, use occupancy and right of possession and complete control of the farm on which we now reside during her natural life time.

"3. I give and bequeath unto L. D. Compton of Wichita, Kan. who is now occupied as a Rock Island R. R. employee, the undivided one half interest in and of the north East quarter of section twenty-three (23) in township thirty one south range one east in Sumner County, Kansas. This bequest is to take effect and be in force at and after the death of [235] my wife, Elizabeth. I also give unto him my bay horse 'Charley' which he is to have possession of at the time of my death.

"4. I hereby appoint my wife Elizabeth Pierce Executrix of this my last will and request the Court granting letters hereon to not require of her any bond."

There is certainly nothing in this will indicating any intention that any of the fee in the land should go to the wife, and it would seem that the testator forgot or neglected to provide where the fee in the remaining undivided half should go. It seems natural and proper that it should go to his heirs as if he had died intestate, which he did in respect to this portion of his property, but other instances might arise in which it would not seem so natural or so proper. If a husband owning large bodies of land should devise all but a small tract to his wife and leave that undisposed of it would seem perfectly fair and proper that her election to take under the will should bar her heirs from inheriting such small tract.

But it will be observed, as already suggested, that in the cases referred to it was usually a matter of statutory construction, and indeed "to this complexion must it come at last," so that the real point before the court is whether the letter of the statute is controlling or whether it is to be construed to mean that the election bars the widow of her inheritance only as to property disposed of by the will. The statute of descents and distributions and the statute of wills have been in force since 1868 and no legislature has seen fit to modify or amend the requirements so far as they affect this case, but it is ordered that "words and phrases shall be construed according to the context and the approved usage of the language." (Gen. Stat. 1909, § 9037, subdiv. 2.)

Section 9818 of the General Statutes of 1909 provides that if any provision be made for a widow in the will of her husband the probate court shall after the probate of such will cite her to appear "and make her election, whether she will accept such provision or take what she is entitled to under the provisions of the law concerning descents and distributions. . . . but she shall not be entitled to both." This would seem to make the statute of wills superior, in case of such election, to the statute of descents and distributions, and to preclude her from resorting to both. Section 9818 requires the probate court to "explain to her the provisions of the will, [236] her rights under it, and also her rights under the law, in the event of her refusal to take under the will. . . . And if the widow shall fail to make such election she shall retain her share of the real and personal estate of her husband as she would be entitled to by law in case her husband had died intestate. If she elects to take under the will, she shall not be entitled to the provisions of the law for her benefit, but shall take under the will alone." But this is not all. The next two succeeding sections provide that if the widow be unable to appear in person a commission may be issued with a copy of the will annexed to take her election, and "it shall be the duty of the court, in said commission, to direct such person to explain to said widow her rights under the will and by law" (§ 9820), and in case of the widow's insanity or imbecility the court must appoint some reliable person "to ascertain the value of the provision made by the testator for her in his will in lieu of the provision made by law, and the value of her rights by law in the estate of her husband" (§ 9821), and if the court is satisfied that the devise is more valuable than the law's provision it shall elect for the widow to take under the will.

Language less free from ambiguity or more clearly understandable would be hard to find, and we see no sufficient ground for the interpolation of an exception in case of property undisposed of by will.

The ruling of the trial court that the heirs of the widow cannot inherit is affirmed.

MARSHALL, J. (dissenting).—I do not concur in the conclusion reached by this court. Upon the widow's election, the part of the estate undisposed of by will descends to the other heirs, if there are any, but if there are none, she takes the entire estate.

NOTE.

Election by Widow to Take under Will as Affecting Her Right to Intestate Property.

Express Intention to Exclude Participation:

Provision in Lieu of Dower:

Interest in Realty, 986

Interest in Personalty, 988.

Provision Not Relating to Dower, 989.

Implication of Intention to Exclude Participation:

Exclusion Implied from Fact of Gift, 990.

Exclusion Not Implied from Fact of Gift, 993.

Exclusion Implied from Particular Language, 994.

Implication of Exclusion with Respect to Property Conveyed during Coverture, 995.

Express Intention to Exclude Participation.

PROVISION IN LIEU OF DOWER.

Interest in Realty.

As a general rule where a widow elects to accept a provision made for her in her husband's will which expressly declares that the provision shall be in lieu of dower, she is barred from claiming her dower rights in lands that for any reason are undisposed of by the will. Walker v. Upson, 74 Conn. 128, 49 Atl. 904; Harmon v. Harmon, 80 Conn. 44, 66 Atl. 771; Gibbon v. Gibbon, 40 Ga.

562; Edsall v. Waterbury, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 48; Hone v. Van Schaek, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 221; Hatch v. Bassett, 52 N. Y. 359; Lee v. Tower, 124 N. Y. 370, 26 N. E. 943; Bane v. Wick, 14 Ohio St. 505; Chapin v. Hill, 1 R. I. 446; Davidson v. Boomer, 18 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 475; In re McEwen, 23 Ont. L. Rep. 414. In Lee v. Tower, 124 N. Y. 370, 26 N. E. 943, it appeared that a testator made certain provisions for his wife "in lieu, substitution and satisfaction of her dower, thirds, and all other interest in my estate, real, personal and mixed." The widow elected to take under the will. The question arose as to the right of the widow to dower in a piece of land situated in New York which by reason of an invalid clause in the will became intestate property. It was held that she was not entitled to dower, having made her election to take under the will, the court saying that it was clearly the intention of the testator, as shown by the conditions imposed on the widow by the terms of the will, that she was to take nothing beyond the provision therein made for her.

In Davidson v. Boomer, 18 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 475, it was held that where a widow accepted a provision in the will of her husband giving her an annuity in lieu of dower, she was not entitled to dower out of any of the testator's real estate undisposed of by the will, the court saying: "I think it clear that the annuity was given in lieu of dower in all the testator's lands, and is not to be restricted to a satisfaction for dower in those passing under the will. The cases on gifts in lieu of thirds, such as Pickering v. Stamford, 3 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 492, do not apply. The widow, as one of the persons to whom the statute of distributions gives the personal estate in the case of a failure of a gift of personalty, takes both the annuity and her statutory share, as the testator is only to be considered as purchasing the thirds for the benefit of his legatees. But in cases of realty, the testator is deemed to have purchased the dower for the benefit of whosoever the estate may go to, whether it passes under the will or devolves upon the heir by operation of law."

Nor does the fact that the realty is acquired by the husband after having made his will, alter the rule. Gibbon v. Gibbon, 40 Ga. 562. So in Chapin v. Hill, 1 R. I. 446, wherein it appeared that a widow elected to take under the will of her husband in lieu of her dower or other interest in his estate, it was held that she was barred of her dower in real estate purchased by the husband after the making of his will and as to which he died intestate. The court said: "The question therefore to be decided upon this state of facts is, whether the plaintiff is, by accepting this provision in her husband's will, barred from recovering her dower in the demanded premises, which were not devised in said will, and as to which her husband died intestate. . . . Although the testator's will could not operate on real estate, by him acquired after its execution, unless such real estate was expressly devised by the will, yet, in ascertaining the intention of the testator, it should be borne in mind, that he was making provision for his wife in lieu of her right of dower in his estate, the extent of which right could only be determined at the death of the testator. . . . This phraseology is not qualified or limited by any other words in the will. For the words which follow, ('or other interest in my estate,') cannot certainly be reasonably construed to limit the legal meaning of the words, 'her dower,' but must be construed to apply to all contingent interest which the plaintiff might have in her husband's estate. It was contended that the provision in this will, in lieu of dower, applies only to the real estate which the testator had at the date of his will, because, the testator did not, by express terms, devise real estate to be thereafter acquired. The fallacy of this reasoning must be apparent, when we consider that it does not apply to the whole subject-matter in its full extent. This provision of this will for the plaintiff was intended to be in lieu of her dower in her husband's estate. The will, at its date, vested in her no absolute right, only a contingent right; even the certainty and extent of which depended on the death of her husband and her acceptance of this bounty, in lieu of an inchoate right, the extent of which would be determined and rendered certain by law and her own election, on the death of her husband."

It has been held that a gift to a wife accompanied by the stipulation that it is made in lieu of dower, will bar her dower rights in lands sold by the husband during coverture. Steede v. Fisher, 1 Edw. (N. Y.) 435; Palmer v. Voorhis, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 479.

In Illinois it has been held that, under a section of the dower act providing that the widow on an election to take under the will of her husband shall be barred from dower in his lands, she is barred from dower in undisposed lands. Ellis v. Dumond, 259 Ill. 583, 102 N. E. 801, wherein the court said: "Under said section 10 of the Dower Act, if she shall elect to accept the provisions made for her by the will she is not entitled to claim dower in any of the lands of which he died seized, whether the same be devised by will or not. This construction of section 10 of the Dower Act is sustained by the views expressed in Haynie v. Dickens, 68 Ill. 267, where a similar section of the Dower Act contained in the Revised Statutes of 1845 was construed." In Ellis v. Dumond, supra, it appeared that the widow was claiming dower in after-acquired lands and that by the will it was expressly provided that the provision made for her therein should be in lieu of dower. In Haynie v. Dickens, cited supra, the claim for dower was made in the undisposed fee after a life estate to the widow but there was no provision in the will excluding her dower interest. In both of those cases the decision seemed to have been based on the construction of the statute and not on the presence or absence of any particular words of exclusion in the will. But see Sutton v. Read, 176 Ill. 69, 51 N. E. 801, holding that section 10 of the Dower Act did not apply to intestate property.

Interest in Personalty.

The courts are not in accord as to the effect of the election of a widow to take under the will on her right to the share which the law would otherwise give her in intestate personalty. In a majority of jurisdictions it is held that unless a contrary intention clearly appears from the will a widow will not be barred from her share of intestate personalty by reason of a provision made for her in the will and expressly declared to be in lieu of dower. Gibbon v. Gibbon, 40 Ga. 562; Johnson v. Goss, 132 Mass. 274; Edsall v. Waterbury, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 48; Hone v. Van Schaick, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 221; Canfield v. Crandall, 4 Dem. (N. Y.) 111; Hatch v. Bassett, 52 N. Y. 359; Bane v. Wick, 14 Ohio St. 505; Davidson v. Boomer, 18 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 475; In re McEwen, 23 Ont. L. Rep. 414.

In Hatch v. Bassett, supra, wherein it appeared that because of the lapsing of certain legacies a part of the personal estate was undisposed of, the court construing the effect of a stipulation in the will that the provision made for the wife should be in lieu of dower, said: "This annuity was given in lieu of dower. Dower can only be had of real estate, and has no connection with personal. Her acceptance of the annuity only bars her claim to be endowed of the real estate, and will not at all affect her right, arising upon any statute or from any other source, to the personal."

In Bane v. Wick, 14 Ohio St. 505, wherein it appeared that the widow elected to take under the will in lieu of dower, it was held that she was not barred of her distributive share of personalty not disposed of by the will, the court saying: "The [statute] . . . provides that 'If any provision be made for a widow, in the will of her husband, she shall within six months after the probate of the will, make her election, whether she will but take such provision, or be endowed of his lands; but she shall not be entitled to both, unless it plainly appears by the will to have been the intention of the testator that she should have such provision in addition to her dower.' This reverses the rule of the common law, by which a devise or bequest to a widow was presumed to be in addition to her dower, unless the claim, under the will, and the assertion of the right of dower, were so repugnant, that the two could not consistently stand together. By the statute the provision is deemed to be in lieu of dower, unless it plainly appears that the testator intended it to be in addition to it. The bar created by this section has no reference to her rights as distributee. It is a copy of the 11th section of the act in relation to estates in dower, by the curtesy, etc., found in chapter 60 of the Revised Statutes of Massachusetts, of 1835; and it was held in Ex p. Kempton, 23 Pick. 163, that it had no application to a widow claiming, in addition to such provision, her third of the personalty undisposed of by the will. The language of the statute under which she was entitled to the third was—"If the intestate leave a widow and issue, the widow shall be entitled to one-third of said residue"—the residue being what was left of the personalty after payment of debts."

In Edsall v. Waterbury, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 48, it was held that a bequest to a widow of the income for life of an estate which consisted solely of personalty, in lieu of dower, the remainder not being fully disposed of, did not bar her claim to a share in the undisposed-of remainder under the statute of distributions, the court saying: "The will provides that the widow shall have the accrued interest and income of the whole estate during her natural life, to be received by her in lieu of dower, or right of dower, and I am asked to decree that she take none of the undisposed part of said estate. But I have no authority to do that. The testator is presumed to know the law, and he made this will, as I must presume, knowing that she would share in the portion not bequeathed by him. I cannot say she shall not participate in the distribution when the statute says she shall."

In Jackson's Appeal, 126 Pa. St. 105, 17 Atl. 535, it appeared that a testator left to his widow in lieu of dower one equal third part of all his estate, real and personal, for life, but made no disposition of the remaining two-thirds. The court held that the widow was entitled to no part of the undisposed-of remainder, saying: "We think the orphan's court was clearly right in holding that the widow was not entitled to one-half of the residue of the personal property undisposed of by the testator. The widow having died a few days after the testator, and having made no election, we must presume she takes under the will. The will gave her the full one-third of all the estate of the testator during her life. There was no intestacy of any portion of the estate as to her. She gets the one-third of it all, including that portion of which the testator died intestate. Taking her one-third of the undisposed-of surplus under the will, she cannot claim the one-half of it against the will. In this respect the case differs from Carman's App. 2 Penny. 332, where the widow took specifically only certain portions of the estate, and the will itself gave her no part of the residue. So also in the case of In re Reed, 82 Pa. St. 428, the widow was put to no election between her legacy under the will and this undisposed-of estate. Here, the widow was put to her election as to the whole estate, as well that which passed by the will, as the portion as to which her husband died intestate."

The Connecticut cases involving the effect on a widow's right to share in undisposed-of personalty of an election by her to take under a will expressly stipulating that the provision made for her is in lieu of dower, are somewhat confused. Thus in the latest case passing on this point, Harmon v. Harmon, 80 Conn. 44, 66 Atl. 771, it was held that she was barred from participation in the intestate personalty, the court saying: "The gift to the widow of at least one-half, and possibly the whole of the income of the entire estate during her life, was expressly made in lieu of dower, and was a valid gift which she accepted and enjoyed, apparently without having claimed any further interest in the estate. The disposal of the entire income of the estate during the lives of his wife and daughter was inconsistent with the intention on the part of the testator that the former should receive a further one-third share of his estate upon his death. The acceptance and enjoyment by the widow of the provision of the will for her benefit, without having claimed any further interest in the estate, debarred her from any statutory share in the personal estate of the testator." That view was also taken in Leake v. Watson, 60 Conn. 498, 21 Atl. 1075, wherein it appeared that the widow accepted certain provisions in her husband's will made for her benefit in lieu of dower, which provisions undoubtedly gave to the widow more than she would have obtained by way of dower. The court held that it was plainly the intention of the testator that she should not have any other share in his estate as he evidently did not contemplate that any part of it would become intestate estate. And that "under the circumstances, we think the widow is not entitled to any share of the intestate's estate resulting from the failure of the remainders over to the heirs of the daughters." But in Nelson v. Pomeroy, 64 Conn. 257, 29 Atl. 534, the contrary view was taken, the court saying: "In this state, when a widow elects to take a legacy in lieu of dower, she is considered in the light of a purchaser, and by force of the statute (General Statutes, § 621) if she fails within the time limited to give notice that she declines to accept such legacy, 'she shall be debarred of her dower.' . . . It follows that when, as in this case, the testamentary provision for the widow is nothing more than a bare purchase of her right of dower, the completion of that purchase by formal acceptance of the legacy, or by force of the statute in case of neglect to decline the legacy, bars her claim of dower, but cannot bar her from claiming that share of the intestate personalty to which, independently of the will, she is entitled by the statute of distribution." This same apparent conflict exists in the Connecticut cases in which there was no express provision that the devise or bequest should be in lieu of dower, as will be seen by reference to the cases set out infra, in the subdivision Implication of Intention to Exclude Participation.

PROVISION NOT RELATING TO DOWER.

As in case of a provision in the will of a husband specifically declaring that the gift made therein to the wife shall be in lieu of dower, so where the provision for the widow is made in lieu of any other claim that she may have against his estate it is generally held that if she elects to take under the will she is barred from taking any further share in the testator's property even though it is undisposed of by the will. Lett v. Randall, 3 Smale & G. (Eng.) 84, 65 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 572; Raines v. Corbin, 24 Ga. 185; Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 43 N. Y. 424; In re Benson, 96 N. Y. 499, 48 Am. Rep. 646; In re Hodgman, 140 N. Y. 421, 35 N. E. 660. Compare Pinckney v. Pinckney, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 269.

In the case of In re Hodgman, supra, it was held that where a widow accepted the provisions in her husband's will made for her benefit "in full satisfaction and recompense of and for her dower or thirds which she may or can in anywise claim or demand," out of his estate, she was not entitled as a distributee to a share in certain lapsed legacies. The court said: "She had no such right. It was altogether lost when she elected to take the provision which the testator made for her. That was in lieu of her dower and thirds, or, in other words, of any right as dowress or distributee 'which she may or can in anywise claim or demand out of' the estate. There is not the least doubt of the meaning of the provision, and whatever may be said about the lapsed legacies, she has no interest in them and is entitled to no part of them."

So in the case of In re Benson, 98 N. Y. 499, 48 Am. Rep. 646, wherein the words of exclusion were "in lieu and bar of all claims she may have upon or against the" testator's estate, it was held that the widow was barred from sharing in two lapsed legacies.

In Lett v. Randall, 3 Smale & G. (Eng.) 84, 65 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 572, wherein it appeared that the testator gave to his widow an annuity for life, in satisfaction of all claims and demands which, without provision or declaration, she might have at the time of his decease in respect of any part of his estate and effects, it was held that she was not entitled to any interest in property as to which there was an intestacy on the face of the will, the words of exclusion in the will being absolute. The court distinguished the case of Pickering v. Stamford, 3 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 392, on the ground that in that case the claim was made with respect of property actually disposed of by the will, which became distributable through an unforeseen accident. In Pickering v. Stamford, cited supra, wherein the words were restrictive, a charitable gift having failed, thereby causing a partial intestacy, it was held that the personal representative of the widow was entitled to take her interest in the intestate personalty in accordance with the statute.

A distinction is made in some jurisdictions with respect to after-acquired property but the courts are not in accord on this question. Thus in Hall v. Hall, 2 McCord Eq. (S. C.) 269, wherein it appeared that the devise was to the widow for life in lieu and bar of all claim of dower, inheritance, or any other claim on her part, it was held that property purchased by the testator after making his will was intestate property and that his widow was entitled to take her distributive share. The court said: "In determining whether the restriction contained in the will does prevent her from taking a distributive share of the after-acquired property, we are to look to the circumstances of the parties, and to the will, and to the whole will, and to any circumstances arising out of the immediate provisions of the whole will. The intention of the testator is to be carried into effect, unless he has used technical terms, which must receive their technical meaning, and which restrain the operation of such intention. . . . It is impossible, that when he made the will he could have looked forward to the acquisition of a thing, which at the time he did not want. . . . These considerations irresistibly lead me to conclude, that the testator did not intend to exclude his widow from a participation in any after-acquired property. But it is said that whatever may have been his intention, he has, by the use of technical expression, effected that." The words are, "the provision made for my wife shall be in lieu and bar of all claim or dower, inheritance, or any other claim on her part." He then concludes his will, and may have died the day after, and the possibility of such an event is in the contemplation of all men of reflection when they make wills. If he had died the next day, or the next month, to what would this restriction have applied? It could have applied to nothing else but the property contained in the will. It follows, therefore, that it was meant to apply to that, and to that only, and there is no ground to stand on except as to the technical meaning of the word inheritance, and it certainly cannot be complained of, that he who stands upon the strict law should be judged by the strict law."

But in Raines v. Corbin, 24 Ga. 185, wherein the devise and bequest were stated to be "in lieu and in bar of dower, and of the usual allowance to widows for their year's support, and in lieu and in bar of all other claims upon my estate, in any manner whatever," the contrary view was taken. Construing this express conclusion in connection with property acquired after the making of the will, and which did not pass by the will, the court said: "Claims upon my estate,"—by these words the testator must have meant claims against what might be the property which he would have at his death, not claims against what was, or might be the property which he had, or might have, whilst he was living. It was impossible that she could have any claim against his estate whilst he was alive. That this was his meaning, must be too clear for doubt. The claim of the widow to these after-acquired lands, is, then, a claim 'upon' his 'estate.' But it was his intention that the legacy should be in lieu of all claims 'upon' his 'estate,' therefore it was his intention that it should be in lieu of this claim. It follows, then, that the case is one in which she must elect whether she will take the legacy or take these lands."

Implication of Intention to Exclude Participation.

EXCLUSION IMPLIED FROM FACT OF GIFT.

In some jurisdictions it is held that where a widow elects to accept the provision made for her in her husband's will she will be barred from participating in any undisposed-of property under the intestate laws, though the will is silent as to the testator's intention. Ragsdale v. Parrish, 74 Ind. 191; O'Harrow v. Whitney, 85 Ind. 140; Collins v. Collins, 126 Ind. 559, 25 N. E. 704, 28 N. E. 190; Smith v. Bone, 7 Bush (Ky.) 367; Smith v. Perkins, 148 Ky. 387, 146 S. W. 758; Chenault v. Scott, 66 S. W. 769, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1974; Craven v. Craven, 17 N. C. 338; McClung v. Sneed, 3 Head (Tenn.) 218; Malone v. Majors, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 577; Walker v. Bobbitt, 114 Tenn. 700, 88 S. W. 327, overruling Demoss v. Demoss, 7 Cold. (Tenn.) 268; Hardy v. Scales, 54 Wis. 452, 11 N. W. 590; Chapman v. Chapman, 128 Wis. 413, 107 N. W. 668. And see the reported case.

In Smith v. Perkins, supra, the court stated the Kentucky rule as follows: "Where a husband makes provision, by will, for his wife, the widow has one year from the date of the probate of her husband's will, to determine whether she will take under the will, or renounce the provisions made therein for her, and take under the law. If she elects to take under the will, then she can have no interest in the estate of her husband, except that which the will makes for her, unless it is plain from the language of the will, or can be fairly inferred from such language, that her husband intended that she should have her dower interest in his estate, in addition to the provision made for her in his will. It is wholly immaterial whether the will disposes of the entire estate of the husband or not, for, having made such provision for her as he desired her to have, if she is not satisfied with it, she must renounce it and take under the law. Failing to do this, she loses her right."

In Chapman v. Chapman, 128 Wis. 413, 107 N. W. 668, the Wisconsin rule was set out as follows: "Under the provisions of ch. 106, Laws of 1877, the widow was put to her election not only between the provisions in the will and her dower interest, but also as to her homestead rights and share in her husband's personal estate, and this statute has since remained substantially the same. It appears in the revision of 1878, and is now secs. 2171, 2172, Stats. 1898, and provides, in effect, that when provision is made for a woman in the will of her husband she shall make her election whether she will take under the will or under the law, but she shall not be entitled to both, unless it plainly appears by the will to have been so intended by the testator. . . . Under the doctrine established in that case [Hardy v. Scales, supra], and the statutes of this state as they have since existed, the election statute, secs. 2171, 2172, must be strictly if not literally followed respecting the provision made for the widow, and where she fails to renounce the provision made by the will she is barred from taking any other portion of her husband's estate, although such estate may not be fully disposed of by will."

In O'Harrow v. Whitney, 85 Ind. 140, wherein it appeared that the testator failed to dispose of his estate after a gift of all of it to his wife during her widowhood, the Indiana doctrine was stated as follows: "The fact that she was required to and did make an election between the provision made for her by will and her right to one-third of the land, precludes her from making any such claim. An election presupposes a choice between inconsistent rights, and the selection of one is necessarily a relinquishment of any claim to the other. If it were not it would follow that there had been no election at all; but where an election between inconsistent rights has been made, as averred, the acceptance of one forever precludes the party from claiming the other. If the law had cast the entire estate upon the widow, the acceptance of a portion of it under a will would not preclude her from claiming the residue under the law, for the obvious reason that she has made no election between inconsistent rights. The acceptance, under a will, of that which belongs to a widow by the law, is no election at all; such acceptance is an idle ceremony that in no manner precludes her from claiming her rights under the law. . . . In this case, however, the law did not cast the entire estate upon the widow, but at most one-third, and her election to take all during widowhood, instead of one-third in fee, was an election between inconsistent rights, and necessarily amounted to a relinquishment of all claims to any portion of it under the law. This precise question was decided adversely to the appellees in Ragsdale v. Parrish, 74 Ind. 191, and that decision is conclusive upon this question." But in Armstrong v. Berreman, 13 Ind. 422, it was held that where there are no children a statute providing that the wife shall take all in such a contingency is applicable and she will not be barred by her election to take under the will. So in Beshore v. Lythe, 114 Ind. 8, 16 N. E. 499, wherein it appeared that the provision made for the widow consisted only of a trust estate for the widow and a child for the period of her widowhood, with the widow as trustee, it was held that she was not barred from participation in the undisposed-of property. The court said: "The will conferred upon the appellee no separate or individual estate in the property of the testator. It simply placed his property in her hands for a limited time for the joint use and benefit of herself and the appellant during that period of time. It was not obligatory upon the appellee to accept the control and use of the property on the terms proposed, but when she did so accept, the property became a trust estate in her hands during her widowhood, and she was thereby made a trustee, charged with the management and control of the property, coupled only with a beneficiary interest in its use during the continuance of the trust. When the appellee's widowhood terminated on account of her subsequent marriage, the trust was at an end. As the will made no further disposition of the testator's property, whatever remained of his estate after the trust expired became subject to the law governing the estates of persons dying intestate, and descended accordingly. As the appellee's acceptance of the terms of the will was not inconsistent with her contingent share in the estate under the law, such acceptance did not operate as a relinquishment of all further claim to the property. When, therefore, the will had expended its force, and the purpose for which the trust was created had been accomplished, one half of the estate, remaining undisposed of, descended to the appellant, and the other half to the appellee."

In the case of In re McAllister (Minn.) 160 N. W. 1016, L.R.A.1917C 504, wherein it appeared that certain real estate by reason of a lapsed devise became intestate property, it was held that the widow was barred by her election from taking any further interest under the intestate statute. It was pointed out in that case, however, that under the laws of Minnesota the widow was not required to make an election and had she not done so she would have been entitled to her share in the estate under the intestate statute.

In Wall v. Dickens, 66 Miss. 655, 6 So. 515, it was held that under the Mississippi statutes providing that in case a husband died leaving intestate property and no children nor descendants of a child, the widow should take all as his sole heir; a widow taking under the provisions of the will giving her a life estate, but making no disposition of the remainder, would be entitled to the whole estate in remainder. The provision of the code that when a widow elected to take under her husband's will, it should be considered to be in lieu of her dower or share in the personalty, was held to apply only when there were children or their descendants surviving the husband.

In Durham v. Rhodes, 23 Md. 233, it was held that the Maryland statute (Act of 1789, c. 10, subch. 13) providing that every devise of land or any estate therein to the wife of the testator should be construed to be intended to be in bar of her dower unless otherwise expressed in the will, was broad enough to cover undisposed-of lands, and where the will contained no expression of intention of the testator either to bar or not to bar the widow, the statute would apply, and she could not claim a dower interest in the undisposed-of property.

In Virginia, under a statute providing that the widow must elect within a specified time between the provisions of her husband's will and her legal rights in his personalty and that unless she renounces the will she shall be barred of any further interest in the personalty than is therein given, it has been held that her acceptance of the provisions made for her in the will bars her from participation in any undisposed-of personalty. Thornton v. Winston, 4 Leigh (Va.) 152; Dupree v. Cary, 6 Leigh (Va.) 36.

As in the cases where the will expressly provides that the gift is made in lieu of dower (see the preceding subdivision of this note) there is a seeming conflict among the Connecticut cases as to the effect of the widow's election to take under the will on her right to share in undisposed-of personal property, so in cases where the will is silent on the subject but the gift made in the will is construed to be in lieu of dower, the decisions are not uniform. Thus in the more recent cases it has been held that the widow is barred by her election to take under the will from any share in the undisposed-of personalty. Walker v. Upson, 74 Conn. 128, 49 Atl. 904; Grant v. Stimpson, 79 Conn. 617, 66 Atl. 166. But see Bennett v. Packer, 70 Conn. 357, 39 Atl. 739, 66 Am. St. Rep. 112, and Evans's Appeal, 51 Conn. 435, holding the contrary rule. In the case last cited, however, it appeared that there were no children. In Grant v. Stimpson, 79 Conn. 617, 66 Atl. 166, the court stated the rule and attempted to distinguish the Connecticut cases as follows: "It is established law in this state that a widow may, by accepting a provision in lieu of dower made for her by her husband's will, debar herself from claiming dower, and, if such provision is clearly intended to be in lieu of all claim on his estate, she will, by accepting it, debar herself from claiming under the statute of distributions her share in any intestate personal property. This is upon the equitable doctrine of election, that a person will not be permitted to hold under and against the same deed or will. In Evans's Appeal, 51 Conn. 435; Nelson v. Pomeroy, 64 Conn. 257, 29 Atl. 534; and Bennett v. Packer, 70 Conn. 357, 39 Atl. 739, each a case where a widow had accepted a provision made for her by will in lieu of dower, it was held that by accepting the testamentary provisions the widows were debarred of dower, but were not debarred of their shares of the intestate personal property under the statute. In each of those cases the intestacy appeared on the face of the will, and, so far as appeared, was voluntary on the part of the testator, and it was held that upon the facts in those cases the widows might justly claim that they accepted the testamentary provision in substitution of the dower right only. But in Nelson v. Pomeroy, 64 Conn. 257, 262, 29 Atl. 534, it was suggested in the opinion that where such a provision is made in lieu of all claim on the husband's estate, and accepted, the widow 'will be estopped from claiming any share even of intestate property.' In Walker v. Upson, 74 Conn. 128, 130, 49 Atl. 904, where the dispositions in favor of the widow were plainly in lieu of dower, it was held that her acceptance of them debarred her from claiming under the statute of distributions any share in so much of the estate as was intestate, upon the ground that having chosen to accept a benefit under the will she 'must renounce every claim inconsistent with the accomplishment of the intent manifested by its provisions.' That was a case, like this, where the testator intended and attempted to dispose of his entire estate, but some of the provisions of the will were void, leaving a partial intestacy. The case of Leake v. Watson, 60 Conn. 498, 21 Atl. 1075, presented a similar question and was decided in the same way. Whether the widow in the present case, having accepted the provisions of the will in her favor, was debarred of a share of the intestate estate, depends, therefore, upon the construction of the will and the testator's intention as manifested thereby. It is not expressly stated in the will that the provisions in favor of the widow are in lieu of dower or other claim, but the authorities agree that this is not necessary. It is enough if from the whole will it is demonstrated by clear and manifest implication that such was the testator's intention. Bennett v. Packer, 70 Conn. 357, 39 Atl. 739. Reading the whole will in view of the situation of the parties, it is entirely clear that the testator intended the provision in favor of his wife to be in lieu of dower and all claim upon his estate. He intended that no part of his estate should be intestate. He gave nearly half of his property to others than his wife and heirs at law. The will mentions the chief items of which the estate consisted, and shows a clear apprehension on the part of the testator of what he had to give, and of the items which he was giving to others and to his widow and heirs at law. He gave his wife the use for life of the entire homestead and of nearly a third of his personal property, besides absolute gifts of the household effects and $1,500 in bank, evidently intending to provide her a home and the means of supporting herself in it. But the life use of the entire homestead under the will was inconsistent with the life use of one-third of it as dower. 'Of necessity this is in lieu of dower; the use of the whole displaces the use of a part and renders the latter impossible.' Evans's Appeal, 51 Conn. 435, 440. Having accepted this provision and enjoyed it during her life, she was debarred of all further claim on the estate and took no vested interest (except such as the will gave her) in one-third of the personal estate named in items four, five, and ten of the will, and her estate is not entitled to any share of the same as intestate estate."

EXCLUSION NOT IMPLIED FROM FACT OF GIFT.

In some jurisdictions it is held that a widow though provided for by the will of her husband is not barred from her statutory interest in any property which may be undisposed of by the will, unless the will clearly shows an intention that she shall take nothing beyond the provision made for her in the will. Davers v. Dewes, 3 P. Wms. (Eng.) 40, 24 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 961; Dicks v. Lambert, 4 Ves. Jr. 961, 31 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 375; Adams v. Adams, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 277; Nickerson v. Bowly, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 424; In re Kempton, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 163; State v. Holmes, 115 Mich. 456, 73 N. W. 548; Sparks v. Dorrell, 151 Mo. App. 173, 131 S. W. 761; Vernon v. Vernon, 53 N. Y. 351; Lefevre v. Lefevre, 59 N. Y. 434; Kaser v. Kaser, 68 Ore. 153, 137 Pac. 187; Carman's Appeal, 2 Penny. (Pa.) 332; Hodges's Estate, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 283; Borland v. Nichols, 12 Pa. St. 38, 51 Am. Dec. 576; In re Reed, 82 Pa. St. 428; Grim's Appeal, 109 Pa. St. 392, 1 Atl. 212; De Silver's Estate, 142 Pa. St. 74, 21 Atl. 882; In re Thompson, 229 Pa. St. 542, 79 Atl. 173; Wood v. Mason, 17 R. I. 99, 20 Atl. 264; Snelgrove v. Snelgrove, 4 Desaus. (S. C.) 274; Philleo v. Holliday, 24 Tex. 38.

As was said in De Silver's Estate, 142 Pa. St. 74, 21 Atl. 882: "The rights conferred by the intestate laws are only taken away by a will which effectually disposes of the entire estate of the decedent." In the case of In re Thompson, 229 Pa. St. 542, 79 Atl. 173, the court stated the doctrine as follows: "There being an intestacy as to the residue of the estate, including all the real estate, it must be distributed to those entitled under the intestate laws of the commonwealth. The election of the widow to take under the will does not deprive her of the right to a share of the residue of the estate, of which the testator died intestate. The bequest to the widow was not a fractional part of the whole estate bequeathed in lieu of dower, as in Jackson's Appeal, 126 Pa. St. 105, but was a bequest of an interest in part of the testator's personal property. Her election to take the legacy under the will was in lieu of her interest in the part of the estate as to which there was a testacy, but not as to the part of the estate as to which there was an intestacy. Carman's Appeal, 2 Penny. 332; In re Reed, 82 Pa. St. 428; De Silver's Estate, 142 Pa. St. 74."

In the case of In re Reed, 82 Pa. St. 428, it was held that a widow taking under the will of her husband was not barred from taking a share in his intestate estate under the statute, the court saying: "His widow was therefore put to no election between her legacy under the will and this undisposed-of estate. It was not the intent of the testator or of the law she should take her legacy in lieu of the estate thus lapsed. He thought of no lapse, and therefore made no provision in lieu of the legacy. The lapse was from the act of God, and the law of the land, which do injury to no one. If then the testator by reason of the lapse died intestate of this portion, the intestate law must govern its distribution, and this being so what warrant is there for saying that the widow takes nothing under the intestate law? She is therefore entitled to one-third, under the will, of the entire residuary estate, and as to that part of the residue which by the lapse is left without an owner under the will, she is entitled to one-third of it under the intestate law, and the children living at the testator's death are entitled to the other two-thirds in equal proportions."

In Philleo v. Holliday, 24 Tex. 38, it appeared that a widow elected to take under the provisions of her husband's will. A provision in the will having been held to be invalid, the testator died intestate as to a remainder in certain personal property. It was held that she was not precluded from her distributive share under the statute as her election did not apply to property undisposed of by the will. The court said: "A case of election does not arise in the claim of the wife to the bequest of the life estate under this will. The principle of election is, that he who accepts a benefit under a will, must adopt the whole contents of the instrument, so far as it concerns him; conforming to its provisions, and renouncing every right inconsistent with it; as where the wife claims something under the will which will disappoint the will. There is nothing in the wife's claim to the life estate which is inconsistent with the will, which will prevent giving full effect to it, or which will have the effect to disappoint the will. Her claim can have no such effect. She cannot be denied her right to her share of the property, of which no valid disposition was made by the will, in consequence of having accepted the bequest."

In State v. Holmes, 115 Mich. 456, 73 N. W. 548, it appeared that a widow elected to take under the will a life estate in testator's real and personal property. A clause attempting to dispose of the residuum of the personal estate having been declared to be invalid, it was held that the widow took her share in the personalty as distributee under the statute disposing of intestate property.

In Kaser v. Kaser, 68 Ore. 153, 137 Pac. 187, wherein it appeared that a widow elected to take under the will of her husband, it was held that she did not waive her rights to take under the statute her share to a portion of the remainder as to which the husband died intestate. The court said: "The defendant, upon the death of her husband, after the allowance prescribed by law had been made, was entitled to receive one-half of the remainder of all the personal property in her own right: Section 7349, subd. 4, L. O. L. It might seem that, since by the provision of the will she accepted the use of such entire property during her natural life, she thereby waived her right to insist upon the distribution which the statute thus gave her. Such is not the rule, however, and she must be given the share of the intestate property, though she may have elected to take under the will."

In Havens v. Havens, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 324, it appeared the testator provided for his widow in his will but said nothing about the provision being in lieu of dower. The court held that the widow was entitled to dower in the real estate not disposed of by will since there were no provisions in the will showing a contrary intention on the part of the testator.

It has been held that the widow is not barred of her right to dower in undisposed-of lands unless the intention to exclude her clearly appears from the will. In re McDonald, 4 Ohio Dec. 396, disapproving Swihart v. Swihart, 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 624, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. 338. In Snelgrove v. Snelgrove, 4 Desaus. (S. C.) 274, it was held that where a widow accepted a provision in her husband's will as to personalty, the devise of real estate being invalid because of an insufficient number of subscribing witnesses, she was entitled to one-third of the testator's real estate of which he died intestate, the court saying: "But the widow would not be barred of dower by any bequest in a will, unless positively excluded by the will, or necessarily by the inconsistency of the provisions. Suppose a testator makes a will of his personal estate, and gives his wife a moderate pecuniary legacy, and then dies intestate as to his real estate. I presume in such a case she may then claim her rights in the real estate under the Act of 1791, or her dower as she pleases, and take the legacy also."

EXCLUSION IMPLIED FROM PARTICULAR LANGUAGE.

In Wood v. Mason, 17 R. I. 99, 20 Atl. 264, wherein it appeared that a testator had left all his estate with a remainder over which failed because the double contingency on which it was based did not happen, it was insisted that after giving his entire estate to his wife for life it could not have been the intention of the testator that she should have any part of it absolutely. The court said: "Our statute of descent and distribution (Pub. Stat. R. I. cap. 187, § 9), provides that 'the surplus of any chattels or personal estate of a deceased person, not bequeathed,' shall be distributed, 'one-half part thereof to the widow of the deceased forever, if the intestate died without issue.' The personal estate in the hands of the complainant for distribution is clearly personal estate 'not bequeathed,' and as clearly, therefore, should go, to the extent of one-half thereof, to the estate of said Elizabeth. . . . The intention of the testator is to govern so far only as he has communicated it by his will, either in terms or by implication; but if he has left intestate estate, the disposition of it is governed, not by his will, but by the statute, the same as if he had made no will."

In Sparks v. Dorrell, 151 Mo. App. 173, 131 S. W. 761, the court recognized the rule that a widow electing to take under her husband's will is not barred from participation in the undisposed-of personalty, unless it clearly appears from the will that such was the intention of the testator, but held that the facts in that case clearly showed it to be the intention of the testator that she should take only the provision made for her in the will. The court said: "It appears . . . that the total personal estate of the testator was $30,000; that the specific legacies and bequests to parties named in the will other than the wife was $5685; that the widow received out of the personal estate in bequests made to her by her husband, together with other allowances, $16,598. If, in addition to this, she be allowed to take under section 2939, Revised Statutes 1899, the full one-half of his personal estate, absolutely, subject to debts, she would receive in addition to what was given her under the will a further sum of $15,000, making a total amount of $31,598, or the sum of $1598 more than the entire personal estate, without deducting any sum for costs of administration. Under this condition of the estate, it is apparent that if this rule of construction of the law should be applied and enforced, the other legatees enumerated in the will (by which will the testator bequeathed other specific legacies amounting to $5685) would receive nothing by its provisions, and to that extent the full operation of the will of the testator would be impaired and defeated. We therefore find that some of the provisions of the will are absolutely inconsistent and incompatible with the widow's claim of statutory dower, and that its provisions as to other legacies would be totally defeated if she were endowed under the statute with one-half of the personal estate and also allowed to take under the will."

So in Bragg v. Litchfield, 212 Mass. 148, 98 N. E. 673, it appeared that the testator gave a life interest in his residuary estate to his wife and failed to dispose of the remainder in full. It was held that it was the testator's intention as shown by the will to exclude his widow from the inheritance of a share in the intestate property, the court saying: "The only question that remains is whether the widow shared in the intestate property as a statutory heir. A legacy or devise to one who is an heir at law or a statutory heir will not prevent him from taking as heir at law or as a statutory heir in case of a partial intestacy unless it is manifest from the whole will that there was an intention to exclude him on the happening of such an event. In the present case we think that it appears from the will taken as a whole that the testator intended the provision which he made for his widow to be a full and final provision for her. He specifically bequeathed to her all his 'furniture, glass and silverware, books, pictures and articles of use and ornament.' Then he directed that she should have the rents, income, interests, dividends and profits from the rest and the residue 'during her natural life, precisely the same as I myself might do, were I living;' and added to this 'full power to sell, exchange, invest and reinvest the same,' and in conclusion provided for the disposition of the rest and residue at her decease. The unavoidable inference from this is, we think, that he intended that she should have the entire use, benefit and improvement of the rest and residue during her life, and to that end clothed her with full power to manage the same as she should think best, but that he did not intend that she should have any part of the principal of the estate except the furniture, glass, etc., which he specifically bequeathed to her."

IMPLICATION OF EXCLUSION WITH RESPECT TO PROPERTY CONVEYED DURING COVERTURE.

Where a widow elects to take under her husband's will, it has been held that she will be barred from dower in land alienated by her husband during his lifetime unless the will clearly shows that it was the testator's intention that she should take property in addition to that provided for in his will. Buffinton v. Fall River Nat. Bank, 113 Mass. 246; Barnard v. Fall River Sav. Bank, 135 Mass. 326; Corry v. Lamb, 45 Ohio St. 203, 12 N. E. 660. In Adams v. Adams, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 277, it was held that where a widow had been amply provided for in her husband's will, a clause reading "the other part of my real estate is to be disposed of as the law directs" gave her no dower in the real estate covered by the clause as the will showed no intention on the part of the testator to give her dower therein.

But the contrary view has been taken as to the widow's right to dower in land alienated by the husband during coverture. Thus in Braxton v. Freeman, 6 Rich. L. (S. C.) 35, 57 Am. Dec. 775, it was held that a devise to a wife for life of all his property did not bar her from claiming dower in land aliened by the husband during coverture, the court saying that though she was barred by her election from claiming dower in the lands contained in the gift, it did not affect her right of dower in lands undisposed of by the will. And in Hall v. Smith, 103 Mo. 289, 15 S. W. 621, it was held that a widow's election to take under the will barred dower in the lands of which the husband died seized but that in order to bar dower in lands conveyed during coverture an intention to that effect must appear on the face of the will. In Westbrook v. Vanderburgh, 36 Mich. 30, it appeared that a widow elected to take under the will. It was held she was not deprived of dower in land conveyed by the husband during coverture and in which she did not join.

—
PHELPS

v.

BYRNE.

South Dakota Supreme Court—November 19, 1915.

36 S. Dak. 369; 154 N. W. 825.

Veterans' Preference Acts — Discretion of Appointing Power.

The action of the governor in making appointments under Laws 1913, c. 109, creating the board of public health and medical examiners, is not ministerial, but involves the exercise of discretion, notwithstanding Pol. Code, §§ 3242, 3243, providing that honorably discharged soldiers and sailors shall be preferred for appointment to public office and making a violation thereof a misdemeanor.

[See note at end of this case.]

Mandamus — Enforcement of Preferential Right to Appointment.

Mandamus is not the proper remedy to enforce the appointment by the governor of an honorably discharged soldier to a position on the board of public health and medical examiners, under Pol. Code, § 3242, providing that in every public department and upon all public works, honorably discharged Union soldiers shall be preferred for appointment, since a disregard of such statute does not violate the legal rights of any particular person so as to enable him to maintain civil proceedings in his own behalf.

Original application for mandamus. Oscar W. Phelps, relator, and Frank M. Byrne, respondent. The facts are stated in the opinion. WRIT DENIED.

W. A. Lynch for relator.

Byron S. Payne for respondent.

[370] WHITING, J.—Chapter 109, Laws 1913, creates a board of public health and medical examiners, and defines the powers and duties of such board. Under its provisions the Governor is empowered and required to appoint the members of such board and to designate one of such appointees as the superintendent of the board. Three vacancies occurred on July 1, 1915, through the expiration [371] of the terms of certain members of such board, one member whose term expired being the superintendent. The act makes no provision for the filing of an application with the Governor by one seeking appointment as a member of such board. It provides that the appointees shall be "skilled and capable physicians" resident in this state, and shall have practiced within this state not less than five years preceding their appointment. Sections 3242 and 3243, P. C. provide:

"Sec. 3242. In every public department and upon all public works of the state of South Dakota, and of the cities, towns and villages thereof, honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of the late war shall be preferred for appointment; age, loss of limb or other physical impairment which does not in fact incapacitate, shall not be deemed to disqualify them, provided they possess the requisite qualifications and business capacity necessary to discharge the duties of the position involved.

"Sec. 3243. All officials or other appointing power in the public service who shall neglect or refuse to comply with the provisions of the preceding section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall on conviction thereof be punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court."

The relator presents a petition wherein he alleges, among other things, that he is a citizen of this state; that several months prior to July 1, 1915, he filed with the Governor an application seeking appointment to the office of superintendent of such above-mentioned board when the vacancy should occur therein through the termination of the superintendent's term; that such application disclosed that he was an honorably discharged Union soldier of the War of the Rebellion, a holder of a certificate to practice medicine within this state, a resident physician in good standing within this state for more than ten years, in no manner incapacitated to fill the position sought, and that a vacancy would occur in the position of superintendent of such board on July 1, 1915; that he was the only honorably discharged Union soldier of the late war who was an applicant for such office; that it became and was the duty of the Governor to appoint him to the office sought; that, disregarding such duty, the Governor had appointed another [372] party, not an honorably discharged Union soldier of the late war to such position; that such appointment was null and void; that the Governor still refuses to appoint relator to such position. Upon the facts thus alleged, he seeks a writ of mandamus commanding the Governor of this state to appoint him to the position sought. Relator's counsel concedes:

"That this court cannot, by mandamus, or by any other process, control the defendant in the exercise of his political functions conferred on him by the Constitution; and that this court cannot control him in the performance of any duty when judgment and discretion is to be exercised."

He, however, asserts:

"That this court can, by this process, control the Governor in the performance of a purely ministerial duty when neither judgment nor discretion is to be exercised."

Although respondent has not questioned the correctness of this assertion, we find it unnecessary to determine or express any views upon the much disputed question of whether a state court can ever control the actions of the Governor of such state, even though the act sought to be controlled is but ministerial in its nature.

We decide nothing but: (1) That, in the exercise of the power to make an appointment to the office in question, the Governor is not performing a mere ministerial act; (2) that mandamus is not the proper remedy to procure the result sought by relator.

Counsel for relator says:

"This law fixes the qualifications of these officers. They must be resident physicians of the state in good standing, and must have resided and practiced five years in this state next preceding their appointment. These are the sole and only qualifications. In addition to these qualifications, however, any physician now engaged in the practice is required to be licensed to practice, and all medical practitioners are subject to have their license revoked for drunkenness, for immoral practice, or unprofessional conduct. This license is a guaranty to the public that every medical practitioner is a skilled and capable physician and in good standing in his profession. In addition to this, it is a guaranty to the Governor that all physicians practicing in the state are skilled and capable physicians and of good standing. The only facts the Governor is required to know are the facts which the law prescribes for qualifications [373] to membership on this board. The license is conclusive of their standing and of their skill. Any licensed physician in this state who had resided and practiced in this state for five years, next preceding the term of appointment prescribed in the law, is eligible to appointment on this board. . . .

"The plaintiff is an honorably discharged Union soldier. This fact makes it incumbent on the Governor to appoint him a member of this board. He has no discretion, and is not required to use judgment. Here are two men, both physicians, holding license to practice, both residents of this state for the time required by law, one an honorably discharged Union soldier, and the other not. The law says: 'Appoint the soldier,' The Governor says: 'What about my discretion and my judgment?' The law says: 'You have no discretion, nor do you have any right to exercise any judgment.' . . .

"The offices in question are not positions that require business talent. This is a professional board, and its membership are required to be members of the medical profession. The functions of the office are entirely outside of the domain of business."

Counsel has cited no authority to support his position. We apprehend that, if any were to be found, he would have referred to same. If the Governor is given no discretion, then certainly the words "skilled and capable," used in designating what kind of physicians should be appointed, are meaningless, in view of the fact that the law had already prescribed that the members of the board should be "resident physicians of the state, in good standing, and shall have resided and practiced within this state not less than five years." Laws 1913, c. 109, § 1. Private individuals, when seeking professional service, are given the privilege of exercising discretion as to whom they shall select for such service, and this even as among those who have received the state's license to practice the particular profession. It is certainly startling if relator is correct in his contention, and the Governor of this state, and through him the people of this state, are deprived of the right to select for an important official position that person deemed most skilled and capable therefor, and deprived of such right simply because some applicant who holds a certificate making him eligible for such position also chances to be an honorably discharged soldier. It is a matter of common knowledge that the [374] members of no one of the learned professions are all possessed of equal skill and capability; the members of any profession differ in natural ability, as well as in skill acquired through study and experience. Can it be possible that, if vacancies should occur in the officers of secretary of state and Attorney General, the Governor of the state would be free to determine the relative qualifications and business capacities of all those who might aspire to the one office, but, when selecting a person to fill the other office, if some applicant should present not only a license as an attorney at law, but also an honorable discharge as an old soldier, would be foreclosed from comparing such applicant's legal qualifications with those of other applicants, and would be obliged to appoint him to the office of Attorney General of this state, when, perchance, he would not be willing to intrust in his care his own legal work? If the Governor should be called upon to fill a vacancy upon either the circuit or Supreme Court bench, would the mere fact that some honorably discharged old soldier holding a license as an attorney at law was an applicant for the position to be filled prevent the Governor from appointing some one else to such position, and this regardless of the legal skill and learning of such old soldier, if the Governor believed such old soldier, with all his skill and learning, yet lacked those qualifications essential to a jurist? Human experience teaches that peculiar qualifications are requisite in order that persons may be fitted for particular fields of action. A certificate authorizing one to practice some profession, while it may render its holder eligible to hold some particular office, is no evidence that he possesses any peculiar qualification that may be essential to the proper discharge of the duties of such office. The board of health of this state has general supervision of all the health officers and boards throughout the state; it must investigate sanitary conditions, learn the causes and sources of diseases and epidemics, observe the effect upon human health of localities and employments, and gather and diffuse proper information upon all subjects to which its duties relate; it gathers, collects, and publishes medical and vital statistics; it advises all state officials and boards in hygiene and medical matters, especially those involved in the proper location, construction, sewage, and administration of prisons, hospitals, asylums, and other public institutions; it must adopt, alter, and enforce regulations for the preservation of [375] public health; it must hold examinations of those desiring to engage in the practice of medicine and license those found fitted to become practitioners; it must, in proper cases, revoke the licenses that have been issued by it. The above are some of the duties imposed upon this board by the law creating it. The most important member of this board, the one whose time is supposed to be fully given to the work of this board and upon whom the greatest responsibility rests, is the superintendent thereof. It needs no special knowledge for any one to understand that such a board will either be of inestimable value to the people of this state, or, on the other hand, of practically no value to them, dependent upon the peculiar qualifications of its members, and more especially dependent upon the peculiar qualifications of its superintendent. The state of New York has a statute almost identical in its provisions with sections 3242 and 3243, supra. In People v. Saratoga Springs, 54 Hun 16, 7 N. Y. S. 125, the court said:

"The act under which the relator claims the office in question (chapter 464, Laws 1887) provides that 'honorably discharged Union soldiers shall be preferred for appointment and employment.' It means, as I construe it, that where two or more apply for an office, one of whom is a discharged Union soldier, and all are equally qualified, the soldier shall be preferred; but not where the soldier is not equally qualified for the office as one of the others. There are degrees of fitness for such an office as the one in question. One candidate might barely be able to perform its duties in a reasonably proper manner, and another might have superior qualifications, and be able to do the work much better. In such a case, the appointing power, under the law, would not be bound to appoint the former, although a discharged Union soldier."

And again in People v. Alma-House Com'rs 65 Hun 169, 20 N. Y. S. 21, the court, speaking of the same statute, says:

"It was the intention of this statute to give to honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors a preference for appointment and employment in every public department and upon all public works of the state of New York and of the cities, towns, and villages thereof. . . . Whenever they apply, without disqualification by reason of age, loss of limb, or other physical impairment which does not, in fact, incapacitate, provided they possess the [376] business capacity necessary to discharge the duties of the position involved; but the proviso governs the operation of the whole statute. If the soldier or sailor possesses the business capacity necessary to discharge the duties of the position involved, he has the preference. If he is destitute of such capacity, he is not within the provisions of the law, and can derive no benefit therefrom. Capability is the prerequisite to the reception of the preference. It was not the design of the statute to debase the public service by requiring the appointment of incompetent men to discharge the duties of public positions, or to elevate heroism above competency, independent of other considerations."

The Supreme Court of Minnesota has so fully and clearly discussed the question of whether mandamus is a proper remedy under facts such as are alleged herein that we can do no better than to dispose of this feature of the case by quoting freely from what that court said in State v. Copeland, 74 Minn. 371, 77 N. W. 221. The statute before them was almost identical in language with section 3242, P. C. supra. That court said:

"The appointing power is in the board, and not in the courts; and, even if the latter could compel the former to remove the present incumbent, they could not compel the board to appoint the relator. The board would still have discretion as to what soldier or sailor they would appoint. In refusing to appoint the relator, they violate no legal right of his, but, at most, merely violate the general mandates of the statute. Hence, if a writ of mandamus was to issue, it would be merely to compel the board to execute the mandates of the law, not in favor of the relator in particular, but in favor of all persons within its provisions. This would be merely to duplicate the act of the Legislature in enacting the statute. Such is not the office of a writ of mandamus. Again, the determination of the qualification of a person for employment in the public service involves the exercise of judgment and discretion, which is vested in the appointing officers or body, and not in the courts. But, if a person can maintain mandamus to compel his own appointment, this would necessarily require the courts to hear evidence and pass upon the fitness of the relator, and thus would devolve the appointing power upon the courts—a result which finds no support in the statute. All this, and much more which might be suggested, satisfies us that disobedience or disregard [377] of the directions of this statute does not violate the legal rights of any particular person, so as to enable him to maintain any civil proceedings in his own behalf. The wrong or offense is merely a public one, and the only remedy, if any, is by removal of the appointing officers for malfeasance in office, or, this failing, by appeal to the people. We can conceive of a statute constituting a full body of civil service rules, which, when applied to the facts, would identify the particular person entitled to an appointment so as to give him a legal right to it which could be enforced by him. But this is not such a law. It may be said that our construction of this statute renders it practically nugatory. This will undoubtedly be so when appointing officers or bodies are disposed to disregard the law, but this is the result either of the defective character of the statute, or of the inherent nature of the subject of which it treats, or of both."

246 Fed. 24.

The writ prayed for is denied.

NOTE.

The reported case holds that in making appointments to the state board of health, the members of which are required to be physicians, the governor is not required by the veterans' preference law to appoint a veteran who is entitled to practice medicine. The preference secured by that act, the court holds, is applicable only as between a veteran and a nonveteran of substantially equal qualifications, and the fact that both candidates are licensed to practice a profession does not preclude the governor from an inquiry as to which of them is the more skilled and capable. The cases dealing with the validity and construction of veterans' preference laws are reviewed in the notes to Goodrich v. Mitchell, 1 Ann. Cas. 288; Shaw v. Marshalltown, 9 Ann. Cas. 1039; Phillips v. DeLasCasas, Ann. Cas. 1914D 724; and Brown v. Russell, 55 Am. St. Rep. 357.

MASSSES PUBLISHING COMPANY

v.

PATTEN.

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit—November 2, 1917.

246 Fed. 24.

War — Espionage Act — Nonmailable Matter — Scope of Enactment.

Espionage Act June 15, 1917, tit. 12, § 1 (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 16), declaring every letter, newspaper, or other publication, matter, or thing in violation of any of the provisions of that act to be nonmailable, and section 2, declaring nonmailable every letter, newspaper, etc., containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, excludes from the mails any letters or literature in furtherance of any acts prohibited under the other titles of the statute.

Validity of Act — War Power.

Espionage Act June 15, 1917, tit. 12, §§ 1, 2 (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 16), declaring certain matter nonmailable, do not violate Const. Amend. 1 (9 Fed. St. Ann. 244), declaring that Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, as the statute imposes no restraint on the matter prior to publication, and no restraint afterwards except as it restricts circulation through the mails, and while liberty of circulating may be essential to freedom of the press, liberty of circulating through the mails is not essential, so long as transportation in any other way is not forbidden.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Espionage Act, tit. 12, §§ 1, 2 (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 16), declaring certain matter nonmailable, do not violate Const. Amend. 5 (9 Fed. St. Ann. 288), providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, though by the exclusion of complainant's magazine from the mails its business was practically ruined.

[See note at end of this case.]

Constitutional Law — Judicial Review of Statutes — Wisdom of Statute.

It is the function of the legislative department to enact law, and of the judicial department to construe and apply it; and the courts cannot pass upon the wisdom or justice of statutes, but are simply to ascertain the intent of the lawmakers as expressed therein and to give effect thereto.

War — Espionage Act — Construction — Nonmailable Matter.

The Espionage Act (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 16) is not intended to repress legitimate criticism of Congress or of the officers of the government, or to prevent any proper discussion looking to the repeal of any legislation which may have been enacted, but only to prevent the dissemination and distribution through the mails of publications intended to embarrass and defeat the government in the successful prosecution of the war.

Same.

The postmaster general is to determine whether a particular publication is nonmailable under the Espionage Act (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 16), and in so determining is required to use judgment and discretion; and his decision is conclusive on the courts, unless clearly wrong.

Same.

Certain articles and cartoons, published by complainant in its magazine concerning the war, conscription, etc., are held to warrant the postmaster general's determination that it was nonmailable under the Espionage Act, as calculated and intended to obstruct recruiting or enlistment, in violation of title 1, § 3 (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 10), but not unmailable, as advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, in violation of title 12, § 2 (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 16).

Same.

A cartoon published by complainant in its magazine, representing the Liberty Bell in a broken form, whatever its meaning, does not by itself afford any ground for exclusion of the magazine from the mails.

Burden of Showing Mailable Character of Publication.

Complainant, suing to enjoin the postmaster from excluding its magazine from the mail, pursuant to an order of the postmaster general holding it nonmailable, has the burden of overcoming the presumption that the postmaster general's conclusion was right, or of showing that he had exceeded his power, or exercised it wantonly or maliciously; and this should be done by a preponderance of evidence.

What Matter Is Nonmailable.

The Espionage Act (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 16) excludes from the mails any publication, the natural and reasonable effect of which is to encourage resistance to a law of the United States, and the words of which are used in an endeavor to persuade to resistance, though the duty to resist is not mentioned directly, and the interest of the persons addressed in resistance is not directly suggested.

Appeal from United States District Court, Southern District of New York.

Action by Masses Publishing Company, plaintiff, against Thomas G. Patten, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Francis G. Caffey for appellant.
Gilbert E. Roe for appellee.

Sitting: WARD and ROGERS, Circuit Judges, and MAYER, District Judge.

[26] ROGERS, J.—The complainant seeks an injunction restraining the defendant, as postmaster of the city of New York, from treating the August issue of a magazine known as The Masses as nonmailable matter under the act of Congress of June 15, 1917, commonly known as the "Espionage Act," and commanding him to transmit the said magazine through the mail in the usual way.

Upon the filing of the complaint an order was entered requiring the defendant to show cause why the injunction should not issue. At the hearing affidavits were presented on behalf of the complainant to show that, if the magazines should be excluded from the mails, the business of the complainant would be practically ruined. An affidavit of the Postmaster General of the United States was presented on behalf of the defendant.

Under the provisions of Espionage Act, title 12, it became the official duty of the Postmaster General to determine what matter is nonmailable, and that official had instructed the postmaster of New York that The Masses was nonmailable. It appears that before this order was issued the solicitor for the department, the Attorney General of the United States, and the Judge Advocate General of the army, the latter being a lawyer and charged with the administration of the Draft Act of May 18, 1917 (Fed. Stat. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 85), were consulted, and that they each advised that the circulation of the issue in question would constitute an offense under the Espionage Act. And the Judge Advocate General informed the department that it was his opinion that the necessary effect of the issue of this August number would be to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, and refusal of duty in the naval and military forces of the United States, and that it would obstruct the recruiting and enlistment service of the United States. The learned District Judge, in a carefully prepared opinion, reached the conclusion that the August issue of the publication in question did not contain any illegal matter and that the injunction should issue.

That part of the Espionage Act which is involved here is title 12, which relates to the use of mails, and it reads as follows:

"Sec. 1. Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book or other publication, matter or thing, of any kind, in violation of any of the provisions of this act is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier: Provided, that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize any person other than an employee of the Dead Letter Office, duly authorized thereto, or other person upon a search warrant authorized by law, to open any letter not addressed to himself.

"Sec. 2. Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter or thing, of any kind, containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, is hereby declared to be nonmailable." (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 16.)

Section 3 of title 12 relates to the punishment to be imposed upon any person who uses or attempts to use the mails for the transmission [27] of any matter declared to be nonmailable, and is not involved in this proceeding. But, as section 1 of title 12 makes nonmailable any matter which is in violation of any of the provisions of the act, it will be necessary to consider section 3 of title 1, which reads as follows:

"Sec. 3. Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, to the injury of the service or of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than twenty years or both." (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 10.)

It is the clear intent of title 12 to close the United States mails to any letters or literature in furtherance of any acts prohibited under the other titles of the statute. It is said that the act violates the First Amendment to the Constitution, which declares that "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press." (9 Fed. St. Ann. 244.) It is also said that the act violates the Fifth Amendment, which provided that "no person shall be . . . deprived of life, liberty, or property, without the liberty of the press declares that it is "essential to the nature of a free state." It consists, he says, "in laying no previous restraint upon publications, and not in freedom from censure for criminal matter when published. Every free man has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public; but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous, or illegal, he must take the consequence of his own temerity." Volume 4, p. 151. And Mr. Justice Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, states that "every free man has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public; to forbid this is to destroy the freedom of the press." Volume 2, sec. 1884 (4th Ed.).

In his Commentaries on the Laws of England process of law. (9 Fed. St. Ann. 288.) and Mr. Justice Blackstone in speaking of

In Patterson v. Colorado, 205 U. S. 454, 462, 27 S. Ct. 556, 558, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 879, 10 Ann. Cas. 689 (1907), the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Holmes, declares that the main purpose of the constitutional provision as to free press is "to prevent all such previous 'restraints' upon publications as had been practiced by other governments," and they do "not prevent the subsequent punishment of such as may be deemed contrary to the public welfare." Now clearly the Espionage Act imposes no restraint prior to publication, and no restraint afterwards, except as it restricts circulation through the mails. Liberty of circulating may be essential to freedom of the press, but liberty of circulating through the mails is not, so long as its transportation in any other way as merchandise is not forbidden.

The Act of Congress now called in question does not undertake to say that certain matter shall not be published nor that it shall not be transmitted in interstate commerce. It simply declares that such matter shall not be carried in the United States mails. In Ex p. Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, 24 U. S. (L. ed.) 877 (1877), the Supreme Court held that [28] the power vested in Congress to establish post offices and post roads embraces the regulation of the entire postal system of the country, and that under it Congress can designate what may be carried in the mail and what excluded. In that case Mr. Justice Field, speaking for the court, said:

"In excluding various articles from the mail, the object of Congress has not been to interfere with the freedom of the press, or with any other rights of the people, but to refuse its facilities for the distribution of matter deemed injurious to the public morals."

A conviction for depositing in the mail a lottery circular contrary to an act of Congress was sustained. And that decision was adhered to in the case of In re Rapier, 143 U. S. 110, 134, 12 S. Ct. 374, 36 U. S. (L. ed.)

93 (1892). In the latter case Mr. Chief Justice Fuller said:

"The circulation of newspapers is not prohibited, but the government declines itself to become an agent in the circulation of printed matter which it regards as injurious to the people. The freedom of communication is not abridged within the intent and meaning of the constitutional provision unless Congress is absolutely destitute of any discretion as to what shall or shall not be carried in the mails, and compelled arbitrarily to assist in the dissemination of matters condemned by its judgment, through the governmental agencies which it controls. That power may be abused furnishes no ground for a denial of its existence, if the government is to be maintained at all."

In Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194 U. S. 497, 24 S. Ct. 789, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 1092 (1904), the court had before it the constitutionality of a law which authorized the Postmaster General "upon evidence satisfactory to him," and which did not provide for any trial, hearing, or inquiry of any kind, to shut out of the mails the letters of any person or company conducting a lottery or any other scheme or device for obtaining money or property of any kind through the mails by means of false or fraudulent pretenses. Mr. Justice Brown, writing for the court, said:

"In establishing such [postal] system Congress may restrict its use to letters, and deny it to periodicals; . . . it may admit books to the mails and refuse to admit merchandise, or it may include all of these and fail to embrace within its regulations telegrams or large parcels of merchandise, although in most civilized countries of Europe these are also made a part of the postal service. It may also refuse to include in its mails such printed matter or merchandise as may seem objectionable to it upon the ground of public policy, as dangerous to its employees or injurious to other mail matter carried in the same packages. The postal regulations of this country, issued in pursuance of act of Congress, contain a long list of prohibited articles dangerous in their nature, or to other articles with which they may come in contact, such, for instance, as liquids, poisons, explosives and inflammable articles, fatty substances, or live or dead animals, and substances which exhale a bad odor. It has never been supposed that the exclusion of these articles denied to their owners any of their constitutional rights. While it may be assumed, for the purpose of this case, that Congress would have no right to extend to one the benefit of its postal service, and deny it to another person in the same class and standing in the same relation to the government, it does not follow that under its power to classify mailable matter, applying different rates of postage to different articles, and prohibiting some altogether it may not also classify the recipients of such matter, and forbid the delivery of letters to such persons or corporations as in its judgment are making use of the mails for the purpose of fraud or deception or the dissemination among its citizens of information of a character calculated to debauch the public [29] morality. For more than 30 years not only has the transmission of obscene matter been prohibited, but it has been made a crime, punishable by fine or imprisonment, for a person to deposit such matter in the mails. The constitutionality of this law we believe has never been attacked. The same provision was by the same act extended to letters and circulars connected with lotteries and gift enterprises, the constitutionality of which was upheld by this court in the case of In re Rapier, 143 U. S. 110 [12 S. Ct. 374, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 93]."

The court held that the fact that the Postmaster General could act and that no judicial hearing was provided for was not a fatal objection to the act. It declared:

"That due process of law does not necessarily require the interference of the judicial power as laid down in many cases and by many eminent writers upon the subject of constitutional limitations. . . . If the ordinary daily transactions of the departments, which involve an interference with private rights, were required to be submitted to the courts before action was finally taken, the result would entail practically a suspension of some of the most important functions of the government."

The opinion of Judge Cooley in Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201, is cited approvingly, in which he said:

"There is nothing in these words ('due process of law'), however, that necessarily implies that due process of law must be judicial process. Much of the process by means of which the government is carried on and the order of society maintained is purely executive or administrative. Temporary deprivations of liberty or property must often take place through the action of ministerial or executive officers or functionaries, or even of private parties, where it has never been supposed that the common law would afford redress."

This court holds, therefore, that the Espionage Act, in so far as it excludes from the mails certain matter declared to be unmailable, is constitutional.

The provisions contained in title 12 of the Espionage Act respecting the use of the mails do not abridge the freedom of the press, nor deprive the complainant of its property, within the meaning of the First and Fifth Amendments. Congress has not attempted to prevent the transportation of this publication as merchandise by the railways or by the express companies, and it has not authorized the confiscation of it, neither has it in any way prohibited publication.

In 1798 Congress enacted what is known as the Sedition Law. Act July 14, 1798, c. 73, 1 Stat. 596. It provided, among other things, for the punishment of any person who published any false and malicious thing against the government of the United States, or any matter intended to excite the people to oppose any law or act of the President in pursuance of law, or to resist, or oppose or defeat, any law. The act provoked great resentment throughout the country, and where it expired by its own limitation in 1801 it was not renewed. From that time until the present no similar legislation, so far as we are aware, has been enacted.

The Espionage Act now under consideration bears slight resemblance to the Sedition Law of 1798. The act as originally drafted provided that every publication "containing any matter of a seditious, anarchistic or treasonable character" should be nonmailable. But when the act was under discussion in the Senate the words above quoted were stricken out; it having been objected that they were too indefinite [30] and left too much room for construction. In Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, page 429, that distinguished authority says:

"Repression of full and free discussion is dangerous in any government resting upon the will of the people. The people cannot fail to believe that they are deprived of rights, and will be certain to become discontented, when their discussion of public measures is sought to be circumscribed by the judgment of others upon their temperance or fairness. They must be left at liberty to speak with the freedom which the magnitude of the supposed wrongs appears in their minds to demand; and if they exceed all proper bounds of moderation, the consolation must be, that the evil likely to spring from the violent discussion will probably be less, and its correction by public sentiment more speedy, than if the terrors of the law were brought to bear to prevent the discussion."

In May's Constitutional History, c. 10, it is said that:

"When the press errs, it is by the press itself that its errors are left to be corrected. Repression has ceased to be the policy of rulers, and statesmen have at length fully realized the wise maxim of Lord Bacon, that 'the punishment of wits enhances their authority, and a forbidden writing is thought to be a certain spark of truth that flies up in the face of them that seek to tread it out.'"

The policy of the government of the United States has conformed to the doctrine above laid down. But the fact that the policy of the government of the United States has been adverse to limiting freedom of discussion affords little assistance in construing the particular act now under consideration. In Hadden v. Barney, 5 Wall. 107, 18 U. S. (L. ed.) 518 (1866), the court speaking through Mr. Justice Field declared that:

"What is termed the policy of the government with reference to any particular legislation is generally a very uncertain thing, upon which all sorts of opinions, each variant from the other, may be formed by different persons. It is a ground much too unstable upon which to rest the judgment of the court in the interpretation of statutes."

And in Dewey v. U. S. 178 U. S. 510, 521, 20 S. Ct. 981, 985, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 1170, the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Harlan, declared that:

"This court has nothing to do with questions of mere policy that may be supposed to underlie the action of Congress. . . . Our province is to declare what the law is."

And in White v. U. S. 191 U. S. 545, 551, 24 S. Ct. 171, 172, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 295 (1903), Mr. Justice Day declared:

"It is equally true that it is the business of courts to decide what the law is, and not by consideration of surmises as to the policy of the government have the effect to adjudge that to be law which has not been so enacted by the Legislature."

Moreover, courts have nothing to do with the wisdom or unwisdom of a legislative act. It is the function of the legislative department to enact law, and of the judicial department to construe and apply it. The judges cannot pass upon the wisdom or the justice of the statute, but are simply to ascertain the intent of the lawmakers as expressed in the enactment, and to give effect thereto. U. S. v. Detroit First Nat. Bank, 234 U. S. 260, 34 S. Ct. 846, 58 U. S. (L. ed.) [31] 1298. For reasons satisfactory to the law-making body the Espionage Act has been adopted, and being valid is the law of the land.

It is not intended by what has just been said to imply any doubt as to the wisdom of Congress in the enactment of the Espionage Act. The purpose of the act as we understand it was not to repress legitimate criticism of Congress or of the officers of the government, or to prevent any proper discussion looking to the repeal of any legislation which may have been enacted. The United States being at war in defense of American rights, Congress intended by this act, to prevent any use being made of the mails for the dissemination and distribution of publications intended to embarrass and defeat the government in its effort to prosecute the war to a successful termination. The statute is one of great importance and under it the Postmaster General, whose duty it is to execute all laws relating to the postal service, had to determine whether the particular publication in question was mailable or unmailable matter as defined in the act.

The Espionage Act being constitutional, the question which arises, then, is whether the action of the Postmaster General in excluding The Masses from the mails warranted the District Judge in issuing an injunction commanding him to allow it to be transmitted by mail. The Postmaster General is the head of the Post Office Department. The obligations of his oath of office oblige him to see that the provisions of the Espionage Act are carried into effect, so far as they relate to the use of the mail, and that matter declared by the act to be nonmailable shall be excluded from the mails. The performance of that duty involves the exercise of his judgment and discretion. To what extent can the courts control him by injunction in the performance of this duty?

In Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 497, 599 Appendix 10 U. S. (L. ed.) 559, 609 (1840), a mandamus to compel the Secretary of the Navy to comply with a resolution passed by Congress granting a pension was refused. The Secretary, acting under the advice of the Attorney General, decided that Mrs. Decatur was not entitled to claim the pension under the resolution as she had applied for and received her pension under the general law, and she could not have both. The opinions was by Chief Justice Taney, who said:

"The duty required by the resolution was to be performed by him (the Secretary of the Navy) as the head of the executive department of the government, in the ordinary discharge of his official duties. In general, such duties, whether imposed by act of Congress, or by resolution, are not mere ministerial duties. The head of an executive department of the government, in the administration of the various and important concerns of his office, is continually required to exercise [his] judgment and discretion. . . . The court could not entertain an appeal from the decision of one of the Secretaries, nor revise his judgment in any case where the law authorized him to exercise discretion or judgment. Nor can it, by mandamus, act directly upon the officer and guide and control his judgment or discretion in the matters committed to his care, in the ordinary discharge of his official duties."

In U. S. v. Black, 128 U. S. 40, 9 S. Ct. 12, 32 U. S. (L. ed.) 354 (1888), the court held that a mandamus to the Commissioner of Pensions was properly refused. The Commissioner had decided adversely an application for an increase of a pension under [32] 21 Stat. 281, c. 236. The opinion was by Mr. Justice Bradley, who said:

"The court will not interfere by mandamus with the executive officers of the government in the exercise of their ordinary official duties, even where those duties require an interpretation of the law, the court having no appellate power for that purpose; but when they refuse to act in a case at all, or when, by special statute, or otherwise, a mere ministerial duty is imposed upon them, that is, as service which they are bound to perform without further question, then, if they refuse, a mandamus may be issued to compel them."

In American School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S. 94, 23 S. Ct. 33, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 90 (1902), the Supreme Court reversed the court below, which had dismissed a bill asking for an injunction to restrain a postmaster from carrying out an order of the Postmaster General withholding mail on the ground that the person to whom it was addressed was engaged in a scheme for obtaining money through the mails by means of fraudulent pretenses. The Supreme Court, in reversing the judgment, did so with instructions to issue the temporary injunction as applied for. The case was decided upon a demurrer, so that the allegations in the bill of complaint were taken as true, and the bill averred facts showing that the complainant's business was legitimate and not fraudulent. If the business was not fraudulent, the Postmaster General had no authority under the act to withhold the mail.

In U. S. v. Hitchcock, 190 U. S. 316, 23 S. Ct. 698, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 1074 (1903), it was held and that neither an injunction nor a mandamus would lie against an officer of the Land Department to control him in discharging an official duty which required the exercise of his judgment and discretion. Mr. Justice Peckham, writing for the court, said:

"Whether he [the Secretary of the Interior] decided right or wrong, is not the question. Having jurisdiction to decide at all, he had necessarily jurisdiction, and it was his duty to decide as he thought the law was, and the courts have no power whatever under those circumstances to review his determination by mandamus or injunction. . . . The responsibility, as well as the power, rests with the Secretary, uncontrolled by the courts."

In Bates, etc. Co. v. Payne, 194 U. S. 106, 24 S. Ct. 595, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 894 (1904), the bill asked for an injunction to compel the Postmaster General to transmit through the mails, as matter of the second class, a publication alleged to be a periodical and to enjoin him from enforcing an order made by him denying it entry as such. The bill was dismissed and the injunction denied. Mr. Justice Brown, writing for the court, said that:

"Where Congress has committed to the head of a department certain duties requiring the exercise of judgment and discretion, his action thereon, whether it involve questions of law or fact, will not be reviewed by the courts, unless he has exceeded his authority or this court should be of opinion that his action was clearly wrong."

Again he says:

"The rule upon this subject may be summarized as follows: That where the decision of questions of fact is committed by Congress to the judgment and [33] discretion of the head of a department, his decision thereon is conclusive, and that even upon mixed questions of law and fact, or of law alone, his action will carry with it a strong presumption of its correctness, and the courts will not ordinarily review it, although they may have the power, and will occasionally exercise the right of so doing."

And he concludes:

"While, as already observed, the question (that decided by the Postmaster General) is one of doubt, we think the decision of the Postmaster General, who is vested by Congress with the power to exercise his judgment and discretion in the matter, should be accepted as final."

In Public Clearing House, supra, the court held that it was within the power of Congress to intrust the Postmaster General with the power of seizing and detaining letters upon evidence satisfactory to himself and that his action would not be reviewed by the court in doubtful cases. The act authorized the Postmaster General, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person was conducting a scheme or device for obtaining money or property through the mails by fraudulent pretenses, to instruct postmasters at any postoffice at which registered letters arrived directed to any such person to return the same to the postmaster at the office at which they were originally mailed with the word "Fraudulent" stamped upon the outside.

In Smith v. Hitchcock, 226 U. S. 53, 33 S. Ct. 6, 57 U. S. (L. ed.) 119 (1912), a bill was filed to restrain the Postmaster General from revoking orders according second-class mail privileges to the plaintiffs. The ground of the bill was that the privileges had been annulled without granting the hearing required by the act (31 Stat. 1099, 1107), and that the publications were periodical publications within the meaning of the act (20 Stat. 355, 358, 359). The Postmaster General had decided that the publication was not a "periodical" and could not be carried as second-class matter, but would have to go as third-class and pay the higher rate. Mr. Justice Holmes, speaking for the court said:

"Thus a question of law is raised, although, as suggested in Bates, etc. Co. v. Payne, 194 U. S. 106, 108, 24 S. Ct. 595, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 894, we should not interfere with the decision of the Postmaster General, unless clearly of opinion that it was wrong. . . . We have no such clear opinion."

See also Lewis Pub. Co. v. Morgan, 229 U. S. 288, 33 S. Ct. 867, 57 U. S. (L. ed.) 1190; Parish v. MacVeagh, 214 U. S. 124, 131, 29 S. Ct. 556, 53 U. S. (L. ed.) 936; Johnson v. Drew, 171 U. S. 93, 18 S. Ct. 800, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 88; Burfenning v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 163 U. S. 321, 323, 16 S. Ct. 1018, 41 U. S. (L. ed.) 175.

This court holds, therefore, that if the Postmaster General has been authorized and directed by Congress not to transmit certain matter by mail, and is to determine whether a particular publication is nonmailable under the law, he is required to use judgment and discretion in so determining, and his decision must be regarded as conclusive by the courts, unless it appears that it is clearly wrong.

We come, therefore, to consider the authority vested by Congress in the Postmaster General to determine whether he acted within his jurisdiction when he excluded the complainant's magazine from the mails. The Espionage Act is entitled:

[34] "An act to punish acts of interference with foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes."

Title 12 of the act is the only one relating to the use of the mails. And section 1 of that title expressly declares that:

"Every . . . publication . . . of any kind, in violation of any of the provisions of this act is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mails."

As any publication which is in violation of any provision of the act is nonmailable, an examination of the act as a whole is necessary, and shows that the following matter is made nonmailable:

(1) Any matter advocating or urging treason or forcible resistance to any law of the United States. Title 12, § 3.

(2) Any matter containing information respecting the national defense and which is intended to be used to the injury of the United States or to the advantage of any foreign nation. Title 1, § 1.

(3) Any matter containing information, intended to be communicated to the enemy, with respect to the movement, numbers, description, condition, or disposition of any of the armed forces, ships, aircraft, or war materials of the United States, or with respect to the plans or conduct of the war, or the plans or conduct of any naval or military operations, or with respect to any measures undertaken or intended for the fortification or defense of any place, or any other information relating to the public defense which might be useful to the enemy. Title 1, § 2.

(4) Any matter, when the United States is at war, containing false statements willfully intended to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies, and matter willfully intended to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States, and matter willfully intended to obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States. Title 1, § 3.

The excluded publication is a magazine known as The Masses. By its own statement it is a radical and revolutionary publication, not revolutionary, however, in that it desires to overturn existing forms of government by force of arms, as it is opposed to war. It is revolutionary, not only in matters political, but in art and literature and religion as well. It is a monthly publication of about 50 pages, and has a circulation of from 20,000 to 25,000 copies each month. For a number of years it has passed freely through the mails to its subscribers throughout the United States.

The objectionable matter was contained in the August issue and consisted of certain articles. These were entitled: "A Question," "A Tribute," "Conscientious Objectors," "Friends of American Freedom." Besides these articles, there were four cartoons, which were also objected to. These were entitled: "Liberty Bell," "Conscription," "Making the World Safe for Capitalism," and "Congress and Big Business."

In the article entitled "A Question" the editor writes:

"I would like to know to-day how many men and women there are in America who admire the self-reliance and sacrifice of those who are resisting the conscription law on the ground that they believe it violates the sacred rights and liberties of man. How many of the American population are in accord with the American press when it speaks of the arrest of these men of genuine courage as a 'Round-up of Slackers'? Are there none to whom this [35] picture of the American republic adopting toward its citizens the attitude of a rider toward cattle is appalling? I recall the Essays of Emerson, the Poems of Walt Whitman, which sounded a call never heard before in the world's literature, for erect and insuppressible individuality, the courage of solitary faith and heroic assertion of self. It was America's contribution to the ideals of man. . . . I wonder if the number is few to whom this high resolve was the distinction of our American idealism, and who feel inclined to bow their heads to those who are going to jail under the whip of the state, because they will not do what they do not believe in doing. Perhaps there are enough of us, if we make ourselves heard in voice and letter, to modify this ritual of contempt in the daily press, and induce the American government to undertake the imprisonment of heroic young men with a certain sorrowful dignity that will be new in the world."

The article idealizes those who resist the conscription law, and it represents them as heroic. In saying that the law violates sacred rights and is contrary to liberty, and that those who refuse to submit to it are heroes, it incites disobedience to the statute.

The poem entitled "A Tribute" represents as martyrs worthy of admiration two notorious persons who had just been convicted under an indictment charging them with conspiracy to induce persons not to register under the Conscription Act. It reads in part as follows:

"Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman
Are in prison to-night,
But they have made themselves elemental forces.

Like the water that climbs down the rocks,
Like the wind in the leaves,
Like the gentle night that holds us,
They are working on our destinies,
They are forging the love of the nations."

The statement that these two individuals have made themselves elemental forces akin to the rocks and trees and rivers, under ordinary circumstances, would be harmless; but coming at this particular time, and after their conviction, the inference being that their greatness grows out their offense and that they are worthy of admiration and honor, it is equivalent to saying that their unlawful conduct is worthy to be followed.

The article "Conscientious Objectors" refers to a number of letters written from English prisons by conscientious objectors. These letters are printed in the same issue of the magazine, and the article recommends those in this country who intend "to stick it out to the end" (resist conscription to the end) to read thoroughly the letters. The article declares:

"We believe that our protestors against government tyranny will be as steadfast as their English comrades. It is not by any means as certain that they will be as polite to their guards and tormentors, but we hope they will remember that these are acting under official compulsion and not as free men.

. . . There are some laws which the individual feels that he cannot obey, and which he will suffer any punishment, even that of death, rather than recognize as having authority over him. This fundamental stubbornness of the free soul, against which all the powers of the state are helpless, constitutes a conscientious objection, whatever its original sources may be in political or social opinion. It remains to be demonstrated that a political disapproval of this war can express itself in the same heroic firmness that has in England upheld the Christian objectors to war as murder."

[36] The article, taken as a whole, may well be regarded as intended to encourage objectors to be as steadfast protestors against "government tyranny" as their English comrades. In other words, it is an encouragement to disobey the law.

The article "Friends of American Freedom" is devoted to Alexander Berkman and Emma Goldman, already commented upon in this opinion as having been convicted of a conspiracy to induce persons not to register. The article pays them "tribute of admiration for their courage and devotion." There is an allusion to the fact that Berkman and Goldman had advocated in their paper, Mother Earth, that those liable to the military draft, who do not believe in the war, should refuse to register. The natural effect of it is to encourage those who have objections to war not to register as the Conscription Act requires. Admiration of conspirators convicted of the offense of seeking to defeat the operation of the Conscription Act is equivalent to an approval of their crime and an encouragement to others to disobey the law in like manner.

In considering the cartoons, we may observe that political cartoons have long been used as a very effective means of political propaganda. They were so employed in France during the French Revolution and in England as early as the days of Walpole. In this country they were used during the Revolution, in the War of 1812, and in the Civil War. The brilliant cartoons of Nast, satirizing the Tweed Ring in the city of New York, were conceded at the time to have exerted a powerful influence in the destruction of that corrupt combination. A cartoon may be a leading article. It has been described as "a leading article transformed into a picture." It can express ideas as lucidly and clearly as printed words, and there is no escape from legal responsibility because pictures, rather than words, are used.

In the cartoon entitled "Liberty Bell," the Liberty Bell is presented in a broken form. The idea meant to be conveyed may be that there is no such thing as liberty left in the United States. But whatever it means, taken by itself, it would afford no ground for exclusion from the mails.

The cartoon entitled "Conscription" portrays a youth lying across the mouth of a cannon with his arms chained to the wheels of the gun carriage. "Democracy," in the form of a nude woman, is tied by her extended arms and her crossed feet to a wheel. And "Labor," crouched down on the gun carriage, a pitiable object, is fastened in like manner. A woman is on her knees on the earth at the side of the cannon in utter despair, with her head bent back and her arms uplifted, while a child lies neglected at her side. The counsel for the complainant admits in his brief that this cartoon—"is a powerful argument against the Conscription Law. It says, in effect, that the youth of the land are by it forced into military service; that the law binds labor to military service as well; that it causes great agony and suffering to the womanhood of the country, and that the mothers of the country with children too small to be subject to the 'Draft' pray to God that the Draft Law may be repealed before their children come to military age, and that Democracy is trampled under foot by such a law. That is what this picture says."

[37] But that is not what it says to us. It seems to us to say: This law murders youth, enslaves labor to its misery, drives womanhood into utter despair and agony, and takes away from democracy its freedom. Its voice is not the voice of patriotism, and its language suggests disloyalty. If counsel wished the court to understand that in his opinion the effect of the cartoon would not be to interfere with enlistment, we are not able to agree with him. That it would interfere, and was intended to interfere, was evidently the opinion of the Postmaster General; and this court cannot say that he was not justified in his conclusion.

The cartoon "Making the World Safe for Capitalism" shows a Russian absorbed in studying a paper marked "Plans for a Genuine Democracy." On one side of him Japan and England appear in a threatening attitude, and on the other Mr. Root and Mr. Russell, members of the commission sent by the United States to Russia, appear in the guise of advisers. Mr. Root has in his hands a noose, labeled "Advice," with which it is intended to entrap or choke to death the Russian Democracy. The court cannot say that the Postmaster General was not warranted in concluding that this cartoon was intended to arouse the resentment of some of our citizens of foreign birth and prevent their enlistment.

In the cartoon "Congress and Big Business" Congress is represented by a disconsolate individual who is ignored by a number of overdeveloped men of Big Business gathered around a table inspecting a large paper spread over it and labeled "War Plans." Congress is quoted as saying: "Excuse me, gentlemen, where do I come in?" "Big Business" replies: "Run along now; we got through with you when you declared war for us." This cartoon is intended to stir up class hatred of the war and to arouse an unwillingness to serve in the military and naval forces of the United States. The clear import is, if the war was brought on by "Big Business," then let "Big Business" carry it on, and let Labor stand aloof. The court cannot say that the Postmaster General was clearly wrong in concluding that it would interfere with enlistments.

In the case at bar, giving to the complainant the most favorable construction, the burden is upon it to overcome the presumption that the Postmaster General's conclusion is right, or that he has exceeded his power or exercised it wantonly or maliciously. See Judge Mayer's opinion in Sanden v. Morgan, 225 Fed. 266, 269 (1915). This the complainant should do by a preponderance of evidence. And this the complainant has not done.

It may be conceded that the language of the statute cannot have one meaning in an indictment and another when the question arises respecting the exclusion of matter from the mail as containing that which violates the provisions of section 3 of title 1. If the magazine is nonmailable under that section, it may be that the editor has committed a crime in publishing it, for which, upon conviction, he may be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both. The District Judge thought no crime had been committed, and that the magazine was therefore mailable, because [38] the publication did not in so many words directly advise or counsel a violation of the act. He declared that:

"If one stops short of urging upon others that it is their duty or their interest to resist the law, it seems to me one should not be held to have attempted to cause its violation. If that be not the test, I can see no escape from the conclusion that under this section every political agitation which can be shown to be apt to create a seditious temper is illegal. I am confident that, by such language, Congress had no such revolutionary purpose in view."

This court does not agree that such is the law. If the natural and reasonable effect of what is said is to encourage resistance to a law, and the words are used in an endeavor to persuade to resistance, it is immaterial that the duty to resist is not mentioned, or the interest of the persons addressed in resistance is not suggested. That one may willfully obstruct the enlistment service, without advising in direct language against enlistments, and without stating that to refrain from enlistment is a duty or in one's interest, seems to us too plain for controversy. To obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service, within the meaning of the statute, it is not necessary that there should be a physical obstruction. Anything which impedes, hinders, retards, restrains, or puts an obstacle in the way of recruiting is sufficient. In granting the stay of the injunction until this case could be heard in this court upon the appeal Judge Hough declared that:

"It is at least arguable whether there can be any more direct incitement to action than to hold up to admiration those who do act. Oratio obliqua has always been preferred by rhetoricians to oratio recta; the Beatitudes have for some centuries been considered highly hortatory, though they do not contain the injunction, 'Go thou and do likewise.'"

With this statement we fully agree. Moreover, it is not necessary that an incitement to crime must be direct. At common law the "counseling" which constituted one an accessory before the fact might be indirect. See Wharton's Criminal Law (11th Ed.) § 266. Bishop lays down the rule thus:

"Every man is responsible criminally for what of wrong flows directly from his corrupt intentions. . . . If he awoke into action an indiscriminate power, he is responsible. If he gave directions vaguely and incautiously, and the person receiving them acted according to what he might have foreseen would be the understanding, he is responsible." 1 Bishop on Criminal Law, § 641.

And in Reg. v. Sharpe, 3 Cox's C. C. (Eng.) 288, it is laid down that:

"He who inflames people's minds and induces them by violent means, to accomplish an illegal object, is himself a rioter, though he take no part in the riot."

In conclusion, we are satisfied that the publication involved contains no matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States, in violation of section 2 of title 12. The Postmaster General's exclusion of the publication from the mails is not put on the ground that it contained any such matter. It is not so clear that the publication is free from matter which involves an attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty in the military or naval forces of the United States. [39] The Postmaster General thought it contained matter objectionable on that ground, and a difference of opinion upon that phase of the matter is possible.

The question whether the publication contained matter intended willfully to obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service is less doubtful. Indeed, the court does not hesitate to say that, considering the natural and reasonable effect of the publication, it was intended willfully to obstruct recruiting; and even though we were not convinced that any such intent existed, and were in doubt concerning it, the case would be governed by the principle that the head of a department of the government in a doubtful case will not be overruled by the courts in a matter which involves his judgment and discretion, and which is within his jurisdiction.

The order granting the preliminary injunction is reversed.

WARD, J. (concurring).—I think the sole ground on which the order of the Postmaster General can be sustained is that some parts of the August number of The Masses were intended to obstruct, and do obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States. This involves a conclusion of fact to be drawn by him from the cartoons and text of this particular number. Advice to resist the law may be indirect as well as direct, and the conclusion of the Postmaster General in matters of fact, whether we agree with him or not, is final. I think it important, however, to say that not every writing, the indirect effect of which is to discourage recruiting or enlistment, is within the statute. In addition to the natural effect of the language on the reader, the intention to discourage is essential. Arguments in favor of immediate peace, or in favor of repealing the Conscription Act, do this indirectly. It is, notwithstanding, the constitutional right of every citizen to express such opinions, both orally and in writing, and Congress cannot be presumed to have intended by the Espionage Act to authorize the Postmaster General to exclude such articles, written honestly and without the intention of advising resistance to the law. His authority in the premises depends exclusively upon the statute, as was well stated by Mr. Justice Peckham in American School of Magnetic School of Healing v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S. 109, 23 S. Ct. 39, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 90.

"Here it is contended that the Postmaster General has, in a case not covered by the acts of Congress, excluded from the mails letters addressed to the complainants. His right to exclude letters, or to refuse to permit their delivery to persons addressed, must depend upon some law of Congress, and, if no such law exist, then he cannot exclude or refuse to deliver them. Conceding, arguendo, that when a question of fact arises, which, if found in one way, would show a violation of the statutes in question in some particular, the decision of the Postmaster General that such violation had occurred, based upon some evidence to that effect, would be conclusive and final, and not the subject of review by any court, yet to that assumption must be added the statement that if the evidence before the Postmaster General, in any view of the facts, failed to show a violation of any federal law, the determination of that official that such violation existed would not be the determination of a question of fact, but a pure mistake of law on his part, because the facts being conceded, whether they amounted to a violation of the statutes, would be a legal question and not a question of fact."

NOTE.

Nature and Scope of War Power.

Generally.

The war power, as that term is used in the present discussion, is the legislative power which Congress possesses as an incident to the expressly granted power to declare war. A few cases as to the power of a state legislature in aid of the prosecution of war are, however, included. This note is confined to the war power as applied to citizens, the legislative power with respect to alien enemies being discussed in the note to Daimler Co. v. Continental Tyre, etc. Co. Ann. Cas. 1917C 170. The power to declare martial law and the powers of the military commander resulting from such a declaration are treated in the note to State v. Brown, Ann. Cas. 1914C 1; the powers of a military commander over the persons and property of civilians in time of public war are considered in the note to Hartfield v. Graham, Ann. Cas. 1917C 1; and the power to make military service compulsory is discussed in the note to Rex v. Morn Hill Camp, Ann. Cas. 1917C 809. See also Selective Draft Law Cases, reported in full, ante, this volume, at page 856.

"The Constitution vests in Congress plenary war powers. Congress can begin, carry on, and terminate wars, . . . without any express limit as to time, means or manner." Tod v. Fairfield County Ct. 15 Ohio St. 389.

"The war power resides in the nation's right of self-preservation,—the preservation not only of itself but of all its citizens." U. S. v. Casey, 247 Fed. 362. So in Story v. Perkins, 243 Fed. 997, it was said: "After the enumeration of the powers of Congress, among them, as we have seen, 'the power to raise and support armies,' in clause 18 of article 1, § 8, it provides the power 'to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or office thereof.' Here is the great reservoir of power to save the national existence."

In McCormick v. Humphrey, 27 Ind. 144, the court said: "Congress, under the Constitution, has the power 'to declare war,' and to provide for calling forth the militia 'to suppress insurrection.' The executive power of the government is vested in the President, by the Constitution, and he is made the commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several states, when called into the actual service of the United States. When Congress declares war, by that declaration it puts in force the laws of war, and the war powers of the government, which are not to be exercised, under the Constitution, in time of peace, now come into full force, by virtue of the Constitution, and are to be exerted by the President and Congress. After the declaration of war, every act done in carrying on the war, is an act done by virtue of the Constitution, which authorized the war to be commenced. Every measure of Congress, and every executive act performed by the President, intended and calculated to carry the war to a successful issue, are acts done under the Constitution; whether the act or the measure be for the raising of money to support armies, or a declaration of freedom to fill their ranks and weaken the enemy; whether it be the organization of military tribunals to try traitors, or the destruction of their property by the advancing army, without due process of law; and the validity of such acts must be determined by the Constitution. Having, by the Constitution, the power to declare war, it follows that, in the language of Chief Justice Marshall, 'Congress must possess the choice of means, and must be empowered to use any means which are, in fact, conducive to the exercise of a power granted by the Constitution.'

The war power was defined yet more broadly in Merchants', etc. Bank v. Union Bank, 25 La. 387, the court saying: "In the exercise of war powers the United States is not restrained by the limitations which the Constitution imposes on it as a sovereign. Its business as a warrior is to conquer, to restore peace, and to maintain the government; and it can use any means necessary to that end, regardless of all restraints except the law of nations." That statement, however, is apparently inconsistent with the dictum in Ex p. Milligan, 4 Wall. 4, 18 U. S. (L. ed.) 281, that "the Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people equally in war and in peace" to which, however, the court added that "the government within the Constitution has all the powers granted to it which are necessary to preserve its existence as has been happily proved by the result of the great effort to throw off its just authority."

The congressional war power may, without infringing on the reserved right of the states, extend to the most minute regulation of conduct. U. S. v. Casey, 247 Fed. 362. It is not subject to interference by a state government. Tarble's Case, 13 Wall. 397, 20 U. S. (L. ed.) 597, wherein the court said: "Congress has . . . the power 'to raise and support armies,' and the power 'to provide for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.' The execution of these powers falls within the line of its duties; and its control over the subject is plenary and exclusive. It can determine, without question from any state authority, how the armies shall be raised, whether by voluntary enlistment or forced draft, the age at which the soldier shall be received, and the period for which he shall be taken, the compensation he shall be allowed, and the service to which he shall be assigned. And it can provide the rules for the government and regulation of the forces after they are raised, define what shall constitute military offenses, and prescribe their punishment. No interference with the execution of this power of the national government in the formation, organization, and government of its armies by any state officials could be permitted without greatly impairing the efficiency, if it did not utterly destroy, this branch of the public service. Probably in every county and city in the several states there are one or more officers authorized by law to issue writs of habeas corpus on behalf of persons alleged to be illegally restrained of their liberty; and if soldiers could be taken from the army of the United States, and the validity of their enlistment inquired into by any one of these officers, such proceeding could be taken by all of them, and no movement could be made by the national troops without their commanders being subjected to constant annoyance and embarrassment from this source. The experience of the late rebellion has shown us that, in times of great popular excitement, there may be found in every state large numbers ready and anxious to embarrass the operations of the government, and easily persuaded to believe every step taken for the enforcement of its authority illegal and void. Power to issue writs of habeas corpus for the discharge of soldiers in the military service, in the hands of parties thus disposed, might be used, and often would be used, to the great detriment of the public service. In many exigencies the measures of the national government might in this way be entirely bereft of their efficacy and value. An appeal in such cases to this court, to correct the erroneous action of these officers, would afford no adequate remedy. Proceedings on habeas corpus are summary, and the delay incident to bringing the decision of a state officer, through the highest tribunal of the state, to this court for review, would necessarily occupy years, and in the meantime, where the soldier was discharged, the mischief would be accomplished. It is manifest that the powers of the national government could not be exercised with energy and efficiency at all times, if its acts could be interfered with and controlled for any period by officers or tribunals of another sovereignty."

Not only may the congressional power be exercised directly, but discretionary powers may be delegated to the executive or to state officials. Selective Draft Law Cases, reported ante, this volume, at page 856. So in U. S. v. Stephens, 245 Fed. 957, it was said: "Large discretionary powers in carrying into execution the general scheme or plan defined by Congress properly were conferred upon the President as the chief executive and commander of the army with respect to the choice of means and other details. Legislative treatment of such matters with the requisite particularity and with reference to varying conditions and exigencies is impracticable, and committing them to the executive branch of government is not to be treated as a delegation of legislative power. There is nothing novel or repugnant to the Constitution in thus disposing of them."

Particular Measures.

The provision of the Espionage Law (Act June 15, 1917, title 12, § 2, Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 16) that any letter, book, newspaper or the like "advocating or urging treason, insurrection or forcible resistance to any law of the United States" is nonmailable, is sustained in the reported case as a valid exercise of the war power. See also Jeffersonian Pub. Co. v. West, 245 Fed. 585.

In U. S. v. Pierce, 245 Fed. 878, the provision of the Espionage Act (title 1, § 3, Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 16, p. 10) penalizing the wilful obstruction of enlistment or recruiting was sustained, the court saying: "The act of Congress in question here is one obviously enacted and necessary for the preservation of our government and the enforcement of its rights. In my judgment to deny its constitutionality is to deny to the government of the United States the power of self-preservation by suppressing the publication and distribution of false statements made with the intent to destroy the morale and efficiency of our armies when engaged in lawful warfare, and prevent or interfere with their lawful organization and the lawful recruiting thereof. Such publications give aid and comfort to the enemy. If a jury on evidence should find that this pamphlet contains false statements calculated to discourage our armies and enlisted men, discourage compliance with our draft laws, and interfere with their enforcement, or impair the morale of our armies, and that it was the intent of the writer and distributor to bring about such results, can it be justified on the theory that our Constitution warrants and protects the making of such false statements disseminated for such a purpose? I think not. Freedom of speech and of the press does not give liberty to the individual to prevent or interfere with the preservation of our government, or the organization and success of our armies, and this may not be done under the guise of advocating the principles of a political party or the principles of Socialism." In U. S. v. Sugarman, 245 Fed. 604, the provision in the same section with reference to attempts to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny or refusal of duty in the military or naval forces was upheld.

In upholding the validity of the Selective Draft Law (Act May 18, 1917, Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 85) the court in Selective Draft Law Cases, reported ante, this volume, at page 856, sustained several convictions under the sixth section for aiding or encouraging violations of that act. See also U. S. v. Sugar, 243 Fed. 423; Story v. Perkins, 243 Fed. 997; U. S. v. Sugarman, 245 Fed. 604; U. S. v. Stephens, 245 Fed. 956; Angelus v. Sullivan, 246 Fed. 54. Compare U. S. v. Baker, 247 Fed. 124, wherein certain conduct was held not to amount to a violation of the act.

In U. S. v. Casey, 247 Fed. 362, a regulation made by the secretary of war under the thirteenth section of the Selective Draft Act (Fed. St. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 11, p. 92) forbidding the keeping of a house of ill fame within five miles of a military camp was held to be valid. The court said: "Does the act in question contemplate national self-preservation? To ascertain its purpose, other pertinent provisions may be considered. It provides by voluntary enlistment and conscription for the raising, organizing, and equipping of a great army to prosecute against a powerful enemy a war provoked by repeated wrongs inflicted on us as a nation. Good order, subordination, and efficiency are nowhere so necessary to national protection as in the army. To insure these qualities section 12 of the act declares that the President may make such regulations governing the prohibition of alcoholic liquors in or near military camps, and to the officers and enlisted men of the army, as he from time to time may deem necessary or advisable; that no person, natural or artificial, shall sell or supply or have in his possession any intoxicating or spirituous liquors at any military station, cantonment, camp, fort, post, officers' or enlisted men's club, in use at the time for military purposes under the statute, but that the secretary of war may prescribe regulations permitting the sale and use of intoxicants for medicinal purposes; and that it shall be unlawful and a punishable offense to sell any intoxicating liquors, including beer, ale or wine, to any officer or member of the military forces while in uniform, except as in the act provided. Section 13 authorizes, empowers, and directs the secretary of war during the present war to do everything by him deemed necessary to suppress and prevent the keeping and setting up of houses of ill fame, brothels, and bawdyhouses within such distance as he may deem needful of any military camp, station, fort, post, cantonment, or training or mobilization place, and declares that any person, natural or artificial, receiving or permitting to be received for immoral purposes any person into any place, structure, or building used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution, within the distance so designated, or shall permit any such person to remain for immoral purposes in any of such places, so designated, or who shall violate the regulation promulgated by the secretary of war to carry out the object and purpose of such section, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both. The statute was framed in recognition of the fact that the greatest efficiency attainable by an army depends upon the sobriety, healthfulness, and high moral tone of the soldiers composing it. Soldiers addicted to the use or under the influence of liquor are less orderly, less obedient, less competent to discharge their duties, and more prone to disease than when in their normal condition. If afflicted by any of the loathsome diseases which may be contracted in bawdyhouses, they are not only unfitted temporarily at least for the performance of duties, but in some instances, on account of the communicability of such diseases, become a menace to those with whom they are associated. The nation, for its safety, is entitled at all times to the best service of which its soldiers and all of its soldiers are capable. This praiseworthy statute also operates for economy and for the safety of our soldiers and is a pledge to their relatives and friends that they shall be so cared for as will not only best protect their country, but also themselves in times of peril, and that they will not be returned home, dissolute in habits, addicted to drink, or victims of foul infectious disease. Congress, in the legitimate exercise of the war powers vested in it by the Constitution, has declared that, inasmuch as the efficiency, good health, and sound morals of the army are conducive to the preservation of the nation, restrictions upon the sale of intoxicants, and the discontinuance of houses of ill fame, bawdyhouses, and brothels, as a means to that end, are necessary within given territorial limits during the existence of the present war, and its enactment is the supreme law of the land. In answer to the argument that the power to establish the ordinary regulations of police has been left to the individual states, and cannot be assumed by the national government, it is sufficient to say that the statute here assailed rests, not upon the police power, but upon the war power, conferred on Congress and recognized by the law of nations."

In a few recent cases state acts in aid of the prosecution of war have been sustained. Thus in People v. Sisson, 167 N. Y. S. 801, in sustaining a state law forbidding the sale of intoxicants near military camps, arsenals and the like, it was said: "Accustomed, as we have become, to the war powers of the federal government, we are not to overlook the unquestioned war powers still residing in the state. While the state cannot declare war, or in itself carry it on, it is bound to render loyal aid to the general government in the effective prosecution of the war. After raising the military and industrial personnel, it is still under a duty to safeguard them from evil influence, even when its citizens have been mustered into the federal military service. The state has also in good faith to co-operate in the national policies for war efficiency. In the corresponding English statute, industrial protection from the sale of intoxicants is put before the demands of the military service. By orders in council, an area may be set off which will be subject to regulation, excluding all but the government from such liquor traffic, and imposing other restrictions, if it appear expedient, 'on the ground that war material is being made, or loaded, or unloaded, or dealt with in transit, in the area, or that men belonging to his majesty's naval or military service are assembled in the area.' Stat. 5 & 6 Geo. V, c. 42, p. 79. To win this war, the industrial army in factory, mill, and shipyard may become as necessary as the forces in the field. Industrial masses, not having been under military training, however, are therefore in greater need of protection. The state shares with the general government in the duty to safeguard the men taken from their homes, mustered into the federal service, and assembled in military camps. But the number, which is now greater, gathered in war industries, are, for the present, dependent for their protection upon the power of the state alone."

In Cook v. Burnquist, 242 Fed. 321, there was involved an order of the Minnesota commission of public safety, appointed under an act providing as follows: "In the event of war existing between the United States and any foreign nation, such commission shall have power to do all acts and things non-inconsistent with the constitution or laws of the state of Minnesota or of the United States, which are necessary or proper for the public safety and for the protection of life and public property or private property of a character as in the judgment of the commission requires protection, and shall do and perform all acts and things necessary or proper so that the military, civil and industrial resources of the state may be most efficiently applied toward maintenance of the defense of the state and nation and toward the successful prosecution of such war, and to that end it shall have all necessary power not herein specifically enumerated and in addition thereto the following specific powers," etc. The order in question required the closing of saloons at an hour earlier than that fixed by the statutes of the state. Sustaining the order, the court said: "That section contemplates several ends to be attained: First, the public safety is to be guarded. Protection is to be afforded to life and public property, and also to private property of such a character as in the judgment of the commission requires protection, and, further, the commission is ordered to do all acts and things necessary or proper so that the military, civil and industrial resources of the state may be most efficiently applied for the maintenance of the defense of the state and nation, and toward the successful prosecution of such war. No attempt has been made here to show that the acts which are sought to be accomplished by order No. 7 are not germane to the purposes set forth in section 3, namely, public safety and the protection of life and property, and the application of the resources of the state to accomplish certain ends. I take it that no attack can successfully be made along that line, because it goes without saying that the order here in question, if it were carried out, would have some relation at least, whether direct or indirect, to the ends sought to be attained; that is, public safety, and the protection of life and property, and the application of the resources of the state to the specific purposes. In fact, it can hardly be disputed that the relation would be direct, and the effect substantial. Nor do I think that the issuance of order No. 7 is without the purview of the provisions of chapter 261. In my judgment, said order is within special power No. 3 in section 3 of the act, and also within the powers granted in the first paragraph of section 3 of the act. The words 'noninconsistent with the laws of the state of Minnesota,' contained in section 3, should not be given a narrow construction in view of the broad purposes of the act and the great emergency it was intended to meet. The words above quoted should rather be held to mean not inconsistent with the broad purposes, the underlying principles, and the fundamental requirements of the laws of Minnesota. With such a construction placed upon section 3, the order No. 7 is well within the purview of the act."

In State v. Hohm (Minn.) 166 N. W. 181, the court upheld a state law penalizing speech or conduct designed to discourage enlistment in the military or naval service of the United States, saying: "State statutes do not offend against the constitutional provisions cited unless they trench upon the power of the national government to raise troops, or interfere with or hinder the operation of the federal laws governing such matters. The statute here in question does neither; it merely prohibits advocating, within this state, that men should not enlist and should not aid in prosecuting the war against the public enemies. In enacting it as a police regulation, the legislature was well within its province. Neither do we think that the so-called Espionage Law of June 15, 1917, passed by Congress, abrogates or supersedes this statute. The citizens of the state are also citizens of the United States and owe a duty both to the state and to the United States. The state is a part of the nation and owes a duty to the nation to support, in full measure, the efforts of the national government to secure the safety and protect the rights of its citizens and to preserve, maintain, and enforce the sovereign rights of the nation against the public enemies, and to that end the state may require its citizens to refrain from any act which will interfere with or impede the national government in effectively prosecuting the war against such public enemies. It is the duty of all citizens of the state to aid the state in performing its duties as a part of the nation, and the fact that such citizens are also citizens of the United States and owe a direct duty to the nation does not absolve them from their duty to the state nor preclude the state from enforcing such duty."

BREWER ET AL.

v.

BROWNING ET AL.

Mississippi Supreme Court—July 2, 1917.

115 Miss. 358; 76 So. 267, 519.

Appeal and Error — Second Appeal — Review of Previous Holding.

While the supreme court will not ordinarily review its previous holding on a subsequent appeal, yet the so-called "law of the case" is not binding when clearly erroneous and leading to unjust results, especially where no rights have accrued in reliance upon the former decision.

Adoption — Inheritance by Adopted Child — What Law Governs.

Where a child was adopted in Kentucky, under whose laws it inherits land from its foster parent, and upon its decease in infancy without issue the land so inherited reverts to the next of kin of such foster parent, such inheritance rules do not violate the constitution or public policy of Mississippi, and will be applied to lands there situated.

[See note at end of this case.]

Stare Decisis — Power to Overrule Previous Decision.

Under Const. 1890, § 144, vesting the judicial power of the state in the supreme court and such other courts as are provided for in the constitution, and section 146, providing that the supreme court shall have such jurisdiction as properly belongs to a court of appeals, there is no constitutional restriction on the power of the supreme court to overrule or change decisions which in its opinion are erroneous or wrongful.

Propriety of Overruling Previous Decision.

The supreme court will overrule decided cases which operate to effect injustice or lead to wrong results, though decided by the great judges of the past.

Appeal from Chancery Court, Sunflower county: THOMAS, Chancellor.

Action by Earl Brewer et al., plaintiffs, against Agnes Browning et al., defendants. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Flowers, Brown, Chambers & Cooper for appellants.

D. M. Quinn, S. F. Davis and J. Holmes Baker for appellees.

[359] ETHERIDGE, J.—On the 15th day of July, 1901, Church W. Rule and his wife, Lula A. Rule, who were then living and having their domicile in Sunflower county, Miss., and then being without children, and being in the state of Kentucky, presumably on a visit there, on said date signed what is called in the record "articles of adoption." This adoption was signed jointly by Church W. Rule and his wife on the one part and the Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home, by its president, on the other part, by which Church W. Rule and his wife, Lula A. Rule, are said to have adopted a child, then about three years of age, and an inmate of said institution, named Lula May Browning. By said adoption the said Rule and wife obligated themselves to adopt the said infant, Lula May Browning, "and do hereby adopt said Lula May Browning, and covenant with said Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home that said Lula May Browning shall bear from this time forward the same legal relation to them as if she had been born unto them, and were their child, especially as to such property as would descend to her were she their child." After signing said articles of adoption, Church W. Rule and his wife took the said infant to their home in Sunflower county, Miss., and there it occupied the relation of child to them, and was treated by them as their child, up to the time of their deaths, respectively.

It appears that the Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home was chartered and incorporated by an act of the General Assembly of Kentucky, approved January 28, 1870 [360] (Laws 1869-70, chapter 197), and amended by an act approved January 31, 1880 (Laws 1879-80, chapter 108), and that by virtue of its charter it was invested with all the rights of parents and natural guardians of any child committed to its care, and that it was also empowered to permit any suitable person to adopt any child in its custody and control as their own child upon proper covenants in writing being executed by such persons and its president, and acknowledged by such persons and its president, and acknowledged or proven in the clerk's office of Jefferson county, Ky., as deeds may be, and by the amendment of 1880 to this charter it was provided that by the articles of adoption, when executed and recorded, "such child shall become the heir at law of such person so adopting him or her, and be as capable of inheriting as though he or she were the child of said person," etc. It appears also that the supreme court of Kentucky has held this act of incorporation constitutional, and that when this contract was executed it amounted there to a complete adoption, and authorized the child adopted to inherit as if it were the natural child of its parents.

On August 9, 1898, Mrs. M. J. Rule, the mother of Church W. Rule, died in Sunflower county, Miss., leaving a considerable body of land which descended upon her death to her children, one of whom was Church W. Rule. Church W. Rule died February 7, 1903, leaving his wife and the adopted child, Lula May Browning, but no children born to himself and wife. In 1903 there was a suit filed in the chancery court of Sunflower county for a partition of the lands left by Mrs. Mary J. Rule, mother of Church W. Rule, among the heirs then surviving, and the widow of Church W. Rule and Lula May Browning Rule were made parties. In this suit in the chancery court the bill of complaint filed contained the [361] following provision with reference to the position or status of Lula May Browning Rule, to wit:

"The said minor, Lula May Browning Rule, was never adopted by any proceedings in court according to the laws of the state of Mississippi, but said Church W. Rule and his wife, Lula A. Rule, made their certain contract in writing with Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home bearing date of 15th of July, 1901, executed in triplicate and signed by the said Church W. Rule and Lula A. Rule and the said Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home. By said contract it was agreed that the said Church W. Rule and his wife, Lula A. Rule, should adopt, and they did thereby adopt, said minor, whose name at that time was Lula May Browning, and that the said Lula May Browning should, from that time forth, bear the same relation to the said Church W. Rule and his wife, Lula A. Rule, as if she had been born unto them and were their child, especially as to such property as would descend to her if she were their child. Complainants file herewith a copy of this contract as a part of this bill, and mark the same 'Exhibit A.' Complainants allege that from that time up to the time of the death of the said Church W. Rule the said Church W. Rule and his said wife have had the care, custody, and control of the said minor, and the said child is now in the care and custody of said Lula A. Rule. Your complainants advise that by said articles of adoption, although there have been no proceedings in the court, the said child is entitled to have a child's part in the said estate of Church W. Rule, but complainant, Lula A. Rule, submits this question for decision of this court: 'The said Lula A. Rule is now the legally appointed guardian of the said Lula May Browning Rule. . . . It is asked that your honor may adjudicate whether the minor, Lula May Browning, has an interest in the said estate.' This bill of complaint being filed by Lula A. [362] Rule and others in cause No. 1100 of the chancery court docket of Sunflower county, Miss."

The prayer of the bill, among other things, asks that "your honor may adjudicate whether the said Lula May Browning Rule has an interest in the said estate." A guardian ad litem was appointed for the minors in the suit, including Lula May Browning Rule, and the answers of the guardian ad litem submitting the interests of the minors to the protection of the court and praying that the allegations of the bill be required to be substantiated by strictly legal proof. The Chancellor rendered a written opinion in which he held that Lula May Rule was in fact adopted by Church W. Rule and his wife, and as such adopted child inherited one-half of the estate and lands in Mississippi of Church W. Rule, and in the decree of partition set apart one of the four shares to Lula A. Rule and her adopted child, Lula May Rule, and from this decree there was no appeal prosecuted, and the right to an appeal has long since been barred by the statute of limitations. After this decree, and on the 29th day of November, 1905, the infant, Lula May Browning Rule, died. Mrs. Lula A. Rule, after the death of Church W. Rule, married one J. B. Fisher, and after such marriage Lula A. Rule Fisher, formerly the wife of Church W. Rule, died leaving her husband, J. B. Fisher, who was one of the parties to the former appeal in this cause, but who since said appeal has disposed of his interests and claims to other appellants in this case. Subsequently to the death of Lula A. Rule Fisher, the brothers and sisters by natural blood of Lula May Browning Rule filed their bill in the chancery court, praying for a partition of the lands set apart to Lula A. Rule and Lula May Browning Rule by the cause No. 1100 jointly to be divided between the brothers and sisters of Lula May Browning Rule by the blood, and the appellants are original defendants in said suit. This bill for a partition [363] came on for hearing in the chancery court of Sunflower county, Miss., and the chancellor adjudged that the brothers and sisters of the blood of Lula May Browning Rule would inherit her interest in the said lands to the exclusion of Lula A. Rule Fisher and her heirs, and ordered a partition of the said property in accordance with the prayer of the bill, which order an interlocutory appeal was allowed to this court, and was decided by this court in the case of Fisher v. Browning, 107 Miss. 729, Ann. Cas. 1917C 466, 66 So. 132, in which opinion this court, as then constituted, adjudged that the decree of the chancellor in cause No. 1100 in Sunflower county adjudicated that Lula May Browning Rule inherited one-half of the estate of Church W. Rule, and that said judgment constituted res adjudicata, but decided that the chancellor was wrong in holding in that cause that Lula May Browning Rule was entitled to inherit from Church W. Rule as to lands under the laws of the state of Mississippi, and that the public policy of Mississippi with reference to inheritance of lands would be violated by adoption of a rule of comity as applied to adopted children in Kentucky, permitting them to inherit as heirs under the laws of this state. They also held that the property allotted to the said Lula May Browning Rule should go to the sisters and brothers of the blood to the exclusion of the adopting parent, Mrs. Lula A. Rule Fisher, and her heirs. The cause was remanded for further proceedings, and partition was made in accordance with the former decree reported to the court and confirmed, and final appeal is prosecuted here from that decree.

Several questions are presented now for consideration, among which the following may be stated: Is the opinion of this court on the former appeal conclusive on the court now under the doctrine of the law of the case? Second. If not, was Lula May Browning entitled to inherit from the adopted parents, Church W. Rule and [364] Lula A. Rule? Third. If she was, would the property inherited at the time of her death go to the brothers and sisters of the blood, or would it go to the adopted mother and her heirs to the exclusion of the sisters and brothers of the blood?

As to the first ground, whether or not the former decision of this court constitutes the law of the case in such sense as this court on this appeal is bound to follow it is not free from difficulty because of the well-recognized rule that the court, ordinarily, after having laid down principles governing a case on one appeal, will not review its holdings on a subsequent appeal, but will ordinarily adhere to its former decision and not inquire into its correctness. We do not think, however, that this rule is so fixed and binding upon the court that it may not depart from its former decision on a subsequent appeal if the former decision in its judgment after mature consideration is erroneous and wrongful and would lead to unjust results. Where the facts are the same, and where there has been no change of conditions or situations as that a change of decision would work wrong and injustice, the court may, on the subsequent appeal, correct its former decision where it is manifestly wrong. In the present case there is no such change of condition as would inflict any hardship upon any party or person, and we are satisfied that the court reached the wrong conclusion in its former opinion. This court has, on more than one occasion, departed from its first announcement on subsequent appeal of the same case where there had been no change of conditions, or accrual of other rights that would be harmed or prejudiced by the other decision. In Maxwell v. Harkleroad, 77 Miss. 456, 27 So. 990, this court said:

"It is further, in justice to the learned chancellor below, to be said that the decree rendered by him was induced by the opinion (formerly delivered by the writer [365] hereof) of this court. It is not a duty merely, but a pleasure, to correct error at the earliest possible moment, and we are glad of the opportunity to do this in this case, while it is still pending undetermined."

See also 2 R. C. L. p. 226, section 188, where it is said:

"The better rule, and that more in accord with justice, is that, though ordinarily a question considered and determined in the appeal is deemed to be settled and not open to re-examination, on a second appeal it is not an inflexible rule, and if the prior decision is palpably erroneous, it is competent for the court to correct it on the second appeal."

See also Missouri, etc. R. Co. v. Merrill, 65 Kan. 436, 70 Pac. 358, 59 L.R.A. 711, 98 Am. St. Rep. 287, where Justice Smith, speaking for the court, says:

"Counsel for defendant in error . . . insists that the former decision must govern on the second appeal. This would come to us with more force if we were not now considering the same case with the same parties before the court. If an erroneous decision has been made, it ought to be corrected speedily, especially when it can be done before the litigation in which the error has been committed has terminated finally."

See also Ellison v. Georgia R. Co. 87 Ga. 691, 13 S. E. 809 (where Bleckley, C. J., says: "The only treatment for a great and glaring error affecting the current administration of justice in all courts of original jurisdiction is to correct it. When an error of this magnitude, and which moves in so wide an orbit, competes with truth in the struggle for existence, the maxim for a supreme court, supreme in the majesty of duty as well as in the majesty of power, is not 'Stare decisis,' but 'Fiat justitia ruat coelum' [Let right be done, though the heavens should fall]"); Messinger v. Anderson, 225 U. S. 436, 32 S. Ct. 740, 56 U. S. (L. ed.) 1152 (where the supreme court of the United States said: "In the absence of statute, the phrase 'law of the case,' as applied to the effect of previous orders on the later action of the court rendering [366] them in the same case merely expresses the practice of courts generally to refuse to reopen what has been decided—not a limit to their power"); King v. West Virginia, 216 U. S. 101, 30 S. Ct. 225, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 401; Remington v. Central Pac. R. Co. 198 U. S. 100, 25 S. Ct. 577, 49 U. S. (L. ed.) 963.

The opinion of Cook, J., in Johnson v. Success Brick Machinery Co. 104 Miss. 217, 61 So. 178, 62 So. 4, is pressed on us as being conclusive on us on the law of the case as applied to this appeal. We think the language used in that opinion as to the binding effect of a decision on first appeal is too broad. We do not approve of that portion of the opinion which states:

"If the decision of the court upon the original appeal was made upon a record which, in all substantial particulars was the same as now before us, we must decide now as we decided then, however wrong we may believe the court was in the first instance. This is the law, and we do not question its wisdom; nor do we wish to evade rules in order to right a real or imaginary wrong."

We think courts are created and maintained and sworn to administer justice, and not to adhere strictly to arbitrary rules. When a rule of decision defeats justice or seriously impairs it, it should be departed from rather than followed. Rules are made to secure justice, not defeat it. We think the rule of "the law of the case" is a good rule of practice, and should be followed, except in rare cases where the decision is manifestly and palpably erroneous and to follow it would result in grave injustice being done.

The decree of the chancellor in cause 1100, being res adjudicata, established the status of adoption between parent and child under the laws of Kentucky, and it was by virtue of this status so established by our state courts that the child took the one-half interest in the property of the deceased adoptive father; and by virtue of the same status the adoptive mother took the child's interest in the property at its death. If the adjudication [367] of the status by the chancellor in cause 1100 is res adjudicata, as held by Justice Owens in the former decision of this court, then such status should not be followed in part and ignored in part. The relation and status established should be observed throughout with reference to the descent of the property involved.

As to the second proposition as to whether or not Lulu May Browning Rule, the adopted child, was entitled under the facts stated to inherit from the adoptive parent Church W. Rule, the former opinion held that to permit such inheritance would violate the public policy of this state, and while, under the law of Kentucky the adoption had the effect of conferring upon the adopted child full capacity to inherit lands or personal property in Kentucky as a natural child, still it was contrary to the public policy of Mississippi for such child to inherit lands in Mississippi, and that the rule of comity would not require the state to adopt the Kentucky law upon that subject, or recognize the status of parent and child created under the laws of Kentucky by reason of the adoption. The court on this subject says:

"We recognize that the weight of authority and trend of modern decisions is to the effect that every other state will recognize the status of the state creating it, and will give effect to it just as if that status were created under the law of the state where it is invoked, but provided always that the status and the rights flowing from it are by laws of the state which are in harmony and consistent with the laws and public policy of the state where it is invoked, and that therefore Mississippi will recognize the status of the child, created in Kentucky, as the adopted child of Church W. Rule, and will enforce all the rights of the child in that situation here, provided the rights flowing from that adoption in Kentucky and the laws of that state on the same subject are not inconsistent with or opposed to the laws or public policy of this state on the same subject. . . . We do not believe, however, that this child was capacitated by the adoption in Kentucky [368] to inherit lands in Mississippi, because the laws of Kentucky are inconsistent with and antagonistic to our Constitution and laws on the same subject, and to the public policy of Mississippi on that subject, as such public policy is found in our statutes and Constitution, and for that reason we do not believe that Mississippi is bound to recognize this adoption by contract, as it was made in Kentucky, to be valid and binding in Mississippi as to confer upon the child the capacity to inherit lands in Mississippi."

If we understand the opinion in the former case, it holds that it would be inconsistent with the laws and Constitution of Mississippi for an adopted child to inherit lands under the statutes of Mississippi. The court seems to have been of the opinion that it was not possible for an adopted child, adopted under the laws of Mississippi, to inherit as an heir of the adopting parent. We are at loss to understand how the court reached this conclusion, in view of the previous decision of Adams v. Adams, reported in 102 Miss. 259, 59 So. 84 Ann. Cas. 1914D 235, where this court held that, where a petition was filed under the Code pertaining to the adoption of children, seeking the adoption of a minor, and a decree was entered providing that the custody of the minor be awarded to the adopting father, and that he be clothed with all the rights and bound by all the obligations with reference to said child as that of a parent, and that said child be clothed with all the rights and bound by all the obligations with reference to the adopting father and his estate, real and personal, at his death, as that of a daughter, and that the name of the child be changed to that of the adopting father, holding that such a decree under our laws creates a relationship of heir on the part of the adopted daughter. It is therefore not contrary of the Constitution, laws, and public policy of Mississippi for a person to adopt a child so as to make it an heir and capable of inheriting both real and personal property.

[369] In the case of Finley v. Brown, 122 Tenn. 316, 123 S. W. 359, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1285, the Tennessee court in an able opinion holds that a child adopted in one state under the law of comity has a right to inherit real estate situated in another state even as to lands. In the report of the L.R.A. there is a case note in which the learned editor of this series says:

"As indicated in those notes, the decision of the . . . court in Finley v. Brown, giving effect to the foreign adoption for the purposes of inheriting real estate in Tennessee, is sustained by the weight of authority in this country."

See also as supporting this doctrine, Warren v. Prescott, 84 Me. 433, 24 Atl. 948, 30 Am. St. Rep. 370, 17 L.R.A. 435, 65 L.R.A. 186, 8 L.R.A. 747; Hockaday v. Lynn, 200 Mo. 456, 9 Ann. Cas. 775, 98 S. W. 585, 118 Am. St.

Rep. 672, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 117; Fosburg v. Rogers, 114 Mo. 122, 21 S. W. 82, 19 L.R.A. 201; Nugent v. Powell, 4 Wyo. 173, 33 Pac. 23, 62 Am. St. Rep. 17, 20 L.R.A. 199; In re Johnson, 98 Cal. 531, 33 Pac. 460, 21 L.R.A. 380; Schiltz v. Roenitz, 86 Wis. 31, 56 N. W. 194, 39 Am. St. Rep. 873, 21 L.R.A. 483; Wright v. Wright, 99 Mich. 170, 58 N. W. 54, 23 L.R.A. 196; Van Matre v. Sankey, 148 Ill. 536, 36 N. E. 628, 39 Am. St. Rep. 196, 23 L.R.A. 665; Long v. Hess, 154 Ill. 482, 40 N. E. 335, 45 Am. St. Rep. 143, 27 L.R.A. 791; Murphy v. Portrum, 95 Tenn. 605, 32 S. W. 633, 30 L.R.A. 263; Gray v. Holmes, 57 Kan. 217, 47 Pac. 596, 33 L.R.A. 207; Hartwell v. Tefft, 19 R. I. 644, 35 Atl. 882, 34 L.R.A. 500; Humphries v. Davis, 100 Ind. 369.

In our view it would be unjust to both parent and child under the adoption made such by the law of one state in which they are given full right of parent and child to hold that the mere fact of moving to another state would upset and unsettle this relationship. It is of the upmost importance that the status of this character should be maintained so far as it is possible to do it without doing violence to the laws and institutions of the state wherein the parties have moved. It was undoubtedly the intention of Church W. Rule and his wife in adopting this child to give the child all the rights of a natural child and this intention should be carried out to the fullest extent permitted by the laws of this state. Under the Kentucky law the adopted child (adopted in the manner this one was), inherits from the adopting parent as a natural child and is for all legal intents and purposes the real child of the adopting parent, and under the laws of that state the adopting parents are the heirs of the adopted child in the case of the death of the child without issue and inherit from the child all property which it had derived from the [370] adopting parents or either of them. According to the construction of courts of Kentucky the identical contract here involved created the legal status of parent and child between Mr. and Mrs. Rule on the one part and Mary Browning on the other. If this is true in Kentucky, why is it not true also in Mississippi? We are unable to appreciate the idea that this state will not fully and completely recognize and enforce a status thus created in Kentucky. When we apply our laws to the Kentucky status we find no difficulty in defining the reciprocal rights of the parties to the articles of adoption. Lula May Browning inherits the property of her adopting father and mother, and why? Because she is their child in legal contemplation. When the child died intestate Mrs. Rule inherited her property, and why? Because Mrs. Rule in legal contemplation is the mother of the deceased child. There is no possible way in which Lula May Browning could have inherited the property in controversy except by reason of her legal status of daughter to her deceased father, Church W. Rule. The law of Kentucky has defined the status in a similar case as follows: By the event of adoption the adopted child becomes the lawful child of the adopting parent in the same light as a child born in lawful wedlock. The estate of a natural child which he inherits from his parent is defeated by his death in infancy without issue, and the property then goes back to the kindred of that adopting parent. The adopted child, inheriting as though he were the child of his foster parent, takes subject to the same limitation, and if he dies in infancy and without issue the property under the status descends to the kindred of that parent from whom he receives it. Lanferman v. Vanzile, 150 Ky. 751, 150 S. W. 1008, Ann. Cas. 1914D 563. See also In re Jobson, 164 Cal. 312, 128 Pac. 938, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062. So, we see that Lula May Browning by the event of adoption becomes the legal child of Church W. Rule and wife, the adopting parents, in the same light as a child born in lawful wedlock; and when she dies in infancy without issue, under the inheritance [371] laws of this state the property descends to her foster mother who survives her. We see no conflict, real or imaginary, between our laws and the laws of Kentucky on this subject. Under our laws the adopting parent may adopt the child fully and completely, or it may adopt it and limit its rights by a decree of court. In other words, under our statutes the parent can either adopt partially or totally, conferring or withholding benefits at his option but if he confers upon the child full benefits as though it were a natural child, there is nothing to prevent his so doing, and there can be no inconsistency between our law and the law of Kentucky as applied to the present adoption. If we treat the adoption in Kentucky as if it had been done in the chancery court of Mississippi, we find there is no greater right conferred there than may be conferred here. This construction appeals to us as natural justice entirely consistent with sound judicial construction. In fact when judicial construction is out of harmony with natural justice, the judicial reasoning should withstand the most careful scrutiny and analysis before it should prevail. The principal of reciprocal relations between parent and child is recognized and enforced by the Kentucky law. A foster child inherits from the foster parent, and when the foster child, inheriting from one of the foster parents, dies without issue, the surviving foster parent takes the property which the foster child received from the intestate foster parent because the surviving foster parent is in law the mother of the deceased.

In Wagner v. Varner, 50 Ia. 532, the court said that, upon the death of an adopted child intestate and without wife or descendant, may its heirs at law be sought in the family under which it was born or in the family of which it became a part by adoption? Has its relationship with its natural parents been disturbed by the act of adoption by which they relinquish all control over it and consent that it should become in law the child of others? So far as its rights of inheritance are concerned they probably extend to both families to the extent of entitling it to inherit [372] from both the adopting and natural parents. If the adopted child inherits property from the person on the theory that it is the legal child of such person, we are unable to see any reason why upon its death such property should not descend to the relationship of the child created by the adoption. It is more consistent with justice to hold that the property inherited by Lula May Browning Rule from Church W. Rule should go to that line of legal heirs through which it was derived. It seems to us that it best harmonizes with the public policy of the state to recognize to the full extent the rights conferred by adoption. Those who have no natural children should be encouraged to adopt some child who has no parents to take care of it and educate it, and as far as possible to make such adopted child the real child of the adopting parents. If the rule should be adopted in this state and adhered to that the property coming to the adopted child from the adopting parents should, on the death of the child, descend to strangers of the blood of the adopting parent, it would have a strong tendency to discourage the good work of the adopting parents in taking some, perhaps unfortunate, child and make it their very own, conferring upon it all the rights and privileges that could be conferred upon a child, and at the same time should the child unfortunately die, not to permit them to reinherit from the child that which they had, through motives of kindness and generosity, bestowed upon it.

Judge Freeman, the able annotator of the American State Reports, in a note to Van Matre v. Sankey [148 Ill. 536, 36 N. E. 628], 39 Am. St. Rep. 228, 229 [23 L.R.A. 665], in commenting upon decisions holding that the adopting parents could not inherit from the adopting child said:

"The vice of these decisions, in our judgment, lies in the fact that the courts making them gave too strict a construction to statutes of adoption, and were unwilling to concede that such statutes had any other object than to confer the benefit of heirship to the adopting parent upon the child adopted. The purpose of these statutes we [373] conceive to extend further than this, and, in effect, to take the child from its parents by birth, and to give it to the parents by adoption, and to create, as between it and such parents, the reciprocal rights and relations of parent and child, and to give to the former both the incidental and the direct advantages of parentage; and we therefore think that, upon the death of such child intestate and leaving estate which, by statute, vests in its parents, that the word 'parents,' as thus used, should be deemed to designate the adopting parents, rather than the parents by birth; for, under the law, it is the former, rather than the latter, who occupy the relation of parent to the child at the time of its death."

Judge Elliott, speaking for the supreme court of Indiana, in Humphries v. Davis, 100 Ind. 274, 50 Am. Rep. 788, uses this language:

It is, as we have seen, the legal status of the person respecting the subject that determines his legal rights. To again quote from Austin: "The law of persons is the law of status or conditions. . . . The rights and duties, capacities and incapacities, which constitute a status or condition, are commonly considerable in number and various in kind. . . . Such are the rights and duties, capacities and incapacities, of husband and wife, parent and child, guardian and ward." 2 Austin, Jurs. 709, 711. As the status of the surviving husband and adoptive father is that of father, his interest in the land which the deceased child held in virtue of the rights vested in it by adoption is that of a father, since it is of that property, as the subject, that the status of parent and child is predicated. This is a just as well as a logical result. It is not to be presumed that the legislature meant to violate logical rules by creating the legal relation of child without the corresponding one of parent, nor that they meant to thrust out the surviving husband and father for the benefit of a person that was a stranger to the ancestor who was the source of title."

[374] We, therefore, reach the conclusion that if Lula May Browning Rule, having inherited the property in this suit from her adopting father, Church W. Rule, and having died without issue, the property descends to that heir of Church W. Rule, to wit, his wife, who bore the relation of adopted mother to said Lula May Browning Rule. It follows that the complainants had no legal right to the property claimed in their bill, and were without right to file the suit for partition, and the case is reversed, bill of complaint dismissed, and judgment entered here for the appellants.

Reversed, and judgment here.

Cook, J., took no part in this decision.

SMITH, C. J. (dissenting).—Every question presented to us for decision by this record was expressly decided against appellants on the former appeal herein, and should not now be open to review, for it is a rule of general application, heretofore announced and acted upon over and over again by this court, that:

"The decision of an appellate court in a case is the law of that case on the points presented throughout all the subsequent proceedings in the case in both the trial and the appellate courts, and no question necessarily involved and decided on that appeal will be considered on a second appeal or writ of error in the same case, provided the facts and issues are substantially the same as those on which the first decision rested."

The res judicata and law of the case rules are very much akin, were formulated to accomplish the same object, and are each based "upon two grounds, embodied in various maxims of the common law; the one, public policy and necessity, which makes it to the interest of the state that there should be an end to litigation, 'interest reipublicae ut sit finis litum;' the other, the hardship on the individual that he should be vexed twice for the same cause, 'Nemo [375] debet bis vexari pro eadem causa.'" The first of these rules is followed in all jurisdictions where the common law prevails; the second is followed in the great majority of such jurisdictions, and in the language of the supreme court of the United States in Great Western Tel. Co. v. Burham, 162 U. S. 339, 16 S. Ct. 850, 40 U. S. (L. ed.) 991, is necessary to enable an appellate court to perform its duties satisfactorily and efficiently, which would be impossible of a question, once considered and decided by it, were to be litigated anew in the same case upon any and every subsequent appeal." One of the objects sought to be accomplished by the rule is to prevent exactly what has happened in this case, that is, the reversal of a former judgment solemnly rendered and thereafter acted upon as final solely because on the second appeal the personnel of the court has changed and the new judges differed with their predecessors as to the judgment which ought formerly to have been rendered. As was again said by the supreme court of the United States in Roberts v. Cooper, 20 How. 467, 15 U. S. (L. ed.) 969:

There would be no end to a suit if every obstinate litigant could, by repeated appeals, compel a court to listen to criticisms on their opinions, or speculate on chances from changes in its members."

Among the many cases in which the rule has been followed by this court are: McDonald v. Green, 9 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 138; Green v. McDonald, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 445; Smith v. Elder, 14 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 100; Bridgeforth v. Gray, 39 Miss. 136;

Swan v. Smith, 58 Miss. 875; Still v. Anderson, 63 Miss. 545; Nutt v. Knut, 84 Miss. 465, 36 So. 689; New York L. Ins. Co. v. McIntosh (Miss.) 46 So. 401; Johnson v. Success Brick Machinery Co. 104 Miss. 217, 61 So. 178, 62 So. 4; Supreme Lodge, etc. v. Hines, 109 Miss. 500, 68 So. 485; Cochran v. Latimer, 111 Miss. 192, 71 So. 316.

In the majority opinion the existence of the rule is admitted, but it is said that:

[376] "We do not think, however, that this rule is so fixed and binding upon the court that it may not depart from its former decision on subsequent appeal if the former decision in its judgment, after mature consideration, is erroneous and wrongful and would lead to unjust results."

This statement is in direct conflict with all of the former announcements of this court upon this subject, and it is founded upon a total misconception of the purpose sought to be accomplished by the rule, which is not to prevent the reversal of former judgments unless such judgments are erroneous and mischievous, but to cut off any inquiry at all into the rightfulness or wrongfulness thereof. On the second appeal in Swan v. Smith, 58 Miss. 875, the correctness of the judgment rendered on the first appeal was called in question by the appellant, and in responding thereto this court said:

"Even if our former decision on this point was wrong, it must be accepted as the law of this case."

Similar and even more emphatic language was used in Nutt v. Knut, 84 Miss. 465, 36 So. 689; New York L. Ins. Co. v. McIntosh (Miss.) 46 So. 401; Johnson v. Success Brick Machinery Co. 104 Miss. 217, 61 So. 178, 62 So. 4.

It is said, however, in the majority opinion that:

"This court has on more than one occasion departed from its first announcement on subsequent appeal of the same case where there had been no change of conditions, or accrual of other rights that would be harmed or prejudiced by the other decision."

But the only case cited in support of this statement is Maxwell v. Harkleroad, 77 Miss. 456, 27 So. 990. The law of the case rule was not involved on the second appeal in that case, and it constitutes no sort of authority for the statement that this court has heretofore departed therefrom. In that case a bill in chancery was filed by Harkleroad, as guardian, against Maxwell, a [377] former chancery clerk "who had ex officio been the guardian of Harkleroad's estate, . . . to recover excessive commissions retained by Maxwell as compensation for his services" as such guardian. The trial court sustained a demurrer to this bill and on appeal to this court that decree was reversed, the court holding that on the allegations of the bill complainants were entitled to recover. Afterwards, when the case came on to be heard in the trial court on its merits, the real facts upon which Maxwell predicated his claim to the commissions charged by him were then for the first time brought to the court's attention, from which it appeared that he was entitled to the commissions charged. The trial court having decided otherwise, its decree was again reversed on appeal, this court in so doing, among other things, saying:

"When the case was here before it was presented on demurrer, furnishing another of many illustrations of the unsatisfactory nature of such defense, when all the facts set up by answer would make clear the right decision. This guardian is entitled, as the facts now show, to the highest praise for exceptionally faithful and skillful management of this estate."

It clearly appears, therefore, that on the second appeal the case presented by the evidence was materially different from that presented by the allegations of the bill on the first, and no court, so far as I am aware, has ever held that the law of the case rule applies to such a situation. The simple truth of the matter is that the rule does not meet with the approval of the majority of the judges of this court as now constituted, and the opinion herein rendered by that majority, while professing not to do so, in fact repudiates the rule, overrules without giving any of them, save one, "even the cold courtesy of a passing glance," the long and unbroken line of decisions of this court announcing and following it, and aligns this court with those courts which determine whether a decision [378] rendered on a former appeal in the same case shall be adhered to solely by the rule of stare decisis, which rule "does not prevent a court from overruling a previous decision which shall appear to it to be plainly and palpably wrong, where this course can be taken without inflicting serious injury on any person, or where greater harm would result from following the erroneous decision than from reversing it." Black on Judicial Precedents, p. 199. I do not for a moment question the power of the court to overrule the cases establishing the law of the case rule, but I confidently assert that they ought not to be overruled if the principle of stare decisis is of any binding force, for he would be a bold man indeed who would assert that a rule is manifestly wrong which has met the approval of so many courts and is supported by so many long and unbroken lines of decisions as this rule has received and is supported, and who can say that more good will be accomplished by its rejection than by its retention.

Coming now to the former decision in this case, I shall attempt to show that, in so far as it holds that Mrs. Rule did not inherit the land here in controversy upon the death of Lula May Rule, it is not only not manifestly wrong, and, unless it is, it should not be here departed from, even under the rule announced by the majority opinion, but, on the contrary, that it is manifestly right.

In the beginning I desire to concede that our former opinion was wrong in so far as it holds that Lula May Rule did not inherit the land in controversy on the death of her adoptive father, Church W. Rule, but the ground upon which I shall base this concession is consistent with and supports my further opinion that upon the death of Lula May Rule the land was inherited from her, not by Mrs. Rule, her adoptive mother, but by her brothers and sisters. The criticism in the majority opinion upon our former decision that Lula May Rule did [379] not inherit this land upon the death of Church W. Rule, her adoptive father, is based upon a total misconception of the ground upon which that decision was based. That criticism is as follows:

"The court seems to have been of the opinion that it was not possible for an adopted child, adopted under the laws of Mississippi, to inherit as an heir of the adopting parent. We are at loss to understand how the court reached this conclusion in view of the previous decision of Adams v. Adams, reported in 102 Miss. 259, 59 So. 84, Ann. Cas. 1914D 235, where this court held," etc.

On the former appeal we not only did not intimate that we then entertained such an opinion, but expressly pointed out more than once that a child adopted in Mississippi can inherit property from its adoptive parents, provided the right so to do is conferred by the decree of adoption. The ground upon which we then proceeded was clearly stated in the following language:

"We do not believe, however, that this child was capacitated by the adoption in Kentucky to inherit lands in Mississippi, because the laws of Kentucky are inconsistent with and antagonistic to our Constitution and laws on the same subject, and to the public policy of Mississippi on that subject, as such public policy is found in our statutes and Constitution, and for that reason we do not believe that Mississippi is bound to recognize this adoption by contract, as it was made in Kentucky, to be valid and binding in Mississippi as to confer upon the child the capacity to inherit lands in Mississippi. Its status as an adopted child of Mr. and Mrs. Rule may be recognized here without recognizing its capacity to inherit lands, which is a wholly different thing."

The opinion then proceeded to specifically point out wherein we thought that the Kentucky statute was inconsistent [380] with and antagonistic to our Constitution and laws.

The right of inheritance is not a natural, but is a civil, right conferred by law, and in so far as real property is concerned it is universally held that it is determined solely by the law of the place where the property claimed to have been inherited is situated. This is but a branch of that broader universal rule that the title to real property must be determined by the lex rei sitae.

The right of one person to inherit land from another depends upon the relation in which such persons stands to that other, or, in other words, upon his status or condition, which status or condition must be determined by the law of the place where it was created (Smith v. Kelly, 23 Miss. 167, 55 Am. Dec. 87); and, second, upon whether a right of inheritance is conferred upon persons having such status by the law of the place where the land is situated. The status created in one state will be recognized in all other states, provided it is not such as is inconsistent with the laws and public policy of such other states, but such right of inheritance only will attach thereto in such other states to land there situated as would attach had such status been created by the laws thereof. 1 C. J. 1402; 1 R. C. L. 615; Ross v. Ross, 129 Mass. 246, 37 Am. Rep. 321; Finley v. Brown, 122 Tenn. 316, 123 S. W. 359, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1285; Gray v. Holmes, 57 Kan. 217, 45 Pac. 596, 33 L.R.A. 207; Van Matre v. Sankey, 148 Ill. 536, 36 N. E. 628, 23 L.R.A. 665, 39 Am. St. Rep. 196; McColpin v. McColpin (Tex.) 77 S. W. 238; Shick v. Howe, 137 Ia. 249, 114 N. W. 916, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 980; Melvin v. Martin, 18 R. I. 650, 30 Atl. 467; Smith v. Derr, 34 Pa. St. 126, 75 Am. Dec. 641; Lingen v. Lingen, 45 Ala. 410; Calhoun v. Bryant, 28 S. D. 266, 133 N. W. 206.

The status here claimed for Mrs. Rule and her adopted daughter, which status in fact unquestionably existed, [381] was that created by the adoption of Lula May Browning by the Rules in the state of Kentucky. The right to adopt the child of another is, in all common-law jurisdictions, created solely by statutes, which statutes are also the measure of the rights and obligations springing from such an adoption (Villier v. Watson, 168 Ky. 637, 182 S. W. 869), and the courts, under the most elementary principles, are without rightful power to add thereto or detract therefrom.

From these elementary rules, which have heretofore been uniformly acted upon by this court in dealing with the status created by the marital relations, the birth of children, etc., and which are equally binding in a case wherein the status is that created by the adoption of a child, it necessarily follows:

First, as is held by the great weight of authority, that Lula May Rule inherited the lands in controversy from her adoptive father, Church W. Rule, upon his death, provided the laws of this state permit children adopted under the laws thereof to inherit property from their adoptive parents; and, second, as is held by all of the courts that have dealt with the question, that Mrs. Rule did not inherit the land in controversy on the death of her adopted daughter, Lula May Rule, unless the laws of this state permit an adoptive parent to inherit property from an adopted child.

The statute which regulates the adoption of children in this state is section 542, Code 1906, as amended by chapter 185, Laws of 1910, and by it a child of another may be adopted by means of a proceeding in the chancery court, which, in its decree creating such an adoption, must specify the benefits which the adoptive parent proposes to confer upon the adopted child, to all of which such child shall be thereafter entitled, one of which benefits may be, as has heretofore been held by this court, the right to inherit property from the adoptive [382] parent. This statute, therefore, confers upon adopted children the right to inherit land from the adoptive parent, provided the decree of adoption so adjudges, from which it necessarily follows, under one of the rules hereinbefore set out, that a child adopted in another state in such manner as to give it there the right to inherit property from the adoptive father will be given such right here. In other words, section 542 of the Code provides for the inheriting of land by adopted children, and since Lula May Rule had that right under the laws of Kentucky by which her status as an adopted child was created, she will, under the rules hereinbefore announced, have the same right here, from which it, of course, follows that upon the death of her adoptive father she inherited a child's portion of the land of which he then died seised and possessed.

Coming now to the right of Mrs. Rule to inherit the land on the death of Lula May Rule, and, turning again to section 542 of the Code, it will be observed that no right of inheritance whatever is there conferred upon adoptive parents, the only right there conferred upon them being that they "shall have and exercise over such infant all such power and control as parents have over their own children," and, under well-settled and most elementary rules, this court has no rightful power to confer such a right upon them. In passing I will say that our statute in this respect does not stand alone among the statutes of the states, for practically all of them as originally drawn confer no such right upon adoptive parents, though some of them now by amendment do so. Section 1649 of the Code confers no such right, for the parents and the children there dealt with are natural and not adoptive parents and children. Since no such right of inheritance is conferred by the laws of this state upon adoptive parents, it necessarily follows under the rules hereinbefore [383] set forth that adoptive parents who become such under the laws of another state have no such right here, even if the laws of such other state give them such a right. The majority opinion cites no authority to the contrary, and one, I confidently assert, can be found.

The ground upon which the majority opinion, in this connection proceeds is: First, under the laws of Kentucky Lula May Browning, because of her adoption by the Rules in that state, became their lawful child "in the same light as a child born in lawful wedlock;" and, second, by reason thereof, when she dies [died] in infancy without issue, under the inheritance laws of this state, the property descends [descended] to her foster mother who survives [survived] her." It is said in that opinion that:

"Lula May Browning inherits the property of her adopting father and mother, and why? Because she is their child in legal contemplation. When the child died intestate Mrs. Rule inherited her property, and why? Because Mrs. Rule in legal contemplations is the mother of the deceased child."

No statute of this state or decision of any court is referred to in support of the second of these propositions, and it is based, in so far as I can gather from the opinion, upon the attempt by the majority to administer what they call natural justice, losing sight altogether of the universal rule that the right of inheritance is purely legal, and unless conferred by law does not exist. It may be conceded that in Kentucky the adoption of Lula May Browning created reciprocal rights of inheritance between her and her adoptive parents, but since our statutes recognize no such right in an adoptive parent such a right created under the Kentucky statutes cannot be given effect to in this state, for, as hereinbefore pointed out, no right to inherit land attaches to a status created in a state other than that [384] in which the land is situated, unless such right would attach thereto had such status been created in the state wherein the land is situated.

It may be that an adoptive parent may have the right to inherit from a child adopted under a statute which provides that the reciprocal relations between the adopted child and its adoptive parents shall be, for all purposes, identical with the relations that would have existed between them had the child been born to such parents in lawful wedlock, as to which I am not here called upon to express an opinion, for our statute contains no such provision, and no such relation is created by the adoption of a child under it. The contrary view was earnestly pressed upon and rejected by this court in Beaver v. Crump, 76 Miss. 34, 23 So. 432. In that case the appellants sought in the court below to establish their claim to an estate left by Seth A. Pool as his legal heirs, and to have the claim of the appellee thereto canceled as a cloud upon their title. The appellee made her answer a cross-bill, and claimed title to the property by inheritance from Pool, because of the fact that she was his adopted daughter, and prayed that if this claim should be rejected by the court, it would then decree the specific performance of a promise, made by Pool in the petition by which he procured from the court the decree of adoption, to devise to her the land in controversy. The decree of adoption, after reciting Pool's promise to devise the land, proceeds as follows:

"It is therefore considered, and so ordered by the courts, that the said petition be allowed, said adoption granted, and the name of said Alice Hulsey is hereby changed to Alice Hulsey Pool, and that she be entitled to all the benefits conferred and imposed by section 1496, Code of 1880, in that behalf made and approved."

[385] In support of their contention that under our statute the mere fact of adoption brings about the relation and status of parent and child, the brief of counsel for the appellee, after setting forth that "the law of adoption comes to us from the civil law, and to it we must go in order to give to our statute on the subject its proper construction," and citing the case of Humphreys v. Davis, so much relied on here in the majority opinion, proceeded as follows:

"By a careful examination of the authorities, fully collated in the two cases above given, it will be found that to adopt a minor means something—it brings about the relation and status of parent and child, with all of the obligations and liabilities, as well as all of the benefits, of such a relation. There cannot be a child without the correlative of a parent; where there is one, there is the other, with all that the relation means."

Had this argument prevailed with the court, the case would necessarily have been decided in the appellee's favor, but it did not prevail, and she lost. All the authorities hold, without conflict in so far as I am aware, that the adoption of a child does not vest any of the parties to the adoption with the right to inherit property from the others, unless the statute under which the proceeding is had so provides, either expressly or by necessary implication. The assumption here by the majority of the court that the Kentucky statute, under which this child was adopted, made her for all purposes the child of the Rules to the same extent that she would have been had she been born to them in lawful wedlock, so that she on the one side, and her adoptive parents on the other, became vested with reciprocal rights of inheritance, has no foundation in fact, as the supreme court of Kentucky has more than once held. What that court in fact has decided as to the rights of inheritance growing out of the adoption of a child under the [386] statutes of that state is this: That the adopted child and its issue have the same right of inheriting property from the adoptive parents as they would have had had the child adopted been born to the adoptive parents in lawful wedlock, but that the adoptive parents have no right whatever of inheriting property from the adopted child. Power v. Hafley, 85 Ky. 671, 4 S. W. 683; Atchison v. Atchison, 89 Ky. 488, 12 S. W. 942; Merritt v. Morton, 143 Ky. 133, 136 S. W. 133, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 139; Lanferman v. Vanzile, 150 Ky. 751, 150 S. W. 1008, Ann. Cas. 1914D 563.

The case last cited, Lanferman v. Vanzile, is the one here relied on by the majority of the court, and its conception of what the case held is set forth in a quotation therefrom. This quotation, however, does not appear in the majority opinion in the form in which the language was used by the Kentucky court, and makes the court appear to have decided just the converse of what it in fact did. The first sentence of this quotation as it appears here in the majority opinion is only a part of a sentence quoted by the Kentucky court, and set forth in its opinion at page 752 of 150 Ky. at page 1009 of 150 S. W. Ann. Cas. 1914D 563, in the official report, from an opinion formerly delivered by it in the case of Power v. Hafley, supra, and refers to the adoption statute. As formulated by that court the sentence reads as follows:

"That it is the event of adoption that fixes, under the law authorizing the adoption, the legal status of the adopted child; and the child, by the event of adoption, becomes the legal child of the adopting parent, and stands, as to the property of the adopting parent, in the same light as a child born in lawful wedlock, save in so far as the exceptions in the statute authorizing the adoption declare otherwise."

As it appears here in the majority opinion, it reads:

[387] "By the event of adoption [the adopted child] becomes the lawful child of the adopting parent, and stands, as to the property of the adopting parent, in the same light as a child born in lawful wedlock."

The next two sentences of the quotation are taken from page 751 of 150 Ky. page 1008, of 150 S. W. Ann. Cas. 1914D 563, in the official report of the case, and were used by the court in referring, not to the adoption statute, but to a section of the Kentucky statutes of descent and distribution, which places a limitation upon the estate which an infant receives from a parent by gift, devise, or inheritance, and which I shall presently specifically set out. In that case:

"Henry Lanferman and his first wife, Anna Lanferman, by a proceeding duly had, adopted, on June 12, 1891, Albert Uriage, who was then seventeen months old. His foster parents took him to their house, and reared and educated him as if he was their natural child, he being known as Albert Lanferman. They afterwards had three children of their own. The wife died intestate, and Henry Lanferman married a second time. He then died intestate, leaving property in the city of Covington. After the death of Henry Lanferman, the adopted child, Albert Lanferman, died unmarried and without issue, in infancy. A partition suit was instituted to divide the estate of Henry Lanferman among his three children. In this proceeding Clara Vanzile, the natural mother of the adopted child, Albert Lanferman, filed her petition, claiming that he took, at the death of his foster father, an undivided one-fourth of the estate, and that this one-fourth descended, at his death, to her. The three children of Henry Lanferman demurred to this pleading. The court overruled their demurrer, and, they failing to plead further, judgment was entered in favor of Mary Vanzile for one-fourth of the property. They appeal."

[388] The Kentucky statute (Ky. St. section 2071) under which the child had there been adopted provides for an adoption by petition to the circuit court which court shall declare "such person [the child adopted] heir at law of such petitioner and, as such, capable of inheriting as though such person were the child of such petitioner." The statute under which Lula May Rule was adopted provides that the child adopted "shall become the heir at law of such person so adopting him or her, and be as capable of inheriting as though he or she were the child of said person," so that everything there said is applicable here. The points made by counsel in the argument of the case do not appear from the report thereof, but it is said in the opinion of one of the justices who dissented from the majority on another proposition, that:

"It is not argued in the case at bar anywhere or by anybody that an adopting father has, by virtue of the statute, or by virtue of the relationship, assumed through the statute any right of inheritance from the adopted son such as a natural father would have. It is nowhere claimed that the adopting parent has any such right of inheritance as would a natural parent. It is not claimed anywhere that he is a 'parent' in the sense in which we commonly know that word. So far, therefore, it must be admitted by any reasoning mind that the one adopting is not the 'parent' of the adopted child in the sense that he takes under any statute or any law the right to inherit from the one whom he has adopted."

The majority opinion in that case proceeds on the assumption that this is true, and disposes of the question in the following language:

"It is also universally held, under similar statutes, that the person adopting a child does not thereby become capable of inheriting property from the child unless it is so provided in the statute."

[389] In the Kentucky statutes of descent and distribution appears a section which, as the Kentucky court has expressly held, deals not with the question of inheritance, but limits the estate of an infant in property received by it from a parent by gift, devise, or inheritance, and is as follows:

"If an infant dies without issue, having the title to real estate derived by gift, devise or descent from one of his parents, the whole shall descend to that parent and his or her kindred as hereinbefore directed, if there is any; and if none, then in like manner to the other parent and his or her kindred; but the kindred of one shall not be so excluded by the kindred of the other parent, if the latter is more remote than the grandfather, grandmother, uncles and aunts of the intestate and their descendants." Ky. St. section 1401.

The court, after holding that an adoptive parent has no right in inheritance in the property of an adopted child by virtue of the Kentucky adoption statutes, proceeded to determine what effect this statute limiting the estate received by an infant from its parent had upon the controversy then before it, stating that:

"The question here is simply. What is the proper construction of the statute [referring to the adoption statute?] Was it intended to put the adopted child on the same footing as the natural child, and does he take his inheritance subject to the same limitations, if he dies in infancy and without issue?"

The court, after giving its reasons therefor, answered these questions by holding that since the adoption statutes provide that the adopted child shall inherit property from its adoptive parent, as though it were the child of such adoptive parent, its estate in the property so inherited is subject to the same limitation as the estate received from its parent by a natural child, and concluded its opinion as follows:

[390] "The statute [referring to the one limiting the estate of an infant in property received from its parent] does not make the foster father the heir of the adopted child. The case does not turn on the question. Who is capable of inheriting from the adopted child? It turns on the question, What estate does the adopted child who dies in infancy and without issue take in the estate of his foster parent? The adopted child under the statute is 'capable of inheriting as though such person were the child of the petitioner.' He, therefore, takes under the statute the same estate as the natural child. The estate of the natural child which he inherits from his parent is defeated by his death in infancy without issue, and the property then goes back to the kindred of that parent. The adopted child, inheriting as though he were the child of his foster parent, takes subject to the same limitation, and when he dies in infancy and without issue, the property under the statute descends to the kindred of that parent from whom he received it."

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—65.

How the majority of this court, in the case at bar, can understand that case to hold that an adoptive parent has the right in Kentucky to inherit property from the adopted child is beyond my comprehension; and that they will admit that the Kentucky statute, limiting the estate of an infant in property received from its parent by gift, devise, or inheritance, can have no operation in Mississippi I take for granted, in view of the two universal rules that title to real property must be determined by the law of the place where it is situated, and that statutes have no extraterritorial force. If the statute is to be applied here, it must also be applied as a limitation upon the estate of a natural child, born in Kentucky, in land situated in this state, received by it from one of its parents by gift, devise, or descent, a thing which I suspect this court would not do. The fact that the supreme court of Kentucky has expressly [391] decided that its adoption statutes confer no right of inheritance upon an adoptive father should close this inquiry; for no court has ever held, in so far as I am aware, that the construction placed upon a statute of a state by its own supreme court is not binding on the courts of every other state wherein rights claimed under such statute are called in question. 36 Cyc. 1104, and authorities there cited in note 4, among which is McIntyre v. Ingraham, 35 Miss. 25, in which this court said:

"No principle of law is of more universal acceptance, or stands upon sounder reason, than that the construction put by the proper courts upon the statutes of their own jurisdiction is conclusive of their force and effect, and will be so regarded by all foreign judicatures, when they may become the subject of consideration."

The estate which Lula May Rule took in the land inherited by her from her adoptive father was that which she would have taken had she been born to him in lawful wedlock, which under the law of this state is a fee simple; consequently upon her death the land was inherited under section 1849 of our Code by her brothers and sisters, and should be awarded to them, regardless of whether this court thinks that so to do would be in accord with natural justice or not, for that question is not for its determination, but for the determination of the legislature.

The case of Humphries v. Davis, 100 Ind. 274, 50 Am. Rep. 788, cited in the majority opinion, is of no value here for three reasons: First, that decision simply construed an Indiana statute, the phraseology of which is different from the Kentucky statute here under consideration, and, second, whether the construction put upon the Kentucky statute by the supreme court of that state is right or wrong, it should be accepted and acted upon here; and, third, the right of an adoptive parent [392] to inherit land situated in a state other than that under the laws of which the child was adopted was not there involved. But since that case is cited with approval in the majority opinion, it may not be out of place for me to give it some consideration.

The statute there under consideration (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, sections 837, 838) after providing the method by which children could be adopted, continued as follows:

"From and after the adoption of such child, it shall take the name in which it is adopted, and be entitled to and receive all the rights and interest in the estate of such adopted father or mother, by descent or otherwise, that such child would do if the natural heir of such adopted father or mother. . . . After the adoption of such child, such adopted father or mother shall occupy the same position toward such child that he or she would if the natural father or mother, and be liable for the maintenance, education, and every other way responsible as a natural father or mother."

It came before the supreme court of Indiana for construction in Barnhizel v. Ferrell, 47 Ind. 335, and the court then held that it conferred no right on an adoptive parent to inherit property from the adopted child. In Krug v. Davis, 87 Ind. 590, it was conceded by counsel, and assumed by the court, that the statute conferred no such right, but when that case came again to the court on a second appeal, as Davis v. Krug, 95 Ind. 1, the court held that the question was not considered and decided by it on the former appeal, and was therefore not within the law of the case rule; that the statute did confer such right of inheritance on an adoptive parent—and overruled Barnhizel v. Ferrell. Afterwards, the right of the same adoptive parent to inherit from the same adopted child that was involved in Krug v. Davis, and Davis v. Krug, supra, came before the court in [393] Humphries v. Davis in which the overruling of Barnhizel v. Ferrell was approved, the court construing its statute in the light of the civil law, and, as was pointed out by the supreme court of Iowa in Baker v. Clowser, 158 Ia. 156, 138 N. W. 837, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1056, basing its conclusion upon an erroneous premise. The reasoning of that court, from the status of an adopted child under the civil law, was repudiated by this court, as hereinbefore pointed out in Beaver v. Crump, 76 Miss. 34, 23 So. 432, and by the supreme court of Kentucky in Villier v. Watson, 168 Ky. 631, 182 S. W. 869. Among the numerous cases in which it has been held that an adoptive parent does not inherit property from the adopted child, unless the right so to do is expressly given by statute, are the following: Baker v. Clowser, 158 Ia. 156, 138 N. W. 837, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1056; Reinders v. Koppelman, 68 Mo. 482, 30 Am. Rep. 802; Heidecamp v. Jersey City, etc. R. Co. 69 N. J. L. 284, 55 Atl. 239, 101 Am. St. Rep. 707; Hole v. Robbins, 53 Wis. 514, 10 N. W. 617; White v. Dotter, 73 Ark. 130, 83 S. W. 1052; Russell v. Jordan, 58 Colo. 445, 147 Pac. 693, Ann. Cas. 1916C 760; Lathrop v. Young, 25 Ohio St. 451; Upson v. Noble, 35 Ohio St. 655; Edwards v. Yearby, 168 N. C. 663, 85 S. E. 19, L.R.A.1915E 462; In re Daisey, 15 W. N. C. (Pa.) 403; Murphy v. Portrum, 95 Tenn. 605, 32 S. W. 633, 30 L.R.A. 263.

The California case cited in the majority opinion is of no value here, for the reason, as pointed out in the California court's opinion, the statute of that state there under consideration is materially different from the statutes of other states. The statute (Civ. Code, sections 228, 229) there construed, as was said by that court, does "not in terms provide for the inheritance by the adopted child from the adopting parent or vice versa," but does provide that:

[394] "A child, when adopted, may take the family name of the person adopting. After adoption, the two shall sustain towards each other the legal relation of parent and child, and have all the rights and be subject to all the duties of that relation. . . . The parents of an adopted child are, from the time of the adoption, relieved of all parental duties towards, and all responsibility for, the child so adopted, and have no right over it" and was construed by the court to mean that, when a child is adopted under it, the relations between it and its natural parents are for all legal purposes superseded, and it thereafter becomes for all such purposes the child of the adoptive parents. The Kentucky statute expressly gives the child a right to inherit from its adoptive parents. Our statute provides that such right may be conferred upon it in the decree of adoption; but in neither of these statutes is a right in the adoptive parent to inherit from the child referred to, and therefore such a right cannot be held to be included therein without violating one of the most elementary rules of construction. "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius." And, moreover, as hereinbefore pointed out, this court has held that under our statutes—and the Kentucky court has held under the Kentucky statutes—no such relation is created by the adoption of a child.

In conclusion I have only this further to say: That when this case was before us on the former appeal, we held, as has also the supreme court of Kentucky, that under the Kentucky statute under which Lula May Rule was adopted, her adoptive parents were given no right to inherit property from her, which holding, even if this court has the right to construe the Kentucky statute differently from what it has been construed by the Kentucky court, is supported by the decisions of all the courts which have construed statutes the phraseology of which is similar to that of the statute here under [395] consideration; and yet that decision is to be overruled because a majority of this court now say that it is manifestly wrong.

I am requested by my Brother Sykes to say that he concurs in the views herein expressed.

ON SUGGESTION OF ERROR.

(October 8, 1917.)

ETHRIDGE, J.—The suggestion of error filed in this case challenges the power of the court to change the decision on the first appeal, on the ground of want of power in the court under constitutional grant of jurisdiction to the court; second, if the court had such power, that its exercise would violate the rules of res adjudicata, "for which neither a principle can be stated nor an authority produced;" third, that to make such a decree is to overrule an unbroken line of decisions in this state, recognizing and enforcing the law of the case.

The Constitution, in giving jurisdiction to the supreme court, uses the following language:

"The supreme court shall have such jurisdiction as properly belongs to a court of appeals." Section 146 of the Constitution.

In section 144 the general grant of judicial power is in the following language:

"The judicial power of the state shall be vested in a supreme court and such other courts as are provided for in this Constitution."

It will be noted from these provisions that the entire judicial power of the state is vested in the supreme court and such other courts as are provided for in the Constitution. Section 146 has been construed to mean that the supreme court has only appellate jurisdiction, and that original jurisdiction cannot be conferred upon it. There is no limit of the appellate jurisdiction that [396] may be conferred upon it under the Constitution. All power belonging to an appellate court may be conferred upon the supreme court, and there is no limitation in the Constitution on the power of the court to overrule decisions, or change its decision when in the opinion of the court a former decision may be erroneous or wrongful. No authority cited in the suggestion of error or brief refers to any constitutional restriction, and the constitutional power of the court to make decisions of the kind challenged in the suggestion of error has not been decided or adjudged in any of the authorities cited. The decisions cited wholly fail to sustain this contention. The court necessarily has power to decide an appeal and enter a final judgment.

On the second proposition, that if the court possesses such power the decision would violate the rule of res adjudicata, "for which neither a principle can be stated nor authority produced," is likewise not well taken. We think we have produced decisions in the former opinion sustaining the power and right of the court to change the decision. Other authorities could be cited, and among the decisions which have accomplished the same result, without making the pronouncement in terms, is Field v. Middlesex Banking Co. 77 Miss. 180, 26 So. 365, which later came before the court on second appeal in 84 Miss. 646, 37 So. 139. On the first appeal Judge Woods, as the organ of the court, used some strong language and reversed the case. On the second appeal, a majority of the court reversed the lower court, which followed Judge Woods' opinion, and changed the effect of the decision on the first appeal. It is true that Judge Whitfield, one of the members of the court, undertook to show the same result could be accomplished without disturbing Judge Woods' opinion; but the court did change the pronouncement of the law as it had been adjudicated on the first appeal. In Judge Woods' opinion [397] he stated that the record consists of three large volumes, and it was manifest that the facts were fully presented on the first appeal, but on the second appeal a different conclusion was reached on the facts. In State v. Louisville, etc. R. Co. 97 Miss. 35, 51 So. 918, 53 So. 454, Ann. Cas. 1912C 1150, and in the same case in 104 Miss. 413, 61 So. 425, the court declared the law applicable to the case and reversed the chancery court, remanding the matter to be proceeded with in accordance with the opinion therein pronounced. On the first remand the chancellor declined to follow the court, and in reversing him the second time in 104 Miss. 413, 61 So. 425, the law was again announced and reaffirmed as in the first opinion. Thereupon the chancellor entered a decision in conformity with the opinion of the supreme court. The case was thereupon appealed again to this court, and in 107 Miss. 597, 65 So. 881, the court changed its announcement of the law, and reversed the chancellor, and entered judgment dismissing the suit.

Numerous authorities have been cited in the suggestion of error, most of which were referred to in the dissenting opinion in the present case, and in none of them is the precise case here dealt with presented. The only case that seems to sustain the contention of the suggestion of error is Stewart v. Stebbins, 30 Miss. 66. That case, however, is distinguishable from this case, because the former decision was not in the same case. But the rights growing out of the suit had been adjudicated in the case of Stebbins v. Niles, 25 Miss. 267, and which had, therefore, been finally adjudicated, and constituted res adjudicata, properly speaking, and as distinguished from the law of the case. It is true that the court in the case reported in 30 Miss. 66, uses language that would support the contention; but the language used was not applicable to the facts of the case. In other words, it was broader than the case called for. The decision, applied [398] to the facts of the case on which it was decided, was perfectly proper; but the statement of the court in the opinion, "that it is immaterial in this respect whether the case was further proceeded with in the court below or not," was not before the court, and is not authority for the proposition here cited.

The names of great judges of the past, who have adorned this court, have been brought into honored review, in the suggestion of error, as great names in the judicial history of this state. We revere the memory of these judges, and have great respect and deference for their decisions. Able and eminent as these judges were, they were human and fallible, and, while we would not lightly depart from rules laid down by them, still we must, where they have decided cases which operate to effect injustice or lead to wrong results, apply the corrective as though we had rendered the same decisions. We do not intend to depart lightly from precedents. We expect to consider and adhere to them where they are sound in principle; but we refuse to crucify justice on the cross of precedent. We do not think the language used in our opinion, "when judicial construction is out of harmony with natural justice the judicial reasoning should withstand the most careful scrutiny and analysis before it should prevail," and "courts are created, maintained, and sworn to administer justice and not to adhere strictly to arbitrary rules; when a rule or decision defeats justice or seriously impairs it, it should be departed from rather than followed," is such radical language as need frighten the members of the bar. There may be those who love consistency of utterance and of precedent more than they do the administration of justice, but in our opinion the courts were created solely for the purpose of administering justice. We recognize that precedents are valuable guides, and it is not our purpose to throw them aside entirely and to proceed and blaze a new trail from our personal sense of right and [399] justice. The decisions of the courts are not necessarily unchangeable, and it is the duty of the court to change a decision, if wrong in principle, and which leads to injustice and wrong.

The first appeal, in the present case, was from an interlocutory decree, and not from a final decree. Important as it is for the court to adhere to rulings made in settling the principles of litigation before final decree or judgment, it is more important that justice be done; and where the court reached the conclusion that a decision is manifestly wrong, and ought to be overruled, we see no reason to hold a litigant irrevocably bound to the court's mistake. If a mistake is made, it would be better to correct it at once, while injustice may be prevented. A litigant has no vested interest in a court's mistake, where the mistake is discovered before the final ending of the litigation.

We are satisfied with the pronouncement in our former opinion on the third proposition above laid down in the suggestion of error, without adding to it.

Suggestion of error is overruled.

Smith, C. J., and Sykes, J., dissenting.

NOTE.

It is held in the reported case that, even with respect to the descent of realty, the right of an adopted child to inherit will be determined in accordance with the law of the state where the adoption takes place. The right of inheritance within a state of a child adopted under the laws of another state is discussed in the notes to Brown v. Finley, 16 Ann. Cas. 778; Anderson v. French, Ann. Cas. 1916B 89; and Hockaday v. Lynn, 118 Am. St. Rep. 672.

BERRYMAN ET AL.

v.

CHILDS.

Nebraska Supreme Court—June 5, 1915.

98 Neb. 450; 153 N. W. 450.

Pleading — Reply — In Court Exercising Powers of Justice of Peace.

Since the only pleading required in the county court when exercising the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is a bill of particulars, and the reply in the district court on appeal was to new matter in the answer and was not inconsistent with the petition, it should not have been stricken.

Frauds, Statute of — Memorandum — Printed Signature.

A printed and written contract between an owner of land and a broker or agent for the sale of land was signed by the owner by his own hand. The signature of the broker was printed. The broker acted upon the contract. In this, an action to recover a commission for the sale of the land described in the contract, the trial court excluded the paper as not being sufficient under section 2628, Rev. St. 1913, and refused an offer to show that the land was sold by virtue of the contract. Held, that the rulings were erroneous.

[See note at end of this case.]

(Syllabus by court.)

Appeal from District Court, Rock county: DICKSON, Judge.

Action by James H. Berryman et al., plaintiffs, against W. L. Childs, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

J. H. Berryman for appellants.

[451] LETTON, J.—Action by real estate brokers to recover a commission upon a sale of land made for plaintiff. The trial court directed a verdict for the defendant. From a judgment based thereon the plaintiffs appeal.

In the spring of 1911 defendant employed the plaintiffs to procure a purchaser for 172 acres of land in Rock county, and at that time signed the following contract:

"I, W. L. Childs, of Carnes, county of Rock, state of Nebraska, have this day given Berryman & Janney the exclusive sale or transfer of the real estate as described hereon, which is owned by me, at the agreed price $53.00 per acre dollars. I hereby appoint and constitute said Berryman & Janney as my lawful agent, and authorize said Berryman & Janney to enter into written contract for me, on my behalf and in my name, for the sale of said real estate. I agree to make a good satisfactory deed and to give a clear abstract of title to said real estate, showing the title to be fully vested in me. In consideration of the services of Berryman & Janney in making such sale, transfer, sending me a buyer, advertising, or being instrumental in any manner, whatever, in selling or transferring said property, I agree to pay said Berryman & Janney out of the first payment a commission of 1.00 one per acre dollars, payable at the office of said Berryman & Janney. Any change in the price or terms agreed to by me shall work no forfeiture in the commission due said agent in sale or transfer of said property. I hereby reserve the right to terminate this agency at any time after 30 days by giving 30 days' notice in writing to said agent. Receipt of a duplicate of this agreement is hereby acknowledged. W. L. Childs, Owner.

[452] "Said agency accepted on above conditions. Berryman & Janney."

A full description of the land was written on the back of the paper before signing. The paper is printed, but the words in italics are written.

In the answer the defendants admit that he listed the land described for sale with plaintiffs as his agents, and that the land was sold to one Parks as alleged. Other defenses were pleaded which are not relevant to the question presented in this court. Mr. Janney testified that Mr. Childs signed the contract after he had filled the blank spaces in the printed paper, and that the name "Berryman & Janney" appearing on the lower left hand corner of the exhibit was printed thereon by the order or instruction of the firm. The contract was offered in evidence. Defendant objected to its introduction for the reason that it was incompetent and shows upon its face that it was not signed by the broker or agent who is intended to be a party to said contract. The objection was sustained. Plaintiffs then attempted to prove that the land was sold by plaintiffs to Parks by virtue of this contract, and that no commission had been paid. This testimony was also excluded. A motion to direct a verdict for the defendant was then sustained, and a verdict and judgment rendered accordingly.

The district court struck out all of the reply except a general denial, on the ground that its allegations were not within the issues tried below. The pleadings in the county court are not in the record. Since a bill of particulars of plaintiff's claim is the only pleading required by statute in an action to recover less than $200, and since the matter stricken in the reply is not inconsistent with the petition and responds to new matter in the answer, we think it should not have been stricken.

It is argued that, since the contract was executed, a recovery can be had even though it was not in writing. The rule in this state is that a broker who has sold land for another cannot recover either on the contract or upon a quantum meruit for the value of his services unless he [453] holds a written contract which satisfies the statute. Nelson v. Webster, 83 Neb. 169, 119 N. W. 256; Clark v. Davies, 88 Neb. 67, 129 N. W. 165.

We have not been favored with a brief by the appellee, but it seems apparent that the district court was of the opinion that the contract was not executed in accordance with section 2628, Rev. St. 1913: "Every contract for the sale of lands, between the owner thereof and any broker or agent employed to sell the same, shall be void, unless the contract is in writing and subscribed by the owner of the land and the broker or agent, and such contract shall describe the land to be sold, and set forth the compensation to be allowed by the owner in case of sale by the broker or agent." Since the owner of the land signed the contract, the question presented is whether "the contract is . . . subscribed by . . . the broker or agent." We have held that the word "subscribed" in this section is not to be taken literally, but in its popular sense as being equivalent to the word "signed." Myers v. Moore, 78 Neb. 448, 110 N. W. 989. The name of the firm was printed under the order and direction of the plaintiffs. The courts construe such statutory requirements more or less strictly according to the nature of the instrument involved. In such documents as wills much more strictness is required than in instruments of less importance and effect.

In Schneider v. Norris, 2 M. & S. 286, an invoice was sent by the seller to the purchaser, headed: "London, October 24, 1812. Messrs. John Schneider & Co. bought of Thomas Norris & Co., agents, cotton yarn and piece goods. No. 3, Freeman's Court, Cornhill." A list of articles with the quantities and prices followed. The whole heading of the bill was printed, except the words "Messrs. John Schneider & Co." It was held that the printed name, under the facts, was sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds and to bind Norris & Company, which was the intention when the bill was made out. Saunderson v. Jackson, 2 B. & P. (Eng.) 238, and Drury v. Young, 58 Md. 546, 42 Am. Rep. 343, are practically to the same effect. In re Walker, 110 Cal. 387, 42 Pac. 815, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104, 30 L.R.A. 460, and in Cummings v. Landes, 140 Ia. 80, 117 N. W. 22, the meaning of "signature" is [454] discussed, and it is shown that signatures were at first usually made by the mark or cross, and that writing is not absolutely essential if the party acts upon or intends to be bound by the mark, stamp or printed name. Where a name was stamped upon a notice of objection in an election contest proceeding which the statute required "shall be signed by the person objecting," this was held sufficient. Bennett v. Brumfitt, 3 L. R. C. P. (Eng.) *28. In 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) 856, it is said: "A printed name upon a paper which is delivered under circumstances showing an intention to regard the printed name as the person's own will suffice, as will an entry in a book containing the owner's name at the top of the page." Where a statute provided that the summons in a civil action should be "subscribed by the plaintiff, or his attorney," the law was held to be complied with if the signature was printed or stamped. Barnard v. Heydrick, 49 Barb (N. Y.) 62; Mezchen v. More, 54 Wis. 214, 11 N. W. 534; Herrick v. Morrill, 37 Minn. 250, 33 N. W. 849, 5 Am. St. Rep. 841.

The plaintiffs having signed the contract with their printed name with intention to be bound by it, having assumed its obligations, and (assuming the fact to be according to their offer of proof) having discharged it according to its terms, are entitled to the benefit of it.

The validity of the contract was also attacked in the district court on account of the land being a homestead and the contract not being signed by Mrs. Childs. Of course, the contract neither affected Mrs. Childs interest in the premises nor the title to the land; but this does not interfere with the right of plaintiffs to recover a commission from Mr. Childs if they produced a buyer to whom Mr. and Mrs. Childs sold the land.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the district court is Reversed.

Rose, Fawcett and Hamer, JJ., not sitting.

NOTE.

Sufficiency of Printed Signature to Memorandum within Statute of Frauds.

The earlier cases discussing the sufficiency of a printed signature to a memorandum within the statute of frauds are reviewed in the note to Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Meuth, Ann. Cas. 1913B 661. The present note discusses the cases which have arisen since the publication of that note.

It has been held that a printed signature is sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds where the paper is delivered under circumstances showing an intention on the part of the person to be charged to regard the printed name as his own. Goldowitz v. Kupfer, 80 Misc. 487, 141 N. Y. S. 531. And see the reported case. See also Kilday v. Schanecupp.

91 Conn. 29, 98 Atl. 335, L.R.A.1917A 151; McCrea v. Bentley, 154 N. Y. S. 174. Compare Kaiser v. Jones, 157 Ky. 670, 163 S. W. 741; Riviera Realty Co. v. Henry, 144 N. Y. S. 790.

In Goldowitz v. Kupfer, supra, the facts and the conclusions of the court thereon were stated as follows: "An order on a blank printed by defendant, with its name and address at the top, for the sale of the goods in question to the plaintiffs, giving the terms of sale, time of delivery, and price of each item of goods, was signed by one of the plaintiffs. At the foot of the order was a printed guaranty of the price, coupled with the privilege of canceling the order, signed, in print, with the name of defendant. An unsigned letter to plaintiffs' firm, with defendant's name and address on the letter head, acknowledging the entry of plaintiffs' order, was delivered to one of the plaintiffs. The defendant's president testified that the plaintiffs' order was placed upon its books as an order, but that its counsel later advised it that it was invalid. A printed signature will answer the requirements of the statute of frauds, and where a trader who is in the habit of delivering printed bills of parcels, to which his name is prefixed, delivers one containing the necessary particulars of the contract, it is sufficient. Browne on Statute of Frauds (5th ed.) 356."

In Kilday v. Schancupp, 91 Conn. 29, 98 Atl. 335, L.R.A.1917A 151, the court in holding that a signature in the body of the instrument was sufficient to answer the requirements of the statute of frauds, said obiter: "The authorities are equally decisive that the signature may be printed or written. . . . And we have held that a signature by a rubber stamp, made by an agent duly authorized, is a signature within the statute."

Likewise, in McCrea v. Bentley, 154 N. Y. S. 174, the court said by way of dictum: "While the statute requires that the memorandum be signed by the person to be charged, it does not require that the signature be in any definite form, and initials, marks, fictitious names, and even a rubber stamp have all been considered as a sufficient compliance with the statute. The test in every instance seems to be whether the party or his duly authorized agent has signed the memorandum in such manner as to authenticate the promise."

In Kaiser v. Jones, 157 Ky. 607, 163 S. W. 741, however, a memorandum of the sale of real estate was held to be insufficient where it consisted of a newspaper clipping ending with the printed signature of the auctioneer, who acted as the vendor's agent. It appeared that the newspaper clipping had been pasted on a sheet of paper, that some writing relative to the sale had been written on this paper below the auctioneer's signature, and that the vendee signed her name at the end of the writing but the auctioneer did not. The court said: "The memorandum here in question was not signed by the vendor; but he contends it was signed by the auctioneer. As will be seen by reference to the memorandum, the only place where the name of the auctioneer appears is at the bottom of the printed clipping or newspaper advertisement of the sale, which clipping was pasted upon the paper on which appellee signed her name, and above that part of the writing to which she affixed her signature. In support of his contention that the name of the auctioneer printed on said clipping is a sufficient signature, appellant cites 20 Cyc. 275, where it is said that 'a printed or stamped signature may be a sufficient signature if adopted and intended as such,' which statement is supported by citation of several English cases. But, granting that a printed signature, if adopted and intended as such, might be sufficient, the printed signature of the auctioneer is appended to the advertisement of sale, not to that part of the writing which recites that appellee has become the purchaser of the property. Manifestly it could not have been adopted and intended as the signature of the auctioneer to that part of the memorandum which Mrs. Jones signed, else it would have been appended to that part of the paper. Moreover, Ky. St. § 468, provides that the signature must be subscribed at the end of a writing."

In Riviera Realty Co. v. Henry, 144 N. Y. S. 790, it appeared that an instrument purporting to be a lease had been executed by the Riviera Realty Company. The lease had the corporate name of the plaintiff as lessor printed at the end and this printed signature was followed by the signature of another person in writing. It was said that a lease subscribed in print, when followed by the written signature of another person would be good under the statute, if the writer had the authority to bind the person whose name appeared in print. It appearing that no such authority was shown, the court held the case open suggesting that at another trial the plaintiff might be able to prove authority on the part of the person whose name was subscribed to the lease.

It has been held that where a broker consummates a sale and the buyer's name is entered in the broker's books by the broker himself who delivers a copy of the memorandum to the buyer, an entry of this nature is a sufficient signature to bind the buyer, under the statute of frauds. Dinuba Farmers' Union Packing Co. v. J. M. Anderson Grocer Co. 193 Mo. App. 236, 182 S. W. 1036. In that case it appeared that a broker who had represented both the plaintiff and the defendant in the sale of 800 cases of raisins to the defendant, had made a memorandum of the sale in the books of the brokerage company. The name of the company was printed on the heading of the memorandum, and that of the defendant as purchaser was typewritten therein. In holding that the signature was sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds, the court said: "But it is said the memorandum is not even signed by the brokerage company. It is true no formal signature appears to be affixed thereto, but this is unimportant, in view of the fact that the name of the broker—that is, the Rosen-Reichardt Brokerage Company—is printed on the heading of the memorandum, and defendant's name is clearly written by the broker therein in typewriting as the purchaser. The signature required by the statute is not confined to the actual subscription of his name by the party to be charged, as is said by Mr. Benjamin on Sales (6th ed.), § 256. Indeed, the name of the party to be charged may be either in writing or in print, or by stamping the name upon the memorandum. Moreover, it may be in the body of the writing or at the beginning or at the end of it. 'But when the signature is not placed in the usual way at the foot of the written or printed paper, it becomes a question of intention, a question of fact to be determined by the other circumstances of the case, whether the name so written or printed in the body of the instrument was appropriated by the party to the recognition of the contract.'"

CITY OF NEW ORLEANS

v.

TOCA.

Louisiana Supreme Court—March 12, 1917.

141 La. 551; 75 So. 238.

Constitutional Law — Police Power — Regulation of Commerce.

The "liberty" guaranteed by Const. art. 2, providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, includes the right to manufacture and offer for sale any article of commerce one pleases so long as the doing so does not come under the restrictive jurisdiction of the police power.

Food — Legislative Power of Regulation.

Whether there is danger of the public buying food injurious to health or different from that intended to be bought so as to authorize the exercise of the police power, and whether such danger sufficiently affects the public interests to justify the intervention of the government, is a question for the legislative department, but the legislative action is subject to revision by the courts.

Constitutional Law — Presumption in Favor of Statute.

There is a presumption of validity in favor of a statute or ordinance; but such presumption, however strong, is not conclusive, though the legislative action will be sustained if possible under any reasonably supposable state of facts.

Food — Regulation of Ice Cream — Validity.

A municipal ordinance requiring ice cream to contain at least ten per cent of butter fat, and providing that any frozen product, with certain exceptions, containing milk or cream, whether designated as custard, etc., or by whatever name it is designated, shall be deemed ice cream, is invalid as applied to a frozen product offered for sale only as custard, and which is pure and wholesome, though not containing the required percentage of butter fat.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from Recorder's Court of New Orleans: BURTIE, Recorder.

Prosecution against Albert Toca for violation of municipal ordinance. Defendant convicted and appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Albert Guilbault for appellant.

I. D. Moore and W. L. Hughes for appellee.

[553] PROVOSTY, J.—The accused, Albert Toca, is charged with having violated the "ice cream" ordinance of the city of New Orleans by selling a frozen compound which he sells under the name of "Toca's Custard."

For 15 years previous to this prosecution he had been manufacturing this product and selling it both directly from factory to consumer and through peddlers on the street; but lately there was added to the "ice cream" ordinance of the city the following:

"Provided that any frozen product, except fruit ice cream, nut ice cream, frozen cream cheese, and frozen buttermilk, which shall contain milk, whole or skimmed, or cream, whether the same shall be designated as 'custard,' 'frozen custard,' 'frozen dainties,' or by whatever name such frozen product is designated, shall, for the purpose of this ordinance, be deemed to be 'ice cream,' and shall be made to conform to the requirements provided in this ordinance for 'ice cream.'"

As ice cream must under the ordinance contain at least 10 per cent of butter fat, the effect of this proviso which classifies custard as ice cream is to require Toca's Custard to contain that proportion of butter fat.

Its ingredients are rice, barley, hominy, sugar, eggs, milk, and flavoring; and it is made after a recipe for which the accused has obtained a patent from the United States government. Its characteristic features, both of which are accentuated in the patent, are its inexpensiveness and digestibility. Both of these would be destroyed by the addition of this quantity of fat—practically, the product would become a different one; hence the ordinance has the effect of suppressing the business.

"Permission to sell, when accompanied by the imposition of a condition which, if complied with, will effectually prevent any sale, amounts in law to a prohibition." Collins v. New Hampshire, 171 U. S. 30, 18 S. Ct. 768, 43 U. S. (L. ed.) 60.

Accused contends that the ordinance is null, as depriving him of the "liberty" which is guaranteed to him by article 2 of the Constitution, reading:

[554] "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property, except by due process of law."

The liberty here guaranteed includes the right to manufacture and offer for sale any article of commerce one pleases, so long as the doing so does not come under the restrictive jurisdiction of the police power.

This jurisdiction, in so far as bearing upon the sale of an article of human food, is based upon the right, or duty, of the government to protect the public against being subjected to the danger of buying food injurious to health or different from that which is intended to be bought.

The question of whether this danger exists in any particular case, and sufficiently affects the public interest to justify the intervention of the government, is one for the legislative department of the government. But the legislative action is subject to revision by the courts when complaint is made; for the Constitution is the paramount law, and it would be such in name only if when transgressed authority did not reside somewhere for vindicating its supremacy; and this authority resides ex necessitate in the courts.

A statute or ordinance is not to be supposed to have been adopted without due deliberation; that is to say, without a full knowledge of all the facts and a careful weighing of the public interest on the one hand and private rights on the other. This gives rise to a presumption of validity in favor of the legislative action; and the strength of this presumption is added in fact by the respect which one of the departments of the government naturally entertains for the decisions of any one of the other departments. But this presumption, however strong, is not conclusive, as one might be led to suppose from the enunciation of it found in many decisions. The contrary is attested by a large number of other decisions whose correctness is now questioned by no one. It, in last analysis, amounts simply to this, that [555] the legislative action will be sustained if the doing so is possible under any reasonably supposable state of facts.

What reasonably supposable state of facts, then, could justify the fixing of this butter fat standard for custard?

The consideration of danger to the public health may be eliminated at once. For the requirement of a certain proportion of butter fat does not make for greater purity or wholesomeness, but only greater richness or nutritiousness.

The sole consideration must be that of possible deception of the public; of the people being misled into buying a custard different from that which they think they are buying. On the point of whether or not the people of New Orleans have formed the notion, or become imbued with the idea, that custard is deficient in butter fat unless measuring in that respect up to a certain standard, there is no evidence in the record. There is evidence going to show that in New Orleans, as elsewhere, most of what is sold as ice cream is in reality frozen custard; but the effect of that evidence is merely to show that ice cream may in New Orleans be properly classed as ice cream; not that in New Orleans custard as such, not as ice cream, is understood to measure up to a certain standard in butter fat, so that those who buy it, as such, not as ice cream, will be misled unless it does so measure.

No doubt such a state of mind as this is possible or supposable; but it is equally possible or supposable, with respect to the other nutritious elements of custard—the sugar and the egg—so that if a standard of nutritiousness may be prescribed for the butter fat element, so may it, for like reason, be prescribed for the sugar and the egg elements. And if the elements of custard may be thus dictated, why not those of every other manufactured article of human food? And if those of articles of human food, why not those of [556] every manufactured article of commerce, for the public is as liable to form notions with regard to the constituents of one manufactured article as of another, and the manufacturer is no more privileged to deceive the public in the matter of one article than of another?

The situation would therefore seem to be that this butter fat standard, which destroys the business of accused, cannot be maintained, unless the right is to be recognized in the public authorities to fix in like manner a destructive standard for every manufactured article of commerce; an idea which, needless to say, cannot be entertained for a single moment.

We are aware that the courts have gone so far as to sanction the legislating of oleomargarine (an admittedly wholesome article of food) from the market. State v. Addington, 77 Mo. 110; Powell v. Com. 114 Pa. St. 265, 7 Atl. 913, 60 Am. Rep. 350; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 8 S. Ct. 992, 1257, 32 U. S. (L. ed.) 253. But these decisions, and others along the same line, will, we imagine, hardly now be followed in the broadness of their doctrine. While refusing a writ of error from this Addington decision Mr. Justice Miller expressed the opinion that the decision was in violation of the Constitution of Missouri. In re Brosnahan, 18 Fed. 62. Though he concurred in the Powell decision. Mr. Justice Field, however, dissented from the Powell decision, and Judge Dillon in Mun. Corp. par. 141, has this to say decision:

"We cannot but express our regret that the Constitution of any of the states, or that of the United States, admits of a construction that it is competent for a state Legislature to suppress (instead of regulating) under fine and imprisonment the business of manufacturing and selling a harmless, and even wholesome, article, if the Legislature chooses to affirm, contrary to the fact, that the public health or public policy requires such suppression. The record of the conviction of Powell for selling without any deception a healthful and nutritious article of food makes one's blood tingle."

[557] The more conservative doctrine is that of People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 2 N. E. 29, 52 Am. Rep. 34, where the prohibition of the sale of oleomargarine was held to be unconstitutional, and People v. Biesecker, 169 N. Y. 53, 61 N. E. 990, 57 L.R.A. 178, 88 Am. St. Rep. 534, where the same view was taken of a statute prohibiting the use of preservatives, however harmless.

Cases where known articles of commerce, such as linseed oil, vinegar, etc., have not been allowed to be sold in an adulterated state even though offered for sale under names indicative of the adulteration are, of course, not in point. There the known virtues or properties of the articles in their unadulterated state were sought to be made to serve as inducements for the purchase of the adulterated articles.

Nor are the cases of natural products upon which the people are in the habit of relying largely for their nourishments, such as milk and butter, in point. Custard, sold as such, not as ice cream, cannot reasonably be said to be relied upon largely by the people for their nourishment; no more so than a thousand other articles of commerce upon which, we assume, the Legislature would not think of laying a hand.

A butter fat standard for ice cream has been sustained in two cases, which have been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. Com. v. Crowl, 245 Pa. St. 554, 91 Atl. 922; State v. Hutchinson Ice Cream Co. 168 Ia. 1, 147 N. W. 195, L.R.A.1917B 198, 242 U. S. 153, Ann. Cas. 1917B 643, 37 S. Ct. 28, 61 U. S. (L. ed.) 217.

In the Crowl case the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania said:

"That ice cream is in general use is admitted; that it is largely composed of milk and cream is shown by the evidence in the case. Its name implies the use of cream in its composition, and all of the authorities to which the learned counsel for the appellant refer show that milk and cream are constituents in its composition. It enters so largely into the food supply of the public as to have become a proper subject of legislation, especially in view of the opportunities [558] which its manufacture affords to practice imposition. In the popular understanding it is largely composed of milk of which butter fat is an important constituent. If by the exercise of ingenuity and by the practice of unwarranted thrift a product can be put on the market having the name and appearance of ice cream, but lacking the chief element which gives it value as an article of food, a large opportunity would be afforded to dealers in that article to profit by deception, and it is the opportunity for such deceit of which the police power takes notice and seeks to take away."

Here the two facts, that the word "cream" carries with it a certain implication of butter fat richness by which the public might be misled, and that "ice cream" enters largely into the food supply of the public, are stressed.

In the Hutchinson case the Supreme Court of Iowa said:

"It is said by defendants that they are deprived of the right to sell their product if it contains a less per cent of butter fat than that prescribed by the statute, and that the sale of such is entirely prohibited. This, we think, is an assumption not warranted. They may sell it for what it really is."

Thus showing that it was the deceptive feature of the article as implying a certain standard of purity or nutritiousness that was the real basis of the decision.

In reviewing these cases the Supreme Court of the United States said:

"It is specially urged that the statutes are unconstitutional because they do not merely define the term 'ice cream,' but arbitrarily prohibit the sale of a large variety of wholesome compounds theretofore included under the name 'ice cream.' The acts appear to us merely to prohibit the sale of such compounds as ice cream. Such is the construction given to the act by the Supreme Court of Iowa. State v. Hutchinson Ice Cream Co. 188 Ia. 1, 15, 147 N. W. 195, which is, of course, binding on us. We cannot assume, in the absence of a definite and authoritative ruling, that the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania would construe the law of that state otherwise. The conviction here under review was for selling the 'compound' as ice cream, so that we are not called upon to determine whether the state may, in the exercise of its police power, prohibit the sale even of a wholesome product, if the public welfare appear to require such action, and if, as here, interstate commerce is not involved."

[559] We fail entirely to find wherein the public welfare can require the establishment of any such standard for custard, whether frozen or on pie crust, any more than for any other article of food; and as we are not prepared to say that a standard of nutritiousness may be set for all articles of food offered for sale, we find ourselves constrained to hold that one cannot be set for custard.

In Rigbers v. Atlanta, 7 Ga. App. 411, 66 S. E. 991, the Court of Appeals of Georgia said of ice cream that it "is a luxury, rather than a necessity," and refused to allow a butter fat standard to be set for it under the general welfare clause.

But conceding that for ice cream, the use of which as an article of diet has come to be so widespread, a standard may be set, the same thing cannot be said of custard, which in its frozen state is not commonly offered for sale to the public as custard; and it is as custard, distinctly as such, that accused offers his product to the public. The eupeptic man may want his custard rich in fat, and correspondingly indigestible; the dispeptic may want his more of the kind that Toca offers. It is not for the law to step in and say to the latter, you shall not be allowed to buy and eat the light and digestible kind, but only the fat and indigestible.

The case is not that of there being nothing in a name, of a rose by any other name smelling as sweet; the question being one of deception vel non, there is everything in the name. The mixtures which were forbidden to be offered for sale as linseed oil and as vinegar, for instance, would never have been forbidden to be offered for sale under other names. There would have been no room for deception, and therefore no basis for constitutional repression. The cases in which the outlawing of oleomargarine offered for sale as such with no attempt at deception has been sanctioned stand, we must admit, more [560] or less in the way; but those decisions must be admitted to have reached the very extreme limit, and to be justifiable only on the score of the peculiar resemblance of oleomargarine, a manufactured article, to butter, a natural product and one of the main articles of human food, and on the peculiar opportunities that the sale of oleomargarine offers for deception. And also may not such a thing be as that the strong popular prejudice existing at first against this supposedly fake butter had found some unconscious lodgment in the judicial mind, and furnished the last feather in the scale?

The judgment appealed from is therefore set aside, and the accused is ordered to be discharged without day.

Sommerville, J., dissents.

Rehearing denied May 14, 1917.

NOTE.

The reported case, conceding for the purposes of argument the validity of a municipal regulation requiring that ice cream shall contain ten per cent of butter fats, holds to be invalid a provision in such a regulation that frozen custards and the like shall be deemed to be ice cream and within the scope of the requirement. The validity of a state or municipal regulation of ice cream is discussed in the note to Hutchinson Ice Cream Co. v. State, Ann. Cas. 1917B 643.

REZAC

v.

ZIMA ET AL.

Kansas Supreme Court—December 11, 1915.

96 Kan. 752; 153 Pac. 500.

Insurance — Liability of Agent to Owner of Property — Failure to Procure Insurance.

In a petition in which it is substantially alleged that a broker or agent undertook to procure insurance on certain property of an owner in some responsible company and where the parties agreed on the total amount of insurance, the amount to be placed on each class of the property to be insured, and that the premium should be taken from a certain fund provided by the owner, but that the broker neglected to procure the insurance, and in reply to an inquiry of the owner had assured him that the insurance had been obtained, and the property is thereafter destroyed by fire, a cause of action against the broker is stated, and certainly sufficient as against an objection of the defendants to the introduction of any evidence.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

A broker or agent who undertakes to procure insurance for another is bound to exercise reasonable diligence to obtain it on the terms and conditions agreed upon and to give timely notice to his principal in case he is unable to procure it on the agreed terms and conditions, and if he fails to carry out his agreement and a loss results through his inattention, incapacity or fraud he will be liable to the extent and for the amount that would have been recoverable upon the insurance he had agreed to procure.

[See note at end of this case.]

(Syllabus by court.)

Appeal from District Court, Pottawatomie county: HEIZER, Judge.

Action by Edward Rezac, plaintiff, against Frank Zima et al., defendants. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

W. F. Challis and E. O. Brookens for appellant.

R. F. Hayden, George P. Hayden, F. T. Woodburn, E. D. Woodburn and A. E. Crane for appellees.

[752] JOHNSTON, C. J.—This is an appeal from a ruling of the trial court sustaining defendants' objections to the introduction of evidence under the petition. Plaintiff alleged, substantially, that in June, 1912, defendant Zima solicited him to procure insurance, aggregating $1150, upon plaintiff's barn, which he was then erecting, and its contents; that plaintiff [753] authorized and directed Zima to procure the insurance in some responsible company; that Zima informed plaintiff he would do so and would keep the policy at the bank of which he was cashier and charge the cost to plaintiff's account there; that later on the same day defendant Abel was sent out by Zima to look at the barn and contents and write the application, which Abel did; that afterwards plaintiff spoke to Zima about the policy and that Zima assured plaintiff that everything was all right. Plaintiff further alleged that on August 23, 1912, the barn and contents of the value of $1050 were destroyed by fire; that he informed Zima of the loss, who promised to notify the insurance company and see that it was adjusted; that later, the loss not being adjusted, plaintiff inquired of Zima the cause of the delay and was several times assured everything was all right and would be hurried up; that at all the times Zima assured plaintiff the loss would be paid by the company he well knew no policy had been obtained or properly applied for and such statements were made to mislead plaintiff; that not until about a month after the fire did defendant Zima inform plaintiff no policy had been applied for but that he had neglected to do so; that plaintiff had at all times relied upon Zima's promises; that Zima and Abel were each to share in the commissions and fees for obtaining the policy; and that because of defendants' wrongs, misrepresentations and gross neglect plaintiff was deprived of insurance, not having procured it elsewhere, to his damage in the sum of $1100. The separate answer of Zima contained denials and an allegation that he had asked Abel to take out an application of insurance and to procure the signing of same by plaintiff, which he had done; that he had sent the application to an insurance company and had done all that he could to obtain insurance, but that there was a delay in the matter the nature of which is not stated. He further alleged that the plaintiff did not have any money in the bank to be applied on the insurance. Abel answered with a general denial and an allegation that at the instance of Zima he had taken an application of insurance to plaintiff, and that plaintiff stated that if Abel was to have any commission on the transaction that he would not sign the application; that Abel then assured plaintiff that he had no connection with it, [754] and that plaintiff then signed the application, which was the only connection defendant Abel had with the transaction. At the trial a jury were empaneled and the plaintiff proceeded to introduce his testimony, when defendants objected to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that the petition did not set forth a cause of action against the defendants or either of them. This motion was sustained and judgment for costs against the plaintiff was rendered. From these rulings plaintiff appeals.

On an objection to the introduction of evidence that a cause of action is not stated in the petition its averments are to be liberally construed. (Weber v. Atchison, etc. R. Co. 54 Kan. 389, 38 Pac. 569; Howard v. Carter, 71 Kan. 85, 80 Pac. 61; Simmonds v. Richards, 74 Kan. 311, 86 Pac. 452.) This action was not brought to recover upon a contract of insurance against the insurer, but is an action against the defendants for the failure to procure insurance on his property as they had undertaken to do, and for wrongfully representing that insurance had been procured when in fact it had not, as a result of which a considerable loss had been sustained. A broker or agent who undertakes to procure insurance for another is bound to exercise reasonable diligence to obtain insurance in accordance with his agreement and to notify his principal if he is unable to do so. According to the averments of the petition the defendants failed to perform this duty, and, as has been alleged, Zima deliberately deceived the plaintiff by giving him assurance that the property had been insured when he knew that no insurance had been procured. If defendants had informed plaintiff of the omission or failure he could have obtained insurance elsewhere and have provided against loss. It does not appear that a particular insurer was named, but it was agreed that insurance should be obtained in a responsible company. If defendants had failed to exercise reasonable care in the selection of an insurer and had placed the insurance with a company that was insolvent or one not authorized to insure, and subsequently the property had been destroyed and the plaintiff had been unable to realize on the policy, the defendants would have been liable. (Latham Mercantile, etc. Co. v. Harrod, 71 Kan. 565, 81 Pac. 214; Harrod v. Latham Mercantile, etc. Co. 77 Kan. 466, 94 Pac. 11.) Brokers are equally liable where they undertake to procure [755] insurance and utterly neglect to obtain any insurance or fail to carry out material provisions of their agreement and a loss results. In such a case they are liable for as much as would have been covered by the insurance which they agreed to procure. (Milliken v. Woodward, 64 N. J. L. 444, 45 Atl. 796; Lindsay v. Pettigrew, 5 S. D. 500, 59 N. W. 726; Sawyer v. Mayhew, 51 Me. 398; Diamond v. Duncan (Tex.) 138 S. W. 429; Mallory v. Frye, 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 105; Criswell v. Riley, 5 Ind. App. 496, 503, 30 N. E. 1101, 32 N. E. 814; Backus v. Ames, 79 Minn. 145, 81 N. W. 766; Kaw Brick Co. v. Hogsett, 73 Mo. App. 432; Note, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 631.)

There is a contention that a completed and enforceable agreement was not made by the defendants, in support of which Mooney v. Merriam, 77 Kan. 305, 94 Pac. 263, is cited. That case was determined upon the evidence submitted and not upon an objection to the introduction of any evidence. The arrangement between the parties there was held to be so indefinite that it did not constitute a binding contract. In that case no agreement was reached as to the selection of an insurer, as to the property to be insured, nor as to the amount of insurance to be taken. The owner was claiming damages because of the destruction of the buildings, implements, grain and live stock, and yet no agreement had been made either as to the extent of the property insured nor the amounts to be placed upon each kind of the owner's property. Here the agreement was that defendant Zima was to select a responsible insurer. The property to be insured was specifically agreed upon—to the extent of $1150 in all. It was stipulated, too, that $550 should be placed on the barn, $100 on the hay therein, $200 on horses and $300 on harnesses, saddles, tools and miscellaneous contents, including some lumber. It is not alleged how long the insurance was to run nor the amount of the premium to be paid, but there are well-known standards as to both of these which must be deemed to have been within the contemplation of the parties when their agreement was made. While the averments of the petition are not as full as they might or should have been, they appear to be sufficient as against the objections made by the defendants. [756] The terms and conditions were sufficiently specific and so well understood by the parties that an application was filled out by the defendants, but what ultimately became of it does not appear from the petition. The agreement is sufficiently definite and comprehensive to be upheld, especially as against the challenge that no evidence was admissible under the petition. It can not be held that defendants' agreement with plaintiff to procure insurance was void because of the double agency of the defendants as they did not undertake to place the insurance in any particular company. The defendants had agreed to select a company that was responsible, and such a stipulation has been held to be valid. (Latham Mercantile, etc. Co. v. Harrod, 71 Kan. 565, 81 Pac. 214.) It was alleged that plaintiff had an account in Zima's bank, and it was provided by the agreement that Zima was to take enough of plaintiff's funds to pay the premium when the insurance was procured; and so the agreement was definite and complete as to the selection of an insurer, as to the property to be included in the policy, as to the amount of insurance of each kind of property to be insured, and provision was made for the payment of the premium. It further appears that a written application was prepared by the defendants and they not only neglected to procure the insurance but wrongfully lulled the plaintiff to rest by representing to him that insurance had been obtained some time before the property was destroyed. As the case is presented here the agreement is an enforceable one and the defendants are responsible for the loss sustained through their neglect and wrong.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

NOTE.

Liability of Insurance Agent to Owner of Property for Failure to Procure Insurance.

In General, 1038.
Failure to Consummate Policy Procured, 1040.
Measure of Damages, 1040.

In General.

This note is confined to a discussion of those cases only which deal with the liability of an insurance agent to the owner of property for his failure to procure insurance. As to the liability of an insurance agent to the insured for placing insurance in an insolvent company, see the note to Beckman v. Edwards, Ann. Cas. 1912B 40.

The responsibility of an agent to his principal for a failure to procure insurance goes no further than to require that the agent shall carry out the instructions given him and faithfully discharge the trust reposed in him. If he is instructed to procure specific insurance, he must do so and if there is a general undertaking to keep the property of the principal insured, the agent is liable if he neglects to renew the insurance on the property. Fries-Breslin Co. v. Bergen, 168 Fed. 360, affirmed 176 Fed. 76, 99 C. C. A. 384.

The cases are almost uniform in holding that an insurance agent or broker who undertakes to procure insurance is liable to the applicant for his failure to do so. Manny v. Dunlap, Woolw. 372, 3 West. Jur. 329, 17 Pittsb. Leg. J. 11, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,047; Morris v. Summerl, 2 Wash. C. C. 203, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,837; Evan L. Reed Mfg. Co. v. Wurts, 187 Ill. App. 378; Everett v. O'Leary, 90 Minn. 154, 95 N. W. 901; Ela v. French, 11 N. E. 356; Lindsay v. Pettigrew, 5 S. D. 500, 59 N. W. 726; Gegare v. Fox River Land, etc. Co. 152 Wis. 548, 140 N. W. 305. And see the reported case. See also French v. Reed, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 308. "An agent who takes his principal's money under an express agreement to procure insurance and unjustifiably fails to secure the same or make an effort in that direction, thereby assumes the risk and becomes liable, in case of loss, to pay as much of the same, as would have been covered by the insurance policy for which his principal had paid, provided the same had been procured as directed." Lindsay v. Pettigrew, 5 S. D. 500, 59 N. W. 726.

If an agent is in the habit of effecting insurance for his correspondent and is directed to procure such insurance, but neglects to do so, he will be answerable for the losses as insurer and is entitled to a premium as such. Morris v. Summerl, 2 Wash. C. C. 203, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,837. So an agent will be liable if he neglects to renew a policy which has expired if he is the agent of the insured to keep the premises insured. Thomas v. Funkhouser, 91 Ga. 478, 18 S. E. 312. And see Diamond v. Duncan (Tex.) 172 S. W. 1100, affirmed 138 S. W. 429, rehearing denied 177 S. W. 955.

"If an agent neglects to procure insurance or does not follow instructions when obligated so to do, or if the policy obtained is void or materially defective through the agent's fault, or if the principal suffers damage by reason of any mistake or act of omission or commission of the agent which constitutes a breach of duty to his principal, he is liable to his principal for any loss he may have sustained thereby." Evan L. Reed Mfg. Co. v. Wurts, 187 Ill. App. 378. See to the same effect Rudd Paper Box Co. v. Rice, 20 Ont. W. Rep. 979, 3 Ont. W. N. 534, 3 Dominion L. Rep. 253.

In Russell v. O'Conner, 120 Minn. 66, 139 N. W. 184, it appeared that the defendant, an insurance agent, received instructions from the owner of property to procure insurance on a certain building of the details of which he had knowledge by virtue of prior insurance transactions between the parties, and that he undertook to insure the property by saying: "I will attend to that right away." It was held that he undertook to use reasonable diligence to get the property insured and take all steps necessary to authorize him to write the policy, and in the event of his being unable to protect the plaintiff's property by insurance then to notify the plaintiff of his inability so to do. And whether the defendant fulfilled his obligations as to the exercise of reasonable diligence to get the property insured, and as to notifying the plaintiff of his inability so to do were held to be questions of fact for the jury. See also Gardner v. Hermann, 116 Minn. 161, 133 N. W. 558.

Where one undertakes to effect insurance in accordance with instructions he impliedly undertakes to give notice to the owner in the event of his failure to procure such insurance. Callander v. Oelrichs, 5 Bing N. Cas. 58; 35 E. C. L. 29. And see Gardner v. Hermann, supra. The duty of the agent to give his principal notice of his inability to procure insurance does not arise until after the lapse of a reasonable time in which to make due efforts to place the insurance. Backus v. Ames, 79 Minn. 145, 81 N. W. 766.

Where insurance agents undertook to place a person's insurance and to keep it up to the sum of $7,000, it was held in Kaw Brick Co. v. Hogsett, 73 Mo. App. 432, that the employment was a continuing one, the court saying: "It was a single engagement, not two contracts or agreements—the one to place and the other to maintain, as it seems to be treated by defendants' learned counsel. And when defendants entered upon the performance thereof, as they did in placing the insurance and subsequently taking out two other policies in lieu of two canceled, then they must be held for every act of negligence, or misfeasance attributable to their conduct which brought damage to the plaintiff." The court further said:

"It can hardly be denied that the testimony in this case tends to prove that defendants agreed with plaintiff not only to place said $7,000 insurance on plaintiff's property, but as well to keep the same insured to that amount in good solvent companies. It was an employment for a definite service for an indefinite period of time. And if there was a contractual duty imposed on defendants to place and keep said insurance on plaintiff's property, then it is clear that this duty was negligently omitted and that plaintiff by reason thereof suffered loss. But for the defense it is contended that if there was such a promise it was unsupported by any valuable consideration and cannot therefore serve as the basis of an action for damages. Conceding that defendant's agreement to place and keep $7,000 insurance on plaintiff's property was, at the time it was made, without consideration moving from the plaintiff, and yet plaintiff may recover if defendants, notwithstanding the absence of a consideration, entered upon and in part performed their agreement. Mechem in his work on agency (section 478), thus expresses the rule with reference to these gratuitous promises: 'If in such a case the agent refuses to enter upon and perform the service at all; if his default consists in the mere not doing of a thing which he had promised to perform, and it be not a case where the law imposes upon him the duty to perform it, the fact that the performance was to be gratuitous, that the promise to perform was entirely without consideration, will furnish a complete defense to a claim for damages on account of such default. This is upon the familiar ground that the nonperformance of a gratuitous executory contract constitutes no cause of action. But where on the other hand the agent has undertaken or entered upon the performance of the service although it be gratuitous, it then becomes his duty to conform to the instructions given. If he were not willing to do so, he should have declined to serve; but having assumed the performance of the service, the trust and confidence reposed furnish a sufficient consideration for the undertaking to obey instructions and a failure to do so will subject him to liability for the loss or damage occasioned thereby.'"

Where an agent exercises due diligence and good faith in his effort to procure insurance as he is directed, he will not be liable if the property is destroyed before he has time to place the insurance. Arrott v. Walker, 118 Pa. St. 249, 12 Atl. 280. And the question whether a delay in procuring insurance is unreasonable, is for the jury. Rainer v. Schulte, 133 Wis. 130, 113 N. W. 396.

An agent will of course be liable to the owner of property where he delivers to him a paper purporting to be a policy issued by an insurance company which has no existence in fact. Vann v. Downing, 28 W. N. C. (Pa.) 259.

An agent will not be liable for his failure to procure insurance which would have been void if he had procured it in accordance with the directions of his principal. Alsop v. Coit, 12 Mass. 40.

Before an agent can be held liable for a failure to procure insurance, there must be a valid contract to insure and a breach thereof. A mere offer on the part of an agent to insure the owner's property will not mature into a complete and effectual contract until it is accepted by the person to whom it is made and notice of acceptance either actual or constructive is given to the agent. Prescott v. Jones, 69 N. H. 305, 41 Atl. 352. In that case it appeared that the defendants, as insurance agents, had insured the plaintiff's property in a certain insurance company until February 1, 1897; that on January 23, 1897, they notified the plaintiff that they would renew the policy and insure his property for a further term of one year from February 1, 1897, unless notified to the contrary by him. The plaintiff relied on this notice without communicating an acceptance of the offer, or in any way indicating a receipt of the notice. Thereafter and on the first day of March, 1897, the property in question was destroyed by fire, and it appeared that the defendants had failed to insure it. The court in denying the agents' liability under the circumstances said: "The defendants having designated in their offer what they would recognize as notice of its acceptance, namely, failure of the plaintiff to notify them to the contrary, they may properly be held to have waived the necessity of formally communicating to them the fact of its acceptance by him. But this did not render acceptance on his part any less necessary than it would have been if no particular form of acceptance had been prescribed, for it is well settled that 'a party cannot by the wording of his offer, turn the absence of communication of acceptance into an acceptance, and compel the recipient of his offer to refuse it at the peril of being held to have accepted it.' . . . 'A person is under no obligation to do or say anything concerning a proposition which he does not choose to accept. There must be actual acceptance or there is no contract.' . . . And to constitute acceptance, 'there must be words, written or spoken, or some other overt act.' Bish. Cont. § 329, and authorities cited. If, therefore, the defendants might and did make their offer in such a way as to dispense with the communication of its acceptance to them in a formal and direct manner they did not and could not so frame it as to render the plaintiff liable as having accepted it merely because he did not communicate his intention not to accept it. And if the plaintiff was not bound by the offer until he accepted it, the defendants could not be, because 'it takes two to make a bargain,' and as contracts rest on mutual promises both parties are bound, or neither is bound. The inquiry as to the defendants' liability for the non-performance of their offer thus becomes restricted to the question, did the plaintiff accept the offer, so that it became by his action clothed with legal consideration and perfected with the requisite condition of mutuality? As, in morals, one who creates an expectation in another by a gratuitous promise is doubtless bound to make the expectation good, it is perhaps to be regretted that, upon the facts before us, we are constrained to answer the question in the negative. While a gratuitous undertaking is binding in honor, it does not create a legal responsibility. Whether wisely and equitably or not, the law requires a consideration for those promises which it will enforce; and as the plaintiff paid no premium for the policy which the defendants proposed to issue, nor bound himself to pay any, there was no legal consideration for their promise, and the law will not enforce it. Then, again, there was no mutuality between the parties. All the plaintiff did was merely to determine in his own mind that he would accept the offer—for there was nothing whatever to indicate it by way of speech or other appropriate act. Plainly, this did not create any rights in his favor as against the defendants. From the very nature of a contract this must be so; and it therefore seems superfluous to add that the universal doctrine is that an uncommunicated mental determination cannot create a binding contract."

Failure to Consummate Policy Procured.

The duty of an agent who undertakes to procure insurance is not wholly performed by his procuring duly executed policies from the company and delivering them to the insured. In order to relieve himself from liability, he must if charged by his contract with that duty pay over the premiums to the company, and on failure to do so he will be held liable to the insured for the loss occasioned thereby. Antiseptic Bedding Co. v. Gurofsky, 33 Ont. L. Rep. 319, 8 Ont. W. N. 92 (modified 7 Ont. W. N. 95).

In Criswell v. Riley, 5 Ind. App. 496, 30 N. E. 1101, 32 N. E. 814, it appeared that the plaintiff applied to his broker for insurance which the latter undertook and agreed to procure, and pursuant to the undertaking and agreement he delivered to the plaintiff a certain duly executed policy, on the receipt of which the plaintiff paid to the agent the full amount of the premium. The agent failed to transmit the premium to the insurance company or to any person authorized to receive the money for the company, such a payment being a condition precedent to the company's liability. Thereafter the property covered by the supposed insurance policy, was destroyed by fire and the plaintiff learning for the first time that the premium had not been paid over to the company brought suit against the agent for the loss sustained. This court in affirming a recovery said: "If the appellant was the agent of appellee in procuring for him the insurance, in the delivery of the policy, collecting the premium, and through his negligence failed to pay the premium received from the appellee, by reason of which the policy was forfeited or void, then the appellant was liable for the damages sustained by the fire by the appellee for the amount of the loss not exceeding the amount of the insurance, and the insurance company was exempt from liability. The evidence tends to establish . . . that the appellant was the agent of the appellee in the procurement of said insurance, the payment of the premium to the insurance company after having received the same from the appellee, and in attending to all matters connected therewith; that the appellant was in no sense the agent of the insurance company; that it was through his fault and negligence in not paying over the premium to said company that the policy of insurance he undertook and agreed to procure for the appellee could not be enforced against said insurance company, and that under the evidence in the case the appellant became liable to the appellee for the damages found by the court." See also Marrian v. Robbins, 102 App. Div. 214, 92 N. Y. S. 654.

But under a similar state of facts it was held in Haight v. Kremer, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 50, 29 Leg. Int. 30, that the agent was not liable to the insured who compromised with the insurer for less than the amount insured for, for the difference between the amount paid and the face of the policy. The court rested its decision on the ground that the payment of a certain sum by the company and its acceptance by the plaintiff operated as a waiver of the objection that the premium had not been paid, and a ratification of the policy as a valid contract of insurance.

Measure of Damages.

In an action against an agent to recover damages for a breach of contract to insure the principal's property, the measure of damages in case of the destruction of the property is the value thereof, up to the amount for which it was agreed that insurance should be procured. Morris v. Summerl, 2 Wash. C. C. 203, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,837; Alabama Red Cedar Co. v. Tennessee Valley Bank (Ala.) 78 So. 980; Criswell v. Riley, 5 Ind. App. 496, 30 N. E. 1101, 32 N. E. 814; Everett v. O'Leary, 90 Minn. 154, 95 N. W. 901; Lindsay v. Pettigrew, 5 S. D. 500, 59 N. W. 726. And see the reported case. See also Emery v. Lord, 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 589. "If the defendant could not or did not procure the issuance of the insurance contemplated, and a loss by fire occurring, the measure of liability would be the amount the plaintiff would have been paid if valid insurance had been effected." Alabama Red Cedar Co. v. Tennessee Valley Bank (Ala.) 78 So. 980.

So it was held in Morris v. Summerl, 2 Wash. C. C. 203, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,837, that the amount of loss for which an underwriter who had subscribed the policy would have been answerable, was the only measure of damages against an insurance broker who was in the habit of looking after the plaintiff's insurance and who neglected to procure the insurance which he was directed to make. The agent, it was held, was entitled to set off the amount of the premium.

Where a person to whom books were consigned to be sold on commission, agreed among other things to insure the books against loss by fire at his own expense, it was held that his failure to procure the insurance rendered him liable to the consignor for their full value. Ela v. French, 11 N. H. 356, wherein the court said: "The loss to the plaintiff was the value of the books; and we must presume, in the absence of evidence, that if they had been insured, it would have been for their value."

GAFFEY ET AL.

v.

ST. PAUL FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

New York Court of Appeals—June 5, 1917.

221 N. Y. 113; 116 N. E. 778.

Automobile Insurance — Loss — Contract for Settlement — Effect.

Plaintiffs' auto, insured by defendant for $2,500, was burned, and plaintiffs filed claim for total loss, and defendant disputed it, and offered to settle it for $2,000, or to ship the car for repairs, and plaintiffs elected to accept the proposition for repairs, stating that defendant must make the car as good as before the fire, and not delay too long, and defendant then wrote plaintiffs that it had made arrangements to ship the car and would at once proceed with the repairs, and that it estimated that it would take about four weeks for repairs. It is held that a settlement contract arose, terminating all rights under the policy contract, so that the only remedy thereafter was for breach of the new contract.

[See note at end of this case.]

Gaffey v. St. Paul Fire, etc. Ins. Co. 164 N. Y. App. Div. 381, reversed.

Appeal from Appellate Division of Supreme Court, Third Judicial Department.

Action by Agnes Gaffey et al., plaintiffs, against St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company, defendant. Judgment for defendant at Trial Term of Supreme Court. Judgment reversed by Appellate Division of Supreme Court. Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

William J. Roche and William H. Hollister, Jr. for appellant.

H. D. Bailey and Thomas F. Powers for respondents.

[115] HOGAN, J.—May 1st, 1911, defendant issued to plaintiffs a policy of insurance upon an automobile delivery truck, wherein it insured plaintiffs to an amount not exceeding two thousand five hundred dollars, against loss or damage by fire. By the terms of the policy, the automobile insured (body, machinery and equipment) was by agreement of the parties valued at the sum for which the same was insured, namely, $2,500.

The policy provided:

[116] "25. This Company shall be liable to pay hereunder such proportion of any ascertained loss or damages as the sum insured bears to the said valuation."

"12. In ascertaining the amount of any partial loss or damage, only the cost of repairing or, if necessary, replacing the parts damaged or destroyed, including the charges incidental thereto, shall be considered."

October 11th, 1911, the automobile became disabled on the highway between the city of Troy, the residence of plaintiffs, and Ballston Spa, Saratoga county. The truck was left on the roadway and on October 12th the fire occurred. This action was brought on the policy to recover for the loss resulting therefrom.

Upon a trial of the action the complaint was dismissed at the close of the case. Upon appeal from the judgment entered thereon the Appellate Division by a divided court reversed the judgment and granted a new trial. From such order and judgment the defendant appeals to this court.

The plaintiffs on October 23d filed a proof of loss, claiming the loss sustained by them at $2,500. Under date of October 25th, 1911, defendant's general agents addressed a letter to the plaintiffs, which reads:

SAINT PAUL FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

NEW YORK, October 25, 1911.

Messrs. SAGE & GAFFEY,
800 River Street,
Troy, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN.—We have before us our inspector's report in reference to the damage to your automobile truck insured under policy No. 56492 and have to advise that as the car was damaged and taken apart to a considerable extent prior to the fire and the extensive damage done by the fire was in consequence of this, there are a number of items, therefore, that we are not responsible for; such as the damaged gears, crank case, chains, etc., and in view of these circumstances, we will settle this [117] claim on the basis of paying you $2,000, or we will have the car shipped to New York for repairs.

Please let us hear from you at once as to which of these propositions you desire to accept.

Yours very truly,

WHITON & MERGES,

A. W. S.

General Agents,

By A. WHELFLEY.

On October 26th, 1911, plaintiffs replied to the letter as follows:

Troy, N. Y., Oct. 26th, 1911.

Messrs. WHITON & MERGES:

GENTS.—In reply to yours of the 25th will say that if you make the car as good as before the fire and not delay us too long that will be all right. As far as the missing parts are concerned, the only part taken after we discovered the fire were the chains. We have located them. The rest of the stuff we look to you for.

Yours truly,

SAGE & GAFFEY,

800-802 River St.,

Troy, N. Y.

November 2d, 1911, defendant's agents wrote the plaintiffs, stating in effect that they had made arrangements to have the truck shipped to New York and would at once proceed with the repairs. The letter further stated: "We estimate that it will take about four (4) weeks to repair it in" and requested the plaintiffs to forward by express at once any parts they might have which were not with the truck. The plaintiffs had knowledge of the whereabouts of the chains belonging to the truck, as stated by them in their letter of October 26th. Upon the trial one of the plaintiffs testified that the chains were not sent as requested and gave as a reason therefor "that they were up there on the ground, I didn't send them down, I thought if they wanted them they could come after them."

[118] No further action was taken by plaintiffs after the letter of November 2d. The defendant wrote plaintiffs on November 10th, 1911, advising them that the repairs had been started, that they had not heard from them in reference to shipping the chains and asked them to ship them as defendant did not wish to delay the work.

Plaintiffs did not reply to any letters addressed to them by defendant after the 2d of November. They did not complain of the action of the defendant in moving the truck from Saratoga county to the city of New York for the purpose of making repairs thereon.

January 8th, 1912, defendant addressed a letter to the plaintiffs informing them that the truck which had been damaged by fire, giving the number of the same, had been fully repaired and made as good as before the fire according to correspondence and agreement in the letter of plaintiffs of October 26th, 1911; that upon receipt of advices from plaintiffs the defendant would, as agreed, attach to the car, free of expense any model of body which plaintiffs would suggest, not to exceed the cost of the body upon the car originally, concerning which they asked to be advised. The letter also tendered to plaintiffs the machine so repaired and offered to deliver the same to them at Troy or any other place they might name, free of expense, upon receipt of such information as to place of delivery. The plaintiffs made no reply to this letter, and subsequently commenced this action.

It is important to consider the relations existing between the parties prior to the commencement of this action. The plaintiffs on October 23d, 1911, filed proof of loss claiming to be entitled to the sum of $2,500 for a total loss. They received from the defendant the letter of October 25th, referring to the inspector's report as to the damage, and were informed in substance that the defendant denied liability for at least a portion of the damage done, by reason of the fact that the car had been taken apart prior to the fire, and in view of the circumstances [119] the defendant offered to pay to the plaintiffs two thousand dollars or have the car shipped to New York for repairs, and asked plaintiffs which of the propositions they desired to accept. Upon receipt of that proposition the plaintiffs had the right: (1) To reject both propositions and seek a recovery as for a total loss for which they had filed proof of loss; had they done so, the defendant under the fourteenth clause of the policy would be entitled if so advised to have the amount of loss ascertained by appraisers; (2) accept the sum of $2,000 in cash; (3) allow defendant to have the car shipped to New York for repairs. Plaintiffs did not insist upon their rights under the policy. They did not agree to accept two thousand dollars in cash, but did elect to accept the proposition to have the car repaired. Their letter of October 26th to defendant was tantamount to saying: We accept your proposition to have the car shipped to New York for repairs, but you must make it as good as new and not delay us too long.

On November 2d plaintiffs had knowledge that defendant had arranged to ship the truck to New York, and on November 10th that the truck was there, and work thereon had been commenced. From that fact but one conclusion is deducible, namely, that defendant assumed the obligation "to make the car as good as it was before the fire, and not delay too long," and thus comply with the conditional acceptance by plaintiffs of the proposition in their letter of October 26th. The defendant did not give to plaintiffs any assurance as to the length of time necessary to make the repairs. It merely made an estimate of the time at about four weeks. Defendant was entitled to a reasonable time within which to make the repairs. Plaintiffs never made complaint that the work was unreasonably delayed or that the car was not as good as it was before the fire. They remained silent and permitted defendant to complete the repairs, and when defendant tendered the truck to them and offered to [120] deliver it to them free of expense they did not acknowledge the letter, but remained silent until upwards of five months, when they commenced this action to recover $2,500 under the policy for a total loss of the car.

The election of plaintiffs to have the car repaired, and the undertaking of defendant to make the repairs within a reasonable time, created a contractual relation between the parties which terminated all rights of both parties under the policy contract. Such substituted contract deprived defendant of asserting any rights or option it had under the policy and deprived plaintiffs under the circumstances of this case of any right to assert a claim under the policy. The only remedy, if any, either party thereafter had was for breach of the new or substituted contract. (Morrell v. Irving F. Ins. Co. 33 N. Y. 429, 88 Am. Dec. 396; Wynkoop v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 478, 43 Am. Rep. 686; Heilmann v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 75 N. Y. 7.)

The order of the Appellate Division should be reversed, with costs to appellant in the Appellate Division and this court, and the judgment entered at Trial Term affirmed.

Chase, Collin, Pound and Crane, JJ., concur; Andrews, J., concurs in result; Hiscock, Ch. J., absent.

Order reversed, etc.

NOTE.

In the reported case it appeared that after the partial destruction by fire of an insured automobile the insurer offered to pay a certain sum or to repair the car. The insured accepted the latter proposition on condition that the car should be made as good as new and the repairs should not be unduly delayed. It is held that a new contract was thereby substituted for the insurance policy and that on a breach of the conditions of that contract the insured must sue thereon and could not sue on the policy. The subject of automobile insurance is fully discussed in the notes to Wettengel v. U. S. Lloyds, Ann. Cas. 1915A 626, and Crowell v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. Ann. Cas. 1917D 50.

MAYDWELL

v.

MAYDWELL ET AL.

Tennessee Supreme Court—April 24, 1916.

135 Tenn. 1; 185 S. W. 712.

Trusts and Trustees — Removal of Trustee — Ill Feeling between Trustee and Beneficiary.

Where testator's will directed his widow as trustee to apply the income from a daughter's share of the estate to the best interest of the latter and for her comfort, maintenance, and support, and friction developed between mother and daughter resulting in litigation and bad feeling, the mother will be removed as trustee on the daughter's application, irrespective of the merits of the dispute.

[See note at end of this case.]

Grounds for Removal.

The chancery court has jurisdiction, under Shannon's Code, §§ 5414, 5422, to remove a trustee for the causes enumerated in the statute and "for other good cause" at suit of the beneficiary.

Inherent Power of Court to Remove.

A court of equity has inherent jurisdiction to remove a trustee, independent of statutory provisions, for good cause shown.

Appeal from Chancery Court, Shelby county: FENTRESS, Chancellor.

Action by Lizzie Maydwell et al., plaintiffs, against Sophie Maydwell, defendant. Judgment for defendant. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

L. T. M. Canada for appellants.
Jackson & McRee for appellee.

[2] GREEN, J.—James Maydwell died in Memphis in 1892, the owner of a considerable estate. Two-ninths of this estate was devised in trust to his wife, Mrs. Sophie Maydwell, for the benefit of testator's daughter, Lizzie Maydwell, now Mrs. Lizzie Hunter. Mrs. Maydwell has acted as trustee for her daughter since the death of her husband. In this case Mrs. Hunter is seeking to have her mother removed as such trustee.

The proof shows that Mrs. Maydwell is a woman of excellent business judgment. She has managed the estate well, preserving it and improving it. Likewise, Mrs. Maydwell is a woman of integrity and intelligence.

[3] The proof further shows, however, that the relations existing between Mrs. Maydwell and her daughter are quite unfriendly and have been so for several years past. They have become involved in litigation three times about the management of the trust estate. This mutual animosity appears to be deep-seated and permanent.

The chancellor was of opinion that Mrs. Maydwell was a suitable person to manage this trust and declined to remove her. Under the circumstances of this case we think his honor was in error. We think Mrs. Maydwell should be removed.

We say this without any reflection upon the honesty or acumen of Mrs. Maydwell. It is beyond doubt that she has managed this estate well. She has been diligent in collecting its revenues and by judicious improvements has greatly enhanced its value. We think she is still capable of preserving the estate and managing it wisely notwithstanding her age.

Nevertheless the proof shows that the relations between Mrs. Maydwell and her daughter, Mrs. Hunter, are such that it would be inadvisable and prejudicial to the best interest of both and of the estate for Mrs. Maydwell to be continued as trustee.

We do not undertake to fix the blame for the state of feeling between the mother and daughter, nor do we regard the responsibility for this condition to be a matter of special importance in disposing of the question before us. Under the terms of James Maydwell's will the trustee for his daughter is directed to apply the income from the daughter's share of the [4] estate to the best interests of the latter and for her comfort, maintenance, and support.

To properly discharge such duties the trustee should be on friendly terms with the beneficiary. The trustee should have the confidence of the beneficiary so as to know the needs of the latter—to appreciate what expenditures should be made for the comfort, maintenance, and support of the latter. Moreover, the trustee should be favorably disposed to the beneficiary so that the discretion of the trustee may be employed for the best interests of the beneficiary. Such a personal trust cannot be satisfactorily administered where the relations between the parties are hostile. Unless a new trustee is appointed, the antagonism between mother and daughter will result in wasting the estate in litigation, if we are to judge by the conduct of these parties in the past.

The chancery court has jurisdiction under the statutes of this State (Shannon's Code, sections 5414, 5422) to remove a trustee for the several causes enumerated in the statute, and "for other good cause," at the suit of the beneficiary.

A court of equity also has inherent jurisdiction to remove a trustee independent of statutory provisions for good cause shown. 39 Cyc. 265.

Under the great weight of authority a court of equity may remove a trustee where the relations between him and the cestui que trust are inharmonious and unfriendly. When the duties of the trustee are such as to necessitate personal contact and conference between [5] the trustee and the cestui que trust, and the relations existing between the parties have become so acrimonious as to render personal intercourse impossible, a change of trustee should be made. 39 Cyc. 263, and cases collected under note 72.

Speaking on this subject, the supreme court of the United States has said:

"The power of a court of equity to remove a trustee, and to substitute another in his place, is incidental to its paramount duty to see that trusts are properly executed; and may properly be exercised whenever such a state of mutual ill feeling, growing out of his behavior, exists between the trustees . . . in question and the beneficiaries, that his continuance in office would be detrimental to the execution of the trust, even if for no other reason than that human infirmity would prevent the cotrustee or the beneficiaries from working in harmony with him, and although charges of misconduct against him are either not made out, or are greatly exaggerated." May v. May, 167 U. S. 310, 17 S. Ct. 824, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 179.

So, for the reasons stated, we think Mrs. Maydwell should be removed as trustee. The case will be remanded, and proper orders made by the chancellor to effect this removal, and the trust turned over to a suitable person selected by the chancellor under proper orders safeguarding the estate.

NOTE.

Antagonism or Ill Feeling between Trustee and Beneficiary as Ground for Removal of Trustee.

General Rule, 1045.

Naked Trust, 1049.

Rule in Pennsylvania, 1049.

General Rule.

It may be laid down as a broad general rule that antagonism or ill feeling between trustee and beneficiary is a sufficient ground for the removal of the trustee when such ill feeling reaches such a point that personal intercourse between the parties is severed or when the lack of harmony becomes prejudicial to the best interests of the estate and of the beneficiary, for whose benefit the trust was created, and to the proper conduct of its business, even though there has been no misconduct or want of capacity on the part of the trustee.

England.—Letterstedt v. Broers, 9 App. Cas. 371, 386 et seq. 53 L. J. P. C. 44, 51 L. T. N. S. 169. See also Uvedale v. Ettrick, 2 Ch. Cas. 130.

Canada.—Garesche v. Garesche, 4 British Columbia 310.

United States.—May v. May, 167 U. S. 310, 17 S. Ct. 824, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 179, affirming 5 App. Cas. (D. C.) 552, 41 L.R.A. 767.

Georgia.—Parsons v. Jones, 26 Ga. 644.

Illinois.—Lorenz v. Weller, 267 Ill. 230, 108 N. E. 306; Wylie v. Bushnell, 277 Ill. 484, 115 N. E. 618.

Iowa.—Keating v. Keating, 165 N. W. 74.

Kentucky.—Berry v. Williamson, 11 B. Mon. 245; Clark v. Anderson, 10 Bush 99.

Maryland.—Polk v. Linthicum, 100 Md. 615, 60 Atl. 455, 69 L.R.A. 920.

Massachusetts.—Scott v. Rand, 118 Mass. 215; Wilson v. Wilson, 145 Mass. 490, 14 N. E. 521, 1 Am. St. Rep. 477.

Missouri.—Gartside v. Gartside, 113 Mo. 348, 20 S. W. 669; Gaston v. Hayden, 98 Mo. App. 683, 73 S. W. 938; Lowe v. Montgomery, 117 Mo. App. 273, 92 S. W. 916. See also Morrow v. Morrow, 113 Mo. App. 444, 87 S. W. 590.

New Hampshire.—Barker v. Barker, 73 N. H. 353, 6 Ann. Cas. 596, 62 Atl. 166, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 802.

New York.—Deraismes v. Dunham, 22 Hun 86; In re Morgan, 63 Barb. 621; Quackenboss v. Southwick, 41 N. Y. 117; Disbrow v. Disbrow, 46 App. Div. 111, 61 N. Y. S. 614, affirmed in 167 N. Y. 606, 60 N. E. 1110; Matter of Etgen, 146 App. Div. 932, 132 N. Y. S. 308; In re Chapman, 2 N. Y. S. 248. See also Trask v. Sturges, 31 Misc. 195, 63 N. Y. S. 1084, affirmed 56 App. Div. 625, 69 N. Y. S. 1149, reversed on other grounds 170 N. Y. 482, 63 N. E. 534.

Tennessee.—See the reported case.

In each of the following cases the trustee was removed because of antagonism between him and the beneficiary: Letterstedt v. Broers, 9 App. Cas. (Eng.) 371, 386 et seq. 53 L. J. P. C. 44, 51 L. T. N. S. 169; Garesche v. Garesche, 4 British Columbia 310; May v. May, 167 U. S. 310, 17 S. Ct. 824, 42

U. S. (L. ed.) 179, affirming 5 App. Cas. (D. C.) 552, 41 L.R.A. 767; Keating v. Keating (Ia.) 165 N. Y. 74; Polk v. Linthicum, 100 Md. 615, 60 Atl. 455, 69 L.R.A. 920; Scott v. Rand, 118 Mass. 215; Wilson v. Wilson, 145 Mass. 490, 14 N. E. 521, 1 Am. St. Rep. 477; Gartside v. Gartside, 113 Mo. 348, 20 S. W. 669; Gaston v. Hayden, 98 Mo. App. 683, 73 S. W. 938; Barker v. Barker, 73 N. H. 353, 6 Ann. Cas. 596, 62 Atl. 166, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 802; In re Morgan, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 621; Deraismes v. Dunham, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 86; Quackenboss v. Southwick, 41 N. Y. 117; Disbrow v. Disbrow, 46 App. Div. 111, 61 N. Y. S. 614, affirmed in 167 N. Y. 606, 60 N. E. 1110; Matter of Etgen, 146 App. Div. 932, 132 N. Y. S. 308; In re Chapman, 2 N. Y. S. 248. And see the reported case.

In Keating v. Keating (Ia.) 165 N. W. 74, it appeared that property was left in trust to one son to pay the proceeds thereof to another son for his support, with a provision that the trustee should convey the property, which consisted of real estate, to the beneficiary when, in the judgment of the trustee, he should be a careful and prudent man. Considerable friction arose between the two brothers as to whether the beneficiary was entitled to a conveyance of the property, which resulted in an action brought by the beneficiary to remove the trustee. The court said: "A rule has also been applied that where the duties of the trustee are such as to bring the parties into personal touch or intercourse with each other, and the relations between them have become so hostile and acrimonious that the trustee's continuance in office would be detrimental to the trust and destructive of the mutual confidence which ought to exist with respect to the business, the court is at liberty to remove the trustee, even though he be not charged with any dishonesty, and if necessary appoint another against whom no such objection exists. May v. May, 167 U. S. 321, 322, 17 S. Ct. 824, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 179; 30 Cyc. p. 263. We think there can be no doubt that the defendant from an early date in the history of affairs leading up to this suit has assumed an attitude and asserted an authority amounting to a practical denial of the trust as we have interpreted it. The plaintiff was and always would be an unfit person to be intrusted with the legal title to the property seems to have been settled in defendant's own mind from the start, and that whatever benefit plaintiff should receive from the property should at most be limited to the income during life, leaving the legal title in himself to do with as he saw fit. It may be conceded that he has been and is perfectly sincere in his opinion or belief in this respect, but it is very evident that such convictions and such attitude disqualify him for the duties of trustee of his brother's rights and interests almost if not quite as completely as if he were led by actual sinister motives—a situation which, if the trust were to be continued, would call for a change of trustees. These conclusions render it unnecessary to make further reference to the hostility which now marks the relations between these brothers except to say the friction and dissatisfaction which has been culminating through a series of years cannot have been otherwise than greatly aggravated by circumstances and incidents of the trial below concerning which specific mention need not now be made."

In Gartside v. Gartside, 113 Mo. 348, 20 S. W. 669, on a bill brought by certain beneficiaries to remove the defendant as the trustee of certain property left by his father, it was shown that great hostility existed between the trustee and certain of the beneficiaries, which interfered with the proper administration of the estate. The court ordered the removal of the trustee saying: "Hostility between the trustee and the cestui que trust is not of itself a sufficient ground of removal, unless it appears that the action of the former is probably controlled or might be controlled by it. . . . In our opinion the hostility of these parties and the situation and nature of the property and their relations to it made the continuance of defendant as trustee incompatible with the best interests of the beneficiaries, and he should be removed. The position is supported by authority and, it seems to us, upon principle too. Perry on Trusts, sec. 276, and cases cited."

In Wilson v. Wilson, 145 Mass. 490, 14 N. E. 521, 1 Am. St. Rep. 477, it appeared that a testatrix devised property to trustees, one of whom was her son, in trust, to pay such portion of the income to her husband as they should from time to time think proper during his life, and to dispose of the remainder on his death. The husband brought a petition for the removal of his son as one of the trustees under a statute providing for the removal of a trustee when removal should appear to be essential to the interests of the applicants. The court held that it was essential to the interests of the petitioner that the trustee should be removed owing to the fact that strong mutual hostility existed between him and the petitioner, since the trustee in view of that hostility could not be relied on to act fairly towards the beneficiary, saying: "We think it was within the province of the presiding justice to decide whether, upon all the evidence, the trustee should be removed. The relation between the father and son created by the will is one of extreme delicacy. The trustees have full power to determine what allowance the father shall have, limited only by the duty of exercising a fair and reasonable discretion. Every one instinctively feels that a state of mutual hostility between the trustee and such a beneficiary, arising after the trust was created, caused in part by the fault of the trustee, unfits him, to a greater or less degree, for the fair execution of the trust. But from the nature of the case it would be very difficult, if not impossible to find distinct proof that, in exercising his discretion, the trustee was actuated or influenced by such hostility. And yet it may be apparent that, according to the laws which generally govern human action, he could not be relied upon to act fairly towards the beneficiary. We think that in a case like this where the duty of a trustee is so delicate, where the hostility has arisen since the trust was created, and is attributable in part to the fault of the trustee, where the existence of the hostility would naturally pervert his feelings and judgment, it is competent for a justice to remove a trustee without further proof of misconduct, upon the ground that the removal appears essential to the interests of the beneficiary. In McPherson v. Cox, 96 U. S. 404, 419 [24 U. S. (L. ed.) 746], Mr. Justice Miller states that, 'where a trustee is charged with an active trust, which gives him some discretionary power over the rights of the cestui que trust, and which brings him into constant personal intercourse with the latter, it may be conceded that the mere existence of strong mutual ill feeling between the parties will, under some circumstances, justify a change by the court.' In Scott v. Rand, 118 Mass. 215, it is said in the opinion, that the question of removing a trustee depends upon 'a careful consideration of all the circumstances, the existing relations, and to some extent the state of feeling between the parties. It is addressed to the reasonable discretion of the court.' And the trustee was removed, although he acted from honest motives, mainly upon the ground that, in a quarrel between the cestui que trust and her husband, he had taken the part of the husband, and thus created unfriendly relations with her."

In Disbrow v. Disbrow, 46 App. Div. 111, 61 N. Y. S. 614, the petitioner was one of the beneficiaries under a deed of trust, and it appearing that hostility and ill feeling had sprung up between the trustees under the deed and the petitioner, which interfered with the proper execution of the trust, the court removed the trustee, saying: "There is no doubt but that the supreme court has the power to remove, when a sufficient cause exists, trustees from the management of trust estates, and the exercise of this power does not necessarily depend upon proof of actual mismanagement, misconduct or dishonesty of the trustees. Whenever the court can see that inharmonious or unfriendly relations exist between the trustees, or between them and the cestui que trust, and that by reason of such inharmonious and unfriendly relations material injury may and is likely to result to the trust estate, it will exercise the power which it has, and to prevent that injury it will remove one, or, if the interest of the estate requires it, all of the trustees."

In May v. May, 167 U. S. 310, 17 S. Ct. 824, 42 U. S. (L. ed.) 179, affirming 5 App. Cas. (D. C.) 552, it appeared that property was left in trust to the testator's wife and son, for certain purposes. On account of discordant relations between the son, his mother, and the other beneficiaries, owing to the son's arbitrary manner in conducting the business of the trust estate, it became impossible for his mother to hold any intercourse with him with reference to said business and she was obliged to employ a third person to represent her. By virtue of a clause in the will, she, together with the other beneficiaries under the will, passed a resolution removing the son and appointed another trustee, who demanded that the son should turn everything connected with the trust over to him. The son brought suit to enjoin the defendants and the new trustee from claiming any right or doing any act under that resolution. The son's removal as trustee was decreed, the court saying: "In the supreme court of the District of Columbia, Justice Hagner said: 'In the present case, the testimony clearly proves that between Mrs. May, the other trustee, and William May there exists so wide a breach that they can have no personal communication. The jealousy and unfriendliness existing before the testator's death on each side has widened into positive, distinct and most unnatural enmity. On William May's part, it has been undoubtedly increased by his mother's positive refusal to confer with him on the business of the estate, because, as she testifies, quarrels would always result from such conferences, which would be perilous to her health, and also by the terms in which she had expressed herself towards him in her pleadings and testimony in this cause and by her execution of the instrument intended to effect his removal; and, on the part of Mrs. May, that dislike has been intensified by the statements in William May's pleadings and his testimony, and perhaps more pointedly because of his introduction of the painful correspondence, many years old, between her husband and herself, and of Dr. May's letters to the plaintiff on the subject of his domestic troubles. She and all the beneficiaries having testified in painful terms that they believe him to be untrustworthy, dishonest, dictatorial and disagreeable in manner, and incompetent as a business man. Under such circumstances, anything like free conference between the trustees, or concert of action, in the proper sense of the term, is impossible. If either is to act at all as trustee, each must pursue his or her independent way, with a certainty of differing as to the proper performance of many of the duties of the trust, if not as to all.' This unfortunate state of feelings between the trustee and sisters and brother must equally prevent that peaceable intercourse that beneficiaries should enjoy with the party charged with the management of their interests in this considerable estate. They are certainly entitled to confer in peace with the agent appointed to manage their affairs, and receive from him good tempered explanations, and give their suggestions as to what they consider the proper steps in the management of their business, without risk of unpleasant disputes, naturally liable to increase in violence at each successive difference. Such a state of affairs would ultimately become insufferable and most hurtful to the interests of all concerned."

In each of the following cases it did not appear that the relations between the trustee and beneficiary were such as to interfere with the beneficial administration of the trust, and the trustee was not removed: Lorens v. Weller, 267 Ill. 230, 108 N. E. 306; Wylie v. Bushnell, 277 Ill. 484, 115 N. E. 618; Berry v. Williamson, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 245; Clark v. Anderson, 10 Bush. (Ky.) 99; Lowe v. Montgomery, 117 Mo. App. 273, 92 S. W. 916.

In Berry v. Williamson, supra, the court said: "Although harmony and mutual confidence between the trustee and the beneficiaries are certainly desirable, they are not actually necessary for the purposes and intercourse of business. And when discordant feelings have arisen from discordant views as to the respective rights and duties of the parties, it may be expected that after a distinct definition of these rights and duties by the chancellor, the cause of discord will be removed, so far at least as may be necessary to the beneficial transaction of the business of the trust. And to that extent only is any importance to be attached to the personal relations or intercourse between the parties."

In Wylie v. Bushnell, 277 Ill. 484, 115 N. E. 618, it appeared that a testator died leaving certain property to Wylie in trust for certain purposes. After having acted in this capacity for some years friction arose over the way the trustee managed the estate and a bill was filed against him for his removal. One of the grounds urged for his removal was that by reason of his failure to discharge his duties as executor and trustee, such ill feeling existed between him and some of the beneficiaries that he ought to be removed as trustee. The court said: "Counsel for defendants in error further insist that the decree of the court was justified because of the ill feeling existing between plaintiff in error and some of the defendants in error. 'Mere disagreements between the trustee and cestui que trust will not justify a removal, nor the fact that the trustee forbids social intercourse between his family and the beneficiaries.' (1 Perry on Trusts (6th ed.) sec. 276. See also Anderson v. Kemper [116 Ky. 339], 76 S. W. 122; Polk v. Linthicum [100 Md. 615], 60 Atl. 455; In re Neafie, 199 Pa. St. 307; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) 980.) 'The power of removal of trustees appointed by deed or will ought to be exercised sparingly by the courts. There must be a clear necessity for interference to save trust property. Mere error, or even breach of trust, may not be sufficient. There must be such misconduct as to show want of capacity or of fidelity putting the trust in jeopardy.' (1 Perry on Trusts (6th ed.) sec. 276.) This court has held that it will not remove a trustee appointed by the testator himself even though the court might in the first instance not have appointed that person. (Lorenz v. Weller, 267 Ill. 230.)"

It has been held that a trustee should be removed on the ground of antagonism or ill feeling between him and his beneficiary when the hostility is shown to have been caused by the misconduct of the trustee. Forster v. Davies, 4 De G. F. & J. 133, 8 Jur. N. S. 65, 31 L. J. Ch. 276, 5 L. T. N. S. 532, 10 W. R. 180, 45 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 1134; Anderson v. Kemper, 116 Ky. 339, 76 S. W. 122, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 538; Lister v. Weeks, 60 N. J. Eq. 215, 46 Atl. 558.

In Lister v. Weeks, supra, wherein considerable friction and ill feeling was engendered by the acts of the trustee in the management of the trust property which were detrimental to the trust, it was held that the trustee should be removed as the hostility had arisen out of his own misbehavior, the court saying: "The power of a court of equity to remove a trustee and to substitute another in his place is incidental to its paramount duty to see that trusts are properly executed, and may properly be exercised whenever such a state of mutual ill feeling growing out of his behavior, exists between the trustees, or between the trustee in question and the beneficiaries, that his continuance in office would be detrimental to the execution of the trust, even if for no other reason than that human infirmity would prevent the cotrustees or the beneficiaries from working in harmony with him, and although charges of misconduct against him are either not made out or are greatly exaggerated.' Of course, friction or hostility between trustee and beneficiaries is not of itself a reason for the removal of the trustee; but where that hostility has arisen out of the misbehavior of the trustee it may be. Trustees exist for the benefit of those to whom the creator of trust has given the trust estate."

In Anderson v. Kemper, 116 Ky. 339, 76 S. W. 126, it was held that where a grantor conveyed property in trust, the income to go to him for life and the remainder to his heirs, he could not afterwards terminate the trust without the consent of the beneficiaries, and the court refused to remove the trustees on account of the strained relations which existed between the trustees and the appellant as it did not interfere with the proper discharge of the trustees' duties and the appellant's own conduct had much to do with the ill feeling which had arisen. The court said: "Appellant complains at the treatment received at the hands of his trustees and charges that their relations are so strained that it is improper that they should be continued. So far as his treatment at the hands of his trustees is concerned, the record discloses that they have managed his estate with strict fidelity, and with unusual ability. It has increased in value and in earning capacity. It has been changed under the power of the deed from an unproductive estate to one that has yielded a support sufficient to have maintained appellant despite the fact that he has been unable to do anything towards his own support. This has entailed upon the trustees considerable labor, great vigilance, and on numerous occasions the advancement of their private means of accommodation of appellant's wants. In this way, as well as by reason of certain needed improvements made upon the property so as to make it productive, the income of the estate has been anticipated, and by the judgment of the court these excessive expenditures have been adjudged to appellee trustees as a charge against the income but subordinate to the support of the appellant. The relations between the trustees and appellant do not appear to be at all cordial. Yet it does not appear that the trustees have failed in any instance to provide appellant with every necessity that the estate would afford—even more. They have kept him strictly within his income—as they should have done—save when, for some reason, the income was abnormally reduced for the time being—as by the property being without tenants, etc. More than a punctual, scrupulous administration of the trust is not required. It does not matter so much what was the state of feeling between the parties, so long as it did not interfere with a just and proper discharge of the fiduciary duties. Appellant's own conduct and misjudgment of the trustees is doubtless responsible for much that he feels towards them."

Naked Trust.

When the bare legal title to the property is in the trustee, the beneficiary having the actual possession and supervision of it, so that personal contact and conferences between the parties are rendered unnecessary for the proper execution of the trust, the trustee will not be removed on the ground of antagonism or ill feeling between him and his beneficiary. McPherson v. Cox, 96 U. S. 404, 24 U. S. (L. ed.) 746; Nickels v. Philips, 18 Fla. 732; Parsons v. Jones, 26 Ga. 644.

In Parsons v. Jones, supra, it appeared that the testator left property in trust for the benefit of his daughter during her life, the remainder to her children, naming his two sons as trustees. The property was turned over to the life tenant and she received the rents and profits therefrom. In the course of time antagonism and ill feeling developed between the trustees and the beneficiaries, and the latter sued to have the trustees removed. The court said: "That a jury should believe, before they removed a trustee, that the property was in danger of suffering a serious and irreparable injury by the continuance of said trustee in office.

. . . The court does not say that these trustees may not be removed at the suit of the life tenant alone; but it does say that before this can be done, there must be satisfactory proof of such conduct on the part of the defendants, as that the property itself is, therefrom, in danger of destruction or loss, or its full and free enjoyment by the life tenant withheld or hindered. Two causes for removal have been insisted upon. First, the hostile feelings existing between the complainants and defendants. The court instructs the jury that no misunderstanding between the parties, even though it amount to hostility, unless it lead the defendants to hostile acts, is sufficient cause for removal."

In Nickels v. Philips, 18 Fla. 732, it appeared that real property was conveyed to the defendant, in trust, for the use of the grantor's wife and daughter. The grantor, his wife and daughter were in possession of the property, and the trustee had not meddled with it or its rents and profits. The bill stated that friction had existed between the trustee and the beneficiaries for a long time and that all intercourse between them had ceased, and prayed that another trustee should be appointed. The court said: "The rules thus laid down by Judge Story are the result of all the adjudications touching the subject. All the 'causes' mentioned in the books for the removal of trustees are such as are substantial and such as to require the interposition of the court in order to preserve the property for the benefit of the cestui que trust, and to secure its management for the best interests of the parties concerned. There is no allegation in the bill of any unfitness of the defendant or any want of care in the management of the property. Indeed the complainants have always since its purchase enjoyed it without any interference and unmolested by him. No fact is stated, showing that he has any disposition to annoy them in any manner or to do any act to affect the property to their injury or discomfort. He is a mere naked trustee holding the legal title for their benefit and convenience. The only charge against him is that he has denied to them social intercourse with himself and his family. While such a state of things is to be regretted, yet the uniform rule adopted by the courts is that unless the conduct, condition, or omission of the trustee are such as to endanger the property or disturb the enjoyment of it, or shall show a want of integrity, capacity or fidelity in the discharge of his duty as a trustee, the court will not interfere. The mere existence of a family feud, not resulting in any damage whatever, nor threatening to impair or in any wise affect the rights of the parties, is not a sufficient ground upon which to demand the intervention of the court to displace the trustee."

Rule in Pennsylvania.

Under a Pennsylvania statute passed in 1868, it has been held that a trustee may be removed on a petition showing the existence of hostile relations which prevent all intercourse between the trustee and the beneficiary and tend to interfere with the proper conduct of the business. In re Neafie, 199 Pa. St. 307, 49 Atl. 129, overruling In re Nathan, 191 Pa. St. 404, 43 Atl. 313, 44 W. N. C. 169; In re Price, 209 Pa. St. 210, 58 Atl. 280. See also Marsden's Estate, 166 Pa. St. 213, 31 Atl. 46; In re Myer, 205 Pa. St. 413, 54 Atl. 1093; Hille's Estate, 9 W. N. C. (Pa.) 421; Syfert's Estate, 9 Phila. 320, 30 Leg. Int. 36, 3 W. N. C. 565; In re Martin, 4 Pa. Dist. 219.

In the case of In re Price, supra, the petitioner asked for the removal of trustees, alleging inharmonious relations. The court dismissed the petition saying: "The Act of 1868 was intended to facilitate the exercise of the powers of the court over the removal of trustees and to enlarge the influence and authority in that respect of the cestui que trust. But it was not intended to subject the office of trustee and the discretion of the court to a mandatory whim of the cestui que trust. The court still retains the authority to require that a valid and sufficient cause shall be shown for the removal. This was the construction of the act adopted in Stevenson's Appeal, 68 Pa. St. 101, and after some departures, more apparent than real, as said by our brother Mestrezat, in re Neafie, 199 Pa. St. 307, finally settled in the case last named. . . . While inharmonious relations between trustee and cestui que trust, not altogether the fault of the former, will not generally be considered a sufficient cause for removal, yet where they have reached so acrimonious a condition as to make any personal intercourse impossible and to hinder the proper transaction of business between the parties, a due regard for the interests of the estate and the rights of the cestui que trust may require a change of trustee. If his management of the trust justly subjects him to criticism and to a lack of confidence by the cestui que trust, he should not be continued in control of the estate."

SAYERS

v.

MONTPELIER AND WELLS RIVER RAILROAD.

Vermont Supreme Court—May 15, 1916.

90 Vt. 201; 97 Atl. 660.

Public Service Commissions — Collateral Attack on Order.

Within certain limitations, one may attack an order of the public service commission abolishing a grade crossing, collaterally, notwithstanding he was a party and could have had an appeal.

Effect of Order — Liability of Corporation Obeying Order.

Under P. S. 4544, making it the duty of the public service commission to determine by whom its orders shall be executed, the defendant railroad, in carrying out the commission's plans for the elimination of grade crossings on its tracks and in constituting farm crossings for the use of plaintiff, was acting as the agent selected by the commission; and if the order was a valid exercise of the powers of the commission, it relieves the defendant from liability.

Judicial Review of Order of Commission — Power of Court of Equity.

A court of chancery, not acting as an appellate tribunal, will not interfere with the proceedings and determinations of inferior boards or tribunals of special jurisdiction, while acting within their powers or exercising a discretion conferred upon them by the legislature, except in special cases presenting some acknowledged and well-defined ground of equity jurisdiction.

Same.

The primary interference of the courts with the administrative functions of a public service commission, being incompatible with the proper exercise of governmental powers, although such commissions are exercising special and limited powers, as to which nothing will be presumed in favor of their jurisdiction, within the proper limits of the authority conferred upon them by the legislature, their jurisdiction is exclusive, and can be reviewed only in the manner provided by the statute.

Same.

The courts have power to prevent an abuse of discretion by a public service commission, and to require that its powers be exercised according to law and in a manner not to injure property rights unjustly.

Same.

Whether the orders of a public service commission deprive a party of a statutory right, whether he has had a fair and adequate hearing or whether, for any reason, the orders are contrary to law, are all justiciable questions, and if they arise in circumstances calling for equitable relief, a court of chancery will afford a remedy.

Jurisdiction of Commission — Abolition of Grade Crossing — Incidental Powers.

Under P. S. 4611, giving the public service commission jurisdiction in all matters respecting highway grade crossings, and P. S. 4544, as amended by Acts 1908, No. 108, providing that on petition of the selectmen of a town, within which a public highway crosses a railroad, or the general manager or attorney of such railroad alleging that public safety requires an alteration in such crossing, and praying that the same may be ordered, the commission is required to determine what changes if any, shall be made and by whom, the primary object of the statute being to provide an effectual means to secure the elimination of dangerous highway crossings, the incidental power to change the location of an existing highway is expressly conferred upon the commission, but is to be exercised as a mere incident of the real purpose of the statute.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The authority of the public service commission to change the location of highways goes no further than to order such changes as are necessary and fairly incident to the purpose of adapting railroads and public highways to each other in such a manner as best to promote the safety and convenience of the traveling public.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The power of the public service commission to change the location of highways, by necessary implication, carries with it the power to discontinue the portion that occupied the old location and to close the crossing to public travel.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

When the change in the location of a grade crossing deprives one of the benefits of a public highway, the public service commission has the right to order a farm crossing for the benefit of such individual, to the end that their power in that regard may be effectual, since whatever is reasonably necessary in order to abolish grade crossings, or fairly may be regarded as incidental thereto, is within the jurisdiction of the commission.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

P. S. 4549, as amended by Acts 1908, No. 108, § 3, expressly confers full authority upon the public service commission to condemn lands and award damages in a proceeding for the abolition of a grade crossing.

[See note at end of this case.]

Statutes — Amendment — Powers of Public Service Commission.

In amending the statute with a view to conferring full authority upon the public service commission to condemn lands and award damages, proceedings for the abolition of grade crossings, it was not necessary to change the section relating to general jurisdiction, since the provision that the commission shall determine what alterations, changes, or removals shall be made is broad enough to cover the location of new highways.

Public Service Commissions — Judicial Review.

Where the plaintiff, who was a party to proceedings before the public service commission for the abolition of grade crossings, acquiesced therein to the extent of accepting the commissioners' award of land damages and agreeing to accept the old highway crossing as a farm crossing for the exclusive use of his premises, primary jurisdiction over his petition to have the farm crossing changed is in the public service commission, and not a court of chancery, which has no power to eliminate grade crossings or locate highways.

Same.

Under Acts 1908, No. 108, § 4, providing that any person aggrieved by an order of the public service commission in proceedings for the abolition of grade crossings, who was a party to such proceedings, may appeal to the supreme court in the same manner as provided in P. S. § 4599, an appeal by the petitioner, if dissatisfied with the action of the commission on his petition to determine the location of a farm crossing and substituting an overpass, will preserve all his rights.

Appeal from Orange county: SLACK, Chancellor.

Action by J. M. Sayers, plaintiff, against Montpelier and Wells River Railroad, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

E. W. Smith for appellant.

H. O. Shurtleff for appellees.

[203] TAYLOR, J.—This proceeding grows out of the elimination of two grade crossings on the line of the Montpelier and Wells [204] River Railroad in the town of Newbury. Pursuant to the statute, defendant preferred its petition to the Public Service Commission praying that the crossings be eliminated; and such proceedings were had thereon that, on Oct. 7, 1912, the commission, having found that said crossings were among the most dangerous on the line of defendant's road and that public safety required that they be eliminated by the construction of a connecting section of public highway in the manner and locality indicated, made an order requiring the defendant to lay out and construct the connecting section of highway over the course and according to specifications detailed in the order. The commission also ordered the defendant to construct and, until further order, maintain a farm crossing at a point to be agreed upon with the plaintiff for the exclusive use of his land on the north side of the connecting section of highway; that all the work ordered be completed on or before May 1, 1913, and done to the satisfaction of the commission; that, upon the completion of the work ordered, the two highway crossings "shall forever thereafter be discontinued and abandoned as such, and the Montpelier and Wells River Railroad and its successors in the operation of said railroad shall forever thereafter fence and bar the same against public travel." The crossings to be eliminated were about fifty rods apart. The new road contemplated in the order was on the opposite side of the railroad from the old highway, but in the same general locality. After the work under this order was completed as it now is, and before plaintiff brought this bill, the commission made an order approving and accepting the work, opening the new highway for public travel and closing said highway crossing. Plaintiff was made a party to the proceedings before the commission and appeared therein but took no appeal from their orders.

In his bill of complaint, after reciting in detail the proceedings before and order of the Public Service Commission, plaintiff alleges that he is the owner of five dwelling houses and a water power located on the northerly side of defendant's railroad; that before the change effected by the order of the commission he had access to his premises by a public highway; that there is quite a large amount of travel to and from said premises; that to enjoy his premises it is necessary to have access to a highway; that the effect of said order and the action of the defendant has been to cut him off entirely from access to any public [205] highway; that defendant has not complied with so much of said order as required it to construct and maintain a farm crossing for the exclusive use of his land, but neglects and refuses so to do; that defendant has never agreed with him as to the location of said farm crossing nor furnished an adequate crossing for his benefit; that there is a ledge cut across which defendant could construct an overhead bridge, which would accommodate him and obviate the necessity of his crossing the railroad at grade to reach his premises from the public highway. In an amendment to the bill plaintiff alleges that it has been of great damage to him not to have suitable access to a highway, which damage, he says, defendant ought to pay.

The prayer of the bill is that defendant may be compelled to build and maintain an overhead bridge in lieu of a crossing at grade, or to furnish other sufficient and adequate means of access to plaintiff's premises from the highway. There is also a prayer for general relief.

For answer the defendant admits that plaintiff is the owner of land situated as alleged in the bill, that it petitioned the Public Service Commission for the abolition of the grade crossings mentioned in the bill, that the commission ordered said crossings abolished, and that the effect of their abolition was to cut off the plaintiff's land from the public highway; but alleges that the commission ordered a farm crossing constructed so as to connect plaintiff's land with the public highway, that it agreed with plaintiff as to the location of said farm crossing, that it constructed said crossing agreeably to the order of the commission, that plaintiff took no appeal from said order, assisted in the construction of the crossing and made no complaint in that regard until after the order of the commission had been fully complied with.

The cause was first heard before the Chancellor on demurrer to the bill, which defendant incorporated in its answer. The demurrer having been overruled the answer was ordered brought forward and issue thereon joined, and the cause was referred to a special master. In addition to the facts conceded in the pleadings the master finds that plaintiff agreed with defendant that a farm crossing should be constructed at the point where the original highway crossed the railroad near the easterly end of plaintiff's property; that it was mutually understood that defendant should provide a crossing at grade at that point and [206] should also provide a way to reach the highway, a distance of about ten rods, but that the location of the connecting way was not agreed upon; that defendant constructed the crossing over the tracks in a satisfactory manner; that the connecting way was constructed northerly of the old highway, turning nearly at right angles after crossing the track and extending for a distance of about ten rods alongside the railroad track and very close to it, in part at least upon defendant's right of way; that the way was so constructed and railed that it was very narrow, not exceeding 12 feet in width; that the way from the crossing was never accepted by the plaintiff nor by the selectmen of the town of Newbury, but that both plaintiff and the selectmen refuse to accept it as carrying out the order of the commission; that plaintiff has no other way to reach his premises; that the action of defendant in so constructing the connecting way has decreased the annual rental value of plaintiff's property $125; that the value of plaintiff's premises will be greatly decreased and his water privilege rendered valueless, if plaintiff is confined to the present way and crossing, on account of the difficult approach thereto. In this connection the master finds that the crossing itself is sufficient and adequate, but that the crossing in connection with the connecting way is entirely inadequate for the purposes of plaintiff and the occupants of his land; that the most direct route from the crossing to the highway is along the line of the old highway; that, if that is not practicable under the circumstances, a way farther from the railroad track could have been constructed at about the same expense. He also finds that plaintiff was allowed and paid $200 for land used in constructing the new highway, but that this land damage had nothing to do with the farm crossing and the connecting way.

The cause was heard on the pleadings and master's report, the chancellor dismissed the bill strictly pro forma, and the plaintiff comes here on appeal.

In his bill plaintiff does not attack the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission to make the order respecting a farm crossing, but bases his claim for equitable relief upon the failure of the defendant to comply with the order in that regard. He attempts now to raise the question of the jurisdiction of the commission to close the old highway and deprive him of the privileges thereof, as well as the constitutionality of the statute creating the commission. We pass without deciding whether [207] these questions are properly here, not having been raised in the bill. As to the question of the constitutionality of the statute, it is enough to say that it was considered and the statute upheld in Sabre v. Rutland R. Co. 86 Vt. 347, 85 Atl. 693, Ann. Cas. 1915C 1269. It will be necessary to discuss the question of jurisdiction in connection with other matters presented in the bill.

Plaintiff states the real case made in his bill in the concluding paragraph of his brief, wherein he contends that defendant cannot shut up the old highway without affording him suitable means of getting from the new highway to his property; and that chancery has jurisdiction to compel defendant to do what in law it ought to do, and to pay the damages occasioned by its misconduct.

In considering plaintiff's standing in equity we must take into account that he was a party to the proceedings before the Public Service Commission. It nowhere appears that he appealed to the commission for the relief sought in this bill, nor for any relief that was not granted. Neither does it appear that he objected to the plan adopted by the commission for the elimination of the crossings, nor to their approval of the manner in which their order was carried out by the defendant. He did not see fit to avail himself of the appeal from the action of the commission, which the statute secures to him, but stood by and saw the work being done under their orders carried to completion. In these circumstances will a court of equity interfere?

It should be observed that the order of the Public Service Commission is called in question collaterally in this proceeding. Within certain limitations, plaintiff is at liberty to attack the order collaterally, notwithstanding he was a party and could have had an appeal. Bessette v. Goddard, 87 Vt. 77, 88 Atl. 1; Alexander v. Montpelier, 81 Vt. 549, 71 Atl. 720. However, the true nature of the proceeding is best understood with the relation of the defendant to the order of the Commission in mind. The statute makes it the duty of the Commission to determine by whom its orders shall be executed. P. S. 4544. In all the matters complained of, the defendant was acting as the agent selected by the commission for carrying out its plans for the elimination of the crossings. It is sought to compel the defendant to undo in part what it has done under authority of the commission and to substitute a crossing and approach that the [208] commission has not seen fit to order, besides paying damages plaintiff claims to have suffered by reason of the work done under order of the commission. In these matters the defendant stands no differently than would the town of Newbury, or some individual, had either been selected to do the work required by the order; and if the order was a valid exercise of the powers of the Commission, it relieves defendant from liability. Danner v. New York, etc. R. Co. 73 Misc. 113, 130 N. Y. S. 723.

Defendant insists that the court of chancery is without jurisdiction. It is a well recognized general rule that a court of chancery, not acting as an appellate tribunal, will not interfere with the proceedings and determinations of inferior boards, or tribunals of special jurisdiction, while acting within their powers or exercising a discretion conferred upon them by the Legislature, except in special cases presenting some acknowledged and well-defined ground of equity jurisdiction, as when necessary to prevent irreparable injury or a multiplicity of suits. Ewing v. St. Louis, 5 Wall. 413, 18 U. S. (L. ed.) 657; Heffran v. Hutchins, 160 Ill. 550, 43 N. E. 700, 52 Am. St. Rep. 353; Mt. Carmel v. Shaw, 155 Ill. 37, 39 N. E. 584, 27 L.R.A. 580, 46 Am. St. Rep. 311; Methodist Protestant Church v. Baltimore, 6 Gill. (Md.) 391, 48 Am. Dec. 540; Harrisonburg v. Roller, 97 Va. 582, 34 S. E. 523; Mann v. Mercer County Ct. 58 W. Va. 651, 52 S. E. 776; Horton v. Nashville, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 39, 40 Am. Rep. 1; Kendall v. Frey, 74 Wis. 26, 42 N. W. 466, 17 Am. St. Rep. 118; Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 28 N. E. 849, 14 L.R.A. 268, 30 Am. St. Rep. 214; 4 Pom. Eq. Jur. 2678; 10 R. C. L. 343.

The similarity in purpose and function of the Public Service Commission to the Interstate Commerce Commission makes the decisions of the Federal Supreme Court concerning the powers and jurisdiction of the latter especially helpful here. It was held in Baltimore, etc. R. Co. v. U. S. 215 U. S. 481, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 292, 297, 30 S. Ct. 164, a petition for mandamus to redress grievance due to regulations adopted by the railroad company for the distribution of coal cars, that when the grievances complained of are within the administrative competency of the commission, they are not subject to be judicially enforced; at least, till that body, clothed by the statute with authority on the subject, has the opportunity to exert its administrative function. To the same effect is Texas, [209] etc. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. 204 U. S. 426, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 553, 27 S. Ct. 350, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075. Again, in Atchison, etc. R. Co. v. U. S. 232 U. S. 199, 58 U. S. (L. ed.) 568, 34 S. Ct. 291, a proceeding attaching an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission relating to rates, it was said that the courts were not vested with power to make rates, that being a legislative function, and that "they cannot interfere with the rates fixed or practices established by the commission unless it is made plainly to appear that those ordered are void." Finally, it was held in Pennsylvania Co. v. U. S. 236 U. S. 351, 59 U. S. (L. ed.) 616, 623, 35 S. Ct. 370, that, if the order made by the commission does not contravene some constitutional limitation, and is within the statutory authority of that body, and not unsupported by the testimony, it cannot be set aside by the courts, as it is only the exercise of an authority which the law vests in the commission. Mr. Justice Hughes tersely sums up the whole matter in these words: "We do not sit as a board of review to substitute our judgment for that of the Legislature, or of the commission lawfully constituted by it, as to matters within the province of either." Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 352, 57 U. S. (L. ed.) 1511, 33 S. Ct. 729, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, Ann. Cas. 1916A 18. See also Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union Pac. R. Co. 222 U. S. 541, 56 U. S. (L. ed.) 308, 311, 32 S. Ct. 108; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville, etc. R. Co. 227 U. S. 88, 57 U. S. (L. ed.) 431, 33 S. Ct. 185; Hocking Valley R. Co. v. Public Utilities Commission (Ohio) 110 N. E. 952; In re Hadley, 178 Mass. 319, 59 N. E. 805; In re Old Colony R. Co. 163 Mass. 356, 40 N. E. 198.

Argument is unnecessary to support the conclusion that primary interference of the courts with the administrative functions of a commission, like our Public Service Commission, is incompatible with the proper exercise of governmental powers. If the valid orders of the commission were open to collateral attack at the option of any party aggrieved, it would give rise to confusion and result in delay,—in short, wholly defeat the purpose of the statute creating the commission. Though exercising special and limited powers, as to which nothing will be presumed in favor of their jurisdiction (Bessette v. Goddard, 87 Vt. 77, 88 Atl. 1; Colonial Power, etc. Co. v. Creaser, 87 Vt. 457, 89 Atl. 472), still, within the proper limits of the authority conferred upon them by the Legislature, their jurisdiction is exclusive and can be reviewed only in the manner [210] provided by the statute. Undoubtedly the courts have power to prevent an abuse of discretion by the commission and to require that their powers be exercised according to law and in a manner not to injure property rights unjustly. Whether their orders deprive a party of a constitutional or statutory right, whether he has been accorded a fair and adequate hearing, or whether for any reason their orders are contrary to law, are all justiciable questions; and, if they arise in circumstances calling for equitable relief, the court of chancery will afford a remedy. See Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 215 U. S. 452, 54 U. S. (L. ed.) 280, 30 S. Ct. 155; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union Pac. R. Co. 222 U. S. 541, 56 U. S. (L. ed.) 308, 32 S. Ct. 108.

This brings us to the inquiry whether the matters here complained of were within the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission. P. S. 4611 gives the commission jurisdiction in all matters respecting highway grade crossings. P. S. 4544, as amended by No. 108, Acts of 1908, provides that on petition of the selectman of a town within which a public highway crosses or is crossed by a railroad, or the general manager or attorney of such railroad, alleging that public safety requires an alteration in such crossing, its approaches, the method of crossing, the location of the public highway, the closing of a public highway crossing and the substitution of another therefor not at grade, . . . and praying that the same may be ordered, the commission is required to determine what alteration, changes or removals, if any, shall be made and by whom. The primary object of this statute is to provide an effectual means to secure the elimination of dangerous highway crossings. As a means to that end the incidental power to change the location of an existing highway is expressly conferred upon the commission; but this power is to be exercised as a mere incident of the real purpose of the statute. Bessette v. Goddard, supra. In short, the authority of the commission to change the location of highways goes no further than to order such changes as are necessary and fairly incidental to the purpose of adapting railroads and public highways to each other in such a manner as best to promote the safety and convenience of the traveling public. See Norwood v. New York, etc. R. Co. 161 Mass. 259, 37 N. E. 199.

The power to change location of highways by necessary implication carries with it the power to discontinue the portion that occupied the old location and to close the crossing to public [211] travel. See Davis v. Hampshire County Com'rs, 153 Mass. 218, 26 N. E. 848, 11 L.R.A. 750; Leighton v. Concord, etc. R. Co. 72 N. H. 224, 55 Atl. 938. And, when, as in this case, the change in location deprives one of the benefits of a public highway, the commission undoubtedly have the right, in case of necessity and as an incident of their authority over grade crossing eliminations, to order a farm crossing for the benefit of such individual, to the end that their power in that regard may be effectual. This power springs from and is limited by the rule that whatever is reasonably necessary and proper to be done in order to abolish grade crossings, or fairly may be regarded as incidental thereto, is within the jurisdiction of the commission. Bacon v. Boston, etc. R. Co. 83 Vt. 421, 76 Atl. 128; Bessette v. Goddard, supra. It was held in a recent case in Massachusetts that this rule applies not only to the manner in which the work shall be done, but as well to the scheme or plan as a whole that the commission adopts to accomplish the elimination. In re Waltham, 206 Mass. 208, 92 N. E. 477. It fairly appears that the farm crossing and the connecting way were necessarily incidental to the general plan adopted by the commission for eliminating the crossings in question. The fact that their location was originally left to agreement of the parties interested is not relied upon as affecting the validity of the order. The commission still had the power in case of disagreement, to fix the location on the further application of either party.

Plaintiff insisted before the master that the connecting way should have been so located and constructed that the selectmen of Newbury would accept it as a highway and secured a finding that the selectman refused to accept it as carrying out the order of the commission. The bill does not predicate the relief sought on that ground. However, it seems desirable to consider what control, if any, the selectmen have over the location of new highways that become necessary in the elimination of grade crossings. This question was involved in Stimets v. Highgate, 81 Vt. 231, 69 Atl. 878, an appeal from the award of damages by the selectmen of defendant town for land taken for a highway laid out by them under an order of the Railroad Commission for the purpose of eliminating highway crossings. It was then held that the statute under which the order was made gave no authority to the commission to order the highway laid over [212] a particular route; that their authority extended no further than to adjudge whether it was necessary to take land to eliminate the crossings, leaving the route to be determined by the selectmen. The decision was controlled by the fact that, as the law then stood, the selectmen alone had the authority to take the land when the town or an individual, and not the railroad, was ordered to construct the new highway. Attention was called to the fact that under P. S. 4549, if the railroad was selected to carry out the order, the commission had the authority to determine the necessity for the taking and appraise the damages. At the next session of the Legislature, and evidently because of this decision, the statutes relating to the subject were amended in several important particulars. P. S. 4549, relating to taking land for the new highway, was so amended as to confer full authority upon the commission to condemn the land and award damages. No. 108, Acts of 1908, sec. 3.

It is of the highest importance to the safety and convenience of the public, as well as the prompt and efficient administration of the law relating to grade crossing eliminations, that there should not be divided and possibly conflicting authority in the premises. The amendments of 1908 have removed the considerations which forced the Court to hold in Stimets v. Highgate that the authority to determine the location was left with the selectmen. In revising the statute with a view to conferring full authority upon the commission it was not necessary to change the section relating to general jurisdiction, as the provision that the commission shall determine what alterations, changes or removals shall be made is certainly broad enough to cover the location of new highways.

When all the provisions relating to the subject are considered together there can be no doubt that the Legislature intended to secure unity of action and purpose by giving the Public Service Commission exclusive jurisdiction of the whole matter.

The farm crossing and connecting way involved in this case were a part of the single scheme for the elimination of the highway crossings. The commission had jurisdiction to determine the necessity for their elimination and the manner in which it could best be accomplished with a view to public safety and convenience. Plaintiff was a party to the proceedings before the commission and acquiesced therein to the extent of accepting the commissioners' award of land damages and agreeing [213] to accept the old highway crossing as a farm crossing for the exclusive use of his premises. He also understood that defendant was to construct a way from the crossing to reach the new highway, a distance of about ten rods. He owned the land over which the way must be built. In the final analysis, the only ground of complaint that plaintiff has is that the way was located without his approval. He insists that it should have been located on the line of the old highway, which would be the most direct route; but it fairly appears that such location is impracticable on account of grade. He has failed to show that he applied to and has been denied relief by the commission. He now asks the court of chancery to determine the location of the farm crossing, substituting an overpass for a crossing at grade, or that it order the defendant to build the connecting way somewhere else.

From what we have said it will be seen that plaintiff has mistaken his remedy. Primary jurisdiction over these matters is in the Public Service Commission. The court of chancery has no power to eliminate grade crossings or locate highways. The Legislature has seen fit to confer that authority upon the commission with a review by appeal to this Court. The commission had under consideration, or on plaintiff's motion could have considered, all the matters he now complains of. If dissatisfied with the action of the commission, an appeal to this Court, vested as it is with full equity powers over such appeals, would preserve all his rights. No. 108, Acts of 1908, sec. 4; P. S. 4599. See Sabre v. Rutland R. Co. 86 Vt. 347, 368, 85 Atl. 693, Ann. Cas. 1915C 1269.

Having failed to show that his legal remedy has been exhausted or has proved inadequate, plaintiff is without standing in the court of chancery.

Pro forma decree dismissing the bill affirmed and cause remanded.

NOTE.

It is held in the reported case that, under an act giving to a public service commission jurisdiction in the matter of grade crossings, the commission has power not only to eliminate a grade crossing but to make such other orders as are reasonably incident to the exercise of that power, such as the establishment of a farm crossing for a person whose access to his land is cut off by the abolition of the public crossing. While the order of the commission is held to be appealable, the court disavows any power to substitute its judgment for that of the commission as to the propriety or expediency of the order made. The jurisdiction of a public service commission to make regulations respecting grade crossings is considered in the note to Sabre v. Rutland R. Co. Ann. Cas. 1915C 1289.

IN RE ESTATE OF BRINCKWIRTH

v.

TROLL.

Missouri Supreme Court—December 21, 1915.

266 Mo. 473; 181 S. W. 408.

Executors and Administrators — Public Administrator — Revocation of Letters.

Rev. St. 1909, § 47, requiring that on discovery and probate of a will the letters of administration of the administrator theretofore appointed shall be revoked, applies as well to the public administrator as to others, although he has on due notice taken charge of the estate.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

It being the duty of the public administrator to be at all times in court and take notice of all proceedings, failure to give actual notice of a proceeding to revoke his letters on discovery of a will does not vitiate the order of revocation.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

On discovery and probate of a will, the powers of the public administrator to administer the estate cease ipso facto, and he is therefore entitled to no notice of a proceeding formally to vacate his authority.

[See note at end of this case.]

Priority of Right to Appointment.

Subject to Rev. St. 1909, § 15, declaring priority of persons entitled to administer estates, and section 19, prescribing when letters testamentary with will annexed shall issue, it is within the discretion of the court to appoint the administrator, and the public administrator has no superior right to appointment as administrator with the will annexed.

[See note at end of this case.]

Revocation of Letters — Review.

Where the public administrator has no superior right to appointment as administrator with the will annexed, no appeal will be allowed from the discretionary order revoking his letters.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court:
BARTH, Judge.

Proceeding to vacate authority of Harry Troll, as public administrator, and appointing John G. Grone and Henry Griesedieck, Jr., administrators with will annexed of estate of Josephine Brinckwirth, deceased. From judgment rendered, public administrator appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Marshall & Henderson for appellant.Schnurmacher & Rassieur for respondent.

[476] WOODSON, J.—The statement of the facts of this case is very brief and as well or better made by counsel for respondent than I can do, and for that reason I adopt it as my statement of the case, which is as follows:

This is an appeal from the judgment of the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, approving the action of the probate court of said city in vacating the authority of Harry Troll, then Public Administrator, and thereupon appointing John G. Grone and Henry Griesedieck, Jr., administrators, with the will annexed, of the estate of Josephine Brinckwirth, deceased.

Josephine Brinckwirth died March 29, 1911. She was a resident of the city of St. Louis at that time and left an estate which, it was admitted upon the trial, exceeds $200,000 in value. She was a widow and her heirs at law were three minor children. John G. Grone, one of the respondents, is a brother of the deceased, and Henry Griesedieck, Jr., the other respondent (who died pending this appeal), was a brother-in-law of the deceased.

On March 30, 1911, Harry Troll, as Public Administrator of the city of St. Louis, filed notice that he took charge of the estate of said decedent, doing so on the supposition that she had died intestate.

On the next day, March 31, 1911, the will of Josephine Brinckwirth was presented for probate and was duly admitted to probate by the probate court of the city of St. Louis; and the will having been so admitted of probate, under section 47, Revised Statutes 1909, the court vacated the authority assumed by the Public Administrator, and appointed Grone and Griesedieck as administrators, with the will annexed, and they duly qualified as such.

[477] Thereupon the Public Administrator took an appeal to the circuit court. In that court a trial de novo was had, with the result that the circuit court took the same action which had been taken by the probate court, and refused to set aside the appointment of Grone and Griesedieck. After an unavailing motion for new trial, the Public Administrator brought the case here by appeal.

Section 47 of the Administration Act, above referred to, reads as follows:

"If, after letters of administration are granted, a will of the deceased be found, and probate thereof granted, the letters shall be revoked, and letters testamentary, or of administration, with the will annexed, shall be granted."

I. There are but two legal propositions presented by this record for determination, and counsel for appellants present their side of the first in the following language:

"An order of the probate court is not necessary for the Public Administrator to take charge of an estate. When he files his notice his act is independent of the probate court. The filing of notice in the office of the clerk of the probate court is sufficient to vest him with administration and he is not required to set out or prove facts which give him a right to administer. His relation to the estate thereafter is the same as if he had taken charge under order of the probate court.

"The Public Administrator has authority to take charge of an estate under the Missouri statutes, and he continues in charge until superseded by one having a superior right to administer."

In support of their position the following authorities are cited: Vermillion v. LeClare, 89 Mo. App. 55, 1. c. 60; Leeper v. Taylor, 111 Mo. 312, 19 S. W. 955; In re Hill, 102 Mo. App. 1. c. 620, 77 S. W. 110; Tittman v. Edwards, [478] 27 Mo. App. 495; American Car, etc. Co. v. Anderson, 211 Fed. 301, 127 C. C. A. 587; Richardson v. Busch, 198 Mo. 174, 95 S. W. 894, 115 Am. St. Rep. 472.

These cases, with the exception of the Hill Case, substantially hold what is contended for by counsel for appellant; but notwithstanding the ruling there announced the mere fact that the Public Administrator took charge of the estate mentioned under section 305, Revised Statutes 1909, and undertook to administer it, certainly gave him no greater authority or more secure rights in that regard than he would have acquired had he been appointed by the probate court under section 9, Revised Statutes 1909.

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—67.

That being true, then in my opinion, the position of counsel for appellant is not inconsistent with, nor does it militate in the least against the contention of counsel for respondent regarding this proposition, which is stated in this language:

"If, after granting of letters of administration on the ground of intestacy, a will of the deceased be duly proved and admitted to probate, the letters of administration are thereby revoked; or at least must be revoked and the powers of the administrator cease."

This contention of counsel is precisely what section 47, Revised Statutes 1909, provides shall be done when the ordinary administrator is appointed, and subsequent thereto a will is discovered and duly admitted to probate.

This statute seems to be so clear in meaning that there can be no room for construction. However, similar statutes of other States have been before the courts of those States, which hold they mean just what they say. [Thomas v. Morrisett, 76 Ga. 384; In re Davis, 11 Mont. 196, 28 Pac. 645; Dalrymple v. Gamble, 66 Md. 298, 7 Atl. 683, 8 Atl. 468; 1 Woerner's American Law of Administration, sec. 268.]

And as previously stated, there is no rule or reason why this same statute should not also apply to a [479] public administrator who takes charge of an estate under said section 305. [State v. Wilson, 216 Mo. 215, 115 S. W. 549; Little Tarkio Drainage Dist. No. 1 v. Richardson, 237 Mo. 1. c. 64, 139 S. W. 576.]

This proposition is therefore ruled in favor of the respondent.

II. Counsel for appellant next insist that the order of the probate court revoking the authority of the Public Administrator to administer the estate was void because he was not notified of the court's intention to make the order.

This insistence is clearly untenable, for two reasons: first, because he was in court all the time, and had to take notice of all papers, documents, etc., filed in the case where actual notice is not expressly required by statute.

In this case the will was filed, proved and duly probated; and there is no statute which in express terms or by necessary implication required appellant to be notified of said contemplated order.

The second reason why appellant was not entitled to such notice is because he had no vested right, as such Public Administrator, which entitled him to a hearing. His appointment, as such administrator, or rather his assumption of authority under the statute to act as such, was conditional, which depended upon the subsequent discovery and probate of the will referred to in said section 47: and when that contingency happened his right to further administer the estate under section 305 ceased ipso facto, and he could proceed no further therewith, for the obvious reason from that time on the estate had to be administered according to the terms of the will and not according to any statute, and before that could be done letters testamentary or of administration with the will annexed had to be issued by the probate court before anyone [480] could lawfully proceed further with the administration.

While the probate court, in such a case, if not prohibited by sections 15 and 19, Revised Statutes 1909, the first providing for the priority of persons entitled to administer upon estates, and the second prescribing when letters testamentary with the will annexed shall be granted, the probate court may in its sound discretion issue letters of administration with the will annexed to the public administrator, yet there is no law which commands or reason which suggests that such should be done as a rule. In individual cases, under certain circumstances, the court might very justly select him instead of anyone else connected with the estate or the parties interested therein. But by no means does that follow as a matter of law. In such cases as this, and in all cases arising under said section 47, the probate court is at liberty to exercise its wise and sound discretion as to whom it will grant letters of administration with the will annexed, limited, of course, by the provisions of sections 15 and 19, before mentioned.

While the probate court of the city of St. Louis, as a matter of form, or probably for the purpose of making its record fair upon its face, made the useless order revoking the authority of the appellant to proceed further with the administration of the estate after the probate of the will, yet it is perfectly clear that no such order of revocation was necessary, for the reason before stated, that when the will was probated, then by operation of said section 47, his authority to further act ceased ipso facto. This being unquestionably true, as it seems to us, then it would be idle talk and illogical to contend that the appellant was entitled to notice of the court's intention to make said formal order for the purpose of keeping its records fair.

[481] In discussing the same question the Supreme Court of Montana, in the case of In re Davis, supra, 1. c. 213, said:

"While the law required inquiry to be made as to whether decedent left a will, and makes the right to grant letters of general administration dependent on the fact that according to the proof obtainable decedent left no will [which is also the case in Missouri], it does not require that the court shall solemnly determine by judgment that decedent died intestate. For the statute leaves the question open for the propounding of a will at any time, and the admission of a will to probate, ipso facto, supersedes and vacates the grant of letters of general administration."

And in the case of Thomas v. Morrisett, 76 Ga. 384, syl. 3, the Supreme Court of Georgia held that:

"No general administration upon an estate should have been granted in this State, where there was a will in existence which was afterwards proved and admitted to record; and if such administration has been granted in this State, and afterwards a will has been established, this would work a revocation, except as to such portions of the estate as had been fully administered prior to the production and probate of the will."

In the last case cited a general administration had been granted and afterwards a will was produced which had been admitted to probate in the State of Alabama. This raised the question of the validity of the order granting said administration. At page 388 of its opinion the court says:

"Conceding to this judgment in our courts the full faith and credit to which it is entitled by the law and usage of the courts of Alabama, we agree with the superior court that no general administration should have been granted on an estate when there was a will in existence, which was afterwards proved and admitted to record. This is a well settled principle, [482] recognized both by judicial decisions and text-writers. In Fields v. Carlton, decided at the last term of this court, 75 Ga. 554, we held that, where a will had been proved in this State, a grant of administration upon the estate was void, and to this effect was the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Griffith v. Frazier, 8 Cranch 9, and to these many others might be added, but it would be unnecessary labor, as there is not an authority which questions the point there ruled. Applied to an administration granted before a will, which was afterwards established, was discovered, the same principle would work its revocation, except as to such portions of the estate as had been fully administered prior to its production and probate."

The same ruling was announced by the Supreme Court of Maryland in the case of Dalrymple v. Gamble, 66 Md. 298, 8 Atl. 486. The facts in that case sufficiently appear in the first syllabus (7 Atl. 683), which reads as follows:

"Where, after the appointment in Maryland of an administrator upon the estate of a resident of California, a will, which named no executor, was established and probated in California, and a copy of it was filed in the orphans' court in Maryland, which had granted administration, held, that that court had the power, in its discretion, to revoke the former letters of administration, and issue letters of administration cum testamento annexo, although the statute provides only for revocation of letters of administration by the issue of letters testamentary; and that such power was properly exercised without awaiting the result of a suit in equity brought by the heirs and next of kin, who claim that the devise made by the will was void, and did not operate upon the Maryland property, to determine the effect of the will."

Discussing the legal question presented, in its opinion, that court said:

[483] "The questions for our decision may be divided into two. The first is whether when this duly certified copy of the will, probated in California, was filed, the letters before granted to Augustine [Dalrymple] were properly revoked. . . . The answer to the first question depends upon sections 36 and 327 of article 93 of the Code. Section 36 is explicit in saying that if a will is filed, and the executor therein named shall apply within thirty days after the filing for letters testamentary, they shall be granted, and the granting of such letters shall operate as a revocation of letters of administration previously granted. Under those circumstances the orphans' court would have no discretion in the matter. But the law is silent as to what shall be done when there is no executor named, although a will is filed. This section 36 makes no distinction between a foreign and a domestic will, and we can see no reason why any distinction should be made; and when we take into consideration section 327, we think none should be made. The will in this case is a foreign will, and professes to dispose of all the personal property; but it appoints no executor, and it is not a case, therefore, where the orphans' court are compelled to revoke. But the whole policy of our testamentary system is to commit administration to the hands of those most interested in the property. Had a will like the one in this case been filed before any administration had been granted, the orphans' court would surely have granted letters c. t. a., but not the ordinary letters of administration. But the power of the orphans' court to revoke letters improvidently granted is unquestioned. We can see no reason why that court should not have the discretion to revoke letters previously granted, and grant new letters c. t. a., upon the discovery of a will. . . . The power to administer justice would be seriously impaired if that court possessed no power or discretion to revoke letters [484] that it had previously granted upon a mistaken state of facts."

While in the case of Tapley v. McPike, 50 Mo. 589, the question was whether or not the statute of itself, upon the probate of the will, revoked the former appointment of the administrator, or whether an order of court was necessary for that purpose; yet there the general effect of the statute was recognized and enforced in the same manner as those referred to in the cases cited.

For the reasons stated this proposition is decided against the appellant.

And for the same reason it would be equally illogical to contend or hold that the appellant would be entitled to an appeal from such a useless or formal order.

I am, therefore, clearly of the opinion that the judgment of the circuit court should be affirmed; and it is so ordered. All concur; Bond, J., in paragraph one and the result.

Rehearing denied January 4, 1916.

NOTE.

Public Administrators.

Introductory, 1059.

Qualifications, 1060.

Necessity of Appointment, 1061.

Right to or Propriety of Appointment:

In General, 1063.

Priority of Right, 1067.

Collateral Attack on Appointment, 1070.

Powers and Duties, 1071.

Personal Liability, 1072.

Liability on Bond, 1072.

Liability of Municipality, 1074.

Compensation, 1075.

Termination of Authority, 1076.

Introductory.

The office of public administrator is of statutory origin, and has been created in a number of jurisdictions. 11 R. C. L. tit. Executors and Administrators, p. 452.

The office is of a quasi public nature and has been instituted for the purpose of administering such estates as would otherwise remain unadministered for want of a private administrator. Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 215, 68 Am. Dec. 237; Fowler v. Miller, 119 Cal. 663, 51 Pac. 1078; Los Angeles County v. Kellogg, 146 Cal. 590, 80 Pac. 861; In re Murphy, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 185; Lowery v. Powell, 109 Ga. 192, 34 S. E. 296; Bailey v. McAlpin, 121 Ga. 111, 48 S. E. 699; Tumon v. Cromwell, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 650; Sutton v. Public Administrator, 4 Dem. (N. Y.) 33; State v. Smith, 145 N. C. 476, 59 S. E. 649. See also Pina's Estate, 112 Cal. 14, 44 Pac. 332.

In Los Angeles County v. Kellogg, supra, the court said: "The public administrator is a county officer (Pol. Code, sec. 4103; County Government Act—Stats. 1897, p. 472) and 'must perform such duties as are prescribed in chapter XIII, title XI, part III of the Code of Civil Procedure.' (Pol. Code, sec. 4303.) Among other duties he 'must take charge of the estates of persons dying within his county, as follows:—1. Of the estates of decedents for which no administrators are appointed, and which, in consequence thereof, are being wasted, uncared for, or lost; 2. Of the estates of decedents who have no known heirs; 3. Of the estates ordered into his hands by the court; and, 4. Of the estates upon which letters of administration have been issued to him by the court. (Code Civ. Proc. sec. 1726.)' . . . The purpose of the law is to provide a public officer, acting under his oath of office and official bond, who shall be in a position at all times to administer estates where there is a failure of heirs or other persons competent to perform the service."

In State v. Smith, 145 N. C. 476, 59 S. E. 649, it was held that the office of public administrator is not a public office. The court said: "The duties performed by the public administrator are services performed under the public authority, as those of other administrators are performed, and for the public good, but they are not performed in the exercise of any standing laws considered as rules of action applicable to the public generally. The place does not carry with it the dignity or essential characteristics of a public office. It does not affect the public generally but is confined entirely to the settlement of such estates as are necessarily committed to its charge. It is, therefore, evident that a writ of quo warranto will not lie either to remove the incumbent or to inquire by what authority he performs the duties or receives the emoluments of the place."

Qualifications.

The public administrator must be a person reasonably competent to perform the duties devolving on him. In re Bizzell, 172 Cal. 486, 157 Pac. 237, wherein the court held that the incompetency of the public administrator was not shown by the evidence, saying: "In regard to the competency and fitness of Hathaway to perform the duties required of him in administering upon the estate, proof was offered. It was shown that Hathaway had held the office of public administrator of Ventura county for ten and a half months, that he had resided in California for many years, and in Ventura county for more than five years, that he had followed from time to time varied occupations, having been a newspaper man for twenty years, the city editor and news manager of a newspaper in Ventura, and in charge of the advertising department for about four years, also secretary of the county fair association, secretary and manager of the Ventura County Mutual Insurance Company, a local fire insurance company with fifteen hundred members carrying about three millions of insurance, a soliciting agent for a life insurance company, and for five or six months a deputy in the county clerk's office. He had not served as administrator or executor of any estate prior to the time he became public administrator. The estate consisted of ten acres of land worth $15,540, two lots in Los Angeles, one worth $33,000, the other $12,000, jewelry $710, an automobile at $500, and other personal property worth $2,000. The rentals amounted to several thousand dollars a year. This was all the evidence bearing on the subject. There is nothing in this evidence tending to show that Hathaway was incompetent or unfit."

The public administrator is not disqualified by the fact that he has a claim against the estate. In re Muersing, 103 Cal. 585, 37 Pac. 520, wherein the court said: "The point relied upon by appellant for a reversal of the order is the alleged incompetency of Clough, the public administrator, to administer upon the estate by reason of the fact that he held a demand against the estate which would have to be paid during the course of administration. The fact upon which this objection was based, as disclosed by the evidence, was that the undertaking firm of Clough & Nordgren, in which the respondent, Clough, was a partner, had furnished the coffin and burial outfit for the deceased, for which they would have to be paid out of the estate. Appellant contends that by reason of this fact respondent is disqualified from administering the trust, and relies upon the provisions of section 1738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as sustaining this contention. But that section has no application. It provides that 'the public administrator must not be interested in the expenditures of any kind made on account of any estate he administers, nor must he be associated in business or otherwise with anyone who is so interested.' It is apparent that this section does not undertake to state a rule of disqualification, but simply prescribes a very salutary rule of official conduct to govern the public administrator in the discharge of his duty, and prevent his trafficking to his advantage in the estate. It does not render incompetent as administrator one who, under the circumstances disclosed here, or otherwise, becomes a creditor of an estate before his appointment, but furnishes a ground upon which for a violation of its provisions the administrator would be subject to removal. There is nothing in this section, nor in the various other provisions of the code relating to estates of deceased persons, which have been called to our attention, tending to sustain the theory that the mere fact of being a creditor of, or having a demand against, an estate disqualifies one from appointment as administrator. Section 1369 of the Code of Civil Procedure prescribes the grounds which render one incompetent to serve as administrator, of which this is not one; and the courts have no right to add to the disqualifications prescribed by the legislature."

Under a statutory authority to appoint some "discreet fit person" as public administrator, a corporation may be appointed. Louisville, etc. R. Co. v. Herndon, 126 Ky. 589, 104 S. W. 732, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1059.

Necessity of Appointment.

A public administrator is not entitled by virtue of his office to administer an estate, but must procure an appointment and the issuance of letters of administration in each instance. King v. Griffin, 6 Ala. 387; In re Hamilton, 34 Cal. 464; Davis v. Shuler, 14 Fla. 438; Wilson v. Dibble, 16 Fla. 782; O'Rourke v. Harper, 35 Mont. 346, 89 Pac. 65. And see Reynolds v. McMullen, 55 Mich. 568, 22 N. W. 41, 54 Am. Rep. 386 (foreign public administrator).

In Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 215, 68 Am. Dec. 237, it appeared that an intestate died at Sacramento, California, without any known heirs. A short time thereafter, the public administrator of San Francisco petitioned for and received letters of administration. He alleged in his petition that the decedent was "late a resident of San Francisco county." It was held that his appointment was irregular but not contrary to law. The court said: "The first question is this: was Flower administrator upon this estate? It is insisted that he was administrator, upon two grounds: first, as public administrator by virtue of his office, and second, by reason of the grant to him of administration by the probate court. The first ground involves the rights and powers of public administrators, and will require some examination. In considering this point, it would seem safe to assume that all the provisions relating to the powers and duties of the public administrator, and inconsistent with the general probate law, are special provisions, and must be given their full force; leaving all the other provisions of the general probate system as much applicable to him, as to any other administrator. That he has official powers, and is an officer of the law, is plain from these special provisions. But, it is equally clear, that he has only such powers as are given him by law. The public administrator is required to give bond and take the official oath; and it would seem to have been the intention of the statute to dispense with the bond and oath required of other administrators in each particular case. But the question arises, whether administration must be granted to the public administrator by the probate court, upon each particular estate. This question is one of more difficulty; and to ascertain the intention of the statute, it is necessary to construe all of its provisions together, so as to give force and effect to all, if possible. By the provisions of the fifty-second section, the public administrator is entitled to the grant of administration when there are no next of kin; and by section sixty-four, the provisions of which are general, he would be equally entitled to administration, although there were persons preferred before him, upon their failure to apply; and putting all these provisions together, it would seem clear, that he is entitled to administration upon all estates not otherwise administered. The provisions of the fourteenth chapter are somewhat ambiguous, and the meaning obscure. By section 304, when a stranger, or person without known heirs, dies in the house or on the premises of another person, such person shall give notice to the public administrator; and by section 305, he shall make an inventory of such estate, according to the law prescribing the duties of administration, subject to the control and direction of the probate court. In terms, the provisions are limited to cases where a stranger dies in the house or on the premises of another. The intention, however, would seem to be that the public administrator should at once take possession of the estate of all persons dying without known heirs; for the reason, that in such cases, there being no one interested to take care of the estate, there would be danger of immediate loss; and after taking such possession, he must proceed under the general law and the other provisions of that chapter. The effect is to give him temporary possession of the property, leaving him to obtain regular administration from the probate court. This view is sustained by the eighty-eighth section, which has reference to special administration, and by which the court is authorized to 'direct the public administrator to take charge of the estate.' The phrase, 'take charge of the estate,' is qualified by the scope of the section, and only means to give the public administrator the same powers over the particular estate, as he would have over the class of estates referred to in the fourteenth chapter."

In Nelson v. Troll, 173 Mo. App. 51, 156 S. W. 16, the court construed a statute giving the public administrator a right to administer without appointment, saying: "It is true the statute (sec. 302, R. S. 1909) in its fourth subdivision authorizes the public administrator to take charge of an estate 'when money, property, papers or other estate are left in a situation exposed to loss or damage, and no other person administers the same,' and by section 305 he is authorized to enter upon the discharge of his duty under section 302 of the mere filing of a notice of the fact in the office of the clerk of the probate court without an order of the probate court touching the matter. [See Leeper v. Taylor, 111 Mo. 312, 19 S. W. 955.] But though such be true, it is obvious that the mere filing on an estate by the public administrator cannot operate ipso facto to revoke an order of non-administration made by the probate court on a full hearing under section 10, Revised Statutes, 1909. . . . Though the probate courts are inferior and of limited jurisdiction, it is well settled that their judgments given on such subjects as are within their jurisdiction are entitled to the same weight as that of any other court of record and are regarded as conclusive in all collateral proceedings as here. [See Johnson v. Beazley, 65 Mo. 250.] Though in the ordinary case, the rights of the public administrator would attach on the mere filing of his notice, we are unwilling to accede to the proposition that such fact alone would oust the plaintiff of his rights in the premises which were being exercised under the valid order of a court of competent jurisdiction. In this view, plaintiff was entitled to withhold and use all of the property under the order of the probate court, and the public administrator is without any right whatever in the premises." See also Leeper v. Taylor, 111 Mo. 312, 19 S. W. 955, wherein it was said: "Section 299, Revised Statutes, 1889, makes it the duty of the public administrator to take charge of the estate of deceased persons in the cases specified in the first seven subdivisions thereof. In those cases the public administrator, in taking charge of estates, acts independent of any order of the probate court. When he takes charge of an estate he occupies the position of a private administrator, and in suits brought by him he is not required to show facts which authorized him to take upon himself the burden of administration. Wetzell v. Waters, 18 Mo. 396. It has been held that the failure to give the notice required by section 302 will not render the whole administration void. Adams v. Larrimore, 51 Mo. 130." See to the same effect Hollingsworth v. Jeffries, 121 Mo. App. 660, 97 S. W. 632.

The public administrator has no vested right to administer a particular estate. State v. Woody, 20 Mont. 413, 51 Pac. 975, wherein it appeared that one Lancaster had held the office of public administrator. While so acting the next of kin of a decedent nominated him as administrator of the estate. He made several unsuccessful attempts to obtain letters of administration and expended some of his own money for this purpose. Later his term of office expired and one Higgins, who was duly elected, succeeded him in office as public administrator. Higgins duly qualified and received the letters of administration of the decedent's estate. Lancaster sought to have the letters issued to Higgins revoked and to have himself appointed administrator. He contended, among other things, that because he had expended some money and had taken steps to obtain the letters of administration he had acquired a vested right to them. It was held, however, that his contention was untenable. The court said: "Relator bases his right to administer upon three distinct grounds: first, that his application while public administrator created a right which, upon the rehearing, became a vested right to administer, and to the fees pertaining thereto; second, that he was the nominee of the heirs at law of the decedent; and, lastly, that he is entitled, under section 2446, Code Civ. Proc., providing that letters must be granted to any applicant, though it appears there are other persons having better rights, when such persons fail to ask for letters. The first ground is without merit. By filing his petition, relator acquired no interest in the estate. Neither did he thereby acquire a right to fees to be thereafter earned. (In re Pingree, 100 Cal. 79, 34 Pac. 521. See also Hamilton Bank v. Dudley, 2 Pet. 492 [7 U. S. (L. ed.) 496], and In re Dewar, 10 Mont. 426, 25 Pac. 1026.) As to the expenses incurred by him in advancing certain sums for filing the petition and redeeming lands from tax sale, we have the relator's admission (by failure to deny) of reimbursement by the heirs. But, apart from this, we cannot subscribe to the doctrine that an applicant must be granted letters because of the fact he has paid out his own money in an unsuccessful attempt to obtain them. . . . The third ground is really included within the second. When relator ceased to occupy the office of public administrator, his application for letters to issue to him in that capacity was, of necessity, futile. It could not properly be granted, for he was no longer such officer. He was not entitled to administer upon the estate as against the incumbent of the office at the time of the grant of letters. 'It was his status at the time of the grant of administration, and not at the time of filing his petition, that determined his competency.' (In re Pingree, supra.) And, as we have seen, he was not the nominee of the heirs. The court therefore was right in refusing to consider the application as one made by him in his private capacity. The appointment of public administrator Higgins is not of concern to relator. It is ordered that judgment be entered dismissing the application and writ of relator, with costs."

Right to or Propriety of Appointment.

IN GENERAL.

The public administrator will ordinarily be appointed to administer an estate only when, because of the absence or nonaction of the heirs, administration in the ordinary course cannot be had. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 97 U. S. 682, 24 U. S. (L. ed.) 1114; American Car, etc. Co. v. Anderson, 211 Fed. 301, 127 C. C. A. 587; In re Barton, 52 Cal. 538; In re McDonald, 118 Cal. 277, 50 Pac. 399; In re Von Buncen, 120 Cal. 343, 52 Pac. 819; Johnston v. Tatum, 20 Ga. 775 (where no other person appears court may appoint clerk of court to act as administrator); Bailey v. McAlpin, 121 Ga. 111, 48 S. E. 699; Cotterell v. Coen, 246 Ill. 410, 92 N. E. 911; Matter of Hutchings, 154 Ill. App. 101; Savage v. Luther, 165 Ill. App. 1; Hoffman v. Hunter, 127 La. 673, 53 So. 903 (where estate is small and none of heirs apply for administration district attorney of parish where property is situated may administer); Dagle's Succession, 27 La. Ann. 524; Miller's Succession, 27 La. Ann. 574; Townsend's Succession, 36 La. Ann. 535; Smith's Succession, 40 La. Ann. 105, 3 So. 539; Callahan v. Griswold, 9 Mo. 784; Wetzell v. Waters, 18 Mo. 396; Richardson v. Busch, 198 Mo. 174, 95 S. W. 894, 115 Am. St. Rep. 472; In re Landgraf, 183 Mo. App. 251, 168 S. W. 268; In re Page, 107 N. Y. 266, 14 N. E. 193; Ex p. Emigration Com'rs, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 259; Watts v. New York, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 168; Welsh v. Manwaring, 120 Wis. 377, 98 N. W. 214. See also Williamson v. Furbush, 31 Ark. 539 (when sheriff may be appointed administrator); State v. Parish, 25 La. Ann. 329; Cooke v. Finley, 29 Miss. 127; State v. Judge, 10 Mont. 401, 25 Pac. 1053.

In Bailey v. McAlpin, 121 Ga. 111, 48 S. E. 699, the court said: "The law in reference to county administrators was not intended to affect other provisions of the code. It was rather supplementary and intended to provide for an officer who should be bound to qualify when, because of the meager assets, inability to give bond, or want of resident heirs or of persons interested, the estate was likely to be unrepresented."

In Lowery v. Powell, 109 Ga. 192, 34 S. E. 296, it was said: "Our statute which authorizes administration to be vested in the clerk of the superior court confines the appointment to cases where estates are unrepresented and not likely to be represented."

In Tymon v. Cromwell, 2 Dem. (N. Y.) 650, the court said: "The object of the statutory provision creating the office of public administrator being to authorize some one to take possession of, and preserve from loss and waste, the property of strangers who have died leaving no relative in the county, that officer fails to acquire such power where there is such relative, unless the surrogate grant such order. The whole article of the statute is based upon the fact of the absence of such relative (§ 47); or upon the fact that, although there be such relative, yet that there are creditors or other relatives of the deceased, residing more than one hundred miles distant, who are interested in the distribution, and that the goods are in danger of waste or embezzlement (§ 49)."

In Sutton v. Public Administrator, 4 Dem. (N. Y.) 33, it was said: "Now, it is alleged that the deceased was an unmarried man, and left no next of kin or relatives in this country. Hence, the county treasurer, as public administrator, by virtue of the provisions of 2 R. S. 129, § 47, was authorized to take possession of the property, and proceed in reference thereto, as authorized and directed to do by the article of which that section is a part. That section provides that, where a person shall have died intestate, leaving assets in the county, amounting to over $100 in value, upon which no letters of administration have been granted, and there is no widow or relative within the county entitled or competent to take such letters, the public administrator shall take charge thereof and proceed as provided in said article. All the conditions, therefore, exist which are requisite to invest the public administrator with power to act under the provisions of the R. S."

In Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 97 U. S. 682, 24 U. S. (L. ed.) 1114, it appeared that one Berton a resident of Milwaukee insured his life and thereafter died in Milwaukee. It further appeared that he never lived in Missouri. After his death the public administrator of St. Louis, Mo., brought an action against the insurance company to recover on the policy. It was held that he had no authority to act. The court said: "The bare statement of these facts, which are admitted or are clearly proven, is enough to show an absolute want of authority in Lewis to take charge of or administer the estate of Berton. His collection, by suit, of the amount, if any due from the company upon the policy sued on, or any administration by him, in his capacity as public administrator, of Berton's estate, would be acts of palpable usurpation. The notice filed by him in the clerk's office of the probate court was ineffective for any purpose, although it contained the false recital that Berton was 'late of the county of St. Louis.' Such a notice was required only when he took charge of an estate upon which he could legally administer. No judgment rendered in this action, upon the merits, could protect the company against a future suit by the proper representatives of Berton's estate. This would not be the case if Lewis' claim to administer that estate had any sound foundation upon which to rest. It was not the purpose of the statute to authorize a suit by a public administrator in Missouri against a foreign corporation doing business there, upon a contract, not made or to be executed in that state, with a citizen of another state who neither resided nor died, nor left any estate, in Missouri. Without discussing the validity of any local statute framed for such purposes as are imputed, by this action, to the Missouri Statute of 1868, it is sufficient to say that the present case is not within that statute, according to any reasonable interpretation of its provisions."

In American Car, etc. Co. v. Anderson, 211 Fed. 301, 127 C. C. A. 587, it appeared that an employee was killed in an accident at St. Louis. About four months later the public administrator of St. Louis applied for letters of administration. In his petition he alleged that the decedent left no known heirs. He received the letters and published notice at four different times that he had taken charge of the estate. Thereafter he made a settlement with the employer. Almost a year after the death the mother of the employee and one of his brothers, who had arrived of age, petitioned the court to revoke the letters of administration issued to the public administrator. It further appeared that the mother, four brothers and a sister were residents of St. Louis. It was held, however, that while the public administrator could not ignore the known heirs of a deceased person he was entitled to letters of administration where it appeared that the decedent left no heirs and none were known to him. The court said: "The power of the public administrator to take charge of the estate probably existed under the second, fourth, and fifth grounds specified in section 302 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1909. What is meant by 'when persons die intestate without any any known heirs?' If the person left heirs, they must be known by some one, although they may not be known to be heirs of the deceased. In other words, the existence of any human being unknown to everybody is not conceivable. Manifestly 'without any known heirs' means without any heirs known to the public, the probate court, or the public administrator. While the administrator cannot wilfully blind himself to the existence of heirs, if he in fact knows of none, he can take charge of the estate. He was equally entitled to take charge of the estate under the fourth ground that the estate was 'left in a situation exposed to loss or damage, and no other person' administered on the same. There was a short statute of limitations in Missouri, one year (section 5429). More than one-fourth of this time had elapsed when the public administrator took charge, and substantially half of it had expired before the settlement. The first effort made by the heirs to remove the public administrator was about December 10th, within about twelve days of the claim being wholly lost by the statute of limitations. Surely by this neglect, for whatever cause, of the heirs at law the claim was 'exposed to loss.'"

In re Von Buncken, 120 Cal. 343, 52 Pac. 819, it appeared that a testator named three legatees in his will but failed to name any executor or executors. It was held that the failure to name an executor was not a sufficient ground to entitle the public administrator to letters of administration.

In Savage v. Luther, 165 Ill. App. 1, it appeared that nine days after the death of an intestate several of her creditors petitioned the probate court for the appointment of a public administrator to take charge of the decedent's estate. The court appointed the public administrator. Sixteen days after the death, a nephew of the deceased, who was a resident of Illinois, petitioned the court to appoint him as administrator. The statute of Illinois relating to the administration of estates provided that the next of kin residing within the state had the right, within sixty days after an intestate's death, to petition for the appointment of an administrator. It was held that in view of the statute the probate court had no right to appoint the public administrator. The court said: "It is therefore clear that these creditors did not possess the right to nominate, and therefore the probate court should not have issued letters of administration to the public administrator upon the nomination of said creditors. We are also of opinion, when this entire section is read, that it was not the intention of the legislature to abandon the statutory policy which had prevailed in this state for over seventy-five years that the surviving husband or wife and the various relatives should have the preference to administer during the period of sixty days after the death of the intestate. The relatives of the deceased are interested in an economical administration of the estate, so that as much as possible may be saved for the distributees. The creditors have no interest except to realize enough to pay their claims. The public administrator obtains his commissions upon the amount which passes through his hands, and he has no personal interest in preserving the estate for the heirs at law. . . . The public administrator has no right to enter into a controversy with the heirs at law of an intestate to prevent their securing their preference to administer or to nominate, nor should he be permitted to resort to any technicality to prevent a resident heir from obtaining administration or nominating an administrator during the sixty days succeeding the death of the intestate. It was not intended by the statute to give the public administrator a foothold from which to wrest the administration from the heirs at law. His only proper function is to accept administration when administration is necessary and the specified heirs and distributees have failed to exercise their preference to administer or to nominate within the time given them therefor."

To the same effect see Matter of Hutchings, 154 Ill. App. 101, wherein the court said: "Section 18 of the Administration Act gives preference in administering on estates to certain relatives in a certain fixed order, and after the relatives to the public administrator or any creditor who shall apply for the same. The act provides that: 'Preference and the right to nominate under this act must be exercised within sixty days from the death of the intestate, at the expiration of which time administration shall be granted to the public administrator.' Over a year had elapsed before the application was made to have the son appointed administrator, and the public administrator contends his right to administer had thereby become absolute. If the contention of appellant be sustained, the result would be that in every case where a will is set aside on a contest in equity or otherwise, the public administrator or a creditor would thereafter be the only person who might be appointed administrators, and the members of the family would be excluded. Section 48 provides that whenever administration is granted to the public administrator and it shall afterwards appear there is a widow or next of kin, it shall be the duty of the court to revoke the letters to the public administrator and grant letters to the widow, next of kin or a creditor as is entitled thereto, provided application is made by such person within six months after letters were granted to the public administrator. Section 38 makes provision where the letters of executors are revoked for the granting of 'administration with the will annexed or de bonis non, to the surviving husband or wife or next of kin.' Section 18 also provides that when the estate is solvent and without minor heirs and it is desired by the parties in interest to settle the estate without administration this law will not apply. From the reading of the entire act we hold that the word 'shall' in section 18 should be construed as 'may' when a controversy arises between the heirs of the estate and the public administrator, and that the legislature never contemplated that the public administrator, in cases where wills are set aside on a contest more than sixty days after the death of the testator, should have an absolute right to administer on the estate as against the widow or heirs who desire to administer and are entitled to the estate."

In Smith's Succession, 40 La. Ann. 105, 3 So. 539, it appeared that an intestate left several heirs in Arkansas, where they were represented by an administrator. It further appeared that the decedent had no creditors in Louisiana, where he died. It was held that the public administrator in Louisiana was not entitled to letters of administration. The court said: "The purpose which the legislature intended to accomplish when it created the trust of public administrator, was to provide for a prompt and safe custody of the property composing vacant successions, which otherwise might be exposed to ruin and devastation. Hence it is that the law distinctly provides that it is only where the deceased has left no will appointing an executor, and where there are no heirs present or represented, that the public administrator can be put in charge of an unclaimed estate, and that, even where appointed, his functions cease on the recognition of the heirs. It has accordingly been held that where the heirs have taken possession the public administrator cannot interfere. 28 La. Ann. 573. It is clear to our minds that under this statute creating the office of public administrator, the contingencies under which the appointment claimed could have been conferred have not occurred, and that there is no error in the judgment complained of."

In Watts v. New York, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 168, reversing New York v. Watts, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 347, it was held that the public administrator was not entitled to letters of administration where it appeared that the testator had executed an imperfect will.

In Townsend's Succession, 36 La. Ann. 535, it appeared that the executor named in the testatrix's will was imprisoned charged with the murder of the testatrix. The testatrix left no heirs or next of kin. Under these circumstances it was held that the public administrator was entitled to letters of administration. The court said: "In the present instance the law is positive, that, in all testate successions, where, for any cause, the executor cannot discharge the duties of his office, the court shall appoint the public administrator. It is very broad, but however comprehensive, it can only mean, for any good and sufficient cause, which must be a matter for special consideration and determination, in each case, as presented. The fact is that Sykes was in jail charged with a heinous offense, the murder of the testatrix, awaiting a trial during which his life was to be in jeopardy. He was in duress, deprived of his liberty, necessarily laboring under great mental anguish and moral perturbation, averse to business matters, unable to act in person, or move about to watch over the interests intrusted to him, or to supervise the doings of special mandataries, if any; in a word, incapable of discharging the general functions expected, by law, from an executor. Under the exceptional and shocking features of this contention, the solution of which can serve as a precedent only in strictly analogous cases, rarely to occur, we think that the district court erred in sustaining the exceptions. It is, therefore, ordered and decreed that the judgment appealed from be reversed and that the exceptions filed to the application of the public administrator be overruled. It is further ordered and decreed that this case be remanded to the lower court for trial to be proceeded with according to law, the costs in both courts to be paid by Sykes individually."

In Ex p. Emigration Com'rs, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 259, it was held that the commissioners of emigration could administer the estate of an alien dying on his way to this country, but that their right of administration extended only as far as the minor children of the decedent were concerned, the court saying that if there were adult next of kin they were entitled to letters of administration and if they did not apply for letters the public administrator could do so. The court further said: "Public administrators have power to collect and take charge of the assets of intestates dying in the county or out of it, upon which no letters of administration have been granted, as well where the assets have come into the county after the death, as where they were left in the county at the time of the death. (2 R. S. 3d ed. p. 189, § 48.) And the public administrator of the city of New York, to whom and whose power the act under consideration probably alludes in particular, can administer whenever any person, coming from any place out of this state in a vessel bound to the port of New York, shall die intestate on his passage, and any of his effects shall arrive at the quarantine. (2 R. S. 3d ed. p. 181, § 4.) Until administration is granted, he has power to collect and take charge of such effects. But his power to collect and take charge will be superseded at any time, and his letters of administration will be superseded at any time within six months after granting the same, where letters of administration of such estate shall have been granted to any other person by any surrogate having jurisdiction."

In Cotterell v. Coen, 246 Ill. 410, 92 N. E. 911, the court said: "Under the facts in this case the only service which the public administrator could perform would be to distribute the money coming into his hands among the heirs-at-law of Samuel Cotterell. The statute does not contemplate that administration shall be had for this purpose alone, unless some reason should be shown why administration is necessary to effect distribution. If, under such circumstances, the heirs are all qualified to act, or, being under disability, have some one legally qualified and responsible, under the law, to act for them, and there is no dissension among them as to the amount to be distributed or the manner of distribution, there is no occasion for administration. Only in case of disagreement among them would the court be warranted in issuing letters of administration, and then only on application of some one or more of the distributees. . . . Our administration act is only meant to apply in cases where administration is necessary, but under such facts as are disclosed here there can be no necessity for an administrator. 'The law does not make it indispensable that every estate should be administered merely for the sake of administration.'"

So in Troll v. Landgraf, 183 Mo. App. 251, 168 S. W. 268, it was said: "The situation was one entirely agreeable to those in interest, and there was no occasion whatsoever for the public administrator or anyone else to interfere. The office of public administrator is one created to provide a special bonded officer to act, under the conditions and circumstances specified in the statute, to the end of preserving the property of an estate. And manifestly it was not intended that such officer should have the power or authority to take into his possession property belonging to foreign testators or intestates, except under the conditions plainly set forth in the statute."

In Richardson v. Busch, 198 Mo. 174, 95 S. W. 894, 115 Am. St. Rep. 472, the court said: "Section 292 of our laws of administration declares it to be the duty of the public administrator 'to take into his charge and custody the estates of all deceased persons . . . in the following cases: . . . fourth, when money, property, papers or other estate are left in a situation exposed to loss or damage, and no other person administers on the same,' etc. The word 'papers' used in that clause refers to papers which constitute the assets or a part of the assets of the estate; in other words, papers in which there is a property value. The language is 'papers or other estate.' It was not the intention of the lawmakers to authorize the public administrator to take charge of anything that was not in the nature of property or assets. If the deceased left nothing in this state that could be applied to the payment of debts or to distribution among his next of kin there is nothing here to administer."

In the case of In re McDonald, 118 Cal. 277, 50 Pac. 399, it appeared that a testator named his wife as executrix. She never probated or made any attempt to probate the will. Four years later she died and named her sister as executrix of her will. The public administrator concurrently with the executrix of the wife applied for letters of administration of the estate of the husband. It was held that because of the wife's failure, during her lifetime, to probate his will the public administrator was entitled to letters of administration. The court said: "It seems to us that the intention of the legislature is plainly manifest in the language used, and that the purpose was to make the provisions of section 1365 applicable in any case falling within the terms of section 1350. There was here a failure to apply for four years, followed by the death of the executrix named without any application made. If the question had arisen in the lifetime of the executrix—we will say after three years of neglect to appear and qualify or failure to apply—it may be that she could have satisfactorily explained her apparent laches and thus have defeated the counter application of the public administrator; a discretion might in such case rest with the court in deciding whether she had renounced her right to letters, subject to review for its abuse. (Code Civ. Proc. sec. 1301.) But here she did entirely 'fail to apply for letters,' and to say that the statute does not embrace such a case is to interpolate in the section a proviso making it to read 'or fail to apply for letters [during the lifetime of such executor or executors] letters . . . must be issued . . . as in cases of intestacy.' We must give effect to the statute as we find it; and, where the intent is given expression in plain and unambiguous language, the courts cannot add to or subtract from the act unless forced to do so in order to obviate impractical or absurd results. It is our conclusion that the court erred in assuming that it was within its discretion to grant letters to the respondent. The fact that she offered to waive the commissions to which she would be entitled, in the interest of the estate, which was small, might be properly considered if the power to appoint were discretionary with the court, but, as it is not, no such consideration was competent or material in determining the question. The order of the court should be reversed, with directions to grant the petition of the public administrator, and it is so recommended."

In some jurisdictions the public administrator cannot be appointed until a certain time after the death of the intestate. Thus in Kentucky the statute fixes the period of time as three months. Underwood v. Underwood, 111 Ky. 966, 65 S. W. 130, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1287; Newman v. Flowers, 134 Ky. 557, 121 S. W. 652; Paslick v. Shay, 148 Ky. 642, 147 S. W. 369; Jackson v. Asher Coal Co. 153 Ky. 547, 156 S. W. 136.

In Jackson v. Asher Coal Co. supra, it appeared that an intestate died as a result of personal injuries. The public administrator obtained letters of administration within two months of the death. Thereafter he brought suit to recover damages for the death of the intestate. It was held that the letters of administration were prematurely granted and therefore the public administrator had no authority to act. The court said: "Two questions are presented by the record. (1) Was the order of the county court referring the estate to Hurst as public administrator void, and (2) if so, could the question be raised by a demurrer? Of course, if Hurst was not administrator of Jackson he had no authority to institute or maintain the action, as his right to sue depended entirely on the fact that he was the administrator, and whether or not he was administrator depended entirely upon the jurisdiction of the Bell county court to appoint him. We had the identical question here presented before us in Underwood v. Underwood, 111 Ky. 966. In that case the jurisdiction of the county court to place the estate of a deceased person in the hands of a public administrator, under section 3905 of the Kentucky statutes before the expiration of three months from the death of the decedent administered on, was directly drawn in question, and the court said: 'We are of the opinion that the county courts are without jurisdiction to place estates in the hands of public administrators, except under the circumstances provided in section 3905. It is a jurisdictional fact to be shown that the decedent has been dead more than three months, and that no one else has applied for letters of administration. If the county court can place the estate of a deceased person in the hands of the public administrator under the circumstances in this case, then in every case the county court can, without consulting the distributees, kinmen, or creditors of the estate, place the estate in the hands of the public administrator immediately upon the death of the deceased, thus entailing in some instances great expense and loss to the estate.'"

PRIORITY OF RIGHT.

The priority of right to appointment as between a public administrator and a collateral relative or a nonresident heir, devisee or representative depends wholly on the terms of the local statute. See the following cases wherein the priority was determined:

California.—In re Nunan, Myr. Prob. 238 (discretionary with court to appoint public administrator or nominee of foreign executors); In re Carr, 25 Cal. 585 (where brother-in-law fails to qualify as administrator, and public administrator is thereafter appointed, one not otherwise competent has no right to ask that public administrator be removed); In re Doak, 46 Cal. 573 (public administrator may be preferred to creditor); In re Morgan, 53 Cal. 243 (public administrator preferred to married nieces); In re Kelly, 57 Cal. 81 (public administrator preferred to married daughter); In re Beech, 63 Cal. 458 (public administrator has preference over nominee of nonresident devisee); McKinnon's Estate, 64 Cal. 226, 30 Pac. 437 (public administrator has preference over creditor); Hyde's Estate, 64 Cal. 228, 30 Pac. 804 (public administrator has preference over creditor of intestate, or nominee of nonresident heir); Garber's Estate, 74 Cal. 338, 16 Pac. 233 (public administrator preferred to nominee of foreign executor); Allen's Estate, 78 Cal. 581, 21 Pac. 426 (public administrator has preference over nominee of widow, who has remarried); Dorris's Estate, 93 Cal. 611, 29 Pac. 244 (resident nominee of widow, although she is nonresident, has priority over public administrator); Bedell's Estate, 97 Cal. 339, 32 Pac. 323 (nominee of father and mother has preference over public administrator); In re Bergin, 100 Cal. 376, 34 Pac. 867 (resident devisee of nonresident decedent has preference over public administrator); In re McLaughlin, 103 Cal. 429, 37 Pac. 410 (guardian of heir preferred to public administrator); In re Donovan, 104 Cal. 623, 38 Pac. 456 (public administrator has preference over nonresident brother of decedent); In re Eggers, 114 Cal. 464, 46 Pac. 380 (public administrator preferred to relative who is not heir); In re Richardson, 120 Cal. 344, 52 Pac. 832 (public administrator has preference over nominee of nonresident executor); In re Weed, 120 Cal. 634, 53 Pac. 30 (public administrator has preference over nonresident niece); In re Healy, 122 Cal. 162, 54 Pac. 736 (public administrator has preference over nominee of nieces and nephews); In re Engle, 124 Cal. 292, 56 Pac. 1022 (assignee of devisee has priority over public administrator. See also In re Rankin, 164 Cal. 138, 127 Pac. 1034); In re Newman, 124 Cal. 688, 57 Pac. 686, 45 L.R.A. 780 (fact that decedent's wife has contracted bigamous marriage does not deprive her of administration in preference to public administrator); In re Coan, 132 Cal. 401, 64 Pac. 691 (resident son of nonresident decedent has preference over public administrator); In re Damke, 133 Cal. 433, 65 Pac. 888 (public administrator of county in which intestate resided at time of his death has priority over public administrator of another county). See also In re Graves, 8

Col. App. 254, 96 Pac. 792; In re Harrison, 135 Cal. 7, 66 Pac. 846 (though public administrator should have been appointed, appointment of nominee of foreign executor is not reversible error). Compare In re Richardson, 120 Cal. 344, 52 Pac. 832; In re Wakefield, 136 Cal. 110, 68 Pac. 499 (public administrator has preference over brothers); In re Brundage, 141 Cal. 538, 75 Pac. 175 (resident son of nonresident decedent has priority over public administrator, although latter is also assignee of daughter's interest); In re Munroe, 161 Cal. 10, Ann. Cas. 1913B 1161, 118 Pac. 242 (executrix nominated in will preferred to public administrator despite personal immorality); In re Wise (Cal.) 165 Pac. 531 (public administrator preferred to nominee of nonresident heir).

Illinois.—Rosenthal v. Prussing, 108 Ill. 128 (creditor has preference over public administrator); Branch v. Rankin, 108 Ill. 444 (foreign creditor may be preferred to public administrator); In re McWhirter, 235 Ill. 607, 85 N. E. 918 (public administrator has preference over nominee of nonresident next of kin). Compare Strong v. Dignan, 207 Ill. 385, 69 N. E. 909, 99 Am. St. Rep. 225 (decided under earlier statute); Krome v. Halbert, 263 Ill. 172, 104 N. E. 1066, 183 Ill. App. 551 (resident next of kin of nonresident decedent has priority over public administrator); Bundy v. Wilkins, 183 Ill. App. 560 (nephews and nieces have priority over public administrator).

Louisiana.—Taylor's Succession, 23 La. Ann. 22 (where foreign executor refuses to act, public administrator must be appointed); Henry's Succession, 31 La. Ann. 555 (attorney of heir has preference over public administrator); Dietrich's Succession, 32 La. Ann. 127 (nominee of absent or nonresident heirs has priority over public administrator); Bossu's Succession, 115 La. 13, 38 So. 878 (public administrator has preference over nominee of nonresident legatee).

Missouri.—Tittman v. Edwards, 27 Mo. App. 492 (though public administrator was entitled to letters where another administrator was appointed he should not be removed).

Montana.—In re Stewart, 18 Mont. 595, 46 Pac. 806 (nominee of nonresident widow has priority over public administrator); In re Craigie, 24 Mont. 37, 60 Pac. 495 (nominee of nonresident next of kin has preference over public administrator); In re Watson, 31 Mont. 438, 78 Pac. 702 (nominee of nonresident brothers and sisters has preference over public administrator); In re Koller, 40 Mont. 137, 105 Pac. 549 (nominee of nonresident mother has priority over public administrator).

New York.—Public Administrator v. Peters, 1 Bradf. 100 (public administrator has priority over relative who has no distributive right); Ferrie v. Public Administrator, 3

Bradf. 249 (public administrator has preference over nonresident heir or creditors); Public Administrator v. Watts, 1 Paige 357 (public administrator has preference over disqualified next of kin); Matter of Blank, 2 Redf. 443 (public administrator has preference over nominee of disqualified next of kin); In re Hanover, 3 Redf. 91 (public administrator has preference over foreign administrator); In re Patullo, 1 Tuck. 99 (niece has priority over public administrator); In re Goddard, 94 N. Y. 544 (when next of kin renounce their right to letters, public administrator has priority over their nominee); In re Hudson, 37 Misc. 539, 75 N. Y. S. 1053 (guardian of minor child of decedent has priority over public administrator); Matter of McMullen, 85 Misc. 661, 148 N. Y. S. 1092 (public administrator has priority over nonresident and alien next of kin); In re Ward, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 254 (public administrator preferred over creditor); In re Root, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 257 (public administrator preferred over nominee of heir).

In the case of In re Page, 107 N. Y. 266, 14 N. E. 193, it was held that though there are other persons having a priority to letters of administration the public administrator may commence proceedings to administer and continue to do so until the persons having the priority intervene.

In Matter of Hagan, 78 Misc. 322, 139 N. Y. S. 463, it appeared that the intestate was survived by her father, who was her only next of kin. He was appointed administrator but later died. Thereafter the widow of the deceased administrator sought to be appointed administratrix of the first decedent. A brother of the latter, a creditor, and also the public administrator, sought the appointment. It was held that as among the four persons named the public administrator was entitled to letters of administration.

In Dungan v. Superior Ct. 149 Cal. 98, 84 Pac. 767, 117 Am. St. Rep. 119, it appeared that one Jane Davis died in New York on September 19, 1904. On the same day the public administrator of Tulase county, California, filed an application for letters of administration of the estate of the decedent situated in California. The hearing on this application was continued from time to time until December 24, 1904, when the superior court of Tulase county entered an order by which letters of administration were issued to the petitioner. It further appeared that on September 23, 1904, the public administrator of Fresno county, California, filed a petition with the superior court of Fresno county, for his appointment as administrator of the estate within the state of California. His petition was granted on October 3, 1904. The controlling statute (Code Civil Procedure, § 1295) was as follows: "When the estate of the decedent is in more than one county, he having died out of the state, and not having been a resident thereof at the time of his death, . . . the superior court of that county in which application is first made for letters testamentary or of administration, has exclusive jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate." In construing this statute the court held that the administrator of Tulase county was entitled to administer the estate, saying: "The only point made as to the construction of this plain and unambiguous statutory provision is as to the meaning of the words 'in which application is first made.' When is such an application 'made' within the meaning of this provision? In view of our statutory provisions upon the subject (Code Civ. Proc. secs. 1371-1379), we are satisfied that the filing of a proper petition with the clerk of a superior court constitutes the making of the application. An application must necessarily precede the hearing. The statute fully prescribes the manner and form for the making of such application. It cannot be oral, but 'must be in writing, signed by the applicant or his counsel, and filed with the clerk of the court, stating the facts essential to give the court jurisdiction of the case.' (Sec. 1371.) This plainly constituted the making of the application, in the opinion of the framers of the original code, in which both sections 1295 and 1371 were contained in their present form, for the headnote to section 1371 was 'Applications, How Made.' (See Barnes v. Jones, 51 Cal. 303, 306; Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, 16, 16 Pac. 345.) Thereupon the court to which the petition or application (which words are used synonymously in the statute) is presented must assume jurisdiction thereof, through its designated officer, the clerk of the court, by appointing a time 'for the hearing of the application' which has been made, and giving the prescribed notice. (Secs. 1372, 1373.) At the time appointed for the 'hearing of such application,' or at any time to which such hearing is continued, the court must hear the allegations and proofs. (Secs. 1372, 1375.) Obviously, in the light of these statutory provisions, what takes place at the hearing is not the making of an application, but is the hearing of the application that has, at a previous date, been made in the manner prescribed by statute. The question is simply one of the construction of a statute. It is true that the constitution confers jurisdiction in 'all matters of probate' upon the superior court, but this does not mean that all superior courts in the state shall have concurrent jurisdiction in every particular probate matter. The legislature undoubtedly has the right to prescribe by general laws the rules which shall obtain, in determining which of the many superior courts shall exercise the constitutionally conferred jurisdiction in any particular estate. It follows from the above that Tulase county is the county in which application was first made for letters of administration, and that thereby, if any part of the estate of decedent was situate therein, the superior court of that county obtained exclusive jurisdiction of the settlement of said estate." See also In re Davis, 149 Cal. 485, 87 Pac. 17, involving the same proceeding.

In the case of In re Graves, 8 Cal. App. 254, 96 Pac. 792, it appeared that the decedent died in Riverside county, California. The public administrator of that county applied for and received letters of administration. Thereafter several heirs of the decedent contested the probate of the latter's will. The probate judge of Riverside county finding himself disqualified to act transferred the action to another county. The judge of the latter county appointed the public administrator of his county to take charge of the estate. It was held that the first appointee was entitled to the letters of administration. The court said: "The public administrator of one county is entitled to contest the right of another public administrator to administer upon an estate in the superior court of the county of which the applicant is the public administrator, and the conflicting claims of the applicants must be determined by ascertaining the residence of the deceased at the time of his death (In re Damke, 133 Cal. 437, 65 Pac. 888). It is the duty of the public administrator to take charge of the estates of persons dying within his county (sec. 1726). No burden is imposed upon him of administering estates which have been transferred to his county by reason of the disqualification of the judge of the superior court of an adjoining county."

In the case of In re Hudson, 37 Misc. 539, 75 N. Y. S. 1053, it was held that the guardian of a minor child of the decedent was entitled to letters of administration in preference to the public administrator. The court said: "The office of the public administrator was created for the purpose of providing a public official who should take charge of the estates where there was no next of kin entitled to act, on the theory that it would be better for such estates to have some competent public official act in preference to a creditor who would manifestly be interested to the extent of his claim only. . . . It is my judgment that all that the language of section 2669 meant to do was to give the public administrator a priority over creditors and other persons and that there was no intention in that section to differentiate between a person who was entitled to administer himself and one who could only do so through his guardian."

In Sutton v. Public Administrator, 4 Dem. (N. Y.) 33, the court said: "The mother of the intestate, being a nonresident alien, cannot, under our statutes, obtain letters of administration herself, and she cannot authorize anyone to do for her what she is precluded from doing. Were there none other, this would be a sufficient reason for declining to entertain the application. . . . It seems to me that, in this case, the county treasurer should proceed as public administrator, and thus the mother will, with least trouble, expense, and delay, be enabled to obtain what of right belongs to her."

The priority of right to administer as between a public administrator and a foreign consul is discussed in the notes to Carpigani v. Hall, Ann. Cas. 1913D 651, and Servas's Estate, Ann. Cas. 1916D 233.

Collateral Attack on Appointment.

The authority of a public administrator to take charge of an estate cannot be assailed collaterally. Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 11 S. Ct. 369, 34 U. S. (L. ed.) 1054; American Car, etc. Co. v. Anderson, 211 Fed. 301, 127 C. C. A. 587; Russell v. Erwin, 41 Ala. 292; Landford v. Dunklin, 71 Ala. 594; Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 215, 68 Am. Dec. 237; Cox v. Kansas City, 86 Kan. 298, 120 Pac. 553; Pierce v. Marra, 153 Ky. 748, 156 S. W. 404 (sheriff acting as public administrator); Wetzell v. Waters, 18 Mo. 396; Dunn v. German-American Bank, 109 Mo. 90, 18 S. W. 1139; Leeper v. Taylor, 111 Mo. 312, 19 S. W. 955; Vermillion v. Le Clare, 89 Mo. App. 55; Taylor v. Biddle, 71 N. C. 1; Hartley v. Glover, 56 S. C. 69, 33 S. E. 796; State v. Anderson, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 321; Hutcheson v. Priddy, 12 Grat. (Va.) 85; Jordan v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 125 Wis. 581, 4 Ann. Cas. 1113, 104 N. W. 803, 110 Am. St. Rep. 865, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 885. See also Richardson v. Busch, 198 Mo. 184, 95 S. W. 894, 115 Am. St. Rep. 472.

In Hutcheson v. Priddy, 12 Grat. (Va.) 85, it appeared that the probate court appointed the sheriff to act as administrator of the decedent's estate. The appointment was prematurely made three months not having expired from the time of the death of the intestate. It was held that while the appointment was irregularly made it was not void and could not be attacked collaterally. The court said: "Nor is the case altered by the act supposed to be proved in this cause, that the order committing the estate to the sheriff was made some few days before the expiration of three months from the death of the testator. If the order made thus prematurely were ipso facto void, it might be otherwise. I think however that it is voidable only and not void. The fourth section of the act in effect reserves the right of administration to distributees exclusively for thirty days after the death of the decedent; yet if the court should chance to grant administration to a creditor or some other person before the expiration of the thirty days, it will scarcely be seriously contended that such a grant would be absolutely void; though it certainly would be erroneous and voidable. Whether in either case, the order for administration was made at a proper time or prematurely, is not such a question of jurisdiction as may be raised collaterally in another action or proceeding. The jurisdiction of a county court upon this subject is a general jurisdiction conferred by statute to grant probate of wills, and to hear and determine suits and controversies testamentary and concerning administrations. Code, ch. 122, § 23, p. 519; ch. 130, § 4, p. 541. It is a court of record, and its judgments or sentences cannot be questioned collaterally, if it have jurisdiction of cases ejusdem generis. Where it has jurisdiction over that class of cases, whether the court erred or not in determining that the facts were proved upon which the power to grant administration in the particular case depended, is not to be inquired into collaterally. It must be supposed to have inquired into and decided upon those facts at the time of making its order, and its decision if erroneous, would be voidable only and not void."

Powers and Duties.

A public administrator must exercise his powers in strict conformity to the statute granting the same. Los Angeles County v. Kellogg, 146 Cal. 590, 80 Pac. 861.

In People v. Prendergast, 167 App. Div. 140, 152 N. Y. S. 938, it was held by an evenly divided court that the public administrator of Bronx county had no implied power to appoint a stenographer to assist him in his office. In support of that view it was said: "Bronx county was created by chapter 548 of the Laws of 1912, which was amended by chapters 266, 823 and 825 of the Laws of 1913. Section 3 of said chapter 548, as amended by said chapter 825, authorized the surrogate of Bronx county to appoint 'a public administrator of the county of Bronx,' and provided that 'such public administrator shall have all the authority and powers within said county of Bronx as are now conferred by law upon the public administrator of the county of New York,' and that his salary should be $4,000 per annum, and that he should in addition thereto 'receive and retain to himself the same allowance for his services and expenses incurred as are allowed to a county treasurer under section 2667 of the Code of Civil Procedure.' We find no provision of law authorizing the public administrator to appoint a stenographer and typewriter, or to make any appointment to a public office or position. There was no provision in section 2667 of the Code of Civil Procedure referred to in the statute, with respect to an allowance to a county treasurer for services and expenses; but section 2668 as it then existed (now Code Civ. Proc. 2593, as amended by Laws of 1914, chap. 443) contained such a provision, and doubtless that is the section intended by the legislature. It provided that a county treasurer, when acting as a public administrator, 'must be allowed on the settlement of his accounts for his expenses as other administrators, and for his services double the commissions allowed them by law.' The general rule is that an administrator must personally perform, or at his own expense provide for the performance of, all clerical duties incident to the administration (Matter of Binghamton Trust Co. 87 App. Div. 26); but we are not now concerned with the question as to the allowance to the public administrator for expenses for clerical or other work. The question presented for decision is whether he had authority to appoint the relator to the position of stenographer and typewriter, and whether she is entitled to receive a salary from the city. No provision of law is cited by counsel for either party expressly authorizing the public administrator of the county of New York to appoint subordinates in his office. The only statutory provisions to which our attention has been drawn relating to the office of public administrator of the county of New York are those contained in chapter 230 of the Laws of 1898. Section 2 of that act requires any person appointed to the office of public administrator of the county of New York to execute a bond conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties, and it provides for the discharge of the duties of the office by an assistant public administrator in the event of the sickness or other disability of the public administrator. The final sentence of the section vests the power of appointment and removal of the public administrator in the surrogates of the county, and it vests in the public administrator 'the appointment and the removal of his subordinates.' Doubtless the office of assistant public administrator was created by these provisions and the authority to appoint to that office was vested in the public administrator, and it may be that any necessary subordinate positions were created by implication, since the authority to appoint and remove subordinates is vested in the public administrator, and especially since by the provisions of section 3 of the act the public administrator is required to account to the city for all fees, costs and other moneys received by him, and he is forbidden to receive to his own use any fees or emoluments in addition to his salary. It was of course competent for the legislature, notwithstanding the fact that the public administrator of Bronx county is authorized to receive fees in addition to salary, to provide for the appointment of a clerical force in his office at the public expense, as has been done in the case of the sheriff of the county of New York, who receives both salary and fees (see Laws of 1890, chap. 523, § 1, as amd. by Laws of 1913, chap. 373; Id. § 2); but if it had been so intended, I am of opinion that it would have been expressly so provided. The legislature did not, I think, intend to confer upon the public administrator of Bronx county authority to make appointments to offices or positions by the reference in the statute to the authority of the public administrator of the county of New York, and it is not so claimed by counsel for the respondent. That reference was intended, I think, merely to obviate the necessity of incorporating in the statute the general powers intended to be conferred upon the public administrator and the duties of the office."

After the administration of an estate by the public administrator if there is any balance left he may distribute it among the heirs or next of kin of the decedent. Parker v. Kückens, 7 Allen (Mass.) 509.

The public administrator must, besides faithfully administering the estates of decedents dying without heir or next of kin, account to the county treasurer for all funds received by him as such administrator. Los Angeles County v. Kellogg, 146 Cal. 590, 80 Pac. 861.

With respect to the power of a public administrator to contest a will, see the note to Brauel v. Reuther, reported ante, this volume, at page 533.

Personal Liability.

It has been held that the public administrator is personally liable for any injury he may cause to the property which he administers although he may act in good faith. Mosby v. Mosby, 9 Grat. (Va.) 584 (sheriff having been appointed administrator is responsible for his acts as well as the acts of his deputies in regard to the administration of the estate). In Levin v. Russell, 42 N. Y. 251, it appeared that one P. had executed and delivered to the plaintiff two promissory notes. Thereafter he gave to the plaintiff a chattel mortgage on numerous oil paintings and their frames as security for the payment of the notes. Subsequently P. became insane and died intestate in a lunatic asylum. He left no widow or next of kin.

The plaintiff, who placed P. in the asylum, took possession of the mortgaged property and continued in possession thereof until about two months after P.'s death. Later the defendant, the public administrator of the city of New York, took possession of the mortgaged property. The plaintiff demanded the same from the defendant, who refused to deliver it. The plaintiff then brought suit to recover the property and also damages for its wrongful detention. After the action was commenced the defendant was appointed administrator of P.'s estate. It was held that the defendant was not exempt from liability for the wrongful detention of the property on the ground that he acted as public administrator and in good faith. The court said: "The counsel for the appellant insists that the defendant having taken the property as public administrator of the city of New York in good faith, believing that it was the property of the intestate at the time of his death, no action will lie personally against him therefor, although the property was the plaintiff's, and not that of the intestate. In this the counsel is mistaken. Section 3 of the act (2d Statutes at Large, 123) prescribing the powers and duties of the public administrator, in this respect only authorizes him to take the goods of the intestate. Section 42, page 131, making the corporation of the city liable for the application of all moneys received by the public administrator, according to law, and for the due and faithful execution of all the duties of office, confers no power upon him to seize and detain the goods of others in which the deceased had no interest. It follows that, if the goods in question were, as claimed, the property of the plaintiff, the action for detaining them from him was well brought against the defendant personally."

Liability on Bond.

Though a public administrator is required to give a bond in each instance when he is appointed to administer an estate, the sureties on his general official bond are also liable for a breach of duty in respect to the administration. State v. Watts, 23 Ark. 304. And the failure to require a special bond does not relieve the sureties on the general bond. Healey v. Superior Ct. 127 Cal. 659, 60 Pac. 429. So in the case of In re Craigie's Estate, 24 Mont. 37, 60 Pac. 495, the court said: "Nor did the provision of section 825, supra, that, upon failure of the public administrator to give the bond required by the judge, his office should become vacant, create a vacancy upon the mere happening of that event. We do not believe that the legislature in enacting section 825 intended to provide that a public administrator, who is already under an official bond of $10,000, and has otherwise qualified, should, after entering upon the discharge of his duties, forthwith forfeit his office, upon omission to give an additional bond required by the judge as further security for the interest of an estate in his hands. Failure to give the bond was cause for declaring a vacancy in the office, and upon a judicial ascertainment and declaration of such omission the office would have become vacant. In our opinion, the neglect to furnish the additional bond did not of itself cause a vacancy in the office of public administrator."

In State v. Anderson, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 321, it appeared that one Anderson was elected to the office of public administrator after the incumbent had resigned. His election should have been for the unexpired term of his predecessor. However, by an oversight he was elected for the full term given by the state to a candidate. Thereafter he received letters of administration of certain estates and gave a bond with sureties. He administered the estates for some time, collected a considerable amount of money, squandered the same and then absconded. An action being brought against him and his sureties the latter contended that they were not liable because Anderson was not duly elected. It was held that the defense was untenable. The court said: "Would it not be a perversion of justice and subversion of sound principle to allow his possession of the office of administrator to be now contested and annulled by the sureties on his bond, after he has, by virtue of his office, received the administration from a court authorized to grant it, has obtained the assets, squandered them, fled the country, and is now called on to account? Public policy as well as sound principle alike forbid that such a rule should find a place in our jurisprudence. This view finds abundant support in the analogous cases where judges have been appointed in violation of the constitution, or courts held at times or places not authorized by law; yet, in favor of the public, their acts have always been held valid except on direct contest, and so should the action of the county court be held valid until annulled by the like direct proceeding. . . . Assuming as the result, beyond question, that Anderson was administrator of these estates, or is to be so treated on the facts of these records, the liability of the sureties is conclusively settled. The duties of the office are fixed and defined by law, and no one ever questioned that a leading duty is to receive and account for the assets of the intestate on whose estate the administration is had. . . . Here is an administrator, with grant of authority from the court, having, in this case, authority to grant letters authorizing him to administer the estate. All the debtors of such estates are to deal with him, and he is authorized to collect debts due the deceased purporting to be represented by him. He has collected very large sums and squandered it. Shall all these payments be held void, and yet his letters of administration have never been contested by any one having a better right, as widow, next of kin, or creditor? Shall all this wrong be done to such debtors at the instance of sureties now, after his term of office has expired, and we hold them exempt, while the orphans whose money has been spent, or creditors who have honestly paid, shall be required to bear the consequences of his official delinquency? Such a holding would shock our sense of justice, and could never be justified, except where there was an imperative mandate of the legislature requiring it. None such exists, but reason, analogy and sound public policy all accord with the view we have taken of the questions presented in the records before us."

So where the sheriff is appointed as public administrator the sureties on his bond as sheriff are liable for his acts as public administrator. Williams v. Collins, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 58; Scarce v. Page, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 311. See also Governor v. Gantt, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 388.

The expiration of the term of a public administrator does not release the sureties on his bond from liability for his acts while completing the administration of an estate. State v. Watts, 23 Ark. 304; In re Aveline, 53 Cal. 259; Dabney v. Smith, 5 Leigh (Va.) 13; Tyler v. Nelson, 14 Grat. (Va.) 214; Tunstall v. Withers, 86 Va. 492, 11 S. E. 565.

In Newman v. Flowers, 134 Ky. 557, 121 S. W. 652, it appeared that one Burton was appointed public administrator and guardian and gave a bond. It further appeared that the clerk of the court in entering the order appointing Burton styled the latter as public administrator only. Thereafter Burton took charge as public administrator and guardian of the estate of an infant. He misappropriated part of the funds. A guardian was later appointed and he brought suit against Burton and his sureties to recover the amount misused. The sureties contended that they were not responsible for Burton's acts as public guardian, because, they claimed, they went on his bond as public administrator and not as public guardian. Their contention was held to be untenable. The court said: "It appears that the trouble arose in this case from the fact that the clerk of the court in entering the order of appointment of Burton and taking his official bond omitted to style him as guardian, and only referred to him as public administrator. This was evidently a mistake or oversight. The styling of him as public administrator and guardian was a matter of form. The purpose and intent of the statute was to have a discreet and fit person designated to whom the settlement of deceased persons' estates and the estates of all minors should be confided for protection and settlement under the conditions and circumstances named in the statute. The official name by which he is designated is not in our opinion very material. In our opinion, it was as much the duty of Burton in his official capacity to receive and care for the estate of the infant Elsie Flowers when confided to him by the county court as it was to receive and disburse the estate of deceased persons, and appellants, his sureties, were bound for the faithful discharge of Burton's duties in respect to her estate, and they cannot now be heard to say that they had no intention of becoming bound for his acts as public guardian, for, when they signed the bond, they were presumed to have knowledge of the statutes above copied which compelled the county court to confide to him the estates of both deceased persons and infants, and they cannot escape on account of the oversight of the clerk of the court in failing to insert in the order and bond the word 'guardian.' The statute by its terms placed the word there."

In Bailey v. McAlpin, 121 Ga. 111, 48 S. E. 699, it appeared that one Tripp was appointed public administrator and gave a bond. He later applied for letters of administration of an estate. Pending his application for permanent letters the court appointed him temporary administrator of the estate. Later he resigned from his official position and a successor was appointed who requested Tripp to turn over to him the money that he had collected while acting as temporary administrator. On the latter's failure to comply with the request suit was brought against him and his sureties. It was held that the sureties were not liable as Tripp did not act in his official capacity in administering the estate. The court said: "The law in reference to county administrators was not intended to affect other provisions of the code. It was rather supplementary and intended to provide for an officer who should be bound to qualify when, because of the meager assets, inability to give bond, or want of resident heirs or of persons interested, the estate was likely to be unrepresented for what he has collected. But certain it is that he has undertaken an office which did not devolve upon him by virtue of his position as county administrator. His bondsmen are entitled to rely on the rule that their liability as sureties is one of strict law, and does not apply to cases like the present, where there was no notice, allegation, or finding that the estate of Kelley was one not likely to be represented. The motion to dismiss should therefore have been sustained."

In O'Rourke v. Harper, 35 Mont. 346, 89 Pac. 65, it appeared that one Wisner had been elected public administrator. His term of office was from January 1903 to January 1905. He gave a bond with sureties. He was re-elected at the expiration of his term of office. Again he gave a bond with other sureties. During his first term of office Wisner was appointed administrator of an estate, and received a considerable amount of money belonging thereto. During his second term of office he received nearly four thousand dollars belonging to the estate, and converted these sums of money to his own use. The conversion occurred during his second term of office. The plaintiff, a claim holder against the estate, brought an action against the sureties on the second bond. It was held that they were not liable. The court said: "It seems clear, therefore, that Wisner's authority to administer upon the Ford estate was derived solely from the grant of letters issued to him during his first term of office as public administrator. The fact that he afterwards succeeded himself as public administrator has nothing to do with this controversy, and may be treated as though it did not exist. It is equally clear, under the authorities, that Wisner continued to be administrator of the Ford estate after the expiration of his first term as public administrator. It naturally follows that the sureties on his second official bond are not liable for his acts or omissions as administrator of any estate of which he became the representative before they executed their undertaking."

Liability of Municipality.

Where a public administrator acts within the scope of his authority the municipality which he represents is liable for his wrongful acts. Jones v. Harbaugh, 93 Md. 269, 48 Atl. 827; Douglass v. New York, 56 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 178; Glover v. New York, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 232; Matthews v. New York, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 132.

In Douglass v. New York, supra, the court said: "The public administrator holds his office from the defendant (R. S. vol. 2, p. 118, sec. 1), and the defendant is made responsible for the application of all moneys received by the public administrator according to law, and for the due and faithful execution of all the duties of his office (Idem, p. 127, sec. 42). . . . But the defendant is not liable for everything done by a person holding the office of public administrator, although he professes to act as such. The defendants are liable for all money the public administrator shall receive according to law, and for the faithful execution of his office. . . .

For acts illegal or done outside of his office the defendants would not be liable."

In Matthews v. The Mayor, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 132, it appeared that the public administrator failed properly to execute his duties in that he instituted a groundless, vexatious and unnecessary suit. It further appeared that he was careless in proceeding with the suit, which caused a judgment of nonsuit to be rendered against him. It was held that the city of New York was liable in damages to the plaintiff for the negligence of the public administrator. The court said: "The mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of New York, in common council convened, from time to time, and as often as a vacancy in the office shall occur, may appoint a public administrator in the city of New York, who shall hold this office during the pleasure of the common council. (2 Rev. Stat. 118, § 1.) By the 42d section of the same statute, page 127, it is provided, 'that the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of New York, shall, in all cases, be responsible for the application of all moneys received by the public administrator, according to law, and for the due and faithful execution of all the duties of his office. . . . The statute makes the defendants absolutely and unconditionally liable for the application of all moneys received by the public administrator according to law, and for the due and faithful execution of all the duties of his office. This would seem to be a direct and primary liability, and not a collateral and secondary one. The public administrator is the creature of the defendants, under the statute. They appoint him, and take from him a bond to them, with such sureties as shall be approved by them. The 44th section, . . . gives the defendants a general supervisory power over the public administrator; and looking at the whole scope and purview of the statute we think he stands in the light of an agent of the defendants, rather than that of the agent of the state. The defendants are, therefore, directly responsible to any person aggrieved by the acts or omissions of the public administrator, for the due and faithful execution of all the duties of his office. The obvious intent of the statute was to extend the liability of the city corporation, to every case where a party is prejudiced by the improper official acts of the public administrator, and to give the party injured a remedy against them, whenever a right of action has accrued against the public administrator, through any violation of the duties of his office."

In Nash v. New York, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 1, it appeared that the plaintiff, an attorney, had been engaged by the public administrator to prosecute a suit. He was also employed, by another public administrator, to defend an action brought against the latter as public administrator. It was held that the municipality was liable for the plaintiff's services. The court said: "After a careful examination of the law, we have come to the conclusion that it would be difficult to find a more complete case of agency than this: The public administrator, first, is appointed by the common council, and is removable at their pleasure. Second. He gives a bond directly to them, for the faithful discharge of his duties. Third. The emoluments of the office are paid directly into the treasury and belong to the corporation. Fourth. The corporation, from time to time, as they may deem necessary, may make rules for his government. Now if the 24th section, and the 43d section were struck out altogether, we are inclined to think the corporation would be equally liable for the acts of their agent. He may sue and be sued as any other administrator. It may often become his duty to prosecute or defend suits. An omission or neglect to do so, might be a neglect or omission of duty, for which he or his bondsmen might be liable. It may be greatly for the benefit of his principal, the corporation, that he should do so. He thereby may preserve or secure a fund, out of which commissions are to accrue, and by which their treasury is increased. It would seem but reasonable, that the attorney thus employed to prosecute or defend these suits, should be entitled to recover his costs directly from the principal. If the corporation choose, they may limit the power of their agent by rules or regulations adopted in pursuance of the 44th section. By not making such regulations, they leave the matter to his discretion. They may require that no suit be prosecuted or defended, except by express authority given by them in each particular case, or except under the sanction of the corporation counsel. It does not appear that any such rules or regulations have been adopted, and it not appearing but that these suits were prosecuted and defended by the several public administrators in entire good faith, and in what they conceived to be an honest discharge of their duties, and for the interest of the corporation, we are of opinion that the verdict rendered before Mr. Justice Strong, was in all respects correct, and that the motion for a new trial must be denied with costs."

Compensation.

A public administrator is not entitled to compensation for services rendered after the expiration of his term. Los Angeles County v. Kellogg, 146 Cal. 590, 80 Pac. 861, wherein the court said: "The contrary view contended for by appellant would offer strong inducements for the public administrator, who is a salaried officer, to delay the settlement of estates, by doing which he would draw a salary to the close of his term and full compensation after his term had ended for such estates as were not fully administered; and, besides, the county would be paying his successor the salary provided by law. Furthermore, it would be a temptation to the successor to favor this practice, as it would relieve him from the labor and responsibility of caring for partly administered estates, and besides would be a practice profitable to him when he passed out of office. Appellant insists that it was not only his right to continue his administration, after his term closed, but that it was his duty; and that it is but just and fair to compensate him, since he was but performing a duty imposed upon him. In a sense it is true that so long as his letters remained unrevoked, it was his right and duty to faithfully execute his trust, and, if there was no way by which he could have relieved himself of this trust, the equity of his claim for compensation, under an implied promise, might have some force. But it is not true that he had no means of relief. He knew at the November election whether he was to continue in office; he had two months in which to close the business and prepare to turn over his trust to his successor. He should have asked the court by appropriate petition to revoke his letters, resigning his appointment in estates remaining unadministered; he should have stated his accounts to the close of his term and asked to be relieved from further performance of the trust. It would have been the duty of the court to settle his accounts, accept his resignation, revoke his letters, and direct his successor to take charge of the estate. (See Code Civ. Proc. secs. 1726, 1735.) If for any reason the successor could not act, the court should have appointed a special administrator. With this means of being relieved, the outgoing officer still persists in continuing to administer or refuses to relinquish his trust to his successor, he cannot be heard to complain if his services are regarded as voluntary and he be denied the right to any compensation therefor, except such compensation as he had already received by way of salary."

Under the Idaho statute the county treasurer is ex-officio public administrator. It has been held that he is bound to account to the county for all fees received by him as administrator. In re Rice, 12 Idaho 305, 85 Pac. 1109.

Termination of Authority.

The expiration of the term of a public administrator does not ipso facto terminate his right to complete the administration of estates placed in his charge during the term. In re Alveline, 53 Cal. 259; Los Angeles County v. Kellogg, 146 Cal. 590, 80 Pac. 361; In re Craigie, 24 Mont. 37, 60 Pac. 495; Dabney v. Smith, 5 Leigh (Va.) 13; Tunstall v. Withers, 86 Va. 892, 11 S. E. 565. See also Boynton v. Heartt, 158 N. C. 488, Ann. Cas. 1913D 616, 74 S. E. 470. Compare In re Pingree, 100 Cal. 78, 34 Pac. 521.

But it has been held that on the appointment of his successor the right of the latter attaches. State v. Parker, 30 La. Ann. 1182; State v. Fickling, 12 Rich. L. (S. C.) 9.

A public administrator may be removed as administrator of a particular estate. In re Bagnola (Ia.) 154 N. W. 461; Proctor v. Wanamaker, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 302 (letters granted on false suggestion of service of citation). In Varnell v. Loague, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 158, a public administrator prematurely appointed was removed on application of the next of kin.

A direct discharge by the court is ordinarily necessary to terminate the authority of a public administrator. Rogers v. Hoberlein, 11 Cal. 120. And this is true though his appointment is irregular. Landford v. Dunklin, 71 Ala. 594.

The resignation of a public administrator does not finally discharge him, Olson v. Rich, 79 Ky. 244, unless it is accepted by the court, Russell v. Erwin, 41 Ala. 292.

In Daly v. Mallory, 123 Ala. 170, 26 So. 217, it appeared that one White had been appointed public administrator by the probate judge. Thereafter the judge's term expired but he was re-elected and resumed his office the day following the expiration of his first term. On resumption of his office the judge failed to reappoint White formally as public administrator. However, he continued to issue to White letters of administration and did so several times before the question was raised as to White's authority to act as public administrator. It was held that the judge's acts indicated that he treated White as the public administrator and that a formal order of reappointment was not necessary. The court said: "There can be no question but that on these facts White was in the ordinary sense of words continued in the office of general administrator by Judge Wood upon the latter's induction into office in November, 1886. It was Wood's duty to keep the office filled, to keep an incumbent in it. This duty he could perform on the commencement of his second term in at least two ways: He could either make a new appointment, thereby initiating a new term of office in the general administratorship, or he could affirmatively treat White as still holding the office, thereby not initiating a new term at all, but merely extending an existing term. He did not adopt the former course; he made no new appointment either of White or other person. But he in point of fact adopted the latter: He allowed White to proceed with the administration of estates already in his hands without interim, let, break or hindrance, and he affirmatively recognized White's continuance in the office by committing to him as such officer the first estate requiring the service of a general administrator—and this within a few days of the commencement of his own term as judge of probate—and every other estate proper to go into the hands of the general administrator; and White by virtue alone of such continuance in office proceeded to administer all estates thus left in his hands or committed to him after the beginning of the judge's new term. It is obvious that the probate judge did everything that was possible for him to do in respect of continuing White in office, except that he did not enter a formal order or memorandum to that end or evidencing the fact on the minutes of his court. And the sole remaining inquiry is: was such order essential to an efficacious legal continuance of White in office? It is insisted such order was essential for that in section 789 of the Code it is made the duty of the judge of probate 'to keep minutes of all his official acts and proceedings; and, within three months thereafter, to record the same in well bound books.' Of course, on the assumption that affirmative action on the part of Judge Wood was necessary to continue White in office, such continuance in office is an official proceeding or act of the probate judge, and should be entered on the minutes and afterwards recorded. But it does not follow from the fact that the judge of probate failed to do his duty in this connection—failed to note and record the fact that White was continued in office—that White was not so continued—that the fact of continuance itself did not exist. The collective fact of such continuance clearly appearing from the absence of appointment of his successor, his continued administration in the probate court of estates which had already come to his hands and the affirmative acts of the probate judge in granting to him as general administrator letters upon a number of estates after the expiration of the term of office of the judge appointing him, is not, in our opinion, emasculated by the judge's mere failure of duty to make a record of the fact, which is as clearly shown by the averments of these complaints as if the record had been made." See also State v. Kennedy, 163 Mo. 510, 63 S. W. 678, wherein it appeared that a public administrator was continued in office without a formal re-appointment.

PEOPLE

v.

FALKOVITCH.

Illinois Supreme Court—October 23, 1917.

280 Ill. 321; 117 N. E. 398.

Homicide — Negligent Manslaughter — Reckless Driving of Automobile.

In a prosecution for involuntary manslaughter committed by reckless driving of an automobile, indictment is held to set forth sufficiently the specific acts relied on as constituting the crime.

Same.

An indictment for involuntary manslaughter committed by the reckless driving of an automobile, alleging that the act was done feloniously, unlawfully, and recklessly, is sufficient, although it does not charge that the killing was "wilful," as an act done feloniously is done with the deliberate purpose of committing a crime.

Same.

In a prosecution for involuntary manslaughter, it is not necessary that the indictment should describe the particular character or kind of motor vehicle with which the killing was accomplished, as accused is presumed to know the provisions of the statute defining the term "motor vehicle," and that a Ford automobile comes clearly within the statutory definition.

Liability of Automobile Driver for Negligent Homicide.

In a prosecution for involuntary manslaughter committed by reckless driving of an automobile, the evidence is held sufficient to show clearly the guilt of the defendant.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal and Error — Scope of Review — Necessity of Objection Below — Misconduct of Juror.

Where defendant and his attorney knew at the trial that the juror had a conversation with one of the witnesses, but did not call the attention of the trial court thereto until after the motion for a new trial was made, such matter will not be reviewed, especially where the affidavits presented warranted the court in finding that the conversation had no reference to the trial.

Remarks of Counsel — Necessity of Objection.

The question as to the alleged prejudicial remarks of the state's attorney being raised for the first time in the trial court on motion for new trial will not be reviewed.

[See 7 Ann. Cas. 229; Ann. Cas. 1916A 551; 9 Am. St. Rep. 570.]

Instructions — Prejudice for Error — Inaccuracy Cured by Other Instructions.

In a prosecution for involuntary manslaughter committed by reckless driving of an automobile, although the people's third instruction was erroneous in stating that a speed greater than those mentioned in the statute would be proof of negligence, when by statute they were only made prima facie evidence of negligence, defendant is not prejudiced, where other instructions charged that proof of negligence is not sufficient to warrant conviction, and that defendant's violation of law would not, of itself, justify a conviction.

Instruction Not Applicable to Evidence — Prejudicial Effect.

In a prosecution for involuntary manslaughter committed by reckless driving of automobile, where there is no claim and no evidence of any intent to kill, an instruction that intent may be proved by direct testimony, etc., although having no place in the case, cannot mislead the jury.

Error to Circuit Court, Rock Island county: CHURCH, Judge.

Criminal action. Jake Falkovitch convicted of involuntary manslaughter and brings error. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

H. A. Weld and C. S. Roberts for plaintiff in error.

Edward J. Brundage, Floyd E. Thompson and Noah O. Bainum for defendant in error.

[322] DUNCAN, J.—Plaintiff in error was indicted and convicted of involuntary manslaughter at the January term, 1917, of the circuit court of Rock Island county, and was sentenced to an indeterminate term in the penitentiary.

The indictment is in four counts. Omitting the formal beginning, the first count charges "that Jake Falkovitch, late of said county, on the 28th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and sixteen, at and within the said county of Rock Island, in the State of Illinois aforesaid, in and upon one Edwin Schernau, in the peace of the people then and there being in the public highway there, unlawfully, feloniously, recklessly and negligently did make an assault, and a certain motor vehicle then and there unlawfully driven and operated by the said Jake Falkovitch upon and along the said public highway in and against the said Edwin Schernau feloniously, unlawfully, recklessly and negligently did force and drive, and did then and there unlawfully, feloniously, recklessly and negligently force and drive the left rear wheel of said motor vehicle in and upon and against the chest of him, the said Edwin Schernau, then and there being running in the said public highway, and him, the said Edwin Schernau, did thereby then and there give in and upon his chest divers mortal wounds, fractures and contusions, of which said mortal wounds, fractures and contusions the said Edwin Schernau then and there languished a short time and on the same twenty-eighth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and sixteen, there died; and so the grand jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do say and present that the said Jake Falkovitch him, the said Edwin Schernau, in manner and by the [323] means aforesaid, feloniously, unlawfully, recklessly and negligently did kill and slay, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided and against the peace and dignity of the said People of the State of Illinois."

The other three counts are similar in wording and in character to the foregoing count, the principal difference being that in the last three counts the public highway is specifically alleged to be Seventh avenue in the city of Rock Island, with the further specific averment that plaintiff in error at the time of the killing was unlawfully driving and operating his motor vehicle at a rate of speed than is reasonable and proper, having regard for the traffic and the use of the way, and so as to endanger the lives or limbs of persons upon the said highway, and at a time when the said Edwin Schernau was crossing said highway and in full view of plaintiff in error, and without giving the deceased any warning of his approach, the rate of speed being stated as twenty-five miles an hour.

It is urged that the court erred in overruling the motion to quash the indictment for three grounds assigned by plaintiff in error: (1) That the lethal instrument was not defined with sufficient definiteness; (2) that it is not charged that the killing was willful; and (3) that it fails to set forth the specific acts relied upon as constituting the crime.

The indictment sufficiently and definitely charges the crime of manslaughter. Our statute defines manslaughter as "the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, express or implied, and without any mixture of deliberation whatever." Involuntary manslaughter, by the provisions of the statute, "shall consist in the killing of a human being without any intent to do so, in the commission of an unlawful act, or a lawful act, which probably might produce such a consequence, in an unlawful manner." There are no words or special provisions of our statute with reference to manslaughter, either in the definition of the crime itself or elsewhere in the statute, that require that the indictment [324] shall charge that the killing was both felonious and willful, although it is common practice to employ both words in drawing indictments for manslaughter. In Bishop's New Criminal Procedure (vol. 2, sec. 543) it is stated: "‘Willfully,’ though common in the indictment for manslaughter, is believed not to be here necessary. In reason it is not." The word "feloniously" is stronger than the word "willfully." The doing of an act feloniously is the doing of it malo animo. An act done feloniously is done with the deliberate purpose of committing a crime, and an act done feloniously, unlawfully and recklessly, as charged in this indictment, must necessarily have been done willfully.

The term "motor vehicle" has been given a definite and fixed meaning by the statute in this State which plaintiff in error is definitely charged with violating. (Hurd's Stat. 1916, chap. 121.) Paragraph 269a of that chapter provides: "That whenever the term 'motor vehicle' is used in this act, it shall be construed to include automobiles, locomobiles, and all other vehicles propelled otherwise than by muscular power, except motor bicycles, traction engines and road rollers, the cars of electric and steam railways and other motor vehicles running only upon rails or tracks." Paragraph 269j of the same chapter provides: "No person shall drive a motor vehicle or motor bicycle upon any public highway in this State at a speed greater than is reasonable and proper having regard to the traffic and the use of the way or so as to endanger the life or limb or injure the property of any person." The statute further provides that if the rate of speed of any motor vehicle operated upon any public highway where the same passes through the closely built-up business portion of any city, town or village exceeds ten miles an hour, or if it exceeds fifteen miles an hour in the residence portion of such incorporated city, town or village, such rates of speed shall be prima facie evidence that the person operating such motor vehicle is running at a rate of speed greater than is reasonable and [325] proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the way, or so as to endanger the life or limb or injure the property of any person. The statute then provides a penalty for its violation in the sum of $200.

Plaintiff in error is presumed to have known the provisions of this statute, and that a Ford automobile, which the evidence shows he was driving and with which the deceased was struck and killed by him, comes clearly within the statutory definition of the term "motor vehicle." It was not necessary for the indictment to describe the particular character or kind of the motor vehicle with which the killing was accomplished. The defendant was informed by the indictment of the particular time and place that the killing occurred, and was as well informed of the crime with which he was charged as if it had been definitely charged that the act was committed by the felonious, unlawful and reckless driving of an automobile. Our Criminal Code provides that every indictment or accusation of a grand jury shall be deemed sufficiently technical and correct which states the offense in the terms and language of the statute creating the offense, or so plainly that the nature of the offense may be easily understood by the jury. Other jurisdictions have sustained indictments for manslaughter which charged the crime to have been committed with a "motor vehicle, commonly called an automobile," or as done with "a certain automobile." (Schultz v. State, 89 Neb. 34, Ann. Cas. 1912C 495, 130 N. W. 972, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 403; State v. Watson, 216 Mo. 420, 115 S. W. 1011.) The term "gun" includes a variety of fire-arms. The rule is generally recognized that in describing the means of killing, if the nature of the instrument is given as a "gun" it is not necessary to state the kind of a gun. (Wharton on Homicide, —3d ed.—p. 852.) The indictment in this case sets forth the specific acts relied on with sufficient certainty and definiteness to fully apprise the defendant of the charge made against him, and the court did not err in overruling the motion to quash.

[326] It appears from the evidence in the case that Seventh avenue, in the city of Rock Island, is one of the busiest thoroughfares in the city. It connects that city with Moline and upon that avenue traffic comes into Rock Island from Davenport, Iowa. It is a sort of double street, with a series of ornamental boulevards down the center, except at the intersections, containing ornamental shrubbery, and is about one hundred feet in width. There is a street car track on either side of and next to the boulevard, occupying about nine feet of the street. The street is paved on both sides of the boulevard, with brick where the street car lines run and with asphalt between the street car lines and the outside curbs of the street, and the intersections are paved with asphalt. Forty-first street is paved with asphalt. The line of travel for vehicles is between the street car tracks and the outside curbs, being about seventeen feet wide, the distance from each outside curb to the curb of the boulevard next to it being twenty-six feet. Forty-first street runs north and south and crosses Seventh avenue at right angles and is sixty feet wide. The paved portion of Forty-first street, is thirty feet wide from curb to curb, but it is paved the full sixty feet in width at the intersection. The ornamental boulevard in Seventh avenue is sixteen-feet wide. The entire block on the south side of Seventh avenue from Forty-first to Forty-second streets is occupied by a public school building. At the intersection of Fortieth street and Seventh avenue,—just one block west of the intersection of Forty-first street and Seventh avenue, is a signboard which reads, "Public school—Speed limit ten miles an hour." Seventh avenue from Thirty-eighth street to Forty-sixth street is a combined business and residence district. On the north side of said avenue between those limits are a number of small retail stores, averaging one to each block between Thirty-eighth street and Forty-second street. With the exception of the block on which the school building is situated Seventh avenue is closely built up with stores and residence buildings, [327] all the residences being occupied at the time of the accident. On the morning of September 28, 1916, Edwin Schernau, a six-year-old boy who was being kept by his father at Bethany Home Orphanage, situated in said city northwesterly from the scene of the killing, was on his way to attend school at said public school building. He, with three other small children, was traveling east on the north side of Seventh avenue. As they approached Forty-first street, where it was necessary to cross the intersection with Seventh avenue to reach the school building, a funeral procession composed entirely of automobiles was passing westward on the north side of Seventh avenue and for some time had the crossing blocked. The three children with the Schernau boy seeing an opening in the procession ran across the street, but the Schernau boy, apparently afraid to venture across, waited on the north side of the avenue on the curb on the west side of Forty-first street. While thus waiting there came another break in the procession just at the intersection of said streets, and the boy started on a run across the intersection to the school building. The bell had rung for nine o'clock and the children were hurrying into the building. On the south side of Seventh avenue three motor vehicles were going east. One of them was a truck loaded with lumber and driven by Harry Bauer, who was accompanied by his brother, William. Another was a black taxicab. The third was a Ford touring car driven by plaintiff in error as a jitney, with three passengers in it. Plaintiff in error and the taxi driver both passed the truck about the middle of the block between Fortieth and Forty-first streets. Just as the Schernau boy was crossing the intersection plaintiff in error's car struck him, knocking him to the pavement and dragging him a distance of from twenty-five to thirty-five feet southeasterly to the curbing on the south side, at a point about ten or fifteen feet east of the rounded portion of the curb as it turned south at Forty-first street, the automobile describing the arc of a [328] circle as it swerved to the right. The front wheels of the car passed over the curb, which is about six inches high, and the left rear wheel of the car carried the body clear up to and pinched it against the curb, according to one of the witnesses for the People. According to the plaintiff in error's own testimony the instant before he struck the boy he turned his car to the right and threw on the brakes, and the car skidded from the point where it hit the boy clear over to the point of the curb, and the front wheels ran up over the curb and about two feet beyond its north edge. The automobile, when stopped, was pointing north and south. According to the testimony for the People the boy was struck very close to the south rail of the street railway and the body dragged in front of the rear wheel to the pavement, one of the People's witnesses stating that he saw where the body was dragged on the pavement for a distance of about thirty-five feet. While plaintiff in error and his witnesses claimed that the car was running about eight or ten miles an hour and on a line about midway between the south rail of the railway and the south curb, yet the plaintiff in error stated on cross-examination, "When I hit him with the car he was running near the track." He also stated that his car did not drag the boy over three or four feet, yet he admitted that the boy was in front of his left rear wheel, near the south curb, when the car stopped. The evidence on behalf of the People, as testified by two of the witnesses, was that the jitney car was running "every bit of twenty miles an hour" or "not less than twenty miles an hour," while a third witness estimated it at twenty miles an hour. As it passed the truck loaded with lumber, and up to the point where the boy was struck, the two Bauers testified that their truck was running at a speed of thirteen miles an hour, as shown by their speedometer, and that the jitney and black taxicab were racing, the jitney trying to pass the taxicab.

[329] We think the evidence clearly shows the guilt of plaintiff in error. His testimony that he shut off the power of his car and that his car simply coasted up to Forty-first street from the middle of the block west of it, which is two hundred and ten feet wide, is not at all supported by the evidence. The physical fact that his car, with the rear wheels locked by the brakes and not turning but skidding from the moment the boy was struck, ran for a distance of from twenty-five to thirty-five feet and over and upon a curb six inches high, is entirely inconsistent with his contention and is proof that his car was moving at a very high rate of speed,—probably much greater than twenty miles an hour,—although the pavement that morning was wet and slippery on account of rain that had previously fallen. He admits that he was well acquainted with all of the surroundings at that point on the street; knew of the fact that the school building was just ahead of him and that the school was in progress and school children were on their way to the building; knew all about the signboard at Fortieth street; saw the funeral procession as he was approaching Forty-first street; saw the boy from the middle of the block west of that street and until he was struck by the car, and saw him running across the intersection towards the school building. All these facts should have suggested caution on his part while moving up to that intersection, and he should have had his car moving at such a speed that he could easily have controlled it. The evidence demonstrates to a moral certainty that he was driving his car at a very high, reckless and dangerous rate of speed, in violation of the law, and that the boy's death was occasioned thereby.

Plaintiff in error sought to discredit one of the witnesses, James G. Blythe, by the testimony of himself and another witness, to the effect that Blythe, on the morning of the accident and afterwards, had stated, in substance, that plaintiff in error was not to blame for the death of the [330] child, and later on said in other conversations that plaintiff in error was a "damned Jew" and ought not to be running jitney busses, and that the Jews were no good and were "hurting us all in business." This testimony was denied in toto by Blythe, and the evidence shows that he was not in the jitney business but was in the advertising business. His testimony does not disclose any animosity toward plaintiff in error and was even less hurtful to plaintiff in error than that of the Bauer brothers. The positions of the People's witnesses on the morning of the accident were much more favorable for judging the speed of the automobile than those of plaintiff in error, as the People's witnesses all saw the automobile before it passed the truck of the Bauers and while it was passing it and them, and saw it all the time from the time it passed the truck until the boy was hit. The two witnesses for plaintiff in error were jitney drivers who were in the funeral procession and saw the car of the plaintiff in error as it approached Forty-first street from positions in the funeral procession east of Forty-first street and on the north side of Seventh avenue. One of them states positively that he did not see or notice plaintiff in error's car until it was within fifteen or twenty feet from the point where it struck the boy.

Affidavits were filed in support of the motion for new trial on the ground of the misconduct of one of the jurors, who was alleged in the affidavits to have talked privately with one of the principal witnesses for the prosecution just after that witness had testified, and that that juror had examined the locality where the accident occurred and gained information in that way out of the presence of the accused. Counter-affidavits were filed by the juror and by two other persons, including said witness, from which the court was thoroughly warranted in finding that the conversation of the juror and the witness had no relation whatever to the trial, and that the juror merely passed the scene of the killing from his home to the court house as he went to and [331] from it during the progress of the trial, and that he did not make any view of the locality of the accident for the purpose of gaining any information in connection with the trial or otherwise. Besides, the fact that during the progress of the trial the juror had a conversation with one of the witnesses and that he was at the locality where the killing occurred was known to plaintiff in error and his attorney and was not brought to the attention of the court until after the motion for a new trial was made.

Plaintiff in error is also in the same position in regard to the alleged prejudicial remarks of the State's attorney during the argument of the case, in which he is alleged to have said to the jury, in substance, that if plaintiff in error was convicted he would do what he could to have the term of imprisonment cut down as short as possible. No objection was made to the remarks of the State's attorney at the time they were alleged to have been made, and the court's attention was never called to any such remarks except by affidavits on motion for a new trial. Such a question cannot be reviewed when raised for the first time in the trial court by affidavits in support of a motion for a new trial. As there was no objection made to the remarks and no ruling by the court there is no action of the court to be reviewed. Mayes v. People, 106 Ill. 306, 46 Am. Rep. 698; People v. Spira, 264 Ill. 243, 106 N. E. 241.

The People's third instruction is erroneous because it stated, in substance, that certain rates of speed greater than those mentioned in the statute would be proof of negligence. By the statute they are only made prima facie evidence of negligence. This instruction did not direct a verdict. While the instruction was erroneous we do not think plaintiff in error was prejudiced thereby. The instructions given for plaintiff in error plainly informed the jury that before they could find the defendant guilty they must not only find that the deceased was struck by the defendant's automobile and thereby killed, but they must also find (1) that at the time [332] the boy was killed the defendant was running his automobile at a rate of speed greater than allowed by law, and must further find from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that he was negligently running his automobile in reckless disregard of human life, at a time and place where so running was likely to destroy life, and that his act in that respect was so wanton, reckless and grossly negligent as to amount to criminal negligence; (2) that the defendant must not only have been committing a violation of some law or ordinance with reference to the operation of automobiles, but such a violation of law as by its nature and consequences was apparently likely at that time and place to cause such an injury as Edwin Schernau suffered, and that it was committed by the defendant in utter and reckless disregard of such consequences, and that as a natural result of such unlawful act Schernau was killed; (3) that the fact, if it be a fact, that the defendant, at the time and place where the deceased, Edwin Schernau, received the injury which caused his death, was driving his automobile at a rate of speed greater than is allowed by law, and in consequence thereof the injury occurred, is not, of itself, sufficient to justify the finding that the defendant is guilty. The foregoing propositions were repeatedly given to the jury, who were then given a definition of criminal negligence in this language: "By the term 'criminal negligence,' as used in these instructions, is meant not simply such negligence as might be the foundation of a suit for damages by the person injured thereby, but something more than that. Negligence, to become criminal, must be reckless, wanton, and of such a character as shows an utter disregard of the safety of others under circumstances likely to cause injury." The jury were then instructed, as a closing part of such instruction defining criminal negligence, that unless they believed from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant was guilty of criminal negligence as defined in the instruction, and that the boy was killed as the direct [333] result of such criminal negligence, they should find the defendant not guilty. We do not think it is possible that the jury could have been misled by the erroneous instruction aforesaid, after a careful reading and consideration of all the instructions in the case.

It is true, as contended by plaintiff in error, that there was a technical error in the court's giving the People's sixth instruction, which told the jury, in substance, that the intent with which an act is done may be proved by direct and positive testimony, etc. The instruction simply had no place in this case, and it was not applicable in a case where involuntary manslaughter is charged. The jury, however, could not have been misled by it, because there was no claim and no evidence of any intent on the part of plaintiff in error to kill the deceased.

It was not necessary to prove intent to kill, to convict plaintiff in error of involuntary manslaughter. It is therefore immaterial whether the jury did or did not find that there was such an intent, and the instruction was simply inapplicable and could not figure in the question of guilt or innocence of the accused.

We have these propositions as to the giving of the People's erroneous third instruction: The jury were improperly told by that instruction that proof of greater rates of speed than those mentioned in the statute in passing on the public highway through a city or village is proof of negligence, but following that instruction the jury were further and emphatically told that proof of negligence is not sufficient to warrant the conviction of plaintiff in error. Under such instructions he could not have been convicted of simple negligence or for a simple violation of the statute, as argued by his counsel. We must add to this the further proposition that there can be no sort of question, in our judgment, that plaintiff in error, from the time he passed the truck upon which the Bauers were riding and up to the place where the boy was hit, was driving his car at a much greater rate of speed than fifteen miles an hour, and [334] was not only prima facie guilty of violating the law and guilty of ordinary negligence, but was, beyond all reasonable doubt, actually guilty of criminal negligence. There could have been no time or place found within the limits of said city that would have been more suggestive to a driver of an automobile of care and caution in driving than the time and place of this killing. All the surroundings at that place at that time were equally suggestive of caution. We do not think that plaintiff in error could reasonably expect another or different verdict than the one upon which he was sentenced, if the cause were re-tried.

There is no reversible error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

NOTE.

The reported case sustains a conviction of manslaughter of an automobile driver who ran into and killed a child while driving past a school building at a high and unlawful rate of speed. The criminal liability of the owner or driver for injuries inflicted by an automobile is discussed in the notes to State v. Campbell, 18 Ann. Cas. 236, and Com. v. Horsfall, Ann. Cas. 1914A 682. See also the note to Westrup v. Com. 124 Am. St. Rep. 316, for a general discussion of negligent homicide.

NEVEN

v.

NEVEN.

Nevada Supreme Court—May 6, 1915.

38 Nev. 541; 148 Pac. 354; 154 Pac. 78.

Trial — Continuance — Discretion of Court.

A motion for a continuance is addressed to the discretion of the court, and its ruling will not be reversed, except for most potent reasons.

Continuance in Divorce Case — Absence of Party.

Where defendant, in a suit for divorce, was present with his counsel in court on March 28th, when by his consent the case was set for trial April 4th, without then informing the court of necessity of his being absent so near before that date as to prevent his presence at the trial, and it did not appear that his absence before the trial, which prevented his presence at the trial, was due to a court proceeding, denial of continuance because of his absence, supported by a telegram merely announcing his inability to be present because of guardianship proceedings, is not an abuse of discretion.

[See note at end of this case.]

Party Bound to Appear in Two Proceedings — Absence as Ground for Continuance.

A party in two court proceedings in different places is bound by the first notice of trial, and the requirement of his presence at that trial affords a ground for a continuance of the other proceeding.

Absence of Witness — Diligence.

A party who is a material witness in his own behalf is not entitled to a continuance because of his absence, unless he shows that he had his testimony ready for use at the trial, but was prevented from attending the trial by some obstacle which, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, he could not overcome, and which he did not create by his own voluntary act.

Denial of Continuance — Review — Failure to Show Grounds.

Where the record fails to show that appellant, when he applied to the trial court for a continuance, brought to the attention of the court, by his affidavit or otherwise, the fact that he had been cited to appear in another court on the day of the trial, the action of the court in denying the continuance will not be disturbed.

Appeal from District Court, Washoe county: HAEWOOD, Judge.

Action by Laura A. Neven, plaintiff, against James H. Neven, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Sweeney & Morehouse for appellant.
Dodge & Barry for respondent.

[542] McCARRAN, J.—This was an action for divorce, commenced in the district court of Washoe County by respondent. Judgment having been rendered for respondent, a decree of the court was rendered in her favor in accordance with the prayer of her complaint. Appeal is taken to this court from the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial.

One question only is presented to this court for determination, namely: Was it an abuse of discretion for the trial court to deny appellant's motion for a continuance of the trial of the case?

The record discloses that on the 21st day of March, 1914, the attorneys for the respective parties being in court, the trial of the case was, by consent of said attorneys, set for Thursday, the 26th day of March, 1914, at [543] 10 o'clock A.M. It further appears that on the 26th day of March, 1914, at the hour at which the case was set for trial, the plaintiff appeared in court, with her attorneys and witnesses, to proceed with the trial. The defendant, at that time, through his attorneys, presented the affidavit of a physician in furtherance of his motion for a continuance. The affidavit of the doctor was to the effect that appellant was in ill health and unable to be present at the trial.

Upon motion of counsel for the appellant, the case was continued, and on Saturday, the 28th day of March, 1914—calendar day in the district court—appellant and respondent and their respective attorneys being in court, the cause was, by and with the consent of all parties, set for trial for Saturday, the 4th day of April, 1914, at 10:30 o'clock A.M. of that day.

On Saturday, the 4th day of April, 1914, at the hour set for the commencement of the trial, the plaintiff appeared in person and with her attorneys and witnesses. The defendant was not present, and one of his attorneys presented a telegram from defendant in furtherance of a verbal motion for continuance. The telegram, admitted and filed in furtherance of the motion, is as follows:

Western Union Telegram

Received at 127 N. Center St., Reno, Nev.
Phone 436.

Always Open.

13SFX7. Filed 828AM.

Elko, Nev., Apl. 4, 1914.

Sweeney & Morehouse, Reno, Nevada.

Detained here unavoidably. Guardianship matter Le Roy Neven. J. H. Neven. 832AM.

The motion of appellant being resisted by respondent in the court below, the respondent herself took the stand and testified with reference to appellant going to Elko, as follows:

"Q. Do you know what he went to Elko for? A. Well, some matter pertaining to the estate of Roy Neven.

"Q. His nephew? A. Yes.

"Q. Was it going to be heard in court, or did he just go to consult with attorneys? A. Well, he talked with me [544] about it Thursday, and he said, 'Will you go up to Elko with me and have Judge Taber cross-question you?' I said, 'When?' He said, 'Tonight. You can come back Friday night.' I said, 'No. I wouldn't take any chances on coming back Saturday night, because,' I said, 'you know our affair comes up Saturday.' I said, 'Is it necessary for you to go tonight?' He said, 'No, it is not; but I will have to go some time soon.'

"Q. Did you impress upon him at that time the importance of his being back here at this time? A. Well, we talked about it. He knew for a certainty it would come up today, and he did not say when he went out of the house that he was going to Elko; just went in the bathroom, cleaned up and went out; didn't say anything about going to Elko to me.

"Q. Has he told you at any time that he would delay the trial of this case? A. Oh, yes; right from the start he said he would delay it as much as possible, and that if he had his way it never would come to trial."

The motion of appellant's attorney for continuance being denied, the court proceeded to the trial of the case.

At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case, the attorneys for appellant again renewed their motion for a continuance. In furtherance of their motion, one of the attorneys made a statement under oath to the effect that on Thursday, April 2, appellant informed him that he was going to Elko, concerning some matter in probate; that he then and there informed appellant that this cause was set for the morning of April 4, at 10:30 o'clock, and that he must return in time for this matter to be heard.

The motion for continuance was again denied, and, no evidence being offered on behalf of defendant, appellant herein, the court rendered judgment for the plaintiff.

Appellant later moved the court for a new trial, and, in furtherance of his motion, filed his affidavit setting forth the reason for his absence on the date of the trial of the cause. A portion of his affidavit is as follows:

"James H. Neven, being first duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is the defendant in the above-entitled [545] action; that on Thursday, the 2d day of April, 1914, defendant had very important business to attend to in Elko, county of Elko, Nevada; that he took the train from Reno for Elko on the evening of Thursday, April 2d, with full intent and purpose of returning not later than Friday evening, April 3d; that he knew that the action above entitled as against him was set for trial at 10:30 o'clock A.M. of the 4th day of April, 1914. That he intended to go to Elko on April 2d and return to Reno on the evening of April 3d, so as to be ready for participating in the trial and defending himself in the aforesaid action on Saturday, April 4th, at 10:30 A.M. of that day. That upon his arrival in Elko he had certain conversations and business dealings with the attorneys of Le Roy Neven, whose estate during his minority was under control of affiant as guardian, and his business dealings with these people, to wit, the attorneys for Le Roy Neven, was to enable them to fix up the accounts necessary to be reported by affiant and obtain the discharge of affiant as guardian of the said Le Roy Neven. That he had no purpose, design, or intent in going to Elko, Nev., to interfere with the trial of this cause in the court on the 4th day of April but with good faith and with good intent he thought he would finish the business he had in Elko, Nev., and return on the evening of April 3d, so as to be ready for trial the morning of April 4th. That train No. 5 of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company from Elko, which is due in Reno at 8:50 A.M., April 4th, was 6 hours and 45 minutes late, rendering it impossible for defendant to appear in court and participate in defending said cause and having a hearing of said cause on the 4th day of April as aforesaid. That it was through no fault or neglect of this defendant that he was not present at the trial and would be prepared to defend the said action, but, by reason of the fact that train No. 5 was 6 hours and 45 minutes late, affiant did not arrive in Reno until after 3 o'clock P.M. of Saturday, April 4th. That realizing that he could not return by reason of the fact that the said train, over which he had [546] no control, was 6 hours and 45 minutes late, he (affiant sent a telegram to H. V. Morehouse, one of his counsel, stating that he was unable to be present and was unavoidably detained, hoping thereby that his counsel (the said H. V. Morehouse) would be enabled to obtain a continuance of this cause at least for the purpose of taking the testimony which would be offered by the defendant in person and by his witnesses."

It is needless for us to cite authority in support of a proposition that has become almost universally recognized: That a motion for continuance is addressed to the discretion of the court. The reason for this rule is manifest. The trial court is apprised of all the circumstances concerning the case and the previous proceedings, and has before it the parties, from whose conduct and utterances it has opportunity to judge as to whether or not the motion is made in good faith, or as to whether or not deception and fraud are being perpetrated on the court with a view to delaying the proceedings. It is for these reasons that courts of review generally have taken a position that the action of a trial court, in granting or denying a motion for continuance, will not be reversed, except for the most potent reasons.

The rule has been laid down by some courts (and, in our judgment, advisedly so) that a greater degree of liberality should be accorded in matters of continuances in divorce cases than in any other civil actions; the reason for this being that the public, as well as the parties to the action, are interested in the result of the suit. However this may be, we concur in the expression of the Supreme Court of California, in the case of Barnes v. Barnes, 95 Cal. 171, 30 Pac. 298, 16 L.R.A. 660, that a defendant must be held to the exercise of good faith and diligence, and cannot be heard to complain if the failure to present his defense results from an attempt to subordinate the business of the court to his own business engagements and convenience.

The statement of appellant, made in his affidavit, [547] makes no attempt to establish that appellant was required, either by court process or the pendency of court proceedings, or even by urgent or imminent business engagements, to be in Elko either on April 2, 3, or 4. The record fails to disclose that any proceedings were pending in any court in Elko, or elsewhere, in which appellant was directly or indirectly concerned. The most that can be said for the affidavit of appellant is that it attempts to set forth that he had very important business to attend to in Elko; that upon arrival in Elko he had certain conversations and business dealings with the attorneys of Le Roy Neven, whose estate, during his minority, was under the control of affiant as guardian; that his business dealings in this respect with these people, to wit, the attorneys for Leroy Neven, were to enable them to fix up the accounts necessary to be reported by affiant and obtain the discharge of affiant as guardian of said Le Roy Neven. Nothing in the affidavit indicates, even inferentially, that this business transaction with the attorneys of Le Roy Neven was a matter imminent, urgent, or pressing, or one which demanded or required the presence of appellant upon either the 2d, 3d, or 4th day of April, or, in fact, upon any other particular date. Nothing appears in the record which tends to contradict the testimony of Mrs. Neven, the respondent herein, wherein she states that she cautioned appellant, prior to his departure for Elko, and said, "Is it necessary for you to go tonight?" to which he replied, "No, it is not; but I will have to go some time soon." Counsel for appellant, in their brief, urge that this business in Elko was a court proceeding, in which appellant was an interested party, but this is nowhere supported by the record, nor even by the affidavit of appellant.

The record discloses that appellant was present in court on the 28th day of March, with his attorney; that on that date, by his consent, the case was set for trial on April 4. If a visit to Elko was urgent or pressing, he should have brought such matter to the attention of the court, or at [548] least made some effort to have this case set at a date more convenient to him; and even though it was a court proceeding in Elko at which, by reason of his interest therein, he was required to be present, if those proceedings had been set prior to the 28th day of March, he must have been cognizant of that fact, and should have urged that matter at the setting of this case. If it was a court proceeding in Elko, in which his presence was urgent and the date of that proceeding was set after the 28th day of March, he was bound by the first notice of trial, and the requirement for his presence at the trial of this cause would have been reasonable ground for a continuance in the Elko proceeding. (Finan v. Millmore, 1 Mich. N. P. 172.)

It is unnecessary for us to dwell upon such rules and observations as have been made by either this or other courts upon the subject of the absence of witnesses as a ground for continuance in civil cases. Such rules and observations are not strictly applicable to the matter at bar. In this case the absent witness was the party defendant himself; and he is bound by a different rule from that which might be applicable if the absent witness were one in no wise interested in the suit, in that, as a general proposition, a stricter showing of good cause is required. (6 R. C. L. 551.)

"A party who is a material witness in his own behalf," says the Appellate Court of Illinois, "must have his testimony ready for use at the trial, unless prevented from so doing by some obstacle which by the exercise of reasonable diligence he cannot overcome, and the obstacle should not be one which he has created by his own voluntary act. If he allows considerations of business or pleasure, or even regard for his own health, to call him away at a time when his suit is liable to be called for trial and thereby he loses the benefit of his own testimony, he must, ordinarily, suffer the consequences." (Schlesinger v. Nunan, 26 Ill. App. 525.)

The expression of the Supreme Court of California in [549] the Barnes case, supra, was again referred to approvingly in the case of Kasson's Estate, 141 Cal. 33, 74 Pac. 436, and is generally cited as a leading case upon the subject. (6 R. C. L. 551; Ann. Cas. 1914B 360.)

It must be observed that the telegraphic communication from the appellant to his attorney, filed in the district court in furtherance of the motion for continuance on the 4th day of April, made no mention of the delayed train as being the cause of the absence of appellant. The telegram was filed at Elko at twenty-eight minutes after 8 o'clock on the morning of the 4th day of April, and makes no intimation that appellant was or would be on the delayed train No. 5. It says: "Delayed here unavoidably. Guardianship matter Le Roy Neven."

If the lateness of train No. 5 had been the real cause of the absence or delay of appellant, it would have been a simple matter to make mention of that fact in the telegram. Moreover, in the motion for continuance, made by the attorneys for appellant on April 4, there was no mention of appellant being on this delayed train, or that he would arrive on the delayed train, or within any reasonable time. A showing to this effect, made properly and in good faith, might have been at least a reasonable ground to warrant the trial court in continuing the hearing until the arrival of the defendant. But in the record we find no assurance given that the defendant would be able to attend the trial at any designated time.

The affidavit of appellant, filed in furtherance of his motion for a new trial and made the basis of his appeal in this case, states that his object in sending this telegram was the hope that thereby his counsel would be enabled to obtain a continuance of this cause, at least for the purpose of taking the testimony, which would be offered by defendant in person and by his witnesses. In this respect, the record discloses that no witnesses were in attendance upon the trial, by subpoena or other process of the court, on behalf of appellant. If, however, witnesses on behalf of appellant had been present at the [550] time of trial, the absence of appellant would not have precluded his attorney from introducing such testimony, bearing upon the case, as might be adduced from those witnesses. The record discloses neither the presence of any witnesses on behalf of defendant, nor that any witnesses were placed upon the stand in his behalf, nor testimony of any kind or character offered, either in contradiction of the allegations of respondent's complaint or in support of appellant's cross-complaint. Moreover, the counsel for appellant who made his statement under oath in furtherance of his motion for continuance, at the conclusion of respondent's case, made no intimation that any witnesses were present on behalf of appellant.

From the record as it is before us we find nothing that would support appellant's contention that it was an abuse of discretion for the trial court to deny the motion for continuance.

It follows that the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial should be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

ON PETITION FOR REHEARING.

MCCARRAN, J.—Counsel for appellant, in their petition for rehearing, make the following assertion:

"At the same time, the fact exists that Neven was cited into court at Elko County, to make an accounting for the guardianship of Le Roy Neven, his nephew."

If the statement of counsel for appellant here quoted were supported by the record before us to any extent whatever, then a rule might apply in favor of appellant different from that asserted in the former opinion of this court. The fact is, however, that this assertion is unsupported by anything in the record before us. The affidavit of appellant: filed in the court below in furtherance of his motion, makes no such declaration. In the statements [551] made by counsel for appellant before the trial court on the day of the trial, in explanation of the absence of appellant and in furtherance of the motion for a continuance, there is nothing indicating that appellant Neven had been "cited into court in Elko," or that appellant had been called there by any process issued out of any court. And it may be not out of place to observe here that, had any citation or process issued calling for the presence of the appellant Neven, it would have been a simple matter to have produced the same in the trial court either in furtherance of the motion for a continuance or as a part of the affidavit of appellant, and the same would thereby have become a part of the record before this court.

The testimony of the respondent, Mrs. Neven, in detailing a conversation between herself and appellant relative to his going to Elko, sets forth that on Thursday, April 2, when appellant invited her to go with him to Elko, she inquired of him: "Is it necessary for you to go tonight?" To which he, the appellant, answered: "No, it is not; but I will have to go some time soon."

Petition for rehearing should be denied.

It is so ordered.

NOTE.

Continuances in Divorce Cases.

The purpose of this note is to review the recent decisions with respect to the granting of continuances in divorce cases. The earlier cases are discussed in the note to Hyser v. Hyser, Ann. Cas. 1914B 356.

The rules as to the granting of a continuance are more liberal in a divorce case than in other cases for the reason that "in such cases the state has an interest." Clayton v. Clayton, 71 W. Va. 656, 77 S. E. 137.

"Large discretion is vested in trial courts with reference to a continuance." Rogers v. Rogers, 57 Colo. 132, 140 Pac. 193.

"It is the duty of the trial court in such cases wisely to exercise its discretion to the end that society and the public receive no detriment in proceedings affecting the institution of marriage." Dwire v. Dwire, 86 Vt. 474, 86 Atl. 164.

In Rogers v. Rogers, 57 Colo. 132, 140 Pac. 193, an application was made for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness, the defendant interposing an affidavit wherein he stated that he had been endeavoring to learn the whereabouts of the witness for two weeks previous to the time when the continuance was asked for. There was no reason assigned why he did not commence his efforts at an earlier date. In sustaining the denial of a continuance the court said: "The showing in support of such a motion must be upon affidavit from which it appears that the moving party has used due diligence to procure the attendance of the witness whose testimony it is claimed is material." So in Johnston v. Johnston (R. I.) 94 Atl. 257, the defendant asked for a continuance of a petition to vacate a decree of divorce for the purpose of securing the deposition of a witness then in California, which he claimed would show that the plaintiff was not a resident of Rhode Island at the time the suit for divorce was filed. The application was made after the petitioner had produced testimony in support of his petition. Denying the application the court said that diligence had not been exercised and that the application was made evidently for delay.

But in Clayton v. Clayton, 71 W. Va. 656, 77 S. E. 137, an application by the wife for suit money and for time to procure evidence in defense was held to have been improperly denied though it was not made until after the husband had completed the taking of depositions in support of his case. The court said: "A divorce by agreement of the parties, express or implied, is inhibited by law. Maintenance of the policy of the law enjoins allowance of opportunity to each party for full presentation of his side of the controversy. Out of it arises power in the courts to compel the plaintiff to pay an impecunious defendant money with which to defray the cost of full defense. The law accords to the parties equal facilities for presenting their cases and the courts enforce the right thereto. Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. sec. 976. Delay incidental to the enforcement thereof is, therefore, contemplated and authorized by law. Application of these principles discloses a clear right to a continuance, which the court could not properly disregard or deny."

In Potts v. Potts, 80 Wash. 302, 142 Pac. 449, the court refused a continuance on the ground of surprise the defendant urging that he was taken by surprise because of the plaintiff's statement that the ceremony of marriage was performed at a certain time, by a minister, with witnesses present. The court held that when the complaint was served on the defendant he was informed thereby, that the plaintiff would testify that the marriage had taken place at the time and place specified therein, and that it was incumbent on him, if he desired to know who performed the ceremony and the witnesses thereto, to propound interrogatories to the respondent regarding the ceremony and the witnesses.

In Dwire v. Dwire, 86 Vt. 474, 86 Atl. 164, the court said, with reference to a general continuance granted in the hope that a reconciliation of the spouses might take place: "This was in accordance with a course of procedure in divorce cases which in the discretion of the court has long obtained in this state when the circumstances of the case are such that the interests of the parties or of the public may seem to be better conserved thereby, which several interests must be regarded in the administration of the law. The continuance may be general, or it may be special and accompanied with an order for further proceedings, as for instance, the production of more evidence, or the testimony of the libelee, or some particular person not then at hand. In the latter case, it should seem that at the succeeding term, the court being of the same judges, the trial may proceed from where it left off when the continuance was ordered. See Foster v. Redfield, 50 Vt. 285. But when the continuance is general with no findings of fact placed upon record, as in the case at bar, it is tantamount to a refusal to proceed further with that hearing, or to make any decree on the evidence received therein. It leaves the case as if no hearing on the merits had been had, and any decree rendered at a subsequent term must be as the result of a trial de novo. This is the practical effect of such procedure with a general continuance in cases of this character, and acting in the interests of the public, as it stands related to, and affected by, the marital relations, we are not disposed to give it an effect which will permit the granting of a divorce at a subsequent term without a hearing anew."

It is held in the reported case that a continuance should not be granted by reason of the absence of the defendant, where he, though claiming he was cited to appear in another court, submitted no proof to the trial court by affidavit or otherwise that he was under any process to appear in any court.

On report from Superior Court, Middlesex county: DANA, Judge.

Action by Frances S. H. Massaletti, plaintiff, against Mary Fitzroy, defendant. Verdict for defendant. Case reported to Supreme Judicial Court. The facts are stated in the opinion. Affirmed.

Sawyer, Hardy, Stone & Morrison and E. C. Stone for plaintiff.

Whipple, Sears & Ogden, Sherman L. Whipple and Jas. M. Hoy for defendant.

MASSALETTI

v.

FITZROY.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court—October 29, 1917.

228 Mass. 487; 118 N. E. 168.

Automobiles — Liability of Owner — Injury to Guest.

Where a person invites another to ride gratis in his automobile, there is a gratuitous undertaking, not governed by rules as to liability of licensors.

[See note at end of this case.]

Negligence — Degrees of Negligence.

There is a distinction between the degrees of negligence, as being slight, ordinary, or gross.

Automobiles — Liability of Owner — Injury to Guest.

The rule that to charge a person, who invites another to ride in his automobile, in doing which the guest is injured, with liability, gross negligence must be shown, does not mean that the same negligence must appear in every case as would charge a gratuitous bailee with liability for loss of the goods, but each case must be determined upon its own facts.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Since to charge a gratuitous bailee gross negligence must be shown, and since the measure of liability of one who undertakes to carry another gratis is the same as that of a gratuitous bailee, where a person invites another to ride in his automobile, in doing which the guest is injured, she cannot recover, in the absence of showing of gross negligence.

[See note at end of this case.]

Negligence — Degrees of Negligence — Gratuitous Undertaking.

Justice requires that, to make out liability in case of a gratuitous undertaking, plaintiff ought to prove a materially greater degree of negligence than where defendant is to be paid for doing the same thing.

[488] LORING, J.—While staying with the defendant as her guest the plaintiff at the defendant's invitation went out with the [489] defendant in her motor car. The car was driven by a chauffeur furnished by the owner of the garage where it was kept. Through the negligence of the chauffeur the machine was overturned and fell on the plaintiff, causing the injuries here complained of. The jury found that while driving the machine the chauffeur acted as the defendant's servant, and this finding was warranted by the evidence. They also found that the accident was caused by the negligence of the chauffeur. Upon the jury making these findings the judge directed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant and reported the case to this court.

"At the trial the plaintiff did not claim that the jury could find from the evidence gross negligence on the part of the defendant." There was no question of negligence on the part of any one but the defendant's chauffeur and the plaintiff has not contended that there was. We therefore construe her concession to be a concession that she did not make out a case of gross negligence on the part of the chauffeur.

It was decided in West v. Poor, 196 Mass. 183, 81 N. E. 183, 124 Am. St. Rep. 541, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 936, that a defendant who invites a plaintiff to ride gratis in his carriage is liable to the same extent that a gratuitous bailee is liable. In West v. Poor a milkman on returning to his wagon after delivering some milk found in it the plaintiff and some other children. He did not order them out of the wagon but drove on. When the defendant stopped to make the next delivery the plaintiff with the defendant's assistance undertook to get out of the wagon, and while she was in the act of getting out the horse started, the plaintiff was thrown to the ground and suffered the injuries complained of in that action. That case was disposed of by this court in these words "He [the defendant] did nothing and said nothing to invite them, and the nearest analogy that occurs to us is that of a self invited guest in whose presence the host acquiesces and whose enjoyment he seeks to promote, or that of a gratuitous bailee. In the former case the degree of care required is that of licensor and licensee, (Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426; Hart v. Cole, 156 Mass. 475), which, as has often been said requires only that the licensor shall not set traps for the licensee and shall refrain from reckless, wilful or wanton misconduct tending to injure him. Massell v. Boston Elevated R. Co. 191 Mass. 491. In the latter case, in order to render the bailee liable, it must appear that he has been guilty [490] of culpable negligence. Whitney v. Lee, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 91; Nolton v. Western R. Corp. 15 N. Y. 444." The liability "of a gratuitous bailee" was described by Chief Justice Shaw in the case of Whitney v. Lee, cited above in these words: Subject to these remarks upon the application of these distinctions [as to different degrees of negligence], we think it well settled, that a bailee for safe keeping, without reward, is not responsible for the article deposited, without proof that the loss was occasioned by bad faith, or gross negligence. This rule was settled, on great consideration, and after full deliberation, in Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479; and this supersedes the necessity of any full review of the authorities."

The plaintiff in effect asks us to overrule West v. Poor so far as the second ground goes on which that case was decided. In that connection she has relied upon Patnode v. Foote, 153 App. Div. 494, 138 N. Y. S. 221; Pigeon v. Lane, 80 Conn. 237, 11 Ann. Cas. 371, 67 Atl. 886, and Beard v. Klusmeier, 158 Ky. 153, Ann. Cas. 1915D 342, 164 S. W. 319, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1100. In addition to these cases relied upon by the plaintiff, there are cases to the same effect not cited by her which ought to be considered in connection with them. We take them up in their order. The first of these cases in point of time is Mayberry v. Sivey, 18 Kan. 291. That case was decided on the authority of this statement of Wharton in his text-book on negligence: "A person who undertakes to do service for another is liable to such other person for want of due care and attention in the performance of the service, even though there is no consideration for such undertaking. The confidence accepted is an adequate consideration to support the duty." But Mr. Wharton is of opinion that in the common law of England there are no degrees of negligence. This conclusion is based on Mr. Wharton's contention that the opinion of Chief Justice Holt in Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. (Eng.) 909, so far as it made a distinction between gross and ordinary negligence was based on a misapprehension as to the rule of the civil law. See Whart. on Negl. (2d ed.) §§ 482-510. Whether different de-degrees of negligence are known to the common law is a question to be considered by itself and taken up later on. The next case in point of time and the most important of all these cases in Pigeon v. Lane, 80 Conn. 237, 11 Ann. Cas. 371, 67 Atl. 886. In that case the defendants had sent a sleigh in charge of their servant, Rinski by name, to bring their employees to their work and there was evidence that the plaintiff was injured by Rinski's negligence. The presiding [491] judge instructed the jury that it was immaterial whether the defendants were bound to send the sleigh to bring the plaintiff to his work or had sent the sleigh gratuitously; that in either case Rinski was the fellow servant of the plaintiff and the defendants were not liable. The Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut decided that if the defendants sent Rinski gratuitously he was not the plaintiff's fellow servant and for that reason the appeal was well taken. After that point had been decided this was added (at page 241): "Although, if the plaintiff was injured while riding upon the sleigh as a mere licensee, the defendants could be held liable only for their active negligence in causing the injury—which would include their own or their servant Rinski's negligent acts by which the danger of riding upon the conveyance was increased, or a new danger created, while the plaintiff was riding under such license. (Pomponio v. New York, etc. R. Co. 66 Conn. 528, 538),—the allegation that the injury was caused by the careless, negligent and improper driving of the conveyance by the defendants' servant, in such a manner that it collided with the bridge, is a sufficient averment to permit proof of that negligence which would render the defendants liable as licensors." Pomponio v. New York, etc. R. Co. 66 Conn. 528, 34 Atl. 491, 50 Am. St. Rep. 124, 32 L.R.A. 530 (on the authority of which this statement in Pigeon v. Lane is founded) was a case where on the findings made the plaintiff was crossing the defendant's track for his own convenience at a place planked as a crossing but where neither the plaintiff nor the public had a right to cross, and was injured by the negligence of the defendant in the operation of one of its trains. It was held that while the plaintiff, being on the defendant's premises for his own convenience, was a licensee and therefore took the defendant's premises as he found them (in the absence of a trap), the defendant was liable for injuries suffered by the plaintiff by reason of active negligence in the operation of its trains. Pomponio v. New York, etc. R. Co. was decided on the authority of Corrigan v. Union Sugar Refinery, 98 Mass. 577, 96 Am. Dec. 685. That was a case in which the plaintiff was proceeding as a licensee along an alleyway on the premises of the defendant and was injured by the negligence of the defendant's servants in throwing down beer barrels into the alleyway. In Pomponio v. New York, etc. R. Co. ubi [492] supra, the court quotes a reference of this court in Stevens v. Nichols, 155 Mass. 472, 475, 29 N. E. 1150, 15 L.R.A. 459, to the doctrine of Corrigan v. Union Sugar Refinery, which was in these words: "The licenser has, however, no right to create a new danger while the license continues. Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 502; Corrigan v. Union Sugar Refinery, 98 Mass. 577; Corby v. Hill, 4 C. B. (N. S.) 556 [93 E. C. L. 556]. So a railroad company which allows the public habitually to use a private crossing of its tracks cannot use active force against a person or vehicle crossing under a license, express or implied." It is not necessary to consider whether this reference in Stevens v. Nichols to the doctrine of Corrigan v. Union Sugar Refinery is or is not a sufficiently careful statement of that doctrine to determine the reason on which it is founded or the limitations to which it is subject. The rule of Corrigan v. Union Sugar Refinery is a rule as to the liability of a licensor to a licensee. But where a defendant invites a plaintiff to ride gratis in his carriage the question is not a question of the measure of liability of a licensor to a licensee. It is the question of the measure of the liability assumed in case of a gratuitous undertaking. For this reason the doctrine of Pomponio v. New York, etc. R. Co. and of Corrigan v. Union Sugar Refinery (the case on which Pomponio v. New York, etc. R. Co. was decided) is not applicable in the case at bar where the defendant invited the plaintiff to ride gratis in her carriage.

The next case in point of time is Patnode v. Foote, 153 App. Div. 494, 138 N. Y. S. 221. In that case it was said that no decision upon the point had been found in New York but that the case of Pigeon v. Lane in Connecticut "Impresses us as stating the true rule." Without further discussion the court followed the opinion in Pigeon v. Lane. The next case, Adams v. Tozer, 163 App. Div. 751, 149 N. Y. S. 163, was decided on the authority of Patnode v. Foote and of Grimshaw v. Lake Shore, etc. R. Co. 205 N. Y. 371, Ann. Cas. 1913E 571, 98 N. E. 962, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 563. The latter was a case where the plaintiff, being by license of the Wabash Railroad Company on an engine of that company, was injured in a collision at a grade crossing of the rails of the Wabash and of the defendant railroad company caused by the negligence of those operating the defendant's engine. It was held that the defendant owed the plaintiff the duty of exercising due care not to injure him since he was lawfully on the Wabash [493] engine and that it was immaterial that he was lawfully there by license and not by compensation paid by him to the Wabash Railroad Company. In other words the point decided in Grimshaw v. Lake Shore, etc. R. Co. ubi supra, is that decided in Boutlier v. Malden, 226 Mass. 479, 116 N. E. 251. It has no bearing upon the liability of a defendant who invites a plaintiff to ride gratis in his carriage. There is another case in New York (referred to in one of the cases to be considered later on) namely, Birch v. New York, 190 N. Y. 397, 83 N. E. 51, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 595. The point decided in that case was that a licensee entering on the wharf of a licensor takes the property as he finds it. In making that decision the court said obiter that the owner of land is liable to one entering upon it as licensee for active negligence on its part; that is to say, it was liable in a case like Corrigan v. Union Sugar Refinery. The next case in point of time is Lochhead v. Jensen, 42 Utah, 99, 129 Pac. 347. In that case a verdict was set aside on the ground that the plaintiff was allowed at the trial to recover for an injury not alleged in the complaint. After setting aside the verdict on that ground the court (at page 104) said with respect to a new trial: that there was nothing in the defendant's contention "that 'the ride in the automobile was the mutual enjoyment of all three' occupants, and since the plaintiff did not show that the deceased protested against the manner of its operation it must be presumed that he acquiesced therein; and therefore the negligence, if any, of the defendant must be imputed to the deceased." There was nothing else in the case which bears or might be thought to bear upon the question which we have under consideration. The next case in point of time is Beard v. Klusmeier, 153 Ky. 153, Ann. Cas. 1915D 342, 164 S. W. 319, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1100. That case was decided without discussion on the authority of Lochhead v. Jensen and Patnode v. Foote. The next is Fitzjarrell v. Boyd, 123 Md. 497, 91 Atl. 547. That case was decided on the authority of Huddy on Automobiles, § 113; Patnode v. Foote, Beard v. Klusmeier, Pigeon v. Lane, Birch v. New York, Mayberry v. Sivey and Lochhead v. Jensen. After citing these authorities the court said at page 506: "The rule announced in these cases, we think, is the true and correct rule, and is controlling on this appeal." There was no further discussion of the principles involved or of other decisions.

It is apparent from this review of the decisions in conflict with West v. Poor that the question whether they are or are not correct [494] depends upon the question whether degrees of negligence are known to the common law and whether the rule of Corrigan v. Union Sugar Refinery governs the liability of a defendant who invites a plaintiff to ride gratis in his carriage. Apart from the question whether degrees in negligence are a thing known to the common law (which was in reality what was decided in the negative in Mayberry v. Sivey, 18 Kan. 291) we are of opinion that these cases are not well decided and that they should not be followed.

Mr. Wharton is not alone in the conclusion reached by him that no such a thing as different degrees in negligence is known to the common law. It was said by Lord Cranworth (then Baron Rolfe) in Wilson v. Brett, 11 M. & W. (Eng.) 113, 115, 116, that: "I said I could see no difference between negligence and gross negligence—that it was the same thing, with the addition of a vituperative epithet." In Beal v. South Devon Ry., 3 H. & C. (Eng.) 337, 341, Crompton, J., in delivering the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber said that it was a mistake to say that there was no difference between ordinary and gross negligence "because a strict line of demarcation cannot be drawn between them." And in Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Co., L. R. 1 C. P. (Eng.) 600, both Willes, J., and Montague Smith, J., expressed their dissatisfaction with the term gross negligence. Willes, J., went so far as to say, at page 612: "No information, however, has been given us as to the meaning to be attached to gross negligence in this case; and I quite agree with the dictum of Lord Cranworth in Wilson v. Brett that gross negligence is ordinary negligence with a vituperative epithet,—a view held by the Exchequer Chamber: Beal v. South Devon R. Co. [3 H. & C. (Eng.) 337]. Confusion has arisen from regarding negligence as a positive instead of a negative word." But it is probable that an end was put in England to these objections to the term gross negligence by the decision of the Privy Council in Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. 2 P. C. 317, the judgments of which, while not binding on the High Court, are "entitled to very great weight indeed." Dulieu v. White [1901] 2 K. B. 669, at page 677. That was a case in its dramatic as well as in its legal aspects like Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168, and it was largely upon the authority of the decision in Foster v. Essex Bank that Giblin v. McMullen was decided. In delivering the judgment [495] of the Privy Council in Giblin v. McMullen, Lord Chelmsford said at pages 336, 337: "From the time of Lord Holt's celebrated judgment in Coggs v. Bernard, in which he classified and distinguished the different degrees of negligence for which the different kinds of bailees are answerable, the negligence which must be established against a gratuitous bailee has been called 'gross negligence.'" After referring to Lord Cranworth's observation in Wilson v. Brett and to the fact that "this critical observation has been since approved of by other eminent judges," he said:

"Of course, if intended as a definition, the expression 'gross negligence' wholly fails of its object. But as there is a practical difference between the degrees of negligence for which different classes of bailees are responsible, the term may be usefully retained as descriptive of that difference. . . . No advantage would be gained by substituting a positive for a negative phrase, because the degree of care and diligence which a bailee must exercise corresponds with the degree of negligence for which he is responsible, and there would be the same difficulty in defining the extent of the positive duty in each case as the degree of neglect of it which incurs responsibility. In truth, this difficulty is inherent in the nature of the subject, and though degrees of care are not definable, they are with some approach to certainty distinguishable." Giblin v. McMullen, ubi supra, established the rule laid down by Chief Justice Holt in Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909, 913, that to charge a defendant in case of gratuitous bailment the plaintiff must prove gross negligence, and that rule has been applied in the only cases of gratuitous undertakings which have arisen in England since then. In Moffatt v. Bateman, L. R. 3 P. C. 115, the question to be decided in the case at bar was before the court. It was held by the Privy Council that, in case of an invitation to ride gratis in the defendant's carriage, to make out liability the plaintiff had to prove gross negligence. And in Coughlin v. Gillison, [1899] 1 Q. B. 145, it was decided that, in the case of a gratuitous lending of an engine for the sole benefit of the borrower, the borrower to make out liability had to prove a gross neglect on the part of the lender. In all three of these cases the decision was that the plaintiff took nothing because he had failed to make out gross negligence.

In Philadelphia, etc. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. 468, 485, [496] 486, 14 U. S. (L. ed.) 502, Grier, J., said: "It is true a distinction has been taken, in some cases, between simple negligence, and great or gross negligence; and it is said, that one who acts gratuitously is liable only for the latter. But this case does not call upon us to define the difference (if it be capable of definition), as the verdict has found this to be a case of gross negligence. When carriers undertake to convey persons by the powerful but dangerous agency of steam, public policy and safety require that they be held to the greatest possible care and diligence. And whether the consideration for such transportation be pecuniary or otherwise, the personal safety of the passengers should not be left to the sport of chance or the negligence of careless agents. Any negligence, in such cases, may well deserve the epithet of 'gross.'" In The New World v. King, 16 How. 469, 474, 14 U. S. (L. ed.)

1019, Curtis, J. (after pointing out that the appellee was lawfully upon the steamboat of the plaintiff) said that it was not necessary to decide whether "precisely the same obligations in all respects" attached in that case as in case of an ordinary passenger paying fare. He then referred to the statement of Grier, J., in Philadelphia, etc. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. 468, 14 U. S. (L. ed.) 502, which we have just quoted, and he added: "We desire to be understood to reaffirm that doctrine." In addition he said: "The theory that there are three degrees of negligence, described by the terms slight, or ordinary, and gross, has been introduced into the common law from some of the commentators on the Roman law. It may be doubted if these terms can be usefully applied in practice;" he then refers among other cases to Wilson v. Brett, 11 M. & W. (Eng.) 113, and adds: "Some of the ablest commentators on the Roman law, and on the civil code of France, have wholly repudiated this theory of three decrees of diligence." See also in this connection Milwaukee, etc. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 493-495, 23 U. S. (L. ed.) 374; Indianapolis, etc. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 291, 295, 296, 23 U. S. (L. ed.) 898; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Adams, 192 U. S. 440, 24 S. Ct. 408, 48 U. S. (L. ed.) 513. But in the case of New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 382, 383, 21 U. S. (L. ed.) 634, Bradley, J., said: "We have already adverted to the tendency of judicial opinion adverse to the distinction between gross and ordinary negligence. Strictly speaking, these expressions are indicative rather of the degree of care and diligence which is due from a party and which he fails to perform, than of the amount of inattention, carelessness, or stupidity which he exhibits. If very [497] little care is due from him, and he fails to bestow that little, it is called gross negligence. If very great care is due, and he fails to come up to the mark required, it is called slight negligence. And if ordinary care is due, such as a prudent man would exercise in his own affairs, failure to bestow that amount of care is called ordinary negligence. In each case, the negligence, whatever epithet we give it, is failure to bestow the care and skill which the situation demands; and hence it is more strictly accurate perhaps to call it simply 'negligence.' And this seems to be the tendency of modern authorities. If they mean more than this, and seek to abolish the distinction of degrees of care, skill, and diligence required in the performance of various duties and the fulfillment of various contracts, we think they go too far: since the requirement of different degrees of care in different situations is too firmly settled and fixed in the law to be ignored or changed. The compilers of the French Civil Code undertook to abolish these distinctions by enacting that 'every act whatever of man that causes damage to another, obliges him by whose fault it happened to repair it.' Toullier, in his commentary on the code, regards this as a happy thought, and a return to the law of nature. But such an iron rule is too regardless of the foundation principles of human duty, and must often operate with great severity and injustice."

The last word of importance upon this point to be found in the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States is in Preston v. Prather, 137 U. S. 604, 11 S. Ct. 162, 34 U. S. (L. ed.) 788. In that case the rule in Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168, was repudiated. In that case Field J., said (pages 608, 609): "No one taking upon himself a duty for another without consideration is bound, either in law or morals, to do more than a man of that character would do generally for himself under like conditions. The exercise of reasonable care is in all such cases the dictate of good faith. . . . But what will constitute such reasonable care will vary with the nature, value and situation of the property, the general protection afforded by the police of the community against violence and crime, and the bearing of surrounding circumstances upon its security. . . . The general doctrine, as stated by text writers and in judicial decisions, is that gratuitous bailees of another's property are not responsible for its loss unless guilty of gross negligence in its keeping. But gross negligence in such cases [498] is nothing more than a failure to bestow the care which the property in its situation demands; the commission of the reasonable care required is the negligence which creates the liability; and whether this existed is a question of fact for the jury to determine, or by the court where a jury is waived. See the New World v. King, 16 How. 469, 474, 475, [14 U. S. (L. ed.) 1019]; New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 383 [21 U. S. (L. ed.) 627]; Milwaukee, etc. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 494 [23 U. S. (L. ed.) 374]."

In this Commonwealth the judges seem to have had little if any difficulty in recognizing degrees of negligence in case of gratuitous bailments but to have had Lord Cranworth's difficulty (or rather the difficulty which those who followed Lord Cranworth put in articulate form) in other cases. The remarks to which we referred but did not set forth when we quoted the opinion of Chief Justice Shaw in Whitney v. Lee, 8 Met. (Mass.) 91, 93, were these: "The law has endeavored to make a distinction in the degrees of care and diligence to which different bailees are bound: distinguishing between gross negligence, ordinary negligence, and slight negligence; though it is often difficult to mark the line where the one ends and the other begins. And it must be often left to the jury, upon the nature of the subject matter, and the particular circumstances of each case, with suitable remarks by the judge, to say whether the particular case is within the one or the other." In the later case of Chandler v. Worcester Mutual F. Ins. Co. 3 Cush. (Mass.) 328, Chief Justice Shaw was more pronounced in his views as to degrees of negligence. That was a case in which the defendant set up in defence to a claim on a fire insurance policy the fact that the fire had taken place through the gross neglect of the insured. After deciding that to make out the defence relied upon the insurance company had to "show a culpable recklessness and indifference to the rights of others," Chief Justice Shaw added at page 331: "The terms 'slight negligence,' 'want of ordinary care,' and 'gross negligence,' are useful in their way, but they are not precise and exact enough, without a statement of the facts designated by them, to enable a court to judge of the rights of the parties thereby affected. The proper business of jurisprudence seems to be, to take a series of facts and circumstances, conceded or proved, and to declare what are the rights of the parties arising out of them." In Smith v. Westfield First Nat. Bank, 99 Mass. 605, 97 Am. Dec. 59 (a case of gratuitous bailment), Wells, J., ends the opinion at page 612 [499] in these words: "But the court are of opinion that the whole testimony did not furnish such evidence as would warrant a jury in finding that there was gross negligence on the part of the bank, and that the loss of the bonds resulted from such negligence. Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. 2 P. C. (Eng.) 317. The exceptions must therefore be sustained upon that ground." Gill v. Middleton, 105 Mass. 477, 7 Am. Rep. 548, was a case in which the defendant (the owner of the premises in question then leased to the plaintiff's husband) had undertaken to repair them gratis. The presiding judge told the jury that the defendant was liable if the premises were "not put in safe repair, by reason of the want of ordinary skill or care in the workmanship or selection of materials on the part of the defendant." The defendant contended in support of an exception taken to this part of the charge "that upon a gratuitous undertaking of this nature the defendant could only be held responsible for bad faith or for gross negligence." His contention was not sustained and his exceptions were overruled. Ames, J., in delivering the opinion of the court said at pages 479, 480: "It appears to us that this is one of the cases in which there is no practical difference between gross negligence and the want of ordinary care and skill; and that the omission of what Baron Rolfe calls a mere vituperative epithet is not a valid objection to the judge's charge. The true question for the jury was, whether the defendant had discharged the duty which he had assumed, with that due regard to the rights of the other party which might reasonably have been expected of him under all the circumstances." After referring to the case of The New World v. King, 16 How. 469 [14 U. S. (L. ed.) 1019], he added, "The law furnishes no definition of gross negligence as distinguished from want of reasonable and ordinary care, which can be of any practical utility. The question of reasonable care must always depend on the special circumstances of each case, and is almost of necessity a question of fact rather than of law. The degrees of negligence, so often spoken of in text books, do not admit of such precision and exactness of definition as to be of any practical advantage in the administration of justice, without a detail of the facts which they are intended to designate. The New World v. King, 16 How. 469 [14 U. S. (L. ed.) 1019]; Chandler v. Worcester Mutual F. Ins. Co. 3 Cush. (Mass.) 328; Wilson v. Brett, 11 M. & W. (Eng.) 113; Grill v. General Iron Screw Colliery Co. L. R. 1 C. P. (Eng.) 600." The same learned judge in delivering the opinion of this [500] court in the later case of Jenkins v. Bacon, 111 Mass. 373, 15 Am. Rep. 33 (a case of gratuitous bailment), said at page 376: "According to the well settled rule, the bailee who acts without compensation can only be held responsible for bad faith, or gross negligence, if the deposit should be lost or injured while in his custody. Whitney v. Lee, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 91; Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479." In Smith v. Postal Tel. Cable Co. 174 Mass. 576, at page 578, 55 N. E. 380, 75 Am. St. Rep. 374, 47 L.R.A. 323, Holmes, C.J., said: "If the rule is to be adhered to that there can be no recovery for sickness due to the purely internal operation of fright caused by a negligent act, it cannot be avoided by calling the negligence gross and alleging that the defendant ought to have known that the result complained of would follow his act. Negligence with reference to a given consequence means that the consequence ought to have been foreseen, and although the distinction between gross negligence and negligence is known to the law, still, having regard to the grounds for the above-mentioned rule, to allow it to be avoided by such an allegation would be to do away with it."

Apart from the opinions expressed in these common law cases, the question whether in the administration of justice it is possible or practicable to draw a distinction between ordinary and gross negligence has been put to rest in this Commonwealth by decisions under statutes which have made a distinction between the two. It was provided as early as 1840 (St. 1840, c. 80) and has been continued in a number of statutes enacted since then (for a collection of these statutes see Hudson v. Lynn, etc. R. Co. 185 Mass. 510, 71 N. E. 66; Brooks v. Fitchburg, etc. St. R. Co. 200 Mass. 8, 86 N. E. 289, that various persons and corporations should be liable to a penalty if the death of a person was caused through the gross negligence of their servants.¹ And by St. 1871, c. 352, now R. L. c. 111, § 268, it was provided that a railroad corporation should be liable for an accident at a grade crossing where the statutory signals have not been given unless "the person injured or the person who had charge of his person or property was, at the time of the collision, guilty of gross or wilful negligence . . . and that such gross or wilful negligence . . . contributed to the injury." Both sets of statutes made a distinction between gross and ordinary negligence. Although judges of this court have had the [501] same difficulty in determining the meaning of gross negligence under these statutes that they had as to the meaning of that term at common law (see Knowlton, J., in Phelps v. New England R. Co. 172 Mass. 98, 100, 51 N. E. 522, and Hammond, J., in Evensen v. Lexington, etc. St. R. Co. 187 Mass. 77, 79, 72 N. E. 355), yet it is settled that the term gross negligence in these statutes means a materially greater want of care than in case of ordinary negligence. The distinction between the two has been recognized in numberless cases, but the meaning of gross negligence as distinguished from a want of ordinary care has been defined (in the way stated above) in the following cases under the death statutes: Galbraith v. West End St. R. Co. 165 Mass. 572, 43 N. E. 501; Morey v. Gloucester St. Ry. Co. 171 Mass. 165, 50 N. E. 530; Phelps v. New England R. Co. 172 Mass. 98, 51 N. E. 522; Evensen v. Lexington, etc. St. R. Co. 187 Mass. 77, 72 N. E. 355; Brennan v. Standard Oil Co. 187 Mass. 376, 73 N. E. 472; Dolphin v. Worcester Consol. St. R. Co. 189 Mass. 270, 75 N. E. 635; Spooner v. Old Colony St. R. Co. 190 Mass. 132, 76 N. E. 660; Pearlstein v. New York, etc. R. Co. 192 Mass. 20, 77 N. E. 1024; Manning v. Conway, 192 Mass. 122, 78 N. E. 401; Lanci v. Boston El. R. Co. 197 Mass. 32, 83 N. E. 1; Dimauro v. Linwood St. R. Co. 200 Mass. 147, 85 N. E. 894; Devine v. New York, etc. R. Co. 205 Mass. 416, 91 N. E. 522; Renaud v. New York, etc. R. Co. 206 Mass. 557, 92 N. E. 710; Adams v. Boston El. R. Co. 214 Mass. 1, 100 N. E. 1012. And it has been defined in the same way in three cases arising under the statutes as to the failure to give signals at grade crossings in R. L. c. 111, § 268; Copley v. New Haven, etc.

Co. 136 Mass. 6; Debbins v. Old Colony R. Co. 154 Mass. 402, 28 N. E. 279; Emery v. Boston, etc. R. Co. 173 Mass. 136, 53 N. E. 278. In further explanation of the meaning of gross negligence under these statutes it is settled that it is something less than the wilful, wanton and reckless conduct which makes a defendant liable to a trespasser. Banks v. Braman, 188 Mass. 367, 74 N. E. 594. Note to Fitzmaurice v. New York, etc. R. Co. 192 Mass. 159, 162, 7 Ann. Cas. 586. 78 N. E. 418, 116 Am. St. Rep. 236. 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1146; Lanci v. Boston El. R. Co. 197 Mass. 32, 83 N. E. 1.

Whether Mr. Wharton and the commentators referred to by Mr. Justice Curtis in The New World v. King, ubi supra, are right or wrong as to the existence of degrees of negligence in the civil law, it is plain that in this Commonwealth that distinction exists. And it is not necessary in deciding that question [502] to go outside of the law which is administered here. The distinction was first put forward in England in 1703 in Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909. It was adopted in this Commonwealth in Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168, in 1821, and the rule adopted in that case was (in the words of Chief Justice Shaw in Whitney v. Lee, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 91) "settled, on great consideration, and after full deliberation . . . and this supersedes the necessity of any full review of the authorities." The decision in Foster v. Essex Bank (involving the distinction between gross and ordinary negligence) was affirmed by this court in Whitney v. Lee, supra; Smith v. Westfield First Nat. Bank, 99 Mass. 605, 97 Am. Dec. 59, and Jenkins v. Bacon, 111 Mass. 373. And, in spite of Preston v. Prather, 137 U. S. 604, 11 S. Ct. 162, 34 U. S. (L. ed.) 788) that is the rule adopted generally in other jurisdictions. Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. 2 P. C. (Eng.) 317. Hibernia Bldg. Assoc. v. McGrath, 154 Pa. St. 296, 26 Atl. 377, 35 Am. St. Rep. 828; Storer v. Gowen, 18 Me. 174; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Carrow, 73 Ill. 348, 24 Am. Rep. 248; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Tronstine, 64 Miss. 834, 2 So. 255. The doubt as to the existence of the distinction raised by the opinion of Ames, J., in Gill v. Middleton, 105 Mass. 477, 7 Am. Rep. 548, must be taken (even without regard to the subsequent opinion of the same learned judge in Jenkins v. Bacon) to have been a doubt which on a review of all the common law authorities no longer exists in this Commonwealth. In addition that doubt has been put at rest so far as this Commonwealth is concerned by the decisions of this court under statutes which made the distinction between gross and ordinary negligence. No one familiar with the jurisprudence of Massachusetts could question to-day the existence in this Commonwealth of the distinction between gross and ordinary negligence.

¹ The word "gross" was stricken out of the street railways by St. 1907, c. 392.

present statute in the case of railroads and

In spite of the decisions in Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. 2 P. C. 317; Moffatt v. Bateman, L. R. 3 P. C. 115, and Coughlin v. Gillison [1899] 1 Q. B. 145, a doubt arises as to the measure of liability in England in case where a person enters upon a gratuitous undertaking. That doubt arises from the terms used by Chief Justice Holt in stating the liability of a bailee in case of the sixth sort of bailment discussed by him in his opinion in Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909, 913, and those used by Collins, M. R., in delivering the judgment of the court of appeals in Harris v. Perry [1903] 2 K. B. 219, 226. In delivering judgment in Coggs v. Bernard, Lord Holt first laid it down (see page 913) that, [503] in case of a gratuitous bailment of goods for the sole benefit of the bailee, the bailee "is not answerable, if they are stolen without any fault in him, neither will a common neglect make him chargeable, but he must be guilty of some gross neglect." This was the first sort of bailment considered by Chief Justice Holt in Coggs v. Bernard. When the Chief Justice came to the sixth sort of bailment considered by him in that judgment, namely, an undertaking to transport goods where the bailee was to have no reward for his pains he said (pages 918, 919): "Then the bailee having undertaken to manage the goods, and having managed them ill, and so by his neglect a damage has happened to the bailor, which is the case in question, what will you call this? In Bracton, lib. 3, 100, it is called mandatum. . . . It is what we call in English acting by commission. And if a man acts by commission for another gratis, and in the executing his commission behaves himself negligently, he is answerable. . . . This undertaking obliges the undertaker to a diligent management." Harris v. Perry, ubi supra, was a case in which an inspector of work being done in the construction of an underground railway at the time of the accident was riding gratis for his own convenience at the invitation of one of the defendant's officers on the engine of a construction train in place of using a plank walk constructed by the defendant to enable inspectors to oversee the work. While so riding he was injured by the negligence of the defendant's agents. In delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal in that case, Collins, M. R., after stating that there was evidence of a trap and so liability even if the plaintiff was a licensee, said: "At all events, I think it was competent for the jury to find, as they must be taken to have found, a failure of that ordinary care which is due from a person who undertakes the carriage of another gratuitously. . . . There is an obvious difference between the measure of confidence reposed and responsibility accepted in the case of a person who merely received permission to traverse the premises of another, and in the case where a person or his property is received into the custody of another for transportation; see in the case of goods, Southcote's Case, cited in Coggs v. Bernard, and the notes thereto." It would appear on the first reading of these two judgments that both the learned judges intended to make a distinction between the care which has to be exercised in case of a gratuitous bailment [504] and that which has to be exercised in case of a gratuitous undertaking of transportation. But upon a full consideration of the matter it cannot be taken that either of them intended to make that distinction.

Coggs v. Bernard was before the court on a motion in arrest of judgment after a verdict for the plaintiff. The motion in arrest of judgment was based on the ground and solely on the ground that it was not alleged in the declaration that the defendant was to be paid for his pains. All that was before the court was the proposition that a defendant could be liable in case of a gratuitous transportation. No question was raised as to the measure of the defendant's liability in a case of a gratuitous transportation if there was liability in such a case. The Chief Justice disposed of the contention that a gratuitous undertaking to transport was a nudum pactum by pointing out the distinction between the case where a defendant fails to enter upon a gratuitous undertaking and the case where having entered upon it he is negligent in carrying it out. The fact that in stating that there was liability in a case where the defendant had entered upon a gratuitous undertaking Chief Justice Holt was not careful to state with accuracy the measure of that liability cannot be taken to be decisive. That question was not up for decision at that time.

The same is true of that part of the judgment of Collins, M. R., in Harris v. Perry quoted above. The contention in Harris v. Perry to which Collins, M. R., was addressing himself was that the plaintiff in that case was a licensee and that since he was a licensee he could not recover at all. In addressing himself to that contention Collins, M. R., said (first) there was evidence of a trap, and (secondly) that apart from that there was evidence on which the jury could find that there was a failure of care on the part of the defendant. To be sure he spoke of a lack of ordinary care in place of gross negligence. When one takes into account the fact that gross negligence is a term with which the English judges have quarrelled continually, it is perhaps natural that Collins, M. R., did not go out of his way to speak of gross negligence and did speak of "ordinary care." Moreover it is to be noticed that what Collins, M. R., said was: "a failure of that ordinary care which is due from a person who undertakes the carriage of another gratuitously."

[505] But upon the question of the true interpretation of these two judgments there is more to be said. In his note to Coggs v. Bernard, Mr. Smith has this to say at pages 98, 103, 104, 1 Smith's Lead. Cas. (1st Eng. ed.): "6. Mandatum. . . . The sixth and last class of bailments is (according to Lord Holt) mandatum, or a delivery of goods to somebody who is to carry them, or do something about the gratis. And this might have been classed under the same head with depositum. For as the keeping, carrying, and working upon goods for hire are all included, both by Lord Holt and Sir W. Jones, under the same head, there seems no good reason why the keeping, carrying, and working upon them gratuitously should not have been so likewise. Certain it is, that the liabilities of the depository and of the mandatory are precisely the same; both (in the absence, at least, of a contract in special terms) are bound to slight diligence, and to slight diligence only, and liable for nothing short of gross negligence, the reason in each case being the same, namely, that neither is to receive any reward for his services. Accordingly, whenever the extent of a mandatory's liability is discussed we find the cases respecting that of depositaries cited, and relied upon, and so vice versa. The cases of Beauchamp v. Powley, 1 M. & Rob. 38, Shiells v. Blackburne, 1 H. Bl. 158, and Dartnall v. Howard, 4 B. & C. 345, 10 E. C. L. 351, the facts of which are respectively stated at the commencement of this note, were decisions on the responsibility of mandataries, and from those, as well as from the general principle, it appears that such bailees are liable for gross negligence, and for that only." It is to be observed in connection with Mr. Smith's statement ("accordingly, whenever the extent of a mandatory's liability is discussed we find the cases respecting that of depositaries cited and relied upon") that Harris v. Perry, a case of a gratuitous mandatum, was decided on the authority of Southcote's Case, 4 Coke 83 b, a case of a gratuitous depositum. And that is true of West v. Poor, 196 Mass. 183, 81 N. E. 960, 124 Am. St. Rep. 541, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 936, also; that case (a case of a gratuitous mandatum) was decided on the authority of Whitney v. Lee, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 91, which was the case of a gratuitous depositum. There is more to be said with respect to the proper interpretation of Lord Holt's judgment in Coggs v. Bernard concerning a distinction between a gratuitous bailment and an undertaking of gratuitous transportation. That is that the third and fourth editions of Smith's Leading Cases were edited by [506] Mr. (afterwards Mr. Justice)

Keating and by Mr. (after Mr. Justice) Willes and that the seventh, eighth and ninth editions of Smith's Leading Cases were edited (with Mr. Arbuthnot) by Lord (then Mr.) Collins, who, when Master of the Rolls delivered the judgment in Harris v. Perry. The statement of Mr. Smith quoted above (that there is no distinction between the measure of the liability in case of a gratuitous bailment and that in a case of gratuitous transportation) has been left untouched by these three learned editors of that learned work. The fact that this statement was left untouched by Lord Collins would seem to be decisive of the question now under consideration so far as Lord Collins's judgment in Harris v. Perry, is concerned. There were some additions made in these editions to Mr. Smith's statement but these additions did not even modify much less change the statement of Mr. Smith which we have set forth above. These additions may be found at page 104 in the third English edition, page 184 in the fourth English edition, page 247 in the seventh English edition, page 261 in the eighth English edition, and page 397 in the ninth American edition which is a reprint (with additional notes) of the ninth English edition. A ruling at nisi prius upon the question now before us was recently made in Karavias v. Gallinocos, 143 L. T. N. S. 237. In that case the jury found that the defendant was not guilty of gross but was guilty of ordinary negligence. Mr. Justice Avory (who made the ruling) stated that the question "in the state of the authorities [was] a fit question to be taken to the Court of Appeal." but, since judgment was entered for the plaintiff in Harris v. Perry, ubi supra, on a finding that the defendant in that case was guilty of ordinary negligence, he felt bound to enter judgment for the plaintiff on the findings made in Karavias v. Gallinocos.

It would seem that in England the liability of a gratuitous bailee and the liability of one who undertakes a gratuitous transportation is the same. And to this one thing more must be added, namely: However much the English judges have quarrelled with the meaning of the words gross negligence, it is the fact that when pushed to a decision the judges of England have invariably held that to make out liability in case of a gratuitous undertaking (no matter what the nature of the gratuitous undertaking was) gross negligence has to be made out. Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. 2 P. C. [507] 317, Moffatt v. Bateman, L. R. 3 P. C. 115, and Coughlin v. Gillison [1899] 1 Q. B. 145.

In holding that, to charge a defendant with liability in case of a gratuitous undertaking to transport a person, the plaintiff must prove gross negligence because that is the measure of liability in case of the gratuitous undertaking to keep or carry goods, it is not to be understood that gross negligence in the two cases is the same thing. In all cases (no matter whether the case is one of ordinary or of gross negligence) the consequences likely to result is a fact to be taken into consideration in determining what ought to be done by the defendant to fulfil the measure of his liability. For example: It might be held that the omission to do a certain thing in the transportation of goods was not negligence and that by reason of the seriousness of the consequences likely to result the omission to do the same thing in case of the transportation of a person would be negligence; and so in case of gross in place of ordinary negligence. For this general principle see, for example, Hartford v. New York, etc. R. Co. 184 Mass. 365, 68 N. E. 835; Mullins v. New York, etc. R. Co. 201 Mass. 38, 87 N. E. 476; Martin v. Boston, etc. St. R. Co. 205 Mass. 16, 91 N. E. 159.

This brings us to the consideration of Davis v. Central Cong. Soc. etc. 129 Mass. 367, 37 Am. Rep. 368, a case upon which the plaintiff has placed great reliance. In that case it was decided that the defendant society was liable to the plaintiff, who had been invited to attend a conference held in the defendant society's church at which the plaintiff was not a delegate, for injuries suffered by the plaintiff through a dangerous condition in the path leading to the church upon the jury finding that the defendant was negligent in the matter. That case has usually been cited when the doctrine that a charity is not liable for torts under the decision in McDonald v. Massachusetts General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 520, has been set up in defence. It has never been affirmed as a decision upon the duty owed by a defendant who invites a plaintiff to enter upon his (the defendant's) land solely for his (the plaintiff's) purposes unless it can be held to have been affirmed or approved on that point by what was said by Barker, J., in Chapin v. Holyoke Y. M. C. A. 165 Mass. 280, 281, 42 N. E. 1130. Of the decision in Davis v. Central Cong. Soc. etc. it is to be observed that it [508] was decided at a time when the distinction between a person going on the premises of the defendant for business to be transacted with the defendant and persons going upon those premises for business of their own (Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426, 31 N. E. 128, 32 Am. St. Rep. 463, and Hart v. Cole, 156 Mass. 475, 31 N. E. 644, 16 L.R.A. 557) had not been established. Were the case to arise to-day it might be contended that since the plaintiff in Davis v. Central Cong. Soc. etc. went on the defendant's premises for her own purposes she was in no better position than the plaintiffs in Plummer v. Dill and Hart v. Cole. It is hard to see a distinction between the rights of a plaintiff expressly invited to attend a church conference to which she was not a delegate and a plaintiff impliedly invited to attend a funeral or a wake. But however that may be the decision in Davis v. Central Cong. etc. Soc. has no bearing on the question now before us. Whether one invited to come on to the defendant's premises for his (the invitee's) purposes alone takes them as he finds them or can hold the defendant for negligence in case the premises are in a dangerous condition, is a question of the obligation assumed by one inviting another to come upon his land; while the extent of the obligation assumed by inviting one to travel gratis in the invitor's carriage is a question of the liability of one who enters upon a gratuitous undertaking whether it be a gratuitous undertaking to keep, carry or lend.

As matter of authority West v. Poor, 196 Mass. 183, 81 N. E. 960, 124 Am. St. Rep. 541, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 936, ought not to be overruled. It must be taken to be established in this Commonwealth that to charge a gratuitous bailee the plaintiff must make out gross negligence on his part. Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168; Whitney v. Lee, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 91. Smith v. Westfield First National Bank, 99 Mass. 605, 97 Am. Dec. 59; Jenkins v. Bacon, 111 Mass. 373, 15 Am. Rep. 33. The measure of liability of one who undertakes to carry gratis is the same as that of one who undertakes to keep gratis. To this is to be added the fact that in every case in England in which the question of the measure of liability of a person who enters upon any gratuitous undertaking has arisen the same conclusion has been reached. Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. 2 P. C. 317. Moffatt v. Bateman, L. R. 3 P. C. 115; Coughlin v. Gillison [1899] 1 Q. B. 145. From an examination of the cases, apart from Gill v. Middleton, in which a contrary conclusion has been reached, it is apparent that they depend upon the decision in Corrigan v. Union Sugar Refinery [509] 98 Mass. 577, 96 Am. Dec. 685, or upon the proposition that degrees in negligence are not known to the common law. We are of the opinion in the first place (for reason already stated) that the principle of Corrigan v. Union Sugar Refinery does not bear upon the measure of liability of one who invites another to travel gratis in his carriage; and in the second place that in this Commonwealth at any rate degrees of negligence are known to the law. Gill v. Middleton was decided on the authority of cases in England and in the Supreme Court of the United States since repudiated in Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. 2 P. C. 317, and in New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 382, 383, 21 U. S. (L. ed.) 627. In Gill v. Middleton the proposition was stated that "The law furnishes no definition of gross negligence as distinguished from want of reasonable and ordinary care, which can be of any practical utility." That proposition is not law in this Commonwealth to-day. In addition the decision in Gill v. Middleton is in conflict with that in Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168, and the subsequent cases affirming that decision and with West v. Poor. We are of opinion that Gill v. Middleton and the cases following it¹ are not law in this respect and that they should be overruled in so far as they conflict with those cases. A word of explanation should be added with respect to what was said of Gill v. Middleton in the case of Thomas v. Lane, 221 Mass. 447, 109 N. E. 363, L.R.A.1916F 1077; Gill v. Middleton involved (inter alia) these two propositions, namely: (First) that a defendant who undertakes to do an act gratis for the benefit of the plaintiff is liable if guilty of the requisite negligence and (second) that since "the law furnishes no definition of gross negligence as distinguished from want of reasonable and ordinary care, which can be of any practical utility" the defendant is liable in such a case if the plaintiff proves that he was guilty of ordinary negligence. In Thomas v. Lane, 221 Mass. 447, 109 N. E. 363, L.R.A.1916F 1077, an attack was made upon the first of these two propositions. It was held that that attack had to fail. There was no occasion at that time to consider or rather to reconsider the second of these two propositions and that proposition was not then passed upon. So far as the first of these [510] two propositions is concerned Gill v. Middleton is law, as was stated in Thomas v. Lane, 221 Mass. 447, 449, 109 N. E. 363, L.R.A.1916F 1077, but so far as the second proposition is concerned that case is now overruled.

Approaching the question apart from authority we are led to the same conclusion. Justice requires that the one who undertakes to perform a duty gratuitously should not be under the same measure of obligation as one who enters upon the same undertaking for pay. There is an inherent difficulty in stating the difference between the measure of duty which is assumed in the two cases. But justice requires that to make out liability in case of a gratuitous undertaking the plaintiff ought to prove a materially greater degree of negligence than he has to prove where the defendant is to be paid for doing the same thing. It is a distinction which seventy-five years' practice in this Commonwealth has shown is not too indefinite a one to be drawn by the judge and acted upon by the jury.

We are of opinion that the decision in West v. Poor should be affirmed and followed in the case at bar.

In the view which we have taken it has not been necessary to consider the doctrine of Southcote v. Stanley, 1 H. & N. (Eng.) 247, as to which see Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426, 427, 31 N. E. 128, 32 Am. St. Rep. 463; Hart v. Cole, 156 Mass. 475, 477, 31 N. E. 644, 16 L.R.A. 557.

The plaintiff has sought to bring this case within Loftus v. Pelletier, 223 Mass. 63, 111 N. E. 712, by suggesting that the jury could have found that the defendant gave the invitation to get the plaintiff's society at the time in question. In Loftus v. Pelletier the plaintiff had a right to be transported by reason of the fact that she had paid for such transportation by her services as a nurse. The transportation in the case at bar was gratuitous.

The entry must be Judgment on the verdict.

NOTE.

The reported case discusses at considerable length the matter of degrees of negligence, and, overruling previous decisions, holds that there is a practical distinction between "gross negligence" and "the want of reasonable and ordinary care." Applying that ruling it is held that the owner of an automobile is not liable for personal injuries to a person riding gratuitously as an invited guest unless the injuries result from the "gross negligence" of the owner or his servant. The liability of the owner of an automobile for an injury to a person riding as a guest is discussed in the note to Beard v. Klusmeier, Ann. Cas. 1915D 342. As to the jurisdictions wherein the doctrine of comparative negligence is recognized, see the notes to Chicago, etc. R. Co. v. Hamler, 3 Ann. Cas. 42; Belle Alliance Co. v. Texas, etc. R. Co. 19 Ann. Cas. 1143; and Bolin v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 81 Am. St. Rep. 928.

¹ The rule of Gill v. Middleton was applied in Riley v. Lissner, 160 Mass. 330, 35 N. E. 1130; Buldra v. Henin, 212 Mass. 275, 98 N. E. 863; McLeod v. Rawson, 215 Mass. 257, 102 N. E. 429, and it was referred to as law in Dix v. Old Colony St. R. Co. 202 Mass. 518, 523, 89 N. E. 109, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 567, and in Stewart v. Cushing, 204 Mass. 154, 157, 90 N. E. 545.

PEOPLE

v.

STEEPLECHASE PARK COMPANY
ET AL.

New York Court of Appeals—July 11, 1916.

218 N. Y. 459; 113 N. E. 521.

Public Lands — Grant of Land under Navigable Waters — Restrictions in Grant.

Where a grant of public lands under navigable waters contains an express restriction against interference or obstruction with the free and unrestricted rights of public access and use, the grantee cannot maintain obstructions and devices in the maintenance of an amusement park which interfere with such public use.

Power of State to Make Grant.

The commissioners of the land office, under Public Lands Law (Consol. Laws, c. 46), § 75, and Const. art. 5, §§ 5, 6, have authority to make unqualified, unrestricted grants of lands under water between high and low water marks.

[See note at end of this case.]

Limitations on Unrestricted Grant.

A grant of public lands under navigable water containing no restrictions is held to be an unqualified grant of the fee therein, and not subject to any easement in favor of the public.

Same.

Where the state through its land commissioners unqualifiedly granted to defendant lands under navigable water between high and low water marks, the exclusive use and right of possession vested in the grantee, and the use of such lands as an amusement park does not affect the validity of the grant.

Same.

Fences, barriers, platforms, pavilions, and other structures of a private amusement park, constructed by the grantee on lands under navigable water between high and low water mark, although an interference with the public use of, and access to, such lands cannot be enjoined, where the grant of such lands from the state was unqualified.

People v. Steeplechase Park Co. 165 N. Y. App. Div. 231, modified.

Appeal from Appellate Division of Supreme Court, Second Judicial Department.

Action by People of State of New York, plaintiff, against Steeplechase Park Company et al., defendants. Judgment for plaintiff at Special Term of Supreme Court. Judgment affirmed by Appellate Division of Supreme Court. Defendants appeal. MODIFIED.

[460] The defendants, or one or more of them, are in possession of certain real property at Coney Island, in the county of Kings, extending from an avenue known as Surf avenue, southerly to high-water mark of the Atlantic ocean, a distance of about 845 feet on the westerly side thereof, and about 757 feet on the easterly side thereof. Said real property is about 633 feet wide and extends approximately from the westerly boundary of West Nineteenth street on the west to the easterly boundary of West Sixteenth street on the east. On this real property an amusement park is maintained.

The defendant Huber is found to be the owner of the fee of 291.71 feet in width of said real property along the westerly side thereof extending from high-water mark to Surf avenue. The defendant Steeplechase Company is found to be the owner of the fee of 148.63 feet in width of the real property adjoining on the east the said real property owned by the defendant Huber and which real property extends from high-water mark to Surf avenue.

The defendants Tilyou and Hogg are the owners of the fee of a part of said real property adjoining on the east [461] the parcel owned by the Steeplechase Company which part so owned by them is 131.11 feet wide and extends from high-water mark to said Surf avenue.

It does not appear who is the owner of the fee of the remaining about 56 feet in width of said real property making up the 633 feet in width referred to as extending from said high-water mark to Surf avenue. The land between high-water mark and low-water mark fronting the lands owned as aforesaid is 122 feet wide at the westerly end thereof—125 feet wide measured from the middle of said park—and 133 feet wide measured from the easterly side of said park. It does not appear that the state has ever granted the lands under water south of and opposite that part of the real property owned by the defendants Tilyou and Hogg, or that part of the real property described as adjoining their lands on the east.

The defendant Huber, on the 7th day of May, 1897, made application to the commissioners of the land office of this state for a grant of land under water adjacent to the property found to be owned by her in fee. On October 4, 1897, a grant was made to her of which the following is a copy:

"The People of the State of New York, by the Grace of God Free and Independent. To All to Whom These Presents Shall Come, Greeting:

"Know Ye, That, pursuant to a resolution of the Commissioners of our Land Office, dated the thirtieth day of September, 1897, we have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant unto Emilie Huber, her heirs and assigns, the land under water, and between high and low water mark, described as follows, to wit:

"All that certain piece or parcel of land under waters of the Atlantic Ocean, in front of and adjacent to upland of said Emilie Huber at Coney Island in the city of Brooklyn in our county of Kings described as follows, to wit:

[462] "Beginning at a point on the mean high water line of the Atlantic Ocean, where the same is intersected by the division line between old lot number twenty-eight and old lot number thirty-one of the Common Lands of the Town of Gravesend, said division line between the westerly line of the upland of Emilie Huber, and said point of intersection being located eight hundred and sixty-seven and thirty-three one-hundredths feet southerly from the southerly line of Surf Avenue, measured along said division line; running thence on a line parallel with West Nineteenth street south twenty-nine minutes, thirty seconds east fifteen hundred feet; thence north eighty-nine degrees, thirty minutes and thirty seconds east two hundred ninety-seven and seventy one-hundredths feet; thence on a line parallel with West Nineteenth street, north twenty-nine minutes, thirty seconds west fifteen hundred feet to mean high water line; thence along said mean high water line south eighty-nine degrees, thirty minutes thirty seconds west two hundred ninety-seven and seventy one-hundredths feet to the place of beginning, containing ten and one-fourth acres.

"In Testimony Whereof, We have caused these our Letters be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said State to be hereunto affixed.

"Witness, FRANK S. BLACK,

Governor of our said State, at our City of Albany, the fourth day of

"[SEAL] October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven.

"FRANK S. BLACK,

"Passed the Secretary's Office the 4th day of October, 1897.

"ANDREW DAVIDSON,

"Deputy Secretary of State."

Paul Weidmann, the predecessor in title of the defendant Steeplechase Company, on the 2d day of February, [463] 1898, obtained a grant from the commissioners of the land office, the material part of which is as follows: "The People of the State of New York, by the Grace of God Free and Independent. To All to Whom These Presents Shall Come, Greeting:

"Know Ye, That we have given and granted and by these presents do give and grant unto Paul Wiedmann, his heirs and assigns, the land under water and between high and low water mark described as follows to wit:

. . . Containing five and one-eighth acres.

"Subject, however, to the restriction that the said party of the second part shall not erect or cause to be erected any fences or obstructions of any kind on the land under water as above described that will in any way obstruct or prevent any person or persons from having free and unmolested rights to cross and recross the said land under water between high and low water line as they now exist or as they may exist to the south of the said present high or low water line, but this restriction shall not apply to any of the lands under water which shall at any time be reclaimed by natural causes and building erected thereon."

In the year 1905 and thereafter the defendant Steeplechase Company erected upon said foreshore and have since there maintained obstructions of many kinds which interfered with and prevented the use of the foreshore by the public. The court found as a fact that the obstructions, naming them, are purportures and nuisances per se.

It is also found as a fact that for upwards of one hundred years last past the plaintiffs have had and now have the right to use the foreshore adjacent to Steeplechase Park at all times for the purpose of bathing, boating and fishing and the right of passage over such foreshore as incidental thereto. This action is brought to prevent the defendants from interfering with the plaintiffs in their right of passage over and use of such foreshore.

[464] Judgment was obtained in the action by which it is ordered and adjudged: "That the defendants are enjoined from maintaining the following structures, namely, the fences or barriers at either side of Steeplechase Park, the luncheon pavilion and the platform connecting the same with the pier, the roller coaster and marine horse railway, in so far that these structures or any of them project beyond the present high water line as shown on Plaintiff's Exhibit 12.

"It is Further Ordered and Adjudged:

That said defendants make suitable means of free passage and maintain the same under the pier; that the pipe under said pier be raised to a height of at least seven feet above the beach between high and low water line; that said defendants provide convenient means for passing over or around the landward end of the westerly jetty for foot passengers or vehicles, which passage must be left open for all persons freely to travel over; that the said defendants also make and maintain a suitable and convenient means for passage under Tilyou's Walk by persons on foot and for vehicles at all states of the tide.

"It is Further Ordered and Adjudged: That said defendants forthwith and within thirty days after service upon them or their attorneys of a copy of this judgment, remove the following structures, namely: the easterly boundary fence, the fences upon the westerly jetty, the luncheon pavilion, the platform connecting the same with the pier, the roller coaster and marine horse railway, in so far as these structures, or any of them, project beyond the present high water line as shown on Plaintiff's Exhibit 12; and within said thirty days make a free passage under the pier, raise the pipe underneath it to a height of at least seven feet above the beach between high and low-water line, provide convenient means for passing over the westerly jetty or round the landward end for foot passengers or vehicles and provide suitable and convenient means for passage underneath Tillyou's [465] Walk by persons on foot and for vehicles at all states of the tide."

An appeal was taken from said judgment by the defendants, other than the defendant Hogg, to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, where the judgment was unanimously affirmed, and this appeal is taken from such judgment of affirmance.

The defendants Emilie Huber and George C. Tillyou have died since the commencement of this action and the executor of the will of each has been substituted in the action in place of such defendants severally. The interest of each has been referred to in this statement and will be referred to in the opinion as if the original parties had not died.

C. Walter Randall, Samuel S. Whitehouse and Frank Oberneir for Joseph Huber, as executor of Emilie Huber, appellant.

Andrew F. Van Thun, Jr. for Steeplechase Company et al., appellants.

Egburt E. Woodbury and Robert P. Beyer for respondent.

[467] CHASE, J.—So far as the judgment recovered relates to obstructions upon land below high-water mark other than land which is included within the description in the patent to Emilie Huber of 1897, it is fully sustained by the findings of fact included in the record, and by the law as stated by this court in many reported cases. Among such cases are Brookhaven v. Smith, 188 N. Y. 74, 11 Ann. Cas. 1, 8 N. E. 665, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 326; Barnes v. Midland R. Terminal Co. 193 N. Y. 378, 85 N. E. 1093, 127 Am. St. Rep. 962; Barnes v. Midland R. Terminal Co. 218 N. Y. 91, 112 N. E. 926.

The defendants are not entitled to maintain the obstructions erected by them below high-water mark adjacent and seaward from the Huber uplands because of any littoral rights in the owner of such upland. (See authorities last cited.) Their right, if any, to maintain such obstructions adjacent to said upland rests wholly upon the grant to Mrs.

Huber of 1897. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the language of the grant, the intention of the commissioners of the land office in making the grant, their power and authority to make the grant and the power and authority of the state to authorize a grant conveying every interest of the state, jus privatum and jus publicum, in lands below high-water mark. The cases last cited have no special bearing upon the questions relating to the Huber grant. The Huber grant is in the simplest form, absolute in terms, and by [468] express words gives and grants all of the land adjacent to the applicant's upland from high-water mark southward for fifteen hundred feet.

It is provided by statute that all letters patent shall be in such form as the commissioners of the land office direct. (Public Lands Law, § 5.)

The intention of the commissioners of the land office in executing the grant to Mrs. Huber is quite conclusively shown by the proceedings before them upon her application for the grant. In her application for the grant, made pursuant to the statute, she not only stated in general terms her desire to purchase the lands therein specifically described, but she expressly stated that "it is the intention of the undersigned (Mrs. Huber) to apply for an absolute title in fee simple to said lands under water." It appears from the minutes of the land board that her application was referred to the state engineer and surveyor, a member of the board, and that he reported adversely to her application. The matter was then, upon motion, laid upon the table, and at a subsequent meeting, after a report from the comptroller as to the value of the property in which he stated "that said land, containing 10½ acres, is appraised at $580.00 for restricted, and at $871.25 for all beneficial enjoyment; and that the appraiser's report, and his bill and receipt for $8.05 for expenses incurred in making the appraisal, are enclosed herewith. In my opinion $30.00 in addition to above costs of appraisal should be charged for appraising said land,"—a motion was adopted by a vote of two to one (the state engineer and surveyor voting no) that letters patent issue to Mrs. Huber on presentation of the treasurer's receipt in accordance with the appraisal. Mrs. Huber then paid $909.30, made up of $871.25, the appraisal for "all beneficial enjoyment," $30 costs of appraisal, and $8.05, expenses incurred in making the appraisal, and the grant was executed and delivered.

It appears, therefore, that the commissioners of the land [469] office intended to give Mrs. Huber an unrestricted fee of the lands included in the grant. If it had been their intention to reserve to the public a right of passage over the lands included in the grant, they would have provided therefor as they did in the grant to Paul Weidmann a few weeks later.

The pier which constitutes one of the obstructions of which the plaintiff complains was built by the permission of the secretary of war of the Federal government, which permission is dated November 10, 1913, and also by permission of the department of docks and ferries of the city of New York, which permission is dated December 18, 1903.

By chapter 67 of the Laws of 1786 the commissioners of the land office, then composed of the governor, lieutenant-governor, speaker of the assembly, secretary of state, attorney-general, treasurer and auditor, were given authority "to grant such and so much of the lands under water of navigable rivers, as they shall deem necessary to promote the commerce of this state. Provided always that no such grant shall be made in pursuance of this act to any person whatever other than the proprietor or proprietors of the adjacent lands." That statutory authority was practically re-enacted in the Revised Laws of 1813 (Vol. 1, page 292, chap. 74) and in the Revised Statutes of 1830 (Part 1, chap. 9, title 5, articles 1 and 4). Many other statutes were passed relating to the commissioners of the land office and their duties, and also authorizing grants to particular persons, municipal and other corporations, ever enlarging the power and authority of the commissioners to act for the state in granting lands under water as stated, and otherwise.

By the Constitution of 1846, article 5, section 5, the lieutenant-governor, speaker of the assembly, secretary of state, comptroller, treasurer, attorney-general and state engineer and surveyor were made commissioners of the land office and the powers and duties of the board [470] were stated as follows: "The powers and duties of the respective boards, and of the several officers in this article mentioned, shall be such as are now or hereafter may be prescribed by law." (Constitution, art. 5, § 6). These provisions were included without change in the Constitution of 1894. The commissioners of the land office are, therefore, constitutional officers having by the paramount law of the land constituting the direct voice of the people, such powers and duties as are prescribed by the legislature.

After the Constitution of 1846 the legislature, by chapter 283 of the Laws of 1850, provided: "The commissioners of the land office shall have power to grant in perpetuity or otherwise, so much of the lands under the waters of navigable rivers or lakes, as they shall deem necessary to promote the commerce of this state, or proper for the purpose of beneficial enjoyment of the same by the adjacent owner, but no such grant shall be made to any person other than the proprietor of the adjacent lands." (Section 1.)

By section 2 the powers conferred on the commissioners of the land office were extended "to lands under water, and between high and low-water mark in and adjacent to and surrounding Long Island. . . ."

The present statute is section 75 of the Public Lands Law (Cons. Laws, ch. 46), and it is substantially the same so far as now under consideration as it existed prior to 1897. (See Laws of 1894, chapter 317, sec. 70.) It provides: "This section authorizes grants of land under water

"1. Of navigable rivers and lakes.

"2. . . .

"3. . . .

"4. . . .

"5. Adjacent to and surrounding Long Island. . . .

"The commissioners of the land office may grant in perpetuity or otherwise, to the owners of the lands adjacent to [471] the lands under water specified in this section, to promote the commerce of this state or for the purpose of beneficial enjoyment thereof by such owners, or for agricultural purposes, so much of said lands under water as they deem necessary for that purpose. No such grant shall be made to any person other than the proprietor of the adjacent lands, and any such grant made to any other person shall be void. . . ."

From the first grant, made under the act of 1786 on December 29, 1786, to Esra Reed of lands under the waters of the Hudson river adjacent to his farm at Hudson, down to the present time, thousands of grants have been made, some with, and some without restrictions, some absolute, and some conditional. Upon the faith of the title of lands so conveyed in fee there are now docks, wharves, and buildings devoted to commerce, and also lands filled in, built upon and beneficially enjoyed worth millions of dollars. Titles founded upon such grants are to be found in every city, village and township bordering upon public waters.

In 1892 the attorney-general, replying to a communication of the land board relating to the form of a grant then under consideration, said, in substance, that a grant for beneficial enjoyment imports a fee, and that a provision should not be placed in the grant reserving to the people the privilege of entering upon and using the lands granted until the same shall be actually appropriated and applied to the purposes of commerce or for beneficial enjoyment. (Reports of Attorney-General of the State of New York, 1892, page 83.)

In 1891 the attorney-general, in response to a communication asking for the meaning of the phrases "purposes of commerce" and "beneficial enjoyment," said: "By the amendment of section 67 Revised Statutes supra in 1850 (Chapter 283) which conferred power upon the land board to make such grants for beneficial enjoyment, the legislature assumed that grants for purposes of commerce [472] were of limited character and subject to legislative control. On the other hand a grant for 'beneficial enjoyment' to a grantee, his heirs and assigns, imports a fee and I think the legislature by said amendment of 1850 when it authorized the land board to make grants for beneficial enjoyment, intended a fee should be conveyed where the land granted was not necessary for purposes of commerce. (See Resolution adopted by Land Office March 6th, 1872.)" (Reports of Attorney-General of the State of New York, 1891, page 273.)

After the legislation mentioned and the approved practice of the commissioners of the land office in granting lands under water in fee for beneficial enjoyment had continued for many years, the Constitution of 1894 was adopted by the people and the statutes conferring power on the commissioners of the land office have been more than once re-enacted. The power of the commissioners of the land office to grant lands under water in fee seems to have been given by the Constitution and the statutes.

Notwithstanding the grant to Mrs. Huber, the Trial Term and the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court have each held not only that the grant does not operate to deprive the public of the right to pass over the lands granted but that the structures erected upon the lands included in the grant are purpures and nuisances.

So much has been written in this court in regard to the title to lands under water including the foreshore, that we will refer to some of the conclusions that have been reached in other cases without going independently and at length into a statement of the history and present status of such lands.

"From the earliest times in England the law has vested the title to, and the control over, the navigable waters therein, in the crown and Parliament. A distinction was taken between the mere ownership of the soil under water and the control over it for public purposes. The ownership of the soil, analogous to the ownership [473] of dry land, was regarded as jus privatum, and was vested in the crown. But the right to use and control both the land and water was deemed a jus publicum, and was vested in Parliament. The crown could convey the soil under water so as to give private rights therein, but the dominion and control over the waters, in the interest of commerce and navigation, for the benefit of all the subjects of the kingdom, could be exercised only by Parliament." (Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 53; People v. New York, etc. Ferry Co. 68 N. Y. 71.)

In this country the state has succeeded to all the rights of both crown and Parliament in the navigable waters and the soil under them, and here the jus privatum and the jus publicum are both vested in the state.

In England Parliament had complete and absolute control over all the navigable waters within the kingdom. It could regulate navigation upon them, could authorize exclusive rights and privileges of navigation and fishing, could authorize weirs, causeways and dams for private use to be constructed in them, and could interrupt and absolutely destroy navigation in them. (Rex v. Montague, 4 B. & C. 598, 10 E. C. L. 413; Williams v. Wilcox, 8 Ad. & El. 314, 35 E. C. L. 396; People v. New York, etc. Ferry Co. supra.) So in this country each state (subject to limitations to be found in the Federal Constitution) has the absolute control of all the navigable waters within its limits. As said by the chancellor in Lansing v. Smith, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 9, 20, 21 Am. Dec. 89, the state through its legislature "may exercise all the powers which previous to the Revolution could have been exercised either by the king alone, or by him in conjunction with his Parliament; subject only to those restrictions which have been imposed by the Constitution of this State or of the United States."

In Stevens v. Paterson, etc. R. Co. 34 N. J. L. 532, 3 Am. Rep. 269, Beasley, Ch. J., said (p. 548) that "a legislative permission to appropriate to individual use a part of the jus publicum, does not, per se, deprive [474] the public of a right to resume the privilege granted, unless it appears that it was the intention to vest such privilege irrevocably in the licensee;" that (p. 550) "The principle seems universally conceded that, unless in certain particulars protected by the Federal Constitution, the public right in navigable rivers can to any extent be modified or absolutely destroyed by statute." In Langdon v. New York, 93 N. Y. 156, Earl, J., said: "These powers result from its sovereignty and the absolute control which, in consequence thereof, it has over the public domain within its limits. The right to grant the navigable waters is as absolute and uncontrollable (except as restrained by constitutional checks) as its right to grant the dry land which it owns. It holds all the public domain as absolute owner, and is in no sense a trustee thereof, except as it is organized and possesses all its property, functions and powers for the benefit of the people."

The right of the public to use the foreshore in England is very restricted. In Blundell v. Catterall, 5 B. & Ald. 268, 7 E. C. L. 91, it was held not to include the right of bathing. The court in that case, speaking by Holroyd, J., say (pp. 301, 302): "The public common law rights, too, with respect to the sea, etc., independently of usage, are rights upon the water, not upon the land, of passage and fishing on the sea, and on the sea shore, when covered with water; and though, as incident thereto, the public must have the means of getting to and upon the water for those purposes, yet it will appear that it is by and from such places only as necessity or usage have appropriated to those purposes, and not a general right of lading, unlading, landing or embarking where they please upon the sea shore, or the land adjoining thereto, except in case of peril or necessity."

The case last cited was one to recover for trespasses against a person who wheeled bathing boxes over land above high-water mark down to the seashore and over [475] the foreshore, which was leased to the plaintiff, and it was held in that case that the lessee of the foreshore had a right to treat every bather, every nurse-maid with a perambulator, every boy riding a donkey, and every preacher as a trespasser. (See "The Public and the Foreshore," The Law Times, London, volume 139, page 381, September 4, 1915.)

In this country the right of the public to use the foreshore when not granted in fee is much more liberal, as will be seen by the decision in Barnes v. Midland R. Terminal Co. (supra).

In Lansing v. Smith, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 9, 21 Am. Dec. 89, the court, in construing the constitutionality of an act authorizing the construction of the Albany basin, and also considering the rights of the people in the lands there under water which formerly belonged to the English sovereign, speaking by the chancellor say:

"The people of this state, as the successors of its former sovereign, are entitled to all the rights which formerly belonged to the king by his prerogative. Through the medium of their legislature they may exercise all the powers which previous to the revolution could have been exercised either by the king alone, or by him in conjunction with his parliament; subject only to those restrictions which have been imposed by the Constitution of this state or of the United States. . . . But there can be no doubt of the right of parliament in England or the legislature of this state, to make such grants, when they do not interfere with vested rights of particular individuals. The right to navigate the public waters of the state and to fish therein, and the right to use the public highways, are all public rights belonging to the people at large. They are not the private unalienable rights of each individual. Hence the legislature as the representative of the public may restrict and regulate the exercise of those rights in such manner as may be deemed most beneficial to the public at large; provided they do not [476] interfere with vested rights which have been granted to individuals." (p. 21.)

In People v. New York, etc. Ferry Co. 68 N. Y. 71, 77, 78, the court say: "The title to lands under the tide waters in this country which before the revolution was vested in the king, became, upon the separation of the colonies, vested in the States within which they were situated. The people of the state in their right of sovereignty succeeded to the royal title and through the legislature may exercise the same powers, which, previous to the revolution, could have been exercised by the king alone, or by him in conjunction with parliament: . . . The State, in place of the crown, holds the title as trustee of a public trust, but the legislature may, as the representative of the people, grant the soil, or confer an exclusive privilege in tide waters, or authorize a use inconsistent with the public right, subject to the paramount control of Congress, through laws passed, in pursuance of the power to regulate commerce, given by the Federal Constitution."

In Abbott v. Curran, 98 N. Y. 665, 668 mem. which was a proceeding to compel a purchaser on foreclosure sale to complete his purchase, it was objected to the title that the lands had been originally under water and that the grant from the state was for commercial purposes only and for the benefit of commerce. It appeared that the lands in question had been entirely severed by streets from the water front. It was held that the "Language in the grant did not impose either a condition precedent or subsequent, or any restriction upon the absolute title."

In Towle v. Remsen, 70 N. Y. 303, 308, the court say: "The land under water originally belonged to the crown of Great Britain, and passed by the Revolution to the state of New York. The portion between high and low water mark, known as the tideway, was granted to the city by the early charters (Dongan Charter, §§ 3 and 14; Montgomerie Charter, § 37) and the corporation have an absolute fee in the same. (Nott v. Thayer, 2 Bosw. 61.) [477] It necessarily follows that the city had a perfect right . . . to make the grant of their portion of the land in fee simple absolute."

In Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Shultz, 116 N. Y. 382, 387, 22 N. E. 564, the court say: "Through the medium of the legislature, the state may exercise all the powers which previous to the Revolution could have been exercised either by the King alone or by him in conjunction with his parliament, subject only to those restrictions which have been imposed by the Constitution of this state or of the United States."

In People v. Delaware, etc. Co. 213 N. Y. 194, 199, 107 N. E. 506, the court say: "The title to the bed of navigable streams and the control of navigable waters are vested in the state, subject to the limitations found in the Federal Constitution. (Langdon v. New York, 93 N. Y. 129.) The state, except for such limitations, has power to grant the title to lands under water, unconditionally or conditionally, or it may grant special rights therein, or it may restrict the boundaries of navigable waters by defining the same."

In Matter of Long Sault Development Co. 212 N. Y. 1, 8, Ann. Cas. 1915D 56, 105 N. E. 849, the court say: "The power of the legislature to grant land under navigable waters to private persons or corporations for beneficial enjoyment has been exercised too long and has been affirmed by this court too often to be open to serious question at this late day. (Citing authorities.) The contemplated use, however, must be reasonable and one which can fairly be said to be for the public benefit or not injurious to the public. 'For every purpose which may be useful, convenient or necessary to the public, the state has the unquestionable right to make grants in fee or conditionally for the beneficial use of the grantee, or to promote commerce according to their terms. The extensive grant to the city of New York of the lands under water below the shore line around Manhattan Island clearly comes within this principle, since [478] it was a grant to a municipality, constituting a political division of the state, for the promotion of the commercial prosperity of the city, and, consequently, of the people of the state. So, also, grants to railroads for rights of way and other facilities for the transaction of their business, made under the authority of the state, have been held valid upon the same principle, as well as to corporations and private persons engaged in commerce or navigation for their necessary or reasonable use. Grants to the owners of the adjoining uplands, either for beneficial enjoyment or for commercial purposes, have long been authorized and recognized as one of the uses to which the state may lawfully apply such lands.'"

There are many other decisions of our courts to the same effect but a reference to more of them would unduly extend this opinion. The Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois (146 U. S. 387, 13 S. Ct. 110, 38 U. S. (L. ed.) 1018) case and the Coxe v. State (144 N. Y. 396, 39 N. E. 400) case do not hold that the state cannot grant lands under water in fee for the purposes of commerce and beneficial enjoyment. The rule in the Illinois case, as stated by this court in Saunders v. New York, Cent. etc. R. Co. 144 N. Y. 75, 85, 38 N. E. 992, 43 Am. St. Rep. 729, 26 L.R.A. 378, is, "That the ownership, dominion and sovereignty over lands covered by tide waters, within the limits of the several states, belong to the respective states within which they are found, with the consequent right to use or dispose of any portion thereof, when that can be done without substantial impairment of the public interests, and subject to the paramount right of Congress to control their navigation so far as necessary for the regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the states, and that the same rule was applicable to land under the waters of the great lakes."

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—70.

Whatever we may think of the wisdom of making the Huber grant, the propriety or validity of the grant is not attacked in this action. Although the action is brought in the name of the People it is not brought to review the [479] action of the commissioners of the land nor to set aside or amend the grant. It is, as stated, an action for an injunction.

Even prior to the time when the commissioners of the land office were expressly authorized to grant lands under water for beneficial enjoyment a patent for lands under water could not be invalidated in a collateral action by proof that it was granted for other purposes than to promote the commerce of this state, as that it was granted to a turnpike corporation. (People v. Mauran, 5 Denio 389.) The validity of a patent can only be assailed in a direct proceeding to review the action of the commissioners or by an action in equity to set aside the patent. (E. G. Blakslee Mfg. Co. v. E. G. Blakslee's Sons Iron-Works, 129 N. Y. 155, 160, 29 N. E. 2; New York Cent. etc. R. Co. v. Aldridge, 135 N. Y. 83, 92, 32 N. E. 50, 17 L.R.A. 516.

Every construction upon, or other occupation of land formerly below high-water mark either for commerce or other purpose necessarily interferes in some degree with the public right of passage on the shore and in the sea. Such slight interference is inevitable if the public interests are to be conserved.

During all our history the legislature and the courts have recognized that the public interest may require or at least justify a limited restriction of the boundaries of navigable waters. The public interest may require the building of docks and piers to facilitate approach to the channel of such navigable waters. The beneficial enjoyment of land adjoining the channel of public waters may require or at least justify the conveyance of lands below high water on which to erect buildings. As in England the crown and Parliament can without limitation convey land under public waters, so in this state land under water below high-water mark can be conveyed by the legislature, or in accordance with constitutional and legislative direction. Where the state has conveyed lands without restriction intending to grant a fee therein [480] for beneficial enjoyment, the title of the grantee except as against the rights of riparian or littoral owners, is absolute, and unless the grant is attacked for some reason recognized as a ground for attack by the courts or the use thereof is prevented by the Federal government, there is no authority for an injunction against its legitimate use.

The appellants have raised many questions relating to the findings of fact and to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain such findings. The unanimous affirmance of such findings of fact prevents our examination of the record to determine whether there is any evidence or sufficient evidence to sustain them. Other questions have been raised with reference to the sufficiency of the findings to sustain the judgment. Except as indicated by this opinion we are of the opinion that the findings are sufficient to justify the judgment and it is unnecessary to consider the findings for the purpose of showing their sufficiency to sustain the conclusions of law, so far as they are approved.

The judgment, so far as it affects the lands granted to Mrs. Huber in 1897, is reversed, and complaint dismissed, and except as to said lands granted to Mrs. Huber the judgment is affirmed. Costs are allowed to the defendant Huber in this court and in the Appellate Division payable by the respondent.

WILLARD BARTLETT, Ch. J. (concurring in result).—Although the validity of the Huber grant is not expressly assailed by the complaint in this action, its validity is at issue by reason of the fact that it is set up in the answer as justifying the occupation of the premises in question. The trial judge did not hold that the grant was void but construed it as subject to the public right of passage along the foreshore. The Appellate Division, however, has declared that it "was clearly beyond the power of the commissioners of the land office to convey an unqualified [481] fee of such foreshore for private purposes;" and cites in support of this proposition Matter of Long Sault Development Co. 212 N. Y. 1, Ann. Cas. 1915D 56, 105 N. E. 849, and Coxe v. State, 144 N. Y. 396, 405, 407, 39 N. E. 400.

The Long Sault case is only remotely applicable, as it involved no question as to rights in the foreshore. The Coxe case, however, is strictly pertinent. This court there said: "The title of the state to the seacoast and the shores of tidal rivers is different from the fee simple which an individual holds to an estate in lands. It is not a proprietary, but a sovereign right, and it has been frequently said that a trust is engrafted upon this title for the benefit of the public of which the state is powerless to divest itself." Nevertheless, Judge O'Brien proceeded to say in the same opinion: "Grants to the owners of the adjoining uplands, either for beneficial enjoyment or for commercial purposes, have long been authorized and recognized as one of the uses to which the state may lawfully apply such lands"—but not for mere speculative purposes.

The Huber grant is unqualified in form. I think it conveyed an exclusive right to the possession of the premises therein described, if the commissioners of the land office possessed the power to make a grant of this character.

The Public Lands Law assumes to confer such power upon them in express terms. (Pub. Lands Law, § 75.) They are a constitutional body, with such powers and duties as now are or hereafter may be prescribed by law. (Const. art. V, §§ 5, 6.)

The cases in which it has been held that the public right to pass along the foreshore was not destroyed by the grant have been cases in which the right was reserved expressly or by necessary or fair implication, oftentimes arising out of the surrounding circumstances. There is no such feature here. There is no substantial interference with navigation. Access to the foreshore [482] or land between high and low-water mark is obstructed to some extent, but when the state parts with the title to the foreshore it parts with the right to control its occupation. If the grant of lands under water for beneficial enjoyment (or, in other words, in fee simple) was so vast in extent as to amount practically to an alienation of the state's governmental functions along the ocean shore of Long Island, it would, I think, be invalid under the doctrine of Illinois Central R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 13 S. Ct. 110, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 1018, where the grant exceeded 1,000 acres, embracing the whole outer harbor of Chicago. For example, I should not be willing to construe the statute as authorizing the commissioners of the land office to shut off the public from the entire south shore of Long Island by granting the strand to the upland owners for beneficial enjoyment as a series of amusement parks. But the exclusive grant of a few hundred feet for enjoyment in a manner which does not interfere with navigation, appears to be sanctioned by the letter and spirit of the law, whatever we may think of the wisdom of exercising the power. The question, it seems to me, is largely one of degree. An interesting feature developed by a studious examination of the numerous cases involving grants of land under navigable waters is the extent to which great cities have been built up under such grants. In U. S. v. Mission Rock Co. 189 U. S. 391, 406, 23 S. Ct. 606, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 865, it was said: "A large and valuable part of the city of San Francisco, extending from the present water front to, in some places, Montgomery street, was at the time of and subsequent to the admission of California into the Union a part of the submerged lands of the bay, but has since been filled in by many hundred grantors under the city and state, who have erected buildings and improvements thereon at costs running into many millions of dollars. All of this was done in aid of commerce, in the upbuilding of a great city upon the bay, and with the encouragement and consent of the general government." [493] The water front of the city of New York has been similarly developed by extending it over submerged lands for the promotion of the commercial prosperity of the port. (Coxe v. State, supra.)

While the immediate purpose of the Huber grant appears to have been to promote, not commerce, but recreation for private gain, it can hardly be asserted that such a use of shore property to a limited extent is detrimental to the public interest in any such sense as to affect the validity of the grant.

For these reasons I concur in the conclusion reached by Judge Chase, that the judgment should be reversed so far as it affects the defendant Huber.

Hiscock and Collin, JJ., concur with Chase, J., and Willard Bartlett, Ch. J.; Hogan, Cardozo and Seabury, JJ., dissent from the modification of the judgment on the ground that there should be read into the Huber patent an implied reservation of public rights.

Judgment accordingly.

NOTE.

Power of State to Grant Title to Land under Navigable Water.

Introductory, 1107.

Majority Rule:

Rule Stated, 1107.

Illustrations of Rule, 1109.

Limitations of Rule, 1111.

Minority Rule, 1114.

Rule in California, 1114.

Rule in Illinois, 1116.

Rule in Maryland, 1117.

Introductory.

"Under the common law of England the crown in its sovereign capacity held the title to the beds of navigable or tide waters, including the shore or the space between high and low water marks, in trust for the people of the realm who had rights of navigation, commerce, fishing, bathing and other easements allowed by law in the waters. This rule of the common law was applicable in the English colonies of America. After the Revolution resulting in the independence of the American states, title to the beds of all waters, navigable in fact, whether tide or fresh, was held by the states in which they were located, in trust for all the people of the states respectively. When the Constitution of the United States became operative, the several states continued to hold the title to the beds of all waters within their respective borders that were navigable in fact without reference to the tides of the sea, not for purposes of disposition to individual ownerships, but such title was held in trust for all the people of the states respectively, for the uses afforded by the waters as allowed by the express or implied provisions of law, subject to the rights surrendered by the states under the Federal Constitution. The rights of the people of the states in the navigable waters and the lands thereunder, including the shore or space between ordinary high and low water marks, relate to navigation, commerce, fishing, bathing and other easements allowed by law. These rights are designed to promote the general welfare and are subject to lawful regulation of the states, and such regulation is subordinate to the powers of Congress as to interstate commerce, navigation, post roads, etc., and to the constitutional guarantees of private property rights." Broward v. Mabry, 58 Fla. 398, 50 So. 826.

Accordingly a state cannot make a grant of the exclusive control of a navigable stream. See the note to Matter of Long Sault Development Co. Ann. Cas. 1915D 56.

There is some conflict in the decisions as to the power of a state to grant title to land under navigable waters. But the conflict is more apparent than real, since those decisions which deny the power of the state, base their rulings on the ground that the title of the state is in trust for the benefit of the people and that to convey the soil under the waters would be a violation of the trust, while the decisions affirming the power of the state to grant title to lands under navigable waters also recognize the trust character of the state's title and hold that the grant of the lands does not free it of that trust.

As to the acquisition of the title to land under water by possession adverse to the state, see the note to Jersey City v. Hall, Ann. Cas. 1912A 696. As to the right to take sand, gravel or the like from the bed of a navigable stream, see the note to State v. Akers, Ann. Cas. 1916B 543, affirmed in Ann. Cas. 1918B 586.

Majority Rule.

RULE STATED.

A majority of the cases recognize the power of a state to grant the title to lands under navigable waters subject to the paramount right of the people to the use of the waters for commerce and navigation, and to the control by the federal government for those purposes.

United States.—Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. 212, 11 U. S. (L. ed.) 565; Weber v. State Harbor Com'rs, 18 Wall. 57, 21 U. S. (L. ed.) 798; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 13 S. Ct. 110, 36 U. S. (L. ed.)

1018, affirming 33 Fed. 730; Richardson v. U. S. 100 Fed. 714. See also Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 11 S. Ct. 808, 35 U. S. (L. ed.) 428; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 S. Ct. 548, 38 U. S. (L. ed.) 331, affirming 22 Ore. 410, 30 Pac. 154; Turner v. People's Ferry Co. 21 Fed. 90.

Alabama.—State v. Alabama Power Co. 176 Ala. 620, 58 So. 463.

Arkansas.—See State v. Southern Sand, etc. Co. 113 Ark. 149, 167 S. W. 854.

Florida.—Rivas v. Solary, 18 Fla. 122; State v. Black River Phosphate Co. 32 Fla. 82, 13 So. 640, 21 L.R.A. 189; Broward v. Mabry, 58 Fla. 398, 50 So. 826; Merrill-Stevens Co. v. Durkee, 62 Fla. 549, 57 So. 428; Panama Ice, etc. Co. v. Atlanta, etc. R. Co. 71 Fla. 419, 71 So. 608.

Georgia.—Jones v. Oemler, 110 Ga. 202, 35 S. E. 375.

Louisiana.—In re Caddo Levee Dist. 120 La. 400, 45 So. 370; State v. Bayou Johnson Oyster Co. 130 La. 604, 58 So. 405.

Michigan.—See Sterling v. Jackson, 69 Mich. 488, 37 N. W. 845, 13 Am. St. Rep. 405.

New Jersey.—Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. L. 1, 10 Am. Dec. 356; Gough v. Bell, 21 N. J. L. 156; Stevens v. Paterson, etc. R. Co. 34 N. J. L. 532, 3 Am. Rep. 269; Wooley v. Campbell, 37 N. J. L. 163; Polhemus v. Bateman, 60 N. J. L. 163, 37 Atl. 1015; Woodcliff Land Imp. Co. v. New Jersey Shore Line R. Co. 72 N. J. L. 137, 60 Atl. 44. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. New York, etc. R. Co. 23 N. J. Eq. 157. See also Atty-Gen. v. Stevens, 1 N. J. Eq. 369, 22 Am. Dec. 526; American Dock, etc. Co. v. Trustees for Support of Public Schools, 39 N. J. Eq. 409; McCarter v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 78 N. J. Eq. 346, 79 Atl. 93; State v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 525.

New York.—Lansing v. Smith, 4 Wend. 9, 21 Am. Dec. 89; People v. Thompson, 30 Hun 457; Gould v. Hudson River R. Co. 6 N. Y. 522; People v. Tibbetts, 19 N. Y. 523; People v. New York, etc. Ferry Co. 68 N. Y. 71; Langdon v. New York, 93 N. Y. 129, 144; Rumsey v. New York, etc. R. Co. 130 N. Y. 88, 28 N. E. 763; Saunders v. New York Cent. etc. R. Co. 144 N. Y. 75, 38 N. E. 992, 43 Am. St. Rep. 729, 26 L.R.A. 378; De Lancey v. Hawkins, 163 N. Y. 587, 57 N. E. 1108, affirming 23 App. Div. 8, 49 N. Y. S. 469; Matter of Long Sault Development Co. 212 N. Y. 1, Ann. Cas. 1915D 56, 105 N. E. 849, affirming 158 App. Div. 398, 143 N. Y. S. 454; People v. Delaware, etc. Co. 213 N. Y. 194, 107 N. E. 506, modifying 154 App. Div. 909, 139 N. Y. S. 392; Lally v. New York Cent. etc. R. Co. 61 Misc. 199, 113 N. Y. S. 177; People v. American Sugar Refining Co. 86 Misc. 78, 148 N. Y. S. 160; Oelsner v. Nassau Light, etc. Co. 134 App. Div. 281, 118 N. Y. S. 960; Geneva v. Henson, 140 App. Div. 49, 124 N. Y. S. 588, affirmed 202 N. Y.

545, 95 N. E. 1125. And see the reported case. See also Williams v. Utica, 217 N. Y. 162, 111 N. E. 468, affirming 159 App. Div. 160, 145 N. Y. S. 346; Fulton Light, etc. Co. v. New York, 62 Misc. 189, 116 N. Y. S. 1000; Dooley v. Proctor, etc. Mfg. Co. 77 Misc. 398, 137 N. Y. S. 737; People v. Woodruff, 54 App. Div. 1, 8 N. Y. Ann. Cas. 124, 66 N. Y. S. 209, appeal dismissed 166 N. Y. 597, 59 N. E. 1129.

North Carolina.—Shepard's Point Land Co. v. Atlantic Hotel, 132 N. C. 517, 44 S. E. 39, 61 L.R.A. 937. See also Ward v. Willis, 51 N. C. 185, 72 Am. Dec. 570; Hodges v. Williams, 95 N. C. 331, 59 Am. Rep. 242.

Ohio.—Hogg v. Beerman, 41 Ohio St. 81, 52 Am. Rep. 71.

Oregon.—Hinman v. Warren, 6 Ore. 408; Parker v. Taylor, 7 Ore. 435; Bowlby v. Shively, 22 Ore. 410, 30 Pac. 154, affirmed 152 U. S. 1, 14 S. Ct. 548, 38 U. S. (L. ed.) 331; Astoria Exch. Co. v. Shively, 27 Ore. 104, 39 Pac. 398, 40 Pac. 92; Taylor Sands Fishing Co. v. State Land Board, 56 Ore. 157, 108 Pac. 126; Pacific Elevator Co. v. Portland, 65 Ore. 349, 133 Pac. 72, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 363; Eagle Cliff Fishing Co. v. McGowan, 70 Ore. 1, 137 Pac. 766. See also Muckle v. Good, 45 Ore. 230, 77 Pac. 743.

Rhode Island.—Providence v. Comstock, 27 R. I. 537, 65 Atl. 307.

Texas.—Galveston v. Menard, 23 Tex. 349; Baylor v. Tilleback, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 490, 49 S. W. 720. See also De Meritt v. Robinson, 102 Tex. 358, 116 S. W. 796 (question not decided); Welder v. State, 196 S. W. 868 (question not decided).

Washington.—Eisenbach v. Hatfield, 2 Wash. 236, 26 Pac. 539, 12 L.R.A. 632; Morse v. O'Connell, 7 Wash. 117, 34 Pac. 126; Grays Harbor Boom Co. v. Lowndale, 54 Wash. 83, 102 Pac. 1041, 104 Pac. 267; Palmer v. Peterson, 56 Wash. 74, 105 Pac. 179. See also Sullivan v. Callvert, 27 Wash. 600, 68 Pac. 303; Brace, etc. Mill Co. v. State, 49 Wash. 326, 95 Pac. 278; Bilger v. State, 63 Wash. 457, 116 Pac. 19.

Thus in Hogg v. Beerman, 41 Ohio St. 81, 52 Am. Rep. 71, the court said: "An absolute sovereign, holding both ownership and jurisdiction of land and water, may vest in a private grantee such portions of either, as the grantor may determine. A sovereign whose powers are limited by constitutional provisions may do the like, so far as the grant does not contravene any constitutional provision or limitation. So long as navigable waters are left free to the public, for unembarrassed passages to and fro, we know of no reason why the United States, or any state, holding ownership and jurisdiction of land and water, may not vest in a private grantee such a body of land, marsh and water as 'East Harbor.' History is full of instances of the exercise of such power by governments, and instances in which the courts have protected such a grantee against intrusion are not rare. The ocean, with its gulfs and bays, belong to no nation. Jurisdiction is allowed to such a distance from shore as the protection of that shore requires. This distance was fixed as a marine league at a time when no gun could force a ball farther. But over inland waters the nations in which they lie may hold, both as sovereigns and proprietors. A proprietor may convey all his rights to a grantee unless forbidden by some law to which he is subject. No one not possessed of some right in the thing granted should be heard in objection. Where the grantor is the government, the thing granted government property held by absolute title, and no use of the thing granted to which the public is entitled is taken away, we see no reason for denying to the grantee the ownership of the thing granted."

So in Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 13 S. Ct. 110, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 1018, it was said: "It is the settled law of this country that the ownership of and dominion and sovereignty over lands covered by tide waters, within the limits of the several states, belong to the respective states within which they are found, with the consequent right to use or dispose of any portion thereof, when that can be done without substantial impairment of the interest of the public in the waters, and subject always to the paramount right of Congress to control their navigation so far as may be necessary for the regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the states. This doctrine has been often announced by this court, and is not questioned by counsel of any of the parties. Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. 212 [11 U. S. (L. ed.) 565]; Weber v. State Harbor Com'rs, 18 Wall. 57 [21 U. S. (L. ed.) 798]. The same doctrine is in this country held to be applicable to lands covered by fresh water in the great lakes over which is conducted an extended commerce with different states and foreign nations. These lakes possess all the general characteristics of open seas, except in the freshness of their waters, and in the absence of the ebb and flow of the tide. In other respects they are inland seas, and there is no reason or principle for the assertion of dominion and sovereignty over and ownership by the state of lands covered by tide waters that is not equally applicable to its ownership of and dominion and sovereignty over lands covered by the fresh waters of these lakes."

In State v. Alabama Power Co. 176 Ala. 620, 58 So. 462, the court used the following language: "In Alabama the legal title to the beds and waters of navigable ways is lodged in the state in trust for public purposes; subordinate, however, to the supreme right of navigation which is lodged in the United States as trustee for all the people of all the states. . . . Subject to the state limitation in favor of the supreme right of navigation reposed in the United States, this state may even grant the fee in the trust properties to which reference has been made; provided the grant is not inconsistent with public interests to which the navigable water ways are permanently, originally, dedicated."

In Galveston v. Menard, 23 Tex. 349, the court said: "From the very nature of the property, which the government possesses in its navigable waters, and bays, and bay-shores, it can be ordinarily best appropriated, by devoting it to public use; and not by granting away any exclusive right to it to any one. Because every man can use it, and derive advantage from it, and no injury is done to each other in its enjoyment. It often happens, however, that the public use and enjoyment of this species of property may be promoted and increased, by allowing portions of it to become private property as for wharves, docks and the like, in harbors and ports. If the government could not exercise this right in severing this common property, and appropriating portions of it to private use, it would not only curtail the ordinary powers, which every nation has for self-development, but it would pre-suppose a deficiency, in the sovereignty power, to control or dispose of what belongs to it. At common law, the right to such property was vested in the crown, as a royal prerogative. The modern doctrine of the courts of England is, that it is vested in the king, as trustee for the public, and that he cannot, since the time of magna charta, make a valid grant of it. (Blundell v. Catterall, 5 B. & Ald. 268; 7 E. C. L. 91.) There is no question, but that parliament may grant it. (Lowe v. Govett [3 B. & Ad. 863] 23 E. C. L. 203; Angell on Tide Waters, 88.) The legislatures of the several states may grant it, if not previously appropriated by grant, prescription, or otherwise; provided, the exercise of an exclusive right, thus granted, does not infringe upon the rights of the government of the United States, in its power to 'regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states.'"

ILLUSTRATIONS OF RULE.

It has been held that a state has the power to grant the title to tide and shore lands. Corrigan v. Brown, 169 Fed. 477; Mobile Transp. Co. v. Mobile, 128 Ala. 335, 30 So. 645, 86 Am. St. Rep. 143, 64 L.R.A. 333, affirmed 187 U. S. 479, 23 S. Ct. 170, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 266; Wilson v. Shively, 11 Ore. 215, 4 Pac. 324; Washougal, etc. Transp. Co. v. Dalles, etc. Nav. Co. 27 Wash. 490, 65 Pac. 74. Thus in Mobile Transp. Co. v. Mobile, supra, the court said: "The shores of tide water in all the states are held in fee by the states subject only to the reservation and stipulation that such streams should forever be and remain public highways with the right in Congress to regulate commerce thereon. . . . And it cannot be doubted that the state may convey the fee in such shore, subject of course, to the paramount rights of the United States respecting navigation, and particularly so when the conveyance is in furtherance of public interests."

In Chisolm v. Caines, 67 Fed. 285, a grant of title to marsh lands was sustained, the court saying: "It would seem that there is a great distinction between the shores of the great ocean, the beds of harbors, the channels of rivers and highways of commerce, and these mud shoals cast up by the currents on the sides of harbors and streams. The former must always be kept open for public use, commerce, trade and pleasure. The latter can be separated from any public use, and can be vested in individuals or corporations, at the will of the sovereign power. They are not aids to, but obstructions to, navigation, and can be utilized for the public good in any way the sovereign may decide. And, when it can be done without detriment to the lands and waters remaining, they can always be disposed of, and vested absolutely in private persons."

A few cases uphold the power of the state to make a grant of the shore and lands under the water to the owner of the adjacent land. People v. Colgate, 67 N. Y. 512; People v. Saxton, 15 App. Div. 263, 44 N. Y. S. 211; Delancey v. Hawkins, 23 App. Div. 8, 49 N. Y. S. 469, affirmed 163 N. Y. 587, 57 N. E. 1108.

In Palmer v. Peterson, 56 Wash. 74, 105 Pac. 179, the facts were stated by the court as follows: "The plaintiffs are the owners of certain tide lands of the second class, in Kitsap county, which form an arm of Puget Sound and are covered and uncovered by the flow and ebb of the tide. The lands are suitable for the cultivation of oysters, and were conveyed by the state to the predecessor in interest of the plaintiffs, under the provisions of the acts relating to the purchase and sale of oyster lands, Laws 1895, pp. 36-39. The state deed is absolute in form, aside from a provision for a reversion in case the lands are abandoned or used for any purpose other than the cultivation of oysters. The present action was instituted to restrain the defendant, his agents, servants, and employees from entering upon or passing over the tide lands in question, either upon foot or by boat, or other water craft, and for damages. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs according to the prayer for their complaint, this appeal is prosecuted." Holding the grant to be valid the court said: "It is . . . contended that inasmuch as the tide lands in controversy are covered by water to a depth of seven or eight feet at high tide, such waters are navigable, and the appellant has a lawful right to pass over the same, notwithstanding the title of the respondents. This contention cannot be sustained. The state deed is absolute in form, and carries with it the right to the exclusive possession and enjoyment of the lands granted, if such a grant was within the competency of the state, and that such a grant was within the competency of the state cannot, at this late day, be controverted. . . . The conveyance by the state of tide lands covered and uncovered by the flow and ebb of the tide is not a substantial impairment of the interest of the public in the navigable waters of the state, and does not interfere with the paramount right of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states."

The right of the state to grant the title to lands under navigable waters for the purpose of having them reclaimed has been sustained in a number of instances. U. S. v. Mission Rock Co. 189 U. S. 391, 23 S. Ct. 606, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 865, affirming 109 Fed. 763, 48 C. C. A. 641; Pacific Gas Imp. Co. v. Ellert, 64 Fed. 421; Sterling v. Jackson, 69 Mich. 488, 37 N. W. 845, 13 Am. St. Rep. 405; Parker v. Taylor, 7 Ore. 435. See also Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 11 S. Ct. 808, 35 U. S. (L. ed.) 428; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 13 S. Ct. 110, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 1018; People v. Mauran, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 389; Rhode Island Motor Co. v. Providence (R. I.) 55 Atl. 696.

A state has the power to grant the title of lands under the waters of a harbor to a municipality. The grant will be construed as devolving the title of the state, as trustee, on the city. Pacific Gas Imp. Co. v. Ellert, 64 Fed. 421; Mobile v. Sullivan Timber Co. 129 Fed. 298, 63 C. C. A. 412, affirmed 187 U. S. 479, 23 S. Ct. 170, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 266. See also Coxe v. State, 144 N. Y. 396, 39 N. E. 400.

Thus in Mobile v. Sullivan Timber Co. supra, the court said: "Our determination with regard to the title of the city must be controlled by the latest and most authoritative decision upon the subject. This is found in the case of Mobile Transp. Co. v. Mobile (decided by the Supreme Court of the United States January 5, 1903) 187 U. S. 479, 23 S. Ct. 170, 47 U. S. (L. ed.) 266. There it is conclusively settled that the state of Alabama, when admitted to the union, became entitled to the soil under the navigable waters below high-water mark within the limits of the state, not previously granted. It is further held in the same case that the legislation of the state conveying to the city of Mobile the shore and soil under Mobile river is not unconstitutional, as impairing the vested rights of owners of grants bordering on Mobile river, for the reason that such grants do not relate to land bordering on tidal streams; and further that, as the state held the lands below high-water mark as trustee for the public, it had the right to devolve the trust upon the city of Mobile. In short, this case adjudicates the title of the lands in controversy under the acts and resolutions of Congress, the ordinances of Alabama, and the acts of the general assembly of the state hereinbefore enumerated. It is difficult, in view of this decision, to understand how any controversy can be maintained as to the title of the city. Many decisions of the supreme court of Alabama are reviewed in the learned opinion of Justice Brown. His conclusions are, as stated, that the title to all lands under tidal waters in Alabama below high-water mark are in the state, and subject to such disposition as that made by the state in this case in behalf of the city of Mobile. He continues: "The status of real estate within a particular jurisdiction is not so much one of contract as of policy, which may be changed at any time by the legislature, provided no vested rights are disturbed. Of course, if riparian proprietors have acquired the title to the property below high-water mark by a grant or prior possession good against the state, they could only be dispossessed by proceedings in eminent domain. The Act of 1867 declared no more than that the rights possessed by the state in the shore and soil under Mobile river were granted to the city. We see nothing objectionable in this act. What the state held, it held as trustee for the public, and it had a right to devolve this trust upon the city of Mobile. What it had not, it could not grant, and the rights of the riparian proprietors were neither enlarged nor restricted by the act." "Upon the whole," the learned justice concludes, "we are of opinion that there is no defect upon the face of the title of the city which the transportation company was entitled to prevail itself of."

LIMITATIONS OF RULE.

A limitation of the doctrine that a state may grant the title to lands under navigable waters was indicated in the case of Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 13 S. Ct. 110, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 1018. It appeared therein that the state of Illinois granted in fee to a railroad company an area of about one thousand acres of submerged lands in Chicago harbor, the act of grant providing that the railroad company should not have the power to convey the lands and that the grant did not authorize obstructions in the harbor or the impairment of navigation. Holding the grant to be invalid the court said: "That the state holds the title to the lands under the navigable waters of Lake Michigan, within its limits, in the same manner that the state holds title to soils under the tide water, by the common law, we have already shown, and that title necessarily carries with it control over the waters above them whenever the lands are subjected to use. But it is a title different in character from that which the state holds in lands intended for sale. It is different from the title which the United States hold in the public lands which are open to pre-emption and sale. It is a title held in trust for the people of the state that they may enjoy the navigation of the waters, carry on commerce over them, and have liberty of fishing therein freed from the obstruction or interference of private parties. The interest of the people in the navigation of the waters and in commerce over them may be improved in many instances by the erection of wharves, docks and piers therein, for which purpose the state may grant parcels of the submerged lands; and, so long as their disposition is made for such purpose, no valid objections can be made to the grants. It is grants of parcels of lands under navigable waters, that may afford foundation for wharves, piers, docks and other structures in aid of commerce, and grants of parcels which, being occupied, do not substantially impair the public interest in the lands and waters remaining, that are chiefly considered and sustained in the adjudged cases as a valid exercise of legislative power consistently with the trust to the public upon which such lands are held by the state. But that is a very different doctrine from the one which would sanction the abdication of the general control of the state over lands under the navigable waters of an entire harbor or bay, or of a sea or lake. Such abdication is not consistent with the exercise of that trust which requires the government of the state to preserve such waters for the use of the public. The trust devolving upon the state for the public, and which can only be discharged by the management and control of property in which the public has an interest, cannot be relinquished by a transfer of the property. The control of the state for the purposes of the trust can never be lost, except as to such parcels as are used in promoting the interests of the public therein, or can be disposed of without any substantial impairment of the public interest in the lands and waters remaining. It is only by observing the distinction between a grant of such parcels for the improvement of the public interest, or which when occupied do not substantially impair the public interest in the lands and waters remaining, and a grant of the whole property in which the public is interested, that the language of the adjudged cases can be reconciled. General language sometimes found in opinions of the courts, expressive of absolute ownership and control by the state of lands under navigable waters, irrespective of any trust as to their use and disposition, must be read and construed with reference to the special facts of the particular cases. A grant of all the lands under the navigable waters of a state has never been adjudged to be within the legislative power; and any attempted grant of the kind would be held, if not absolutely void on its face, as subject to revocation. . . . The harbor of Chicago is of immense value to the people of the state of Illinois in the facilities it affords to its vast and constantly increasing commerce; and the idea that its legislature can deprive the state of control over its beds and waters and place the same in the hands of a private corporation created for a different purpose, one limited to the transportation of passengers and freight between distant points and the city, is a proposition that cannot be defended. . . . It is hardly conceivable that the legislature can divest the state of the control and management of this harbor and vest it absolutely in a private corporation. Surely an act of the legislature transferring the title to its submerged lands and power claimed by the railroad company to a foreign state or nation would be repudiated, without hesitation, as a gross perversion of the trust over the property under which it is held. So would a similar transfer to a corporation of another state. It would not be listened to that the control and management of the harbor of that great city—a subject of concern to the whole people of the state—should thus be placed elsewhere than in the state itself. All the objections which can be urged to such attempted transfer may be urged to a transfer to a private corporation like the railroad company in this case."

So in State v. Gerbing, 56 Fla. 603, 47 So. 353, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 337, it was said: "The rights of the people of the state in the navigable waters and the lands thereunder including the shores or space between ordinary high and low water marks, in the state, are designated for the public welfare, and the state may regulate such rights and the uses of the waters and the lands thereunder for the benefit of the whole people of the state as circumstances may demand, subject of course to the powers of the Congress in the premises. . . . For the purpose of aiding navigation or commerce or encouraging new industries and the development of natural or artificial resources, the state may grant reasonable and limited rights and privileges to individuals to erect wharves, etc., over shallow waters to reach navigable portions of the waters, or to fill in shallow waters adjacent to navigable waters and erect structures thereon for purposes of commerce incidental to navigation on the waters; or the state may grant reasonable and limited privileges for planting and propagating oysters or shell fish on land covered by waters of navigable streams; but such privileges should not unreasonably impair the rights of the whole people of the state in the use of the waters or the lands thereunder for the purposes implied by law. State v. Black River Phosphate Co. 32 Fla. 82, 13 So. 640. The title to lands under navigable waters including the shores or space between ordinary high and low water marks, is held by the state by virtue of its sovereignty in trust for the people of the state for navigation and other useful purposes afforded by the waters over such lands, and the trustees of the internal improvement fund of the state are not authorized to convey the title to lands of this character. The trust with which these lands are held by the state is governmental and cannot be wholly alienated. For the purpose of enhancing and improving the rights and interests of the whole people, the state may by appropriate means grant to individuals, the title to limited portions of the lands, or give limited privileges therein, but not so as to divert them from their proper uses, or so as to relieve the state of the control and regulation of the uses afforded by the lands and waters. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 13 S. Ct. 110 [36 U. S. (L. ed.) 1018]."

A state has no power to convey the title to lands under navigable waters by a grant which virtually turns over to the grantee the entire control of the navigation of the waters conveying the land granted. See Matter of Long Sault Development Co. Ann. Cas. 1915D 56 and note. Nor can a state make a grant of lands under water for purely speculative purposes. Coxe v. State, 144 N. Y. 396, 39 N. E. 400; People v. American Sugar Refining Co. 98 Misc. 703, 163 N. Y. S. 456.

In U. S. v. O'Brien, 170 Fed. 509, it appeared that a state made a sale of shore lands surrounding an island which constituted an Indian reservation. The state constitution contained a clause whereby the state disclaimed all right and title to all lands held by Indians. Holding the sale to be invalid the court said: "It is my opinion that the whole of the Squaxon Island was lawfully reserved for the use of the Indians, and that by the treaty referred to in the bill of complaint, and the laws of the United States, it has always been unlawful for white men to reside upon or occupy any part of said island. The Indians, for whose use the island was reserved, used and occupied the entire island, including the beach and shore, at the date of the enabling act and the adoption of our state constitution, and by the terms of the enabling act, and the compact between the people of this state and the United States government, contained in the constitution, this state entirely disclaimed 'all right and title . . . to all lands . . . owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes.' This disclaimer applies not only to lands owned by the Indians, whether patented or unpatented, but also to all lands held—that is to say, occupied and used—by individual Indians or tribes. It is my opinion that the proposed sale of a rim encircling this island reservation is not only an injustice to the Indians, but an unwarranted exercise of power by officers of the state government, and that the defendants have acquired no rights whatever by virtue of the contracts under which they claim."

In City Land Co. v. Dabney, 70 Ore. 529, 139 Pac. 721, it appeared that the state land board conveyed a tract of land to a grantee on the representation that it was tide land. The land conveyed lay within the harbor lines and craft passed daily over the water covering the lands. A suit was brought by a riparian owner to set aside the deed, and it was held that the suit could be maintained. The court said: "It is true that upon the admission of the state into the Union it was vested with the title to the lands under navigable waters, subject, however, at all times to the right of navigation and fishery. To all intents and purposes the title of the state was burdened with a trust, so to speak, in favor of those two occupations. It would have no right or authority so to dispose of the subjacent lands in a manner calculated to prejudice or impede the exercise of those rights. It was never intended by any of the legislation concerning the alienation of state lands that the state should sell the beds of the navigable streams in a way to interfere with their navigability. The testimony clearly demonstrates that in real truth the land in dispute is nothing more than an inequality in the bed of the river, and that for the most part it is directly in the official route of navigation as established by the general government. The officers of the state composing the state land board were imposed upon by the representation that it constituted tide land, and were led into the error of conveying property in a manner and for a purpose which would act as a direct and permanent impediment to navigation. This the state could not do without violating the trust under which it holds the title to such property, and its grantees could take nothing by such a deed."

In Coxe v. State, 144 N. Y. 396, 39 N. E. 400, it appeared that the state by an act of the legislature gave a corporation the power to reclaim and drain any portion of the wet or overflowed lands and tide water marshes on Staten Island and Long Island, except those included within the corporate limits of a city, and granted the title to the lands which the corporation located for the purpose of reclaiming them. Holding the grant to be invalid the court said: "There is nothing in the enactments to indicate that the grant was for any public purpose and none has been suggested; and if it could be upheld, it is obvious that such a result would establish the principle that a majority in the legislature is competent to convey to a private corporation, for private purposes, the land under all the tide waters within the jurisdiction of the state. . . . The title of the state to the seacoast and the shores of tidal rivers is different from the fee simple which an individual holds to an estate in lands. It is not a proprietary, but a sovereign, right, and it has been frequently said that a trust is engrafted upon this title for the benefit of the public of which the state is powerless to divest itself. . . . Such a grant, therefore, can never constitute a contract between this state and the grantee which is beyond the power of revocation by a subsequent legislature. For every purpose which may be useful, convenient or necessary to the public, the state has the unquestionable right to make grants in fee or conditionally for the beneficial use of the grantee, or to promote commerce according to their terms. . . . But it was never supposed that the state could grant away any of this portion of its domain for mere speculative purposes, or that it could traffic in it like an individual who owned property which he had the right to sell at such price and for such purposes as his immediate wants and interests seemed to require. It is quite conceivable, however, that such grants have been made under such circumstances and for such purposes that, when recalled or revoked, there may arise, in favor of the grantee and against the state, an obligation to restore the consideration paid, or to make good losses incurred in consequence of improvements or expenditures upon the faith of the grant, which the state is bound to discharge in honor and good faith. . . . The act so far as it is attempted to confer upon the company the right of property in the lands and the dominion over the waters designated on the maps, and the power to inclose such parts of the same as it elected to take with dykes and other obstructions to navigation, was obnoxious to that provision of the Federal Constitution which confers upon Congress the exclusive power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce."

Minority Rule.

The power of the state to grant the title to lands under navigable waters has been denied in a number of cases on the ground that the title of the state is in the nature of a trust for the benefit of the people. Bradshaw v. Duluth Imperial Mill Co. 52 Minn. 59, 53 N. W. 1066; State v. West Tennessee Land Co. 127 Tenn. 575, Ann. Cas. 1914B 1043, 158 S. W. 746; Home v. Richards, 4 Call (Va.) 441, 2 Am. Dec. 574; Norfolk City v. Cooke, 27 Grat. (Va.) 430; Mead v. Haynes, 3 Rand. (Va.) 33; Priewe v. Wisconsin State Land, etc. Co. 103 Wis. 537, 79 N. W. 780, 74 Am. St. Rep. 904; Illinois Steel Co. v. Bilot, 109 Wis. 418, 84 N. W. 855, 85 N. W. 402, 83 Am. St. Rep. 905. See also Goodwin v. Thompson, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 209, 54 Am. Rep. 410; Pewaukee v. Savoy, 103 Wis. 271, 79 N. W. 436, 74 Am. St. Rep. 859, 50 L.R.A. 836.

Thus in Bradshaw v. Duluth Imperial Mill Co. supra, the court said: "It is the settled law with us that the rights of the state in navigable waters and their beds are sovereign, and not proprietary, and are held in trust for the public as a highway, and are incapable of alienation."

And in Illinois Steel Co. v. Bilot, 109 Wis. 418, 84 N. W. 855, 85 N. W. 402, 83 Am. St. Rep. 905, it was said: "The title to the beds of all lakes and ponds, and of rivers navigable in fact as well, up to the line of ordinary high-water mark, within the boundaries of the state, became vested in it at the instant of its admission into the Union, in trust to hold the same so as to preserve to the people forever the enjoyment of the waters of such lakes, ponds, and rivers, to the same extent that the public are entitled to enjoy tidal waters at the common law. . . . Whatever concession the state may make without violating the essentials of the trust, it has been held, can properly be made to riparian proprietors. Under that, by long established judicial policy, which has become a rule of property, a qualified title to submerged lands of rivers navigable in fact has been conceded to the owners of the shores. Otherwise the title to lands under all public waters is in the state, and it is powerless to change it. It cannot transfer such title by grant or otherwise nor can title thereto be obtained by adverse possession, at least unless such adverse possession shall continue for the term of forty years. Hence we must presume from the evidence that the title to the land in dispute is where the evidence tends to show it is. We should say in passing that the term 'qualified title' as above used refers to that interest in the beds of navigable streams which has passed to private ownership according to the uniform holdings of this court—a full title subject to the public rights which were incident to the lands forming such beds at the time of the creation of the trust above mentioned. No private ownership has been conceded which displaces or materially affects such public rights. As to them the state has not abdicated and cannot abdicate its trust."

Rule in California.

It is provided by the constitution of California (§ 3, art. 15) that "all tide lands within two miles of any incorporated city or town in this state, and fronting on the waters of any harbor, estuary, bay, or inlet used for purposes of navigation, shall be withheld from grant or sale to private persons, partnerships or corporations." See Koyer v. Miner, 172 Cal. 448, 156 Pac. 1023.

In construing the term "tide lands" it has been said: "For the consideration of the question stated, 'tide lands' as thus used in the constitution will be construed more broadly than in the ordinary signification of lands covered and uncovered by the daily efflux and reflux of the tide. It will be construed to embrace land properly described as submerged lands." San Pedro, etc. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 161 Cal. 610, 119 Pac. 1073, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 686. See to the same effect People v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 731, 93 Pac. 878, 125 Am. St. Rep. 93.

A grant of tide lands within two miles of an incorporated city or town is of course invalid. People v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 731, 93 Pac. 878, 125 Am. St. Rep. 93; San Pedro, etc. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 161 Cal. 610, 119 Pac. 1073, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 686; People v. California Fish Co. 166 Cal. 576, 138 Pac. 79; People v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 166 Cal. 627, 138 Pac. 103; Patton v. Los Angeles, 169 Cal. 521, 147 Pac. 141; People v. Banning, 169 Cal. 542, 147 Pac. 274.

But a grant of tide lands and lands entirely covered by waters made to a city in trust and imposing on it the duty of using the lands granted for the purpose of improving a harbor is not in violation of the constitution. Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co. 118 Cal. 160, 50 Pac. 277; Dalton, etc. Co. v. Oakland, 168 Cal. 463, 143 Pac. 721; Long Beach v. Lisenby (Cal.) 166 Pac. 333. And in Santa Cruz v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 163 Cal. 538, 126 Pac. 362, citing People v. California Fish Co. 166 Cal. 576, 138 Pac. 79, it was said that "when in preparing such tide land for the purpose of navigation, the state finds it necessary to make a seawall and fill in the land between it and the open water and thereby or in some other way for the same purposes excludes some part of such land from use for purposes of navigation, the public use for navigation as to that part becomes divested or abandoned and it becomes proprietary land, which the state can dispose of to private use."

The state has the power to grant the title to tide lands within the limits named, subject however to the rights of the public for the purpose of navigation and fishery. Messenger v. Kingsbury, 158 Cal. 611, 112 Pac. 65; Forestier v. Johnson, 164 Cal. 24, 127 Pac. 156; People v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 166 Cal. 615, 138 Pac. 94; People v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 166 Cal. 627, 138 Pac. 103. See also Santa Cruz v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 163 Cal. 538, 126 Pac. 362.

In Bolsa Land Co. v. Burdick, 151 Cal. 254, 90 Pac. 532, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 275, it was held that the state could convey to a private person the title to tide lands and lands covered by tides and was not called on to preserve the navigability of the waters covering the lands for the mere purpose of enabling the public to shoot wild game thereon.

In People v. California Fish Co. 166 Cal. 576, 138 Pac. 79, the right of the state to grant the title to lands under tide waters was summarized as follows: "1. The tide lands are, and from the beginning of our government have been, dedicated to public use for purposes of navigation and fishery. 2. The title to these lands is, by the people, vested in the state in trust for said public uses. The administration and execution of this trust is committed by the constitution to the legislative department, subject to certain expressed reservations and restrictions. 3. The powers of the state as trustee are not expressed. They are commensurate with the duties of the trust. Every trustee has the implied power to do everything necessary to the execution and administration of the trust. 4. As the state has the powers necessary to the execution and administration of the trust, it follows that it may dispose of these lands in the administration of the trust in such manner as the interests of navigation may require. One of the duties of the trust is to adapt the land to the use for navigation in the best manner. If, in so adapting the tide lands for this use, it is found necessary or advisable, in aid of the use, to cut off portions of it from access to navigable water, so that they become unavailable for navigation, the state has the power to exclude such portions from the public use, and, to that extent, revoke the original dedication. 5. When this has been done in the regular administration of the trust, the land thus excluded from use for navigation may become proprietary land, not subject to the public use, and it may then be alienated irrevocably by the state for private use to private individuals. 6. When the state, in the exercise of its discretion as trustee, has decided that portions of the tide land should be thus excluded from navigation and sold to private use, its determination is conclusive upon the courts; but statutes purporting to authorize an abandonment of such public use will be carefully scanned to ascertain whether or not such was the legislative intention, and that intent must be clearly expressed or necessarily implied. It will not be implied if any other inference is reasonably possible. And if any interpretation of the statute is reasonably possible which would not involve a destruction of the public use or an intention to terminate it in violation of the trust, the courts will give the statute such interpretation. 7. The provisions of the political code authorizing the sale of the swamp and tide lands show clearly how they were enacted without any consideration of the interest or necessities of navigation over tide lands, that they are not intended as an exercise of the power of administering the public trust upon which the state holds the tide land, that they were not enacted in pursuance of a legislative determination that such lands were not necessary for navigation, or as a decision that the interests of navigation required that they be excluded from the public use, or in the interest of navigation. If they had been so intended, they would authorize the alienation of practically all the tide lands without any provision for the protection of the public use and would result in its utter destruction. They can be given some effect if construed to authorize the sale of such land subject to the public easements, the purchaser to be without authority to interfere with such use, or with the further administration thereof by or on behalf of the state. They are reasonably susceptible of that interpretation; hence they will be so construed. The holder of a patent from the state under these laws will have the naked title to the soil. 8. Section 2 of article XV of the state constitution deprives the legislature of power to dispose of the tide lands fronting upon navigable water so as to entitle the grantee to destroy or interfere with the public easement for navigation. It also to that extent repeals all laws which theretofore may have purported to authorize such alienation. No payment of purchase money to the state for any of the tide land in question was made until after the adoption of the constitution in 1879. Hence it is all subject to the restriction just stated. Therefore, regardless of the question of the true construction of the political code provisions purporting to authorize the sale of tide lands, the patents under which the several defendants claim tide lands are subject to the constitutional restriction and do not deprive the state of its power as sovereign trustee to adapt and improve these lands for navigation as it may see fit. This provision, however, does not deprive the legislature of power to improve the water-front and irrevocably alienate such tide land as may thereby be rendered inaccessible and useless for navigation. 9. If any part of the tide land in controversy was open to sale when the sales thereof were made, the proper judgment would be that the defendants claiming under such patents own the soil, subject to the easement of the public for the public uses of navigation and commerce, and to the right of the state, as administrator and controller of these public uses and the public trust therefor to enter upon and possess the same for the preservation and advancement of the public uses and to make such changes and improvements as may be deemed advisable for those purposes. It is to be understood, of course, that if the state has sold tide lands subject to the public easement, prior to making improvements thereon for navigation, as it may do, it cannot, upon putting in force a plan for the subsequent improvement thereof, retake the absolute title without compensation. The purchaser will continue to hold the servient estate, after as well as before the improvement, and if at any time the public easement and use is lawfully and permanently abandoned, the purchaser will then have the absolute and complete estate in the land. And before any such improvement is made by the state, he may use the property as he sees fit, subject to the power of the state to abate any nuisance he may create thereon, and to remove any purpresture he may erect thereon. . . . One of the patents in another of the series of cases (People v. Banning, 166 Cal. 630, 138 Pac. 100), being tide land location No. 57, includes within its lines a part of the channel leading up to the old Wilmington wharf and embracing land which is and always has been submerged. As we are considering here the main questions involved in all the cases, it is proper to say that the tide land laws do not authorize a sale of land below low tide in any case. So far as such patent, or any other of the patents, embrace such land, they convey no title whatever, the officers who executed them being without power under these statutes to sell or convey lands of that character."

Prior to the adoption of the article of the constitution hereinbefore quoted it was held that the state could make a grant of lands covered by navigable waters subject to the rights of the public to navigation and fishery. Eldridge v. Cowell, 4 Cal. 80; Ward v. Mulford, 32 Cal. 365. See also Taylor v. Underhill, 40 Cal. 473; Upham v. Hosking, 62 Cal. 250; Northern R. Co. v. Jordan, 87 Cal. 23, 25 Pac. 273.

Rule in Illinois.

In Illinois it has been said with respect to lands under navigable waters within the boundaries of the state that "the state has no power to barter and sell the lands as the United States sells its public lands, but the state holds the title in trust, in its sovereign capacity, for the people of the entire state." Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Chicago, 173 Ill. 471, 50 N. E. 1104, 53 L.R.A. 408, affirmed 176 U. S. 646, 20 S. Ct. 509, 44 U. S. (L. ed.) 622.

But it has been said that the state may appropriate the submerged lands for any purposes within the trust for which they were held. Bliss v. Ward, 198 Ill. 104, 64 N. E. 705. And a grant of the submerged lands under the waters of Lake Michigan to the commissioners of Lincoln Park has been upheld. People v. Kirk, 162 Ill. 138, 45 N. E. 830, 53 Am. St. Rep. 277; Lincoln Park Com'rs v. Fahrney, 250 Ill. 256, 95 N. E. 194.

In the case first cited, in discussing the power of the state to convey reclaimed lands which were originally covered by the waters of Lake Michigan, the court said: "Was the legislature clothed with the power to convey reclaimed lands which were originally covered by the waters of Lake Michigan? . . . But it is said, if the legislature has the power to dispose of the submerged lands in question under the pretense of constructing a boulevard two hundred feet wide, why could it not give away any indefinite quantity of the submerged lands of the lake? It is not claimed here that the legislature has the power to dispose of submerged lands of the lake in any case where the disposition would materially interfere with the navigation of the lake for the purposes of commerce and the right of fishery, and it may be conceded that such power is governmental and does not exist. Indeed, the first section of the act in question in direct terms prohibits an extension of the boulevard in such a manner as to interfere with the navigation of the lake for the purpose of commerce. Upon looking into the evidence it will be found that the waters of the lake west of the driveway as constructed were not adapted to navigation and were not used to any great extent for that purpose. The learned judge before whom this case was tried, in speaking of the evidence on this branch of the case, said: 'It is true that in some cases tugs, small craft for carrying passengers in a small way to and from the government breakwater and to other points near this drive along the lake, small sailing yachts and boats for pleasure, have, from time to time, passed over these waters, and that a very considerable portion of these waters were, before being filled, deep enough to be navigated by small vessels actually engaged in trade and commerce between the port of Chicago and other ports on the lake; but it is also a further fact, shown by the evidence, that all such small vessels are a very insignificant proportion of the whole number of vessels engaged in trade and commerce to and from the port of Chicago, and that these small vessels never have passed over these waters, because, in going to and from the harbor of Chicago, these waters are outside of the usual course, and are considered dangerous by sailors on the lake. Only a very small portion of all the vessels arriving and departing from Chicago ever come within the government breakwater off this shore, and when they do they invariably pass quite near the breakwater, which is about fifteen hundred feet easterly from the easterly line of said proposed drive, in order to avoid the shoal water.' From the foregoing it is apparent that the construction of the boulevard authorized by the act will not materially interfere with or obstruct the navigation of the lake."

Rule in Maryland.

In Maryland the rule that the state has the power to grant the title to lands under navigable waters subject to the right of the public to use the waters for navigation in fishing was recognized by the early cases. Baltimore v. McKim, 3 Bland 453; Wilson v. Inloes, 11 Gill & J. 352; Browne v. Kennedy, 5 Har. & J. 195, 9 Am. Dec. 503; Chapman v. Hoskins, 2 Md. Ch. 485.

In Day v. Day, 22 Md. 530, it was held that a statute prohibiting the issue of any patent of land covered by navigable waters should be so construed as to apply to all land below high water mark.

STATE BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS

v.

TERRILL.

Utah Supreme Court—November 24, 1916.

48 Utah 647; 161 Pac. 451.

Physicians and Surgeons — What Constitutes Practice of Medicine — Massage Treatment.

The evidence is held to show that defendant practiced medicine without a license, as he undertook to examine, diagnose, and prescribe for all ailments, as well as to do general massaging.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

A decree, enjoining defendant from diagnosing, treating, operating on, prescribing, or advising for any person afflicted with any mental or physical ailment or condition, from which he expects to or does receive a pecuniary compensation, or from practicing medicine within the state until he shall have received a certificate permitting him to practice medicine, does not prevent him from doing the business of an ordinary masseur, since it is in the words of Laws 1911, c. 93, prohibiting practicing medicine without a license.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Laws 1911, c. 93, prohibiting practicing medicine without a license, does not concern systems of treatments, but merely prohibits anyone from treating diseases who has not the requisite qualifications.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from District Court, Davis county: HARRIS, Judge.

Action by Board of Medical Examiners of State of Utah, plaintiff, against G. W. Terrill, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

George Halverson for appellant.

A. R. Barnes, E. V. Higgins and G. A. Iverson for respondent.

[648] STRAUP, C. J.—The defendant is enjoined from practicing medicine without a license, and appeals.

He held himself out as a "scientific manipulator." He claims no knowledge of medicine, nor of anatomy, physiology, or hygiene, nor of any of the subjects enumerated in the statute (Laws Utah 1911, c. 93), knowledge of which one, to take an examination and obtain a license, must possess, and concerning which one must hold a degree or diploma from a legally chartered medical school requiring such subjects. The defendant, however, claims to be merely a masseur, and the right only to give massage treatments by rubbing and manipulating to relax the muscles of his patients and to accelerate the flow of blood, what popularly is known as ordinary massaging. If that were all the defendant did, it might well be conceded that he did not practice medicine within the meaning of the statute (Laws Utah 1911, c. 93), and hence needed no license, and ought not to have been restrained.

But the record shows that he undertook to do, and did, much more. He advertised as a "scientific manipulator," maintained an office, and there received patients suffering from all kinds of ailments; and, in response to calls, visited and treated them at their homes. As testified to, he, for compensation, manipulated the muscles of the abdomen of one suffering from appendicitis, and similarly manipulated others suffering from ulcers or cancer of the stomach; the body of a girl, who, as testified to, "had every indication of typhoid fever," and by such manipulation claimed to have reduced the patient's temperature from 103 to 98 degrees, and told the parents that "if they wanted to, to give the girl a little castor oil and after that citrate of magnesia," and manipulated others for rheumatism. By the same process he treated a little boy suffering from tuberculosis, or other disease, of the hip. The boy's limb, by a regular physician, had been placed in a frame and cast to relieve the strain from the hip. This the defendant removed, and gave the boy treatment by manipulation, which, as testified to, so improved the boy that he was soon able to walk and to [649] operate an automobile. By manipulation he also treated a baby, who, as testified to, "the doctor said," had leakage of the heart and bowel complications. He was called to visit, and treated, a woman who was sick and unconscious. He restored consciousness by rubbing and manipulating the woman's back, sides and stomach. The wife of a dentist was treated by a regular physician for tonsillitis. She grew worse, so was the testimony. Then the attending physician diagnosed the case as tuberculosis of the throat, but later said that he was mistaken in that. She suffered from severe pains back of the ear and in the spine. The attending physician advised consultation with a specialist. Without the knowledge or consent of the physician, and in his absence, the defendant was called in. As testified to, "he inquired as to her feelings and how long she had been sick and where she was suffering pain, and then pulled off his coat and began to manipulate in the region of her neck and spine for fifteen or twenty minutes. She felt relieved. The next morning, when the attending physician arrived, he found her feeling and looking better. The morning after that she was so much better that the attending physician said that it was not necessary for him to call any more. The defendant told the husband that he had better give his wife some juniper root, which was done. Upon the defendant giving the woman several other treatments, her fever disappeared, and she was free from pain. When the defendant visited her, she was confined in bed for two weeks. Now she was able to get up and walk about. She continued her treatments at her house and at the defendant's office. The defendant, with his hands and fingers, simply manipulated the neck and back and the spine." Another patient, suffering from a sprained and swollen ankle, went to the defendant's office for treatment. Upon exhibiting the foot the defendant told him to remove his shoe and roll up his pant leg. After examining the foot, the defendant told him that he had a broken arch. He rubbed it, bathed it with some sort of oil or liniment out of a bottle, and then bandaged it. Other instances were testified to where persons suffering from ailments visited the defendant at his office, or he at their homes, and gave them treatments.

[650] The doing of these things clearly was practicing medicine within the meaning of the statute. Laws Utah 1911, c. 93, p. 135; State v. Yee Foo Lun, 45 Utah 531, 147 Pac. 488; Board of Medical Examiners v. Freenor, 47 Utah 430, Ann. Cas. 1917E 1156, 154 Pac. 941; State v. Erickson, 47 Utah 452, 154 Pac. 948. There can be no doubt of that, and so the court found. But it is claimed the decree is too broad, in that it, as is urged, prohibits the defendant from doing merely ordinary massaging. The decree is that the defendant be—"restrained, prohibited and enjoined from diagnosing, treating, operating upon, prescribing or advising for any person or persons within the state of Utah afflicted with any mental or physical ailment or afflicted with any abnormal, mental or physical condition, from which person or persons he expects to or has received or does thereafter receive a pecuniary compensation, or from practicing medicine within the state of Utah, until said defendant shall have received a certificate from the board of medical examiners of the state of Utah permitting him to practice medicine within said state."

Comparing the statute with the decree, it is seen that the decree but follows the language of the statute, and forbids the defendant from doing what the statute itself forbids. If the statute forbids mere massage without a license, then also does the decree. If the statute does not, then the decree does not.

As already indicated, we think mere "massaging," as that term popularly is understood, is not, within the meaning of the statute, "diagnosing, treating, operating upon or prescribing or advising for any physical or mental ailment or abnormal condition of another." People v. Hettiger, 150 Ill. App. 448; People v. Gordon, 194 Ill. 560, 62 N. E. 858, 88 Am. St. Rep. 165. Thus, ordinary massaging is not within the terms of the decree, and hence the defendant is not forbidden doing that. Mere massaging is no more forbidden than mere nursing. It is easy enough for a nurse, or a masseur, to keep within his sphere and not encroach upon the law by assuming or undertaking to diagnose, treat, operate upon, prescribe, or advise for ailments. But the trouble with the defendant is this: To the public he held himself out as "a scientific manipulator," and as willing and ready to receive [651] and treat patients suffering from all sorts of ailments, but when summoned into court declares himself to be but a humble masseur, giving only massage treatments and nothing more. Let him be to the public what he claims to be in court, and let him refrain from diagnosing, treating, prescribing, and advising for ailments of others and confine himself to merely "massaging" as that term popularly is understood. Certainly one may employ a trained nurse, who, for compensation, and without a license, may accept such employment, and, without offending may, in attendance upon a patient, render such service as ordinarily is rendered by a trained nurse; but she may not diagnose, treat, prescribe, or advise for ailments in the sense that one holding a certificate or license to practice medicine may do. That also is true of a masseur. But the defendant, though merely a masseur, claimed the right to do, without a license, all that one holding a license is permitted to do. Though a mere masseur, professing no knowledge of the human system, or of diseases to which it is subject, the defendant, nevertheless, undertook and claimed the right to treat about all kinds of diseases. Without any knowledge of anatomy, or surgery, he undertook to treat a broken or fractured bone of the foot; without any knowledge of pediatrics, he undertook to treat children for leakage of the heart and abdominal affections; without any knowledge of laryngology he undertook to treat tonsillitis, or throat affections; without any knowledge of anatomy, surgery, bacteriology, pathology, or histology, or of other scientific subjects, undertook to treat a boy for hip disease and patients for appendicitis and rheumatism. If a practice of that kind is to be permitted, then may we as well go back to the days when surgery was performed by the barber and the healing art administered by the Indian powwow.

The object of the statute is to protect the sick and suffering and the community against the unlearned and incompetent who hold themselves out as being possessed of peculiar skill in the treatment of diseases, but who are ignorant of the human system and of the diseases to which it is subject. As we said in the Freenor Case we may well again say here, that the [652] law is not concerned with the question whether one system of treatment is as good as or better than another, or what particular treatment should be administered, or what system employed. But "it is concerned with the question that, before any one shall undertake, no matter by what system, to diagnose, treat, operate upon, or prescribe or advise for, any physical or mental ailment or condition of another for a fee or other consideration, he shall possess the learning and skill required by the statute, and produce a degree or diploma from a college meeting the requirements enumerated in the statute, and successfully pass an examination before the board, showing his competency. When he does that, then he may practice whatever system he may consider the most efficacious, or do that in a given case which he thinks will produce the best result. Until he does that he cannot practice at all."

We are therefore of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed, with costs. Such is the order.

Frick and McCarty, JJ., concur.

NOTE.

It is held in the reported case that while massage treatment does not of itself constitute the practice of medicine, yet if a masseur holds himself out to the public as competent to diagnose and cure disease and administers massage treatment in pursuance of that pretension he thereby engages in the practice of medicine. Massage treatment of disease is discussed in the notes to Germany v. State, Ann. Cas. 1913C 477, and Com. v. Zimmerman, Ann. Cas. 1916A 858. See also the recent case of Board of Medical Examiners v. Freenor, Ann. Cas. 1917E 1156.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY

v.

HELPS.

England—House of Lords—November 30, 1917.

[1918] A. C. 141.

Workmen's Compensation Acts — Average Weekly Earnings — Tips of Railroad Porter.

In computing the average weekly earnings of a railroad porter for the purpose of awarding compensation under the workmen's compensation act the tips received by him as an incident of his service are to be included as a part of his earnings.

[See note at end of this case.]

[141] Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal affirming an award of the judge of the Bath County Court under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906.

[142] The respondent was employed by the appellants, the Great Western Railway Company, as a passenger porter at their station at Bath. On September 23, 1916, he sustained injuries by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. His average weekly wages amounted to 1l. 5s. 10d. In addition he received gratuities or "tips" from passengers on the railway amounting on the average to 12s. a week. The respondent claimed that the amount which he received in tips should be taken into account in arriving at his average weekly earnings for the purpose of compensation under the Act; that his average weekly earnings in the employment were accordingly 1l. 17s. 10d., and that the compensation to which he was entitled during period of total incapacity should be calculated at the rate of 18s. 11d., i. e. 50 per cent of 1l. 17s. 10d. a week. The appellants contended that the average weekly earnings of the respondent in their employment amounted to 1l. 5s. 10d. and no more, and they admitted liability to pay the respondent 50 per cent of that sum, namely 12s. 11d.

On January 5, 1917, the respondent filed a request for arbitration for the purpose of having this question determined.

The facts found by the learned county court judge were as follows: Up to January 1, 1913, there was a rule by which the porters of the Great Western Railway Company were bound forbidding them to take tips. That rule was rescinded on that date and the following rule was substituted for it: "No servant of the company is allowed to solicit gratuities from passengers or other persons." The taking of tips by porters on the Great Western Railway had been going on practically unrestricted for years and the giving and receiving of tips had been open and notorious, and the learned judge found as a fact that this practice had been sanctioned by the company. The amount of wages which a man in any particular grade received was not affected by the tips he might obtain from travellers. There were three different classes of station on the line: first class, second class, and third class—Paddington was a first-class station and Bath a second-class station—and the man's wages depended, not upon the amount of tips he received, but upon the station at which he was located. The bigger the station the more wages he received and the more tips, but tips were not taken into consideration when a man was put at one or other of the stations. Upon these facts [143] the learned county court judge held that this case was covered by Penn v. Spiers [1908] 1 K. B. 766, 14 Ann. Cas. 335, and that the tips received by the respondent were earned in his employment, and he awarded him compensation on this basis. This award was affirmed by the Court of Appeals (Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., Banks, L. J., and Warrington, L. J.

Schiller, K. C., and Cotes-Predy, for appellants.

Holman Gregory, K. C., and Wethered for respondent.

L. B. Page, solicitor for appellants.

Church, Adams, Prior & Balmer, for Arthur E. Withy, Bath, solicitors for respondent.

[144] LORD DUNEDIN.—My Lords, this is an exceedingly clear case. The facts are simple. The respondent was a passenger porter at a station at Bath, and in his usual avocation as a porter he was in the habit of getting tips from passengers; he was injured in the course of his employment by an accident arising out of his employment, and it is not denied that he is entitled to compensation; but the controversy between the parties is whether, in estimating this compensation, there is to be taken into account, not only the weekly wage which he gets from the company, but also such sum as represents his average takings in this matter of tips.

My Lords, it was only a few weeks ago that I had occasion in this House, in the case of the Woodilee Coal Co. v. McNeill [1918] A. C. 43, to point out that compensation which is directed to be paid by the employer to a workman who is injured by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment under s. 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act has its natural meaning—that is to say, something that is to be paid which makes up for the loss that the man has sustained. It is quite true that the full measure of the compensation is afterwards cut down by several rules, because the compensation which is directed to be paid under the first section is not compensation in general, but is compensation in accordance with the First Schedule, and when we go to the First Schedule we find certain things which, so to speak, cut down the compensation. But when we go to the First Schedule we find a set of rules there for the computation which has [145] the phrases "earnings," and "average weekly earnings," and it is upon a computation based upon earnings and average weekly earnings that a sum is arrived at. The whole point, therefore, is, do these tips fall within the statutory expression of "earnings?" If you were to ask a person in ordinary common parlance what this porter earned, the answer would be: "Well, I will tell you what he gets; he gets so much wages from his employers, and he gets on an average so much in tips."

My Lords, it has been sought in the argument addressed for the appellants to limit the meaning of "earnings" to what the workman gets by what I may call direct contract from his employers. The simple answer is that the statute does not say so; it uses the general term "earnings" instead of the term "wages" or the expression "what he gets from his employer," and as a matter of fact the employer, in a case where there is a known practice of giving tips, obviously gets the man for rather less direct wages than he would if there was not that other source of remuneration to the man when he is in his post. More than that, in this case the employer is absolutely party and privy to the whole arrangement. The learned arbitrator found as a fact "That the giving and receiving of these tips has been open and notorious. I find as a fact that they have been sanctioned by the employers." Now that fact found by the arbitrator could only be challenged on one of two grounds—either if it was founded upon some erroneous legal proposition which underlay it, or if it was a fact which had no evidence in the case to support it. It is quite obvious that neither of those objections can be stated in this case against the finding, and therefore the finding rules. The result is that these tips are part of the man's ordinary earnings.

My Lords, I entirely go with the decision of the Court of Appeal in the case of Penn v. Spiers [1908] 1 K. B. 766, 770, 14 Ann. Cas. 335, which was decided in 1908, and I would especially also commend the very careful limitation that is laid down in that case by the Master of the Rolls where he says: "To avoid misconception, we desire to state that nothing in this judgment extends to 'tips' or gratuities (a) which are illicit;

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—71.

(b) which involve or encourage a neglect or breach of duty on the part of the recipient to his employer; or (c) which are casual and [146] sporadic and trivial in amount." There is here, as I have already pointed out, a direct finding which shows that (c) is excluded in this case.

As regards the subsequent case of Skailes [1911] 1 K. B. 360, not only do I find that the majority of the Court adhered to the judgment in Penn [1908] 1 K. B. 766, 770, 14 Ann. Cas. 335, but the dissentient member of the Court, Fletcher Moulton L. J., dissents not because he does not agree with Penn [1908] 1 K. B. 766, 770, 14 Ann. Cas. 335,—indeed he was a party to that judgment himself—but because, the question there being upon s. 13, what was the true meaning of "remuneration," he held that "remuneration" and "earnings" were not synonymous terms, whereas the other learned judges held that they were.

My Lords, I think the appeal should be dismissed.

LORD ATKINSON.—My Lords, I concur, and I have nothing to add.

LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.—My Lords, I concur.

LORD SUMNER.—My Lords, I concur.

LORD PARMOOR.—My Lords, I think that the true effect of Mr. Schiller's argument would be to limit earnings to the amount which an employee is entitled to claim under or in consequence of his contract of service. I use those two words because Mr. Schiller used them. I think that this construction of the Workmen's Compensation Act is not accurate, and that the word "earnings" is not so limited in its meaning. If it is not so limited, then the question arises whether notorious tips, such as are received by a railway porter, should be taken into account. It was within the competence of the arbitrator to find that the tips in question were earned by the applicant in his employment, and that appears to me to be a finding which settles the matter in this case.

The history of these tips points in the same direction. It is quite accurately stated by the Master of the Rolls in his judgment in these words: "At one time, and for a good many years, the Great Western Railway Company had a rule which said that no gratuity is allowed to be taken from passengers or other persons by any servant of the company. It was found that that rule was [147] habitually disregarded; it was a mere waste of paper; and in 1913 new rules were passed. The old one was abolished, and there is this one now: that no servant of the company is allowed to solicit gratuities from passengers or other persons."

My Lords, I should like to associate myself with the caution expressed by the noble and learned Lord on the woolsack, that the decision in this case is applicable to tips which are notorious and well known, and not to tips which are casual and sporadic and trivial in amount.

Order of the Court of Appeal affirmed and appeal dismissed with costs.

NOTE.

Tips as Part of Earnings or Wages.

In Penn v. Spiers [1908] 1 K. B. 766, 14 Ann. Cas. 335, it was held that the tips of a waiter were to be included in computing his average weekly earnings for the purpose of an award under the workmen's compensation act. That decision is approved, and the doctrine applied to the tips of a porter, in the reported case, which affirms 86 L. J. K. B. 1006, [1917] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 199, 33 Times L. Rep. 366, 61 Sol. J. 490. To the same effect, see Knott v. Tingle, 4 B. W. C. C. 55.

The same result was reached in what is apparently the only American case passing on the point. Sloat v. Rochester Taxicab Co. 177 App. Div. 57, 163 N. Y. S. 904, wherein, referring to the tips of a taxicab driver, the court said: "The employee could not have received the tips if the employer had not put him in the way of getting them, and we may well conclude that the tips were an advantage received from the employer similar in effect to board, lodging, or rent furnished in addition to the money wages paid. Many times a guest at a hotel, a passenger upon a sleeper, or a person receiving service from the employee of another, is glad to recompense a pleasing manner or an extra service by a reasonable tip; but according to the present custom tips are not usually the voluntary act of the person who gives them. The employee, with the knowledge and consent of the employer, furnishes a service which compels the payment of a tip, and if the tip is not paid the service is so grudgingly and unsatisfactorily given that the person served is willing to pay it the next time. The person rendering the service considers that the tip is his as matter of right and involves no particular favor; an extra large tip may be appreciated, but the ordinary tip is considered a payment of money actually due. The usual tips have come to be considered a part of the cost of the entertainment at a hotel or upon a sleeper or public conveyance, and it is realized both by the person paying and receiving them that it is a part of the wages, which the employer compels the person served to pay. In effect, therefore, the employer, and not the employee alone, is benefited by the tip usually paid. It is common knowledge that porters on sleeping cars are employed at inadequate wages, and that the employer and employee recognize that the great part of the service rendered by the employee is to be paid by the patrons of the company. The same is true as to waiters in the restaurants and the attendants at the hat stands, the bell boys, and others serving patrons at hotels. The tip is so usual and the amount so uniform that the employer and employee realize about how much in addition to the tips it will be necessary for the employer to pay the employee to give him reasonable compensation. The whole theory of tipping, as at present understood in the usual practice, is a payment made in order to get reasonable service, and is an exaction made or permitted by the employer, so that his patrons shall help him pay the wages which is fairly due from him to his employee. The custom and the manner in which the payment of tips is enforced and practiced leads inevitably to the conclusion that in substance the tips received are a part of the wages of the employee, and are advantages received by the employee from the employer as a part recompense for services rendered. The court should treat these tips in the same manner in which the employer and employee treat them, as a part of the compensation to be received by the employee for the services rendered the employer, a part of the wages, a part of the average annual earnings of the employee."

AETNA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

v.

TAYLOR.

Arkansas Supreme Court—March 19, 1917.

128 Ark. 155; 193 S. W. 540.

Actions — Review — Special Administrator.

An action the cause of which survives may on death of plaintiff at once be revived in the name of a special administrator; there being no general administrator or executor.

Accident Insurance — Cause of Death — Burden of Proof.

It being shown in an action on a policy insuring against death from external, violent, and accidental means that death came from external and violent means, and this in connection with the presumption against suicide, making a prima facie case, instructing that plaintiff did not have to prove death did not result from suicide is not error.

[See note at end of this case.]

Attorneys — Allowance of Fees — Amount.

An attorney's fee of $1,000 allowed plaintiff recovering $8,000 on an accident policy is reasonable.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson county: SOBRELLS, Judge.

Action by Dan Taylor, plaintiff, against Aetna Life Insurance Company, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. AFFIRMED.

[156] This is an action by an administrator to recover on a policy of accident insurance.

The plaintiff alleges that the Aetna Life Insurance Company insured Edgar P. Sears in the sum of $5,000 against death resulting directly and independently of all other causes, from bodily injuries effected solely through external, violent and accidental means. That the policy itself and the accumulations from renewals amounted to $8,000, and that Ella S. Sears, the wife of the insured, was the beneficiary.

[157] That on the evening of November 25, 1914, during the life of the policy, Edgar P. Sears received a pistol wound in the head at the hands of an unknown person which resulted in his immediate death.

In its answer, defendant denied that the death of the insured was accidental within the meaning of the policy. It avers that by the terms of the policy it did not agree to insure Sears against death from his own intentional act. The answer further alleges that Sears committed suicide by shooting himself, and that no person other than himself was responsible in any manner for his death. The material facts are as follows:

Edgar P. Sears had carried an accident policy with the defendant company for sixteen years prior to his death. The policy which was in force at the time of his death insured him against disability or death resulting, directly and independently of all other causes, from bodily injuries effected solely through external, violent and accidental means, suicide (sane or insane) not included. The policy was for $5,000 and contained a clause for an increase of the amount of the policy by consecutive renewals until the accumulations should amount to 50 per cent of the principal sum.

The insured was found dead in the city of Pine Bluffs on the morning of the 26th of November, 1914. His death was the result of a gunshot wound through his head, which, the physicians who examined his body testified, caused immediate death. The bullet went into his head about an inch in front and above the right eye and came out about one inch and a half above and behind the left ear. There were no powder marks or burns of any nature on his body; his flesh was not charred, nor was his hair singed. Sears was a good sized man, weighing about two hundred pounds. His body was found near a cotton platform and a folding pocket-book with some of his papers in it was lying on a bale of cotton on the platform. He was lying on his back with one leg straight out and the other drawn up. His left arm was lying down by his side [158] and his right arm was lying over his breast with his hand on a 38 caliber pistol. The pistol had been fired twice. The ground was dusty and there was no evidence of a struggle or even of any other tracks around there.

It was also shown by the defendant that the insured had formerly been a man of means and had always made a good deal of money until about a year before his death, when misfortune overtook him. The defendant's evidence also tended to show that the insured was making very little money just prior to his death and had been unable to even pay his board; that he was drinking heavily and was very much depressed. Other circumstances tending to show death by his own hand were adduced in evidence.

The testimony on the part of the plaintiff tended to show that the deceased had not been drinking heavily prior to his death; that he was in good spirits and had sent his wife a small amount of money, writing a cheerful letter.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed.

M. Danaher and Palmer Danaher for appellant.

Gustin, Gillette & Brayton and Taylor, Jones & Taylor for appellee.

HART, J. (after stating the facts).—This action was commenced by Ella S. Sears, the beneficiary named in the policy. During the pendency of the action and before the case was tried she died and the suit was revived in the name of Dan Taylor, as special administrator of her estate. This was done over the objection of the defendant. The motion to revive was accompanied by the affidavit of three persons showing that Ella S. Sears had died at Salt Lake City, Utah, and that no administration upon her estate had been had. There was no error in the action of the court in this regard.

In Anglin v. Cravens, 76 Ark. 122, 88 S. W. 533, the court said: "When the plaintiff dies during the pendency of the action, any person interested in the further prosecution thereof may have a revivor in the name of the administrator or executor, if there be such, and the right of action be [159] one that survives in favor of the personal representative; and if there be no general administrator or executor, the revivor shall be in the name of a special administrator appointed by the court in which the action is pending. The order to revive may be made forthwith—as soon as the court in which the action is pending convenes after the death of the plaintiff, and must be made within one year after that time, except by consent of parties. The limitation of time in the statute applies equally where there is no general administrator or executor as where there is one, because in such event the persons interested may have a revivor in the name of a special administrator."

(1) Again, in Keffer v. Stuart, 127 Ark. 498, 193 S. W. 83, the court held that under our statute when a plaintiff dies the revivor may be made in the name of his representatives forthwith, whether the defendant consents to it or not. The court further said that the statute does not require that the defendant be consulted until after the expiration of a year from the time when the order of the revivor might have been first made, but that after that time, the order of revivor could not be made without the consent of the defendant.

The court also gave at the request of the plaintiff, among others, the following instructions:

"1. If you believe from the evidence that the deceased came to his death as the result of a pistol shot fired by some person other than himself, your verdict will be for plaintiff.

"2. The burden is upon the defendant insurance company to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the deceased committed suicide, and unless you so find, your verdict will be for the plaintiff."

It is insisted that the court erred in giving instruction No. 2.

(2) The burden was on the plaintiff to establish that the death of the insured resulted directly and independently of all other causes, from bodily injuries effected solely through external, violent and accidental [160] means; but he was not required to prove that the death of the insured did not result from suicide, which by the terms of the policy would relieve the company from liability thereunder.

(3-4) When the plaintiff proved that the insured was found dead with a pistol wound through his head and that this caused his death, he had made out a prima facie case under the policy. The reason is that there is a presumption that one does not commit suicide. Such a presumption being one of evidence, stands until overthrown by evidence. As stated by Judge Agnew in Allen v. Willard, 57 Pa. St. 374, "The natural instinct which leads men in their sober senses to avoid injury and preserve life is an element of evidence. In all questions touching the conduct of men, motive, feeling and natural instincts are allowed to have their weight and to constitute evidence for the consideration of courts and juries."

(5) The defendant claimed that the insured had committed suicide, which is made an exception to the risk of the policy. This was a defense and the law cast upon the company the burden of proving it.

The policy insures against death to Sears by external, violent and accidental means. It is made subject to a condition that the defendant is not liable in case of the suicide of the insured. The occurrence of this condition operates to defeat the policy, and this fact should be shown by the party relying on it. 1 Cyc. 289; 1 Corpus Juris, §§ 278 and 284, pp. 495 and 496; 14 R. C. L. § 416, pp. 1235 and 1236; Travellers Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 8 S. Ct. 1360, 32 U. S. (L. ed.) 308; Coburn v. Travelers Ins. Co. 145 Mass. 226, 13 N. E. 604; Starr v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 41 Wash. 199, 83 Pac. 113, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 636, and case note; Cronkhite v. Travelers Ins. Co. 75 Wis. 116, 43 N. W. 731, 17 Am. St. Rep. 184; Meadows v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 129 Mo. 76, 31 S. W. 578, 50 Am. St. Rep. 427; Fetter v. Fidelity, etc. Co. 174 Mo. 256, 73 S. W. 592, 97 Am. St. Rep. 560, 61 L.R.A. 459; Accident Ins. Co. of North America v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256, 16 S. W. 723, 25 Am. St. Rep. 685; Wilkinson v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 240 Ill. 205, 88 N. E. 550, 130 Am. St. Rep. 269, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1256.

[161] In a case note to 9 Ann. Cas. at page 921, it is said that accident policies generally contain a clause, the purpose of which is to relieve the insurer from responsibility in case of death of the insured caused by intentional injuries inflicted by the insured or some third person, or caused by disease, or caused by voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, etc.; and that where the insurer sets up the breach of one of these conditions as a defense, the burden is of course upon it to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that death was caused by a breach of one of these conditions.

The rule, we believe, is not only supported by the better reasoning but is in accord with the great weight of authority as shown by the cases cited in the note just referred to. This general rule is also in accord with the trend of our decisions bearing on the question.

In Grand Lodge of Ancient Order of United Workmen v. Banister, 80 Ark. 190, 96 S. W.

742, it was held that where, in a suit upon a benefit certificate, the insurer claims non-liability upon the ground that the insured committed suicide, the burden of proving that fact is upon the defendant. It is true this was an action on a life insurance policy and that there is a difference in the amount of proof required to recover on a life insurance policy and on an accident policy. In the former, all that is necessary for the plaintiff to show to make out a prima facie case is the contract and death. In the latter, in addition to this, the plaintiff in order to recover must prove that the death or injury was accidental within the meaning of the terms of the policy. This difference, however, does not in any manner affect the reasons for the rule casting upon the defendant the burden of proving suicide when that is alleged as a defense to the policy. Both in actions on life and accident insurance policies, the plaintiff must first make out a prima facie case, and when that is done, the defendant having set up a breach of a condition of the policy as a defense, the burden is upon it to prove by a preponderance [162] of the evidence that the death was caused by a breach of this condition.

In the present case it is shown beyond question or dispute that the insured came to his death by external and violent means. The only controverted question of fact in the case is as to whether or not he committed suicide. This being the case under the principles of law above announced, the court did not commit reversible error in giving the instruction complained of.

(6) The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $8,000, and there is no claim that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover this sum under the terms of the policy. The court fixed the attorneys' fee at $1,000. It is claimed that this is excessive, as being evidently made upon the basis of a contingent fee. We do not agree with counsel in this contention. We have held that the court should only allow a reasonable fee for legal services performed and that this should not be made on the basis that the fee was contingent. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Owen, 111 Ark. 554, 164 S. W. 720. In that case the policy sued on was $10,000 and the court allowed a fee of $2,000. We held that this was unreasonable and that $1,000 would have been a reasonable fee. Here the recovery was for $8,000 and we do not think, when all the circumstances of the case are considered, that a fee of $1,000 was excessive. Three attorneys who testified on the question stated that $1,500 would have been a reasonable fee, but we think that the court properly fixed it at not exceeding a thousand dollars. The judgment will be affirmed.

NOTE.

The reported case holds that where a person is found dead with a pistol shot wound in his head, the presumption arises, in an action on a policy of accident insurance, that his death was accidental, so that the burden is on the insurer of showing that the death was caused by suicide.

The burden of proof and the sufficiency of evidence to show accidental death in an action on an accident insurance policy are discussed in the notes to Preferred Acc. Ins. Co. v. Fielding, 9 Ann. Cas. 916; Moon v. Order of United Commercial Travelers, Ann. Cas. 1916B 222; and Wilkinson v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 130 Am. St. Rep. 269.

TAYLOR

v.

MOSELEY.

Kentucky Court of Appeals—June 6, 1916.

170 Ky. 592; 186 S. W. 634.

Appeal and Error — Harmless Error — Admission of Evidence — Fact Otherwise Proved.

Admission of hearsay evidence is not prejudicial, where the same fact is established by other proof in the record.

Trial — Cross-examination — Power of Court to Control.

It is within the discretion of the court at any time to put a stop to irrelevant cross-examination.

Appeal and Error — Harmless Error — Exclusion of Evidence — Fact Otherwise Proved.

The exclusion of testimony where the facts to be established thereby were brought out by other evidence in the record, is not prejudicial.

Libel and Slander — Language Libelous Per Se — Attributing Statement to Candidate for Office.

In a suit for libel, the language of an affidavit stating that plaintiff, a candidate for office, had said that he had been pandering to the Catholics as long as he was going to, but that if he did run again he could give the priests $10 for their picnics and they would see to it that he got all the votes, is not actionable per se.

[See Ann. Cas. 1914C 997.]

Special Damages for Libel.

Where the language of an alleged libel is not actionable per se, the plaintiff can recover only upon proof of special damages which are the natural, immediate, and legal consequence of the charge, and due exclusively to its publication by defendant.

Loss of Election as Element of Damage.

Special damages cannot be predicated upon failure of election to office, as damages in such connection are necessarily too remote and speculative to justify serious consideration.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal and Error — Harmless Error — Refusal of Instructions — Party Not Entitled to Recover.

In an action for libel and slander, the refusal to give instructions offered by plaintiff, is held not to be prejudicial error, where the plaintiff had no case in any event because the language used was not libelous per se, and the special damages avowed were too remote and speculative to authorize a recovery.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Daviess county.

Action by E. P. Taylor, plaintiff, against C. J. Moseley, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

W. T. Ellis, L. P. Tanner, Little & Slack and Aud & Higdon for appellant.

O. M. Finn, Le Vega Clements and W. P. Sandidge for appellees.

[593] MILLER, C. J.—E. P. Taylor and Jamie Weir were rival candidates for the Democratic nomination for clerk of the Daviess county court in the primary election held on August 2nd, 1913. Taylor was then serving his second term as county court clerk, and formerly had held the office of judge of the county court.

The contest between Taylor and Weir was spirited, and resulted in Weir obtaining a majority of 43 out of a total vote of 5307.

For several weeks before the election it had been rumored that Taylor had made certain remarks in 1911 in criticism of the Catholic voters of the county. At a public speaking at West Louisville in Daviess county, on July 21st, 1913, Taylor, who was the principal speaker, denounced as slanderous the remarks which had been attributed to him.

In answer to Taylor's speech, Mullican, a candidate for the legislature, interrupted Taylor and stated that he had in his possession the affidavit of C. J. Moseley, the man to whom it was claimed Taylor had made the statements attributed to him. Taylor, however, declined to be interrupted or to let Mullican read the affidavit, and nothing further was said about it on that occasion.

However, on August 1st, 1913, the day before the primary election, C. J. Moseley made the following affidavit:

[594] "I, C. J. Moseley, state that about two years ago, in the race for the legislature in Daviess county between J. H. Elder and R. M. Stuart, Judge E. P. Taylor called me by telephone and asked me to come to his office. When I went he wanted to know why I was against Robert Stuart and wanted me to be for him. I told him I had nothing against Mr. Stuart, but I was for Mr. Elder because I thought it best for the Democratic party to nominate him. I called Judge Taylor's attention to the fact that both he and Stuart were related to Governor McCreary's family, and that Mr. Ben Johnson had withdrawn from the race for Governor against McCreary, charging that McCreary was using the fact that he (Johnson) was a Catholic against him in the race. I told Judge Taylor that in view of this fact I did not think we ought to turn Mr. Elder down, although I did not then know Mr. Elder. I told him if we did it might be some ground for the Catholics to get mad and refuse to vote the Democratic ticket; and, I further said to him that in view of the fact that both he and Stuart claimed to be kin to Governor McCreary's family that I did not think he ought to be running Stuart, and that his activity for Stuart might make against him hereafter. He said he did not know that he would ever run again, and that he had been pandering to the Catholics any way as long as he was going to. He further said that if he did run again, however, he could give the priests ten dollars for their picnics and they would see to it that he got all the votes.

"While I was at West Louisville on the night of the 21st I heard Judge Taylor criticizing Mr. Sim Mullican for circulating the report that he had made statements as above, and I made this affidavit in justice to Mr. Mullican, for I was the one, or one of the ones, for I understand that the same statements were made by Judge Taylor to others, who gave Mr. Mullican his information.

"C. J. MOSELEY.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me by C. J. Moseley this the 1st day of August, 1913.

"ERNEST WEILL,

"Notary Public Daviess Co., Ky."

Moseley's affidavit was not printed in the papers, but two copies of it were made, and one copy was given to [595] Hazel who, on his own motion, showed it to certain voters on the day of the election.

In the local morning papers of August 2, 1913, Taylor published the following counter affidavit:

"State of Kentucky,

"Daviess County, Sct.

"The undersigned affiant, E. P. Taylor, states that fortunately he has discovered at this late date, namely 7:30 P. M., August 1, 1913, that there is being circulated affidavits dated August 1st, 1913, and signed by C. J. Moseley, attacking his loyalty and honesty of purpose to the people of his county; that the affidavit so signed by C. J. Moseley is malicious and a falsehood; is a lie, born of prejudice and malice, and is being circulated by C. J. Moseley at the eleventh hour in his race for county clerk to injure this affiant and with the hope and view in said C. J. Moseley's mind that said affidavit will get in its work against this affiant too late for this affiant to get to the people with the truth.

"I, E. P. Taylor, further state and believe the fact to be true that the affidavit signed by C. J. Moseley was prepared by crafty politicians with the designing and malicious purpose of defeating affiant for the office of county clerk.

"E. P. TAYLOR.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me by E. P. Taylor this the 1st day of August 1913, 8:30 P. M.

"TANDY L. HAZEL,
"Clerk Daviess Circuit Court."

To this publication a rejoinder by Moseley was made in the papers, which contained this statement:

"But since Judge Taylor in his speech at West Louisville denied any recollection of having a pistol at a recent meeting of the fiscal court, and of the fact that Sheriff Winsted disarmed him on this occasion, I am not surprised that he should deny the truth of the facts in my affidavit. These facts, however, can be proven, and will be, if he desires, by others and myself."

On July 27th, 1914, Taylor filed this suit for libel against Moseley, claiming damages in the sum of $25,000.00. Moseley justified by alleging the truth of the statements contained in his affidavit; and, upon a trial of the issues thus made, the jury returned a verdict for the defendant. Taylor appeals.

[596] Appellant insists that the trial court erred: (1) in admitting incompetent evidence offered by appellee, and in excluding competent evidence offered by the appellant; (2) in striking out that part of the petition which alleged special damages based upon the loss of the office; and, (3) in failing to give certain instructions offered by the appellant.

We will consider these questions in the order named.

1. Moseley stated that he made the affidavit for the protection of Mr. Mullican, the candidate for the legislature, who seems to have made the statement denounced by Taylor. On his direct examination Moseley testified as follows, in this connection: "Q. Did you hear him (Taylor) go all over the county abusing Mr. Mullican? A. I have heard of it." Plaintiff objected to this question and moved the court to exclude the answer from the jury, but the court overruled the objection. Appellant insists that Moseley should not have been permitted to tell what he had heard upon that subject.

In view, however, of other proof appearing throughout the record that Taylor and his friends had denounced Mullican, the error, if it be so considered, was of minor importance. Certainly, it did not affect the appellant's case.

Upon the cross-examination of Moseley, the plaintiff put into the record the rejoinder card of Moseley in which he had referred to the pistol incident in the fiscal court, and then asked Moseley this question: "You do not have any knowledge at all on the subject of what took place in the county court room?" The court of its own motion excluded the question, and the plaintiff now complains that in doing so it committed a reversible error.

We see no error here. The plaintiff having first brought this matter into the record on cross-examination is in no position to complain that he was not permitted to further pursue it. This testimony was irrelevant and the trial court properly took the view that it had nothing to do with this case.

It is next insisted that the court erred in refusing to permit Taylor to show what the fees of the office of county court clerk were reasonably worth per annum to the clerk; and he avowed that if permitted to answer the question the witness would state that the fees of the office were worth $5,000.00 a year, clear of expenses.

[597] This objection raised the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to show special damages, and will be considered under the next paragraph of this opinion.

Finally, Hazel, who procured Moseley to make the affidavit, was asked as to the extent of the circulation of the two copies of the affidavit which he had made, but the court sustained an objection by the defendant and declined to let him answer the question. But later in his testimony Hazel in an answer to a similar question by plaintiff's counsel, said: "I went to Knottsville, and I can tell you what I did with these copies. I gave one to Mr. Aull who was to be his deputy, and took the other and showed it to my brother-in-law, who is a Catholic priest."

In this connection, it is further insisted that when Hazel was asked if there were not a very large number of the Democratic voters of the Knottsville precinct who were members of the Roman Catholic church, the court refused to allow him to answer the question. In this, however, counsel for appellant is mistaken, since the record upon this subject shows that Hazel testified as follows in answer to questions by appellant's counsel:

"Q. Knottsville is a precinct in Daviess county in which there is a very large number of Democrats who are members of the Roman Catholic church, is not that true?

"The defendant objected to this question and the court being advised overruled said objection to which ruling the defendant excepted.

"A. Yes, sir. Q. That is your old home precinct, you had formerly lived there a great number of years? A. I was born and raised there. Q. How far is that from Owensboro? A. Thirteen miles. Q. Was Guy Aull a Catholic too? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you deliver one to Felix Heady? The defendant objected to this question and the court being advised overruled said objection, to which ruling the defendant excepted. A. I hardly think I did. I do not remember. I do not think I had but two made and I never did give up the original until I was called in court about it."

From this review of the rulings of the court upon the evidence, we feel sure appellant was in no way prejudiced.

2. Upon motion of the defendant, the court struck from the petition all that part of it which recited that Taylor was clerk of the Daviess county court and a candidate [598] for re-election, with good prospects of re-nomination and election; that the affidavit was made for the malicious purpose of injuring plaintiff in his canvass and to bring him into contempt and disrepute with those Democratic voters who were members of the Catholic church, and into dishonor and disrepute with the public generally; that there were fifteen hundred legal Democratic voters in the county that belonged to the Catholic church; that the fees of said office were reasonably worth $5,000.00 each year; and, that he would have received a majority of all the Democratic votes cast in said primary and the nomination to the office for which he was a candidate, for a term of four years, but for said libelous publication complained of.

By this ruling it is contended the court erroneously held that plaintiff could not recover special damages in this action. The language of the affidavit which is the basis of the action is not actionable per se, Williams v. Riddle, 145 Ky. 459, Ann. Cas. 1913B 1151, 140 S. W. 661, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 974; Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 225, 23 U. S. (L. ed.) 308. In such a case plaintiff can recover only upon a showing of special damages. And, the language of the alleged libel not being actionable per se, the plaintiff cannot recover, unless the proof shows that the special damages alleged are the natural, immediate, and legal consequence of the charge, and due exclusively to the publication by defendant. 25 Cyc.

525; Axton-Fisher Tobacco Co. v. Evening Post Co. 169 Ky. 64, 183 S. W. 269, L.R.A. 1916E 667.

In Williams v. Riddle, supra, we said:

"To sustain a recovery plaintiff must not only show damages, but the damage must be the natural and probable consequence of the words used. Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 591; 8 Eng. Rul. Cas. 387. The damage here alleged is too remote, uncertain and speculative, to claim the attention of a court. Field v. Colson, 93 Ky. 348."

See also The Windish-Muhlhauser Brewing Co. v. Bacon, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 928, 53 S. W. 520.

As to what character of loss will be sufficient to show special damages for which a recovery may be had, 25 Cyc. 525, says:

"The special damages must flow from impaired reputation. It must be a loss of a pecuniary character, or the loss of some substantial or material advantage. [599] Thus loss of fuel and clothing previously gratuitously furnished, the refusal of civil-entertainment at a public house, loss of a marriage, loss of substantial hospitality of friends or third persons, loss of a customer, or a general falling off in business, a refusal of credit, or loss of profitable employment is sufficient evidence of special damages. But evidence of the loss of consortium vicinorum, or evidence that plaintiff's relatives slighted and shunned him, is not sufficient to show special damages. Neither mental suffering nor physical sickness will alone be sufficient to show special damages to support an action for words not actionable per se."

We have been cited to no case in which it has been held that failure of election to an office could be shown to authorize a finding of special damages. The loss of the office cannot be said to be the natural, immediate, and legal consequence of the charge and due exclusively to it.

Appellant quotes from section 247 of Townsend on Slander and Libel in which that author, with due deference to the decisions, says that the rule must be the same for every kind of employment, and office is another name for employment, and that the right which one has to speak concerning a candidate for employment as a mechanic or domestic is neither more extensive nor more limited than the right one has to speak of a candidate for the office of legislator.

The author, however, conceded that his opinion thus expressed, is at variance with the weight of authority. We think the trial court was right in holding that special damages for the loss of the office had no proper place in this case, for the reason that the damages specially alleged were too remote and speculative to justify serious consideration.

In Field v. Colson, 93 Ky. 348, 20 S. W. 264, Field had been a candidate for the legislature against Howard and withdrew from the contest. Later, he re-entered the race, and the defendant, Colson, charged him with having accepted a bribe to abandon the contest against Howard. Field was defeated and sued Colson for slander.

In affirming a judgment for the defendant, the court said:

"The plaintiff had no cause of action. The words charged did not, if true, constitute an indictable offense, nor were they spoken of him in the way of his office, [600] profession or trade, unless his candidacy can be so regarded; and even if actionable by averring special damages, the damage alleged is too remote, uncertain and speculative."

When we remember that the affidavit which is the foundation of this action was not published in a newspaper, and that the counter-affidavit of Taylor was published in the newspapers, how can it be said that plaintiff lost the office by reason of the Moseley affidavit and its circulation limited to two copies? Special damages to be recoverable must have some direct and immediate connection with the charge; they must be the direct result of the action complained of.

The trial court properly held, as a matter of law, that special damages were not recoverable for the loss of the office; and, that being true, that portion of the petition which sought to show special damages by alleging the value of the office of county court clerk, was properly stricken out.

3. The complaint is made, not that instructions 1, 2 and 3 given by the court are erroneous, but that similar instructions offered by the appellant more clearly stated the law on that subject. If appellant's contention in this respect was sound, it would not be a reversible error because, as he concedes, the first three instructions correctly stated the law upon the subject of which they treated. The fourth instruction properly defined actual malice, and the fifth instruction prohibited a recovery based upon the result of the primary election. Plaintiff insists that the court should have given instructions 5 and 7 offered by him, and that the failure to give them constituted reversible errors. The fifth instruction so offered, advised the jury that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove any specific damage in order to recover, and that the law presumed the reputation of the plaintiff to be good in the community; while, by the seventh instruction tendered, the appellant asked the court to instruct the jury that if they found any of the injurious statements contained in the alleged libel false, they should find for the plaintiff; and, that malice was properly inferable from the falsity of the words "charged in the complaint as libelous," the principal question being as to the truth of the matter contained in the alleged libel.

[601] These questions, however, were submitted by the first three instructions. The first instruction peremptorily directed a finding for the plaintiff unless the jury should believe from the evidence that the charges contained in the publication complained of were in fact or in substance found to be true as published. The second instruction was the converse of the first, and directed a verdict for the defendant in case the jury should believe from all the evidence that the whole publication complained of was proven in terms, or in substance, to have been true. The third instruction gave the proper measure of damages and authorized a recovery of punitive damages in case the publication was induced by actual malice upon the part of Moseley, or by a reckless disregard of plaintiff's rights. But the jury having found for the defendant upon his plea of justification, the instruction upon the measure of damages becomes unimportant.

The language used being not libelous per se, and the special damages avowed being too remote and speculative to authorize a recovery, the plaintiff had no case. Field v. Colson, supra.

From a careful reading of the entire record, we fail to find that appellant has been prejudiced in any of his substantial rights.

Judgment affirmed.

NOTE.

Loss of Election or Appointment to Office as Element of Damages for Libel or Slander.

While it is well settled that a criticism of a candidate for an office may be actionable (see the note to Black v. State Co. Ann. Cas. 1914C 989) there are but few cases discussing the question whether the loss of an election or appointment to office may in such a case be considered as an element of damages.

In Field v. Colson, 93 Ky. 347, 20 S. W. 264, an action for slander, it was held that an averment in the complaint that the plaintiff by reason of the slander was defeated in a race for the legislature and lost the emoluments of the office, was not sufficient to establish special damages, such damages being too remote, uncertain and speculative. The court said: "The words charged did not, if true, constitute an indictable offense, nor were they spoken of him in the way of his office, profession or trade, unless his candidacy can be so regarded; and even if actionable by averring special damage, the damage alleged is too remote, uncertain and speculative. The plaintiff held neither an office of trust nor confidence; and while the words said to have been spoken might affect to some extent his moral standing, to say that one candidate gave another three hundred dollars to abandon the race are not actionable, coupled with the averment of special damage. It is true that words spoken of another that would necessarily result in the loss of some future benefit or advantage to the party injured may, with the averment of the special damage, present a cause of action; but we do not think such a state of case is presented here, and if the petition is good it clearly appears from the testimony that no such special damage resulted from the language used."

In the reported case it is decided that in an action for libel for language used concerning a candidate for office, where the language constituting the alleged libel is not actionable per se, the failure of election by the plaintiff and the value of the office are too remote and speculative to authorize a finding of special damages; since the loss of the office cannot be said to be the natural, immediate and legal consequence of the charge and due exclusively to it.

In Crawford v. Barnes, 118 N. C. 912, 24 N. E. 670, it was held that an action for slander, seeking to recover special damages for the loss of the plaintiff's election to Congress, was premature if brought before the date set for the election. The court did not enter into the question whether the loss of the election would constitute an element of damage.

In Brewer v. Weakley, 2 Overt. (Tenn.) 99, 5 Am. Dec. 656, it appeared that the plaintiff was a candidate for office and the defendant said of him that "he committed a misdemeanor in the state of North Carolina for which he was arraigned and tried for his life and I will show it in black and white." In an action for slander the court held that the loss of an election is a legal injury for which the law will afford redress, saying that "if an injury results to the voter when he is deprived of his vote tending to the loss of his favorite candidate, it would surely be an injury to that candidate to be deprived of votes by defamation."

In Galveston Tribune v. Johnson (Tex.) 141 S. W. 302, it was held that a publication by the defendant concerning the plaintiff's conduct as a member of a legislative committee which tended to expose the plaintiff to public hatred and contempt was libelous per se and that an injury to the plaintiff's political career and his opportunities to secure public office were proper elements for special damages.

In Sherwood v. Kyle, 125 Cal. 652, 58 Pac. 270, it appeared that the defendant who was a trustee of the school in which the plaintiff was teaching spoke words of a slanderous character of the plaintiff as a school teacher. In an action for damages the plaintiff testified that she had had no difficulty in obtaining schools since a verdict for $1,000 was rendered. An order of the trial court granting a new trial on the ground of excessive damages unless the plaintiff would remit $700 of the judgment was sustained on appeal, the appellate court saying: "The trial was two years after the alleged slander, and Mrs. Sherwood testified that she had found no difficulty in obtaining schools in Lake county since. She might have continued at the same school. The judge probably concluded that she had not been seriously injured by the slander, and that the jury had simply imposed a fine on the defendant for his bad manners."

RAVENS CROFT

v.

STULL ET AL.

Illinois Supreme Court—October 23, 1917

280 Ill. 406; 117 N. E. 602.

Wills — Testamentary Capacity — Opinion Evidence.

Where the proponents produced witnesses who stated that testator had capacity to make a will, the contestant, to meet the opinions of such witnesses, may introduce witnesses who will state their opinion that testator did not have such capacity.

Test of Testamentary Capacity.

While sufficient mind and memory to attend to the ordinary business affairs of life makes one competent to make a will, such test is higher than the law requires.

[See Ann. Cas. 1912A 621.]

Evidence as to Capacity.

A party to a will contest has a right to ascertain and present to the jury any fact in relation to the mental capacity of the testator and the strength of his mental powers.

General Business Capacity of Testator.

Witnesses may be asked as to the ability of testator to transact ordinary business.

Remote Statements of Testator.

Statements imputed to testator, four or five years previous to his death, concerning his intention to give his property to a certain person, are inadmissible as too remote.

Use of Intoxicants by Testator.

Evidence of testator's habit of drinking intoxicating liquors is admissible.

Burden of Proof — Confidential Relations.

In a will contest, a requested instruction that confidential relations between proponent and testator, and the fact that she was substantially benefited by the will, did not change the burden of proof, is properly refused.

Use of Intoxicants by Testator.

It is proper to instruct that the jury may consider the use of intoxicating liquors by testator for the purpose of determining whether he had mental capacity to make a will.

Instructions as to Capacity.

An instruction that, if testator was of unsound mind when he executed the will, they should find that it was not his will, though they might believe that he could enter into conversation with some witnesses on the day of making the will, is error.

Evidence — Presumptions — Failure to Call Attorney as Witness.

In a will contest, it is error for contestant's attorney in argument to the jury to ask why the executor's attorney, who had helped draw up the will, did not testify as to testator's mental capacity.

[See note at end of this case.]

Argument of Counsel — Cure by Instruction.

Such error is not cured by instruction that for an attorney to testify was a reprehensible practice, and the jury should not indulge in presumption against the validity of the will.

Comment on Failure of Incompetent Witness to Testify.

Where a witness was known to an attorney to be incompetent, and he had in fact objected to her when offered, it is error for him to comment on her failure to testify.

Wills — Contest — Jurisdiction.

The city court of Mattoon has jurisdiction of a will contest by bill in chancery, such suit being of the same nature as the common-law right to a contest.

Appeal from City Court of Mattoon: McNUTT, Judge.

Action by Mary Alice Ravenscroft, plaintiff, against Catherine Stull et al., defendants. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Edward C. Craig, Donald B. Craig, James W. Craig, Jr., and William M. Moran, Jr., for appellants.

Bryan H. Tivnen for appellee.

[407] CARTWRIGHT, J.—The appellee, Mary Alice Ravenscroft, the only child and heir-at-law of Thomas Gorman, filed her bill in this case in the city court of the city of Mattoon against the appellants, the executor, legatees and devisees under the will of her father, by which he devised to Catherine Stull his residence property in the city of Mattoon and bequeathed to her his building and loan stock remaining after the payment of a mortgage on the property, made bequests of $50 to the Roman Catholic church for masses, $10 to his daughter, [408] the complainant, Mary Alice Ravenscroft, $1,500 to his sister, Mary Hayes, $1,500 to his brother, James Gorman, and $500 to his grandson, James Ravenscroft, son of the complainant. The residue of the estate was given to his sister, Mary Hayes, his brother, James Gorman, and Catherine Stull. The bill prayed the court to set aside the probate of the will on the grounds of want of testamentary capacity and undue influence of Catherine Stull. Answers of the executor and Mary Hayes, James Gorman and Catherine Stull were filed, and replications to the answers having been filed, issues were made up whether the testator was of sound mind and memory, whether the instrument was his will and whether it was obtained by undue influence of Catherine Stull. The jury found all of the issues for the complainant and a decree was entered accordingly, from which this appeal was allowed and perfected.

At the trial there was the customary assemblage of persons who had known Thomas Gorman (counsel have counted them, and there were thirty-two for the complainant and thirty-five for the defendants), some of whom had met him either frequently or occasionally and some had been intimately associated with him. They gave opinions as to his mental and physical condition, and there was evidence concerning his relations with Catherine Stull and her influence over him. Gorman was foreman of a wrecking crew of the Big Four Railroad Company from 1891 to October 15, 1914. He could not read or write, and orders and other matters relating to his duties were read to him, but he could write his name. He was in the habit of drinking intoxicating liquor, and his physical health and mental condition had been seriously impaired before the making of the will. His wife died in 1911, and he lived with his daughter, the complainant, until February, 1913, when he left her home and stayed for a time at his wrecking car, after which he went to the home of his sister, Mary Hayes. For several years he visited Catherine Stull at her home, [409] and he had bought her a ring and it was understood that they were to be married. He went to live at her house some time before his death and the will was made and he died at that place. After leaving his daughter's home he complained of her treatment of him, and on March 18, 1914, he commenced a suit against her to quiet the title to his home property, in which she claimed some interest. There was no evidence that his charges against his daughter were well founded but the contrary appeared from the evidence. He suffered from chronic nephritis, commonly called Bright's disease, and had become inefficient and incapable of intelligently managing the wrecking business. His mind was largely directed toward intimate relations with women and his language was of a lecherous character. His manner of living and habits had greatly impaired his constitution and weakened his mind, and at least six weeks before his death the disease had reached its final stage. He had dropsy of the legs. The will was made on October 10, 1914, and he died nine days afterward, in a comatose state from the poisons common to the disease. During his stay at the home of Catherine Stull she was extremely kind to him and the evidence shows that she had great influence over him. The will was made at her home, and the daughter was not present at the time of making the will nor in his last illness.

The court did not err in refusing to direct a verdict on either issue nor in refusing to grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence. The evidence, however, was conflicting and the defendants had a right to have it submitted to the jury without material or prejudicial error, and errors have been assigned on the admission and exclusion of evidence. The trial court allowed various witnesses for the complainant to testify that in their opinion Thomas Gorman was not capable of transacting the ordinary business affairs of life. The defendants, as proponents of the will, had examined a large number of witnesses and inquired of each one whether Gorman was capable [410] of understanding and transacting the ordinary business affairs of life, and the witnesses had expressed the opinion that he had that degree of capacity. The complainant would have had a right, in any view of the law, to meet the opinions of those witnesses by testimony that Gorman did not have that degree of capacity. It is true that one who has sufficient mind and memory to attend to the ordinary business affairs of life is capable of making a will, but such a test is higher than the law requires. The transaction of ordinary business involves a contest of judgment and experience and the exercise of mental powers in dealing with other persons not necessary to the testamentary division of property (Rowcliffe v. Belson, 261 Ill. 566, Ann. Cas. 1915A 359, 104 N. E. 268) but a party to a will contest has a right to ascertain and present to the jury any fact in relation to the mental capacity of the testator and the strength of his mental powers. Witnesses may be asked as to the ability of a testator to transact ordinary business, as that is one of the elements to be considered in determining whether he had the capacity to make a valid will. (Coleman v. Marshall, 263 Ill. 330, 104 N. E. 1042.) Such evidence is competent and legitimate, but the jury must finally determine the question of testamentary capacity under the rule of law and with the proper test. In this case the court instructed the jury that it is not necessary that a man should be capable of understanding and transacting the ordinary business affairs of life, and the final test was correctly explained to the jury. On both the grounds stated there was no error in the ruling.

The court admitted evidence of declarations made by Gorman four or five years previous to his death concerning his intention to give his property and money to James Ravenscroft, son of the complainant. Such evidence had no tendency to show the mental condition of Gorman at the time the will was made, which was the avowed purpose of offering it, and it was too remote to be admissible for any purpose. It was error to admit it.

[411] It is further contended that the court erred in allowing evidence of the habit of Gorman drinking intoxicating liquor, on the ground that there was no evidence that he was intoxicated when he made the will. The use of intoxicating liquor on a particular occasion does not have the effect to render a person incompetent to execute a will unless operative at the time of making it, but the evidence that he was addicted to the habitual use of intoxicating liquors was competent, for the reason that, as a matter of common knowledge, such use would impair the faculties of body and mind, and in this case the evidence fairly tended to prove that his habit had produced or contributed to that result.

There is a great deal of argument concerning the giving and refusal of instructions, but we are not disposed to review the great number of instructions given, which were unnecessary, and which would impose an unreasonable burden on the court. Simple statements of the rules of law governing the questions of mental capacity and undue influence would have been entirely sufficient in place of numerous lengthy instructions, many of them amounting, in substance, to arguments. The first instruction offered by the defendants was refused, and it is insisted that the refusal was wrong. The meaning of it, as applied to the case, was that confidential relations between Gorman and Catherine Stull, and the fact that she was substantially benefited by the will, did not change the burden of proof, and unless undue influence was proved by a preponderance of the evidence, and that it was directly connected with the making of the will and destroyed the free agency of Gorman the jury should find against undue influence. It practically eliminated the elements of confidential relations and substantial benefit, which were material to be considered on the question, and it was not error to refuse it. The court gave to the jury an instruction that they had a right to consider the use of intoxicating liquors by Gorman, together with all the other circumstances of the case in evidence, for [412] the purpose of determining whether he had the mental capacity to make the will. The instruction was right for the reason already stated, and that it was right is recognized by an instruction given at the instance of the defendants telling the jury that unless they believed that Gorman was under the influence of intoxicating liquor at the time of executing the will, or that from the use of it his mind had become impaired so that he was not mentally capable of making a will, they should disregard the evidence. Both instructions called attention to particular evidence, and there was no difference between them in that respect. An instruction given for the complainant told the jury that if Gorman was of unsound mind and memory when he executed the will they should find that the writing was not his will, even though they might further believe, from the evidence, that he was able to enter into conversation with some of the witnesses on the day of making the will. This instruction tended to belittle the testimony of witnesses present at the time the will was made, of conversations with Gorman, and it was error to give an instruction affecting the judgment of the jury as to whether the conversations tended to show testamentary capacity. It is not necessary to review any other instructions.

James W. Craig, Jr., an attorney at law, prepared the will in question and was present at its execution, and he was a member of a firm representing the executor in this case. The attorney for the complainant, in his argument to the jury, repeatedly stated: "Where is James W. Craig, Jr.? Why didn't he testify? If he believed that Thomas Gorman was of sound mind he would have been here testifying. Why didn't Catherine Stull testify?" To this sort of argument the defendants objected, but the trial court overruled the objections and allowed the attorney to continue such argument. For James W. Craig, Jr., to have testified would have been a breach of professional propriety, and if he had so far forgotten his duty and obligation as [413] an attorney but little weight would have been given to his testimony and he would have lost public confidence and respect and the respect of the courts. (Ross v. Demoss, 45 Ill. 447; Wilkinson v. People, 226 Ill. 135, 80 N. E. 699; Bishop v. Hilliard, 227 Ill. 382, 81 N. E. 403; Grindle v. Grindle, 240 Ill. 143, 88 N. E. 473; Wetzel v. Firebaugh, 251 Ill. 190, 95 N. E. 1085.) If he had testified he would have exposed himself to an assault by the same attorney for placing himself in an unprofessional position, and the conduct of the attorney was a flagrant abuse of the privilege of argument to the jury, who, not knowing that it was improper for the attorney to testify, had a right to believe that he did not testify because he did not believe that Gorman was of sound mind and memory or that the will was not caused by the influence of Catherine Stull. The court gave an instruction to the jury that for an attorney to testify was a reprehensible practice and the jury should not indulge any presumption against the validity of the will because the attorney interested in the outcome of the suit did not testify. The instruction was directly contrary to the ruling of the court, and at any rate did not meet the serious error committed in not promptly sustaining the objection and stopping the course of argument. Besides the argument concerning Craig the attorney repeatedly asked why Catherine Stull did not testify, when he knew that she was incompetent and had in fact objected to her testifying, and as to her there was no instruction designed to obviate the error. When Catherine Stull was offered as a witness the attorney objected and the objection was sustained, and the fact that she was not conducted to the witness stand was of no importance whatever.

The defendants moved in arrest of judgment on the ground that the city court of Mattoon had no jurisdiction of the subject matter. The statute confers upon a city court concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court within the city in which the same may be in all civil cases, both law and chancery, and the ground of the motion was that this is not [414] a civil case in law or chancery but a purely statutory proceeding not existing in the original jurisdiction of chancery courts. In considering such jurisdiction in Brueggemann v. Young, 208 Ill. 181, 70 N. E. 292, it was said that the class of cases mentioned as civil cases in the first section of the City Court act was intended to include only law cases and equity cases as they were known to the common law, and such other cases since provided for by statute as belong to the same class or are of the same nature as previously existing actions at law or in equity, in which personal or property rights are involved and where a remedy for the recovery of property or for damages occasioned by an infringement of a right is given. There was a right to contest a will at the common law but no method was provided for a single contest. Where lands were devised and the heir or devisee brought a suit, the devisee claiming under the will was required to prove it as well as the capacity of the testator to make a devise, and there could be a contest every time a will was offered in evidence. (Dibble v. Winter, 247 Ill. 243, 93 N. E. 145.) Our statute provides for a contest by the filing of a bill in chancery wherein an issue of law is to be made up whether the writing produced be the will of the testator or testatrix or not, and the issue is to be tried according to the practice in courts of chancery. The jurisdiction invoked is not the general equity powers of the court but a special statutory jurisdiction providing a method for trying, at the suit of any person interested, the validity of a writing alleged to be a will. The suit is of the same nature as the previously existing right to a contest whenever a will should be offered in evidence and property rights are involved. The court did not err in overruling the motion in arrest of judgment.

The decree is reversed and the cause remanded.

Reversed and remanded.

NOTE.

The reported case holds that for an attorney employed in a case to testify as a witness therein involves such a violation of the proprieties of his office that no presumption can be indulged against his client because of the attorney's failure to testify to facts shown to be within his knowledge. The failure of a party to an action to produce evidence as raising a presumption against him is discussed in the note to D'Addio v. Hinckley Rendering Co. Ann. Cas. 1914A 907, the effect of the failure of a party to call his attorney being specifically treated therein at page 919.

HEISKELL

v.

MORRIS ET AL.

Tennessee Supreme Court—May 20, 1916.

135 Tenn. 238; 186 S. W. 99.

Corporations — Subscription to Stock — Effect of Failure to Subscribe Entire Amount.

Under a subscription contract, making all subscriptions contingent upon the whole amount being subscribed, no assessments can be enforced until the entire capital stock has been subscribed.

[See note at end of this case.]

Right of Promoters to Subscribe.

Promoters who complete subscription by subscribing for the balance of unsold shares, intending to sell such shares to others, are liable for the amount so subscribed.

Effect of Failure to Subscribe Entire Amount.

A subscription contract, providing that all subscriptions are on condition that the promoters "procure" subscriptions to the full amount of the capital stock, is held not to require that all subscriptions be made by persons other than the promoters.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Subscriptions of corporate stock by insolvent persons cannot be counted to hold other subscribers for the amount of their subscriptions; but, if such subscriber was apparently solvent at the time he made the subscription, no fraud is perpetrated upon other subscribers by the acceptance of his subscription in good faith, though he afterward proves to have been insolvent.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The insolvency of a subscriber, as relieving other subscribers from obligation to pay subscriptions, is a matter of defense, the burden of proving which is on those subscribers asserting it.

[See note at end of this case.]

Fraud on Subscriber — Waiver by Delay.

The shareholder, whose subscription is obtained through fraud, must be diligent in discovering the fraud and repudiating the contract, to avoid his subscription as against creditors of the corporation.

Same.

Where subscribers for more than two years took no steps to repudiate subscriptions, but allowed their names to remain on the corporate books as shareholders, and paid one assessment, it is held that they could not defeat an action by receiver to recover unpaid subscriptions on the ground of fraud.

Appeal from Chancery Court, Shelby county: ALLEN, Chancellor.

Consolidated actions by Lamar Heiskell, receiver, plaintiff, against M. Morris et al., defendants. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Caruthers Ewing for appellants.

R. P. Cary for appellees.

[240] GREEN, J.—These suits were brought by the receiver of the United Investors' Company, an insolvent Tennessee corporation, to recover from the several defendants unpaid balances on their subscriptions to the capital stock of the corporation. The facts of each case are the same, and they were consolidated and heard together by the chancellor. There was a decree in favor of the complainant, and defendants have appealed.

The United Investors' Company was organized under the laws of Tennessee for the purpose of dealing in real estate at Memphis. Its capital stock was fixed at $100,000, to be divided into one thousand shares, of $100 each.

The concern was promoted by E. R. Parham and Burton B. Weil. They carried around the subscription list, and the said paper was headed by a subscription from Parham and Weil for seventy-five shares. The subscription list was dated October 30, 1912.

The first meeting of the incorporators was held February 15, 1913, by consent. At that meeting it appeared that subscriptions had been obtained for only seven hundred and forty shares. Counsel present advised the incorporators that the concern could not be legally organized until there were subscriptions for the entire one thousand shares. Parham and Weil then subscribed as trustees for the remaining two hundred and sixty shares. Notice had previously been [241] sent to all the subscribers, and immediately following this meeting of the incorporators a stockholders' meeting was held and directors elected. A directors' meeting was then held and officers elected, and the corporation was formally launched into business.

The subscription agreement contained a stipulation that ten per cent of the subscriptions were to be payable in cash upon organization of the company, and the balance was to be payable in noninterest-bearing installments of fifteen per cent every six months until the entire subscription was paid. The agreement also contained this provision:

"This agreement is made upon the condition that said E. R. Parham and Burton B. Weil shall procure subscriptions to the full amount of the capital stock, to wit, $100,000."

The minutes of the incorporators' meeting recited that the subscription book "was declared open and subscriptions for the capital stock were made by the parties whose names appear upon the subscription book, with the number of shares opposite their respective names in the following language." The subscription list then followed. The last subscription appearing is that of "Parham and Weil, Tr., two hundred and sixty shares." The minutes also set out "that one thousand shares have been subscribed for in full, and it was moved and seconded that the subscription book be closed." The stockholders' meeting which ensued was held upon three days' notice, and the [242] minutes of the stockholders' meeting show that the action of the incorporators accepting the stock subscriptions was ratified and confirmed.

The corporation purchased a piece of real estate in Memphis, which it did not pay for. The vendor sold the lot and recovered judgment for balance of purchase money, unpaid by the proceeds of sale, against the corporation. The corporation having no assets visible, proceedings were had by which a receiver was appointed.

Burton B. Weil was made general manager of this corporation when organized, and the direction of its affairs intrusted to him. The first call of ten per cent on their subscriptions was collected from all the stockholders, except from Parham and Weil. It seems that the second call was collected from some of the stockholders.

Defendants resist these suits upon the ground that the capital stock of the corporation never was fully subscribed; that the subscription of Parham and Weil for two hundred and sixty shares was fictitious; further charging that Parham and Weil were insolvent.

It is moreover contended in behalf of defendants that under the subscription agreement Parham and Weil were "to use their best endeavors to obtain subscriptions for stock," and that Parham and Weil were to "procure subscriptions to the full amount of the capital stock," and it is insisted that this language of the contract contemplated that Parham and Weil were to procure or obtain such subscriptions to the capital [243] stock from others than themselves. Parham and Weil headed the list with a subscription for seventy-five shares, and it is urged that the terms of the agreement required them to procure all additional subscriptions necessary from others. It is accordingly said that their final subscription for two hundred and sixty shares as trustees was no compliance with the written specifications for the organization of this corporation.

As a matter of course, under this subscription contract and under the law, it was a condition of defendants' subscriptions to stock in this corporation, the capital of the corporation being fixed, that the whole amount of stock should be subscribed before a valid assessment could be levied upon them. Read v. Memphis-Gayoso Gas Co. 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 545; Anderson v. Middle, etc. Cent. R. Co. 91 Tenn. 44, 17 S. W. 803; Newport Cotton Mill Co. v. Mims, 103 Tenn. 466, 53 S. W. 736; Pope v. Merchants' Trust Co. 118 Tenn. 506, 103 S. W. 792.

We are unable to agree, however, that the necessary implication from this subscription contract was that all the stock except the seventy-five shares first taken by Parham and Weil was to be subscribed for by persons other than Parham or Weil. We are not able to give such construction to the words "procure" and "obtain."

The subscribers had a right to insist that the full amount of stock be taken by persons apparently solvent before such subscribers became liable for assessment. They had no right, however, to insist that any [244] particular persons or class of persons be secured as subscribers. If Parham and Weil were apparently solvent, the provisions of this contract and of the law would be met if they procured or obtained themselves to subscribe for such an amount of stock as they were apparently able to pay for.

The evidence indicates that the incorporators supposed Parham and Weil took these two hundred and sixty shares for the purpose of selling to others, but it was assumed that Parham and Weil were primarily liable for this last subscription. As a matter of law, they were so liable, and if such subscription reasonably appeared to be within their financial ability, there was no infraction of defendants' rights by the acceptance thereof.

The subscription was not fictitious. Parham and Weil are liable thereupon, whatever they themselves may have intended.

There is no showing made by defendants that Parham and Weil were not solvent at this time, and not apparently able to take care of the subscription. Insolvent subscriptions to corporate stock cannot be counted, so as to hold other subscribers. The test, however, is the apparent solvency of the subscriber at the time the subscription was made by him. If the subscriber was apparently solvent, there is no fraud on other subscribers occasioned by the acceptance of his subscription "in good faith, although afterwards he may prove insolvent.

[245] "Whether subscriptions by insolvent or irresponsible persons can be taken into consideration depends upon the circumstances. If they were not made and accepted in good faith, but with knowledge that the subscribers were insolvent and irresponsible, they cannot be counted. But it is otherwise if they were made by persons apparently solvent and able to pay, and accepted in good faith, although it may appear that the subscribers were and still are totally insolvent." 2 Clark & Marshall on Corporations, p. 1549.

"Fictitious subscriptions, or subscriptions made by persons unable to contribute their proportion of the capital, do not satisfy the requirement that the whole capital of a corporation shall be subscribed before its members can be assessed; but if the required number of subscriptions has been obtained in good faith from persons apparently able to perform their duties as shareholders, it is no defense to an action against a shareholder that some of the subscribers have proved to be insolvent." I Morawetz on Private Corporations, section 141.

See also 7 R. C. L. p. 234.

It has been held that the decision of the incorporators that the necessary amount of stock has been subscribed, and that the subscribers are responsible, is conclusive on these questions, in the absence of fraud on the part of such incorporators. Belfast, etc. Ry. Co. v. Brooks, 60 Me. 568; Louisiana Purchase Exposition Co. v. Kuenzel, 108 Mo. App. 105, 82 S. W. 1099. In the Maine case there appears to have been, however, [246] commissioners authorized by law to effect the organization of corporations.

But in Stone v. Monticello Constr. Co. 135 Ky. 659, 117 S. W. 369, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 978, 21 Ann. Cas. 640, it was held to be a question for the jury to determine the good faith of a subscription and to say whether the apparent financial ability of a subscriber was such as a person of ordinary prudence would have deemed reasonably sufficient to meet his assessments. See also note under Morgan v. Landstreet, 109 Md. 558, 72 Atl. 399, 130 Am. St. Rep. 531, as reported in 16 Ann. Cas. 1247, referring particularly to cases collected in page 1256.

We need not, however, determine whether the acceptance of the subscription of Parham and Weil, trustees, by the incorporators, was conclusive of their apparent solvency or not. If this question is open for review by the court, the solvency of such subscription is a matter of defense, and there is no proof whatever offered to sustain this defense. There is nothing to indicate that Parham and Weil were not actually solvent, as well as apparently solvent, at the time of the organization of this corporation.

We think that defendants are likewise precluded at this late date from relying on the matters urged in their behalf. The law is well settled that a shareholder whose subscription was obtained through fraud must be diligent in discovering the fraud and repudiating the contract, if he expects to avoid his subscription as against creditors of the corporation.

[247] This subscription was dated October 30, 1912. The corporation was organized February 15, 1913. These suits by the receiver were not brought for more than two years after organization, and prior to the bringing of the suits the defendants herein had taken no steps to repudiate their subscriptions, had allowed their names to remain on the books of the corporation as shareholders, and had paid the first assessment on their subscriptions. Such delay and laches on their part deprived them of the defenses they seek to make herein.

"There are obvious reasons why a shareholder of a corporation should not be released from his subscription to its capital stock after the insolvency of the company, and particularly after a proceeding has been inaugurated to liquidate its affairs, unless the case is one in which the stockholder has exercised due diligence, and in which no facts exist upon which corporate creditors can reasonably predicate an estoppel. When a corporation becomes bankrupt, the temptation to lay aside the garb of a stockholder, on one pretense or another, and to assume the role of a creditor, is very strong, and all attempts of that kind should be viewed with suspicion." Newton Nat. Bank v. Newbegin, 74 Fed. 135, 40 U. S. App. 1, 20 C. C. A. 339, 33 L.R.A. 727.

To the same effect, see Chamberlain v. Trogden, 148 N. C. 139, 61 S. E. 628, 16

Ann. Cas. 177; Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 56, 23 U. S. (L. ed.) 220; Chubb v. Upton, 95 U. S. 667, 24 U. S. (L. ed.) 524; Lantry v. Wallace, 97 [248] Fed. 865, 38 C. C. A. 510; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 23 U. S. (L. ed.) 203.

See other cases collected in note in 16 Ann. Cas. 180.

For the reasons stated, we think there was no error in the decree of the chancellor, and the same must be affirmed.

There is, however, in the record a stipulation between counsel that defendants shall take no objection to the form in which these suits are brought, and that if complainant is successful no execution will issue on any judgment until proper steps are taken by complainant to equalize among all the subscribers to the capital stock of this corporation the burden of discharging its unpaid indebtedness. That such steps may be taken to equitably work out the rights of all parties interested, these causes will be remanded to the chancery court of Shelby county for further proceedings.

NOTE.

Liability on Stock Subscription as Dependent upon Whole Amount of Stock Having Been Subscribed.

Introductory, 1137.

Amount of Stock Necessary to Be Subscribed:

Original Stock, 1137.

Increase of Stock, 1138.

Statute Authorizing Less than Whole Amount, 1138.

Waiver of Failure to Secure Amount, 1138.

Introductory.

The purpose of this note is to review the recent cases dealing with the question whether the liability on a stock subscription is dependent on the whole amount of the stock being subscribed. The earlier cases are discussed in the notes to Morgan v. Landstreet, 16 Ann. Cas. 1247, and Gettysburg Nat. Bank v. Brown, 93 Am. St. Rep. 339, 368.

Amount of Stock Necessary to Be Subscribed.

ORIGINAL STOCK.

It is well settled that where the amount of the original stock of a corporation is specified in the charter, articles of association, or contract of subscription, and there is nothing to show a different intention, a subscription to the stock is made on the implied condition that the whole amount thereof shall be subscribed by bona fide subscribers. National Leather Co. v. Roberts, 21 Fed. 922, 137 C. C. A. 492; Commerce Trust Co. v. Hettinger, 181 Mo. App. 338, 168 S. W. 911; Rogers v. Baird, 167 N. Y. S. 35; Boushall v. Myatt, 167 N. C. 328, 83 S. E. 352. And see the reported case. See also Johns v. Clothier, 78 Wash. 602, 139 Pac. 755.

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—72.

Under a contract of subscription which requires the promoter to dispose of all the shares, a subscriber is not relieved from the payment of the subscription price because subscribers whose contracts are made in good faith refuse to consummate them by paying the amount of their subscriptions. Edwards v. Johnston, 23 Wyo. 384, 152 Pac. 273, wherein the court said: "When Grant had, within the time limited, procured good faith subscriptions to the full amount of the capital stock, the conditions on which said subscriptions were to become subsisting and binding contracts were complied with, and neither the defendant nor other subscribers could abrogate such contract by violating it on her or their part by refusing to make final payment. That is, the defendant cannot be heard to say that because she did not make final payment according to the contract she was not a good faith subscriber, and therefore, Grant did not secure the required amount of subscriptions."

A subscription to the stock of a corporation may be made on the condition that the subscriber shall not be liable until the corporation has received actual subscriptions to its capital stock to a specified amount, and where there has been neither performance nor waiver of the condition an action for the amount due on the subscription must fail. Alexander v. North Carolina Sav. Bank, etc. Co. 155 N. C. 124, 71 S. E. 69.

Although there is no present payment of cash by the subscriber, if a subscription is made in good faith, with a reasonable expectation of being able to pay the assessments when called for, it is sufficient to bind other subscribers, and in an action on the subscription contract the solvency of the subscribers to the balance of the stock is not in issue. Boushall v. Myatt, 167 N. C. 328, 83 S. E. 352.

It has been held that in an action on a subscription to the stock of a corporation where the subscriber does not seek to rescind the contract on the ground of fraud, the fact that the agent of the corporation in procuring the subscription falsely represented that the stock had been wholly subscribed by responsible persons is immaterial. Johns v. Clothier, 78 Wash. 602, 139 Pac. 755. And to warrant a rescission because of a misstatement as to the amount previously subscribed the discrepancy must be material.

National Leather Co. v. Roberts, 221 Fed. 922, 137 C. C. A. 492, holding that a shortage of ten per cent which was supplied by subsequent subscriptions before the corporation commenced to transact business was not ground for a rescission.

In an action on a stock subscription note it is no defense that the corporation has accepted from other subscribers in payment of their subscriptions, property of less value than the amount of the subscriptions. Wikle v. Avary, 12 Ga. App. 148, 76 S. E. 1039.

The reported case holds that under a contract of subscription making all subscriptions contingent on the whole amount being subscribed, the subscribers are not liable on the assessments until the entire capital stock has been subscribed, and further decides that under a provision in the contract that the subscriptions are to be procured by the promoters, it is not required that all subscriptions shall be made by persons other than the promoters.

INCREASE OF STOCK.

It has been held that there is an implied condition to a subscription to an increased issue of stock that the increase shall at least be substantially subscribed for, and while compliance with this condition may be waived by the payment of the purchase money, and the acceptance of a certificate, if it is not waived it may be insisted on and after a reasonable time for compliance therewith the subscription may be rescinded and the money paid as a deposit, recovered back. Housley v. Feilchenfeld Co. 152 Ill. App. 68.

Where a subscription was made on condition that a certain amount of the preferred stock should be subscribed and that in the event of a failure to obtain purchasers the attempt to increase the capital stock should be abandoned, it was held that the liability of the subscribers was contingent on the event as agreed to at the time of the subscription. Foote v. Greilick, 166 Mich. 636, 132 N. W. 473.

STATUTE AUTHORIZING LESS THAN WHOLE AMOUNT.

Where a corporation is authorized to do business when ten per cent of the capital stock has been subscribed and paid in, it is no defense to a subscriber's agreement to take stock in the corporation that the whole amount intended to be raised and specified in the subscription contract has not been subscribed to. Utah Hotel Co. v. Madsen, 43 Utah 285, 134 Pac. 577, wherein the court said: "It is contended in this regard that it is implied from what is said in the agreement of subscription that the full amount of the authorized capital stock stated therein should have been subscribed before the agreement became effective. Under the statute, as we have seen, a corporation may be organized and commence business as soon as a certain amount of the capital stock is subscribed for and paid in. There are no terms in the agreement sued on which in any way are contrary to the statute, and we must assume, therefore, that the parties entered into the agreement in pursuance of the general law upon the subject. We cannot impose conditions other than those stated in the agreement or such as are necessarily implied by law. The corporation was organized strictly in accordance with both the terms of the agreement and the statute. Counsel's contention must therefore fail."

Waiver of Failure to Secure Amount.

A subscriber of stock may waive his right to defend on the ground that the entire stock has not been subscribed. Thus, where a subscriber for about a year succeeding the incorporation acted as its president and director and received a salary of six thousand dollars a year for his services during which time he was aware that only a small proportion of the entire authorized capital had been subscribed for, it was held that the defendant acquiesced in the doing of business by the company without full subscription and his right to defend a call on him for the payment of his subscriptions was waived. Rogers v. Baird, 167 N. Y. S. 35. See to the same effect Commerce Trust Co. v. Hettinger, 181 Mo. App. 338, 168 S. W. 911.

MATTER OF SEAMAN.

New York Court of Appeals—April 25, 1916.

218 N. Y. 77; 112 N. E. 576.

Wills — Condition in Restraint of Marriage — Validity.

A condition of a will preventing vesting of the absolute title of a devisee if she is married to a certain individual, or until such individual's death, is not invalid as violating any constitutional right of such individual to security of life and liberty.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

At common law conditions in general restraint of marriage were regarded as contrary to public policy.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The common-law rule that conditions in a will in general restraint of marriage are contrary to public policy still prevails in New York.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

At common law there was no prohibition against testamentary conditions in restraint of marriage with particular classes of persons or specific persons.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

A condition in a will preventing vesting of the estate absolute in a devisee, if she marries a certain individual, or in any event until his death, is not invalid as tending to incite her to cause his death, but is a valid restriction.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

A condition in a will preventing vesting of the estate absolute in a devisee, if she marries a certain individual, or in any event until his death, will not be held invalid as contemplating illegal performance of the condition; it being presumed that the testator intended the condition to be legally and naturally performed.

[See note at end of this case.]

Matter of Seaman, 170 N. Y. App. Div. 971, affirmed.

Appeal from Appellate Division of Supreme Court, First Judicial Department.

Proceeding to probate will of Egbert B. Seaman. Will admitted to probate by New York County Surrogates' Court. Decree affirmed by Appellate Division of Supreme Court. Frances P. S. Oakley appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Leo Fassler for appellant.

William W. Robison and Harry N. French for respondents.

[78] WILLARD BARTLETT, Ch. J.—This controversy relates to the validity of certain provisions in the last will and testament of Egbert B. Seaman, deceased, late of the city of New York, who died on the 27th of June, 1914. By his will, which was executed on February 15, 1912, he devised and bequeathed his entire estate to his executors and trustees to pay the net income thereof to his wife Maria T. Seaman during her life. Upon the death of his wife or upon his own death, in case she died first, he directed his executors and trustees to divide the principal of his estate into three equal shares, one of which he devised and bequeathed to his son Egbert B. Seaman, Jr., absolutely; the second share to his daughter Carrie L. [79] Eidlitz, absolutely; and the third share to his daughter Frances P. Oakley, widow of John B. H.

Oakley, absolutely, "provided, however, that at the time of my decease my said daughter Frances P. Oakley shall be married to some person other than one Leo Fassler, who now resides in the city of New York and is there engaged in the practice of law, or provided that at the time of my death the said Leo Fassler is dead."

The will further provides in the fourth paragraph thereof that in the event the testator's daughter Frances P. Oakley is unmarried at the time of his death and the said Leo Fassler is then living or she is married to the said Leo Fassler, his trustees shall retain the said third share in trust to pay over the net income thereof to his daughter Frances P. Oakley during her natural life. The fifth, sixth and seventh paragraphs of the will are as follows:

"Fifth. Should my said daughter, Frances P. Oakley, marry the said Leo Fassler, then upon her death, either with or without issue her surviving and leaving the said Leo Fassler her surviving, I hereby give, devise and bequeath the portion of my estate held in trust for my daughter, Frances P. Oakley, as aforesaid, and direct my Trustees to pay over and distribute the principal thereof, in equal shares, to my son, Egbert B. Seaman, Jr., and to my daughter, Carrie L. Eidlitz, to him, to her, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, absolutely and forever; and in the event that either or both of them shall have predeceased my said daughter, Frances P. Oakley, leaving issue him or her surviving, I give, devise and bequeath the share which the parent would have received to such issue, share and share alike, per stirpes and not per capita.

"Sixth. In the event that my said daughter, Frances P. Oakley, should marry the aforesaid Leo Fassler, and should survive him as his widow, then upon his death, leaving her surviving, I give, devise and bequeath and [80] direct my Trustees to pay over and deliver to my said daughter, Frances P. Oakley, the principal of the trust created for her benefit, to her and her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns forever, absolutely and without reserve.

"Seventh. In the event that my said daughter, Frances P. Oakley, remains unmarried and survives the said Leo Fassler, then upon the death of the aforesaid Leo Fassler, leaving her unmarried and surviving, I direct and empower my Trustees to pay over and deliver to my said daughter, Frances P. Oakley, the principal of the trust created for her benefit, to her and her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns forever, absolutely and without reserve."

Upon the proceedings in the Surrogate's Court for the probate of the will Mrs. Frances P. Oakley was represented by Mr. Leo Fassler, who contended that the will was invalid and illegal "as being equivalent to putting a price on the head of a person and offering an inducement for the termination of his life, and as such being contrary to public policy." The Surrogate's Court held that the testamentary provisions to which objection was thus made were in all respects valid and admitted the will to probate. The decree of that court has been affirmed by the Appellate Division.

There is no doubt that under the terms of Mr. Seaman's will the principal sum of the one-third of his estate, which is to be held in trust for the benefit of his daughter, Mrs. Oakley, cannot go to her absolutely as long as Mr. Fassler lives. She contends upon the present appeal, or rather Mr. Fassler contends in her behalf, that the conditions designed to prevent her marriage with him are void as against public policy because they put a price upon his life; because they violate the natural and inalienable rights of Fassler to security of life and liberty; and because they are in derogation of rights secured to his person by the Constitution of the United States and the [81] Constitution of New York. We are unable to perceive how they violate any constitutional right of Mr. Fassler; but the point that the conditions in restraint of marriage with him are invalid is intelligible, and one which the appellant is entitled to have considered.

Conditions in general restraint of marriage were regarded at common law as contrary to public policy, and, therefore, void. (Hogan v. Curtin, 88 N. Y. 162, 42 Am. Rep. 244.) Notwithstanding the doubt intimated in the prevailing opinion in Robinson v. Martin, 200 N. Y. 159, 93 N. E. 488, we think this rule still prevails in New York. In the case cited it was held that the will under consideration⁶ did not in fact contain any condition in general restraint of marriage. At common law, however, there was no prohibition against testamentary conditions in restraint of marriage with particular classes of persons or specific persons. "Conditions not to marry a Papist," says Mr. Jarman, "or a Scotchman; not to marry any but a Jew . . . have also been held good." (2 Jarman on Wills [6th ed.], p. 47.) In the present case the condition is designed to prevent the marriage of the testator's daughter with a particular individual who is named in his will; and such prohibitions have not only received the sanction of judicial authority but we think may be justified by sound reasoning. In Graydon v. Graydon, 23 N. J. Eq. 229, Chancellor Zabriskie held that a condition imposed upon a bequest to a son of the testator that it should be void if within a stated time he should marry a daughter of a person named in the will was not unlawful as a restraint upon marriage; and this although it required the son, if he would obtain the bequest, to break an engagement of marriage into which he had entered before he knew of the provision in his father's will and, indeed, before the will was executed. "It is the duty of the courts," said the chancellor, "to favor this or any other legal means which a father may adopt to enforce the authority which the law, for wise [82] purposes, has given to him over his minor children, and that regard for his wishes and counsel in the more important concerns of their lives after maturity, which the untrammelled testamentary power conferred by our law is calculated to secure." In Cowley v. Twombly, 173 Mass. 393, 53 N. E. 886, 46 L.R.A. 164, the will under consideration by the court established a trust for the benefit of the testator's son, and provided that it should not continue for more than ten years after he should cease to be the husband of the person who was then his wife, but that upon the termination of the trust by the death or divorce of his wife and the expiration of ten years or of less than ten years if the son should so elect, he should have all the trust property as his own, forever free from any trust and in fee. It was contended that the trust was void because it was against public policy as tending to break up the marriage relation between the testator's son and the son's wife. The Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, speaking through Mr. Justice Barker, said: "The scheme of the trust no more tended to induce the son improperly to procure a divorce between himself and his wife, than to induce him to procure her death. Either event would give the son an estate which otherwise he could not have. . . . There is no more likelihood or presumption that a divorce will be wrongfully brought about by one of the parties to a marriage in order to secure property, than that a death will be so occasioned. A testator no more offends public policy by simply making his bounty contingent upon the occurrence of a divorce than of a death." This language clearly implies that no legal objection exists to the action of a testator who makes the realization of a gift dependent upon the death of some other person than the final donee. In Daboll v. Moon, 88 Conn. 387, Ann. Cas. 1917B 164, 91 Atl. 646, L.R.A.1915A 311, a testamentary gift conditioned to take effect upon the death of the wife of the donee, or if he should obtain a divorce or become separated from her at the end of a year, or should [83] marry a good respectable woman within the year, was held not to be void as against the public policy of the state. In the case cited the gift was to vest in a son of the testator, one Willard B. Moon, upon the death of his wife or upon his divorce from her or upon his permanent separation from her. The court was asked to hold that the condition upon which the legacy was to vest was void as against public policy with the result of making the gift absolute so as to vest in the donee without performance of the condition. The court declared that this would be directly contrary to the express intent of the testator, who did not intend that the gift should vest in Willard unless he became separated from his wife by her death or a divorce, or in some other way. "Where it is possible that the condition may be legally performed it will not be presumed that the testator intended an illegal performance. The present gift was upon alternative conditions, one of which was the death of Willard's wife. It will not be presumed that the testator in the absence of express language so directing, intended that his son should procure his wife's death." Applying this language to the case at bar, it is not to be assumed for a moment that it was the intention of Mr. Seaman to incite his daughter to bring about the death of Mr. Fassler. It might just as well be presumed in every case of a devise for life to one person with a remainder over to another, that the remainderman would be thereby induced to compass the death of the life tenant. This would wholly disregard the legal presumption that men do not commit criminal offenses. (Bradish v. Bliss, 35 Vt. 326.)

The position of the appellant in the present proceeding is simply this. She asks us to invalidate a portion of her father's will because its tendency is to incite her to take the life of the gentleman whom she has selected to represent her interests in this court as her counsel. Such a contention would hardly merit serious consideration [84] were it not for the fact that it has been so urgently and earnestly argued before us. It is quite natural that the gentleman who was the object of the testamentary prohibition in this case should feel sensitive at the slight put upon him by the testator; but that fact does not justify him in distorting the provisions of the will into an invitation to murder.

The order appealed from should be affirmed, with costs.

Hiscock, Collin, Cuddeback, Hogan and Pound, JJ., concur; Seabury, J., not voting. Order affirmed.

NOTE.

Validity of Testamentary Disposition in Restraint of Marriage.

Introductory, 1141.

Marriage as Condition Precedent, 1141.

Condition Subsequent in Restraint of Marriage, 1142.

Restrictive Words as Limitation of Estate, 1145.

Introductory.

The purpose of this note is to review the recent cases passing on the validity of a testamentary disposition in restraint of marriage. The earlier cases are discussed in the notes to Holbrook's Estate, 5 Ann. Cas. 137; Matter of Alexander, 9 Ann. Cas. 1141; and Chapin v. Cooke, 84 Am. St. Rep. 139.

The closely related question of the validity of a testamentary disposition of property conditioned on a divorce or a separation of spouses is discussed in the note to Daboll v. Moon, Ann. Cas. 1917B 164.

The general rules with respect to the validity of a condition in restraint of marriage and the distinction in that regard between a condition precedent and a condition subsequent were stated in Knost v. Knost, 229 Mo. 170, 129 S. W. 665, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 627, as follows: "There have been in some cases introduced subtleties and refinements in distinguishing between conditions precedent and conditions subsequent, between conditions and limitations, between devises of real estate and bequests of personal property and 'gifts over,' so that, the line of demarcation between void conditions and reasonable limitations does not always run plain and true in case-made law. Speaking to the point, by way of summary, Pomeroy well deduces from the cases the following propositions as live verities of modern law. . . . The system which has been developed is a partial compromise between the technical common-law rules concerning conditions, and the doctrines of the Roman law, which made void all attempts to restrict the perfect freedom of marriage; and, like most compromises, it has some incongruous features. If a condition is precedent and annexed to a gift of land, it operates as at the common law; when broken, it prevents the estate from vesting, whatever be its nature; when annexed to a gift of personal property, if general or unreasonable, it is wholly void, and the gift takes effect; if partial and reasonable, it is operative. When a condition is subsequent and annexed to a gift of land, if general, it is void, and, although broken, the estate of the donee continues; if partial and reasonable, it is operative; and on its breach the estate of the donee is defeated. When a subsequent condition is annexed to a gift of personal property, if general, it is void; if partial and reasonable, and there is a gift over, it is operative, and upon its breach the interest of the first donee ceases, and the gift over takes effect; but, if there is no gift over, then the condition is said to be in terrorem merely, and is inoperative."

Marriage as Condition Precedent.

A condition precedent attached to a testamentary gift is valid and a breach of it prevents the estate from vesting, no matter how restrictive of marriage it may be. Daboll v. Moon, 88 Conn. 387, Ann. Cas. 1917B 164, 91 Atl. 646, L.R.A.1915A 311; In re Bacon, 140 Wis. 589, 123 N. W. 262. And see the reported case.

In the case of In re Bacon, supra, it appeared that a testatrix bequeathed certain sums of money to trustees for the support of her insane son, and provided in the will that after his death the residue in the hands of the trustees was to be divided equally among her nieces who should be unmarried at that date. In holding that this was a condition precedent and not void as in restraint of marriage, the court said: "Appellants further urge, however, that the bequest may be saved by considering that it gives a vested estate from the testatrix's death to all her nieces as a class, and that the effect of the restriction to those who may be unmarried at a subsequent date amounts merely to a condition subsequent serving, if valid, to divest such interest upon the event of marriage and, therefore, only the condition antagonizes public policy and is void, and not the bequest. We think, however, that the premise of this argument is erroneous. Future interests are said to be vested when there is a person or a class of persons at all times existent to whom the future estate would immediately pass if the precedent estate terminated at any moment, although that class may change from time to time, individual members thereof dropping out, as by death, and other members coming in, as by birth."

A condition in a bequest to a girl under ten years of age that her marriage shall be with the consent of her parents is a partial restraint only of marriage and is reasonable and valid. Such a condition is not satisfied by the assent of the parents after the marriage. Pacholder v. Rosenheim, 129 Md. 455, 99 Atl. 673, L.R.A.1917D 464, wherein the court said: "The testimony shows that Edith, now Mrs. Senker, complied with the provision as to marrying in the Jewish faith; but it further shows that she eloped and was married on the 24th January, 1912, some two years and a half before the death of her uncle, the testator. Her marriage, therefore, was not with the consent previously had of her parents, both of whom were living, though they appear to have given their assent after the fact, and this court is asked to say that the subsequent assent of the parents is such a substantial equivalent for the antecedent consent, as to constitute a compliance with the conditions of the will. The condition it is conceded was a condition precedent, not subsequent. It is, of course, evident that the condition might have been waived by the testator himself, if it could be shown, for example, that he had given his consent to the marriage before it took place; but there is no suggestion in the testimony of any such waiver in point of fact, nor can one be implied because of the lapse of two and a half years between the time of Edith's elopement and the death of the testator." Commenting on the rule applicable in such cases the court after reviewing the authorities on the point said further: "It is, of course, familiar law that a condition in general restraint of marriage is void, as against public policy, while a condition partial only in operation and reasonable in its nature has been almost invariably upheld. In some cases the English decisions have drawn a distinction as between a valid and void condition, dependent upon whether there was a devise or bequest over, upon a violation of the condition. These cases have proceeded upon the theory that, where there was such bequest or devise over, there was substantial interest of other parties which attached immediately upon and as the result of any breach of the condition; while, if there were no such bequests, devises, or limitations over, the condition was to be regarded as one in terrorem, and as such void and inoperative. Other distinctions have been drawn dependent upon the character of the property which was the subject-matter of the legacy or devise, holding one rule where the legacy was made a charge upon land, and a different rule where it affected only personalty. The various distinctions and refinements have found their most severe critics among some of the English judges themselves, and a condition in restraint of marriage, consisting in requiring the assent thereto of the parents of a beneficiary, is so manifestly intended as a safeguard against ill-advised and improvident marriages, that courts should not be astute to break it down."

The reported case decides that a condition in a will which prevents the vesting of the estate in a devisee if she marries a certain individual, or in any event until the death of the individual who is named in the will, is not void as tending to incite her to cause the death of the individual, there being a legal presumption that the testator intended the condition to be performed legally.

Condition Subsequent in Restraint of Marriage.

It is held generally that a condition subsequent annexed to a will, which condition is in general restraint of marriage, is void. Knost v. Knost, 229 Mo. 170, 129 S. W. 665, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 627; Sullivan v. Garesche, 229 Mo. 496, 129 S. W. 949, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 605; Matter of Catlin, 97 Misc. 223, 160 N. Y. S. 1034; In re Miller, 159 N. C. 123, 74 S. E. 888; Goffe v. Goffe, 37 R. I. 542, 94 Atl. 2, Ann. Cas. 1916B 240; Meek v. Fox, 118 Va. 774, 88 S. E. 161, L.R.A.1916D 1194; In re Tucker, 3 Sask. 473, 16 West. L. Rep. 172; Re Cutter, 37 Ont. L. Rep. 42, 31 Dominion L. Rep. 382, 10 Ont. W. N. 203; Re Johnson, 23 Ont. W. Rep. 132, 7 Dominion L. Rep. 375, 4 Ont. W. N. 153. See also Re Hamilton, 23 Ont. W. Rep. 549, 8 Dominion L. Rep. 529, 4 Ont. W. N. 441, affirmed 12 Dominion L. Rep. 861.

In the case of In re Tucker, supra, it appeared that a testator devised his property in trust for the benefit of his wife and two sons share and share alike, providing that in the event of the remarriage of his wife the executors might in their discretion apply all the property for the advantage of the children. The clause as to the event of remarriage was held to be a condition in restraint of marriage, and void because a condition subsequent. The court relied on the decision of Morley v. Rennoldson [1895] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 449, 2 Hare 570, 12 L. J. Ch. 372, 7 Jur. 938, and quoting therefrom said: "In the English law a distinction has been taken between the cases in which the restraint operates as a condition precedent and those in which it is expressed to take effect as a condition subsequent. . . . There are some points, however, which seem clearly settled according to the law as administered in courts of justice in this country; one is that if the restraint is a general restraint and the condition is subsequent, then the condition is altogether void, and the party retains the interest given to him discharged of the condition; that is, supposing a gift of a certain duration and an attempt to abridge it by a condition in restraint of marriage, generally the condition is prima facie void, and the original gift remains."

In Sullivan v. Garesche, 229 Mo. 496, 129 S. W. 949, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 605, it appeared that a testatrix bequeathed to several of her children one dollar each, giving all the rest of her property to her two daughters Kate and Julia in equal parts, the whole of it to go to either if the other should marry, and in the event of the marriage of both, the property should be divided equally among all children. The provision was held to be void as in restraint of marriage.

A devise of land by the testator to his daughter forever, "except she marry, then to her legal heirs," has been held to be on a condition subsequent in restraint of marriage. Meek v. Fox, 118 Va. 774, 88 S. E. 161, L.R.A. 1916D 1194, wherein the court said: "As a matter of construction, it is impossible to see how the words in the will 'except she marry' can be deemed identical with 'until she marry,' as contended by appellant. The word 'except' as it appears to us, must be construed as a condition and not a limitation. Indeed, to construe 'except' as 'until' in the sentence where it is used in the devise, would involve a self-contradiction, in that the sentence would then read, that the testator gives the land 'to Julia Anne forever until she marries, then after her death (in the event of marriage) to her heirs. The language used can only make good sense by construing 'except' as 'but if' or its equivalent, which would constitute it a condition subsequent."

So it has been held that a clause in a will providing that if a daughter should marry, one-half of the income provided for in the will should go to others, was void as a restraint on marriage. Goffe v. Goffe, 37 R. I. 542, 84 Atl. 2, Ann. Cas. 1916B 240.

A will vesting an estate in the daughter of the testator on a condition that she should receive a lesser share than the other children if she should marry has been held to be void. Knost v. Knost, 229 Mo. 170, 129 S. W. 665, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 627, wherein the court said: "Subject to the modifications thus suggested, it may be said that contracts in restraint of marriage are in the teeth of reason and public policy, tend to immorality by subverting nature, and are void; that conditions subsequent in deeds and testamentary devises of real estate providing for, or obviously and intentionally tending to, a total restraint of marriage are odious and held to the utmost rigor and strictness; that conditions precedent are sustained because they prevent the estate from vesting, which is in accord with the free right of testamentary disposition; and that on the nice points of learning which arise in the application of the law to concrete cases, the courts lie under a bounden duty to feel for the intent of the testator to see if it contravenes public policy. . . . Any marriage whatever, however appropriate, at any time however reasonable, to any person however suitable, took from Anna Marie Louisa a part of the estate vested in her by the will. Testator had no right to coerce the daughter in that way against nature. It was clearly in terrorem and therefore abhorrent to the law."

In re Cutter, 37 Ont. L. Rep. 42, 31 Dominion L. Rep. 382, 10 Ont. W. N. 203, it appeared that a testator left his estate to executors in trust to pay debts and legacies, and provided that the residue of the estate was to go to his sister, and that in the event of her marriage the unused part should revert to the Odd Fellows Home. The condition was held to be in general restraint of marriage and void.

In the case of In re Catlin, 97 Misc. 223, 160 N. Y. S. 1034, it appeared that the testatrix left real estate and personalty to her nephew, and in the event of his marriage or death at any time the property was to go in trust to her goddaughter and a sister of the goddaughter. This condition was held to be in general restraint of marriage and void as against public policy. The court said: "Such a provision is valid only when it is in partial restraint of marriage or the remarriage of widows or widowers. A limitation of an estate absolutely to a person, conditioned upon his never marrying, is absolutely void, and the estate vests notwithstanding the condition, as it is an unlawful condition subsequent. The next condition referring to the event of the devisee's death means his death before that of testatrix in the absence of a plain direction to the contrary. Thus, when we come to analyze the clauses alleged to 'cut down' the fee, they prove not to cut it down in any true sense of the term."

A condition in a testamentary gift against the marriage of the legatee with a specified person has been sustained. Daboll v. Moon, 88 Conn. 387, Ann. Cas. 1917B 164, 91 Atl. 646, L.R.A.1915A 311. And see the reported case.

Where, however, a condition subsequent in total restraint of marriage is imposed on the wife or the husband of the testator the courts will uphold the condition. Daboll v. Moon, 88 Conn. 387, Ann. Cas. 1917B 164, 91 Atl. 646, L.R.A.1915A 311; Nagle v. Hersch, 59 Ind. App. 282, 108 N. E. 9; Knost v. Knost, 229 Mo. 170, 129 S. W. 665, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 627; Sullivan v. Garesche, 229 Mo. 496, 129 S. W. 949, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 605; Matter of Schriever, 91 Misc. 656, 155 N. Y. S. 826; Littler v. Dielman, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 392, 106 S. W. 1137; Haring v. Shelton (Tex.) 114 S. W. 389; Re Allen, 7 Dominion L. Rep. 494; Re Lacasse, 24 Ont. W. Rep. 300, 9 Dominion L. Rep. 831, 4 Ont. W. N. 986.

The court in Knost v. Knost, supra, said: "There is only one main qualification to the rule against total restraint of marriage and that is an exception touching widows. (See the excerpt from Montesquieu's Spirit of Laws, supra.) It seems settled that men have a sort of mournful property right, so to speak, in the viduity of their wives and that a grant or devise to them may be defeated by the violation of a condition subsequent providing for the grant or devise becoming inoperative or reverting in case of remarriage. The exception has been put on sundry grounds, and courts have not always been able to find common reasons to sustain it. But it has been long established and is almost universally followed."

Where a will gave the testator's widow the income of his estate while she remained his widow and provided that should she remarry the estate should go to the testator's son, the widow to take whatever the law allowed her in lieu of dower, it was held that the widow in the event of her remarriage forfeited her right to the income from the estate except her dower right in the realty. Matter of Schriever, 91 Misc. 656, 155 N. Y. S. 826.

A devise for the widow's natural life or so long as she does not remarry gives her the absolute right to dispose of her personality. Re Allen, 7 Dominion L. Rep. 494. But a bequest to a widow of all the husband's moneys, notes and mortgages and real and personal property for the term of her widowhood with a remainder to his children in the event of her remarriage, has been held to create a life estate only for the widow in the property bequeathed. Re Johnson, 23 Ont. W. Rep. 132, 7 Dominion L. Rep. 375, 4 Ont. W. N. 153.

Where a husband by will gave his property to the wife absolutely, with a provision that in case of her marriage such part of the estate as had not been consumed by her should vest in his children, it was held that a conveyance of the property by the widow to a man who reconveyed it and then married her was void and that on the marriage the property went to the children since the conveyance was with the intent to defeat the will. Littler v. Dielman, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 392, 106 S. W. 1137.

A gift by a testator to his widow of everything, coupled with a condition that if she should remarry the property should go to his children has been held to give the widow an absolute estate subject to a divesting in case she remarried. Re Lacasse, 24 Ont. W. Rep. 300, 9 Dominion L. Rep. 831, 4 Ont. W. N. 986.

A devise to the testator's wife of an estate which is to terminate on her remarriage is not void as in restraint of marriage. Haring v. Shelton (Tex.) 114 S. W. 389.

In California the rule in regard to conditions imposing restraints on marriage is governed by the code which provides as follows: "Conditions imposing restraints upon marriage, except upon the marriage of a minor, are void; but this does not affect limitations where the intent was not to forbid marriage, but only to give the use until marriage." Under that provision, a will which gave to the testator's widow the residue of his estate for life and in the event of her remarriage the estate to be divided, one-third to the widow and two-thirds to the son, has been held to be valid and not in restraint of marriage under the statutory provision above quoted. Matter of Fitzgerald, 161 Cal. 319, 119 Pac. 96. But under the same statutory provision the following provision has been held to be void: "I give all my Earthly Positions both real and persnel to my wife Eliza V. Scott. Should she wish to marrie agane then then 75 per cent of the hole amount at my death will go to my children." In re Scott (Cal.) 148 Pac. 221. That case apparently overrules the Fitzgerald case since the provisions in the two wills are similar; but the court, in the Scott case, makes no reference to the previous decision.

Restrictive Words as Limitation of Estate.

It is well settled that a devise or bequest to a woman with a limitation over in case of marriage is an estate on special limitation and the devise or bequest is valid since there is in fact no condition in restraint of marriage; the effect of such limitation being to circumscribe the duration of the estate devised. Daboll v. Moon, 88 Conn. 387, Ann. Cas. 1917B 164, 91 Atl. 646, L.R.A.1915A 311; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 29 Md. 581; Maddox v. Yoe, 121 Md. 288, Ann. Cas. 1915E 1235, 88 Atl. 225; Ruggles v. Jewett, 213 Mass. 167, 99 N. E. 1092; Irwin v. Irwin, 179 App. Div. 871, 167 N. Y. S. 76; In re Miller, 159 N. C. 123, 74 S. E. 888; Du Bouchet's Estate, 22 Pa. Dist. 402; Re Taylor, 19 British Columbia 447, 28 West. L. Rep. 630.

In Irwin v. Irwin, supra, it appeared that the testator created a trust to pay part of the income to his daughter-in-law for life or until she remarried, and on her remarriage to pay her $20,000, and on her remarriage or decease to pay the principal sum to the remaining devisees equally deducting the $20,000 in case of remarriage. It was held that the term "until" in the phrase "until she remarry" was one of limitation looking to the daughter-in-law's remarriage as terminating her income. The court said: "The term 'until,' in the phrase 'until she remarry,' is one of limitation, equivalent to the words 'upon,' or 'up to,' or 'in the event of.' It looks to remarriage as terminating the use or income, because breaking up the family dependence. It is the end of the annual payments, not the beginning of them. It shows a purpose, very natural and commendable; that this 'intermediate maintenance' shall stop as fulfilled when that legal duty of support shall fall on a husband by such remarriage."

It has been held that the fact that there is a limitation over, should always be given full and proper weight in arriving at the mind and the will of the testator and determining whether the disposition made of the property shall be considered an estate on limitation or a condition in general restraint of marriage. In re Miller, 159 N. C. 123, 74 S. E. 888.

Where by the terms of its creation an estate is so defined and limited that it terminates of itself on the happening of a marriage without entry or other action on the part of the grantor, the limitation is ordinarily not void as being in restraint of marriage. In re Miller supra.

A will by which the testatrix bequeaths her home to her two daughters "as long as they remain single" is valid, the words creating a life interest determinable on the marriage of each. Ruggles v. Jewett, 213 Mass. 167, 99 N. E. 1092, wherein the court said: "The object of the clause is to provide for the beneficiaries while they remain single. The main purpose is not to promote celibacy, and therefore it is not against public policy as being in violation of the rule against restraint of marriage."

A devise to a woman so long as she should remain unmarried and in case of her marriage then to the nephew of the deceased has been held to be valid as it created a conditional limitation in the nephew and vested a life estate in the first devisee. Maddox v. Yoe, 121 Md. 288, Ann. Cas. 1915E 1235, 88 Atl. 225.

In the case of In re Miller, 159 N. C. 123, 74 S. E. 888, it appeared that the testator devised a small tract of land to his wife and daughter during their natural lives on condition that if either or both married the devise should become void. It was held that although the testator had used words of condition, his purpose was to provide a home for the widow and daughter while they remained unmarried. The court said: "There is well-considered authority to the effect that, although the terms used may ordinarily import a condition, if, from a perusal of the entire will and the facts and circumstances permissible in aid of a proper interpretation, it appears that the testator intended to make provision for a beneficiary while she remained single, and that the words were not used and intended as a restraint upon marriage, the qualifying words will be given effect according to testator's devise as intended and expressed in the will." After citing numerous authorities the court quoted Underhill on Wills, saying: "The authorities distinguish between a provision for a legatee 'until he or she shall marry,' or 'while she is unmarried,' and an estate upon condition subsequent terminating in the marriage of the legatee. The distinction is largely technical, depending upon the exact language used; but the test is, 'What was the purpose of the gift? What did the testator intend to accomplish?' If it is apparent from the will that he did not intend to prevent a marriage or to condemn the legatee to a life of celibacy, but that he intended solely to provide for her support while unmarried, and that, as soon as she was in a position to be supported by her husband, he desired the provision to cease and the property to be devoted to others, it is valid. The law will regard it as an estate upon limitation, not as an estate upon condition, and the gift over will go into effect as a conditional limitation."

In Du Bouchet's Estate, 22 Pa. Dist. 402, it appeared that a testator by his will gave his estate to his wife in the following words: "I bequeath to my wife Julia Isabelle my entire estate including furniture and personal belongings that I leave on date of my decease. In case of my wife remarrying, the legacy which I hereby bequeath becomes null and void, and she will return to my legal heirs what she has received from the estate." The limitation over in case of her remarrying was held not to be void as a condition subsequent in restraint of marriage or in terrorem.

A devise by a testator to his wife of all his property as long as she remains unmarried, and in the event of her remarrying the property to go to his daughter, has been held to constitute a conditional limitation as to the real estate, and as to the personalty to confer an absolute title to the widow, subject to an executory bequest in favor of the daughter contingent on the wife's remarriage. Re Taylor, 19 British Columbia 447, 28 West. L. Rep. 630.

KOONOVSKY

v.

QUELLETTE.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court—
May 21, 1917.

226 Mass. 474; 116 N. E. 243.

Automobiles — Registration — Use by Dealer.

In an action for injuries when struck by an automobile, the evidence is held to be sufficient to justify a finding that the person, who, according to defendant's evidence, had charge of the machine at the time of the accident, was a dealer in automobiles.

Same.

In an action for injuries when struck by an automobile, the evidence is held to be sufficient to justify a finding that a dealer, a third person, was in control of the automobile for the purpose of sale, for renting, or for use.

Injury by Unregistered Automobile.

If an automobile is unregistered by the owner or dealer, as required by St. 1909, c. 534, its presence on the highway is unlawful, and against the right of all other persons lawfully using the highway; it is outside the pale of travelers, and an outlaw.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Where an automobile is on the highway unregistered by defendant, its owner, or a dealer, as required by St. 1909, c. 534, the owner as a wrongdoer and creator of a nuisance is liable for all direct injury resulting from his unlawful act, though the resulting injury could not have been contemplated as the probable result of the act done, and so is not the result of an act of negligence.

[See note at end of this case.]

Exceptions from Superior Court, Bristol county: CALLAHAN, Judge.

Action by Frank Koonovsky, by next friend, plaintiff, against August Quellette, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant alleges exceptions. The facts are stated in the opinion. EXCEPTIONS SUSTAINED.

D. R. Radovsky for plaintiff.

David Silverstein for defendant.

[475] PIERCE, J.—The motor car that the defendant owned and was operating on Pleasant Street, a public highway in the city [476] of Fall River, on March 8, 1914, when it came in collision with the plaintiff, was not registered under St. 1909, c. 534, § 2.

The defendant offered testimony tending to prove that the machine had been since the first of January, 1914, was at the time of the accident, and continued to be until April or May, 1914, in the control of one Fontaine for the purpose of sale, of renting or for use; that Fontaine kept a garage; that he was a dealer in motor vehicles as such a person is defined by St. 1909, c. 534, §§ 1, 4; that Fontaine as such dealer had number plates registered under St. 1909, c. 534, § 4; that the plates which were on the defendant's machine were registered plates for the year 1914, and were paid for by Fontaine.

It was not shown affirmatively that Fontaine had applied to the highway commission for any distinguishing numbers or marks, but the jury well could find that Fontaine had the distinguishing numbers for the year 1914, and from that fact could find that he not only had applied to the commission but also that the commission had acted favorably upon his application and had caused to be issued to him as a dealer distinguishing marks for that year. That Fontaine was a dealer could be found from the testimony of one Briggs, who answered "Garage, yes, dealer and repairs" in response to the question "Let's see, this Fontaine is a dealer in automobiles, isn't he?" The fact that "Nowhere does it appear in evidence what knowledge Briggs had of the nature or character of Fontaine's business except above testimony" does not prove that the statement was not true. The knowledge of Briggs may well have been intimate and accurate, and the weight to be given to his testimony was therefore a matter for the consideration of the jury.

That Fontaine was in control of the motor car of the defendant for the purpose of sale, or for renting or for use, could be found from the uncontradicted fact that Fontaine put his own registered number plates on it and from the testimony of the defendant that "he gave his car to Mr. Fontaine for sale, to sell it or use it or let it . . . that if Fontaine sold it he would get a commission, the same as anyone who sells a machine or a house for some one else," that he asked Fontaine to use the car, "that if Mr. Fontaine had let the car the money for letting it would have to go to Mr. Quellette," the defendant.

[477] In reference to the first request, "If the defendant was operating an automobile which had been placed in the care and control of a garage owner and dealer and the garage owner had placed a dealer's plate upon the automobile, while upon the highways of Fall River and at the time of the accident, then there was no violation of the law and the automobile was lawfully upon the highways," the presiding judge after reading to the jury St. 1909, c. 534, § 4, continued, "The section which I have just read is pertinent, because there had been introduced by the defendant in this case some evidence which the defendant offered for the purpose of showing that the automobile passed into the general control of another person. In other words, the defendant sought, as he had a right to do, to claim that at the time of the accident his machine had passed into the control of another, whose general distinguishing mark or number was upon the machine at the time of the accident, and that that being true, the burden was upon the plaintiff to show that the other person had not registered the machine in accordance with the requirements of the law. If the defendant offered sufficient evidence upon that point, it would be my duty to submit to you the question of whether Mr. Fontaine had control of this machine, within the meaning of the statute, at the time of the accident. But I rule that the defendant offered no sufficient evidence to show that Mr. Fontaine was a manufacturer or dealer within the meaning of those terms as employed by the statute, and that even if there had been such evidence there was no sufficient evidence that the physical control of the machine passed from this defendant to Mr. Fontaine. I, therefore, instruct you, that you would not be justified in finding that the defendant's automobile had passed from his control so as to exempt him from the laws relating to registration; and I further instruct you, that in using the machine without registration, as provided for in § 2, which I have read, he was engaged in an act contrary to law."

The evidence required the submission to the jury of the issues, whether Fontaine was a dealer in motor vehicles, whether he controlled as a dealer the motor car of the defendant, and whether at the time of the accident the motor car had upon it a distinguishing number or mark given to the dealer by the highway commission; as also, whether the dealer's right to use the number [478] or mark was in force. In the opinion of a majority of the court, the withdrawal of these issues from the consideration of the jury was error, and the exceptions must be sustained.

Should the jury find that Fontaine was not a dealer in motor vehicles or was not the registered holder of number plates for the year 1914 or was not in control of the defendant's machine, or should it find that the motor car did not in fact bear the number or mark of the dealer, the defendant's requests "2. That the plaintiff must prove that the defendant was negligent in the operation of the automobile" and "3. That if the defendant was operating an unregistered automobile, that said operation was only evidence of the defendant's negligence but not conclusive," could not have been given, because, if the machine was unregistered by owner or dealer, its presence on the highway was in itself unlawful and against the right of all other persons who were lawfully using the highway. It was "outside the pale of travelers" and was an outlaw, Dudley v. Northampton St. R. Co. 202 Mass. 443, 89 N. E. 25, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 561; Holden v. McGillicuddy, 215 Mass. 563, 102 N. E. 923; and because as a wrongdoer and creator of a nuisance the defendant is liable at least for all the direct injury resulting from such act, although such resulting injury could not have been contemplated as the probable result of the act done, and therefore was not the result of an act of negligence. "If I am sued for a nuisance and the nuisance is proved, it is no defense on my part to say and to prove that I have taken all reasonable care to prevent it." Rapier v. London Tramways Co. [1893] 2 Ch. (Eng.) 588, 600; Amberg v. Kinley, 214 N. Y. 531, 108 N. E. 830, L.R.A. 1915E 519; Fairbanks v. Kemp, 226 Mass. 75, 115 N. E. 240.

Exceptions sustained.

NOTE.

The reported case adheres to the doctrine obtaining in a few jurisdictions that a person operating on a public highway an automobile which has not been registered as required by law and which does not bear the legally required license plate, is the creator of a nuisance on the highway, and is liable for any personal injury inflicted by the car though he is guilty of no negligence in its operation. The rights and duties of a person driving an automobile on a highway are discussed in the notes to the following cases: House v. Cramer, 13 Ann. Cas. 461; Tudor v. Bowen, 21 Ann. Cas. 646; Deputy v. Kimmell, Ann. Cas. 1916E 656; and Christy v. Elliott, 108 Am. St. Rep. 196. See also the following more recent cases reported in this series: Devine v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. Ann. Cas. 1917B 887; Kelly v. Weaver, Ann. Cas. 1917D 611.

AMERICAN EXPRESS COMPANY

v.

FOX.

Tennessee Supreme Court—June 3, 1916.

185 Tenn. 489; 187 S. W. 1117.

Injunction — Restraining Suit in Another State.

A court may restrain a citizen of the state of the forum from prosecuting a suit against a citizen of the same state in a foreign state. [See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Defendant, a resident of Tennessee, will not be enjoined from suing a complainant in the state of Mississippi on a cause of action arising in Tennessee, because it would be to complainant's convenience to be sued in Tennessee, or because the rules of law in Mississippi are slightly different, for probably the laws of Tennessee would be applied, and such an injunction should be granted only in a very special case, and not one merely where the practice in two states differed.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

A court will not, at the suit of a nonresident corporation which might remove a suit brought by a resident of the state to the federal courts, enjoin a resident from suing in a foreign state, for such corporation could not be compelled to submit to the jurisdiction of the local courts.

[See note at end of this case.]

Certiorari to Court of Civil Appeals: FENTRESS, Judge.

Action by American Express Company, plaintiff, against Sam Fox, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff in trial court. Judgment affirmed by Court of Civil Appeals. Defendant brings certiorari. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Burch & Minor and C. H. McKay for plaintiff.

W. G. Cavett and H. S. Buchanan for defendant.

[490] GREEN, J.—Sam Fox, a citizen of Shelby county, Tenn., brought a suit for $20,000 damages for personal injuries in a circuit court of that county, against the American Express Company, a New York corporation or joint stock company, having an office and place of business in Shelby county, Tenn. The accident happened in Shelby county. This suit was removed to the district court of the United States at Memphis on petition of the American Express Company. Before trial in the federal court, Fox took a nonsuit.

Three months later, Fox began a new action on account of the same matters in the circuit court of De Soto county, Miss., for $3,000 damages.

This bill was filed by the American Express Company in the chancery court of Shelby county to enjoin the prosecution by Fox of his said damage suit in the circuit court of De Soto county, Miss. A demurrer was interposed by Fox, which was overruled by the chancellor and the injunction was granted as prayed. The court of civil appeals affirmed the chancellor's decree, and the case is before us on a petition for certiorari, which has been granted.

Notwithstanding a dictum to the contrary in Lockwood v. Nye, 2 Swan. (Tenn.) 515, 58 Am. Dec. 73, we think there is no doubt that the courts of one State have the power in a proper case to restrain a citizen of that State from prosecuting a suit against another citizen of the same State in the courts of another [491] State. This jurisdiction rests on the theory that the injunction operates in personam and is not an interference with the proceedings of the courts of a sister State. High on Injunctions (4th ed.), sections 103-107; Story's Eq. Jurisp. sections 899, 900; Pomeroy's Eq. Remedies, section 670.

Two of the leading cases in America announcing this rule are Dehon v. Foster, 4 Allen (Mass.) 545, and Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 10 S. Ct. 269, 35 U. S. (L. ed.) 538. In the last case it was held that such proceedings were not in derogation of section 1, article 4, of the Constitution of the United States providing that full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the judgments of another State.

This question has received elaborate consideration in recent years and the cases on the subject are collected and classified in notes in 10 Ann. Cas. 26, 21 L.R.A. 71, and 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 267. Two recent cases are Jones v. Hughes, 156 Ia. 684, 137 N. W. 1023, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 502; Freick v. Hinkly, 122 Minn. 24, 141 N. W. 1096, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 695. It appears, from an examination of the authorities referred to, that injunctions have been granted against suits in the courts of another State to prevent embarrassment, oppression, or fraud, to prevent evasion of domiciliary laws, where insolvency proceedings are pending, where the local court had prior jurisdiction, and perhaps other cases.

The decisions do not appear to be altogether agreed as to what circumstances justify such relief. It would be perhaps impossible to state a rule to which all the cases would conform. We are impressed with the idea that such injunctions have in some of the cases been improvidently granted.

[492] We indulge ourselves in quotations from the opinions of three eminent judges who have had occasion to consider this jurisdiction of courts of equity.

Chancellor Pitney, of New Jersey, observed:

"But on general principles, equity will not interfere with the right of any person to bring an action for the redress of grievance—the right preservative of all rights—except for grave reasons, and on grounds of comity the power of one State to interfere with a litigant who is in due course pursuing his rights and remedies in the courts of another State ought to be sparingly exercised. . . . They must be very special circumstances that will justify this court in restraining the prosecution of an equitable action already pending in a court of ample jurisdiction. I speak not of any limitation upon the power of this court, but upon the propriety of its exercise in the particular case. Its exercise is not to be properly based upon any theory that this court knows better how to do justice than the court of last resort of that commonwealth; that it can weigh evidence better or more justly apply to the facts any general principle of law or equity, nor upon the ground that this court recognizes different rules of law or of equity from those which obtain in the commonwealth." Bigelow v. Old Dominion Copper Min. etc. Co. 74 N. J. Eq. 457, 71 Atl. 153.

Chief Justice McClain of Iowa said:

"But, beyond the prevention of some threatened evasion of the specific laws of the State intended to regulate the relations of its citizens to each other in [493] some definite manner, courts have been reluctant to interfere with the exercise of the undeniable right of a resident to go into the courts of another State to secure such relief as may there be available to him, and have not felt justified in scrutinizing his motive in doing so." Jones v. Hughes, 156 Ia. 684, 137 N. W. 1023, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 502.

Judge Brewer, while on the supreme court of Kansas, used this language:

"The question is: Under what circumstances will a court of equity restrain a party from invoking the aid of the courts and processes of another State? It certainly will not do that, simply to compel him to carry on his litigations at home. It will not act upon the basis of any distrust of the courts of a sister State." Cole v. Young, 24 Kan. 435.

Tested by the rules expressed in the above quotations from these three learned jurists, we think that the bill of complaint does not state a case which entitles it to the relief here sought.

It is said for the complainant that it will be unable to compel the attendance of any of its witnesses in the Mississippi court and unable to procure the attendance of some of them; that Fox's contributory negligence will only mitigate his damages in Mississippi and will not bar his recovery there as it would in Tennessee; that in Mississippi all questions of negligence and contributory negligence must go to the jury, while in Tennessee a defendant is entitled to peremptory instructions as to these matters, under certain circumstances. Other [494] reasons are set out why it would be more convenient for the complainant, and more to its advantage, to have Fox's damage suit tried in Tennessee. While some of the decided cases would apparently justify an injunction in favor of the complainant, we do not think it entitled to such relief on the showing it has made. So far as we can see, every defense available to the American Express Company against this damage suit in Tennessee will likewise be available to it in Mississippi. The accident occurred in Tennessee, and Tennessee law will doubtless be applied. The fact that the procedure in Mississippi differs somewhat from procedure in Tennessee does not authorize the exercise of the jurisdiction invoked. We cannot doubt that justice will be administered in the Mississippi courts, nor would we feel authorized in restraining the suit in Mississippi merely because it is more convenient for the complainant to litigate such matters in Tennessee, or because our practice may be more favorable to it. It may be more convenient for Fox to litigate in Mississippi, and more to his advantage. We see no evidence of fraud or oppression, nor any attempt to evade domiciliary laws.

What we have heretofore said, however, is not absolutely necessary to a decision of this case. Such injunctive relief as is here sought by the complainant, in all the cases to which our attention has been called, has been accorded to citizens of a particular State in proceedings against citizens of the same State. We know of no case, reaching a court of last resort, where an [495] injunction has been issued in behalf of a nonresident by the courts of any State to restrain a citizen of that State from suing the nonresident in another State.

We are not aware that this identical question has heretofore arisen, but we think there are very good reasons why the jurisdiction invoked should not be exercised in favor of a nonresident, at least in a case involving such facts as the present one.

We pass the suggestion that the courts of a given State have enough to do when they protect the rights of their own citizens and citizens of other States within their borders. It is obvious, however, that our citizens should not be restrained from asserting their rights against any person in other forums, and compelled to litigate with such person in our own courts, unless we can also restrain that person from litigating elsewhere, and force him to yield to the jurisdiction of our courts.

From the statement of the case, it appears that the American Express Company has not been willing to submit its rights to the courts of Tennessee in the matter of Fox's claim for damages. Fox first sued the complainant in the circuit court of Shelby county, and the complainant—the defendant in that suit—forthwith removed the case to the federal court. If we enjoin Fox's suit in Mississippi and he brought another suit in the Tennessee courts for more than $3,000 or for $20,000, we would be utterly without power to compel the American Express Company to surrender to this jurisdiction. It would be entitled by reason of diverse [496] citizenship to remove the controversy to the courts of the United States, and judging from its previous course, the American Express Company would do that very thing.

If the case were removed to the federal court, Fox would be inconvenienced in certain particulars, just as the complainant claims it will be inconvenienced by the suit in Mississippi. The quantum of evidence necessary to take the case to the jury is greater in the federal courts than in the Tennessee courts. The fellow-servant rule has broader application in the federal courts. Proceedings in the federal courts are more expensive and cannot be carried on upon the oath of a poor person.

It is true that inasmuch as the complainant has qualified to do business in Tennessee, it is a resident of Tennessee for certain purposes. Turcott v. Yazoo, etc. R. Co. 101 Tenn. 108, 45 S. W. 1067, 40 L.R.A. 768, 70 Am. St. Rep. 661; Adams v. Chattanooga Co. 128 Tenn. 505, 161 S. W. 1131, L.R.A.1916F 907. The American Express Company, nevertheless, is still a resident of the State of New York for jurisdictional purposes, so as to enable it to remove this controversy to the courts of the United States.

Inasmuch, therefore, as we would be unable to compel the complainant to submit to our jurisdiction, should we enjoin Fox's suit in Mississippi, we must decline for that reason, if for no other, to grant the relief here sought. The result would be an injustice to a citizen of this State. It would force him without doubt [497] to suffer much of the very trouble and inconvenience which the complainant seeks to obviate for itself.

The decree of the court of civil appeals and the decree of the chancellor will be reversed, and the bill dismissed at complainant's cost.

ON PETITION TO REHEAR.

(August 15, 1916.)

A petition to rehear is filed, which points out that the case was submitted on demurrer to the complainant's bill, and challenges the accuracy of the statement in the opinion that "no fraud or oppression nor any attempt to evade domiciliary laws" appears, on the part of defendant herein. If it be conceded that on the former hearing the court did not give adequate force to certain charges of the bill confessed by the demurrer, nevertheless the result must remain the same. As noted in the opinion, that portion criticized as just indicated was not "absolutely necessary to a decision of this case."

We remain unshaken in the belief that such an injunction as is herein sought should not be granted to a nonresident complainant under the circumstances appearing in this case. The observation in the opinion that litigation might not be pursued in the courts of the United States upon the pauper's oath was founded upon the practice that has prevailed therein within the knowledge of the writer. Our attention is moreover called to a rule of the federal district court for the Western Division of Tennessee, absolving the clerk of that court from the duty of docketing any case until [498] the plaintiff makes a deposit to cover costs. Whether such practice and rule be authorized by federal law, it is not for us to say. This matter is not determinative of the controversy before us.

We are the better satisfied upon reconsideration that we properly decided this case, and the petition to rehear is dismissed.

NOTE.

Power of Court to Enjoin Proceedings in Another State or Country.

Introductory, 1150.

General Rule, 1151.

Application of Rule, 1152.

Introductory.

The earlier cases passing on the power of a court to enjoin proceedings in another state or country are collected in the notes to Rader

v. Stubblefield, 10 Ann. Cas. 20; Greer v. Cook, 16 Ann. Cas. 671; Guggenheim v. Wahl, Ann. Cas. 1913B 201; and Eingartner v. Illinois Steel Co. 59 Am. St. Rep. 859, 879. This note presents the recent cases on the subject.

General Rule.

It has been repeatedly held that a court of equity having jurisdiction of a person may restrain him from prosecuting a suit in another state or country. Where the necessary parties are before a court of equity it is immaterial that the res of the controversy is beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court. Without regard to the situation of the subject-matter, the courts consider the equities between the parties and decrees in personam according to those equities, and enforce obedience to their decrees by process in personam. However, the power, involving as it does an interference with a court of a co-ordinate jurisdiction, is one which is to be exercised only when it is necessary to prevent fraud or injustice and not from considerations of mere convenience. Equitable Trust Co. v. Western Pac. R. Co. 231 Fed. 478, order reversed 231 Fed. 571, 145 C. C. A. 457; American Seeding Mach. Co. v. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. 241 Fed. 875, 154 C. C. A. 577; Weaver v. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. (Ala.) 76 So. 364; Ambursen Hydraulic Constr. Co. v. Northern Contracting Co. 140 Ga. 1, 78 S. E. 340, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 684; Illinois Life Ins. Co. v. Prentiss, 277 Ill. 383, 115 N. E. 554; Freick v. Hinkly, 122 Minn. 24, 141 N. W. 1096, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 695; Wilser v. Wilser, 132 Minn. 167, 156 N. W. 271; Fisher v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 112 Miss. 30, 72 So. 846; Federal Trust Co. v. Conklin (N. J.) 99 Atl. 109; Williams v. Williams, 83 Misc. 560, 145 N. Y. S. 564; Clark v. Banker's Trust Co. 99 Misc. 300, 163 N. Y. S. 748; Carpenter v. Hanes, 162 N. C. 46, Ann. Cas. 1915A 832, 77 S. E. 1101; Hume v. Rice (Ore.) 167 Pac. 578; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Hurney, 252 Pa. St. 564, 97 Atl. 736; Wade v. Crump (Tex.) 173 S. W. 538; International Paper Co. v. Bellows Falls Canal Co. (Vt.) 100 Atl. 684. See also Grey v. Independent Order of Foresters (Mo.) 196 S. W. 779; Sanitary Street Flushing Mach. Co. v. Studebaker Corp. 229 Fed. 591. And see the reported case.

Such an injunction is not a violation of the comity existing between the several states, and is not in violation of the Constitution of the United States and the laws passed under it having reference to the full faith and credit to be given to the judicial proceedings in another state. The court has the power to prevent those who are amenable to its own processes from instituting or carrying on suits in other states which will result in injury or fraud. Clark v. Banker's Trust Co. supra.

"It is now settled beyond controversy that the exercise of this power of restraint by the courts of a state over its own citizens does not offend the Federal Constitution, especially sections 1 and 2, art. 4, guaranteeing full faith and credit in each state to the judicial proceedings of the several states, and equality of privileges and immunities for their citizens." Weaver v. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. (Ala.) 76 So. 364.

In Fisher v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 112 Miss. 30, 72 So. 846, the court said: "And the rule is well established that a citizen of one state may be enjoined from prosecuting an action against another citizen of the same state in a foreign jurisdiction for the purpose of evading the law of his own state. . . . And this rule applies, although the suit enjoined has been commenced in another state before the injunction issues. It is hardly necessary to say that the above rule, to the effect that a citizen of one state may be enjoined from prosecuting an action against another citizen of the same state, applies equally when an injunction is sought to restrain a citizen of one state from prosecuting an action against a nonresident corporation doing business with lawful authority in such state."

In Federal Trust Co. v. Conklin (N. J.) 99 Atl. 109, it was said: "There is no doubt about the power of a court of equity in one state to restrain its citizens, or other persons within the control of its process, from prosecuting suits in other states, if the prosecution of such suits is contrary to equity and good conscience, and to the injury of others. In such cases the courts act in personam."

Similarly in Freick v. Hinkly, 122 Minn. 24, 141 N. W. 1096, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 695, it was said: "That the courts of a state may, in a proper case, enjoin one citizen of the state from prosecuting a suit against another citizen of the state in the courts of a sister state is well settled and is supported by numerous authorities."

Likewise, in Carpenter v. Hanes, 162 N. C. 46, Ann. Cas. 1915A 832, 77 S. E. 1101, the court said: "There are many cases that hold that the courts of a state where both parties are domiciled may restrain the prosecution of suits between parties in a foreign jurisdiction."

In Grey v. Independent Order of Foresters (Mo.) 196 S. W. 779, the court said: "In order that full and complete justice may be done between the parties and the rights of each be fully protected a court of equity may, and in a proper case will, restrain a party from instituting or continuing the prosecution of a suit at law involving the same matter then to be adjudicated in the equity court; this, too, regardless of whether the suit at law is begun in a domestic or a foreign jurisdiction. . . . A court of equity in restraining the prosecution of an action at law does not undertake to restrain the court. Its process is not directed to the court, but to the party litigant. Its actions and its judgment is in personam only, and while a party restrained may be dealt with for violating the restraining order, the jurisdiction of the court in which his action is pending is not affected by the restraining order."

In American Seeding Mach. Co. v. Dowagiac Co. 241 Fed. 875, 154 C. C. A. 577, it was said: "It is the general rule, strongly fortified by both reason and authority, that one will not be restrained by injunction from proceeding with a pending suit in equity in the courts of another jurisdiction, either state or federal, except to prevent a manifest wrong or injustice, or otherwise stated, unless it clearly appears that full and complete relief cannot be obtained in such pending suit. Ordinarily the court which first acquires jurisdiction retains it free from interference from other courts."

Application of Rule.

In Wade v. Crump (Tex.) 173 S. W. 538, where it appeared that the parties resided in the same state, and that one had sued the other in a sister state, the court in vacating a temporary injunction said: "If full and complete justice may be done as between citizens of the same state in a suit in the courts of a sister state, a court of this state will not interfere to prevent the foreign suit unless there is oppression or fraud. And the fact that the defendant who is sued in the courts of a sister state prefers to have the matter determined by the courts of his domicile is no ground for an injunction against the plaintiff, if the courts have concurrent jurisdiction."

In Freick v. Hinkly, 122 Minn. 24, 141 N. W. 1096, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 695, it appeared that both parties to the suit were residents of Minnesota, and that one had brought suit against the other in New Jersey to recover on four promissory notes executed and made payable in Minnesota. In denying an injunction against the prosecution of the action in New Jersey, the court said: "The question is, under what circumstances will a court of equity restrain a party from invoking the aid of the courts and processes of another state? It certainly will not do that, simply to compel him to carry on his litigation at home. It will not act upon the basis of any distrust of the courts of a sister state. . . . To warrant such an injunction, some sufficient ground for the interposition of a court of equity must be shown. Perhaps the most common ground for such action is that the prosecution of the foreign suit, if permitted, would result in evading some law that applies in the state in which the parties reside. Courts will intervene where a suit is brought in a foreign court to evade exemption laws, or where a creditor proceeding in the foreign jurisdiction would secure a preference forbidden by the state of his residence, or perhaps where an action in the state of residence was prior in time, or, as said in Hawkins v. Ireland: 'Whenever the facts of the case make such restraint necessary to enable the court to do justice, and prevents one citizen from obtaining an inequitable advantage over other citizens.' "

In Ambursen Hydraulic Constr. Co. v. Northern Contracting Co. 140 Ga. 1, 78 S. E. 340, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 684, the plaintiff was a New Jersey corporation, and the defendant was a New York corporation. The plaintiff had contracted with the defendant to do certain work in Georgia. After the work was under way the defendant sued the plaintiff in Georgia, for a breach of the contract. Before that action was brought to trial, the plaintiff sued the defendant in New York, also alleging a breach of the contract. The defendant sought an injunction in Georgia to restrain the prosecution of the action pending in New York. In denying the injunction, the court said: "The general rule is well settled that the pendency of a suit in one state between the same parties and for the same cause of action furnishes no cause to stay or abate a new suit brought in a court of another state. . . . The more common instance of the application of this rule is where the plaintiff in the first suit is also the plaintiff in the second action. The rule, however, is not limited to cases where the plaintiff in both suits is the same person. If each of the parties to a contract claims that the other has breached it, each would be entitled to sue for the breach. The defendant in the first suit could recoup his damages of the plaintiff in that suit, but this right would not forbid his going into another state, where his adversary resides, and there bringing a suit to recover damages for a breach of the contract. If the defendant in such case can place his claim for damages in a more favorable condition to obtain redress; if his remedy in the state of his adversary party is more comprehensive, no sound reason appears to us why he may not go into the state of the other party to the contract alleged to have been breached and sue him there. It would be, indeed, anomalous for a resident of one state, claiming an action for breach of contract, to leave his own jurisdiction to sue for its breach, and to set up such prior suit in abatement of an action brought by the defendant against him in his own state to recover damages for a breach of the same contract. To grant such a privilege would be to allow a citizen of a state to evade its laws of remedial procedure, by instituting a suit in a foreign jurisdiction. Hence we conclude that the rule that the pendency of a prior suit in one state cannot be pleaded in abatement of a suit between the same parties for the same cause of action in a court of another state applies as well where the second suit is instituted by the defendant in the first suit as where the plaintiff in both actions is the same person. The circumstance that one of the suits may be pending in a court of equity and the other in a court of law does not alter the principle."

In Illinois L. Ins. Co. v. Prentiss, 277 Ill. 383, 115 N. E. 554, it appeared that the beneficiary of a life insurance policy was a resident of Illinois, and that the insurer was an Illinois corporation. It also appeared that the beneficiary had filed a suit on the policy in Illinois, and that he intended to institute another suit on the same policy in Missouri where a verdict may be returned by three-fourths of the members of a jury. The insurer sought an injunction to restrain the institution of a suit in Missouri or in any other jurisdiction where the right of trial by jury was different from that then existing in the state of Illinois. The court holding that the appellee had failed to show any ground which would warrant a court of equity in restraining appellant from bringing suit in the state of Missouri or in any other, foreign jurisdiction, said: "A court of equity has power to restrain a person within its jurisdiction from beginning a suit against the complainant in a foreign state which will result in a fraud or gross wrong or oppression. (Royal League v. Kavanagh, 233 Ill. 175.) As we said in that case, this jurisdiction rests upon the authority vested in courts of equity over persons within the limits of their jurisdiction and amenable to process to stay acts contrary to equity and good conscience, but the prosecution of a suit in a foreign jurisdiction will not be restrained unless a clear equity is presented requiring the interposition of the court to prevent a manifest wrong and injustice. A party has the legal right to bring his action in any court which has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and which can obtain jurisdiction of the parties. Should he begin two suits within the same jurisdiction, the pendency of the suit first brought may be pleaded in abatement of the later proceeding. This is not true of suits brought in different jurisdictions upon the same cause of action. The mere pendency of a suit in a sister state or in a court of the United States cannot be pleaded in abatement of a proceeding in a state court. While the doctrine announced in the Kavanagh case, supra, is now applied in every jurisdiction in the Union, this power is sparingly exercised, and it is only where it clearly appears that the prosecution of an action in a foreign state will result in a fraud, gross wrong or oppression, that a court of equity will interfere with the general right of a party to press his action in any jurisdiction which he may see fit and in as many of them as he chooses and restrain him from prosecution of such a suit. A suit against appellee on a policy of insurance is a transitory action. Appellee is licensed to do business in the state of Missouri and has agents there upon whom service of process may be had. Appellant has the legal right to bring his action against appellee on this policy of insurance in the state of Missouri, and this right will not be interfered with unless a clear equity is presented requiring the interposition of the court to prevent a manifest wrong or injury. The bare fact that a suit on this policy has been begun and is now pending in this state, in the absence of equitable considerations, furnishes no ground to enjoin appellant from suing his claim in a foreign jurisdiction, although the cause of action is the same and arises out of the contract of insurance involved in the litigation in the circuit court of Cook county. Before the prosecution of the second suit in a foreign jurisdiction will be enjoined the propriety and necessity of confining the litigation to the court in which the first suit is instituted must appear. That it may be inconvenient for appellee to go to a foreign state to try the suit, or that the maintenance of two suits will cause double litigation and added expense, is insufficient cause for injunction against prosecuting the suit proposed to be brought in the state of Missouri and does not justify any interference by a court of equity."

In Wilser v. Wilser, 132 Minn. 167, 156 N. W. 271, it appeared that on the death of an insured several claimants instituted suits against the insurance company to recover on the benefit certificate, the widow bringing suit in North Dakota, and other relatives of the insured instituting an action on the same certificate in Minnesota. The insurer appeared in the latter action, and interposed a defense and made application for an order of interpleader of the widow, and for permission to pay the amount of the benefit certificate into court and for an order enjoining the further prosecution of the action in North Dakota. In affirming an order restraining the prosecution of the North Dakota suit, the court said: "The facts stated bring the case within the statute as well as within the common-law rule of interpleader, and we hold that the relief applied for by defendant was properly granted. . . . Defendant is in the position of a stakeholder, having a fund in its hands to which conflicting claims are made by different persons. On the record before us it is clear that the association is not liable to both. The association is confronted with separate actions brought by such conflicting claimants, one in North Dakota and one in Minnesota. The matter in issue is the same in both. It would be an injustice to defendant to compel it to conduct its defense in both actions, when the claimants are all within this state, and the rights of all may be fully adjudicated in the action pending therein. Plaintiffs reside in Missouri but by bringing their action in this state they have submitted to the jurisdiction of the court and will be concluded by the judgment rendered therein. Appellant claims to be a citizen of the state of North Dakota, but she in fact resides in this state, and in the county wherein this action is pending. Defendant has no other legal remedy to avoid the situation, and there is no suggestion of collusion between it and the plaintiffs. . . . And the fact that appellant may be required to submit the evidence of Dakota witnesses by deposition is not a sufficient reason for denying to defendant the relief sought. The further contention of appellant that the court below had no jurisdiction or authority to restrain the prosecution of her Dakota action is not sustained. As heretofore stated appellant in fact resides in this state, and her claim of citizenship in North Dakota does not overcome that conceded fact. The court had jurisdiction over her person, and was authorized to restrain her from the prosecution of her action in the other state. All her rights may be protected in this action."

In Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Hurney, 252 Pa. St. 564, 97 Atl. 736, the defendant submitted to the court the following question: "Should a preliminary injunction granted (ex parte) to restrain one from proceeding with a tort action, which action is concededly transitory, and pending in a foreign jurisdiction in which jurisdiction the plaintiff corporation (defendant in the tort action) has property, transacts business and has designated an agent to accept process in conformity with the law of such jurisdiction, be continued until final hearing, where the jurisdiction of the sister state in the tort action is admitted and where no substantive testimony is produced at the preliminary hearing, to show fraud, embarrassment or oppression?" It appeared that an employee, after receiving a personal injury, instituted suit in New York to recover damages, and a summons was served on his employer's representative in that state. The jurisdiction of the tribunal in which the action was brought was admitted, but it was contended by the employer that the prosecution of the action should be restrained, because the evidence showed that prejudice would inure to the appellee. The court, deciding that the question submitted to it should be answered in the negative, held that there was nothing to justify the conclusion that the employee had instituted his action in another state, in order to evade the laws of his home state, or that the trial of the case in the jurisdiction chosen by him would to any degree bring about that result.

In Weaver v. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. (Ala.) 76 So. 364, it appeared that a resident of Alabama sued in Georgia for personal injuries received in Alabama. The law of Georgia regarding contributory negligence was shown to be much more favorable to the plaintiff than that of Alabama. It was held that the prosecution of the suit in Georgia was properly enjoined, because it was brought to evade the law of the domicile of the parties.

In Federal Trust Co. v. Conklin (N. J.) 99 Atl. 109, it appeared that an assignor had a deposit with a trust company, and that this deposit amounted to less than the aggregate total of two unmatured notes which the trust company held against the assignor. It also appeared that the assignor resided in a different state from the trust company and that his assignee was a resident of the same state as the trust company and also maintained a residence in the state where the assignor resided. On the company's refusal to pay the assignee the balance which the assignor had on deposit, he instituted proceedings by attachment against the trust company in the courts of the state where the assignor resided for the recovery of the amount of his balance. The trust company sought to have the assignee permanently restrained from prosecuting the attachment proceedings in a foreign state, and to compel him to litigate his differences against the company in the courts of the state where the trust company had its place of business. Denying an injunction the court said: "In the present case, Mr. Conklin, individually, is not sought to be restrained; it is against him in his capacity as assignee of a New York estate, which he is administering, under the authority of the laws and the control of the courts of that state, that the injunction is sought. Individually, Mr. Conklin is domiciled in this state; officially, as assignee, his domicile is in New York. The attachment case pending in the New York supreme court was instituted by him as assignee, and not in his individual capacity. As assignee, it was his right and duty to resort to the aid of the court to collect the insolvent's estate; and the fact that he chose a court in New York which may entertain a different view of the law regarding complainant's right to set off against the debt due the assignor the debt owing by the assignor to the complainant, from that which it is thought the courts of this state may hold, does not present any grounds for the interference of this court in the matter. Certainly the defendant has the same right to select the court in which he thinks his contentions and his view of the law will be sustained that com-plaintant has to select a court in which it thinks it can defeat these contentions or can obtain the benefit of a different rule of law."

In Searchlight Horn Co. v. American Graphophone Co. 240 Fed. 745, it appeared that the plaintiff was a New York corporation, and that the defendant maintained an office in Connecticut. It also appeared that the plaintiff had previously instituted an infringement suit in California against a West Virginia corporation. This suit resulted favorably to the plaintiff, who thereafter made a motion in the California court for leave to file a supplementary bill of complaint bringing in the American Graphophone Company, as a party defendant, whereupon that company sought an injunction in the district court of Connecticut to enjoin the plaintiff from impleading it as a party defendant in the infringement suit which was then pending in California. The motion for an injunction was denied, the court saying: "A motion by the plaintiff is now pending in the California case for leave to file a supplementary bill of complaint making the American Graphophone Company a party defendant, and for a decree to the effect that the American Graphophone Company committed the acts of infringement therein complained of and proved, and for a judgment for profits and damages against the American Graphophone Company for the six years prior to the commencement of the California action. The purpose of the present motion and rule is to restrain the plaintiff from prosecuting this motion in California. All of the infringing articles had been supplied by the American Graphophone Company to the Columbia Graphophone Company for the purposes of the sale, the latter corporation being the sales agent of the American Graphophone Company. All of the capital stock of the Columbia Graphophone Company is under the full and complete control and management of the American Graphophone Company, and the Columbia Graphophone Company has been and is, as a matter of fact, a mere name under which the defendant herein has conducted its business. Its stores have been rented for it by the American Graphophone Company, and all of its goods belong to the American Graphophone Company, as do all the proceeds of the sales, and the Columbia Graphophone Company has made no profits and received no compensation whatever for its handling of the American Graphophone Company's goods, and all the acts and doings of the Columbia Graphophone Company have, as a matter of fact, been the acts and doings of the defendant herein, doing business under the name of the Columbia Graphophone Company. Moreover, the action in the California suit against the Columbia Graphophone Company was openly defended by counsel employed by the defendant herein, who had the conduct and management of the litigation, and with full knowledge of opposing counsel. Clearly this court has no power to take any action which will take from the final decree to be entered in the California case the force and effect to which it is clearly entitled. Although the American Graphophone Company was not a party of record to the California litigation, its conduct in taking part in and managing the litigation makes it bound by any judgment therein as fully and to the same extent as though it were a party to the record."

In Williams v. Williams, 83 Misc. 560, 145 N. Y. S. 564, it appeared that the parties to the suit were copartners at the time of its commencement. It also appeared that the plaintiff had previously sued the defendant for a dissolution of the copartnership and for the appointment of a receiver. The receiver was duly appointed by proceedings had in the court below and subsequently the defendant instituted suit in a foreign state against the plaintiff for the appointment of a receiver in that state and for a dissolution of the copartnership. Whereupon the plaintiff instituted in the courts of the same state, in which he had brought his first suit against the defendant, a second action to restrain and enjoin the defendant from prosecuting or taking any steps or proceedings in the suit brought by him in the foreign state. In granting the plaintiff's motion to continue the injunction pendente lite, the court said: "While proceedings in this state for the dissolution of a copartnership and the appointment of a receiver have no extraterritorial effect over the disposition or possession of property situate in a sister state, except as they may be permitted to have effect through the courtesy of the courts of that state, nevertheless it seems to be settled that the courts of this state have authority to act upon residents of this state personally with reference to suits in a sister state, as the ends of justice may require, and, with that view, to order them to take or omit to take any steps or proceedings in the same state or a sister state."

It has been held that where a resident creditor proceeds by attachment in the courts of his own state against the property of his debtor, there is no cause for interference by injunction on the part of the courts of the debtor's domicile, even though the creditor is temporarily found within the jurisdiction of the latter court. Carpenter v. Hanes, 162 N. C. 46, Ann. Cas. 1915A 832, 77 S. E. 1101.

COBB

v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

Vermont Supreme Court—October 9, 1916.

90 Vt. 342; 98 Atl. 758.Adjoining Landowners — Overhanging Tree — Right to Cut to Line.

When the base of a tree is wholly on the land of one owner, the whole tree is his without reference to its ramifications, the word "trunk" meaning the body of the tree at and above the surface of the soil; but where a tree stands wholly on the ground of one any part overhanging the land of an adjoining owner may be cut off by the latter at the division line, if done without a trespass; but the rule is different where the tree stands on a division line and is one in which both the adjoining landowners have an interest.

[See note at end of this case.]

Telegraphs and Telephones — Right of Way — Incidental Rights — Contract with Railroad.

In an action of trespass on the freehold for damages for the cutting of parts of shade trees on plaintiff's ground overhanging a railroad right of way, a contract between the railroad and the defendant telegraph company permitting the construction of a telegraph line over the right of way for the joint use of the railroad and the company is admissible as showing that the telegraph company had derived from the railroad the right to construct the line with rights incidental thereto.

[See generally 2 Ann. Cas. 642; 12 Ann. Cas. 251.]Same.

A railroad might properly empower a telegraph company to construct and maintain a line over its right of way for the joint use of the railroad and company, preference being given to the railroad's use in the moving of trains, as the exercise of such right was in furtherance of the duty to move its trains.

Exceptions from Addison County Court: MILES, Judge.

Action by Joseph B. Cobb, plaintiff, against Western Union Telegraph Company, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff alleges exceptions. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

Leroy C. Russell for plaintiff.

E. W. Lawrence for defendant.

[343] HASKELTON, J.—This is an action of trespass on the freehold brought to recover damages for the cutting of portions of certain shade trees in front of the plaintiff's house in Middlebury.

The plaintiff's premises adjoined the right of way of the Rutland Railroad Company: the dividing line, as agreed to on the trial, being the easterly face of a certain wall.

The trees, two in number, upon which the cutting was done, [344] were not line trees, but stood upon the premises of the plaintiff a short distance westerly of the dividing line; though some of the limbs and branches of both and what the exceptions call "the main trunk" of one overhung the right of way.

Upon the trial it appeared that the defendant by its servants and agents cut certain branches from both trees, where they overhung the right of way, and cut off the main trunk of one of the trees at a point where such trunk overhung the right of way.

The defendant, the Western Union Telegraph Company, relied, for its right to do the cutting, upon a contract with the Rutland Railroad Company, by the terms of which, among other things, a joint line of telegraph poles and lines along the railroad company's right of way was to be maintained and renewed by the telegraph company for the transaction thereover of both railroad business and commercial telegraph business. Trial by jury was had, and verdict and judgment were for the defendant.

It seems clear that the railroad company might have done this cutting on its right of way, of which it had a deed.

When the base of a tree is wholly on the land of one owner, the whole tree is his without reference to its ramifications. Some confusion has been caused by the use of the word "trunk," but in Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645, our Court, in a thoroughly considered opinion by Judge Peck, calls the trunk "the body of the tree above the surface of the soil," and this means the body of the tree at the surface of the soil. We do not here traverse the ground gone over in that opinion. We merely note, for the convenience of future students, that the case from Popham, there cited as Miller v. Fondyce, is in fact Mitten v. Faudrye, that the case cited as Holden v. Coates is, to be correct, Holder v. Coates; and that Norris v. Baker is to be found at page 196 of 3 Bulstrode, instead of at page 178 as the printed opinion indicates, and that the name of the case in Bulstrode is Morrice v. Baker, though the same case is reported as Norris v. Baker in 1 Rolle at page 393.

These matters we mention in aid of those who care to make independent research. To resume: After considering the discussion in many cases, we are satisfied that it is a sound principle that where a tree stands wholly on the ground of one and so is his tree, any part of it which overhangs the land of an adjoining owner may be cut off by the latter at the division line.

This is the doctrine of the recent English case of Lemmon [345] v. Webb, 3 Ch. 1, decided in the Court of Appeal in 1894, and affirmed on appeal to the House of Lords [1895] A. C. 1.

There the parts of the tree cut had overhung for more than 20 years.

The doctrine of the case is that whatever overhangs may be cut off, without reference to the length of time during which such condition has existed, and without notice to the owner of the tree if the cutting is done without going upon his land.

In the Chancery Division it was held that the right to cut overhanging "timber" is clear, that it is too late "to say that a neighbor's tree overhanging my land is not a nuisance;" that the owner of the tree "must not allow it to interfere with his neighbor's rights;" but it was there held that the owner of the tree ought to have notice and opportunity to do the cutting himself.

However, the Court of Appeal held that the right of an owner of land to free it from the obstruction of overhanging trees exists without notice so long as he operates on his own land in clearing away obstructions vertically above it, that without notice, the owner of land is entitled to cut away all encroachments over his land from trees of another so long as he does not trespass upon the land of that other.

On appeal to the House of Lords the decision of the Court of Appeal was sustained. The head-note of the case there is this: "The owner of land, which is overhung by trees growing on his neighbor's land, is entitled, without notice, if he does not trespass on his neighbor's land, to cut the branches so far as they overhang, though they have done so for more than twenty years."

After the base of a tree standing on one man's land divides, each division, without respect to its size, is a branch, and no matter what it is called or what its size, if a branch extends over the land of another, the latter may cut it off at the division line.

It is a tree standing on the division line, one in which both adjoining owners have an interest, to which a different rule applies. Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645; 1 R. C. L. § 41, p. 401.

Not only were the trees in question not of that character, but the plaintiff claimed below that the tree was his own, and requested and got a charge to the jury to that effect.

There was evidence tending to show, and under the instructions [346] of the court, the jury must have found, that in connection with the cutting the land of the plaintiff was not trespassed upon.

But the plaintiff urged and urges that whatever the rights of the railroad company may have been, the defendant, the telegraph company, had no rights in the matter. But the contract, introduced in evidence, showed an agreement between the two companies by which the telegraph company, acting in behalf of the railroad company and of itself, might construct and maintain telegraph lines over the right of way for the joint use of both companies, preference being given to the railroad use in the moving of trains, and it was upon this contract that the telegraph company relied for its right to construct a line for such use at the time it did the cutting in question. The plaintiff objected to the admission of the contract in evidence, but it was admissible.

It showed that the telegraph company had derived from the railroad company the right to construct the line in question with the rights incidental to such construction. For the railroad company might properly empower another to exercise such right or rights over its right of way, such exercise being in furtherance of the duties of the railroad company in moving its trains and in no respect obstructive thereof. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 468, 23 U. S. (L. ed.) 356; Osgood v. Central Vermont R. Co. 77 Vt. 334, 344, 60 Atl. 137, 70 L.R.A. 930; Ide v. Boston, etc. R. Co. 83 Vt. 66, 76, 74 Atl. 401.

It may be mentioned that the occasion for the construction or reconstruction of the line in question was the recent elimination of a grade crossing.

What has been said sufficiently covers the material matters raised by exceptions and here relied on.

Judgment affirmed.

NOTE.

Rights of Adjoining Landowners with Respect to Tree on or Overhanging Boundary Line.

Introductory, 1157.

Tree on Boundary Line:

Ownership, 1158.

Right to Remove, 1159.

Right to Cut to Line, 1160.

Tree Overhanging Boundary Line:

Ownership, 1161.

Right to Remove, 1164.

Right to Compel Removal, 1164.

Right to Damages, 1166.

Right to Fruit, 1168.

Introductory.

While it is true that ordinarily the ownership of land implies the ownership of everything beneath it to the center of the earth, and everything in a direct line above the land, this principle is somewhat qualified in considering the rights of adjoining landowners with respect to a tree on or overhanging the boundary line. 1 R. C. L. tit. Adjoining Landowners, p. 400 et seq. A tree on a boundary line is generally considered as being the common property of the adjoining landowners; but a tree the trunk of which is entirely on the land of one person belongs together with its roots, branches and fruit, to that person although it may overhang the lands of another. The latter, however, may cut the tree back to the boundary line. See the cases cited throughout this note.

In France it is declared by the civil code that boundary hedges and the trees in them are the common property of the owners of the estates separated thereby. See Dubois v. Beaver, 25 N. Y. 123, 82 Am. Dec. 326, affirming Relyea v. Beaver, 34 Barb. 547; Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645 (citing note to Holder v. Coates, 22 E. C. L. 265).

Tree on Boundary Line.

OWNERSHIP.

The rule supported by nearly all of the decisions on the subject is that trees on a boundary line are owned by the adjoining landowners as tenants in common. Anonymous, 2 Rolle 255, 81 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 783; Scarborough v. Woodill, 7 Cal. App. 39, 93 Pac. 383; Quillen v. Betts, 1 Penn. (Del.) 53, 39 Atl. 595; Phillips v. Brittingham, 2 Boyce (Del.) 173, 77 Atl. 964; Benamina v. Clark, 3 Hawaii 247; Musch v. Burkhardt, 83 Ia. 301, 48 N. W. 1025, 32 Am. St. Rep. 305, 12 L.R.A. 484; Harndon v. Stultz, 124 Ia. 440, 100 N. W. 329; Wideman v. Faivre, reported in full, post, this volume, at page 1168; Bialock v. Atwood, 154 Ky. 394, 157 S. W. 694, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 3; Yoakum v. Davis, 162 Mo. App. 253, 144 S. W. 877; Hancock v. Fitzpatrick, 183 Mo. App. 220, 170 S. W. 408; Griffin v. Bixby, 12 N. H. 454, 37 Am. Dec. 225; Miller v. Holland, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 622; Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645. And see the reported case. See also Simpson v. Gibson, 164 Ill. App. 147; Dubois v. Beaver, 25 N. Y. 123, 82 Am. Dec. 326, affirming Relyea v. Beaver, 34 Barb. 547. Thus in Scarborough v. Woodill, supra, discussing the nature of the ownership of a tree whose trunk stood on the boundary line, the court said: "Line trees are 'trees whose trunks stand partly on the land of two or more coterminous owners,' and 'belong to them in common.' (Civ. Code, sec. 834, Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) 538.) While at common law there appears to have existed two views as to the character of the estate created in the adjacent owners of real property by reason of the roots of trees near the boundary line extending into and deriving nourishment from the other property, the rule as to trees growing in a hedge that divided the lands of two proprietors was the same as that of our civil code. The ownership of the soil was several, in the proprietors of the two estates, while the tree, standing and growing partly on the soil of each, not capable as an entire thing of several ownership by the two was the property of the two in common as tenants in common. (Dubois v. Beaver, 25 N. Y. 123, 82 Am. Dec. 329.) If the tree stands so nearly upon the dividing line between the lands that portions of its body extend into each, the same is the property, in common, of the landowners. . . . The tenancy in common in a 'line tree' appears to be of a peculiar nature and may be stated to be, 'that each of the landowners upon whose land any part of a trunk of a tree stands has an interest in that tree, a property in it, equal, in the first instance, to, or perhaps, rather identical with, the part which is upon his land; and in the next place, embracing the right to demand that the owner of the other portion shall use his part as not unreasonably to injure or destroy the whole.'"

In Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645, it was said: "A tree standing upon the division line between adjoining proprietors, so that the line passes through the trunk or body of the tree above the surface of the soil, is the common property of both proprietors as tenants in common. This is not denied. This is another instance where the maxim that he who owns land owns to the sky above it, is qualified and made to give way to a rule of convenience, more just and equitable, and more beneficial to both parties. To hold in such case that each is the absolute owner of that part of the tree standing on or over his own land, would lead to a mode of division of the tree when cut, that would be impracticable, and give the right to one to hew down his part of the tree to the line and thereby destroy the part belonging to the other. The rule is therefore settled that in such case the parties are tenants in common."

It is immaterial so far as its common ownership is concerned, whether a tree standing on a line between adjoining owners is marked as a line tree. Phillips v. Brittingham, 2 Boyce (Del.) 173, 77 Atl. 964, citing Quillen v. Betts, 1 Penn. (Del.) 53, 39 Atl. 595; Griffin v. Bixby, 12 N. H. 454, 37 Am. Dec. 225.

"So, undoubtedly, if twigs, such for instance, as a young hedge, should be set along, but not on, the line between landowners, and wholly on the side of the owner putting them out, they would of course be his property, yet when their bodies grew into such size as to crowd across the line onto the land of the other owner, they would become the property of both in common." Yoakum v. Davis, 162 Mo. App. 253, 144 S. W. 877.

In Robinson v. Clapp, 65 Conn. 365, 32 Atl. 939, 29 L.R.A. 582, discussing the nature of the ownership of adjoining landowners in a boundary tree, the court said: "In the case of a tree like the one in question, yielding no fruit, of trifling value for wood, if cut, of no value while standing, except for ornament or shade, what relief by any remedy, legal or equitable, provided for ordinary tenants in common, can a part owner of such tree, to whom its continued existence is of no advantage but an injury, obtain? Can he call upon the other part owner to account for the benefit which he has derived from such ornament or shade? Could he in this state procure a partition of the growing tree, as real estate, under General Statutes, sec. 1304? And if he did, would not the lines of his own, and the adjacent land, divide the trees as they did before, leaving the rights of the parties identical in effect with what they were before? Could he obtain a sale of the tree under General Statutes, sec. 1307, either as real estate or personal property, that would carry the right to have it destroyed or removed? If it be conceded, as it must be, that he could do none of these, it will be evident, we think, that the tenancy in common in a tree is of a peculiar nature, if there be such tenancy at all. It would really seem to come to this, that each of the landowners upon whose land any part of a trunk of a tree stands has an interest in that tree, a property in it, equal in the first instance to, or perhaps rather identical with, the part which is upon his land; and in the next place embracing the right to demand that the owner of the other portion shall so use his part as not unreasonably to injure or destroy the whole."

It seems that two adjoining landowners may make an agreement whereby each of them may own a part of a line hedge and of course in such a case each one owns solely the trees growing in his part of the hedge. Hancock v. Fitzpatrick, 183 Mo. App. 220, 170 S. W. 408.

In Yoakum v. Davis, 162 Mo. App. 253, 144 S. W. 877, it was held that adjoining landowners were tenants in common in boundary line trees and that consequently one of them could not maintain an action of replevin against the other for the recovery of posts which the latter had cut from boundary line trees.

RIGHT TO REMOVE

Trees on a boundary line may not be cut down or destroyed by one adjacent landowner without the consent of the other, and trespass will lie for an unauthorized cutting.

Quillen v. Betts, 1 Penn. (Del.) 53, 39 Atl. 595; Phillips v. Brittingham, 2 Boyce (Del.) 173, 77 Atl. 964; Slve v. Guerdrum, 29 App. Cas. (D. C.) 550; Beniamina v. Clark, 3 Hawaii 247; Harndon v. Stultz, 124 Ia. 440, 100 N. W. 329; Blalock v. Atwood, 154 Ky. 394, 167 S. W. 694, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 3; Griffin v. Bixby, 12 N. H. 454, 37 Am. Dec. 225; Dubois v. Beaver, 25 N. Y. 123, 82 Am. Dec. 326, affirming Relyea v. Beaver, 34 Barb. 547; Miller v. Holland, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 622; Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645. See also Simpson v. Gibson, 164 Ill. App. 147.

In the case last cited it was held that a building regulation requiring party fences to be erected and kept in good repair by the adjacent landowners did not authorize the destruction of a division hedge by one of two adjoining landowners.

In Blalock v. Atwood, 154 Ky. 394, 167 S. W. 694, 46 L.R.A. (N.S.) 3, it appeared that a tree standing on a boundary line on the border of a sidewalk was destroyed by one of the adjacent landowners. Discussing the right of the other landowner to maintain an action for its destruction the court said: "The fact that the shade tree in question stood on the border of the sidewalk, where it afforded shade for the benefit of those who traveled the sidewalk, did not interfere with the appellee's right to protect it from destruction or with his right to recover damages for the injury done his property right therein by the act of appellants in destroying it." It was also held that exemplary damages could be awarded if the trespass was wantonly committed.

In Miller v. Holland, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 622, construing a statute authorizing a tenant in common in timber land to bring trespass against his cotenant for the unauthorized cutting and removal of trees, the court said: "While this act refers to timber lands alone, it is a remedial statute, and may be construed so as to extend to the cutting of a single tree in which the adjoining owners have an undivided interest as tenants in common whether standing and growing on what would be, strictly speaking, called timber land or not. The object of the legislature was to provide a new and different remedy from that which previously existed for injuries done by one tenant in common against another with respect to the joint estate."

In Hancock v. Fitzpatrick, 183 Mo. App. 220, 170 S. W. 408, it was held that one of two adjoining landowners could not maintain a statutory action in trespass for the recovery of treble damages against the landowner for the cutting of trees standing on the boundary line, where the statute required an allegation of the sole ownership of the plaintiff.

A suit can be maintained by one of two adjoining landowners to enjoin the other from wrongfully destroying boundary trees. Scarborough v. Woodill, 7 Cal. App. 39, 93 Pac. 383; Musch v. Burkhart, 83 Ia. 301, 48 N. W. 1025, 32 Am. St. Rep. 305, 12 L.R.A. 484. Thus in the case first cited, in affirming the judgment of the trial court in granting an injunction at the suit of one landowner to prevent an adjacent landowner from cutting down or destroying cypress trees on the boundary line between the orange orchards of the parties to the suit, the court said: "Defendant contends that as the parties were tenants in common of the trees, no injunction will issue against one at the suit of the other. . . . An injunction will be granted to restrain one of the owners of adjoining tracts of land (tenants in common) from cutting down trees growing on the boundary line where they serve to shelter and protect the buildings of the other, even though their presence be a damage to his land, and notwithstanding the complainant has himself cut down some of the trees. (Musch v. Burkhart, 83 Ia. 301, 32 Am. St. Rep. 305, 48 N. W. 1025; Harndon v. Stultz, 124 Ia. 440, 100 N. W. 329; Robinson v. Clapp, 65 Conn. 365, 32 Atl. 939.) It is argued by appellant in the case at bar that neither the complaint nor the findings show any peculiar conditions or circumstances justifying the issuance of an injunction under the authorities cited. This court will take judicial notice of the flora and climatic conditions of the country. It may from these and the character of the trees in question determine whether they are natural timber growing upon the land, or trees of an ornamental nature planted for a special purpose. From these premises it will be presumed that the cutting of cypress trees for fire wood on the boundary line of an orange orchard in Southern California was not a 'legitimate enjoyment of the estate,' in such trees. We do not think any more specific allegation or finding is necessary to sustain the judgment."

In Musch v. Burkhart, 83 Ia. 301, 48 N. W. 1025, 32 Am. St. Rep. 305, 12 L.R.A. 484, holding to be proper the grant of an injunction, the court said: "The plaintiff has an interest in the trees for which he cannot be compelled, at the election of the defendant, to accept a money consideration. A person is not obliged to suffer his property to be destroyed at the will of another, even though he may be able to recover ample pecuniary compensation therefor. This is especially true of property like trees, planted for and adapted to a certain use, and serving a special purpose. Their owner has an interest in them which he may protect, and to be deprived of it without his consent would be to suffer irreparable injury, within the meaning of the law. It appears in this case that the plaintiff has cut down and appropriated a few of the trees which at one time constituted a part of the line of trees in question, but the fact does not authorize the defendant to cut down and remove the remainder." In that case construing a decree obtained by one adjoining landowner against the other which enjoined the defendant from "tearing down or interfering with the fence on said line, and from interfering" with trees on the boundary line, the court further said: "This must be construed in connection with the injury threatened and the relief asked, to enjoin the defendant from destroying, or in any manner injuring the trees and fence. It was not designed to prevent him from taking care of the trees and maintaining the fence. His right to do so is as great as that of the plaintiff."

One of two adjoining landowners cannot maintain a suit against the other to compel the removal of trees on the boundary line between their lands. Harndon v. Stultz, 124 Ia. 440, 100 N. W. 329. See also Grandona v. Lovdal, 78 Cal. 611, 21 Pac. 366, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121. In the case first cited the suit was brought by a landowner against an adjoining owner to compel the removal of a hedge on the boundary between the properties owned by the respective parties. As alternative relief, the plaintiff asked that if the defendant was found to be under no obligation to remove the hedge she might be allowed to remove it at her own expense. While the defendant denied the plaintiff's right to the relief demanded she disclaimed all interest in the hedge. Modifying a decree in favor of the plaintiff the court said: "In view, however, of the disclaimer made by appellee in argument, and her expressed willingness that appellant may remove the hedge if she so desires, we are disposed to hold that, if appellant so elect, she may have a modification of said decree, allowing her to remove the hedge at her own expense and cost."

"A tree located on the boundary line between the street and private property is the joint property of the city and the property owner. . . . The mere fact that the trees were or might have been owned jointly by the city and the plaintiff does not authorize the city to destroy the trees to the injury or damage of the plaintiff without making due complaint therefor." Simpson v. Gibson, 164 Ill. App. 147.

RIGHT TO CUT TO LINE.

The ownership of a tree standing on a boundary line being in the adjacent owners as tenants in common neither of them has the right to cut away the part of the tree extending on his land to the injury of the common property. Scarborough v. Woodill, 7 Cal. App. 39, 93 Pac. 383; Robinson v. Clapp, 65 Conn. 365, 32 Atl. 939, 29 L.R.A. 582, 67 Conn. 538, 35 Atl. 504, 52 Am. St. Rep. 298; Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645.

"If the tree stands so nearly upon the dividing line between the lands that portions of its body extend into each, the same is the property, in common, of the landowners and neither of them is at liberty to cut the tree without the consent of the other nor to cut away the part which extends into his land, if he thereby injures the common property in the tree." Robinson v. Clapp, supra. In that case as reported in 65 Conn. 365, 32 Atl. 939, 29 L.R.A. 582, it appeared that a large shade tree stood on the boundary line between the lots of the plaintiff and the defendant. The defendant desiring to build on his lot close to the boundary line, was about to be cut away the portion of the tree standing on his lot when an action for injunction was brought against him to prevent the injury to the tree. It was held that the matter was one for the discretion of the trial court. The appellate court said: "It might perhaps fairly be urged that to prevent the defendant from removing that portion of the trunk of the tree upon his own land—thereby depriving him of the opportunity to build upon it as desired—would be likely to produce a greater irreparable injury to the defendant than such removal and the consequent destruction of the life of the tree would cause the plaintiff, and that therefore the equitable remedy of injunction which is not adapted finally to adjust the rights of the parties should have been refused and the contestants left to settle such rights in methods pertaining to the legal and not the chancery jurisdiction. We are inclined to think such elements of discretion enter into this matter that we ought not to disturb the conclusion of the trial court upon it. But we think the law is already well settled in this state as well as elsewhere, and as before stated, that where the branches of a tree extend over an adjacent owner's land, he may lop them off up to the line, even though that were practically to the trunk of the tree. In this case a portion of the trunk is on the defendant's land, and the branch extension of forty to fifty feet, as found, presumably reaches across it. That he should have less right to lop these branches because he owns a portion of the tree than if he owned none of it, appears to us to be unreasonable."

In Bright v. New Orleans R. Co. 114 La. 679, 38 So. 494, it was held that a hedge which was planted on the plaintiff's land and which had been allowed to spread for a number of feet on the lands of an adjacent owner could be cut down by the latter so far as it overreached on his lands.

Tree Overhanging Boundary Line.

OWNERSHIP.

It is said in the reported case that when the base of a tree is wholly on the land of one owner the whole tree is his without reference to its ramifications. That rule is supported by the authorities. Lyman v. Hale, 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 723; Robinson v. Clapp, 65 Conn. 365, 32 Atl. 939, 29 L.R.A. 582, 67 Conn. 538, 35 Atl. 504, 52 Am. St. Rep. 298; Wideman v. Faivre, reported in full, post, this volume, at page 1168; Hoffman v. Armstrong, 48 N. Y. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 537, affirming 46 Barb. 337; Dubois v. Beaver, 25 N. Y. 123, 82 Am. Dec. 326, affirming Relyea v. Beaver, 34 Barb. 547.

Thus in Lyman v. Hale, supra, it was said: "This writ of error is reserved for our advice; and the principal question raised and discussed, is, whether, upon the facts disclosed on the record, the plaintiff and defendant are joint owners, or tenants in common, of the tree in controversy. It is admitted, that the tree stands upon the plaintiff's land, and about four feet from the line, dividing his land from that of the defendant. It is further admitted that a part of the branches overhang, and that a portion of the roots extend into, the defendant's land. If then he be a joint owner of the tree with the plaintiff, he is so, in consequence of one or the other of these facts, or of both of them united. It has not been insisted on, in the argument, that the mere fact, that some of the branches overhang the defendant's land, creates such a joint ownership. Indeed, such a claim could not have been made with any well-grounded hope of success. It is opposed to all the authorities, and especially to that on which the defendant chiefly relies. 'Thus' (it is said) 'if a house overhang the land of a man, he may enter and throw down the part hanging over, but no more; for he can abate only that part which constitutes the nuisance. 2 Rolle (Eng.) 144, l. 30; Rex v. Pappineau, 2 Stra. (Eng.) 688; Cooper v. Marshall, 1 Burr. (Eng.) 267; Welsh v. Nash, 8 East (Eng.) 394; Dyson v. Collick, 5 B. & Ald. 600, 7 E. C. L. 203; Com. Dig. tit. Action on the case for a Nuisance D. 4. And in Waterman v. Soper, 1 Ld. Raym. (Eng.) 737, the case principally relied on, by the defendant's counsel, it is laid down: 'That if A plants a tree upon the extreme limits of his land, and the tree growing extends its root into the land of B next adjoining, A and B are tenants in common of the tree. But if all the root grows in the land of A though the boughs overshadow the land of B, yet the branches follow the root, and the property of the whole is in A.' The claim of joint ownership, then, rests on the fact that the tree extends its roots into the defendant's land, and derives a part of its nourishment from his soil. On this ground, the charge proceeded, in the court below; and on this, the case has been argued in this court. We are to inquire, then, whether this ground be tenable. The only cases relied upon, in support of the principle, are the cases already cited from Ld. Raymond, and an anonymous case from Rolle's Reports. (2 Rolle (Eng.) 225.) The principle is, indeed, laid down in several of our elementary treatises. 1 Sw. Dig. 104; 3 Stark. Ev. 1457n; Bul. N. P. 84. But the only authority cited is the case from Ld. Raymond. And it may well deserve consideration, whether that case is strictly applicable to the case at bar; and whether it carries the principle so far as is necessary to sustain the present defense. That case supposes the tree to be planted on the 'extremest limit'—that is, on the utmost point or verge of A's land. It is not then fairly inferable, from the statement of the case, that the tree, when grown, stood in the dividing line? And in the case cited from Rolle, the tree stood in the hedge, dividing the land of the plaintiff from that of the defendant. Is it the doctrine of these cases, that whenever a tree, growing upon the land of one man, whatever may be its distance from the line, extends any portion of its roots into the lands of another, they therefore become tenants in common of the tree? We think not; and if it were, we cannot assent to it. Because in the first place, there would be insurmountable difficulties in reducing the principles to practice; and, in the next place, we think the weight of authorities is clearly the other way. How, it may be asked, is the principle to be reduced to practice? And here, it should be remembered, that nothing depends on the question whether the branches do or do not overhang the lands of the adjoining proprietor. All is made to depend solely on the inquiry, whether any portion of the roots extend into his land. It is this fact alone, which creates the tenancy in common. And how is the fact to be ascertained? Again; if such tenancy in common exist, it is diffused over the whole tree. Each owns a certain proportion of the whole. In what proportion do the respective parties hold? And how are these proportions to be determined? How is it to be ascertained what part of its nourishment the tree derives from the soil of the adjoining proprietor? If one joint owner appropriate all the products, on what principle is the account to be settled between the parties? Again; suppose the line between adjoining proprietors to run through a forest or grove.

Is a new rule of property to be introduced, in regard to those trees growing so near the line as to extend some portions of their roots across it? How is a man to know whether he is the exclusive owner of trees growing indeed, on his own land, but near the line; and whether he can safely cut them without subjecting himself to an action? And again; on the principle claimed, a man may be the exclusive owner of a tree, one year, and the next, a tenant in common with another; and the proportion in which he owns may be varying from year to year, as the tree progresses in its growth. It is not seen how these consequences are to be obviated, if the principle contended for be once admitted. We think they are such as to furnish the most conclusive objections against the adoption of the principle. We are not prepared to adopt it, unless compelled to do so, by the controlling force of authority. The cases relied upon for its support, have been examined. We do not think them decisive. We will very briefly review those, which, in our opinion, establish a contrary doctrine. In the case of Masters v. Pollie, 2 Rolle 141, it was adjudged, that where a tree grows in A's close, though the roots grow in B's, yet the body of the tree being in A's soil, the tree belongs to him. The authority of this case is recognized and approved by Littledale, J., in the case of Holder v. Coates, 1 M. & M. 112 (22 E. C. L. 264). He says: 'I remember when I read those cases, I was of opinion that the doctrine in the case of Masters v. Pollie, was preferable to that in Waterman v. Soper; and I still think so.' The same doctrine is also laid down in Mitten v. Faudrye, Popham 161, 163; Norris v. Baker, 3 Blustr. 178 [proper citation 1 Rolle 394—?]. See also 20 Vin. Abr. 417; 1 Chitt. Gen. Pr. 652. We think, therefore, both on the ground of principle and authority, that the plaintiff and defendant were not joint owners of the tree; and that the charge to the jury, in the court below, was, on this point, erroneous."

In Hoffman v. Armstrong, 46 Barb. 337, affirmed 48 N. Y. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 537, the court said: "The strong current of authority shows that the mere fact of the boughs or limbs of a tree planted upon the land of one man extending to or overhanging the land of an adjoining owner, does not give the latter any right or title to any part of the tree or to the overhanging branches, or the fruit growing thereon."

The fact that a tree stands in such proximity to a boundary line that its roots extend into the soil of the adjacent owner does not affect the sole ownership of the tree by the person on whose soil the tree is standing. Lyman v. Hale, 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728; Robinson v. Clapp, 65 Conn. 365, 32 Atl. 939, 29 L.R.A. 582, 67 Conn. 538, 35 Atl. 504,

52 Am. St. Rep. 298; Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645. Thus in the case last cited it was said: "This principle of tenancy in common in a tree merely because some of its roots extend into the land of the adjoining proprietor, regardless of the location of the tree, would be attended with so much inconvenience, uncertainty and embarrassment in its practical application, that it furnishes a strong argument against the construction of these cases contended for by the defendant, as well as against recognizing such a principle unless the authorities lead to that result, or the purposes of justice imperiously demand it. There is at first view an apparent equity in the proposition that the proprietor from whose land a tree draws a portion of its support should have some benefit in return, but to allow him an equal right to the tree and its fruits because a single root penetrates his soil, is quite as unjust as to deny him any right in the tree whatever. If he is tenant in common, what proportion does he own? If his interest is in proportion to the portion of nourishment the tree draws from his land how is the fact to be ascertained? Suppose the division line runs through a grove, a fruit yard, a nursery of trees or a forest, and this rule is adopted, there might be a belt of land rods in width, on which the parties would be tenants in common of more or less of the trees. How is each to know or ascertain what he owns solely, and what in common, and what in proportion, especially as the rights of the parties would be constantly changing by the growth, and consequent extension of roots across the division line. Principles of law and rules of property must be such as are capable of practical application to business affairs. . . . On the whole, we think the weight of authority, reason and analogy, as well as convenience, is in favor of the principle that a tree and its product is the sole property of him on whose land it is situated; and that, considering the necessary uncertainty of evidence as to the location and extent of the roots of a tree, its location and property should be determined by the position of the trunk or body of the tree above the soil, rather than by the roots within or branches above it. But even if a tree standing with its trunk at the extreme limit of one's land, with the main roots extending immediately into the soil of the adjoining proprietor, should be regarded as so far substantially upon the line as to become common property, it cannot be so regarded in relation to the tree in question, situate six feet from the division line."

In Grandona v. Lovdal, 78 Cal. 611, 21 Pac. 366, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121, discussing the title of the plaintiff as to trees which overhung his land, the court said: "The trees and the overhanging branches, in so far as they were on or over his land, belonged to the plaintiff, and he could have cut them off or trimmed them at his pleasure."

In Reed v. Drake, 29 Mich. 222, the facts were stated by the court as follows: "Plaintiff sued defendant for removing certain peach trees from his freehold. It appeared on the trial, and the jury found, that some fourteen years before the suit defendant purchased of the common grantor of both parties a parcel of land eighteen rods wide, and that they procured a surveyor to find the line; and they set a worm fence and set out the trees in question on defendant's side of the fence. Defendant has ever since continued in possession up to that boundary. The plaintiff claims that the fence laps over a few feet on his land. The court instructed the jury, if they believed these facts, that defendant was entitled to a verdict." Affirming the judgment of the trial court, the appellate court said: "We think the charge was correct. Whether there was such action as would have conclusively fixed the boundary for all purposes, was not decided, and is not important in this controversy. The defendant, being in a possession which was taken by joint consent as his rightful possession under his deed, has merely removed what he placed there with the co-operation of his grantor, and for his own use and advantage. It would be difficult to find a plainer case. He has done nothing which was not within the direct intent of his grantor when he was put in possession. He has not removed what he found already there, but what was placed there after his purchase, with his grantor's aid as well as assent. The trees were planted by their joint help for the defendant's benefit as owner. His actual possession was measured by their joint action, and was notice to plaintiff of the extent of his claim. It would operate as a fraud upon defendant, to deny his right to remove the trees which were planted and retained under such circumstances; and plaintiff must be held estopped from complaining of such removal, which comes within the scope of the authority under which they were placed on the ground. We think there is no support for any principle which would not go far enough to sustain this defense for the removal of such improvements, whatever may be the case as to the title itself, which, as already stated, is not involved in the case, and needs no discussion."

In England the rule appears to be that a tree overhanging a boundary line belongs to the owner of the soil on which it was planted. Holder v. Coates, M. & M. 112, 22 E. C. L. 265. The fact that a tree belonging to a landowner extends its roots into the soil of an adjoining landowner does not give the latter any right or title to the tree. Masters v.

Pollie, 2 Rolle 141, 81 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 712; Holder v. Coates, M. & M. 112, 22 E. C. L. 264. Compare Waterman v. Soper, 1 Ld. Raym. 737, 91 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 1393. It seems that if the owner of a tree cuts the overhanging boughs so that they fall on the land of another an action of trespass may be maintained by the latter. Mitten v. Faudrye, Popham 161, 79 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 1259 (reported as Millen v. Fawdry, Latch. 120, 82 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 304); Lambert v. Bessey, T. Raym. 421, 467, 83 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 220, 244.

RIGHT TO REMOVE.

A landowner may cut or lop off the overhanging branches of a tree belonging to an adjoining landowner. Lemmon v. Webb [1895] A. C. (Eng.) 1, affirming [1894] 3 Ch. 1; Grandona v. Lovdal, 70 Cal. 161, 11 Pac. 623; Grandona v. Lovdal, 78 Cal. 611, 21 Pac. 366, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121; Lyman v. Hale, 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728; Robinson v. Clapp, 65 Conn. 365, 32 Atl. 939, 29 L.R.A. 582, 67 Conn. 538, 35 Atl. 504, 52 Am. St. Rep. 298; Harndon v. Stultz, 124 Ia. 440, 100 N. W. 329; Tissot v. Great Southern Tel. etc. Co. 39 La. Ann. 996, 3 So. 261, 4 Am. St. Rep. 248 (citing statute); Buckingham v. Elliott, 62 Miss. 296, 52 Am. Rep. 188; Tanner v. Wallbrunn, 77 Mo. App. 262. And see the reported case. See also Lonsdale v. Nelson, 2 B. & C. 302, 9 E. C. L. 96, 107 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 396; Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 116, 88 Am. Dec. 645.

"Trees whose branches extend over the land of another are not nuisances, except to the extent to which the branches overhang the adjoining land. To that extent they are nuisances, and the person over whose land they extend may cut them off." Grandona v. Lovdal, supra.

A landowner desiring to cut off overhanging branches of trees belonging to an adjacent landowner is not required to give notice. Lemmon v. Webb [1895] A. C. (Eng.) 1, affirming [1894] 3 Ch. 1; Lonsdale v. Nelson, 2 B. & C. 302, 9 E. C. L. 96, 107 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 396 (dictum); Hickey v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 96 Mich. 498, 55 N. W. 989, 35 Am. St. Rep. 621, 21 L.R.A. 729.

Thus in Lemmon v. Webb, supra, it was said: "I think it is clear that a man is not bound to permit a neighbor's tree to overhang the surface of his land, however long the space above may have been interfered with by the growth of the tree. Nor can it, I think, be doubted that if he can get rid of the interference or encroachment without committing a trespass or entering upon the land of his neighbor he may do so whenever he pleases, and that no notice or previous communication is required by law."

A landowner cannot destroy or cut down an overhanging tree belonging to his neighbor, but has only the right to cut the overhanging branches back to the boundary line. Grandona v. Lovdal, 70 Cal. 161, 11 Pac. 623; Hickey v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 96 Mich. 498, 55 N. W. 989, 35 Am. St. Rep. 621, 21 L.R.A. 729; Newberry v. Bunda, 137 Mich. 69, 100 N. W. 277. See also Harndon v. Stultz, 124 Ia. 440, 100 N. E. 329. And the owner of the tree may maintain an action to enjoin the adjacent landowner from destroying it. Wideman v. Faivre, reported in full, post, this volume, at page 1168.

A landowner has the same right to remove encroaching roots of trees belonging to an adjoining owner as he has to cut off the overhanging branches. Robinson v. Clapp, 65 Conn. 365, 32 Atl. 939, 29 L.R.A. 582, 67 Conn. 538, 35 Atl. 504, 52 Am. St. Rep. 298; Tissot v. Great Southern Tel. etc. Co. 39 La. Ann. 996, 3 So. 261, 4 Am. St. Rep. 248 (citing statute). See also Lemmon v. Webb [1894] 3 Ch. (Eng.) 1, affirmed [1895] A. C. 1; Grandona v. Lovdal, 70 Cal. 161, 11 Pac. 623; Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 116, 88 Am. Dec. 645.

In Simpson v. Gibson, 164 Ill. App. 147, discussing the right of a municipality in regard to a tree belonging to a private person, the branches of which overhung a street, the court said: "If the trees were so located that the branches which overhung a portion of the street and damaged the street or were an inconvenience to the public in the use of the street or if the body of the tree extended into the street so as to obstruct its use by the public, the city would have the right to remove such branches of the tree as extended into the public street without any compensation to the property owner."

While a landowner may cut off the overhanging branches of trees belonging to an adjacent landowner, he may not convert them to his own use. Lyman v. Hale, 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728. Compare Grandona v. Lovdal, 78 Cal. 611, 21 Pac. 366, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121, discussed in the preceding subdivision.

RIGHT TO COMPEL REMOVAL.

Two cases apparently support the doctrine that a landowner who suffers damages by reason of the overhanging branches of trees belonging to an adjoining landowner may maintain a suit to have the branches removed. Grandona v. Lovdal, 70 Cal. 161, 11 Pac. 623; Hoffman v. Armstrong, 46 Barb. 337, affirmed 48 N. Y. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 537. Thus in the case last cited it was said: "If the branches of the tree which overhung the defendant's land were a nuisance, his remedy was an action for the damages in which, if he succeeded, the nuisance would be abated."

In Tanner v. Wallbrunn, 77 Mo. App. 262, holding that an injunction would not lie against a landowner to compel the removal of his trees because their roots extended into his neighbor's soil, the court said: "The extraordinary relief awarded in this case should not be granted except where the right thereto is clear and the necessity therefor imperative. Such relief will not ordinarily be given, either, when other legal remedies are open to the complaining party. While it is true that my neighbor has no technical right to overhang my soil with the branches of his trees, yet if he do so I have no right to cut his tree down and destroy it entirely. I may, however, clip off the overhanging branches, but only to the extent of such overhanging. . . . The judgment in the case at bar commands not only the destruction of the overhanging branches, but would destroy the tree itself. This clearly is erroneous. At most the plaintiff could only have been entitled to cut away these branches and to the extent only that they may have overhung his property. And this cutting away may have been done without calling in aid the extraordinary writ of injunction. Before this equity power can be successfully invoked there should be 'a strong and mischievous case of pressing necessity.' Washb. on E. & S. [3d ed.] 701; 1 High on Injunctions [3d ed.] sec. 740. From the evidence it appears that about the date of the institution of this suit (whether before or after is not clear) defendant did cut away the branches of the tree to the extent that they overhung plaintiff's building, and thereby plaintiff got all that he was entitled to. But even had defendant refused to cut off such overreaching limbs plaintiff had the undoubted legal right, himself, so to do. And, having this right, it was his duty to avail himself thereof before resorting to this extraordinary remedy. As to the extension of the roots from defendant's tree into the soil of plaintiff's lot, the evidence fails to show that any substantial damages were thereby committed. There is no basement under plaintiff's house; it rests on a stone foundation beginning down three feet below the surface, and the roots complained of have grown beneath this. It is difficult to understand how this did or could damage the foundation wall or the building resting thereon—and indeed the evidence fails to show that any damage did result therefrom. Equity will not interfere where the injury from a private nuisance is merely nominal or uncertain; there must be satisfactory proof of real substantial damage."

In Grandona v. Lovdal, 78 Cal. 611, 21 Pac. 366, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121, the suit was brought for damages and to abate a nuisance consisting of trees overhanging the boundary line of the plaintiff's land. Affirming a judgment in favor of the defendant as against various objections raised by the plaintiff, the court said: "It is urged for appellant that the trees were a nuisance because they interfered with and prevented his enjoying the free and full use of his land for growing fruit trees. But we are unable to see how it can be said that land is injuriously affected, or that its owner's personal enjoyment is lessened, because he cannot use it for a purpose which he has never attempted or wished to use it for. . . . It is specified that the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision, because it appeared that the trunks had crowded the division fence over and upon plaintiff's land, and thereby ousted him from a part of his land. But the plaintiff had never been called upon to repair that part of the fence, and had never been prevented from plowing and cultivating his land as near the line as he could, if the trees had not been there. His property therefore was not injuriously affected, nor his personal enjoyment lessened by the crowding. Besides, the trees and the overhanging branches, in so far as they were on or over his land, belonged to the plaintiff, and he could have cut them off or trimmed them at his pleasure. This being so we do not see how the fact that the trees had grown so that a small part of them was on plaintiff's land could give any cause of action. It is further specified that the decision was contrary to the evidence, for the reason that defendant maintained the trees for the purpose of supplying himself with fuel and hop-poles, and thereby using the plaintiff's land for his own profit and advantage. But how can this maintain plaintiff's contention? The fuel and hop-poles growing over plaintiff's land were his, and could have been claimed by him as against the defendant. And the fact that the balance of the limbs and branches were useful to defendant in no way harmed the plaintiff or gave him cause for complaint. We conclude that the judgment cannot be reversed on the ground that the decision was contrary to the evidence of the law."

Under the Louisiana statute a landowner who suffers a damage from his neighbor's overhanging trees may compel the owner to have them torn up or to have their branches cut off. Tissot v. Great Southern Tel. etc. Co. 39 La. Ann. 996, 3 So. 261, 4 Am. St. Rep. 248.

In Brock v. Connecticut, etc. Rivers R. Co. 35 Vt. 373, a suit was brought against a railroad to enjoin the planting of willow trees within a few feet of the line between the plaintiff's line and the railroad right of way. It was alleged that the soil for a considerable distance from the boundary line would be injured by the willows. Holding that relief was properly granted, the court said: "From a consideration of all the testimony which has been introduced on both sides, we are of opinion that the orator has established the fact by a fair balance of testimony, that the planting and continuance of the trees and their growth, as designed and contemplated by the defendants, would produce the injuries to the orator which he has alleged in his bill would result therefrom. The question then arises, have the defendants a right to plant and cultivate a row of willow trees on each side of their road, through the orator's land, in the manner and for the purposes contemplated, notwithstanding the great injury that must inevitably ensue to the orator therefrom? The defendants surveyed their road across the orator's land, under and by virtue of their charter. Whether they obtained it all by proceedings in invitum, or whether a part was transferred to them by deed, would seem to be immaterial, so far as this question is concerned. They obtained it for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad. By their charter the company were bound to fence their road, and it was in view of this obligation that the price to be paid was fixed upon by the commissioners of the parties but evidently neither party contemplated that the road was to be fenced in this unusual and extraordinary manner, in a way that should virtually destroy or render nearly worthless an amount of land along the sides of the road nearly, if not quite, equal to the amount taken, and that, too, by the introduction into the farms of the willow tree, which some of the witnesses represent as the common enemy of the farmer in that vicinity, and one with which they have been contending half their lives, a tree that most of the witnesses seem to consider as injurious to the surrounding land, to an extent beyond that of most other trees. Whether one or two adjoining landowners, holding their titles in fee, and for the ordinary purposes of cultivation, would have the right to construct a fence, in this manner on the line between them, to the manifest injury of the other, is a question we are not now called upon to decide."

RIGHT TO DAMAGES.

The owner of a tree whose branches overhang the premises of an adjoining landowner is liable to an action for damages for the injuries caused by the overhanging branches. Smith v. Giddy [1904] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 448; Crowhurst v. Amersham Burial Board, 4 Ex. D. (Eng.) 5. See also Lemmon v. Webb [1894] 3 Ch. (Eng.) 1; Buckingham v. Elliott, 62 Miss. 296, 52 Am. Rep. 188; Hoffman v. Armstrong, 46 Barb. 337, affirmed 48 N. Y. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 537.

Thus in Smith v. Giddy, supra, the court said: "It is no doubt quite true that there is no case to be found in the books in which the action has been held to lie against an adjoining owner for allowing his trees to project over the boundary line where the only damage resulting from the projection has been a damage to the plaintiff's crops. It was pointed out by Kelly, C. B., in Crowhurst v. Amersham Burial Board, 4 Ex. D. 5, that there was no precedent for such an action, and it was there suggested that there was much to be said on grounds of general convenience in favor of such an action not being maintainable. But I am of opinion that the principle upon which that case was decided is enough to enable us to decide the present case in favor of the plaintiff. There the action was brought against the owners of a yew tree which they or their predecessors in title had planted on their land and which they allowed to overhang their boundary, whereby the plaintiff's horse in the adjoining meadow feeding on the projecting branches was poisoned; and it was held that the action lay. The court treated the case as an illustration of the rule in Rylands v. Fletcher, L. R. 3 H. L. 330, that a person who brings on to his land something that is likely to do damage if it escapes is responsible if that damage occurs. It seems to me that there is no distinction in principle between the damage occasioned in that case and the damage in the present. The injury to the plaintiff's fruit trees was the natural consequence of the defendant's trees being allowed to overhang. I have come to this conclusion with considerable reluctance, for I have a strong feeling that it is highly desirable not to establish new causes of action if it can possibly be avoided, but I do not see how we can refuse to hold that this action lies without departing from the principle of Crowhurst's case. Moreover, we are fortified in this view by the dictum of Kay, L. J., in the case of Lemmon v. Webb [1894] 3 Ch. 1, where, although it was not necessary to the decision, he distinctly states it as his opinion that for any damage occasioned by overhanging boughs an action on the case would lie. It has been contended that the remedy which the plaintiff has of cutting the trees back himself is all-sufficient, and that under those circumstances it is unnecessary to invent a new cause of action. But that, in my opinion, is no answer to the action."

In Buckingham v. Elliott, 62 Miss. 296, 52 Am. Rep. 188, it was said: "Undoubtedly, if the branches of a noxious tree extend over the land of another and do injury, the owner of the tree may be held responsible for the damage done."

In Smith v. Giddy [1904] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 448, the plaintiff was awarded damages for injuries to his crops caused by the overhanging boughs of trees belonging to the defendant.

In Crowhurst v. Amersham Burial Board, 4 Ex. D. (Eng.) 5, it appeared that the plaintiff's horse was poisoned by eating some of the overhanging branches of a yew tree belonging to the defendant. It was held that the plaintiff could recover damages.

In Ackerman v. Ellis, 81 N. J. L. 1, 79 Atl. 883, discussing the right of a landowner to bring an action against an adjoining landowner whose trees overhung the boundary line, the court said: "Trees which overhang the premises of another are a nuisance to the extent that their branches extend over such premises and the person over whose land they spread is entitled to his action for damages against the person who is responsible for their presence there. Wood Nuis. § 112; Cooley Torts (1st ed.) 567. And this is so without regard to the extent of the damage resulting therefrom, the insignificance of the injury going to the extent of the recovery and not to the right of action. Cooley Torts, supra. The right of action in the present case, therefore, depends upon the fact that the trees overhang the plaintiff's premises, not upon the character of the trees, that being merely an element in determining the amount of the damage sustained by reason of the nuisance." In that case it was held that a landowner could maintain an action against a person in possession of an adjoining tract of land for planting spruce trees so close to the boundary line that the roots and branches of the trees extended into the plaintiff's premises. It was alleged that the trees were "poisonous or noxious" but that allegation was disregarded as surplusage, the character of the trees being considered only in determining the amount of the damage sustained. But it was held that a tenant in possession of the land on which the overhanging trees grew was not liable merely because he maintained the demised land in the condition in which it came to him.

But it has been held that no landowner has a cause of action from the mere fact that the branches of an innoxious tree belonging to an adjoining landowner overhang his premises, his right to cut off the overhanging branches being considered a sufficient remedy. Countryman v. Lighthill, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 405, wherein the court said: "It would be intolerable to give an action in the case of an innoxious tree whenever its growing branches extend so far as to pass beyond the boundary line and overhang a neighbor's soil. The neighbor has a remedy in such case by clipping the overhanging branches, especially if the owner of the tree refuses to do it on being requested. . . . The overhanging branches of a tree, not poisonous or noxious in its nature, are not a nuisance, per se, in such a sense as to sustain an action for damages. Some real, sensible damage must be shown to result therefrom. The complaint in this case alleged that in consequence of the overhanging limbs the plaintiff's garden was damaged. That was not a necessary result, and in what way it was produced was not alleged. The only proof on the subject was, that plaintiff had berry bushes on his side of the line, and he thought there was a difference between those in the shade and those that were not. What the difference was—whether the shaded bushes were injured or benefited by the shade—does not appear. The action was misconceived, and the justice erred in rendering judgment for the plaintiff."

In Buckingham v. Elliott, 62 Miss. 296, 52 Am. Rep. 188, holding that a landowner could recover damages from an adjoining landowner for injuries caused by the noxious roots of a tree belonging to the latter, the court said: "We are not able to draw a distinction between the roots of a tree which extend into a neighbor's land and overhanging branches. It seems to be settled law that overhanging branches are a nuisance, and it must follow that invading roots are. The person intruded on by branches may cut them off; it must be true that one may cut off invading roots; it must be true that he who is injured by encroaching roots from his neighbor's tree can recover the damages sustained from them. The right of action seems clear. In determining how much the person injured shall recover, it may be proper to consider the means of protection in his own hands against the injury complained of. It is an admitted fact in this case that the roots of the mulberry trees destroyed the well. That proves the noxious character of the trees. The trees were planted by a former owner, but the appellee has no right to maintain and continue a nuisance after notice of its character and the injury done by it. True, he has as much right to shade and ornamental trees as his neighbor has to his well of unpolluted water; but if in the enjoyment of his right he invades his neighbor's he is answerable for it. The trees and their roots are his; he must so restrain his roots as not to work injury to his neighbor; he can enjoy the full advantage of his trees, as we suppose, without permitting them to damage his neighbor; he is not required to destroy them, but only to prevent them from encroaching injuriously upon others. This he is required to do upon the principle embodied in the fundamental maxim, 'So use your own as not to hurt another.'"

In Wilson v. Newberry, L. R. 7 Q. B. (Eng.) 31, the action was brought against the owner of yew trees to recover damages for injuries to the plaintiff's stock which had eaten some of the clippings of the tree and were thereby poisoned. It was alleged that the defendant had allowed the clippings to escape from his land. Holding that no cause of action was shown, the court said: "It is not alleged that the defendant clipped the yew trees; it is not alleged that he knew the yew trees were clipped; and it is not alleged that he had anything to do with the escape of the yew clippings on to his neighbor's land. It is quite consistent with the averments of this declaration that the cutting may have been done by a stranger without the defendant's knowledge. I cannot think that the duty charged can be deduced from the facts stated; and therefore, in my opinion, the declaration is bad."

RIGHT TO FRUIT.

The fruit of a tree overhanging a boundary line belongs to the owner of the tree. Lyman v. Hale, 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728; Newkirk v. Sabler, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 655; Hoffman v. Armstrong, 48 N. Y. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 537, affirming 46 Barb. 337; Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645. In the case last cited the court said: "In this case it appears that the plaintiff planted or set apple trees on his own land six feet from the division line between his land and the defendant's land; the trees grew until the roots extended into, and the branches overhung, the defendant's land. The question is whether the defendant is liable either in trespass on the freehold or in trover for picking, carrying away and converting to his own use the apples growing on the branches overhanging his own land. Each party claims to be the sole owner of the fruit in question; the plaintiff upon the ground that he is the owner of the tree and the defendant upon the ground that the branches and the fruit thereon overhung his land, and that in virtue of his ownership of his land he owns everything above it. . . . The defendant . . . cannot be regarded as the owner of the apples merely because the branches on which they grew were wrongfully encumbering his ground. Suppose the defendant's counsel is correct as he probably is, in the proposition that the defendant had the right to cut the roots and branches of the tree to the division line so far as they penetrated or overhung his land, upon the ground that they were unlawfully encumbering his premises; this justification does not extend to the carrying away and converting the apples upon such branches to his own use, unless he was the owner of the apples, either solely, or in common with the plaintiff. The title to the apples depends upon the title to the tree, and the defendant was not the sole owner of any part of the tree. The defendant is liable in either count in the declaration unless he has some property in the tree."

Hence, if an owner of premises converts to his own use fruit on branches overhanging his premises, the owner of the tree may maintain trespass against him. Lyman v. Hale, 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728. And if fruit on an overhanging tree falls to the ground in the neighboring close, the owner of the tree may enter to gather it. Norris v. Baker, 1 Rolle 394, as cited in Lemmon v. Webb [1894] 3 Ch. (Eng.) 1. See also Mitten v. Faudrye, Popham 161, 79 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 1259, also cited as Millen v. Fawdry, Latch. 120, 82 Eng. Rep. (Reprint) 304.

In Hoffman v. Armstrong, 46 Barb. 337, affirmed 48 N. Y. 201, it appeared that the plaintiff while picking fruit from a tree which overhung the land of another was forcibly prevented by the latter from doing so. The plaintiff was not the owner of the tree but she was authorized by its owner to pick the fruit. It was held that the plaintiff could maintain an action for assault and battery.

WIDEMAN

v.

FAIVRE ET AL.

Kansas Supreme Court—March 10, 1917.

100 Kan. 102; 163 Pac. 619.

Trial — Motion to Strike Out — Necessity of Disclosing Ground.

It is not error to overrule a motion to strike out evidence when the objection to it is not disclosed and when its impropriety or insufficiency is not apparent.

Appeal and Error — Scope of Review — Questions of Fact.

Rule followed that where questions of fact have been determined by the trial court upon substantial and competent evidence, such determination is conclusive on appeal.

Estoppel — As Establishing Ownership of Line Hedge.

The doctrine of estoppel cannot be invoked to settle the ownership of a hedge fence when the issues of fact raised by the parties are so determined by the evidence and the findings of the court as to preclude the operation of estoppel.

Same.

Before the doctrine of estoppel can be invoked to settle a boundary line or the ownership of a fence as a boundary line, it must first be established that the parties have recognized the boundary line, or recognized the fence as the division line, and when the facts are resolved to the contrary, the doctrine of estoppel cannot operate.

Evidence — Weight — Conflicting Evidence.

Duty of trial court or jury in determining the facts from conflicting testimony discussed.

Adjoining Landowners — Trees Near Boundary — Ownership.

Where a person has planted hedge trees on her own land and cultivated and cared for them, they are her property; and, although they are growing near the boundary line of a neighbor, such neighbor has no property in them, and unless the trees are doing him an injury, he may be enjoined from meddling with them.

[See note at end of this case.]

Statute Discussed.

Certain constitutional limitations of the scope of section 580 of the Civil Code discussed.

(Syllabus by court.)

Appeal from District Court, Clay county:
SMITH, Judge.

Action by Eugenie Wideman, plaintiff, against Adrian L. Faivre et al., defendants. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion. AFFIRMED.

F. B. Dawes and R. C. Miller for appellants.
F. L. Williams for appellee.

[103] DAWSON, J.—This lawsuit grows out of a controversy between neighboring landowners over a hedge fence. About 1876 the plaintiff, Eugenie Wideman, with the aid of her children and a neighbor planted a hedge fence one hundred and sixty rods long, east and west, near the surveyed line between her land and the defendants' land which bounded hers on the north. The hedgerow was planted in a plowed furrow about one foot south of a direct line between the corner stones which had been set by government surveyors some years prior thereto. Thus the hedgerow was entirely on plaintiff's land. The plaintiff and her children cultivated the hedge until it attained sufficient growth to care for itself. Thereafter she cut the weeds on the south side of it and the defendants cut the weeds on the north side.

About 1883 or 1884, the hedge being insufficient to turn live stock, the plaintiff and defendants placed two strands of wire and fence posts in the hedgerow, the plaintiff placing the wire and posts for eighty rods in the easterly half of the hedge, and the defendants doing likewise in the westerly half of the hedge for eighty rods.

The hedge was never cut or laid, but permitted to grow into trees, and in January, 1915, the plaintiff commenced at the west end of the hedgerow to cut down the hedge trees.

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—74.

Thereupon the defendants likewise began to cut down the hedge trees, beginning at the middle of the half mile of it and working westward. Hence this lawsuit. The plaintiff prayed for damages for the value of the hedge trees cut down and converted [104] by defendants, and for an injunction. Defendant Adrian Faivre disclaimed, and Lester Faivre answered that the hedge fence was on the dividing line between plaintiff's and defendants' land, that the hedge fence was planted about 1882 by plaintiff and himself, she furnishing the plants and he doing the plowing and assisting in setting them out; that he and plaintiff both cultivated the hedgerow. He further alleged:

"That at the time said hedge plants were set out it was mutually agreed and understood by and between the plaintiff and this answering defendant, that when the hedge was set out it was to be the line fence separating plaintiff's and this answering defendant's fence.

"That said hedge fence was set out about the year eighteen eighty-two or three and has remained on the line between said farms ever since.

"That for more than thirty years the plaintiff as well as the defendant, has treated the fence as upon the line. That during all that time she was acquiesced in and governed herself according to said parol agreement. That in law and equity and in good conscience, she is now estopped from claiming that said hedge is not situated upon the true line separating the plaintiff's and this answering defendant's farm."

The trial court made special findings and found all the material issues in favor of plaintiff and enjoined the defendants from further meddling with the hedge trees.

Various errors are assigned which will be noted in the order of their presentation.

The first of these relates to the testimony of a witness touching the value of the hedge trees cut down by the defendants. Since the total amount recovered by plaintiff on this account was only $65, there is some question about the propriety of its review here, our jurisdiction on mere recoveries of money being limited to sums exceeding $100. (Civ. Code, § 566.) But laying that aside, the objection below was thus stated:

[Counsel for defendants] "Now, if the court please, we move to strike out the witness's testimony about there being $100 damage done.

"The Court: The motion to strike out will be overruled."

This general objection did not disclose any reason for the motion to strike out the testimony, and no impropriety or insufficiency was apparent in the evidence objected to. The motion was therefore properly overruled. Professor Wigmore well says:

"The cardinal principle (no sooner repeated by courts than it is [105] forgotten by counsel) is that a general objection, if overruled, can not avail." (1 Wigmore on Evidence, § 18, citing cases.)

It is next contended that—

"There is not one syllable of evidence . . . showing that Eugenie Wideman instructed one James Hodgins . . . that he should run that furrow one foot or any distance whatever south of the monument stone," etc.

Hodgins was the neighbor who helped Mrs. Wideman and her children to set out the hedge plants. He plowed the furrow. It is true; as defendants contend, that there is no evidence that Mrs. Wideman instructed him about how the work should be performed. These people were farmers. When their neighbors turn in to help them with farm work, it is not common—indeed it would be extraordinary—for the party receiving this neighborly assistance, with or without payment therefor, to issue instructions like a train despatcher to a train crew, or the manager of a large business to his employees. Country folks would consider such formality as rank affectation. The trial court's use of the word was merely part of the text of its finding that the furrow was plowed by neighbor Hodgins about a foot from and within Mrs. Wideman's boundary line agreeable to her wishes. There was no lack of evidence to that effect. Defendants' contention on this point is hypercritical and lacks substantial merit.

The next contention is that the evidence shows that the hedge was planted on the true line between the lands of plaintiff and defendants. There being some evidence to support the trial court's findings that it was planted about a foot south of the true line, that proposition is concluded. (United Pac. R. Co. v. Coldwell, 5 Kan. 82; Humphrey v. Wyandt Mortg. etc. Co. 98 Kan. 266, 158 Pac. 42.) The same rule forecloses the question whether Mrs. Wideman and her children and her neighbor planted the hedge about 1876 or whether Mrs. Wideman and defendant Lester Faivre jointly planted it about 1882, and similarly disposes of the question whether there was an understanding and agreement between Faivre and Mrs. Wideman about the hedge or for a division of it.

The doctrine of estoppel is next invoked, on the ground that the parties treated the hedge fence as a division line for over [106] thirty years. That doctrine is sound and well supported by authorities (Tarpenning v. Cannon, 28 Kan. 665); but the findings of fact based upon the issues which the parties sought to submit, and which negative the defendants' contention that the parties treated the hedge as a division fence or that there was any parol agreement thereto or acquiescence therein, preclude its operation here.

Counsel for defendants propound this query: "Mrs. Wideman says she entered into no contract in regard to the fence, the defendant says she did, what shall the court do?" That is easily answered. The trial court or jury shall determine from the appearance and demeanor of the witnesses, their apparent candor or lack of candor, their opportunities for knowing the facts about which they testify, and shall weigh their motives and their interest in the result, and may discount the improbable, or ignore the evidence of one who is seemingly giving false testimony, and the trial court or jury may and should consider all the surrounding circumstances, and thereupon conscientiously but courageously find for the party producing the more credible and preponderating evidence and against the party who is probably lying or mistaken in what he says. When this is done, courts of appeal adopt the result without question as a conclusive ascertainment of the issues of fact. (Underwood v. Fosha, 96 Kan. 240, 242, 150 Pac. 571; Pittman, etc. Co. v. Hayes, 98 Kan. 273, 277, 157 Pac. 1193.)

If the hedge trees were planted on the true boundary line or on a line adopted or acquiesced in as the division line, they would derive their growth and sustenance from the lands of both adjoining landowners and each would be entitled to a share of the hedge timber as tenants in common (1 R. C. L. 401), but this would be wholly apart from the question of the utility of the hedge trees as a fence (Griffith v. Carrothers, 86 Kan. 93, 119 Pac. 548). But since the hedge trees were exclusively on the land of Mrs. Wideman, and were planted and cared for by her, they were her property, with which the defendants had no right to meddle unless upon the ground that the trees were a nuisance.

"A person who has planted trees on his own side of a division fence—the fence being set and the trees planted by the joint action and co-operation of the adjacent owner, who was his grantor,—has a right, as against the grantees of such neighboring owner, to remove the trees, [107] whether such location and planting would or would not have created an estoppel as to the title to the land where they were planted." (Reed v. Drake, 29 Mich. 222, syl.)

"A tree growing near a boundary line, so that its roots extend on each side, is, it seems, wholly the property of him on whose land the trunk stands." (Dubois v. Beaver, 25 N. Y. 123, 82 Am. Dec. 326, syl.)

"It seems that a tree and its product is the sole property of him on whose land it is situated, and its location and property should be determined by the position of the trunk or body of the tree above the soil, rather than by the roots within or branches above it." (Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645, syl.)

(See also 1 R. C. L. 400; 11 R. C. L. 909.) In 1 C. J. 1232, it is said:

"In spite of some confusion among the older authorities as to the ownership of a tree standing wholly on the land of the owner, when its roots extended into the land of another, it is now the generally adopted view, both in this country and in England, that the ownership of a tree under such circumstances is in him in whose land the tree stands."

The defendants present to this court certain photographs showing the hedge stumps, a blue print purporting to show that the hedge-row is on the defendants' land and not on the plaintiffs, and produce an affidavit of the county surveyor who made these photographs and the blue print. The affidavit narrates that the government stones, which were of sandstone, can not be found, that the stones which he did find are limestones, etc. Counsel for the plaintiff move to strike these photographs, blue print and affidavit from the files, since they are no part of the record nor were they presented to or considered by the trial court. Defendants cite section 580 of the civil code as authorizing this practice. It would seem that the scope and limitations of section 580 of the code have been sufficiently explained to the profession to need no discussion here; but it may be repeated that the scope of that section can not constitutionally extend to include what would be mere cumulative evidence, nor evidence which it would be possible to controvert or dispute in the trial court, nor concerning the effect of which there might be differences of opinion or from which different conclusions could possibly be drawn. This court has jurisdiction of a cause in one of two ways—by an invocation of its original constitutional jurisdiction in mandamus, quo warranto or habeas corpus, or through its appellate [108] jurisdiction where it reviews alleged errors of trial courts. In the former, we may glean the facts with the same freedom and liberality accorded to all trial courts. In the latter, when we sit to review the work of a trial court, we are limited to the record made in that court; and there would never be an end of litigation if first one party and then the other were permitted to pile up further evidence in the appellate court which was never submitted to the trial court or jury. The supreme court's jurisdiction is invariably and exclusively original or appellate. There is never a confusion or blending of both. (Hess v. Conway, 93 Kan. 246, 144 Pac. 205; Robinson v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 96 Kan. 137, 144, 145, 150 Pac. 636; Haseltine v. Nuss, 97 Kan. 228, 231, 155 Pac. 55; Doty v. Shepard, 98 Kan. 309, 312, 158 Pac. 1; Girten v. National Zinc Co. 98 Kan. 405, 408, 158 Pac. 33.)

This disposes of all the errors urged by defendants, and since nothing prejudicial appears whereby the result in the trial court can be disturbed, the judgment must be affirmed.

NOTE.

The reported case contains a discussion of the rights of adjoining landowners with respect to hedge trees near a boundary line holding that the trees were the property of the owner of the land on which they grew and that he was entitled to an injunction against their removal by the adjoining owner. This question is fully treated in the note to Cobb v. Western Union Tel. Co. reported ante, this volume, at page 1156.

CONRAD

v.

ELLISON-HARVEY COMPANY.

Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals—March 15, 1917.

120 Va. 458; 91 S. E. 763.

Master and Servant — Wrongful Discharge — Question for Jury.

In a discharged bookkeeper's action on the common counts in assumpsit for salary, the question whether the plaintiff was discharged or quit the service of defendant of his own accord is held to be for the jury.

Pleading — Variance — Sufficiency of Objection.

In view of Code 1904, § 3384, authorizing amendments whenever a variance between pleadings and proof develops during the trial, in a discharged bookkeeper's action for salary, where the declaration contained only the common counts in assumpsit and plaintiff offered in evidence his contract covering his original employment of one year, but defendant at the trial made no objection on the ground of variance between the declaration and proof or upon the insufficiency or the inaptness of the evidence to sustain recovery on the common counts, but his sole objection to the admission of the contract being that it was not then in force, defendant cannot on review successfully contend that plaintiff should have declared especially on his contract and its breach, since parties are not permitted to make one objection to evidence in the trial court and another and different one in the appellate court, but are regarded as having waived all objections save those specifically pointed out.

Master and Servant — Action for Discharge — Evidence — Contract for Previous Term.

The original written contract of employment for one year is admissible to show the terms of the original hiring.

Form of Remedy for Wrongful Discharge.

Where a bookkeeper was employed under a written contract for one year and subsequently continued in service for several years thereafter receiving one increase in salary, the appropriate remedy on his discharge is an action on the common counts in assumpsit.

Pleading — Variance — Trial Amendments.

Code 1904, § 3384, authorizing amendments when a variance between pleadings and proof develops during the trial, is to be construed with liberality by the courts.

Master and Servant — Renewal of Contract — Continuing in Service.

As plaintiff after his original employment for the year 1910 continued in the service of defendant without further contract and received one increase of salary, whether he was employed by the month or by the year in 1914, when he left plaintiff's service, is held to be for the jury.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

Plaintiff is entitled to show the circumstances and negotiations under which he began his original term of service, to be considered with the original contract itself in determining the probable intention of the parties to continue in the relation after the first year expired.

[See note at end of this case.]

Same.

The fact of plaintiff's subsequent employment implies some sort of a contract, from the continuance in service, depending upon the intention of the parties, and there is a rebuttable presumption that he was again employed for a like term.

[See note at end of this case.]

Frauds, Statute of — Renewal of Written Contract for Year.

Where a bookkeeper was employed under a written contract for one year and continued from year to year thereafter, his contract for each of the succeeding years was a contract for one year's service to begin and be performed within the year, and consequently was not within the statute of frauds.

Error to Law and Equity Court of City of Richmond.

Action by L. A. Conrad, plaintiff, against Ellison-Harvey Company, defendant. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff brings error. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

J. O. Page for plaintiff in error.

Jo Lane & Cary Ellis Stern for defendant in error.

[460] KELLY, J.—L. A. Conrad, claiming to have been employed as a bookkeeper by the Ellison-Harvey Company, a corporation, for a period of one year from January 1, 1914, and to have been unlawfully discharged on June 30, 1914, brought this action of assumpsit to recover on account of his salary for the balance of the year. There was a verdict and judgment against him, and thereupon he obtained this writ of error.

Conrad's original employment with the Ellison-Harvey Company began on January 1, 1910, under a written contract which fixed his compensation at $100 per month and his term of service at one year. When the year expired, he continued in the same employment without anything being said as to a new arrangement. In May, 1911, the company, upon a recommendation made by Mr. Harvey at a meeting of the directors, increased Conrad's salary to $125 per month. So far as the record discloses, this increase was [461] not intended to have, or regarded as having, any effect upon the term of his employment. He remained in the service of the company throughout the years 1911, 1912, 1913 and until June 30, 1914, when, as he alleges, he was discharged.

The assignments of error relate exclusively to the action of the trial court upon the instructions to the jury, which necessarily resulted in a verdict for the defendant. Before taking up these assignments, however, it will be in order, and will facilitate and clarify the discussion of the assignments themselves, to dispose of certain contentions of the defendant which, if sound, would defeat the plaintiff's action entirely, and make it necessary for us to affirm the judgment on the ground that no other verdict could have been properly returned, regardless of the instructions.

The first of these contentions is that the plaintiff was not in fact discharged, but quit the service of his own accord. Of this it is sufficient to say, that while the evidence is by no means clear upon the question, it was, in our opinion, one for the jury to determine. The defendants would not deal frankly with him, were moving their principal effects and main place of business out of the State, appeared to have no further position or use for him, and would give him no assurance whatever as to his future employment. Without discussing it in detail, the evidence seems to us, when viewed as a whole, to have tended to show that the company had secretly determined to drop him, and in effect had done so, before he instituted this suit and attached their estate to secure his claim. In this state of the evidence, the question whether he was discharged, or quit, was one for the jury to answer. (Goldsmith v. Latz, 96 Va. 680, 685, 32 S. E. 483.)

It is urged by the defendant, in the second place, that, as this is an action based upon a wrongful discharge, the plaintiff should have declared specially upon the contract and its breach, whereas his declaration contains only the [462] common counts in assumpsit, and that, therefore, his action must fail. This point was not made in the lower court and cannot be successfully raised for the first time here. It is true that when the plaintiff offered in evidence the written contract covering the original employment for the year 1910, the defendant objected, but the objection was not upon any such ground as is here suggested. The objection, and the sole objection indicated, was that the written contract "is not the contract in force in 1914," and that the plaintiff should "be confined to proving the contract under which he is claiming." The contract for 1910 was clearly admissible for the purpose of showing the terms of the original hiring. (26 Cyc. 976, note; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 2d ed. 16, note; Hermann v. Littlefield, 109 Cal. 430, 42 Pac. 443; Tatterson v. Suffolk Mfg. Co. 106 Mass. 56; other authorities cited infra.) At no time during the progress of the trial was there, so far as the record shows, any intimation that the defendant relied upon a variance between the declaration and the proof, or upon the insufficiency or inaptness of the evidence to sustain a recovery upon the common counts. Parties are not permitted to make one objection to evidence in the trial court and another and different one in the appellate court, but are regarded as having waived all objections save those specifically pointed out. Warren v. Warren, 93 Va. 73, 74, 76, 24 S. E. 913; McCrorey v. Thomas, 109 Va. 373, 376, 63 S. E. 1011, 17 Ann. Cas. 373.

In Warren v. Warren, supra, Judge Buchanan, speaking for this court, said: "The parties must stand or fall by the case as made in that (the trial) court. An appellate court is not a forum in which to make a new case. It is merely a court of review to determine whether or not the rulings and judgment of the court below upon the case as made there were correct. Any other rule, it has been well said, would overturn all just conceptions of appellate procedure in cases at law, and would result in making an appeal in such action [463] a trial de novo, without the presence of witnesses, or the means of correcting errors and omissions."

Furthermore, and perhaps more directly to the point in this connection, the action of assumpsit was the appropriate remedy, if the plaintiff was entitled to recover upon the facts as proved, and, conceding that the declaration was defective, it was the duty of the defendant, if it intended to rely upon that point, to then and there call the court's attention to it. Section 3384 of the Code of Virginia, authorizing amendments, upon terms fair to both parties, whenever a variance between the pleadings and the proof develops during the trial, was expressly designed to meet just such a situation as would have been presented in the trial court if the question now made before us had been raised there. This statute has always, and most properly, been regarded with favor, and construed with liberality by the courts of this State; and its terms would have fully met the condition now complained of by defendant. Having failed to avail itself of the remedy thus provided, or to give the plaintiff or the court the opportunity to invoke it, the defendant cannot now take advantage of the irregularity which the statute would have cured. This conclusion is in accord with the well settled policy and repeated decisions of this court. Eagles v. Hook, 22 Grat. (Va.) 510, 512; Langhorne v. Richmond City R. Co. 91 Va. 364, 367, 22 S. E. 357; Bertha Zinc Co. v. Martin, 93 Va. 791, 801, 22 S. E. 869, 70 L.R.A. 999; Moore Lime Co. v. Johnson, 103 Va. 84, 86, 48 S. E. 557; Virginia, etc. R. Co. v. Bailey, 103 Va. 205, 228, 49 S. E. 33; Newport News, etc. R. Co. v. McCormick, 106 Va. 517, 518, 56 S. E. 281; Norfolk, etc. R. Co. v. Perdue, 117 Va. 111, 117, 83 S. E. 1058; Hawkins, etc. v. Edwards, 117 Va. 311, 317, 84 S. E. 654; Burks Pl. & Pr. pp. 585-6-7; Id. p. 770.

Another contention of the defendant, urged as conclusive against the plaintiff's demand, is that he was employed [464] in 1914 by the month and not by the year, and that therefore any action by him based upon a yearly contract must fail. In our view of the evidence, the question thus presented, to say the most that can be said of it for the defendant, was one for the jury to settle. The evidence certainly tended to show, if it did not conclusively show, that the plaintiff, having been originally hired for a fixed term of one year, held over in the succeeding years of 1911, 1912, 1913 and 1914, without any new agreement or different understanding as to the term of service. The only change ever made was the increase of salary in May, 1911, already pointed out. Nothing whatever appears in the record to explain the occasion or purpose of this increase, except the uncontradicted statement of Conrad that, in the course of the original negotiations with representatives of the defendant, he was hesitating about accepting their offer of $100 per month, and called their attention to the fact that he then held an equally remunerative position which he could keep as long as he chose, whereupon Mr. Ellison, the president of the company, said: "Well, come on with us and we will give you one hundred dollars a month now, and later on will increase you." This statement was objected to at the trial solely on the ground that Mr. Ellison was then dead, but when it was made to appear that Mr. Harvey also was present during the conversation, the objection was not further urged. The statement does not appear to us to be very material in any aspect of the case. If it be left out of view entirely, the mere unexplained increase in salary would not in itself be sufficient to show any intent to convert into a monthly employment one which had commenced under a yearly contract. But the plaintiff was entitled to show, for whatever they were worth, the circumstances and negotiations under which he began his original terms of service, so that they might be considered along with the original contract itself in determining the probable intention [465] of the parties continuing the relationship after the first year had expired. The contract for the year 1911, or for any succeeding year, did not exist, and is not claimed to have existed, until the preceding year had expired; but when, after the end of each year, the employment continued some sort of contract was necessarily implied, and the question of what this implied contract was depended upon the intention of the parties. In ascertaining this intention, it was proper for the jury to have before them the original contract and the circumstances under which it was made. It is to be remembered in this connection that the defendant, not the plaintiff, was relying upon the increase of salary, invoking that fact to sustain its contention that the hiring after 1910 was by the month; and, in this aspect, the case became peculiarly one for the application of the general rule permitting evidence of previous dealings and negotiations.

In Tatterson v. Suffolk Mfg. Co. 106 Mass. 56, supra, the court used the following language, which is especially pertinent here: "There was no express stipulation, either written or oral, which fixed the time for the continuance of the employment of the plaintiff by the defendant. That element of their contract depended upon the understanding and intent of the parties: which could be ascertained only by inference from their written and oral negotiations, the usages of the business, the situation of the parties, the nature of the employment, and all the circumstances of the case. It was an inference of fact, to be drawn only by the jury. The whole question, What was the contract existing between the parties, at the time the defendants undertook to terminate the employment? was properly submitted to the jury."

In the case of Chamberlain v. Detroit Stove Works, 103 Mich. 124, 61 N. W. 532, the plaintiff had worked for the defendant company for some years at a yearly salary, and then, in January, 1886, he was elected a director and secretary [466] of the concern. Thereafter he continued to render the same service as formerly, but at an increased salary. He was also re-elected as director and secretary each succeeding year until 1892, when another person was chosen in his place. In May, 1892, he was discharged from the company's employment, and, in an action brought by him, the jury found that he was employed for a full year and that this employment continued distinct from his offices in the corporation. It was held, on appeal, that the character of the hiring was properly left to the jury and that their determination was not improper. See also Mechem on Agency (2d ed.) 602 and cases cited.

So, in the instant case, we find no difficulty in holding that, under the law and the evidence, the jury might very properly have found that the plaintiff had a contract by implication for the entire year 1914. The evidence has already been sufficiently reviewed, and the law applicable to it is perfectly well settled. The English rule is that every general hiring is presumed to be for one year, in the absence of stipulations or circumstances to rebut the presumption. (1 Min. Inst. 4th ed. p. 209; 26 Cyc. 973.) In the United States the prevailing doctrine is that every such general hiring is terminable at the will of the parties (Lile's Notes on 1 Min. Inst. p. 54; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 2d ed. p. 14; 26 Cyc. 874). Both in England and in this country, however, when one enters the employment of another for a definite period (of one year or less) and continues in that employment after the expiration of that period without any new agreement, the presumption, rebuttable of course by evidence, is that he is again employed for a like term.

"A person who has been previously employed by the month, year or other fixed interval, and who is permitted without any new arrangement to continue in the employment after the period limited by the original employment has expired, will, in the absence of anything to show a contrary [467] intention, be presumed to be employed until the close of the current interval and upon the same terms. This, however, is merely a presumption, and gives way before evidence that such a continuation was not intended." Mechem on Agency (2d ed.) sec. 605, p. 434. See also to the same effect, 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) p. 16; 26 Cyc. p. 976; McCullough Iron Co. v. Carpenter, 67

Md. 554, 11 Atl. 176; Wallace v. Floyd, 29 Pa. St. 184, 72 Am. Dec. 620; Tatterson v. Suffolk Mfg. Co. supra; Standard Oil Co. v. Gilbert, 84 Ga. 714, 11 S. E. 491, 8 L.R.A. 410; Kelly v. Carthage Wheel Co. 62 Ohio St. 598, 57 N. E. 984; Douglass v. Merchants Ins. Co. 118 N. Y. 484, 23 N. E. 806, 7 L.R.A. 822.

In the Gilbert Case, cited above, the Supreme Court of Georgia, in the course of the opinion, said:

"In the argument notice was taken of the difference between the English and the American rule as to presuming that an indefinite hiring is for a whole year. It was said that in the former country this presumption holds, but in the latter it does not. Wood, Mast. and Serv. sec 136.

"We think, however, this presumption has nothing to do with the matter; for whether the first hiring has its duration fixed by express or implied contract, if it be fixed in either way, the term (if not longer than one year) admits of duplication by tacit as well as express agreement. When we have a definite term of service, no matter how we get it, subsequent service of the same kind, where no new contract is made and nothing appears to indicate a change of intention, may be referred to the previous understanding, and to a tacit renewal of the engagement."

Summarizing the results of the foregoing discussion, we are of opinion, (1) that the objection to the form of the plaintiff's declaration comes too late to avail the defendant in this court; (2) that whether the plaintiff was discharged, or quit the service prematurely and of his own accord, and [468] (3) whether he was employed for the entire year 1914, or for a shorter period within that year, were questions upon which, under the evidence adduced, the plaintiff (to say the least of his rights upon the latter question) was entitled to a determination by the jury. And it follows further, therefore, that we cannot say, upon any of the anterior contentions of the defendant, that a verdict in its favor was necessarily proper as being the only one which could have been legally found.

This brings us to the plaintiff's assignments of error, which, in view of what has already been said, may be very briefly disposed of. They involve two rulings of the trial court, both of which were erroneous. The first was the refusal of the court to instruct the jury, at the instance of the plaintiff, "that when one enters into the service of another for a definite period, and continues in the employment after the expiration of that period, without any new agreement, the presumption is that the employment is continued on the terms of the original agreement, and this presumption must prevail, unless there be a new agreement shown, or at least facts which are sufficient to rebut the legal presumption and show that a different hiring was in fact intended by the parties."

This instruction contained a correct statement of the law as applicable to the case, and should have been given.

The second error complained of, and in our opinion well assigned, was the refusal of the court to give plaintiff's instruction number 1, and giving instead thereof instruction "A." Instruction No. 1, refused, was as follows:

"The court instructs the jury, that if they believe from the evidence and all the facts surrounding the contract between L. A. Conrad, and the Ellison-Harvey Co., that it was the intention of the parties to enter into a contract of employment by the year, and the said employment to commence at once, it was not necessary that the agreement [469] should be in writing, and if they further believe from the evidence that L. A. Conrad was discharged on the 1st day of July, 1914, they shall find for the plaintiff, and assess his damages at such amount as he would have received in wages for the remainder of his term, less the amount earned by him from other employment."

Instruction "A" was as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that they should disregard the oral testimony on the part of the plaintiff tending to prove the contract for a year's service with the defendant covering the year 1914, for a breach of which the plaintiff sues because the statutory law requires such a contract to be in writing, or to be proven by a memorandum or other writing signed by the party to be charged."

The contract which the plaintiff claimed and sought to prove was a contract for one year's service beginning on January 1, 1914. There was no contention that the agreement for that year was made prior to the day on which it began. The evidence, both oral and written, of the previous contract and relationship between the parties was introduced for the purpose of throwing light upon the intention of the parties during the subsequent year of 1914, and as such has already shown to have been proper, even though in that way it did tend to prove a contract which came into existence during a subsequent year. It was a contract based upon implication and presumption drawn in part from previous dealings between the parties, but it was nevertheless a new contract, not made until the year 1914 began, and to be performed within that year. In other words, it was the ordinary case of a contract for one year's service, to begin and be performed within the year, and consequently not within the statute of frauds, or parol agreements. 3 Min. Inst. (2d ed.) 197; 1 Chitty on Contracts (11th Am. ed.) p. 101; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d ed.) 48, and cases cited in note 1.

[470] "The position of the defendants would be correct, if the plaintiff relied upon the original negotiations as the contract upon which his action was founded. The written evidence does not show any contract which binds the defendants to employ the plaintiff for the whole of a second year. That obligation, if it exists, must be found in some agreement into which the parties had entered within the year. They did enter into some agreement, by the mere fact of continuing their relations of employment and service. It was a relation of contract. The terms of the contract, in the absence of express words, are to be ascertained, not alone by what occurred within the year, but also from all that had transpired previously. From all the evidence the jury must determine, as an inference of fact, what was the understanding with which the parties entered upon the second year of employment and service. That, when found, constitutes their contract. The contract which resulted from the original negotiations did not by its terms, and could not by reason of the statute, extend into the second year. But those negotiations were competent evidence from which to infer what were the terms of the new contract under which the parties continued their relations. We think that the jury were rightly instructed that the statute of frauds did not apply to the contract upon which the plaintiff relied; . . ." Tattersson v. Suffolk Mfg. Co. supra.

The judgment complained of will be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial to be had in conformity to the views expressed in this opinion.

Reversed.

NOTE.

Term of Employment and Rate of Compensation of One Continuing in Service after Termination of Contract.

Introductory, 1176.

Term of Employment:

General Rule, 1176.

Application of Rule, 1178.

Qualification of Rule, 1179.

Rate of Compensation, 1181.

Introductory.

Where a person employed under a contract for a definite period continues in the service after its expiration the courts ordinarily apply a rule analogous to that obtaining in case of a holding over by a tenant, treating the contract as renewed for another like period at the same salary. See the cases cited throughout this note.

"Tacit relocation is a doctrine borrowed from the Roman Law. It is a presumed renovation of the contract from the period at which the former expired, and is held to arise from implied consent of parties, in consequence of their not having signified their intention that the agreement should terminate at the period stipulated. . . . Though the original contract may have been for a longer period than one year, the renewed agreement can never be for more than one year, because no verbal contract of location can extend longer." Standard Oil Co. v. Gilbert, 84 Ga. 714, 11 S. E. 491, 8 L.R.A. 410.

The continuance of an obligation once established is presumed. National Automatic F. Alarm Co. v. Louisiana, etc. R. Co. 115 La. 633, 39 So. 738. This presumption does not alter, but continues the terms of, the original contract, and therefore does not have the effect of converting an express into an implied contract. It merely raises an inference as one of fact that the parties have agreed to extend the operation of the old contract for the same term. Morris v. Z. T. Briggs Photographic Supply Co. 192 Mo. App. 145, 179 S. W. 783.

For a discussion of the duration of a general contract of hiring for an indefinite time, see the notes to Gould v. McCrae, 8 Ann. Cas. 279, and Watson v. Gugino, Ann. Cas. 1913D 215.

Term of Employment.

GENERAL RULE.

It is generally held that where one is employed by another for a definite and fixed period, and is permitted to continue in the same service after the expiration of the period limited by the original employment, it is presumed in the absence of anything to show a contrary intention that the continued services are to be rendered for the same period as that fixed by the original agreement.

England.—Beeston v. Collyer, 4 Bing. 309, 13 E. C. L. 444, 2 C. & P. 607, 12 E. C. L. 286; Stevenson v. North British Ry. Sc. Ct. Sess. 7 F. 1106. See also Rex v. Sow, 1 B. & Ald. 178.

California.—Hermann v. Littlefield, 109 Cal. 430, 42 Pac. 443; Gabriel v. Suisun Bank, 145 Cal. 266, 78 Pac. 736.

Colorado.—State Board of Agriculture, etc. v. Meyers, 20 Colo. App. 139, 77 Pac. 372.

Georgia.—Standard Oil Co. v. Gilbert, 84 Ga. 714, 11 S. E. 491, 8 L.R.A. 410.

Illinois.—Grover, etc. Sewing-Mach. Co. v. Bulkley, 48 Ill. 180; Ingalls v. Allen, 132 Ill. 170, 23 N. E. 1026; Crane Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Adams, 142 Ill. 125, 30 N. E. 1030; Moline Plow Co. v. Booth, 17 Ill. App. 574; Mears v. O'Donoghue, 58 Ill. App. 345; Fish v. Marzluff, 128 Ill. App. 549; Painter v. Durham, 195 Ill. App. 468.

Indiana.—Akron Milling Co. v. Leiter, 57 Ind. App. 394, 107 N. E. 99.

Kentucky.—Stewart Dry Goods Co. v. Hutchinson, 177 Ky. 757, 198 S. W. 17.

Louisiana.—Alba v. Moriarity, 36 La. Ann. 680; Lalande v. Aldrich, 41 La. Ann. 307, 6 So. 28. See also Burton v. Behan, 47 La. Ann. 117, 16 So. 769.

Maryland.—McCullough Iron Co. v. Carpenter, 67 Md. 554, 11 Atl. 176; Lister's Agricultural Chemical Works v. Pender, 74 Md. 15, 21 Atl. 686; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Parker, 82 Md. 22, 47 Atl. 1042.

Massachusetts.—Tatterson v. Suffolk Mfg. Co. 106 Mass. 56; Allen v. Chicago Pneumatic Tool Co. 205 Mass. 569, 91 N. E. 887. See also Dunton v. Derby Desk Co. 186 Mass. 35, 71 N. E. 91.

Michigan.—Sines v. Superintendents of Poor, 58 Mich. 503, 25 N. W. 485; Chamberlain v. Detroit Stove Works, 103 Mich. 124, 61 N. W. 532. See also Laughlin v. School Dist. No. 17, 98 Mich. 523, 57 N. W. 571.

Missouri.—Bell v. Paper Tobacco Warehouse Co. 205 Mo. 475, 103 S. W. 1014; Morris v. Z. T. Briggs Photographic Supply Co. 192 Mo. App. 145, 179 S. W. 783.

Nebraska.—Hale v. Sheehan, 41 Neb. 102, 59 N. W. 554; Home F. Ins. Co. v. Barber, 67 Neb. 644, 93 N. W. 1024, 108 Am. St. Rep. 716, 60 L.R.A. 927; Fitch v. Martin, 74 Neb. 538, 104 N. W. 1072.

Nevada.—See Capron v. Strout, 11 Nev. 304.

New Hampshire.—Chamberlain v. Davis, 33 N. H. 121.

New Jersey.—Passino v. Brady Brass Co. 83 N. J. L. 419, 84 Atl. 615.

New York.—Vail v. Jersey Little Falls Mfg. Co. 32 Barb. 564; Wallace v. Devlin, 36 Hun 275; Huntingdon v. Claflin, 38 N. Y. 182; Douglass v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 118 N. Y. 484, 23 N. E. 806, 7 L.R.A. 822; Adams v. Fitzpatrick, 125 N. Y. 124, 26 N. E. 143, affirming 56 Super. Ct. 580, 5 N. Y. S. 181; Hodge v. Newton, 14 Daly 372, 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 139; Greer v. People's Telephone, etc. Co. 50 Super. Ct. 517; Bacon v. New Home Sewing Mach. etc. Co. 59 Hun 624, 13 N. Y. S. 359, affirmed in 129 N. Y. 658; Brightson v. H. B. Claflin Co. 84 App. Div. 557, 82 N. Y. S. 667, reversed on other grounds in 180 N. Y. 76, 72 N. E. 920; Bennett v. Mahler, 90 App. Div. 22, 85 N. Y. S. 669; Treffinger v. Groh, 112 App. Div. 250, 98 N. Y. S. 291; Mendelson v. Bronner, 124 App. Div. 396, 108 N. Y.

S. 807; Schott v. La Compagnie Generale, etc. 52 Misc. 236, 102 N. Y. S. 901; Wood v. Miller, 78 Misc. 377, 138 N. Y. S. 502; Moskowitz v. Mawhinney, 137 N. Y. S. 903. See also Mason v. New York Produce Exch. 196 N. Y. 548, 89 N. E. 1104, affirming 127 App. Div. 282, 111 N. Y. S. 163; Schrader v. Fraenckie, 117 App. Div. 97, 102 N. Y. S. 335; Summers v. Phenix Ins. Co. 50 Misc. 181, 98 N. Y. S. 226.

Ohio.—Kelly v. Carthage Wheel Co. 62 Ohio St. 598, 57 N. E. 984.

Pennsylvania.—Wallace v. Floyd, 29 Pa. St. 184, 72 Am. Dec. 620.

Texas.—Houston Ice, etc. Co. v. Nicolini, 96 S. W. 84.

Virginia.—Norfolk Hosiery, etc. Mills Co. v. Westheimer, 92 S. E. 922. And see the reported case.

Wisconsin.—Kellogg v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 94 Wis. 554, 69 N. W. 362; Dickinson v. Norwegian Plow Co. 96 Wis. 376, 71 N. W. 606; Dickinson v. Norwegian Plow Co. 101 Wis. 157, 76 N. W. 1108; Appleton Waterworks Co. v. Appleton, 132 Wis. 563, 113 N. W. 44.

"It is elementary that when a person performing labor at an agreed price and for a stated time continues in the same employment after the expiration of the term, without a new agreement, it is presumed by the law in the absence of anything to the contrary, that the terms of the original contract are continued." Hermann v. Littlefield, 109 Cal. 430, 42 Pac. 443.

"It is the same in principle as a holding over by a tenant who is under a specified contract; if he holds over he will be considered as holding under the first contract if no change is shown." Fish v. Marzluff, 128 Ill. App. 549.

In California a statute (Civ. Code, § 2012) provides as follows: "Where after the expiration of an agreement respecting the wages and the term of service, the parties continue the relation of master and servant, they are presumed to have renewed the agreement for the same wages and term of service." In Gabriel v. Suisun Bank, 145 Cal. 266, 78 Pac. 736, it appeared that the plaintiff was employed as a bookkeeper for the year 1898 at a yearly salary of $1,200 payable monthly and was discharged after two months' employment in 1899, there having been no specific agreement for the renewal of the old agreement. It was held that the testimony sufficiently showed that the plaintiff was employed for the year 1898 and that under the foregoing statute the presumption arose that the employment was renewed for the ensuing year.

Opposed to the foregoing decisions is the case of Harnwell v. Parry Sound Lumber Co. 24 Ont. App. 110, wherein it appeared that the plaintiff was hired as a bookkeeper for a year, at the expiration of which nothing was said by either party, but the plaintiff continued in his employment. Shortly afterwards his employer gave him three months' notice to "quit." In an action to recover for the balance of the year, the court, after a review of the decisions, held that he could be dismissed on reasonable notice, and that three months' notice was, under the circumstances, reasonable, saying that the fact that the previous hiring was expressly for one year certain could not be regarded as creating an implied contract for a similar period. See also Halter v. Goody, 4 Sask. L. Rep. 161, wherein the court seemingly cited with approval Harnwell v. Parry Sound Lumber Co. supra, saying: "The conclusion, therefore, seems to be that where there has been a hiring for a definite period and at the expiration of that period the employee continues working without any new arrangement being entered into, the employment is continued so far as remuneration is concerned on the same terms as before, but the master may dismiss him at any time on giving him reasonable notice."

In New York it appears that where a contract of hiring is for a term less than a year, the presumption that the parties agree to a renewal of the contract for the same period by reason of the plaintiff's continuance in the employ of the defendant does not arise, the presumption being confined to cases where the original contract of hiring is for the term of one year. Barnes v. Summit Silk Mfg. Co. 113 N. Y. S. 977. Thus it was said in Caldwell v. Caldwell Co. 88 N. Y. S. 970: "Before the rule contended for by the plaintiff, namely, that where one enters into the employ of another under a contract for a year's service, and continues in the employment after the expiration of the year, the presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is that the parties agreed to a continuance for another year at the same salary, can have any application, it must appear that in fact there was a prior contract for a whole year's service, and that services were rendered thereunder for at least one year." To the same effect see Moskowitz v. Mawhinney, 137 N. Y. S. 903, wherein the plaintiff sued to recover damages for the breach of a contract whereby he was employed as a salesman for six months with the privilege of renewal for a further period of six months, which privilege was exercised. An action for the balance of a third six months' period was held not to be maintainable. But see Wood v. Miller, 78 Misc. 377, 138 N. Y. S. 562, wherein the court said that "in passing, although not necessary to the determination, we might observe that, if the first hiring was for a definite term of six months, a renewal for that term would be implied, and not an indefinite hiring."

APPLICATION OF RULE.

In Allen v. Chicago Pneumatic Tool Co. 205 Mass. 569, 91 N. E. 887, it appeared that a written contract of hiring for one year provided that "in the event that either or both parties do not desire to renew this agreement at the time of its expiration that notice be given in writing of intention not to renew at least thirty days prior to the expiration of this agreement." The court said: "From the fact that no notice was given before the expiration of the first year the trial judge had the right to infer that there was a disposition to renew the contract, and from the additional fact that [the employee] without any other express arrangement, either written or oral, continued to work as before, with the full knowledge and approbation of the defendant, the judge could properly infer that it was the understanding of the parties that the contract was renewed. If renewed, then the new contract, like the old, was a contract of hiring for a year, with compensation for the year, to be paid quarterly as before, with the same right in either party to give notice within thirty days of its expiration that there was no further desire for renewal."

In Akron Milling Co. v. Leiter, 57 Ind. App. 394, 107 N. E. 99, the appellant contended on a motion for a new trial that the "appellee was paid for all work performed up to the time of his discharge; that there was no renewal of the original contract, but that appellee's employment thereafter, with no new or different arrangement, was necessarily 'indefinite as to time, and was at the will of either party, and did not operate to continue such expired written contract for another year.'" In denying appellant's contention the court said: "As affecting the question now under consideration, appellee contends in effect that this contract of employment was for a definite period of one year at a fixed yearly compensation and that, 'where one enters into the services of another for a period of one year, and continues in the employment after the expiration of that period, without any new contract, the presumption is that the employment is continued for another year on the terms of the original contract; and this presumption must prevail, unless there be a new agreement shown, or at least facts which are sufficient to rebut the legal presumption, and show that a different hiring was in fact intended by the parties.' Appellee's contention is supported by the decisions of numerous courts of other jurisdictions. . . . In our examination of the question involved we have been unable to find any case, decided by either of the courts of appeal of this state, in which was presented, or decided, the exact question here presented. However, the courts of this state have recognized the rule to be as contended for by appellee when a contract between landlord and tenant was involved, that is to say, this court and the supreme court have held that: 'If a tenant for a year or for a number of years holds over after the expiration of his term by efflux of time, the landlord, at his option and against the will or intention of the tenant, may hold the latter liable as a tenant for another year.' Alleman v. Vink (1902) 28 Ind. App. 142, 146, 62 N. E. 461, and authorities cited."

In Lister's Agricultural Chemical Works v. Pender, 74 Md. 15, 21 Atl. 686, it appeared that the plaintiff, a traveling salesman, entered the service of the defendant, the latter guaranteeing him employment for six months, at the end of which period he continued in the same service for seven months longer and under the same terms, after which he was discharged. In an action for the wages that would have been earned if the plaintiff had been allowed to continue to the end of the third six months' period, it was said: "The first question presented is that in regard to the true construction of the contract. As we have seen, the letter of the 4th of January, 1888, is definite in regard to time only as to the first six months, ending July 1st, 1888. The defendant guaranteed employment to the plaintiff until that date. At the expiration of that period, there was no new contract, and the employment continued as under the original contract for a second period of six months, and a third period of six months was entered upon without any change being suggested as to the terms of employment. And such being the case, it would seem to be fully embraced within the principle adopted by this court in McCullough Iron Co. v. Carpenter, 67 Md. 554. In that case, adopting a principle that seems to be well supported by authority, this court held, in principle and effect, that where there is a contract for hiring or employment on the one part, and service for salary or wages on the other, for any definite or specified time, there is an implied engagement that the service shall continue for the time specified, unless the conduct of one of the parties be such as to justify the other in dissolving the relation; and at the end of each period of hiring, if the parties do not disagree, or come to some new understanding, and the employee continues in the same service, the presumption arises that he is engaged and continues under the original contract, and such service cannot be terminated at the mere will of one of the parties, but only at the end of the current period, unless the employee be guilty of some misconduct that will warrant dismissal."

The fact that the original contract is invalid under the statute of frauds cannot affect the validity of the implied contract, where the first contract is fully performed and performance commences under the implied contract. Hodge v. Newton, 14 Daly 372, 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 139. Compare Schott v. La Compagnie Generale, etc. 52 Misc. 236, 102 N. Y. S. 901.

An agreement to employ one for a trial period of four months and if satisfactory to continue his services for the balance of the year does not impose any duty on the employer to notify the employee that he does not intend to continue the contract. Carter v. Weber, 138 Mich. 576, 101 N. W. 818, 11 Detroit Leg. N. 668.

QUALIFICATION OF RULE.

The presumption of continuance under the terms of a fixed contract may be overcome by proof of a new contract or of facts and circumstances indicating that the parties in fact understood that the terms of the original contract were not to apply to the continued services. Standard Oil Co. v. Gilbert, 84 Ga. 714, 11 S. E. 491, 8 L.R.A. 410.

Where an employee, after his term of hiring expires, renders service of a different character for his former employer there is no presumption that his former contract is renewed. White v. U. S. Gypsum Co. 168 Mich. 238, 133 N. W. 501. So it was said in Ewing v. Janson, 57 Ark. 237, 21 S. W. 430: "The presumption depends upon a continuance of the same character of service and would be contrary to reason if it applied where the character of the service was altered. If one should complete his term of service as a carpenter, and continue service as a plowman or a teamster, there would be no reason to presume that the parties understood he was to receive the same rate of compensation, and we are aware of no authority to support such a principle. On the contrary it is held that no such presumption arises."

In Reed v. Swift, 45 Cal. 255, the court said: "Where a servant has been employed at a stated rate of wages, in a hotel in another state, and the business has been broken up and closed, and the servant paid up and discharged, and two months afterwards the same servant comes and resides with her former employer occupied as a house servant on a farm, this is not evidence of a continuing contract of hiring at the former rate of wages."

Whether the services rendered in a given case are of the same nature, and of the character of service within the view or contemplation of the parties when the original contract was entered into is a question of fact, and as such is proper to be submitted to and be determined by the jury. Ingalls v. Allen, 132 Ill. 170, 23 N. E. 1026.

In O'Connor v. Briggs, 182 Mass. 387, 65 N. E. 836, the plaintiff brought an action to recover for personal services as a salesman for the defendants. The court said: "The evidence tended to show that the plaintiff had been employed by the defendants at a yearly salary of $1,000 for the year ending January 4, 1899, and this suit is brought to recover for services under an alleged renewal of the contract for one year ending January 4, 1900. In December, 1898, the plaintiff met with an accident which rendered him entirely incapable of performing the services called for by the contract. He went to a hospital where he remained more than seven weeks. There is no doubt that the inability to perform his contract absolved both parties from liability to continue performance of it in the future. Stewart v. Loring, 5 Allen 360; Harrison v. Conlan, 10 Allen 85. The evidence, which was contradicted, that the defendants conferred with the plaintiff while he was in the hospital in regard to the collection of certain bills for goods previously sold by him, is not enough to warrant a finding that the relations of the parties under the contract were continued while he was disabled. The plaintiff contends that there was a renewal of the contract for another year, beginning January 4, 1899. He does not contend that there was an express renewal of it, nor any express agreement on the subject. He says that such a renewal should be implied from the conduct of the parties. . . . The work which he had previously done under his contract was that of a traveling salesman. There is no evidence that after his return he ever undertook such work in a regular or formal way. He admitted on cross-examination that so far as he could remember he did not send the defendants any order, nor collect any money for them in the year 1899. There was dispute as to whether he did anything, but if we take his own testimony most favorably for himself, it tends to show that he worked a little about the store, and saw several of his former customers who were delinquent about their bills, and asked them why they did not pay. There were extended negotiations between the parties about March 20 in regard to making a contract for services of the plaintiff to be paid for by commissions, but they failed to agree, and these efforts are of no consequence in the present case. The plaintiff did not complete his contract for the former year, because he could not. He did not come back until nearly two months after the expiration of the year. He did not resume the work in which he was engaged under his former contract, and there is no evidence of any continuity of service or continuance of the former employment in such a way as to warrant a finding that the parties assented to an arrangement for services for another term of the same length at the same salary."

It was held in Anderson v. Freeman, 80 Ga. 364, 9 S. E. 1075, that where a book-keeper was employed by the defendant for a definite term, his continuance after the expiration of the term in the employ of a partnership formed by the defendant and another was not governed by the terms of the former contract.

So in Mason v. Secor, 76 Hun 178, 27 N. Y. S. 570, it appeared that the plaintiff was employed as a salesman by one Craft for several years at a yearly salary, during which time the latter formed a partnership with the defendants to carry on the same business and the plaintiff continued to work for the firm several months after the expiration of his original contract when he was discharged. The court in denying recovery of salary for the balance of the year said: "There was no evidence produced showing that the firm of Charles G. Craft & Co., formed on January 1, 1890, ever made any express contract with plaintiff to employ him for any length of time, or at any agreed salary or otherwise. It seems that having been at work for Craft prior and up to January 1, 1890, as a salesman, he continued in the same employment with the new firm without entering into any express contract with it. Under such circumstances ordinarily an employer can discharge the servant when he elects, and is only liable to pay him the value of his services for the period of his employment. But the plaintiff contends that, having been employed by Charles G. Craft for several years at an annual salary of $1,000, and defendants having on January 1, 1890, formed a copartnership with Craft and continued the same business, and he (plaintiff) having continued after the formation of the partnership in their employ, the presumption is that he continued in the service of the defendants on the same terms as when in the employment of Craft alone. . . . The learned counsel for the appellant fails to cite any authority to sustain his contention as applicable to such a case as this. It is conceded that had Craft continued in business alone after January 1, 1890, and plaintiff had remained in his employ after his last year's service, a contract to employ him another year on the same terms might have been implied. If there was such an implied contract to employ him in this case it arose after January 1, 1890; that is, after the formation of the copartnership, and was implied because plaintiff had been employed by Craft for some years prior to January 1, 1890, and after the formation of the firm and continued in their employ. In fact it is a well-settled principle that where parties have entered into a contract for services for a certain period, which has elapsed, and their connection still continues, they are deemed to have renewed the contract by tacit relocation without any new agreement being entered into. (14 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law 770, 771.) But we are of the opinion that this principle does not apply to such a case as this. The connection between Charles G. Craft and plaintiff was not continued. The firm of Charles G. Craft & Co., . . . is an entirely different party from the one who employed plaintiff prior to and up to January 1, 1890. At that time Craft ceased to do business and a copartnership took his place, and there could be no renewal of the contract then existing between Craft and plaintiff unless by an express contract. Certainly the plaintiff failed to show any renewal of the contract existing between Craft and himself, because it was not made to appear when the personal agreement between Craft and the plaintiff terminated or in fact that it was ended prior to the discharge of plaintiff by the defendant. Also, it does not appear that one of the defendants, Secor, ever knew the terms of the contract between plaintiff and Craft. The plaintiff, therefore, failed to show any contract with defendants to employ him for any definite length of time, and the trial judge properly granted a nonsuit. . . . There was no question of fact for the jury. There was no evidence given from which the jury could have properly found an agreement on the part of defendants to employ plaintiff for a year." See to the same effect Lichtenhein v. Fisher, 87 Hun 398, 34 N. Y. S. 304.

If the nature of the service required to be performed is not different from what the parties had in contemplation when the original contract was entered into, the fact that the services are rendered after the original term expires at a different place, or are of a slightly different character, will not destroy the presumption of a renewal of the contract, if the service is a continuation of the original service and within the scope generally of the original employment. Ingalls v. Allen, 132 Ill. 170, 23 N. E. 1026. Nor does the fact that the plaintiff receives increases in salary rebut the legal presumption that the original term or period of plaintiff's employment is extended for each of the subsequent years by plaintiff's continuing in the service of the defendant after the expiration of those periods. Such changes affect only the amount of plaintiff's compensation but not the duration or period of employment. Stewart Dry Goods Co. v. Hutchison, 177 Ky. 757, 198 S. W. 17.

Rate of Compensation.

It is generally held that where one is hired for a compensation fixed by agreement of the parties for a specified time and continues to serve in the same capacity after the expiration of that time, the law will presume that in the absence of other proof he is to receive compensation at the same rate. Down v. Pinto, 2 C. L. R. 547, 9 Exch. 327, 23 L. J. Exch. 103, 2 W. R. 202; Ewing v. Janson, 57 Ark. 237, 21 S. W. 430; Nicholson v. Patchin, 5 Cal. 475; Perry v. J. Noonan Furniture Co. 8 Cal. App. 35, 95 Pac. 1128; Gabriel v. Suisun Bank, 145 Cal. 266, 78 Pac. 736; Standard Oil Co. v. Gilbert, 84 Ga. 714, 11 S. E. 491, 8 L.R.A. 410; Ingalls v. Allen, 132 Ill. 170, 23 N. E. 1026; Laubach v. Cedar Rapids Supply Co. 122 Ia. 643, 98 N. W. 511; Curtis v. Dodd, 172 Ia. 521, 154 N. W. 872; Thompson v. Detroit, etc. Copper Co. 80 Mich. 422, 45 N. W. 189; Smith v. Velie, 60 N. Y. 106; Caldwell v. Caldwell Co. 88 N. Y. S. 970; Wallace v. Floyd, 29 Pa. St. 184, 72 Am. Dec. 620; Ranck v. Albright, 36 Pa. St. 367; Burden v. Cropp, 7 Wash. 198, 34 Pac. 834; Weise v. Milwaukee County, 51 Wis. 564, 8 N. W. 295. See also Frati v. Jannini, 226 Mass. 430, 115 N. E. 746; Tucker v. Philadelphia, etc. Coal, etc. Co. 53 Hun 139, 6 N. Y. S. 134.

Services rendered without a new agreement after the contract term has expired are to be compensated at the same rate, and to that extent the prior contract is renewed or continued in force. Standard Oil Co. v. Gilbert, 84 Ga. 714, 11 S. E. 491, 8 L.R.A. 410.

When a person hired at an agreed price, for a certain time, continues to perform the same service in the same employment after the time expires, without any new agreement, the law raises a presumption that the parties agree that the original rate of compensation is to be continued. Ewing v. Janson, 57 Ark. 237, 21 S. W. 430; Ranck v. Albright, 36 Pa. St. 367.

Thus it was said in Ingalls v. Allen, 132 Ill. 170, 23 N. E. 1026: "The rule undoubtedly is, that if one person employ another at an agreed price for a time certain, and the employment is continued after the expiration of the time agreed upon without any new agreement as to price, the presumption is that the parties understood that the original rate of compensation is also to be continued; and it can make no difference that there may be some change in the services required and performed, as, that there be an increase or diminution of the labor, so long as it is clearly within the scope of the original employment. The reason is, that if the employee remains in the same employment, after his term of service has expired, without making demand for increased pay, the employer may well presume that no increased compensation is expected or will be required, and having acted upon that presumption, and failed to protect himself by a new contract, the employee will be held to have assented to a performance of the service at the original price. The rights of the employee and employer are mutual and reciprocal. So where the employer permits a continuation of the service after the term has expired, without a new stipulation as to the price, it will be presumed that he expected and intended to pay for the service the original compensation stipulated. In such case, the recovery will not be upon the quantum meruit, but upon the contract implied by law, and for the compensation presumed to have been fixed by the parties."

But where one is employed as a general manager of a concern at a fixed salary per annum and continues in the same service after the expiration of the agreement for a number of years at a reduced salary, he cannot thereafter recover the amount of the reduction. Home F. Ins. Co. v. Barber, 67 Neb. 644, 93 N. W. 1024, 108 Am. St. Rep. 716, 60 L.R.A. 927.

In New Hampshire Iron Factory Co. v. Richardson, 5 N. H. 294, it appeared that one agreed to enter the employ of another for one year at a salary of eight hundred dollars, but said that he should expect one thousand dollars the succeeding year if he continued in the service, to which the employer declined to pledge himself. It was held that a continuance by the employee in the service for two years after the expiration of the original contract did not warrant the presumption that he was to receive the increased wage.

Where an employee hired at a fixed salary continues in the same employment after the expiration of the term of the original hiring, without any new contract, there can be no recovery on a quantum meruit, since the terms of the original contract control. Perry v. J. Noonan Furniture Co. 8 Cal. App. 35, 95 Pac. 1128. To the same effect see Nicholson v. Patchin, 5 Cal. 475.

METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

v.

NELSON.

Kentucky Court of Appeals—June 8, 1916.

170 Ky. 674; 186 S. W. 520.

Life Insurance — Insurable Interest — Necessity.

One who has no insurable interest in the life of another cannot be the beneficiary in a policy issued upon his life and cannot collect the insurance upon the insured's death.

Assignee without Insurable Interest.

The rule of insurance law relative to insurable interest applies with equal force after a life policy is issued, and the beneficiary is changed by assignment or otherwise as it does to the naming of the beneficiary at the time of procuring the insurance.

[See 5 Ann. Cas. 360; 12 Ann. Cas. 686; Ann. Cas. 1913B 864; 87 Am. St. Rep. 506.]

Insurable Interest of Creditor.

A creditor, to the extent of his debt, has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor.

Industrial Insurance — Insurable Interest.

Payment by the insurance company which issued a policy of "industrial insurance," the purpose of which is to provide a reasonable fund with which insured may alleviate his last sickness and secure decent burial, to insured's aunt, his beneficiary, who cared for him in his sickness and buried him, is permissible under the usual "facility of payment" clause in such a policy, providing that payment may be made to the beneficiary or any person equitably entitled, etc., though the aunt has no insurable interest in insured's life.

[See note at end of this case.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson county, Common Pleas Branch, First Division.

Action by Elnora Nelson, plaintiff, against Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. The facts are stated in the opinion. REVERSED.

Clarence Smith and Keith L. Bullitt for appellant.

L. Frank Withers and L. A. Hickman for appellee.

[674] THOMAS, J.—The appellant, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., who was defendant below, on March 4, 1912, insured the life of Abraham Nelson by issuing to him what is called in this record an industrial policy. The premiums agreed to be paid were twenty-five cents per week. The sum to be paid to his beneficiary, or the person named in the clause, which we shall hereafter consider, was $385.00, provided the insured died six months after the delivery. [675] of the policy and the policy should be in force at the time of his death; but only one-half that amount was to be paid upon his death if it should occur within six months after issuing the policy. The insured at the time was twenty-eight years of age, and he had some years before married the appellee Elnora Nelson, who was plaintiff below; but under the proof she abandoned him in 1909 and continued separated from him until his death, which occurred some time in February, 1914. The beneficiary named in the policy at the time it was issued was Lizzie Nelson, the mother of the insured, but some time about Thanksgiving day in 1913, she died. At that time the insured, Abraham Nelson, was living with his mother, they being the only members of the family. For a considerable time previous to the death of his mother, the insured had been afflicted with a disease which had culminated into what is commonly known as dropsy. This had produced considerable swelling of different parts of the body, and especially of the lower limbs. The history of this affliction, for it is not called a disease, is that sooner or later it entirely disables the patient from doing anything, not even attending to his immediate necessities and rendering him completely helpless.

After the death of his mother, there was no one left at the home of the insured to nurse or take care of him, and he determined to move to the house of his aunt, Maria Fields, who was his mother's sister. She lived but a short distance from the home of the insured, and she appears from this record to have been very much attached to him, having assisted in nursing him before his mother's death, and she gladly received the suggestion that the insured should move to her house, and was willing to assume the task of rendering to him all the services of which she was capable, which she seems to have faithfully done. Shortly after the death of the mother, who, as we have seen, was the named beneficiary in the policy, the insured, voluntarily, as is shown by the record, caused his aunt, Maria Fields, to be substituted as beneficiary in the policy in lieu of his deceased mother. After the death of the insured, and upon proof thereof, the company paid to the aunt the amount due under the policy. Shortly after this the appellee, Elnora Nelson, claiming to have the right to administer upon the estate of the insured, was appointed administratrix [676] of his estate, and filed this suit against the defendant company, claiming the right to recover the proceeds of the policy as such administratrix, because she was his widow, and further alleging that the original beneficiary, Lizzie Nelson, left no heirs except Abraham Nelson, the insured, and that he inherited the proceeds of the policy from his mother, and because of this fact, she claimed to have the right as such personal representative to maintain the suit. It was further claimed by her in her petition that at the time her deceased husband designated his aunt as beneficiary in the policy, his mind was so enfeebled that he was mentally incapacitated to do so, but that if this was not true, that Maria Fields did not, under the law of this state, have an insurable interest in the life of her nephew, and could not, therefore, collect the proceeds of the policy, and the payment which the company made to her was, therefore, illegal and void. The defendant denied the allegations of the petition, and insisted that in this character of insurance the strict rule of the law requiring the beneficiary to have an insurable interest in the life of the insured, did not apply because of the entirely different purposes between this character of insurance and ordinary life insurance; and relied upon the following clause in the policy:

"In case of such prior death of the insured the company may pay the amount due under this policy to either the beneficiary named below or to the executor or administrator, husband or wife, or any relative by blood or connection by marriage of the insured, or to any other person appearing to said company to be equitably entitled to the same by reason of having incurred expense on behalf of the insured, or for his or her burial; and the production of a receipt signed by either of said persons shall be conclusive evidence that all claims under this policy have been satisfied."

After the evidence was introduced, which wholly failed to sustain the allegation as to mental incapacity of the insured, the court gave a peremptory instruction directing the jury to find for the plaintiff, which was done and a judgment rendered accordingly. The company has filed a transcript of the record in this court and entered motion that it be granted an appeal from the judgment. [677] It is the settled rule everywhere and has been for a century or more, that one who had no insurable interest in the life of another could not be the beneficiary in a policy issued upon his life, nor could such beneficiary collect the insurance upon the happening of the contingency insured against. The reason for this universal and long-standing rule is, that to hold otherwise would be in violation of a sound public policy, in that if the beneficiary could collect the insurance, without having an insurable interest in the life of the deceased, inducements would be offered for the beneficiary to cause, bring about, or produce, the death of the insured so that the former could reap the benefit of the insurance. This rule as to insurable interest applies with equal force after the policy is issued and the beneficiary is changed by assignment or otherwise, as it does to the naming of the beneficiary at the time of the procuring of the insurance. Some of the Kentucky cases upholding the rule are: Smith v. Agnew, 137 Ky. 83, 122 S. W. 231; Hess v. Segenfelder, 127 Ky. 348, 105 S. W. 476, 128 Am. St. Rep. 343, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1172; Western, etc. L. Ins. Co. v. Grimes, 138 Ky. 338, 128 S. W. 65; Bramlett v. Hargis, 123 Ky. 141, 94 S. W. 20; Irons v. U. S. L. Ins. Co. 128 Ky. 640, 108 S. W. 904, 129 Am. St. Rep. 318; Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. O'Connor, 162 Ky. 262, 172 S. W. 496; Bayes v. Adams, 81 Ky. 368; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 66 S. W. 613, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2070.

The trial court followed the doctrine of these cases in rendering the judgment appealed from.

It could serve no useful purpose here to point out those whom the courts have held to possess an insurable interest in the life of another, further than to say that this court has held that an aunt, because of her blood relationship alone, has no insurable interest in the life of her nephew. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. O'Connor, 162 Ky. 262, 172 S. W. 496; Hess v. Segenfelder, 127 Ky. 348, 105 S. W. 476, 128 Am. St. Rep. 343, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1172; Woods v. Woods, 130 Ky. 162, 113 S. W. 79, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 233.

It is, however, universally held that a creditor to the extent of his debt has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor. The right of Maria Fields, however, to collect this insurance is not sought to be upheld because of any relationship as creditor for services which she rendered to the insured, although such services as we find from the record she did render, coupled with the physician's bills and burial expenses which she paid, might have been more than sufficient to have consumed [678] this policy. As this is not relied upon, the only question to be considered is, whether the payment to Maria Fields of the proceeds of this policy can be justified under the quoted clause therefrom. In other words, shall we draw a distinction between ordinary life insurance and that which we have here? As we have seen, it is insisted that the character of insurance with which we are dealing is what is known as 'industrial insurance.' Whatever that may mean we find it defined in volume two, second series of Words and Phrases, to be: "Industrial insurance' means small policies issued in consideration of weekly payments in contradistinction to the ordinary insurance, where premiums are payable annually, semi-annually, or quarterly." The purpose of this character of insurance seems to have for its object, not the creation of a fund to provide for the future support and maintenance of the family or near relatives of the insured having an insurable interest in his life, or to augment his estate, as ordinary life insurance does; but to provide a reasonable fund with which the insured may procure in his last sickness, which in many cases may be lingering in character, needed aid and assistance by way of nursing and medical attention, etc., and to secure respectable and decent burial. When limited in amount to a reasonable provision for these purposes, the plan, as we view it, is to be commended rather than discouraged. It is the impecunious only who would need such a fund for such purposes and such expenses, if not thus provided, would doubtless have to be furnished through the instrumentality of some charity maintained either by public or private donations. It would seem then, that when this character of insurance is limited strictly within the confines of the purposes stated, to permit it to be issued and paid as provided by the clause, supra, would foster rather than impair the public policy of the state. In such cases the reason for the rule as applicable to ordinary life insurance concerning the feature of the contract now under consideration, does not exist, or, to say the least of it, is largely removed for the manifest reason that the size of the policy is not sufficient to render it probable that any sum would remain after applying the proceeds to the purposes stated, but, if so, it would be so insignificant as to offer no temptation to [679] commit murder. Furthermore, no one would know beforehand whether or not he would be the payee of the proceeds of the policy, as in all of them there is a clause of the character quoted, which is called 'the facility of payment' clause and the expenses provided for are largely incurred after the death of the insured. This character of insurance presenting the question now under consideration, has never been before this court so far as we are able to learn, but has been under consideration by the courts of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and New Jersey in the cases of Bradley v. Prudential Ins. Co. 72 N. E. 989, 187 Mass. 226; Thomas v. Prudential Ins. Co. 24 Atl. 82, 148 Pa. St. 594; and Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Schaffer, 11 Atl. 154, 50 N. J. L. 72. In the Bradley case the equities of the person to whom the insurance was paid were not so favorable as those possessed by Maria Fields in this case. But the court in upholding the right of the company to pay to him the insurance, and giving its approval to the "facility of payment" clause in this character of insurance, after reciting the clause in that policy, which is substantially the same as the one we have here, said:

"Such stipulations are common in industrial policies, the amounts of which always are small; and one purpose of them is to enable the amount of the policy to be paid very speedily after the death of the insured, without the delay or expense of taking out administration, and another purpose is to remove the chance of litigation between claimants. The insurance being taken out by the person whose life is insured, and the person to whom the policy is paid under the provisions of such articles (facility of payment clause) being either a relative or in the position of a creditor, we see no ground for holding such an article void as against public policy. In effect, the article gives the company power, acting in good faith, to discharge its debt and perform its contract by making payment to any person who is a relative by blood or marriage of the insured, or who has incurred expense for the insured."

In the Schaffer case, after reciting the terms of the policy, etc., the Supreme Court of New Jersey, said:

"The company has paid, in strict accordance with that condition, and is thereby discharged, under its express terms, from further liability. The purpose and object [680] of this kind of insurance seem to require the payment to be made in that way, and it should, in good policy, be upheld.

"Unlike the ordinary life insurance, small sums are provided by these industrial policies, to be paid at once on proof of death and surrender of policy. Suit may be brought on it in ten days thereafter, and must be brought within six months from date of the death of the assured. The terms and manner of the insurance contemplate speedy payment to the family of the assured, immediately after his death, to provide a burial fund, or to meet the expenses which in such an emergency must be incurred."

The policy involved in the Thomas case from the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania contained a clause almost identical with the one found in the policy now under consideration, and payment was made as in the Bradley case to one having no insurable interest in the life of the insured, and the court upheld the payment and adjudged the "facility of payment" clause in this character of insurance policies to be valid, saying:

"So far as we can gather from the case before us it will appear to be to insure its members to the extent of a small sum of money (in this case it was $60, and the weekly payment, five cents), in order to provide the means for any necessary expenses in the last sickness or death of the assured. The manifest object of the second schedule of the policy, which I have quoted, was to enable the company, in case of the death of the assured, to pay the amount of the policy without the expense of an administration. . . . The contract itself does not offend against any rule of law or public policy; and we cannot hold that the administrator is entitled to recover without making a new contract for the parties."

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—75.

Under the doctrine of these cases, within prescribed limitations, industrial policies of the character we now have before us seem to be taken out of the rule forbidding none but those having insurable interest from becoming beneficiaries in life insurance contracts or collecting the insurance after the death of the assured. Considering the purpose in view and the benefits to be accomplished, together with the consequent relieving of the public of such burdens, we are not disposed to dissent from the holding of the courts referred to. On the [681] contrary, it is our conclusion that an adherence to them violates no public policy; and that the reason for the rule requiring an insurable interest in the life of the assured by the beneficiary does not exist in this character of insurance.

We do not mean to be understood that the well-established rule on the subject may be set aside or ignored or evaded under the pretense of effecting 'industrial insurance,' but when the policy is clearly of that character, and the size of the policy is not beyond a sum reasonably sufficient to accomplish the purposes intended, and good faith is shown by the parties concerned, we see no reason why the contract should not be enforced; especially when the one receiving payment is related by blood to the assured and exhibits a course of conduct demonstrative of good faith as did Maria Fields in this case.

The business of insurance is gradually expanding and the contingencies provided against and risks assumed by the insurer are constantly increasing. Each time a new field is covered its beneficial results to the people have been demonstrated. We believe the character of insurance now under consideration, if confined to the attainment of the end in view, will not prove to be an exception to past experience. We are, therefore, unwilling to apply to strictly "industrial insurance" as herein defined, the same rule as to requirement of insurable interest of the beneficiary in the life of the assured as prevails in ordinary life insurance which has for its object more of the features of a bonus than of charity.

We, therefore, conclude that the court was in error when he instructed the jury to find for the plaintiff.

The motion for the appeal is sustained and the appeal granted, and the judgment reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Whole court sitting.

NOTE.

Industrial Insurance.

- I. Nature and Purpose, 1186.
- II. Applicability of Principles Governing Life Insurance:
 1. Generally, 1187.
 2. Insurable Interest, 1190.
- III. "Facility of Payment" Clause:
 1. Provision for Payment to Person Equitably Entitled Thereto:
 - a. Generally, 1193.
 - b. Option Exercised, 1194.
 - c. Option Not Exercised, 1198.
 - d. Rights of Assignee, 1199.
 2. Provision for Payment to One of Several Designated Persons:
 - a. Generally, 1200.
 - b. Option Exercised, 1201.
 - c. Option Not Exercised, 1203.

I. Nature and Purpose.

The present note deals with that character of insurance which is known as "industrial insurance," and which has been defined as follows: "Industrial insurance" means small policies issued in consideration of weekly payments, in contradistinction to the ordinary insurance, where premiums are payable annually, semiannually, or quarterly." Russell v. Prudential Ins. Co. 176 N. Y. 178, 68 N. E. 252, 98 Am. St. Rep. 656, reversing 73 App. Div. 617, 76 N. Y. S. 1029. And see the reported case.

As is stated in the reported case, the purpose or object of this character of insurance seems to be, not the creation of a fund to provide for the future support and maintenance of the family or near relatives of the insured, or to augment his estate, as ordinary life insurance does, but to provide a reasonable fund with which the insured may procure in his last sickness needed assistance by way of nursing, medical attendance, etc., and to secure respectable and decent burial.

"It is obvious from this class of contracts, and on consideration of the fact that the provision is for the immediate happenings on the death of the insured, and of the small amount provided for, that it cannot be said, with any propriety or with any proper consideration of this form of insurance, that they are intended to provide a fund for the benefit of creditors, unless that is distinctly set out in the policy itself, as has been done in several cases where a special provision, by pledge or otherwise, has been made for the creditor. In general, to place a policy of this small amount and apparently at times consisting of the whole estate left by a decedent in the hands of an appointed administrator would be to tie up the whole fund, obviously intended to meet burial and other immediate expenses attendant on death, to pervert it from its real object and to cause it to be eaten into seriously by court expenses, and administrative and other allowances of various kinds. These policies are considered as highly benevolent, and are to be so treated." Renfro v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 148 Mo. App. 258, 129 S. W. 444.

In Foryciarz v. Prudential Ins. Co. 95 Misc. 306, 158 N. Y. S. 834, the court said: "These industrial policies are for small amounts and have small weekly premiums. They are sold usually to laboring people of small means. One great purpose of the 'facility of payment' provision must be to afford a ready method of raising money for the benefit of the insured, to pay funeral expenses at the time of death or to furnish medical assistance or some other relief in the last illness; or to have the policy an asset in the hands of the insured in any emergency in life, so that funds for something other than ordinary purposes may be provided. It is also of advantage that a payment may be made to a person other than the administrator or executor; in cases where there is no estate except the policy, the delay and expense incident to the appointment of such officers may be avoided. We may readily see that these would be strong arguments to be used by agents in selling this kind of insurance to this class of customers; and we find these arguments were used among the people where the insured resided. Under the terms of the policy there are several possible payees. First, the executor or administrator; second, any relative by blood or connection by marriage; third, any other person equitably entitled to the same by having incurred expense for her burial, or, if the insured is more than fifteen years of age, for any other purpose. Who is entitled to select the beneficiary? Always it is the insured so long as the selection falls within any permissible class. The company should have no right to select a beneficiary, particularly if it contravenes the expressed wish of the insured. The option contained in the policy should be exercised by the company only where the insured has failed to make a choice."

In Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Schaffer, 50 N. J. L. 72, 11 Atl. 154, it was said: "Unlike the ordinary life insurance, small sums are provided by these industrial policies, to be paid at once, on proof of death and surrender of policy. Suit may be brought on it in ten days thereafter, and must be brought within six months from the date of the death of the assured. The terms and manner of the insurance contemplate speedy payment to the family of the assured, immediately after his death, to provide a burial fund, or to meet the expenses which, in such an emergency, must be incurred."

It is provided by statute in Washington (Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 6155, 6159) that no policy of life or endowment insurance, except policies of industrial insurance where the premiums are payable monthly or oftener, shall be issued unless all statements made by the insured are attached to or contained in the policy, or received in evidence unless the application is attached to the policy. Thereunder, in Pride v. Continental Casualty Co. 69 Wash. 428, 125 Pac. 787, it was held that the policy in suit was neither a life nor endowment policy within the meaning of the law, but fell within the exception as an industrial or accident insurance policy. By its terms it expired one year after issuance, unless renewed; it provided for monthly payments of premiums; and it covered loss of life from external, violent and purely accidental means. It contained provisions for the payment of a weekly indemnity in case of accident or injury arising from numerous violent or external means. It referred to the industrial and special class of employment the assured was engaged in at the time; and it made provision for his inability, because of injuries from purely accidental means, to engage in any labor or occupation. The court said: "It is in every sense of the term a policy of industrial insurance, as contemplated by the legislature in excluding such policies from the provisions of the law. If this is not industrial insurance, we fail to appreciate what character of insurance should be so designated. If the legislature had in mind any distinction between life insurance and industrial insurance as those terms are used in ordinary understanding, and it is evident from making the latter class of insurance an exception to the rules governing the former class that such was the intention, then it must be evident that this policy falls within the exception, or it would be impossible to indicate to a person of ordinary understanding what was meant by the expression industrial insurance as distinguished from straight life or endowment insurance."

II. Applicability of Principles Governing Life Insurance.

1. GENERALLY.

Industrial insurance being but one form of life insurance, with the exception of the special features hereinafter discussed, the general rules relating to life insurance have been held to be applicable to the former without distinction. Industrial Mut. Indemnity Co. v. Thompson, 83 Ark. 574, 104 S. W. 200, 119 Am. St. Rep. 149, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1064; McGurk v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 56 Conn. 528, 16 Atl. 263, 1 L.R.A. 563; Seaback v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 274 Ill. 516, 113 N. E. 862, affirming 196 Ill. App. 76; Nebergall v. Prudential Ins. Co. 193 Ill. App. 189; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 49 Ind. App. 233, 94 N. E. 785; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Wolford, 49 Ind. App. 392, 97 N. E. 444; Public Sav. Ins. Co. v. Coombes, 59 Ind. App. 523, 108 N. E. 244; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Mulleady, 53 S. W. 282, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 879; Western, etc. L. Ins. Co. v. Oppenheimer, 104 S. W. 721, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1049; Baltimore L. Ins. Co. v. Howard, 95 Md. 244, 52 Atl. 397; Home Friendly Soc. v. Roberson, 100 Md. 85, 59 Atl. 279; McNicholas v. Prudential Ins. Co. 191 Mass. 304, 77 N. E. 756, 196 Mass. 565, 82 N. E. 692; Jones v. Prudential Ins. Co. 173 Mo. App. 1, 155 S. W. 1106; Jaggi v. Prudential Ins. Co. 191 Mo. App. 384, 177 S. W. 1064; Melick v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 84 N. J. L. 437, 87 Atl. 75, affirmed 85 N. J. L. 727, 91 Atl. 1070; Heffernan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 88 Misc. 93, 150 N. Y. S. 644; Foryciarz v. Prudential Ins. Co. 95 Misc. 306, 158 N. Y. S. 834; Hood v. Prudential Ins. Co. 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 527; Dominco v. Prudential Ins. Co. 49 Pa. Super. Ct. 156.

Thus, the rules that insurance contracts are to be strictly construed against the company and liberally construed in favor of the insured whenever necessary to prevent a forfeiture of the policy, and that where the policy contains inconsistent provisions or terms requiring construction, that view should be adopted, if possible, which will sustain, rather than forfeit, the contract, have been held to be peculiarly applicable to industrial insurance. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 49 Ind. App. 233, 94 N. E. 785; Public Sav. Ins. Co. v. Coombes, 59 Ind. App. 523, 108 N. E. 244; Melick v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 84 N. J. L. 437, 87 Atl. 75, affirmed 85 N. J. L. 727, 91 Atl. 1070; Foryciarz v. Prudential Ins. Co. 95 Misc. 306, 158 N. Y. S. 834. The reason for so holding advanced in Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, supra, was that the persons who were thus insured were usually people of limited means, many of them women, children, and busy laboring men, not versed in matters of contract, and frequently illiterate and dependent on the agent, in a large measure, for their information.

The doctrine that knowledge affecting the rights of the insured, which comes to the agent of the insurance company while he is performing the duties of his agency in procuring applications for insurance, delivering policies, and collecting premiums, becomes the knowledge of the company, and that if the company afterwards collects the premiums, it waives all objection with regard to the matters of which it has knowledge, has been held to be applicable to industrial insurance companies. McGurk v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 56 Conn. 528, 16 Atl. 263, 1 L.R.A. 563; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 40 Ind. App. 233, 94 N. E. 785; Jones v. Prudential Ins. Co. 173 Mo. App. 1, 155 S. W. 1106. In the case last cited, in holding that there had been a waiver of the provision in the policy prohibiting its assignment, the court said: "But it is obvious the provision of the policy rendering it void in case of an assignment is incorporated for the benefit and convenience of the defendant and may therefore be waived by it. . . . It does not appear that the general officers in charge of defendant's office in St. Louis had knowledge of the assignment until after the death of the insured and the question is, may a waiver touching this matter be predicated on the knowledge and acquiescence of James, the soliciting agent, who negotiated the insurance, delivered the policy to plaintiff and collected the premiums thereon week after week with full knowledge concerning the entire transaction? When the application was entered into by the insured, it was with an express understanding on the part of the insured, Lang, the agent, James, and plaintiff that the insurance was taken out to the use of plaintiff as the creditor of Lang, and that plaintiff should pay the premiums thereon. Plaintiff then paid the first and thereafter all subsequent premiums to the agent, James, who not only possessed full knowledge touching the matter but expressly agreed thereto. In keeping with this arrangement, the policy was delivered by James, the agent, to plaintiff at his barber shop, but no beneficiary was named therein as is usual in such policies containing the 'facility of payment' clause, for they appear to authorize the insurer to exercise considerable discretion as to who shall receive the insurance money. About two weeks thereafter, the assignment was executed by the insured on the policy, and James was fully informed by plaintiff concerning it. It appears that James consented by saying, 'All right,' and continued to collect the premiums from plaintiff week after week. All of the premiums were paid until the death of the insured occurred. In the circumstances of the case, such knowledge and conduct on the part of James, the soliciting agent, should be regarded as revealing a waiver on the part of the company of the condition of the policy against assignments, for though such agent is but a mere solicitor, it is obvious that he possessed authority to take applications, deliver policies thereon and collect the premiums. In this case, the insurance was induced in the first instance by James with a full understanding that it was to be for plaintiff's benefit and on that he paid all of the premiums to James and received credit in the book of the insured therefor. The premiums thus obtained by the agent were paid to defendant and retained by it, it is true, without knowledge on its part concerning all of the facts, but in so far as those premiums were solicited and collected, no one can doubt the authority of James in that behalf. If it were competent for James to induce the insurance and collect the premiums and deliver the policy therefor, it was certainly competent for him to waive the condition of the policy, which waiver alone rendered the insurance valid to the use contemplated and which he utilized to the end of negotiating it. . . . Moreover, in answer to the suggestion that it is not competent as a rule for a mere soliciting agent to either waive such a condition of the policy or estop the company thereabout, the nature and character of the business and the authorized duties of such agents are to be considered. As before stated, the business of industrial insurance is conducted principally among people of the poorer classes, many of whom are illiterate and but slightly informed concerning intricate business matters. Soliciting agents are given separate portions of territory with a view of soliciting insurance among these people, delivering policies to them, and by dividing the payments into weekly stipends, founding a sort of credit system therein known as a 'debit.' These agents call upon the patrons of the company weekly, make collections and enter credit therefor in the book of the insured and seem to have general supervision pertaining to such matters within the immediate 'debit.' To the people with whom they deal, such agents are justly regarded as representatives of the company, with complete power touching the performance of the duties which they daily exercise in their presence. In these circumstances, it would seem, furthermore, that, besides the waiver referred to, the precepts of natural justice should preclude the company, through the intervention of the principle of estoppel, from disputing the validity of the acts and conduct of such a soliciting agent, by which its patrons are induced to part with the premium which eventually finds its way into the home office till of the company. It is the high aim and purpose of the common law to afford adequate relief, to the end of effectuating a just result in the circumstances of every case. It should be administered, too, in every instance with reference to the peculiar facts of each case, in connection with a degree of common sense from which the law itself is evolved. In this view, the acts and conduct of such agents in so far as they are put forward and performed in the fulfillment of their office in negotiating insurance and collecting the premium thereon should be regarded as those of the company. It is certain that the company itself will be estopped to insist upon a forfeiture if, impliedly by the course of its conduct, it leads the insured or his assignee honestly to believe that the premiums being paid are received as compensation on a valid insurance contract."

So, the rule that the lapsing or forfeiture of a policy for nonpayment of the premiums is waived by the act of an agent in subsequently receiving, and of the company in retaining, the premiums after forfeiture for nonpayment, with knowledge of the facts, has been held to be applicable to industrial insurance policies. Industrial Mut. Indemnity Co. v. Thompson, 83 Ark. 574, 104 S. W. 200, 119 Am. St. Rep. 149, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1064; Nebergall v. Prudential Ins. Co. 193 Ill. App. 189; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Mulleady, 53 S. W. 282, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 879; Baltimore L. Ins. Co. v. Howard, 95 Md. 244, 52 Atl. 397; McNicholas v. Prudential Ins. Co. 191 Mass. 304, 77 N. E. 756, 196 Mass. 565, 82 N. E. 692; Jaggi v. Prudential Ins. Co. 191 Mo. App. 384, 177 S. W. 1064; Melick v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 84 N. J. L. 437, 87 Atl. 75, affirmed 85 N. J. L. 727, 91 Atl. 1070. In Baltimore L. Ins. Co. v. Howard, supra, the court said: "The policyholders of this kind of an insurance company are generally poor and illiterate people who most need protection against harsh, technical forfeitures, because least able to appreciate their significance and because easily induced by the conduct of the company to act upon the belief that their policies are in force."

Likewise, the rule that where an insurance company, with a full knowledge of all facts known to the insured with respect to the latter's state of health, continues to collect and retain the premiums and does not elect to rescind the conduct of insurance and to notify the insured, or to tender back the premiums paid, the right to rescind is waived, and the company is estopped to deny liability on the policy, is applicable to cases arising under industrial policies. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 49 Ind. App. 233, 94 N. E. 785.

So, the collection of the premiums on an industrial policy for over a year after the officials had learned that the requisite indorsement consenting to a second policy had not been entered on the first policy, has been held to be a waiver by the company of its right, if it ever had any, to cancel the policy for that reason. Western, etc. L. Ins. Co. v. Oppenheimer, 104 S. W. 721, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1049. See also Hood v. Prudential Ins. Co. 26 Pa. Super Ct. 527.

In Home Friendly Soc. v. Roberson, 100 Md. 85, 59 Atl. 279, it was held that there was some evidence legally sufficient to show that the plaintiff was prevented from bringing suit within the six months' limitation in the industrial policy sued on by the action or conduct of the company's agents and that there was also some evidence of a waiver of this provision after the six months.

In Lally v. Prudential Ins. Co. 75 N. H. 188, 72 Atl. 208, the evidence authorized a finding that the insurance company had led the insured to believe that payment of her weekly premiums at the time stipulated for in the policy would not be insisted on. It was urged that as the insured was in good health when the overdue payments were received and critically ill when the tender in question was made, the former waiver did not apply. The court held, however, that as the question was solely one of the time for paying an existing obligation, and as the waiver was not based on any condition as to the health of the insured when the payments were made, under such circumstances the insurer might not, without previous notice, insist on the letter of its contract when illness should overtake the insured.

Where an industrial insurance policy stated that the premium was to be paid on or before each Monday, a payment made at any time during Monday, was held to be a compliance with the policy. Public Sav. Ins. Co. v. Coombes, 59 Ind. App. 523, 108 N. E. 244.

The rule that a provision in a policy of insurance that if the premium is not paid in accordance with the terms of the policy the same shall be void, is enforceable, in the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, likewise applies to industrial insurance policies. Public Sav. Ins. Co. v. Coombes, 59 Ind. App. 523, 108 N. E. 244.

So, the rule that a waiver of the provisions of a policy need not be in writing indorsed on the policy, but that such a stipulation itself may be waived by the company either by express agreement or by conduct, applies to an industrial policy. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 49 Ind. App. 233, 94 N. E. 785.

A gift may be made of a policy of industrial life insurance payable to the representatives of the insured as effectually as a gift may be made of other choses in action belonging to the insured. Metropolitan Ins. Co. v. Clanton, 76 N. J. Eq. 4, 73 Atl. 1052.

A Kentucky statute (Ky. Stats. 1903, § 659, subd. 3) provides as follows. "On policies of industrial insurance, where the weekly premiums are less than fifty cents each, it shall be optional with the company issuing said policy, to pay either the cash surrender value, or issue a paid-up policy of insurance, and upon such payments the company shall be absolutely released from all further claims or demands whatsoever, under or by reason of said policies, which shall then be canceled." Thereunder, it has been held that where a policy of industrial insurance, providing that in consideration of ten cents per week, the Sun Life Insurance Company agreed at the death of the insured to pay her personal representative $144, was assumed by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company by a contract between it and the former company, and the insured consented to the latter contract, and continued to pay the premiums to the latter company, she could not recover a part of the Sun Life Insurance Company's reserve fund. Jenkins v. Sun L. Ins. Co. 120 Ky. 790, 87 S. W. 1143, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 1142.

For evidence held to show that an industrial policy of life insurance was procured by impersonation, see Loughran v. Prudential Ins. Co. 88 Misc. 11, 150 N. Y. S. 153.

2. INSURABLE INTEREST.

It is well settled with respect to life insurance that one who has no insurable interest in the life of another cannot be the beneficiary in a policy issued on his life, nor can such a beneficiary collect the insurance on the happening of the contingency insured against. 14 R. C. L. tit. Insurance, § 96. See also Baltimore L. Ins. Co. v. Floyd, 5 Boyce (Del.) 201, 91 Atl. 653. And see the reported case. The reason for this universal and long-standing rule is that to hold otherwise would be in violation of a sound public policy, in that, if the beneficiary could collect the insurance, without having an insurable interest in the life of the deceased, inducements would be offered for the beneficiary to cause the death of the insured, so that he might reap the benefit of the insurance. See the reported case.

In view, however, of the purposes of strictly industrial insurance as heretofore stated, policies of this character seem by the courts generally to have been taken out of the rule forbidding none but those having an insurable interest from becoming beneficiaries in life insurance contracts, or from collecting the insurance after the death of the insured. Potvin v. Prudential Ins. Co. 225 Mass. 247, 114 N. E. 292; Foryciarz v. Prudential Ins. Co. 95 Misc. 306, 158 N. Y. S. 834; Carraher v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. St. Rep. 665. And see the reported case for an extended discussion of the reason for this view.

Compare, however, Baltimore L. Ins. Co. v. Floyd, 5 Boyce (Del.) 201, 91 Atl. 653, wherein the court said, in charging the jury: "A contract of life insurance is an agreement between the insurer and the insured, whereby the insurer undertakes to pay a certain sum of money to a certain person, who may be and usually is a person other than the insured, upon the happening of a particular event, usually the death of the insured, in consideration of the payment by the insured of certain premiums, made at stated periods. Such an undertaking, though based upon a contingency that has in it an element of chance, when entered into with legal requisites and for a lawful purpose, is in this day a perfectly legal and commonplace transaction, but the legitimate scheme of life insurance is inclined to be distorted and to some it affords an invitation for a mischievous kind of gambling. To avoid this misuse of a most useful character of undertaking, in which a beneficiary may become interested in the early death of the insured, it is held that the insurance upon a life shall be effected and resorted to only for some benefit incident to or contemplated by the insured, and that insurance procured upon a life by one or in favor of one under circumstances of speculation or hazard amounts to a wager contract and is therefore void, upon the theory that it contravenes public policy. Just what constitutes a wager contract and therefore a void contract of insurance, varies with the different circumstances of each case and the different principles of law applicable thereto. The presence of an insurable interest on the part of the beneficiary is urged as a request to avoid the appearance of a wager contract, holding that without such an interest, the interest of the beneficiary is speculative. An insurable interest in the beneficiary may be shown by proof of the fact of relationship between the beneficiary and the insured within certain degrees, and by proof of pecuniary interest, such as arise between partners and between debtors and creditors. Evidence of such an insurable interest is evidence that the contract is not a wager and is evidence of the contract's validity. But a contract of life insurance may be a valid contract though the beneficiary be without an insurable interest, because no longer does the presence or absence of an insurable interest of the beneficiary alone control the question whether the contract is valid or void. If the beneficiary has an insurable interest and the transaction is otherwise legal, the policy is valid; if he has not such an interest, the policy may still be valid, if the transaction is bona fide and free from speculation. . . . Giving consideration to this instruction upon the law, we say to you, that if you find that the contract of insurance sued upon was procured and entered into by Hanlin, the insured, and the premiums were paid by Hanlin, the insured, either personally or through his agent, and the circumstances otherwise indicate a bona fide nonspeculative transaction, the contract cannot then be held a gambling contract, and your verdict should be for the plaintiff, for the amount of his claim, and interest, whether the plaintiff, as beneficiary, had or had not an insurable interest in the life insured for him. If, however, you find that the plaintiff had an insurable interest in the life of the insured, in the manner before defined to you, evidence of such an insurable interest is evidence which you may consider in connection with all the other evidence in the case, in determining the good faith of the transaction and in reaching a verdict for the plaintiff. But if you find that the plaintiff had no insurable interest in the life of the insured, that is, he was not related to the insured as a relation or in a friendly way, and that the plaintiff procured or was the instrumentality in procuring the contract of insurance for the insured, but in his own favor as beneficiary, and that the contract was not procured by the insured and the premiums thereon were not paid by him or by his agent with his money or upon his obligation, you may find the transaction void as a wager transaction and then your verdict should be for the defendant."

In Prudential Ins. Co. v. Leyden, 47 S. W. 767, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 881, it was insisted that a niece suing as administratrix had no insurable interest in the life of the insured, her aunt. The court held that this contention had no application to the facts of the case, inasmuch as the policy was not taken out on the life of the aunt for the benefit of the niece, but for the benefit of the estate of the insured, and the suit was in the name of her administratrix.

In Hall v. Prudential Ins. Co. 72 Misc. 525, 130 N. Y. S. 355, it was held that a person who had no insurable interest in the life of the assured, but who had voluntarily paid the premiums on a policy of industrial insurance could, by proper action, establish a lien against the policy on the death of the insured to the extent of the premiums paid by him.

It has been held that a person may assign an industrial insurance policy to any one standing in the position of a creditor or dependent, that is, to one who has an insurable interest in his life, and it is not necessary that the assignee should be a relative. Kelly v. Prudential Ins. Co. 148 Mo. App. 249, 127 S. W. 649.

Under the English Friendly Societies Act of 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60, § 15, subsec. 3) a policy of assurance, effected by a member of a friendly society on his own life, is legally assignable by him as an ordinary incident of property and not solely by means of a nomination under the statute. In re Griffin [1902] 1 Ch. 135, 71 L. J. Ch. 112, 86 L. T. N. S. 38, 50 W. R. 250, 18 Times L. Rep. 142, [1901] W. N. 240, overruling In re Redman [1901] 2 Ch. 471, and Caddick v. High-ton [1901] 2 Ch. 476 note.

Another English statute (Assurance Companies Act 1909 [9 Edw. VII, c. 49, § 86]) provides as follows: "(1) Amongst the purposes for which collecting societies and industrial assurance companies may issue policies of assurance there shall be included insuring money to be paid for the funeral expenses of a parent, grandparent, grandchild, brother, or sister. (2) No policy effected before the passing of this act with a collecting society or industrial assurance company shall be deemed to be void by reason only that the person effecting the policy had not, at the time the policy was effected, an insurable interest in the life of the person assured, or that the name of the person interested, or for whose benefit or on whose account the policy was effected, was not inserted in the policy, or that the insurance was not one authorized by the acts relating to friendly societies, if the policy was effected by or on account of a person who had at the time a bona fide expectation that he would incur expenses in connection with the death or funeral of the assured, and if the sum assured is not unreasonable for the purpose of covering those expenses, and any such policy shall inure for the benefit of the person for whose benefit it was effected or his assigns." Thereunder, it has been held that a person who had effected insurance on the lives of his father and mother before the passage of the act, without any bona fide expectation that he would have to pay or contribute towards the funeral expenses of his parents, was not deprived by the latter section of the right to say that he had been induced to enter into the policies by fraud so that the policies were voidable at his instance, and to claim rescission and repayment of the premiums which he had paid. Tofts v. Pearl L. Assur. Co. [1915] 1 K. B. 189, 84 L. J. K. B. 286, 112 L. T. N. S. 140, [1914] W. N. 388, 31 Times L. Rep. 29, 59 Sol. J. 73. In Hughes v. Liverpool Victoria Legal Friendly Soc. [1916] 2 K. B. 482, 85 L. J. K. B. 1643, 115 L. T. N. S. 40, 30 Times L. Rep. 525, [1916] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 308, reversing 114 L. T. N. S. 45, it appeared that a grocer effected with the defendants in their industrial branch five policies, two on the life of a debtor and three on the lives of two of his customers. After a short time, he determined to allow the policies to drop, stopped paying the premiums, and burned the policies. Some two years later the agent went to the plaintiff and by representing that if she paid the arrears of premiums owing on the policies and the future premiums, everything would be all right, induced her to keep up the policies, giving her duplicate policies. It was held that it was a clear case of fraud, that the parties were not in pari delicto, and that the plaintiff could recover the premiums paid by her, though the Assurance Companies Act, 1909 (9 Edw. VII, c. 49, § 23; § 36, subsec. 3), prohibited under a penalty the issue of such policies.

In New Jersey, in industrial life insurance policies, the interest of a person designated as beneficiary is a vested property right, subject to the terms of the policy, construed as applying to such a vested right. Metropolitan Ins. Co. v. Clanton, 76 N. J. Eq. 4, 73 Atl. 1052. However, the rule in force in that state with respect to life insurance, that where the beneficiary in the policy has been changed the original beneficiary is entitled to receive the amount of the policy for the period during which he was such beneficiary, does not apply to industrial insurance policies. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Hooppel, 76 N. J. Eq. 94, 74 Atl. 467, wherein the court said: "The contract of the insurance company in respect to the very vital question to whom the company is legally bound to pay the amount of the policy is singularly obscure. In the Schaffer case [50 N. J. L. 72] above cited Mr. Justice Van Syckel states (at p. 74) that 'there is no contract or agreement to pay to the beneficiary named in the application.' The company in its policy agrees 'to pay to the person or persons designated in condition fifth' therein set forth, upon receipt of proofs, etc., the stipulated sum. But when we turn to condition five we do not find a specification of the person or persons to whom the stipulated sum must be paid; we find only an enumeration of persons to any one of whom the company may, in discharge of its obligation, make a payment of the stipulated sum provided in support of such payment the company can subsequently produce the policy and a receipt for the amount paid, signed by the party who received the same. We find the contract of insurance in this case not only in the policy which Mrs. Hooppel received and kept in her possession, but also in the application for the policy signed by her and retained by the insurance company. The policy refers to the application and makes it 'part of this contract.' Notwithstanding the attempted wholesale incorporation in the policy of this complex paper, containing many words which do not import any contract obligation on the part of anybody, it may not follow that every proposition contained in the application must be deemed as a promise on the part of both of the contracting parties, or the one of them to whom the proposition can be attributed most naturally or plausibly, or with the least possible disregard of common sense. Taking the two clauses of the policy above referred to, viz., the express agreement of the company to pay, and the enumeration of persons to any one of whom a binding payment under conditions stated may be made by the company, in connection with the appointment of the beneficiary contained in the application, the result seems to be that the legal obligation of the company is either—(1) to pay the amount of the policy to any member or members of any of the classes of persons named in condition five, or (2) to pay such amount to 'the beneficiary.' If the legal obligation of the company is to pay the amount of the policy to the beneficiary, then, carrying out the suggestion of Mr. Justice Van Syckel in the Schaffer case, the terms of condition five, so far as they warrant payment to a relative or connection of the deceased, 'operate as an appointment both by the assured and the beneficiary of persons, any of whom are authorized to receive payment of the sum agreed to be paid.' This view seems to be more consistent than the other view above stated with the theory of the contract as a contract of life insurance, rather than a contract for a burial fund. It would be put to a test if a relative, not the beneficiary, should bring an action at law in his own name against the insurance company, and the company should defend on the ground that while the policy provided for paying the amount thereof to a relative, such relative merely acted under an appointment on behalf of the beneficiary, and that the beneficiary alone could sue at law in his own name. If by naming a party as the beneficiary in the application the assured merely adds an extra person to those enumerated in condition five to whom a binding payment under the conditions stated can be made by the company, the words employed are certainly inapt and misleading. The party so nominated in no proper sense, especially having in view the common use of insurance terms, could be called 'the beneficiary.' The language of the application where the beneficiary is styled as the 'person to whom benefit is to be paid' is also inappropriate. The description should not be of a person to whom the so-called benefit is to be paid, but of a person who by the appointment is merely added to the numbers of eligible persons to whom the company can make a binding payment under certain specified conditions, or rather make a payment which, under certain specified conditions, subsequently will be binding upon all parties concerned—all parties who were 'lawfully entitled' to receive such payment. Perhaps a third theory of the legal obligation of the insurance company under this peculiar contract is tenable, viz., that the company enters into a legal contract with every person coming within the enumeration of condition five which can be legally enforced by such person in an action at law, while the equitable title to the money, to whomsoever it may in fact be paid, is deemed to be vested in the beneficiary. One difficulty, perhaps insurmountable, in the way of this theory is perceived when it is considered that it permits 'any relative by blood or connection by marriage,' a brother-in-law, for instance, to maintain an action at law on the policy in his own name. The insurance company in the policy expressly agrees 'to pay the person or persons designated' in condition five, the amount of the policy upon production of proofs of death. There is no requirement here that the person to whom the payment must be made must produce the policy. The company can discharge all its contract obligations by paying to any relative or connection by marriage, husband or wife of the deceased, the amount named in the policy, provided subsequently when such payment is challenged it can produce the policy and a receipt signed by the party to whom the payment was made, and who, of course, comes within the enumeration of condition five. Perhaps also a legal theory of this insurance contract is tenable which makes it enforceable in an action at law brought by the beneficiary or his executor or administrator, or in the absence of any beneficiary by the executor or administrator of Mrs. Hooppel, the party with whom the contract was made, while at all times and under all conditions the insurance company has the right under condition five to discharge itself from all liability to the party 'lawfully entitled' by making payment in the manner therein prescribed. Such a theory would not permit a relative, husband or wife of the deceased, as such, to maintain an action at law for the amount of the insurance, although supported by a tender of the policy for surrender."

III. "Facility of Payment" Clause.

1. PROVISION FOR PAYMENT TO PERSON EQUITABLY ENTITLED THERETO.

a. Generally.

In some instances the "facility of payment" clause commonly inserted in industrial insurance policies provides in substance that the company may pay the sum of money insured thereby to any relative by blood or connection by marriage of the insured, or to any other person appearing to the insuring company to be equitably entitled thereto, by reason of having incurred expense in any way on behalf of the insured for his or her burial, or for any other purpose, and the production by the company of a receipt signed by any or either of the persons enumerated, shall be conclusive evidence that such sum has been paid to the person or persons entitled thereto, and that all claims under the policy have been fully satisfied. Such a clause in a policy is inserted for the protection of the company, to enable it to discharge its obligation by payment to any one of the classes designated, without requiring administration. Wokal v. Belsky, 53 App. Div. 167, 31 Civ. Pro. 130, 65 N. Y. S. 815; Ruoff v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 86 App. Div. 447, 83 N. Y. S. 758; Thompson v. Prudential Ins. Co. 119 App. Div. 660, 104 N. Y. S. 257.

Such a provision, authorizing the selection of one of several persons to whom payment may be made by the insurer, contravenes no law, and is not against public policy. Sheridan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 128 Ill. App. 519, judgment affirmed 230 Ill. 33, 82 N. E. 426; Bradley v. Prudential Ins. Co. 187 Mass. 226, 72 N. E. 989; Thomas v. Prudential Ins. Co. 148 Pa. St. 594, 24 Atl. 82, 30 W. N. C. 107.

In Bradley v. Prudential Ins. Co. supra, the court said: "The stipulation is not as to payment to one in fact equitably entitled to payment, but is as to payment to any person appearing to the company to be equitably entitled to the same. Such stipulations are common in industrial policies, the amounts of which always are small, and one purpose of them is to enable the amount of the policy to be paid very speedily after the death of the insured, without the delay or expense of taking out administration, and another purpose is to remove the chance of litigation between claimants. The insurance being taken out by the person whose life is insured and the person to whom the policy is paid under the provisions of such articles being either a relative or in the position of a creditor, we see no ground for holding such an article void as against public policy. In effect the article gives the company power, acting in good faith, to discharge its debt and perform its contract by making payment to any person who is a relative by blood or marriage of the insured or who has incurred expense for the insured."

The person who is by an insurance company designated, under the "facility of payment" provision in a policy, as the person equitably entitled to the proceeds thereof, and to whom the insurance company under that designation makes payment, receives the money absolutely for his own use, and not merely as a trustee for the estate of the insured. Althouse v. Roth, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 400, wherein the court said: "The nature of the right acquired by the person who is designated by an insurance company, in pursuance of such covenants, as the person equitably entitled to receive the proceeds of the policy and the power of such person to deal with the policy and its proceeds as if it were his own individual property, was again considered in the case of Brennan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 170 Pa. St. 488. This case involved a question which had not been presented in the prior decisions. The policy was for $500 and contained covenants precisely similar to that with which we are now dealing. The company settled with a person other than the legal representative of the insured, but within the class to whom it was authorized to make payment under the clause in question for one-half of the amount called for by the policy and took a receipt from such person in full of all claim against the company. The plaintiff in that case contended that as the company had not paid the full amount of the policy to the person with whom it settled, the estate was at least entitled to recover the balance. The learned judge of the court below, whose opinion upon this branch of the case was adopted by the supreme court, said: 'If, therefore, the company may determine to whom it will pay they may also make their own terms with him, and if he sees fit to take fifty cents on the dollar or any other sum in settlement of the amount insured it concerns no one but himself and the company are discharged. . . . By the selection of Mrs. Rainey, as the party equitably entitled to the money due on the policy it was conclusively determined that the plaintiff was not entitled to it, and that is the end of his case. It is immaterial to him or to us whether she got all she ought to have gotten or not. The company has discharged the obligations of its contract. The policy, by its own terms, is satisfied and no suit can now be entertained upon it.' This decision seems to conclusively settle the question that the party, who is by the insurance company designated, under the provisions of such a policy, as the person equitably entitled to receive the money, is thereby vested with an absolute property in the proceeds and may deal with it as his own. He certainly could have no authority to release the insurance company upon payment of fifty cents on the dollar if the proceeds of the policy were the property of the estate of the insured. The contract of the parties vested the company with a discretion to determine whether the proceeds of the policy equitably belonged to the executor of the decedent or to some other person, within one of the classes designated by the policy.

When the company, under such a policy, in good faith designates a person within the classes specified and that designation is not procured by fraud or misrepresentation upon the part of the person so designated, the person receiving the money acquires the same right to it as if he had been in the policy designated as the beneficiary. We are unable to avoid the conclusion that the question here presented is necessarily ruled by the case last above referred to, and must hold that, in the absence of any allegation of fraud or misrepresentation, the defendant acquired title to the money which he received in his own right."

Where, however, after being served with process in a suit by one of the claimants to recover the amounts due on the policies, the company pays the other claimant, it is not entitled to have the bill dismissed on this ground, leaving the complainant the right to bring a supplemental bill against the person to whom payment is made. O'Donnell v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. (Del.) 95 Atl. 289.

And where the administrator of the beneficiary prevented the insured from changing the beneficiary, and himself received from the insurance company the amount due on the policy, which would otherwise have gone to the complainant as an approved beneficiary, it was held that he could not take advantage of his own wrong, but held the money so received by him as administrator of the prior beneficiary for the complainant as the equitable beneficiary under the policy. O'Donnell v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. (Del.) 95 Atl. 289

b. Option Exercised.

The exercise of the option therein given to an industrial insurer, and its payment of the amount of the policy to a person appearing to it to be equitably entitled thereto, operates as a complete discharge of the company from further liability under the policy. American Security, etc. Co. v. Prudential Ins. Co. 16 App. Cas. (D. C.) 318; Sheridan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 128 Ill. App. 519, judgment affirmed 230 Ill. 33, 82 N. E. 426; Thomas v. Prudential Ins. Co. 158 Ind. 461, 63 N. E. 795; Bradley v. Prudential Ins. Co. 187 Mass. 226, 72 N. E. 989; Prudential Ins. Co. v. Godfrey, 75 N. J. Eq. 484, 72 Atl. 456, affirmed 77 N. J. Eq. 267, 76 Atl. 1067; Thompson v. Prudential Ins. Co. 119 App. Div. 668, 104 N. Y. S. 257; Cohen v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 135 App. Div. 776, 119 N. Y. S. 850; Canavan v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 39 Misc. 782, 81 N. Y. S. 304; Thomas v. Prudential Ins. Co. 148 Pa. St. 594, 24 Atl. 82, 30 W. N. C. 107; Brennan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 170 Pa. St. 488, 32 Atl. 1042; Althouse v. Roth, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 400. See also Jones v. Prudential Ins. Co.

173 Mo. App. 1, 155 S. W. 1106; Clarkston v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 190 Mo. App. 624, 176 S. W. 437; Ferretti v. Prudential Ins. Co. 49 Misc. 489, 97 N. Y. S. 1007.

So, payment of the amount due under an industrial policy to the guardian of the widow of the insured has been held to be a complete defense to a suit by the administrator of the estate of the insured. American Security, etc. Co. v. Prudential Ins. Co. 16 App. Cas. (D. C.) 318. In that case it appeared that the defendant insurance company paid the amount of the industrial policy therein sued on to the guardian of the widow of the insured under the "facility of payment" clause, despite a prior provision in the policy providing for payment of the amount thereof "to the executors, administrators, or assigns of the person named as the insured in said policy, unless settlement shall be made under provisions of" the facility payment clause. The court said: "It is contended on the part of the plaintiff, that the defendant company having obligated itself to pay, upon the death of the insured, the amount of the policy, to his executors, administrators or assigns, it could not afterwards elect to pay the amount to another class of persons mentioned in the second article or clause of the policy, and thus acquit itself of its obligation to pay to the executors, administrators or assigns of the deceased. In other words, that there is a repugnancy between the two conditions. But we can perceive no sufficient reason for this contention. It was competent to the parties so to agree, and there is nothing in the policy of the law that forbids it. On the contrary, the character of the insurance and the object sought to be attained by it, would seem to render it highly proper that the money due on the policy should be applied as contemplated by this second article or clause of the policy, in order to save the cost, expense and delay of administering the fund. Doubtless, the executor or administrator of the deceased would be primarily entitled to receive the fund, as provided in the first article or clause of the policy; but it was competent to the parties to the contract of insurance to stipulate that such primary obligation to pay to the executors or administrators should be conditional or defeasible, and that payment to any of the class or classes of persons designated in the second article of the policy, showing themselves to be equitably entitled to receive the money, should operate a discharge of the defendant from the obligation of the policy. Of course, good faith must be observed, and the full amount of the policy paid; but as this case is presented, we must presume good faith, and that the payment to the guardian of the widow of the insured was for her use and benefit, and that she had an equitable right to receive the fund. The clause of the policy expressly provides 'that the production of a receipt signed by any or either of said parties, or of other sufficient proof of such payment to any or either of them, shall be conclusive evidence that such sum has been paid to the person or persons entitled thereto, and that all claims under the policy have been fully satisfied.'"

Likewise, payment to a man with whom the insured lived under an invalid marriage, who had paid part of the premiums and paid the funeral expenses of the insured, has been held to be a full and complete bar to an action by the administrator of the insured. Bradley v. Prudential Ins. Co. 187 Mass. 226, 72 N. E. 989.

Payment by the insurance company to the husband of the insured, as the person equitably entitled to the proceeds of the policy, has been held to vest him with an absolute property in the proceeds, to deal with them as his own, against the claims thereto of the wife's administrator. Althouse v. Roth, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 400.

And payment to a person with whom the insured boarded up to the time of his death, whom he owed for board, and who advanced money for funeral expenses, has been held to be a defense to an action on the policy by the insured's administrator. Thomas v. Prudential Ins. Co. 148 Pa. St. 594, 24 Atl. 82, 30 W. N. C. 107.

In Thompson v. Prudential Ins. Co. 119 App. Div. 666, 104 N. Y. S. 257, in holding against the administratrix that payment was properly made under the "facility of payment" clause to one who was not a blood relative or connection by marriage, as one who was equitably entitled thereto by reason of expenses incurred for the education, etc., of the insured, as well as his burial, the court said: "It appears that Newton was not a relative by blood or a connection by marriage of deceased; and whatever right he had to ask of defendant payment of this insurance to him is dependent upon defendant's recognition of his claim that he was a person equitably entitled to it, because he had incurred expense for the deceased, either for his burial or in some other manner. We do not agree with plaintiff's claim, which is strenuously urged upon our attention, that the only expenses, other than those for burial, which can be considered by defendant as clothing a person with a claim to be considered as equitably entitled to the insurance moneys, are those connected with the last sickness of the assured, for the language of the quoted provision refers to expenses for the burial and also to expenses for any other purpose. This language is broad and comprehensive enough to include among the expenses which defendant could properly consider as having been incurred by Newton for deceased, not only his payment of premiums on the policy, but also a portion at least of the cost of educating and maintaining deceased. This latter expense had been but meagrely reimbursed to him when deceased at the age of eighteen left him, and not in the full measure contemplated by the understanding under which Newton took deceased that he was to remain until he was twenty-one. It should be observed that we are now concerned only with facts which, under the circumstances, might appear to disclose the equitable rights of Newton, which might easily be greater than those which are of a character strictly legal. It is true he had no legal right to compel the lad's return after he ran away; but it is also true that having fed, clothed and educated him from early youth till the age at which his services were doubtless expected to be, and would have been, some repayment for previous expense, defendant might well have determined that Newton was equitably entitled to have this expense for which he had received no adequate return considered as an expense incurred for deceased. The evidence also conclusively shows that Newton had obligated himself to pay the funeral expenses prior to receiving the insurance moneys, and that he in fact paid them at, or immediately after, the time these moneys came to his possession. Under the terms of the policy, plaintiff, as administratrix, could recover on the policy only in the event defendant had not already paid the insurance to some person in pursuance of provision 2 above quoted. Before receiving any notice of plaintiff's appointment or of any claim in her behalf to these moneys, defendant had paid the amount of insurance to one who, as it claims, is equitably entitled thereto by reason of having incurred expense not only for the burial of, but also in other ways for, the deceased. We do not think it material to determine whether defendant's payment to Newton as a person equitably entitled thereto was based upon actual knowledge of all the facts which together would, as defendant now urges, establish his equitable right. Defendant selected Newton as the person to whom payment should be made, and we hold that defendant's action was proper regardless of whether all or only one or more of the different grounds upon which an equitable claim in his behalf could have been predicated, furnished the controlling reason for defendant's decision that he was equitably entitled to the money."

Where an insurance company had exercised the option given it in the "facility of payment" clause and had paid the amount to one of the class mentioned therein, the widow of the insured, for a purpose expressly mentioned in the clause, the payment of funeral expenses, it was held that the beneficiary named in the application but not in the policy could not recover from the company whatever interest she had, which was expressly subject to the option of the company to make the payment which it had made. Cohen v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 135 App. Div. 776, 119 N. Y. S. 850. Likewise, a payment to the mother of the insured under a similar clause, instead of to the wife, who was the assignee of and the beneficiary in the policy, has been held to discharge the company from further liability. Thomas v. Prudential Ins. Co. 158 Ind. 461, 63 N. E. 795, set out at length infra, in subdivision d. Rights of Assignee.

It has been held that a settlement made by an industrial insurance company with the person selected by it as equitably entitled thereto by paying less than the face amount of the policy, is a complete defense to a suit by the administrator of the estate of the insured for the balance. Sheridan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 128 Ill. App. 519, judgment affirmed 230 Ill. 33, 82 N. E. 426; Brennan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 170 Pa. St. 488, 32 Atl. 1042. See also Jones v. Prudential Ins. Co. 173 Mo. App. 1, 155 S. W. 1106. Compare Shea v. U. S. Industrial Ins. Co. 23 App. Div. 53, 48 N. Y. S. 548.

In Brennan v. Prudential Ins. Co. supra, it appeared that the company did not pay the full amount of the policy to the person appearing to be equitably entitled thereto but paid only one-half thereof. It was contended that the transaction was fraudulent and therefore unavailing as a defense to an action by the administrator, and that if it was not fraudulent the company was liable to the legal representative of the insured for the balance. The appellate court concurred on this point in the opinion of the lower court, wherein it was said: "The only difference between the two cases is that here the company paid but a part of the money, and set up this to bar the whole. This, it is contended, does not fall within the strict terms of the policy, because it is only the payment of the amount named in the policy, and the production of a receipt for that full amount that is to work satisfaction. To allow of anything less than this, it is argued, is to invite fraud: if the company may select their own party and settle with him on his own terms, they can pick up anybody and discharge themselves with a mere song. While this is not without considerable force, yet the decision quoted, if followed to its legitimate end, is against it. If the company may select the person whom they consider to be equitably entitled to the insurance money with whom to settle, it cannot matter to anyone else upon what terms a settlement is reached. There may be subjects of controversy which call for adjustment and compromise, and to say that the company must pay the full amount of the insurance or be debarred from taking advantage of this clause is to interfere with the right of compromise as well as their contract rights under the policy. Neither is it of any avail to inquire into the reasons which have brought about a settlement if the parties are competent to make it. Every compromise involves mutual concessions, and even if they seem to others to be unwarranted there is no power in a third party to undo them. If, therefore, the company may determine to whom they will pay they may also make their own terms with him, and if he sees fit to take fifty cents on the dollar or any other sum in settlement of the amount insured it concerns no one but himself, and the company are discharged. It may be well to add, however, that in what is thus said, we intend to speak only of a settlement made in good faith, in an honest effort to meet and discharge the obligations of the contract, and not in an attempted evasion of them. What would be the result in any case if settlement was shown to be the latter character we are not called upon to determine. But it may not be out of course to say, in response to the plaintiff's argument, that a settlement for a very much less sum than the face of the policy, arbitrarily made with a third party having no connection with the transaction, merely to escape a greater liability, would be charged with such bad faith, if not fraud, that it could not well stand. Nothing of that kind appears, however, in the present instance. While the occasion of the compromise was not brought out, it was made with a party who, if not the strictly legal owner of the policy, had an equitable claim thereon. That it was effected after suit brought does not necessarily discredit it. This might be a circumstance to be considered in judging of the good faith of the transaction, if there were others to also call it in question. But there is nothing which debars the company, even after suit brought, from determining to whom, in their judgment, the money equitably belongs. 'We are therefore of the opinion that a recovery can be had only on the first of the two policies in suit, and that to that extent only can the verdict be sustained. By the selection of Mrs. Rainey, as the party equitably entitled to the money due on the second policy, it was conclusively determined that the plaintiff was not entitled to it, and that is the end of his case. It is immaterial to him and to us whether she got all she ought to have gotten or not. The company have discharged the obligations of their contract. The policy, by its own terms, is satisfied and no suit can be now entertained upon it.'

In Sheridan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 128 Ill. App. 519, judgment affirmed 230 Ill. 33, 82 N. E. 426, it appeared that the insurance company, claiming that the insured was not "in sound health" at the time he obtained the policy, refused to recognize the policy as binding, and, under the "facility of payment" clause, paid to the person with whom the insured was boarding, on her claim for expenses incurred on account of his death and board, all the premiums which it had received from the insured, in full settlement of the claims under the policy. The majority of the court held that the "facility of payment" clause authorized the selection of the beneficiary under the policy, and that the settlement with her was a complete defense to an action by the administrator of the insured.

In Shea v. U. S. Industrial Ins. Co. 23 App. Div. 53, 48 N. Y. S. 548, wherein it appeared that a compromise by the company under the "facility of payment" clause was made in bad faith, the court said: "The scheme by which this company seeks to defeat this result is a fraud upon the rights of the plaintiff. The obliquity which prompted the superintendent of this company to resort to the means which the evidence shows he did resort to, in order to escape payment of these policies, is quite astonishing and calls for severe condemnation. A bare recital of the evidence is sufficient to make this clear. Koster, the husband of the insured, had never paid a penny of the premiums by which the policies were kept alive. He did not even know that the life of his wife was insured. The superintendent first informed him by letter, which had the effect of producing him at the office, and being there the superintendent suggested that he make a protest against the company paying the money to the plaintiff. This plan was readily acceded to by the husband. As he expressed it, 'I would like to get my expenses out of it.' The superintendent discouraged the suggestion by the husband that he should get an attorney, and drew the protest himself, which the husband signed. Then he suggested that the husband should see the plaintiff and see what she intended to do about it and get her to settle for half. But evidently repenting of this liberality, he subsequently induced the husband to settle for the sum of $200, taking his receipt therefor, and procured him to execute a release to the company of all liability on account of the policies. The interest which the husband had or claimed to have arose out of the payment of the funeral expenses, amounting to $101.50. For this the husband was personally responsible. This defendant now seeks to avail itself of this fraudulent and dishonorable act of its superintendent as a defense to this action, claiming that what it did it had the right to do by virtue of the second article of the policy. The law permits the defeat of this unconscionable and fraudulent scheme, for so we must characterize it, despite the sanction given it by the supreme court of Pennsylvania in Brennan v. Prudential Ins. Co. [170 Pa. St. 488, 32 Atl. 1042.]”

c. Option Not Exercised.

It has been held that the “facility of payment” clause in a policy of industrial insurance is permissive only, and that, if the company fails or refuses to exercise its option to pay the amount due on the policy to a person appearing to it to be equitably entitled thereto, the clause does not entitle one to whom a payment might have been made thereunder, but who is not named as the beneficiary, or otherwise designated as the person who is to receive the sum, to enforce payment thereof. Such a suit can be maintained only by the executor or administrator of the insured. Heubner v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 146 Ill. App. 282; Griffith v. Prudential Ins. Co. 172 Ill. App. 304; Lewis v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 178 Mass. 52, 59 N. E. 439, 86 Am. St. Rep. 463; Marzulli v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 79 N. J. L. 271, 75 Atl. 473; Wokal v. Belsky, 53 App. Div. 167, 31 Civ. Pro. 130, 65 N. Y. S. 815; Nolan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 139 App. Div. 166, 123 N. Y. S. 688; Ferretti v. Prudential Ins. Co. 49 Misc. 489, 97 N. Y. S. 1007. See also Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 121 Ill. App. 257; Hall v. Prudential Ins. Co. 72 Misc. 525, 130 N. Y. S. 355. Compare Clarkston v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 190 Mo. App. 624, 176 S. W. 437. In Wokal v. Belsky, supra, the court said: “The defendant must, by the terms of the policy, pay the amount of it to such person as has become entitled to it by reason of having incurred expense on behalf of the insured or for his burial. The plaintiff, the administrator of the estate of Johan Wokal, alleges in his complaint that he has actually paid the expenses of Wokal’s burial, and, therefore, not only is he entitled to recover as administrator, if the corporation has not paid some one else, but he is also entitled to recover as a person equitably entitled under the terms of the policy. Apart, however, from authorities, it is evident from the wording of this clause in the policy that no particular beneficiary was designated, and, therefore, no one upon the death of the insured became entitled individually to enforce payment against the company except to the extent that he might have paid debts or funeral expenses, when, as a creditor, he might seek to have his claim paid out of the fund. In the absence, however, of a specified or designated beneficiary or beneficiaries to whom the insurance money was absolutely payable, under the policy in question, it was left optional with the company whether it would or would not discharge its obligation by payment to any of the persons in the classes named. Upon failure to exercise such option, the obligation still remained; and the right to enforce it, it seems to us, devolved upon the administrator, representing as he does the estate of the deceased. Unless this were so, as none of the persons in the classes named could enforce their claims in an action because their rights were entirely dependent upon the company’s exercising the option in their favor, it would follow that unless the administrator of the estate could enforce such liability, there would be no one who could do so, and thus the company would be able to escape entirely the payment of its obligation.”

In Marzulli v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 79 N. J. L. 271, 75 Atl. 473, it appeared that the plaintiff was the husband of a sister of the wife of the insured, and having paid the premiums on the policy, and no beneficiary being named therein, he claimed under the “facility of payment” clause. The court said, however: “By the terms of this clause of the policy an option is given the company to pay to any one of the persons having the qualifications named in the clause. This option of itself necessarily excludes any right on the part of the plaintiff to enforce payment.”

So where no beneficiary is named in the policy, it has been held that the husband of the insured, unless he proves that he is “equitably entitled” to the proceeds, “by reason of having incurred expenses on behalf of the insured or for her burial,” has no right to sue on the contract as husband, but that the right of action belongs only to the personal representative of the deceased. Heubner v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 146 Ill. App. 282. The same has been held with respect to a son, Griffith v. Prudential Ins. Co. 172 Ill. App. 304, even though he had paid the premiums between the time of the issuance of the policy and the death of the insured, Lewis v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 178 Mass. 52, 59 N. E. 439, 86 Am. St. Rep. 463.

In Ferretti v. Prudential Ins. Co. 49 Misc. 489, 97 N. Y. S. 1007, it appeared that the policy in suit provided that, in case of death, payment should be made “unto the executors, administrators, and assigns of the insured” unless settlement should be made under the “facility of payment” clause. It was held that the persons primarily entitled to payment were the personal representatives or assigns of the insured, and that the provision for the payment to persons other than the executors, administrators or assigns, being wholly optional with the company, created no legal liability on the part of the company toward those others, but merely provided a defense to the company against the claims of the executors, administrators and assigns, if, but not unless, it elected to make payment to the persons named. Hence, it was held that the plaintiff, who was neither the executor, administrator nor assign of his deceased wife, but who had paid her funeral expenses, amounting to as much as was due on the policy, could not recover against the company on its refusal to exercise the option to pay the insurance to him.

Likewise, in Nolan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 139 App. Div. 166, 123 N. Y. S. 888, it was held that, under a similar policy payment to the "executors, administrators, or assigns of the insured," the plaintiff, who took the insured, her cousin, when a little more than six years of age, into her home, giving her maintenance and clothing while in health and medical care while sick, and paid the premiums on the policy, could not compel the insurance company to exercise its option under the "facility of payment" clause in her favor.

However, in Clarkston v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 190 Mo. App. 624, 176 S. W. 437, as action by a son of the insured was sustained on facts stated as follows: "Plaintiff, Edward Clarkston, is an infant son of the insured, six or seven years old, and prosecutes the suit by his guardian and curator. He is not expressly named as a beneficiary in the policy, but is within the terms of what is known as a 'facility of payment clause,' which is parcel of such industrial insurance policies. The policy contains a recital concerning the beneficiary as follows: 'Name of beneficiary and relationship to the insured, Jemmia Clarkston—wife.' . . . The evidence is clear that Jemmia Clarkston, the insured's wife, and mother of plaintiff, died before the institution of this suit, and it appears, too, that plaintiff is the only remaining member of the family." In concluding its discussion the court said: "What has been said is to be interpreted and considered only on the facts of the instant case, for here it appears that plaintiff is the only party now living for whose benefit the promise was made and, manifestly, he may enforce it."

Where an industrial insurance company, by its cashier, an authorized officer, promised to pay to an undertaker the expense of the burial of the insured, it was held that the promise might be deemed an election on the part of the company to pay that expense to the undertaker as the person equitably entitled so to be paid by reason of having incurred the expense of burial, and that having led the undertaker to incur such expense on the faith of that promise, he having obtained the body and buried it, the company must be deemed to be estopped from later denying that it had exercised the option given it and agreed to make the payment. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 121 Ill. App. 257.

The "facility of payment" clause is one under which the company may, but is not obligated to, make payment to anyone of the class of persons named, up to the time that suit is brought by the person entitled to payment under the contract, namely, the administrator of the insured, and such payment would be a complete defense to the administrator's action; but where the company has not made such payment, the right of the administrator becomes complete, and a plea by the company of subsequent payment to one of the class mentioned, will not operate to bar the administrator's suit. Prudential Ins. Co. v. Godfrey, 75 N. J. Eq. 484, 72 Atl. 456, affirmed 77 N. J. Eq. 267, 76 Atl. 1067.

However, this clause does not clothe the administrator with a right of action on the policy as against the beneficiary named and designated therein. Ruoff v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 86 App. Div. 447, 83 N. Y. S. 758. So, even if a payment made to the administrator under the optional clause would discharge the obligation of the company, that is far from establishing an absolute right of action in the administrator perforce of her inclusion in the designated class of payees, Ruoff v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. supra; or from holding that the naming of a beneficiary prevents the insurer from exercising the option plainly expressed in the policy. Cohen v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 135 App. Div. 776, 119 N. Y. S. 850.

d. Rights of Assignee.

Where an industrial insurance policy is made payable to the executors or administrators of the insured, unless a settlement is made under the "facility of payment" clause therein, an assignee of the policy takes it subject to the reserved right of the company to pay to any person appearing to the company to be equitably entitled to the same by reason of having incurred expense in any way on behalf of the insured for his burial or for any other purpose. Thomas v. Prudential Ins. Co. 158 Ind. 461, 63 N. E. 795; Prudential Ins. Co. v. Young, 14 Ind. App. 560, 43 N. E. 253, 56 Am. St. Rep. 319; Floyd v. Prudential Ins. Co. 72 Mo. App. 455; Kelly v. Prudential Ins. Co. 148 Mo. App. 249, 127 S. W. 649.

And if the insurance company has lawfully exercised its option under the "facility of payment" clause by paying the amount of the policy to one of the persons specified therein, that payment is a complete bar to an action by the assignee for the amount of the policy. Thomas v. Prudential Ins. Co. 158 Ind. 461, 63 N. E. 795; Kelly v. Prudential Ins. Co. 148 Mo. App. 249, 127 S. W. 649. See also Floyd v. Prudential Ins. Co. 72 Mo. App. 455. Compare Jones v. Prudential Ins. Co. 173 Mo. App. 1, 155 S. W. 1106. The industrial policy sued on in Thomas v. Prudential Ins. Co. supra, insured the life of the plaintiff's husband in a specified sum, payable at his death to his executor or administrator, unless settlement should be made under the provisions of the "facility of payment" clause therein. The policy being in danger of lapsing, owing to the failure of the insured to pay the premium, it was assigned to the wife, the plaintiff, under an agreement between the company, the insured and his wife, that if she would pay the premiums then due, the policy would be assigned to her and the company would, on the death of the insured, pay the amount named in the policy to her. The policy was assigned and delivered to the plaintiff and she paid the premiums then due and all premiums thereafter becoming due, until the death of the insured, when the company paid the amount named in the policy to the mother of the insured, under the "facility of payment" clause. It was held that the agreement among the parties was to be understood as nothing more than the designation of the plaintiff as beneficiary under the policy, as though she had originally been so named.

In Kelly v. Prudential Ins. Co. 148 Mo. App. 249, 127 S. W. 649, it was held that the assignee of the industrial policy therein sued on held it subject to the right of the company to pay the money to the person who had paid the funeral expenses of the insured, and that having paid it to the public administrator who was in charge of the insured's estate and who had paid his funeral expenses, the assignee could not recover on the policy.

In Jones v. Prudential Ins. Co. 173 Mo. App. 1, 155 S. W. 1106, however, it was held that the payment of the insurance money to the widow under the "facility of payment" clause was a full acquittance of further obligation to respond under the policy in those cases where it did not appear that the rights of others had attached thereto. But it was held that where a valid assignment of the policy appeared, the assignee was to be compensated to the extent of his rights.

But where the company has failed to exercise its option and no payment has been made to any one under the "facility of payment" provision, the assignee may recover on the policy. Prudential Ins. Co. v. Young, 14

Ind. App. 560, 43 N. E. 253, 56 Am. St. Rep. 319; Floyd v. Prudential Ins. Co. 72 Mo. App. 455. In the case first cited it was held that no right vested in the persons referred to in the "facility of payment" clause of an industrial policy, if for no other reason than that their right depended on the willingness of the insurance company to recognize them, which it was not bound to do. But it was held that where the policy was payable to the "executor or administrator" of the insured, he might assign it and the beneficiary might recover thereon, where no payment had been made under the "facility of payment" provision.

It has been held that an oral agreement whereby the assignees of certain industrial policies were to pay the premiums on the policies in which they were severally interested, and to have the benefit thereof in the event of the decease of the insured, accompanied by the delivery of the policies, was the equivalent of an unqualified oral assignment of each policy which was sufficient in the absence of a prohibition of such assignment to transfer a right to the assignees, giving them at least an equitable interest in the policies, and operating as an assignment of the beneficial interest in the policies to the exclusion of the personal representatives of the insured. Potven v. Prudential Ins. Co. 225 Mass. 247, 114 N. E. 292. In that case the "facility of payment" clause in the policies was held not to be then pertinent, for the reason that the insurer had not acted under it.

In Foryciarz v. Prudential Ins. Co. 95 Misc. 306, 158 N. Y. S. 834, though it appeared that a provision of the industrial policy in suit declared that it should be void if assigned, it was held that the plaintiff, to whom it had been assigned by the insured in order to raise money enough to take herself, her husband and their child back to their old home in Europe, fell within the class of persons "equitably entitled to payment" under the terms of the policy. In other words, it was held that the assignee was one of the very persons contemplated as payees when the company issued the policy, and that as an assignment must have been within the contemplation of the parties at that time, the insured had selected her as the beneficiary by making the assignment.

2. PROVISION FOR PAYMENT TO ONE OF SEVERAL DESIGNATED PERSONS.

a. Generally.

Another form of "facility of payment" clause, as found in industrial insurance policies, provides in substance that the company may pay the amount of the policy to either the executor or administrator, the husband or wife, or any relative by blood, or lawful beneficiary of the insured, and that the production by the company of the policy and a receipt in full, signed by either of them, shall be conclusive evidence that all claims on the company under the policy have been fully satisfied.

This clause is merely intended as a protection to the insurance company in making quick payment on the policy and does not either grant to or take away from any person a cause of action on the policy. Golden v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 35 App. Div. 569, 55 N. Y. S. 143; Wachtel v. Harrison, 84 Misc. 76, 145 N. Y. S. 982; Matter of Shanley, 95 Misc. 427, 160 N. Y. S. 733.

There is nothing in the clause which renders it void as opposed to public policy, or as too indefinite or uncertain to be enforced. Wilkinson v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 63 Mo. App. 404, followed in Wilkinson v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 64 Mo. App. 172.

b. Option Exercised.

The terms of a "facility of payment" clause permitting payment to one of several persons operate as an appointment, by the parties, beneficiary as well as insured, of the several persons therein named, any one of whom is authorized to receive payment of the sum agreed to be paid on the death of the beneficiary. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Schaffer, 50 N. J. L. 72, 11 Atl. 164; Brooks v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 70 N. J. L. 36, 56 Atl. 168. Or, as stated in Ogletree v. Hutchinson, 126 Ga. 454, 55 S. E. 179, this clause, as to who may receive the proceeds and thus discharge the company from liability, does not amount to a designation of a class of persons or any one of them as beneficiaries, but is merely an appointment by agreement between the parties as to persons who may receipt to the company and discharge it, and thereafter hold the amount received for the benefit of the person ultimately entitled thereto.

The fact that the company may pay the death benefit to one of several persons does not make the moneys paid under the policy the property of the person to whom the company may elect to pay the same. As the provision for such payment is only for the protection of the insurance company, but does not "grant or take away a cause of action from any person," it cannot, by electing to pay any one of the persons mentioned in the "facility of payment" clause, invest that person with the absolute ownership of the moneys paid. Ogletree v. Hutchinson, 126 Ga. 454, 55 S. E. 179. See to the same effect Matter of Shanley, 95 Misc. 427, 160 N. Y. S. 733.

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—76.

So the right of the surviving husband or wife, as administrator or administratrix of the estate of the insured, to payment of the policy, accrues to him or her in an official or representative, and not in a personal, capacity. Matter of Shanley, 95 Misc. 427, 160 N. Y. S. 733; Providence County Sav. Bank v. Vanda, 26 R. I. 122, 58 Atl. 454.

In Ogletree v. Hutchinson, 126 Ga. 454, 55 S. E. 179, it was said that if the company had, in accordance with the "facility of payment" stipulation in the policy, paid the amount thereof to the father of the insured, and taken his receipt therefor, the company would have been discharged from liability to any other person; and that the father, being within the class appointed, would hold the money for the benefit of the beneficiary under the contract.

Hence it follows that an industrial insurance company may, at its option, under ordinary circumstances, make the payment to any one of the persons so named, and this payment, when made in good faith is a full satisfaction of all demands on the policy as against it. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. O'Farrell, 64 Kan. 278, 67 Pac. 835, reversing 10 Kan. App. 151, 62 Pac. 673; Western, etc. L. Ins. Co. v. Galvin, 68 S. W. 655, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 444; Renfro v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 148 Mo. App. 258, 129 S. W. 444; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Schaffer, 50 N. J. L. 72, 11 Atl. 154; Brooks v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 70 N. J. L. 36, 56 Atl. 168. See also Ogletree v. Hutchinson, 126 Ga. 454, 55 S. E. 179; Rice v. Rice (Ky.) 63 S. W. 586; Pfaff v. Prudential Ins. Co. 141 Pa. St. 562, 21 Atl. 663. Thus, payment of the amount due under the policy to the husband has been held to be a complete defense to a suit by the administrator of the insured. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. O'Farrell, 64 Kan. 278, 67 Pac. 835, reversing 10 Kan. App. 151, 62 Pac. 673. And, a plea of payment to the guardian of an infant beneficiary has been held to be good on demurrer in an action against the company by the executrix of the insured for the amount of the policy. Brooks v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 70 N. J. L. 36, 56 Atl. 168.

Likewise, a payment to the person named as the beneficiary in an industrial insurance policy and designated in the policy and the written application therefor as "wife," has been held to be valid as against the administrator of the insured. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Louisville Trust Co. 89 S. W. 268, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 426, wherein the court said: "It will be observed that the policy in this case provides for the payment of the amount due thereon, upon proof of death and surrender of the policy and premium receipt books, 'to the beneficiary named below,' who was Lilly Jolly, designated in both the application and policy by the insured as 'Lilly

Jolly, wife.' It is unnecessary to determine to whom, among the other persons designated in the policy, the amount due thereon should have been paid if a beneficiary had not been named; nor is it necessary to determine whether the beneficiary named therein had an insurable interest in the life of the insured. Neither of these questions is here involved. By the voluntary act of the insured Lilly Jolly was selected as the beneficiary of the insurance on his life procured of the appellant company. By his direction she was named as such beneficiary and designated as his wife in both the policy issued to him by the company and the written application made therefor. In entering into the contract of insurance with Bemis Jolly, appellant had the right to rely upon his representation that Lilly Jolly was his wife, and when she produced to it proofs of his death, no change having in the meantime been made in the beneficiary, appellant was required by the terms of the policy to comply with its contract by paying to Lilly Jolly the amount of insurance therein named. This it did in good faith and with commendable promptness. In paying to Lilly Jolly the amount due on the policy by reason of the death of the insured, no duty rested upon appellant to ascertain whether she and the insured had been legally married, or to notify the relations of the insured that she was demanding payment to her of the proceeds of the policy, in order that they might controvert her right to same. It was enough for appellant to know that she was by direction of the insured named in the policy as beneficiary and therein described as the wife of the insured. These facts, which are shown by the answer and admitted by the demurrer, furnished Lilly Jolly a prima facie right to receive the amount due on the policy and authorized its payment to her by appellant. It does not appear from the record that appellant at the time of paying Lilly Jolly the insurance due on the life of Bemis Jolly knew, or had reason to suspect, that she had not in fact been his lawful wife, or was not then his widow. It must therefore be taken as true that, in recognizing Lilly Jolly as the beneficiary named in the policy and settling with her as such, appellant acted in good faith and in compliance with the provisions of the policy; and, this being the case, it cannot now be made to account to appellee for the proceeds of the policy. The remedy of appellee, if any it has (which we do not decide), is against Lilly Jolly. If it were true, as contended by appellee, that Lilly Jolly was not the wife and had no insurable interest in the life of Bemis Jolly, and for that reason was not entitled to the proceeds of the policy, it nevertheless cannot recover in this action, as it has neither alleged nor proved that appellant, at the time of the payment of the insurance to her, knew that she was not the wife of Bemis Jolly or that she had no insurable interest in his life."

In Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Schaffer, 50 N. J. L. 72, 11 Atl. 154, it was held that a payment to the daughter of the insured, under the "facility of payment" clause, on her production of the policy and the premium receipt book, was a payment in strict accordance with the condition of that clause, and that the company was thereby discharged, under its express terms, from further liability to the beneficiary named in the application which was a part of the policy.

In Renfro v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 148 Mo. App. 258, 129 S. W. 444, it appeared that by way of designation of the person to whom the amount due under the industrial policy was to be paid in the event of the death of the insured, the word "estate" alone was used. It was held that a payment under the "facility of payment" clause to the only child of the insured absolved the insurance company from any payment to any other possible claimant.

In Western, etc. L. Ins. Co. v. Galvin, 68 S. W. 655, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 444, an action by the husband, individually and as guardian for the only child and heir-at-law of the insured, the court was of the opinion that any one of the persons named in the clause might recover on the policy by a proper showing of relationship; and, while intimating no opinion as to the ultimate disposition of the proceeds of the policy after collection, the court held that, as to the insurer, a judgment in favor of the husband or heir would bar a second recovery by any other person.

While the "facility of payment" clause unquestionably confers on the insurance company the power to pay the amount of an industrial policy to anyone belonging to the classes enumerated, provided the claimant produces and surrenders to it the premium receipt book and the policy, it does not contemplate that the insurance company has the right to obtain the surrender of the book and policy and then pay the amount of the policy at its option and on its arbitrary selection to any other beneficiary falling within the classes designated. Wilkinson v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 63 Mo. App. 404, followed in Wilkinson v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 64 Mo. App. 172; Carraher v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. St. Rep. 665; McNally v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 199 Pa. St. 481, 49 Atl. 299, affirming 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 111; Smith v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 222 Pa. St. 226, 71 Atl. 11, 128 Am. St. Rep. 799, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 928. In the case first cited it appeared that the plaintiff, a creditor of the insured, was named as the beneficiary in the policy, and paid the premiums thereon, and was the legal owner of the policy and the premium book which were continually in his possession until he surrendered them to the company on the death of the insured, receiving a receipt therefor. Subsequently the widow of the insured made proof of loss under the policy, and the company paid to her the full amount of the insurance. The court held that, as the plaintiff was the lawful beneficiary of the insured and hence belonged to one of the classes mentioned in the "facility of payment" clause, the company could with perfect safety have paid the amount of the insurance to him, and in case of such payment would have been fully protected by the production of the policy and his receipt, but that it was not at liberty to make an arbitrary selection of any other person belonging to the designated classes.

In Carraher v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. St. Rep. 665, it appeared that the policy was delivered to the beneficiary, who paid the premiums thereon, gave notice of the death of the insured, and surrendered the policy and premium book to the company, accompanied by a demand for payment. The widow of the insured furnished proof of his death and payment was made to her by the insurance company. In holding that the company could not disregard the beneficiary's claim, and in apparent defiance of it, arbitrarily select one of the other persons enumerated in the "facility of payment" clause, as the proper beneficiary, so as to make a payment to the one so favored binding in law against the prior claim of the beneficiary especially named in the policy, the court said: "Article 5 was evidently intended to enable the company to settle with the person having possession of the contract on which the claim arises, with the apparent right to the money, and to protect the company, after paying in good faith to one of the persons enumerated in article 5, from any future claim on the part of anyone else. This may be just where such a construction of article 5 is necessary to further its design and intent, but it would be a most unjust interpretation to place on that article, under the circumstances of this case, to hold, it was contemplated by the parties, that the company might ignore the prior claim of the beneficiary especially named in the contract, take from her the policy and premium receipt book, reject her demand for payment, and then arbitrarily select another as the recipient of the benefit the assured had designed for her. This, too, in face of the fact that she had kept alive the policy by payments of premiums, to the end that her claim might, in the event of death, be made productive to her."

In McNally v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 199 Pa. St. 481, 49 Atl. 299, affirming 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 111, it was held that the beneficiary named in the policy could recover the amount thereof, though the company had paid the husband and administrator of the insured on his making proof of death and surrendering the policy and the premium receipt book, as "the duly appointed administrator."

So, in Smith v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 222 Pa. St. 226, 71 Atl. 11, 128 Am. St. Rep. 799, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 928, it was held that if the substitution of the plaintiff as beneficiary in the industrial policy was valid, as prima facie it appeared to be, the payment by the company of the amount of the policy to the executor of the insured, under the "facility of payment" clause, was no defense.

c. Option Not Exercised.

The "facility of payment" clause does not give to either one of the persons named an exclusive right to sue for and recover the amount of the policy, since in any such suit the company could interpose the defense that it had paid some other of the persons named: but the effect of the provision is to give to the company a choice as to the one of the several representatives of the insured, to whom it shall make payment. No one of them, therefore, has an attachable interest in the fund. Providence County Sav. Bank v. Vадnais, 26 R. I. 122, 58 Atl. 454, wherein it was held that, on the death of the insured, the contents of the industrial policies in suit did not become immediately payable to the defendant as the surviving husband of the beneficiary, and hence were not attachable for his debt.

And where an industrial insurance company has not exercised the option granted in the "facility of payment" clause, and has not made payment, it cannot use that clause by way of discrimination against a beneficiary specifically designated. Ogletree v. Hutchinson, 126 Ga. 454, 55 S. E. 179; Golden v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 35 App. Div. 589, 55 N. Y. S. 143; Wachtel v. Harrison, 84 Misc. 76, 145 N. Y. S. 982.

So, in Golden v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 35 App. Div. 589, 55 N. Y. S. 143, it was held that the husband of the insured and the executor of her estate could not recover on an industrial insurance policy against the lawful beneficiary therein, duly named and designated by the insured, on the claim that being in possession of the policies, and having surrendered them to the company, he was the person designated by the policies as beneficiary.

And in Wachtel v. Harrison, 84 Misc. 76, 145 N. Y. S. 982, it was held that though the insurance company might have been protected under the terms of the policy in making payment to one who claimed to be the beneficiary under a paper signed by the insured which purported to change the beneficiary, the rights of one named as beneficiary in the application were not affected by the clause, as he was the beneficiary named in the policy and no right to make a change of beneficiary without his consent existed.

In McCarthy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 162 Mass. 254, 38 N. E. 435, it was held that the administrator of the estate of the insured might maintain an action on an unsealed policy containing the "facility of payment" clause, in which a beneficiary was named, and that whether the beneficiary could sue was immaterial. But in Lewis v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 178 Mass. 52, 59 N. E. 439, 86 Am. St. Rep. 463, the court cited McCarthy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. supra, as authority for the proposition that the clause did not entitle one to whom such a payment might have been made, but who was not named as the beneficiary of the policy, or otherwise designated as the person who was to receive the sum to be paid, to enforce payment of the sum due under it; but that such a suit could be maintained only by the executor or administrator of the insured with whom the contract was made.

Though the "facility of payment" clause obligates an industrial insurance company to pay the amount of the policy to one of the persons named in that clause, the company is under no obligation to consent to a change of beneficiary from one to another. Malburg v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 127 Mich. 568, 86 N. W. 1026. In that case, however, it appeared that the policy was assigned on a blank furnished by the company, which was signed by the insured, the beneficiary, and the proposed beneficiary, and contained the agreement, on a valuable consideration, that the latter should be substituted as beneficiary. It was held that as it also appeared that the proposed beneficiary had performed her promises, in part at least, she could not be divested of her interest in the policy.

THORP

v.

LUND ET AL.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court—June 28, 1917.

227 Mass. 474; 116 N. E. 946.

Trusts — Right of Settlor to Revoke.

A trust cannot be revoked or modified by the settlor, in the absence of a reservation to that effect, though it was voluntarily established.

Creation of Trust — Necessity of Assent of Beneficiary.

No assent of any beneficiary is necessary to the validity of a trust voluntarily established.

Charities — Nature of Purpose as Charitable — Circumstances Considered.

In determining whether a deed of trust providing that a fund should be devoted to some national or philanthropic purposes associated with the name of the settlor's husband created a charitable trust, the circumstances of the parties and their relation to the subject-matter should be considered.

Construction in Favor of Charity.

In view of Const. pt. 2, c. 5, § 2, making it the duty of magistrates to encourage public and private charity, a gift dictated by a benevolent purpose is to be liberally construed, and, if reasonably possible, upheld as a valid charity rather than declared void.

Form of Creation — Use of Term "Charity."

The employment of the word "charity" or "charitable" in a deed of trust is not essential to the creation of a valid charity.

Construction — "Or" Construed as "And."

The rule in the construction of instruments establishing charities that the word "or" will be construed to mean "and" when this seems necessary to effectuate the meaning intended applies especially where one word expresses a charitable use and the other, if standing alone, might not indicate a strict charity, in which case the dominant word is taken to be the one pointing to a charity, and the indefinite word is narrowed by its context or used as a synonym with it.

What Constitutes Charity — National or Patriotic Purpose.

A deed of trust providing that a fund should be appointed to a "national or philanthropic purpose in Norway associated with the name of my late husband, Ole Bull," must be held to create a charity when due consideration is given to the words "national" and "philanthropic," and to the fact that Ole Bull is regarded as a distinguished patriot and national hero whose name and example serve to inspire the youth of Norway. [See note at end of this case.]

Scope of Term "Charity."

A "charity" is not confined to mere almsgiving or the relief of poverty and distress, but has a wider signification, and embraces the improvement and promotion of the happiness of man.

Perpetuities — Trust for Maintenance of Estate.

A will appointing the income of a fund to preserve, maintain, and improve real estate, the fee of which was bequeathed to trustees to hold for the benefit of a minor during her minority, and upon her reaching the age of twenty-one years to convey the same to her in fee, discharged of all trust, and in the event of her prior decease giving the fee to two trustees and the survivor with a gift over to another in case of the decease of both trustees, is an invalid attempt to appoint the fund in perpetuity for the maintenance of a private estate to be used and occupied as such.

[See Ann. Cas. 1914B 551.]

Same.

Such appointment of the fund was not to a public charity or for a "national or philanthropic purpose" within the terms of the deed of trust specifying that the fund should be devoted to such purpose.

Trusts — Administration — Asking Instruction of Court.

When in doubt, the trustee of a fund may ask the instructions of the court as to the validity of a proposed exercise of the power of appointment.

Power of Appointment — Propriety of Exercise — Beneficiary Designated Generally.

A trustee's proposed appointment to the Ole Bull fund committee of a fund appointed to a "national or philanthropic purpose in Norway, associated with the name of . . . Ole Bull" is valid, where it appears that such committee was established by royal charter in Norway to administer the surplus moneys collected for the Ole Bull monument and not needed for that purpose, and such augmentations as might come to it by gift or otherwise, the income to be applied to the distribution of donations to the younger musicians, actors, and actresses holding engagements with the National Stage of Bergen, which was founded by Ole Bull and is devoted to the fostering of a national and patriotic spirit.

Petition by Joseph G. Thorp, trustee, against John Lund et al., for instructions under written instrument of trust. The facts are stated in the opinion. INSTRUCTIONS ACCORDING TO OPINION.

Edmund M. Parker for Joseph G. Thorp individually.

Joseph Sargent for Alice A. Thorp et al.

William S. Hall for John Lund et al.

Whipple, Sears & Ogden for Ralph S. Bartlett, administrator, and Sylvea Bull Vaughan.

[476] Ruggs, C. J.—1. This is a bill for instructions by a trustee under a written instrument of trust. It was executed by the sister of the plaintiff, who contemporaneously handed to him certain bonds and stocks to be held according to its terms. Two trust deeds were signed by the settlor, one dated on February 5, 1903, and the other on February 25, 1903. The first was signed and delivered and at the same time all the securities were placed in the possession of the trustee. It did not require acknowledgment or record in order to be valid. There was no condition about its taking effect, and there was not inserted in it any power of revocation. Although the trust was voluntarily established, it could not be revoked or modified by the settlor in the absence of reservation to that effect. Lovett v. Farnham, 189 Mass. 1, 47 N. E. 246; Sands v. Old Colony Trust Co. 195 Mass. 575, 577, 12 Ann. Cas. 837, 81 N. E. 300. A copy of the deed of trust was sent to the daughter of the settlor, but its delivery was not made dependent upon her approval. The second instrument was not called to her attention until long after it was signed.

2. No assent by any beneficiary was necessary to the validity of the trust. Boston v. Turner, 201 Mass. 190, 194, 87 N. E. 634; Bailey v. Wood, 211 Mass. 37, 42, Ann. Cas. 1913A 950, 97 N. E. 902. The second instrument was of no consequence under the circumstances here disclosed. The first deed of trust took effect and the rights of the parties are to be determined according to its terms.

3. The pertinent words of the deed of trust, which describe the purposes to which the trust fund shall be applied, are these: "To pay over the net income therefrom to my daughter, Olea Bull Vaughan, during her life and in case she has issue surviving her during the continuance of this trust, to pay the net income in equal shares to them. And to pay over the principal, in whole or in part, as a fund to be devoted to such national or philanthropic purpose in Norway associated with the name of my late husband, Ole Bull, as my said daughter during her lifetime or by will may direct. . . . In case my said daughter shall die without issue and without directing the payment of said principal, in whole or in part, as above provided, said principal and any accumulation of income thereon shall be paid, either in equal shares to the surviving children of my said brother or to the carrying out of [477] the purpose above described, at the discretion of the Trustee." The settlor and her daughter both have deceased, the latter without issue within the meaning of the trust instrument.

The question is, whether a charitable trust was created by the words just quoted. In deciding that question the circumstances of the parties and their relation to the subject matter may be considered as giving the connection in which the words were used.

The settlor was the widow of Ole Bull, to whom she was married in 1870 and who died in 1880. Ole Bull was a Norwegian by birth, renowned in Europe and America as a most distinguished violinist. He was intensely patriotic. His devotion to his native country and his zeal for her welfare were widely known. It was his earnest effort and unflagging purpose to arouse and stimulate among his fellow countrymen a spirit of devotion to Norway and to secure for her the position and recognition among nations which he felt was her due. He strove constantly to cultivate her national music and art. In furtherance of these nationally patriotic designs he labored for the National Theatre at Bergen in Norway, which was established largely through his personal efforts. Before 1909 a committee had been formed in Norway to solicit and receive subscriptions to erect a monument to Ole Bull. A large amount of money was collected and after erecting a suitable monument to his memory in a public square a considerable sum remained, which, according to the Norwegian statutes for the administration of the Ole Bull Fund, was to be managed by a committee of five members in general for the encouragement of music and the dramatic art in connection with the National Stage of Bergen.

A gift dictated by a general benevolent purpose is to be liberally construed and, if reasonably possible, upheld as a valid charity, rather than declared void. Saltonstall v. Sanders, 11 Allen (Mass.) 446, 455. The Constitution of Massachusetts by c. 5, § 2, makes it the duty of magistrates "in all future periods . . . to countenance and inculcate the principles of humanity and general benevolence, public and private charity." It was said in Ould v. Washington Hospital 95 U. S. 303, at page 313, 24 U. S. (L. ed.) 450. "Charitable uses are favorites with courts of equity. The construction of all instruments where they are concerned is liberal in their behalf." It was said by Mr. Justice Gray in Jones v. Habersham, [478] 107 U. S. 174, at page 185, 2 S. Ct. 336, 27 U. S. (L. ed.) 401: "It is only when a gift might be applied to benevolent purposes which are not charitable in that sense, that the gift fails. Saltonstall v. Sanders, 11 Allen (Mass.) 446; Suter v. Hilliard, 132 Mass. 412." A gift charitable in its nature will be upheld as valid though to be executed in a foreign country. Fellows v. Miner, 119 Mass. 541; Teale v. Bishop of Derry, 168 Mass. 341, 47 N. E. 422, 60 Am. St. Rep. 401, 38 L.R.A. 629; Russell v. Allen, 107 U. S. 163, 172, 2 S. Ct. 327, 27 U. S. (L. ed.) 397; Whicker v. Hume, 7 H. L. Cas. 124, 141, 155.

The fund under the present instrument of settlement is to be appointed to a "national or philanthropic purpose in Norway associated with the name of my late husband, Ole Bull." The word "charity" or "charitable" is not used in the instrument. But that is not essential to the creation of a valid charity. If the substance of the object described by the words employed comes within the definition of a charity, as that word is used in equity, then the gift is valid.

A gift to a civilized and friendly nation for a national purpose, if no other words were used, would be a valid charity under numerous authorities. It is within the scope of the concluding phrases of the classic definition of a charity given by this court speaking through Mr. Justice Gray in Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen (Mass.) 539, 556, "A charity, in the legal sense, may be more fully defined as a gift. . . . for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their minds or hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life, or by erecting or maintaining public buildings or works or otherwise lessening the burdens of government." The succinct and oft quoted definition of a charity in Jones v. Williams, Ambl. 651 as a "gift to a general public use, which extends to the poor as well as to the rich," looks in the same direction. This has been amplified and approved in several of our decisions. New England Sanitarium v. Stoneham, 205 Mass. 335, 91 N. E. 385, and cases collected at page 342. In Nightingale v. Goulburn, 5 Hare (Eng.) 484, a gift "to the Queen's Chancellor of the Exchequer for the time being, and to be by him appropriated to the benefit and advantage of my beloved country, Great Britain," was supported as a charity in these words: "I cannot conceive a purpose to which these trust funds could be lawfully applied, according to the will, which [479] would not be so general and public in its character as to constitute a charitable use." A trust for the benefit of the nation has been held to be a good charitable trust. In re Verrall [1916] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 100. Gifts in payment of the national debt are upheld. Dickson v. U. S. 125 Mass. 311, 28 Am. Rep. 230; Ashton v. Langdale, 15 Jur. (Eng.) 868; Newland v. Atty.-Gen. 3 Meriv. (Eng.) 684. Bequests to promote the efficiency of the army. In re Good [1905] 2 Ch. (Eng.) 60, to teach shooting among the National Rifle Association "so as to prevent . . . a catastrophe similar to that at Majaba Hill," In re Stephens, 8 Times L. Rep. 792, [1892] W. N. 140. and to a volunteer military company. In re Stratheiden [1894] 3 Ch. (Eng.) 205, all have been held to be good charities. Gifts for the furtherance and inculcation of patriotism are charitable. Molly Varnum Chapter, D. A. R. v. Lowell, 204 Mass. 487, 90 N. E. 893, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 707; Old South Asso. v. Boston, 212 Mass. 299, 99 N. E. 235; Sargent v. Cornish, 54 N. H. 18. Doubtless a gift for a general public utility is not necessarily a charity. But a gift for a purpose confined to that which is national in the sense that it might be supported at public expense and by general taxation is a close approach to a charity.

The words "or philanthropic" are conjoined with "national" as expressive of the purpose to which the fund may be appointed.

It is a familiar rule in the interpretation of instruments relating to the establishment of charities that "the word 'or' will be construed to mean 'and' when this seems necessary to give effect to the meaning" of the person declaring a general purpose of that sort. Clarke v. Andover, 207 Mass. 91, 96, 92 N. E. 1013, and cases there cited. McClench v. Waldron, 204 Mass. 554, 557, 91 N. E. 126. This rule is applicable, especially in instances where one word expresses a charitable use and the other if standing alone might not indicate a strict charity. The dominant word is taken to be the one pointing to a charity and the more indefinite word linked with it is held to be narrowed and colored by its context or used as a synonym with it, in order to make effective the main charitable intent. Numerous illustrations may be given. In St. Paul's Church v. Atty.-Gen. 164 Mass. 188, 41 N. E. 231, a gift for "any charitable or benevolent object or objects" was upheld as a charity, "or" being construed as "and," although a bequest for benevolent purposes alone was held to be too indefinite to be supported as a charity, in Chamberlain v. Stearns, 111 Mass. 267. [480] A gift in aid "of objects and purposes of benevolence or charity" was sustained as a charity on the same principle in Saltonstall v. Sanders, 11 Allen (Mass.) 446, 465 to 471. To the same effect is Rotch v. Emerson, 105 Mass. 431, 434; and Weber v. Bryant, 161 Mass. 400, 37 N. E. 203.

There is nothing about the frame of the sentence in the instant trust deed to indicate that "or" was used in a disjunctive sense as distinguishing "national" from philanthropic." The word "philanthropic" is almost if not quite synonymous with the word "charity," at least as it was used at the time of the enactment of St. 43 Eliz. c. 4, about which centres so much of the law concerning charitable uses. That is illustrated, as was pointed out by counsel in argument, by the nearly contemporaneous use of the word "charity" in the King James Version of the familiar thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, while the Revised Version translates the same Greek word as "love." This accords nearly with the definition of charity given in argument in the Girard will case and quoted in 14 Allen 556, and adopted in Ould v. Washington Hospital for Foundlings, 95 U. S. 303, 24 U. S. (L. ed.) 450; "Whatever is given for the love of God, or for the love of your neighbor, in the catholic and universal sense—given from these motives, and to these ends—free from the stain or taint of every consideration that is personal, private or selfish." It was said in Rotch v. Emerson, 105 Mass. 431, 434, "‘Philanthropic’ is not in itself widely variant from ‘charitable.’" Philanthropic has been used either in bequests or in definitions as not essentially different from charitable. Mackinnon v. Mackinnon [1908-1909] Sc. Sess. Cas. 1041; In re Cranston [1898] 1 Ir. R. 431, 446; In re Wedgewood [1915] 1 Ch. 113, Ann. Cas. 1917B 924; Pell v. Mercer, 14 R. I. 412.

The words "national" and "philanthropic" are coupled with the further description that the purpose is to be executed "in Norway" in association "with the name of my late husband, Ole Bull." In this connection it is plain that Ole Bull rightly was regarded as a distinguished patriot, whose name and example would be an inspiration to the youth of the future generations in that country. He was in a sense a national hero, whose achievements were a just source of pride to the Norwegian people. A fitting memorial to such a person, national in scope and philanthropic in character, was the thought expressed by the settlor. [481] Whatever may be said as to these elements singly, all combined constitute the trust thus created a charity under the established principles of law.

These circumstances seem to distinguish the case at bar from In re Macduff [1896] 2 Ch. (Eng.) 451; but if and so far as it is inconsistent with this conclusion, we are not inclined to follow it. They establish a charity as defined in New England Sanitarium v. Stoneham, 205 Mass. 335, 342, 91 N. E. 385: "It is not confined to mere almsgiving of the relief of poverty and distrees, but has a wider signification, which embraces the improvement and promotion of the happiness of man." Little v. Newburyport, 210 Mass. 414, 417, Ann. Cas. 1912D 425, 96 N. E. 1032.

4. The daughter of the settlor, Olea Bull Vaughan, died leaving a will wherein the only provision concerning the power of appointment is in these words: "V. I give and bequeath to 'The Ole Bull Fund Committee' of Bergin, Norway, all stocks, bonds, money or other evidences of indebtedness now held in trust for me by Joseph G. Thorp as trustee under a deed of trust to said Thorp as trustee from my mother, Sara C. Bull, said deed of trust being dated February 5, 1903, or thereabouts, to hold and manage as a perpetual trust for the following purposes; To use the annual net income of said fund, said fund now amounting to thirty thousand ($30,000), dollars or thereabouts—for the purpose of preserving, maintaining and making improvements upon Lysoen, Norway,—the home of my father Ole Bull—as a Memorial to his memory. This bequest is made in accordance with and by virtue of a power to me given in said above mentioned deed of trust.” Lysoen is an island off the coast of Norway. It was owned in fee by Mrs. Vaughan at the time of her death. By her will and codicil she gave the fee to trustees to hold for the benefit of a minor, Sylvea Bull Vaughan, during her minority, and upon her reaching the age of twenty-one years to convey the same to her in fee discharged of all trust, and in the event of her prior decease, then the island is given in fee to the two trustees and the survivor, with a gift over to another person in case of the decease of both trustees. In substance this was an attempt to appoint the fund in perpetuity for the maintenance of a private estate to be used and occupied so far as concerned right and title by named individuals in their personal capacity. An attempt to create a perpetual trust for a private use is a [482] nullity. Bates v. Bates, 134 Mass. 110, 45 Am. Rep. 305. Moreover, it is plain that such an appointment is not to a public charity. It is too plain for discussion that it is not for a “national or philanthropic purpose.”

5. The attempted appointment by the daughter being invalid, and she having died without issue within the meaning of the trust instrument, the right to make the appointment vests in the trustee by the express terms of the deed of gift. The trustee proposes to exercise that power of appointment in a definite way and asks the instruction of the court, as he may, Minns v. Billings, 183 Mass. 126, 66 N. E. 593, 97 Am. St. Rep. 420, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 686, as to its validity.

The trustee proposes to appoint the fund to the Ole Bull Fund Committee. That committee is established by royal charter in Norway to administer the surplus moneys collected for the Ole Bull monument and not needed for that purpose, and such augmentations as may come by gift or otherwise, the income of which is to be applied directly or by accumulations to the distribution of donations to the younger musicians, actors and actresses holding engagements with the National Stage of Bergen. The National Stage of Bergen is in a sense a national theatre of Norway. It was founded by Ole Bull. It is devoted to the fostering of a national and patriotic spirit. It presents plays and music, the authors of which and the actors and musicians performing which, must be Norwegian. It is supported in part by grants from the national government of Norway and the city of Bergen. The Brigade Band, members of which are eligible to the benefits of the fund, is a part of the national army of Norway. Thus it is an institution established directly for the inculcation of patriotism, for the cultivation of music and the drama, and in a broad sense for the promotion of popular education in these departments of the fine arts. The distribution of prizes among the meritorious youth who are pursuing these studies and cultivating their skill in these branches is a charity. It is distinctly associated with the name of Ole Bull because it is provided expressly that the fund shall be administered by trustees bearing his name as a part of their title, and already holding funds donated as a memorial to him and in connection with a national institution founded by him. The proposed appointment satisfies every requirement of the trust instrument in being to a public [483] charity, national and philanthropic in nature, closely associated with the name of Ole Bull.

The trustee is instructed that he holds the fund under the instrument of February 5, 1903, and has the power of appointment thereof under the terms of that instrument, and that the proposed appointment of the fund to the Ole Bull Fund Committee, organized by royal charter in Norway to hold moneys for the purposes set forth in the trust instrument and in accordance with its statutes, would be a valid appointment to a public charity.

So ordered.

NOTE.

In the reported case it is held that a gift for the purpose of establishing in Norway a memorial to Ole Bull is for such a national or patriotic purpose as to constitute a charity. Whether a gift for a public purpose as distinguished from a benevolent, educational or religious purpose is a valid charitable gift is discussed in the note to New Castle Common v. Megginson, Ann. Cas. 1914A 1207.

GENERAL INDEX

To Cases and Notes in this Volume.

(For separate Index to Notes, see post, p. 1259.)

ABATEMENT.

See Wills.

ABSENCE.

See Trial.

ACCIDENT.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

Burden of proving that death did not result from suicide. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor (Ark.), 1122.

ACCOUNTING.

See Tenants in Common; Trusts and Trustees.

ACTIONABLE WORDS.

See Libel and Slander.

ACTIONS.

Injunctions—power of court to enjoin proceeding in another state. American Express Co. v. Fox (Tenn.), 1148. Annotated Joinder of actions—rights arising from same transaction—causes arising from breach of contract and from tort. Littlefield v. Bowen (Wash.), 177.

Moot case—what constitutes. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Montgomery (Ala.), 554. Annotated

Survival of actions—action revived in name of special administrator. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor (Ark.), 1122.

See also Banks; Mechanics' Liens; Parties to Actions; Removal of Causes; Wills.

ADJOINING LANDOWNERS.

Hedge fence—invoking doctrine of estoppel to establish ownership. Wideman v. Faivre (Kan.), 1168.

Tree near boundary line—rights of owner. Wideman v. Faivre (Kan.), 1168. Annotated

Tree overhanging boundary line—right of owner of premises to cut to line. Cobb v. Western Union Telegraph Co. (Vt.), 1156. Annotated ADMINISTRATION.

See Trusts and Trustees.

ADMINISTRATORS.

See Executors and Administrators.

ADMISSIONS AND DECLARATIONS.

Carriers of passengers—action for injury to passenger—admissibility of declaration of employee of carrier. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.

Conspiracy—declaration of coconspirators—proof of conspiracy as prerequisites to admission. Hitchman Coal, etc. Co. v. Mitchell (U. S.), 461.

Eminent domain—evidence of value—certain evidence held not admissible as admission. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

Workmen's compensation acts—admissibility of declaration of employee as to cause of injury. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.

ADMISSIONS AND DECLARATIONS — Continued.

Workmen's compensation acts—admissibility of declaration of employee while suffering from delirium tremens. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.
See also Pleading.

ADOPTION.

Inheritance by adopted child—what law governs. Brewer v. Browning (Miss.), 1013.

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Mineral lands—doctrine of adverse possession as applicable to mineral lands. Northcut v. Church (Tenn.), 545.

AFFIDAVITS.

See New Trial.

AGE.

Testimony as to age of another—admissibility. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.
 Testimony as to person's own age—admissibility. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425. Annotated
See also Infants.

AGENCY.

Warranty to agent as insuring to benefit of undisclosed principal. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.
See also Brokers; Insurance.

AGRICULTURE.

See Seed.

ALIENS.

Workmen's compensation acts—right of nonresident alien to compensation. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.

ALIMONY.

Amount of allowance of alimony—amount held proper. Hiecke v. Hiecke (Wis.), 497.

"ALL DEBTS."

Meaning of "all debts" as used in contract. Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Silver King Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.), 571.

ALLOWANCE.

See Alimony; Executors and Administrators; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

AMENDMENTS.

Pleading—mechanics' liens—amendment of bill to foreclose lien as affecting plea of limitations. Niehaus v. C. B. Barker Construction Co. (Tenn.), 23.
 — variance—construction of statute authorizing amendment in case of variance. Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (Va.), 1171.
 Statutes—construction of statute as amended—powers of public service commission. Sayers v. Montpelier, etc. R. Co. (Vt.), 1050.

AMUSEMENTS.

See Theaters and Amusements.

ANCESTORS.

See Insanity.

"AND."

"Or" construed as "and" in instrument creating charity. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.

ANIMALS.

See Food and Drugs.

ANTAGONISM.

See Trusts and Trustees.

ANTENUPTIAL AGREEMENTS.

Validity—concealment of facts as affecting validity. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.

ANTENUPTIAL AGREEMENTS — Continued.

- Validity—contract favored in law. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
 — effect of partial invalidity. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917. Annotated — provision contemplating divorce as affecting validity. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

- Appealable judgments and orders—order revoking letters of public administrator. Brinck-wirth's Estate v. Troll (Mo.), 1056. Annotated Dismissal of appeal—merits of care not considered on motion to dismiss. In re Hahn (N. J.), 830.
 — sufficiency of notice of motion to dismiss. City Sash, etc. Co. v. Bunn (Wash.), 31.
 Disposition of cause—error in sentence—remand for proper sentence. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.
 Examination of case—action brought under federal employers' liability act—consideration on appeal of right of action at common law. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. v. Harmon's Administrator (Ky.), 41.
 — conflicting evidence—review on appeal. Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Silver King Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.), 571.
 — decree disapproving order of public service commission—conclusiveness on appeal. Mississippi R. Co. v. Mobile, etc. R. Co. (Miss.), 828.
 — error assented to at trial—review on appeal. Minneapolis, etc. R. Co. v. Winters (U. S.), 54.
 — findings of public service commission—review on appeal. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burlington Traction Co. (Vt.), 841.
 — findings of trial court—review on appeal. Hiecke v. Hiecke (Wis.), 497.
 — findings of workmen's compensation board—review on appeal. Chicago Dry Kiln Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 645. Annotated — findings of workmen's compensation board—review on appeal. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540; Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627; Dale v. Saunders (N. Y.), 703; Eugene Dietzen Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 764.
 — judgment dismissing claim for compensation under workmen's compensation act—review on appeal. Grinnell v. Wilkinson (R. I.), 618.
 — lump sum award under workmen's compensation act—review on appeal. McCracken v. Missouri Valley Bridge, etc. Co. (Kan.), 689. Annotated — matters not shown by record—review on appeal. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391; Holstein v. Benedict (Hawaii), 941; Neven v. Neven (Nev.), 1083.
 — question of fact determined by trial court—review on appeal. Wideman v. Faivre (Kan.), 1168.
 — question not raised below—review on appeal. People v. Falkovitch (Ill.), 1077; Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
 — review by federal court of state decision—action under federal employers' liability act. Southern R. Co. v. Puckett (U. S.), 69.
 — review of sentence in criminal case. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.
 Harmless error—admission of evidence—fact otherwise proved. Taylor v. Moseley (Ky.), 1125.
 — admission of evidence—technical error. People v. Gibson (N. Y.), 509.
 — exclusion of evidence—fact otherwise proved. Taylor v. Moseley (Ky.), 1125.
 — refusal of instructions—party not entitled to recover. Taylor v. Moseley (Ky.), 1125.
 Law of the case—review of previous holding on second appeal. Brewer v. Browning (Miss.), 1013.
 Right to appeal—appeal from order of disbarment. In re Hahn (N. J.), 830. Annotated Stare decisis—power to overrule previous decision. Brewer v. Browning (Miss.), 1013.
 — propriety of overruling previous decision. Brewer v. Browning (Miss.), 1013.
 See also Eminent Domain; Pleading.

APPEARANCE.

- Federal practice—effect of appearance to object to jurisdiction of court. Hitchman Coal, etc. Co. v. Mitchell (U. S.), 461.

APPLIANCES.

See Electricity; Master and Servant.

APPOINTMENT.

See Trusts and Trustees.

APPREHENSION OF INJURY.

See Injunctions.

APPROPRIATIONS.

- State contract exceeding appropriation—validity. Fergus v. Brady (Ill.), 220.

ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

Improper argument—argument not cured by instruction. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 ——— comment on failure of incompetent witness to testify. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 ——— stating penalty for crime as proper argument. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.

ARMY AND NAVY.

Conscription—validity of federal statute. Selective Draft Law Cases (U. S.), 856.
 Pledge of public property by soldier—liability of civilian for receiving. Bolland v. United States (U. S.), 520. Annotated See also Veterans; War.

ARREST.

Intoxicating liquors—arrest for threatened violation of law—duty of officer. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
 ——— right of sheriff to arrest without warrant—unlawful sale of intoxicants. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.

ASSEMBLY.

See Unlawful Assembly.

ASSIGNMENTS.

See Life Insurance; Tenants in Common.

ATTACHMENT.

Election of remedies—right to dismiss attachment and proceed in equity. Nichaus v. C. P. Barker Construction Co. (Tenn.), 23.

ATTORNEYS.

Compensation—attorney's fee held to be reasonable. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor (Ark.), 1122.
 Disbarment—jurisdiction to disbar—court of chancery. In re Hahn (N. J.), 830.
 ——— right of appeal from order of disbarment. In re Hahn (N. J.), 830. Annotated Witnesses—presumption from failure to call attorney as witness. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 See also Appearance.

AUDIENCE.

See Theaters and Amusements.

AUTOMOBILES.

Injuries in operation of automobile—liability as affected by fact that automobile is unregistered. Koonovsky v. Quellette (Mass.), 1146.
 ——— liability of driver for negligent homicide. People v. Falkovitch (Ill.), 1077.
 ——— liability of owner for injury to guest. Massaletti v. Fitzroy (Mass.), 1088.
 ——— negligence of husband operating automobile not imputed to wife. Virginia R. etc. Co. v. Gorsuch (Va.), 838.
 ——— person in charge of car as dealer in automobiles—sufficiency of evidence to establish. Koonovsky v. Quellette (Mass.), 1146.

"AVERAGE WEEKLY EARNINGS."

Meaning of "average weekly earnings" as used in workmen's compensation act. Cox v. Trollope (Eng.), 637. Annotated Tips of railroad porter as part of "average weekly earnings" within workmen's compensation act. Great Western R. Co. v. Helps (Eng.), 1120. Annotated

AVOIDANCE OF CONTRACTS.

See Infants.

AWARD.

See Eminent Domain; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

BANKS.

Banking commission—status and powers—power to bring action. American Southern Nat. Bank v. Smith (Ky.), 959.
 Deposits—special deposit—rights as to special deposit—priority. Sawyer v. Conner (Miss.), 388.
 ——— special deposit—what constitutes. Sawyer v. Conner (Miss.), 388.
 Regulation under police power. American Southern Nat. Bank v. Smith (Ky.), 959.

BED OF STREAM.

See Waters and Watercourses.

BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS.

Workmen's compensation acts—receipt of benefit from beneficial association as affecting right to compensation under workmen's compensation act. State v. District Court (Minn.), 635. Annotated

BENEFICIARIES.

See Insurance; Trusts and Trustees; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

BEST EVIDENCE.

See Evidence.

BILLS AND NOTES.

Bona fide purchasers—circumstances putting on inquiry. First National Bank v. Stover (N. Mex.), 145.
— sufficiency of evidence of good faith. First National Bank v. Stover (N. Mex.), 145.
Extension of time of payment—construction of agreement to extend—necessity of consent of holder. First National Bank v. Stover (N. Mex.), 145. Annotated Negotiability—agreement to extend time of payment as affecting negotiability. First National Bank v. Stover (N. Mex.), 145.
— provision for discount as affecting negotiability. Farmers' Loan, etc. Co. v. Planck (Neb.), 598. Annotated
See also Gifts.

BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

See Bills and Notes.

BONDS.

See Municipal Corporations; Public Officers.

BOUNDARIES.

See Adjoining Landowners.

BREACH OF DUTY.

See Negligence.

BREACH OF THE PEACE.

Unlawful sale of intoxicants as breach of the peace. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
Violence not essential to breach of the peace. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
What constitutes breach of the peace. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.

BREACH OF WARRANTY.

See Warranty.

BROKERS.

Commissions—joint contract of buyer and seller to pay commission—liability of party preventing sale. Littlefield v. Bowen (Wash.), 177. Annotated — refusal by principal to convey—sufficiency of evidence of refusal. Littlefield v. Bowen (Wash.), 177.
Performance by broker—refusal of principal to accept trade—necessity of tender. Littlefield v. Bowen (Wash.), 177.
Recording of contract by broker—liability to principal in damages. Littlefield v. Bowen (Wash.), 177.
Regulation—validity of regulation of loan brokers. Wessell v. Timberlake (Ohio), 402.

BUILDING RESTRICTIONS.

Public service corporations—building restriction as binding public service corporation. Flynn v. New York, etc. R. Co. (N. Y.), 588. Annotated Subsequent purchasers—building restriction as binding subsequent purchaser. Flynn v. New York, etc. R. Co. (N. Y.), 588.
Validity of building restrictions generally. Flynn v. New York, etc. R. Co. (N. Y.), 588.

BUILDINGS.

Building ordinance—validity. St. Louis v. Nash (Mo.), 134.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

- Accident insurance—burden of proving that death did not result from suicide. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor (Ark.), 1122.
- Contributory negligence—sufficiency of instruction as to burden of proving contributory negligence. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.) 408.
- Fiduciary relation—burden of proving fairness of transaction. Dawson v. National Life Ins. Co. (Iowa), 230.
- Gifts—conveyance by parent to child—burden of proof of undue influence. Soper v. Ciasco (N. J.), 452. Annotated
- Insanity—burden of proof as to insanity. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
- Wills—undue influence—propriety of instruction as to burden of proof. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
- Workmen's compensation acts—burden of proving that claimant is casual employee. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.

BUSINESS.

See Licenses.

BUSINESS CAPACITY.

See Wills.

BUSINESS COMPETITION.

See Municipal Corporations.

CANALS.

See Owners of Premises.

CANDIDATES.

See Elections; Libel and Slander.

CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS.

- Injury to passenger—contributory negligence—standing on platform or steps preparatory to alighting. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- evidence—admissibility of declaration of employee of carrier. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- evidence—sufficiency of evidence to sustain recovery against carrier. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- instructions—propriety of instruction as to negligence in alighting from moving car. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- instructions—propriety of instruction as to presumption of negligence from injury. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- instructions—propriety of instruction as to right of passenger to be on step of moving car. Froeming v. Stockton (Cal.), 408.
- pleading—construction of pleading. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.

CASUAL EMPLOYEES.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

CERTAINTY.

See Statutes.

CHARITIES.

- Creation of charity—construction of instrument in favor of charity. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.
- necessity for use of term "charity." Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.
- "or" construed as "and." Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.
- purpose of instrument—circumstances to be considered. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.
- What constitutes charity—national or patriotic purpose. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.
- scope of term "charity." Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.
- trust for maintenance of estate as charity. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.

CHARTER.

See Corporations; Municipal Corporations.

"CHILD."

"Child" as including legitimate child. Peerless Pacific Co. v. Burckhard (Wash.), 247.

Annotated

See also Infants.

CITIZENSHIP.

Federal citizenship as paramount to state citizenship. Selective Draft Law Cases (U. S.); 856.

CLAIMS.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

COLLATERAL ATTACK.

See Public Service Commissions.

COMMERCE.

See Constitutional Law; Employers' Liability Acts; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

COMMISSIONERS.

See Eminent Domain.

COMMISSIONS.

See Brokers.

COMMON LAW.

See Eminent Domain; Employers' Liability Acts.

COMPENSATION.

See Attorneys; Eminent Domain; Executors and Administrators; Public Officers; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

COMPETITION.

See Municipal Corporations.

COMPLAINT.

See Pleading.

COMPOUNDING OF INTEREST.

See Interest.

CONCEALMENT OF FACTS.

See Antenuptial Agreements.

CONDITIONAL SALES.

Right of conditional vendee to recover damages for breach of warranty. Peuser v. Marsh (N. Y.), 913. Annotated

CONDITIONS.

See Wills.

CONDUCT.

See Divorce; Jury; Trial.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Inheritance by adopted child—what law governs. Brewer v. Browning (Miss.), 1013
See also Actions; Employers' Liability Acts; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

CONGRESS.

Power of Congress to punish for contempt—nature and extent of power. Marshall v. Gordon (U. S.), 371. Annotated

CONSCRIPTION.

See War.

CONSENT.

See Bills and Notes.

CONSIDERATION.

See Warranty.

CONSOLIDATION OF ACTIONS.

See Mechanics' Liens.

CONSPIRACY.

Admissibility of declarations of coconspirators—proof of conspiracy as prerequisite to admission in evidence. Hitchman Coal, etc. Co. v. Mitchell (U. S.), 461.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

- Banks—regulation under police power. American Southern Nat. Bank v. Smith (Ky.), 959.
- Buildings—validity of building ordinance. St. Louis v. Nash (Mo.), 134.
- Citizenship—federal citizenship as paramount to state citizenship. Selective Draft Law Cases (U. S.), 856.
- Commerce—regulation of commerce under police power. New Orleans v. Toca (La.), 1032.
- Construction of constitution—contemporaneous construction. Fergus v. Brady (Ill.), 220.
- Contracts—liberty of contract as absolute right. Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Kinney (Ohio), 286.
- public policy as affecting validity of contract. Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Kinney (Ohio), 286.
- statute prohibiting letting of public contract to nonresidents—validity. State v. Senatobia Blank Book, etc. Co. (Miss.), 953.
- Electricity—separation of electric wires—power of public service commission to order. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burlington Traction Co. (Vt.), 841. Annotated
- Food—legislative power to regulate. New Orleans v. Toca (La.), 1032.
- regulation of ice cream—validity. New Orleans v. Toca (La.), 1032.
- Intoxicating liquors—regulation of transportation—validity. Kansas City v. Jordan (Kan.), 273.
- Liberty of speech and of press—construction of constitutional provision. In re Hayes (Fla.), 936.
- Loan brokers—chattel loans—validity of regulation. Wessell v. Timberlake (Ohio), 402.
- Master and servant—workmen's compensation act—validity of Illinois act. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—validity of Kentucky act. Greene v. Caldwell (Ky.), 604. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—validity of Washington act. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- Municipal corporations—debt limit—computation of indebtedness—interest on municipal bonds as factor. O'Rear v. Sartain (Ala.), 593. Annotated
- debt limit—computation of indebtedness—time as of which indebtedness is computed. O'Rear v. Sartain (Ala.), 593.
- debt limit—computation of indebtedness—unissued bonds as part of present indebtedness. O'Rear v. Sartain (Ala.), 593.
- debt limit—effect of exceeding limit—validity of tax for payment. O'Rear v. Sartain (Ala.), 593.
- Police power—nature and scope. Wessell v. Timberlake (Ohio), 402.
- Railroads—order of public service commission requiring station at particular place—reasonableness of order. Mississippi R. Co. v. Mobile, etc. R. Co. (Miss.), 828.
- Smoke—validity of regulatory ordinance. People v. Detroit, etc. Ferry Co. (Mich.), 170. Annotated
- Statutes—certainty—statute held not void for uncertainty. State v. Linn (Okla.), 139.
- construction of statute in favor of validity. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- presumption in favor of validity of statute. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627; New Orleans v. Toca (La.), 1032.
- repeal of repealing act as reviving repealed statute. Manchester Township Supervisors v. Wayne County Commissioners (Pa.), 278. Annotated
- wisdom of statute—judicial review. State v. Senatobia Blank Book, etc. Co. (Miss.), 953; Massey Pub. Co. v. Patten (U. S.), 999.
- Taxation—property used for religious purposes as exempt from taxation. Commonwealth v. First Christian Church (Ky.), 525.
- War—conscription—validity of federal act. Selective Draft Law Cases (U. S.), 856.
- espionage—validity of federal act. Massey Pub. Co. v. Patten (U. S.), 999. Annotated
- Waters and watercourses—grant of land under navigable water—power of state to make grant. People v. Steeplechase Park Co. (N. Y.), 1099. Annotated
- Witnesses—privilege—demand on accused for production of papers as violation of privilege. People v. Gibson (N. Y.), 509.
- See also Public Officers.

CONSTRUCTION.

See Amendments; Bills and Notes; Charities; Constitutional Law; Contracts; Pleading; Statutes; Warranty; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

CONTEMPORANEOUS CONSTRUCTION.

See Constitutional Law.

CONTEMPT.

Congress—power to punish for contempt—nature and extent of power. Marshall v. Gordon (U. S.), 371. Annotated Inherent power of court to punish for contempt. In re Hayes (Fla.), 936.
 Newspaper publication as contempt. In re Hayes (Fla.), 936.

CONTEST.

See Wills.

CONTINGENT REMAINDERS.

See Remainders and Reversions.

CONTINUANCE.

See Appeal and Error; Trial.

CONTINUANCE IN SERVICE.

See Master and Servant.

CONTINUING WARRANTY.

See Warranty.

CONTRACTORS.

See Mechanics' Liens.

CONTRACTS.

Construction—contract for future support—place of support. Soper v. Cisco (N. J.), 452.
 — promise to pay "all debts." Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Silver King Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.), 571.
 Implied contracts—services by member of family. Holstein v. Benedict (Hawaii), 941.
 Rescission—contract for future support—right to rescind after part performance. Soper v. Cisco (N. J.), 452.
 Termination—contract for exchange of property—reasonable time implied. Littlefield v. Bowen (Wash.), 177.
 Validity—antenuptial agreements—concealment of facts as affecting validity. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
 — antenuptial agreements—contract favored in law. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
 — antenuptial agreements—effect of partial invalidity. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917. Annotated — antenuptial agreements—provision contemplating divorce as affecting validity. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
 — intoxicating liquors—validity of sale of liquor with knowledge of purpose to resell illegally. Paul Jones & Co. v. Wilkins (Tenn.), 977. Annotated — liberty of contract as absolute right. Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Kinney (Ohio), 286.
 — master and servant—validity of contract limiting liability of master. Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Kinney (Ohio), 286.
 — public contracts—validity of statute prohibiting letting to nonresidents. State v. Senatobia Blank Book, etc. Co (Miss.), 953.
 — public policy as affecting validity of contract. Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Kinney (Ohio), 286.
 — states—validity of contract exceeding appropriation. Fergus v. Brady (Ill.), 220.
See also Actions; Bills, and Notes; Brokers; Building Restrictions; Corporations; Infants; Marriage; Master and Servant; Parent and Child; Sales; Telegraphs and Telephones.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Carriers of passengers—contributory negligence of passenger—propriety of instruction as to alighting from moving car. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
 — contributory negligence of passenger—standing on platform or steps preparatory to alighting. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
 Instructions—sufficiency of instruction as to burden of proving contributory negligence. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
 Master and servant—contributory negligence of servant—using unsafe appliance. Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655.

CONVERSION.

See Equitable Conversion.

CORONERS.

Workmen's compensation acts—admissibility in evidence of verdict of coroner's jury. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.

CORPORATIONS.

- Charter—construction of debt limit provision. American Nat. Bank v. Smith (Ky.), 959. Annotated
- quo warranto as remedy for violation of charter. State v. Senatobia Blank Book, etc. Co. (Miss.), 953.
- Contracts—what are "ultra vires contracts." American Southern Nat. Bank v. Smith (Ky.), 959.
- Libel or slander of corporation—what constitutes. Axton Fisher Tobacco Co. v. Evening Post Co. (Ky.), 560.
- Officers—purchase of stock by director as affected by fiduciary relation to stockholder. Dawson v. National Life Ins. Co. (Iowa), 230. Annotated
- Stock and stockholders—relation of stockholders to corporation. Dawson v. National Life Ins. Co. (Iowa), 230.
- subscription to stock—fraud on subscriber—waiver by delay. Heiskell v. Morris (Tenn.), 1134.
- subscription to stock—issue of new stock—right of stockholder to preference in subscribing. Schmidt v. Martoni Wireless Tel. Co. (N. J.), 131. Annotated
- subscription to stock—liability on subscription as affected by failure to subscribe entire amount. Heiskell v. Morris (Tenn.), 1134. Annotated
- subscription to stock—right of promoters to subscribe. Heiskell v. Morris (Tenn.), 1134.
- See also Eminent Domain; Public Service Commissions; Public Service Corporations.

CORRECTION.

See Judgments.

COSTS.

- Divorce—expenses of proceeding before commissioner as taxable costs. Hiecke v. Hiecke (Wis.), 497.
- See also Executors and Administrators.

COUNSEL FEES.

See Executors and Administrators.

COUNTIES.

- Officers—control of discretion by injunction. O'Rear v. Sartain (Ala.), 593.

COURSE OF CONDUCT.

See Divorce.

COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

COURTS.

- Actions—power of court to enjoin proceeding in another state. American Express Co. v. Fox (Tenn.), 1148. Annotated
- Constitutional law—wisdom of statute—judicial review. State v. Senatobia Blank Book, etc. Co. (Miss.), 953; Masses Pub. Co. v. Patten (U. S.), 999.
- Contempt—inherent power of court to punish. In re Hayes (Fla.), 936.
- newspaper publication as contempt. In re Hayes (Fla.), 936.
- Decisions—federal decision as binding state court. Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655.
- rules of decision—following other jurisdictions. Northcut v. Church (Tenn.), 545.
- Disbarment of attorney—jurisdiction of court of chancery. In re Hahn (N. J.), 830.
- Eminent domain—jurisdiction of proceeding to enforce award. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.
- jurisdiction over commissioners to assess damages. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.
- Judicial notice—insanity—judicial notice of inheritable nature of insanity. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
- mortality tables—judicial notice of mortality tables. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408. Annotated
- navigable waters—judicial notice of navigable character of stream. Wear v. Kansas (U. S.), 586.

COURTS — Continued.

- Judicial notice—public service corporations—judicial notice of charter of public service corporation. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burlington Traction Co. (Vt.), 841.
 Public service commissions—judicial review of order of commission—power of court of equity. Sayers v. Montpelier, etc. R. Co. (Vt.), 1050.
 Stare decisis—power to overrule previous decision. Brewer v. Browning (Miss.), 1013.
 ——— propriety of overruling previous decision. Brewer v. Browning (Miss.), 1013.
 Trusts and trustees—removal of trustee—jurisdiction of court of chancery. Maydwell v. Maydwell (Tenn.), 1043.
 Wills—jurisdiction of city court over will contest. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 Workmen's compensation acts—construction of act—depriving court of jurisdiction. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
See also Appeal and Error; Appearance; Executors and Administrators; Pleading; Removal of Causes; Trial; Trusts and Trustees.

COVENANTS.

See Building Restrictions; Master and Servant.

CREDIBILITY.

See Witnesses.

CREDITORS.

See Life Insurance.

CRIMINAL LAW.

- Argument of counsel—stating penalty for crime as proper argument. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.
 Army and navy—pledge of public property by soldier—criminal liability of civilian receiving property. Bolland v. United States (U. S.), 520. Annotated Breach of the peace—violence not essential to breach of the peace. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
 ——— what constitutes breach of the peace. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
 Disorderly houses—saloon run in violation of law as disorderly house. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
 Embezzlement—evidence—embezzlement by executor—admissibility of evidence of revocation of letters. People v. Gibson (N. Y.), 509.
 ——— indictment—sufficiency of indictment for embezzlement by executor. People v. Gibson (N. Y.), 509.
 Homicide—evidence—admissibility of evidence as to insanity of relatives. James v. State (Ala.), 119. Annotated ——— evidence—admissibility of evidence as to mental condition of accused on prior occasion. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
 ——— evidence—admissibility of evidence of conduct and condition of accused associated with present drunkenness. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
 ——— evidence—admissibility of evidence of intoxication of accused. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
 ——— evidence—admissibility of opinion of witness as to insanity of accused. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
 ——— evidence—burden of proof as to insanity of accused. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
 ——— evidence—sufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict of guilty. Chilton v. Commonwealth (Ky.), 851.
 ——— indictment—reckless driving of automobile—sufficiency of indictment. People v. Falkovitch (Ill.), 1077.
 ——— insanity as defense—test of irresponsibility—knowledge of consequences. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
 ——— instructions—instructions as to insanity properly refused. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
 ——— instructions—propriety of instruction on self-defense. Chilton v. Commonwealth (Ky.), 851.
 ——— instructions—reckless driving of automobile—inaccurate instruction cured by other instruction. People v. Falkovitch (Ill.), 1077.
 ——— instructions—reckless driving of automobile—instruction not applicable to evidence—prejudicial effect. People v. Falkovitch (Ill.), 1077.
 Intoxicating liquors—breach of the peace—unlawful sale of intoxicants as breach of the peace. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
 ——— duty of officer to arrest for threatened violation of law. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
 ——— duty of sheriff with respect to unlawful sale of intoxicants. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
 ——— evidence—admissibility of evidence of sales by bartender. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

CRIMINAL LAW — Continued.

Intoxicating liquors—evidence—sufficiency of evidence of illegal sale. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

— instructions—certain instructions held to be applicable. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

Rape—evidence—admissibility of evidence as to conduct of prosecutrix with others. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.

— evidence—admissibility of evidence as to subsequent familiarities with prosecutrix. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.

Reasonable doubt—necessity of proving defendant's guilt beyond reasonable doubt. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.

Rights of accused—demand on accused for production of papers as violation of privilege. People v. Gibson (N. Y.), 509.

Sentence and punishment—cruel and unusual punishment—what constitutes. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391. Annotated — error in sentence—remand by appellate court for proper sentence. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

— form of sentence—conviction on several counts. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

— review of sentence on appeal. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

Trial—proof of venue—sufficiency. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

Unlawful assembly—what constitutes—audience at Sunday moving picture show. People v. Dixon (Mich.), 385. Annotated

See also Appeal and Error; Municipal Corporations; Sheriffs and Constables.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

See Witnesses.

CROSSINGS.

See Railroads.

CRUEL PUNISHMENT.

See Sentence and Punishment.

CRUELTY.

See Divorce.

CUSTODY.

See Jury; Parent and Child.

DAMAGES.

Conditional sales—right of conditional vendee to recover damages for breach of warranty. Peuser v. Marsh (N. Y.), 913. Annotated

Eminent domain—cost of removing personalty from premises as element of compensation. St. Louis v. St. Louis, etc. R. Co. (Mo.), 881. Annotated — estoppel to assert damage. Brckett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

— evidence of value—admissibility of certificate of incorporation. Brckett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

— evidence of value—admissibility of tax returns. Brckett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

— evidence of value—certain evidence held not admissible as admission. Brckett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

— injury not actionable at common law—award by state not precluded. Brckett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

— loss of profits of business as element of damage. Brckett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863. Annotated Excessiveness—death by wrongful act—what is excessive verdict. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.

Exemplary damages—elements considered—wealth of defendant. Dwyer v. Libert (Ida.), 973.

— when pleading sufficient to warrant recovery of exemplary damages. Dwyer v. Libert (Ida.), 973.

Libel and slander—loss of election as element of damage. Taylor v. Moseley (Ky.), 1125.

— necessity of proving special damages in case of libel not actionable per se. Taylor v. Moseley (Ky.), 1125. Annotated

Minerals—extraction of ore by one tenant—measure of damages. Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Silver King Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.), 571. Annotated

DEATH.

See Accident Insurance.

DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT.

Damages—excessiveness of damages. Frooming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.

DEBT LIMIT.

See Corporations; Municipal Corporations.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

See Life Insurance.

DEBTS.

See All Debts.

DECISIONS.

See Courts.

DECLARATIONS.

See Admissions and Declarations.

DECREE.

See Injunctions; Judgments.

DEEDS.

Consideration—future support as valuable consideration. Soper v. Cisco (N. J.), 452.

Mental capacity of grantor—test. Soper v. Cisco (N. J.), 452.

Parent and child—conveyance by parent to child—presumption and burden of proof of undue influence. Soper v. Cisco (N. J.), 452. Annotated

See also Rescission, Cancellation and Reformation.

DE FACTO OFFICERS.

See Public Officers.

DEFECTS.

See Streets and Highways.

DEFINITIONS.

See Statutes; Words and Phrases.

DEGREES.

See Negligence.

DE JURE OFFICERS.

See Public Officers.

DELAY.

See Fraud.

DELIRIUM TREMENS.

See Admissions and Declarations.

DEMURRER.

See Pleading.

DEPENDENTS.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

DEPOSITS.

See Banks.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

Adopted child—what law governs inheritance by adopted child. Brewer v. Browning (Miss.), 1013.

DILIGENCE.

See New Trial.

DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

See Verdict.

DISBARMENT.

See Attorneys.

DISCHARGE.

See Master and Servant.

DISCOUNT.

See Bills and Notes.

DISCRETION.

See County Officers; Trial; Veterans.

DISEASE.

- Workmen's compensation acts—disease as accident—fall of driver from hack. Carroll v. What Cheer Stables Co. (R. I.), 346. Annotated
- disease as accident—suicide from supervening insanity. Withers v. London, etc. R. Co. (Eng.), 341. Annotated
- disease as accident—typhoid from impure drinking water. Vennen v. New Dells Lumber Co. (Wis.), 293. Annotated

DISMISSAL.

See Appeal and Error.

DISOBEDIENCE.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

DISORDERLY HOUSES.Saloon run in violation of law as disorderly house. *State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.DISQUALIFICATION.

See Jury.

DIVORCE.

- Alimony—amount of allowance—allowance held proper. Hiecke v. Hiecke (Wis.), 497.
- Antenuptial agreements—provision contemplating divorce as affecting validity. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917. Annotated
- Continuance in divorce case—absence of party as ground. Neven v. Neven (Nev.), 1083. Annotated
- Costs—expenses of proceeding before commissioner. Hiecke v. Hiecke (Wis.), 497.
- Grounds for divorce—conduct of spouse as cruelty warranting divorce. Hiecke v. Hiecke (Wis.), 497. Annotated
- habits of spouse as cruelty warranting divorce. Cunningham v. Cunningham (Mich.), 478. Annotated
- Recrimination as defense—rule stated. Hiecke v. Hiecke (Wis.), 497.
- Remarriage after divorce—right to custody of child. Cain v. Garner (Ky.), 824.
- validity of marriage within proscribed time after divorce. Peerless Pacific Co. v. Burckhard (Wash.), 247.

DRINKING IMPURE WATER.

See Disease.

DRIVERS.

See Disease.

DRUNKENNESS.

See Homicide; Wills; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

DURESS.

See Payment.

EARNINGS.

See Average Weekly Earnings.

ELECTION.

See Equitable Election; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

Attachment—right to dismiss attachment and proceed in equity. Niehaus v. C. B. Barker Construction Co. (Tenn.), 23.

ELECTIONS.

Local option election—proof of result—record book as prima facie evidence. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

Result of election—ineligibility of candidate receiving majority vote—rights of minority candidate. Woll v. Jensen (N. Dak.), 982.

See Libel and Slander.

ELECTRICITY.

Municipal corporations—power to compete with citizen—sale of fixtures in connection with operation of electric lighting plant. Andrews v. South Haven (Mich.), 100. Annotated Separation of electric wires—power of public service commission to order. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burlington Traction Co. (Vt.), 841. Annotated

EMBEZZLEMENT.

Evidence—embezzlement by executor—admissibility of evidence of revocation of letters. People v. Gibson (N. Y.), 509.

Indictment—sufficiency of indictment for embezzlement by executor. People v. Gibson (N. Y.), 509.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

Commissioners to assess damages,—jurisdiction over commissioners. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

Commissioners to assess damages—status as federal officers. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

Compensation—cost of removing personalty from premises as element of compensation. St. Louis v. St. Louis, etc. R. Co. (Mo.), 881. Annotated —estoppel to assert damage. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

—evidence of value—admissibility of certificate of incorporation. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

—evidence of value—admissibility of tax returns. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

—evidence of value—certain evidence held not admissible as admission. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

—injury not actionable at common law—award by state not precluded. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

—loss of profits of business as element of damages. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863. Annotated Procedure—effect of admission of incompetent evidence. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

—form of award—separate statement of items. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

—jurisdiction of proceeding to enforce award. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

—report of commissioners—to what court made. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

—review of decision of commissioners. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

EMPLOYEES.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACTS.

Federal employers' liability act—act as exclusive of state regulation. Erie R. Co. v. Winfield (U. S.), 662.

—employees within act—employee clearing wreckage from track. Southern R. Co. v. Puckett (U. S.), 69. Annotated —employees within act—engineer of switch engine. Erie R. Co. v. Winfield (U. S.), 662.

—employees within act—machinist in roundhouse. Minneapolis, etc. R. Co. v. Winters (U. S.), 54. Annotated —employees within act—necessity for existence of relation of master and servant. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. v. Harmon's Administrator (Ky.), 41. Annotated —judgment denying recovery as precluding remedy under state law. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. v. Harmon's Administrator (Ky.), 41.

—removal of cause from state to federal court. Southern R. Co. v. Puckett (U. S.), 69.

—review—applicability of act—saving question for review. Minneapolis, etc. R. Co. v. Winters (U. S.), 54.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACTS—Continued.

Federal employers' liability act—review—decision on appeal—determining rights at common law. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. v. Harmon's Administrator (Ky.), 41.
 — review—review by federal court of state decision. Southern R. Co. v. Puckett (U. S.), 69.

EMPLOYMENT.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS.

See Public Officers; States.

EQUITABLE CONVERSION.

Reconversion—how accomplished. Chambers v. Preston (Tenn.), 428.
 Testamentary direction for future sale as operating to convert realty into personalty. Chambers v. Preston (Tenn.), 428.

EQUITABLE ELECTION.

Election by widow to take under will as affecting right to intestate property. Compton v. Akers (Kan.), 983. Annotated EQUITY.

See Courts.

ESPIONAGE.

See War.

ESTATES.

See Wills.

ESTOPPEL.

Adjoining landowners—hedge fence—invoking doctrine of estoppel to establish ownership. Wideman v. Faivre (Kan.), 1168.
 Eminent domain—estoppel to assert damage. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

EVIDENCE.

Admissions and declarations—carriers of passengers—injury to passenger—admissibility of declaration of employee of carrier. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
 — conspiracy—declarations of coconspirators—proof of conspiracy as prerequisites to admission. Hitchman Coal, etc. Co. v. Mitchell (U. S.), 461.
 — eminent domain—certain evidence held not admissible as admission of value of property taken. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.
 — workmen's compensation acts—admissibility of declaration of employee while suffering from delirium tremens. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.
 — workmen's compensation acts—admissibility of employee as to cause of injury. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.
 Age—testimony as to age of another—admissibility. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.
 — testimony as to person's own age—admissibility. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425. Annotated Best and secondary evidence—proof of title to real estate. Littlefield v. Bowen (Wash.), 177.
 Burden of proof—accident insurance—burden of proving that death did not result from suicide. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor (Ark.), 1122.
 — contributory negligence—sufficiency of instruction as to burden of proving contributory negligence. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
 — fiduciary relation—burden of proving fairness of transaction. Dawson v. National Life Ins. Co. (Iowa), 230.
 — gifts—conveyance by parent to child—burden of proof of undue influence. Soper v. Cisco (N. J.), 452. Annotated — insanity—burden of proof as to insanity. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
 — wills—undue influence—propriety of instruction as to burden of proof. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 — workmen's compensation acts—burden of proving that claimant is casual employee. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
 Embezzlement—embezzlement by executor—admissibility of evidence of revocation of letters. People v. Gibson (N. Y.), 509.
 Eminent domain—effect of admission of incompetent evidence. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.
 — evidence of value—admissibility of certificate of incorporation. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

EVIDENCE — Continued.

- Eminent domain—evidence of value—admissibility of tax returns. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.
- Expert and opinion evidence—homicide—admissibility of opinion of witness as to insanity of accused. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
- wills—admissibility of opinion evidence as to testamentary capacity. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
- Guardian ad litem—admissibility in evidence of order appointing guardian ad litem. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- Hearsay evidence—inadmissibility generally. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.
- Homicide—admissibility of evidence as to insanity of relatives. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
- admissibility of evidence as to mental condition of accused on prior occasion. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
- admissibility of evidence of conduct and condition of accused associated with present drunkenness. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
- admissibility of evidence of intoxication of accused. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
- Identity—right of witness to identify person by pointing him out. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.
- Intoxicating liquors—criminal prosecution—admissibility of evidence of sales by bartender. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.
- local option election—proof of result—record book as prima facie evidence. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.
- Judicial notice—insanity—judicial notice of inheritable nature of insanity. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
- mortality tables—judicial notice of mortality tables. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- navigable waters—judicial notice of navigable character of stream. Wear v. Kansas (U. S.), 586.
- public service corporations—judicial notice of charter of public service corporation. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burlington Traction Co. (Vt.), 841.
- Libel and slander—admissibility of proof of other publications. Anderson v. Shockley (Mo.), 500.
- Master and servant—action by discharged employee for salary—admissibility in evidence of written contract of employment for previous term. Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (Va.), 1171.
- workmen's compensation act—admissibility in evidence of verdict of coroner's jury. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—sufficiency of evidence of dependency. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- Presumptions—carriers of passengers—presumption of negligence from injury caused by operation of street car. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- gifts—conveyance by parent to child—presumption of undue influence. Soper v. Cisco (N. J.), 462.
- public service commissions—presumption in favor of order of commission. Mississippi R. Com. v. Mobile, etc. R. Co. (Miss.), 828.
- statutes—presumption in favor of validity of statute. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627; New Orleans v. Toca (La.), 1032.
- witnesses—presumption from failure to call attorney as witness. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
- Rape—admissibility of evidence as to conduct of prosecutrix with others. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.
- admissibility of evidence as to subsequent familiarities with prosecutrix. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.
- Secondary evidence—necessity of demand for document from accused before introduction of secondary evidence. People v. Gibson (N. Y.), 509.
- Telegraphs and telephones—overhanging trees on railroad right of way—cutting by telegraph company—admissibility of evidence of contract with railroad. Cobb v. Western Union Telegraph Co. (Vt.), 1156.
- Weight and sufficiency—automobiles—injury in operation—person in charge of car as dealer—sufficiency of evidence to establish. Koonovsky v. Quellette (Mass.), 1146.
- bills and notes—sufficiency of evidence of good faith in taking promissory note. First National Bank v. Stover (N. Mex.), 145.
- brokers—refusal by principal to convey—sufficiency of evidence of refusal. Littlefield v. Bowen (Wash.), 177.
- carriers of passengers—injury to passengers—sufficiency of evidence to sustain recovery against carrier. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- duty of court or jury in determining facts from conflicting testimony. Wideman v. Faivre (Kan.), 1168.
- homicide—sufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict of guilty. Chilton v. Commonwealth (Ky.), 851.

EVIDENCE — Continued.

- Weight and sufficiency—intoxicating liquors—criminal prosecution—sufficiency of evidence of illegal sale. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.
- positive and negative testimony—propriety of instruction as to weight. Babb v. State (Ariz.), 925.
- reasonable doubt—criminal case—necessity of proving defendant's guilt beyond reasonable doubt. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.
- scintilla of evidence—what constitutes. Holstein v. Benedict (Hawaii), 941.
- seed—warranty of correspondence to name or variety—sufficiency of evidence of breach. Buckbee v. P. Hohenadel, Jr. Co. (U. S.), 88. Annotated
- seed—warranty of germinating power—sufficiency of evidence of breach. Meehan v. Ingalls (Wash.), 71. Annotated
- uncontradicted testimony—weight. Schmidt v. Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. (N. J.), 131.
- venue—sufficiency of proof of venue in criminal trial. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.
- workmen's compensation acts—sufficiency of evidence of dependency. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627. Annotated
- Wills—testamentary capacity—admissibility of evidence as to general business capacity of testator. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
- testamentary capacity—admissibility of evidence as to use of intoxicants by testator. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
- testamentary capacity—admissibility of remote statements of testator. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
- testamentary capacity—evidence admissible generally as to capacity. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
- See also Appeal and Error; New Trial; Trial; Variance; Witnesses; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

EXCEPTIONS.

See Municipal Corporations.

EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY.

See Contracts.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

- Compensation of administrator—amount of allowance. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
- Contest of will—right of administrator of heir to contest. Braemel v. Reuther (Mo.), 533. Annotated
- Counsel fees of administrator—discretion of court. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
- Public administrator—priority of right to appointment. Brinckwirth's Estate v. Troll (Mo.), 1056. Annotated
- revocation of letters. Brinckwirth's Estate v. Troll (Mo.), 1056. Annotated
- Widow—allowance to widow for housekeeping expenses and court costs—discretion of court. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
- occupation of homestead—right of widow. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
- See also Actions; Embezzlement.

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

See Damages.

EXEMPTIONS.

- "Child" in exemption statute as including legitimate child. Peerless Pacific Co. v. Burckhard (Wash.), 247. Annotated
- Insurance money—proceeds of fire insurance policy—policy on property not exempt at time of fire. Peerless Pacific Co. v. Burckhard (Wash.), 247.
- See also Taxation.

EXTENSION OF TIME.

See Bills and Notes.

FAIRNESS OF TRANSACTION.

See Fraud.

FAMILY.

See Implied Contracts.

FEDERAL COURTS.

See Appeal and Error; Courts; Parties to Actions; Removal of Causes.

FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT.See Employers' Liability Acts.FEDERAL OFFICERS.See Public Officers.FENCES.Hedge fence—invoking doctrine of estoppel to establish ownership. Wideman v. Faivre (Kan.), 1168.FIDUCIARY RELATION.See Fraud.FINDINGS.See Appeal and Error; Public Service Commissions; Res Judicata.FIRE INSURANCE.Agents—liability of agent to owner of property for failure to procure insurance. Rezac v. Zima (Kan.), 1035. *Annotated*Exemptions—proceeds of fire insurance policy—policy on property not exempt at time of fire. Peerless Pacific Co. v. Burekhard (Wash.), 247.FIXTURES.See Electricity.FOOD AND DRUGS.Foreign substance in animal food—liability of seller. Newell v. Reid (Mich.), 224.Regulation—legislative power to regulate sale of food. New Orleans v. Toca (La.), 1032. Annotated— validity of ordinance regulating sale of ice cream. New Orleans v. Toca (La.), 1032.FORECLOSURE.See Mechanics' Liens.FOREIGN ACTIONS.See Actions.FOREIGN SUBSTANCE.See Food and Drugs.FRAUD.Corporations—subscription to stock—fraud on subscriber—waiver by delay. Heiskell v. Morris (Tenn.), 1134.Fiduciary relation—burden of proving fairness of transaction. Dawson v. National Life Ins. Co. (Iowa), 230.— purchase of stock by director as affected by fiduciary relation to stockholder. Dawson v. National Life Ins. Co. (Iowa), 230. Annotated— what constitutes. Dawson v. National Life Ins. Co. (Iowa), 230.FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.Master and servant—written contract for one year's service—continuance from year to year thereafter as within statute of frauds. Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (Va.), 1171.Memorandum—sufficiency of printed signature. Berryman v. Childs (Neb.), 1029. *AnnotatedFUTURE SUPPORT.See Contracts; Deeds.GERMINATING POWER.See Seed.GIFTS.Husband and wife—money given by husband to wife—right to retain money after death of husband. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.Parent and child—conveyance by parent to child—presumption and burden of proof of undue influence. Soper v. Cisco (N. J.), 452. *Annotated*Right to make gift—note payable to donor's estate as subject to his disposition. Poole v. Poole (Kan.), 929.

GOOD FAITH.

See Bills and Notes.

GRADE CROSSINGS.

See Railroads.

GRATUITOUS UNDERTAKING.

See Negligence.

GUARANTY.

Warranty—distinction between warranty and guaranty. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.

GUARDIANS.

Guardian ad litem—admissibility in evidence of order appointing guardian ad litem. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.

—sufficiency of allegation of appointment of guardian ad litem. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.

Injury to infant—defenses—release by guardian. Stetz v. F. Mayer Bros, etc. Co. (Wis.), 675.

GUESTS.

See Automobiles.

HABITS.

See Divorce.

HACKS.

See Disease.

HARMLESS ERROR.

See Appeal and Error.

HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence.

HEDGE FENCE.

See Fences.

HEIRS.

See Wills.

HOLIDAYS.

See Sundays and Holidays.

HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS.

See Wills.

HOMESTEAD.

See Executors and Administrators.

HOMICIDE.

Defenses—insanity as defense—test of irresponsibility—knowledge of consequences. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

Evidence—admissibility of evidence as to insanity of relatives. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

—admissibility of evidence as to mental condition of accused on prior occasion. James v. State (Ala.), 119. Annotated

—admissibility of evidence of conduct and condition of accused associated with present drunkenness. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

—admissibility of evidence of intoxication of accused. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

—admissibility of opinion of witness as to insanity of accused. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

—burden of proof as to insanity. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

—sufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict of guilty. Chilton v. Commonwealth (Ky.), 851.

Indictment—reckless driving of automobile—sufficiency of indictment. People v. Falkovitch (Ill.), 1077.

HOMICIDE — Continued.

- Instructions—insanity—propriety of instruction as to insanity. James v. State (Ala.), 119.
 ——— reckless driving of automobile—inaccurate instruction cured by other instructions. People v. Falkovitch (Ill.), 1077.
 ——— reckless driving of automobile—instruction not applicable to evidence—prejudicial effect. People v. Falkovitch (Ill.), 1077.
 ——— self-defense—propriety of instruction as to self-defense. Chilton v. Commonwealth (Ky.), 851.

HOUSEKEEPING EXPENSES.

See Executors and Administrators.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

- Antenuptial agreements—concealment of facts as affecting validity. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
 ——— contract favored in law. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
 ——— effect of partial invalidity. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917. Annotated ——— validity of provision contemplating divorce. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
 Automobiles—negligence of husband operating automobile not imputed to wife. Virginia R. etc. Co. v. Gorsuch (Va.), 838.
 Gifts—money given by husband to wife—right to retain money after death of husband. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
 Personal property—power of husband to dispose of personalty during coverture. Poole v. Poole (Kan.), 929. Annotated
 See also Divorce.

ICE CREAM.

See Food and Drugs.

IDENTITY.

- Evidence of identity—right of witness to identify person by pointing him out. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

ILLEGAL CONTRACTS.

- Antenuptial agreements—concealment of facts as affecting validity. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
 ——— contract favored in law. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
 ——— effect of partial invalidity. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917. Annotated
 ——— validity of provision contemplating divorce. Stratton v. Wilson (Ky.), 917.
 Intoxicating liquors—sale of liquor with knowledge of purpose to resell illegally—validity of contract. Paul Jones & Co. v. Wilkins (Tenn.), 977. Annotated Liberty of contract as absolute right. Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Kinney (Ohio), 286.
 Master and servant—validity of contract limiting liability of master. Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Kinney (Ohio), 286.
 Public policy as affecting validity of contract. Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Kinney (Ohio), 286.
 States—validity of contract exceeding appropriation. Fergus v. Brady (Ill.), 220.
 See also Building Restrictions; Marriage; Parent and Child.

ILLEGITIMACY.

- “Child” as including legitimate child. Peerless Pacific Co. v. Burckhard (Wash.), 247.

ILL FEELING.

See Trusts and Trustees.

IMPEACHMENT.

See Witnesses.

IMPLIED CONTRACTS.

- Services by member of family—right of recovery. Holstein v. Benedict (Hawaii), 941.

IMPURE WATER.

See Disease.

IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE.

See Negligence.

INDICTMENT.

See Embezzlement; Homicide.

INDUSTRIAL INSURANCE.

Insurable interest—necessity that beneficiary have insurable interest. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Nelson (Ky.), 1182. Annotated

INFANTS.

"Child" as including illegitimate child. Peerless Pacific Co. v. Burekhard (Wash.), 247. Annotated

Contracts—enforcement of infant's contract for services. Cain v. Garner (Ky.), 824.

—right of infant to avoid contract for personal services. Cain v. Garner (Ky.), 824.

Injuries to infant—defenses—misrepresentation as to age. Stetz v. F. Mayer Boot, etc. Co. (Wis.), 675.

—defenses—release by guardian. Stetz v. F. Mayer, etc. Co. (Wis.), 675.

—trespassing infant—basis of doctrine of liability to trespassing infant. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.

—trespassing infant—liability of owner of premises for drowning of child in canal. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.

—trespassing infant—turntable doctrine—sufficiency of complaint. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.

—workmen's compensation act—minor illegally employed as entitled to compensation under workmen's compensation act. Stetz v. F. Mayer Boot, etc. Co. (Wis.), 675. Annotated

See also Adoption; Parent and Child.

INJUNCTIONS.

Actions—power of court to enjoin proceeding in another state. American Express Co. v. Fox (Tenn.), 1148. Annotated Apprehension of injury as ground for issuance of injunction. O'Rear v. Sartain (Ala.), 593.

Decree—form of decree—effect of enjoining defendant in individual capacity only. Hitchman Coal, etc. Co. v. Mitchell (U. S.), 461.

—form of decree—improper inclusion of persons in injunction—right of others to object. Hitchman Coal, etc. Co. v. Mitchell (U. S.), 461.

Labor combinations—injunction against officer—possibility of injury to complainant as affecting right to injunction. Hitchman Coal, etc. Co. v. Mitchell (U. S.), 461.

—injunction against officer—right to injunction to prevent unionizing of employees. Hitchman Coal, etc. Co. v. Mitchell (U. S.), 461.

Licenses—failure to pay license fee—injunction as proper remedy to prevent licensee from carrying on business. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Montgomery (Ala.), 554.

Municipal corporations—sale of fixtures in connection with operation of public utility—right of citizen to injunction. Andrews v. South Haven (Mich.), 100. Annotated Parties—successor of official—necessity of service of process on successor. Hitchman Coal, etc. Co. v. Mitchell (U. S.), 461.

Public officers—control of discretion of county officers by injunction. O'Rear v. Sartain (Ala.), 593.

—unauthorized payment—right of taxpayer to restrain. Fergus v. Brady (Ill.), 220.

Public service commissions—injunction as remedy to review order. Mississippi R. Com. v. Mobile, etc. R. Co. (Miss.), 828.

INJURY.

Workmen's compensation acts—what constitutes "injury" within meaning of act. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354. Annotated

See also Injunctions; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

INSANITY.

Deeds—mental capacity of grantor. Soper v. Cisco (N. J.), 452.

Judicial notice of inheritable nature of insanity. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

Homicide—insanity as defense—admissibility of evidence as to condition of accused on prior occasion. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

—insanity as defense—admissibility of evidence as to insanity of relatives. James v. State (Ala.), 119. Annotated —insanity as defense—admissibility of evidence of conduct and condition of accused associated with present drunkenness. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

—insanity as defense—admissibility of opinion of witness as to insanity of accused. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

—insanity as defense—burden of proof as to insanity. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

—insanity as defense—instructions properly refused. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

—insanity as defense—test of irresponsibility—knowledge of consequences. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

Witnesses—mental capacity of witness as question of law and fact. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.

See also Disease.

INSTRUCTIONS.

See Appeal and Error; Argument of Counsel; Carriers of Passengers; Homicide; Insanity; Intoxicating Liquors; Negligence; Wills; Witnesses.

INSURABLE INTEREST.

See Industrial Insurance; Life Insurance.

INSURANCE.

Accident insurance—burden of proving that death did not result from suicide. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor (Ark.), 1122.

Automobile insurance—loss—contract for settlement—effect. Gaffey v. St. Paul Fire, etc. Ins. Co. (N. Y.), 1041.

Benefit insurance—receipt of benefit from beneficial association as affecting right to compensation under workmen's compensation act. State v. District Court (Minn.), 635.

Fire insurance—exemptions—proceeds of fire insurance policy—property not exempt at time of fire. Peerless Pacific Co. v. Burekhard (Wash.), 247.

— liability of agent to owner of property for failure to procure insurance. Rezac v. Zima (Kan.), 1035. Annotated

Industrial insurance—insurable interest—necessity that beneficiary have insurable interest. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Nelson (Ky.), 1182. Annotated

Life insurance—insurable interest—insurable interest of creditor. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Nelson (Ky.), 1182.

— insurable interest—necessity that beneficiary have insurable interest. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Nelson (Ky.), 1182.

— insurable interest—rights of assignee not having insurable interest. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Nelson (Ky.), 1182.

INTENT.

See Statutes; Wills.

INTEREST.

Compounding of interest—accounting by trustee. Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Silver King Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.), 571.

See also Municipal Corporations.

INTEREST IN PROPERTY.

See Wills.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

See Employers' Liability Acts; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

INTESTATE PROPERTY.

See Wills.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Abatement of liquor nuisance—exclusiveness of remedy. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.

Arrest for threatened violation of law—duty of officer. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.

Breach of the peace—unlawful sale of intoxicants as breach of the peace. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.

Contract to sell liquor—effect of knowledge of purpose to resell illegally. Paul Jones & Co. v. Wilkins (Tenn.), 977. Annotated Criminal prosecution—admissibility of evidence as to sales by bartender. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

— certain instructions held to be applicable. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

— sufficiency of evidence of illegal sale. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

— what constitutes cruel and unusual punishment. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391. Annotated Disorderly houses—saloon run in violation of law as disorderly house. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.

Local option election—proof of result—record book as prima facie evidence. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

Sheriffs—duty of sheriff with respect to unlawful sale of intoxicants. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.

Statutory regulation—validity of ordinance regulating transportation. Kansas City v. Jordan (Kan.), 273.

INTOXICATION.

See Homicide; Wills; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

INVITATION.See Owner of Premises.*INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.*See Homicide.*IRRESPONSIBILITY.*See Insanity.*JOINDER OF ACTIONS.*See Actions.*JUDGES.*See Trial.*JUDGMENTS.

Correction of judgments—premature entry by clerk. Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655.

Res judicata—federal employers' liability act—judgment denying recovery as precluding remedy under state law. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. v. Harmon's Administrator (Ky.), 41.

— finding of facts—effect of future developments. People v. Detroit, etc. Ferry Co. (Mich.), 170.

— mechanics' liens—foreclosure decree as binding adjudication. Cain v. Parfitt (Utah), 28.

See also Injunctions.JUDICIAL CONTROVERSY.*See Workmen's Compensation Acts.*JUDICIAL NOTICE.

Insanity—judicial notice of inheritable nature of insanity. James v. State (Ala.), 119.

Mortality tables—judicial notice of mortality tables. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408. Annotated

Navigable waters—judicial notice of navigable character of stream. Wear v. Kansas (U.S.), 586.

Public service corporations—judicial notice of charter of public service corporation. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burlington Traction Co. (Vt.), 841.

JURISDICTION.See Courts.*JURY.

Custody and conduct of jury—jury not to be subjected to outside influence. Chilton v. Commonwealth (Ky.), 851.

— reading of newspapers by jury as ground for new trial. Babb v. State (Ariz.), 925.

— taking jury to revival meeting as ground for new trial. Chilton v. Commonwealth (Ky.), 851. Annotated Qualifications of jurors—disqualification of juror as ground for new trial. Chilton v. Commonwealth (Ky.), 851.

See also Appeal and Error; Coroners.KINDRED.*See Insanity.*KNOWLEDGE OF CONSEQUENCES.*See Insanity.*LABOR COMBINATIONS.

Injunction against officer—possibility of injury to complainant as affecting right to injunction. Hitchman Coal, etc. Co. v. Mitchell (U. S.), 461.

— right to injunction to prevent unionizing of employees. Hitchman Coal, etc. Co. v. Mitchell (U. S.), 461.

Libel and slander—charge that name of employer is on "unfair list" as libelous. Axton Fisher Tobacco Co. v. Evening Post Co. (Ky.), 560. Annotated Nonmembership in union as condition of employment—right of employer to impose condition. Hitchman Coal, etc. Co. v. Mitchell (U. S.), 461.

LACHES.

Proof obscured by delay—denial of relief proper. Soper v. Cisco (N. J.), 452.

LEADING QUESTIONS.

See Witnesses.

LEGISLATURE.

Contempt—power of Congress to punish—nature and extent of power. Marshall v. Gordon (U. S.), 371. Annotated

LEGITIMACY.

See Illegitimacy.

LETTERS.

See Executors and Administrators.

"LIABILITIES."

Meaning of "liabilities." Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

Actionable words—attributing certain statement to candidate for office as actionable per se. Taylor v. Moseley (Ky.), 1125.

— charge of unfair treatment of labor as libelous. Axton Fisher Tobacco Co. v. Evening Post Co. (Ky.), 560.

— charge that name of employer is on "unfair list" as libelous. Axton Fisher Tobacco Co. v. Evening Post Co. (Ky.), 560. Annotated — distinction between libel and slander. Dwyer v. Libert (Ida.), 973.

— effect of inaccurate designation of person in libel. Axton Fisher Tobacco Co. v. Evening Post Co. (Ky.), 560.

— what constitutes libel or slander of corporation. Axton Fisher Tobacco Co. v. Evening Post Co. (Ky.), 560.

— when words are libelous per se. Axton Fisher Tobacco Co. v. Evening Post Co. (Ky.), 560.

— written communication held to be actionable per se. Dwyer v. Libert (Ida.), 973.

Damages—loss of election as element of damage. Taylor v. Moseley (Ky.), 1125. Annotated — necessity of proving special damages in case of libel not actionable per se. Taylor v. Moseley (Ky.), 1125.

Evidence—admissibility of proof of other publications. Anderson v. Shockley (Mo.), 500.

Pleading—necessity of alleging special damage. Axton Fisher Tobacco Co. v. Evening Post Co. (Ky.), 560.

— sufficiency of complaint with respect to averments of time and place of slander. Anderson v. Shockley (Mo.), 500. Annotated — suit on several publications—necessity of pleading each publication separately. Anderson v. Shockley (Mo.), 500.

— variance between complaint and proof. Anderson v. Shockley (Mo.), 500.

Privileged communications—complaint against public officer. Dwyer v. Libert (Ida.), 973.

LIBERTY OF CONTRACT.

See Contracts.

LIBERTY OF SPEECH AND OF PRESS.

Construction of constitutional provision. In re Hayes (Fla.), 936.

LICENSES.

Failure to pay license fee—injunction as proper remedy to prevent licensee from carrying on business. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Montgomery (Ala.), 554.

Payment to secure license—right to recover back. Baldwin v. Chesaning (Mich.), 512.

Annotated

LIENS.

See Mechanics' Liens.

LIFE INSURANCE.

Industrial insurance—insurable interest—necessity that beneficiary have insurable interest. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Nelson (Ky.), 1182. Annotated Insurable interest—insurable interest of creditor. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Nelson (Ky.), 1182.

Ann. Cas. 1918B.—78.

LIFE INSURANCE — Continued.

Insurable interest—necessity that beneficiary have insurable interest. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Nelson (Ky.), 1182.

—— rights of assignee not having insurable interest. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Nelson (Ky.), 1182.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Mechanics' liens—foreclosure—amendment of bill as affecting plea of limitations. Niehans v. C. B. Barker Construction Co. (Tenn.), 23.

Retroactive operation of statute of limitations. State v. General Accident, etc. Assur. Corp. (Minn.), 615.

LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

See Master and Servant.

LOAN BROKERS.

See Brokers.

LOCAL OPTION.

Election—proof of result—record book as prima facie evidence. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

LOSS OF ELECTION.

See Libel and Slander.

LOSS OF PROFITS.

See Eminent Domain.

LUMP SUM AWARD.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

MACHINISTS.

See Employers' Liability Acts.

MAJORITY VOTE.

See Elections.

MANDAMUS.

Veterans—right to appointment to office—enforcement by mandamus. Phelps v. Byrne (S. Dak.), 996.

MARITIME EMPLOYEES.

See Master and Servant; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

MARRIAGE.

Remarriage after divorce—right to custody of child. Cain v. Garner (Ky.), 824.

—— validity of marriage within proscribed time after divorce. Peerless Pacific Co. v. Burekhard (Wash.), 247.

Restraint of marriage—validity of testamentary disposition in restraint of marriage. Matter of Seaman (N. Y.), 1138. Annotated

See also Workmen's Compensation Acts.

MASSAGE.

See Physicians and Surgeons.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Contract of employment—action by discharged employee for salary—admissibility in evidence of written contract for previous term. Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (Va.), 1171.

—— action by employee for salary—pleading—sufficiency of objection on ground of variance. Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (Va.), 1171.

—— continuance in service after termination of contract—effect as renewal of contract. Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (Va.), 1171. Annotated —— enforcement of negative covenant. Cain v. Garner (Ky.), 824.

—— wrongful discharge of servant—form of remedy. Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (Va.), 1171.

—— wrongful discharge of servant—question of law or fact. Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (Va.), 1171.

Injury to servant—contract limitation of liability—validity. Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Kinney (Ohio), 286.

MASTER AND SERVANT—Continued.

- Injury to servant—contributory negligence of servant—using unsafe appliance. Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655.
- duty to furnish safe appliances—application of rule to maritime employee. Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655.
- federal employers' liability act—act as exclusive of state regulation. Erie R. Co. v. Winfield (U. S.), 662.
- federal employers' liability act—employees within act—employee clearing wreckage from track. Southern R. Co. v. Puckett (U. S.), 69. Annotated
- federal employers' liability act—employees within act—engineer of switch engine. Erie R. Co. v. Winfield (U. S.), 662.
- federal employers' liability act—employees within act—machinist in roundhouse. Minneapolis, etc. R. Co. v. Winters (U. S.), 54. Annotated
- federal employers' liability act—employees within act—necessity for existence of relation of master and servant. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. v. Harmon's Administrator (Ky.), 41. Annotated
- federal employers' liability act—judgment denying recovery as precluding remedy under state law. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. v. Harmon's Administrator (Ky.), 41.
- federal employers' liability act—removal of cause from state to federal court. Southern R. Co. v. Puckett (U. S.), 69.
- federal employers' liability act—review—applicability of act—saving question for review. Minneapolis, etc. R. Co. v. Winters (U. S.), 54.
- federal employers' liability act—review—decision on appeal—determining rights at common law. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. v. Harmon's Administrator (Ky.), 41.
- federal employers' liability act—review—review by federal court of state decision. Southern R. Co. v. Puckett (U. S.), 69.
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—disease as accident—fall of driver from hack. Carroll v. What Cheer Stables Co. (R. I.), 346. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—disease as accident—suicide from supervening insanity. Withers v. London, etc. R. Co. (Eng.), 341. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—disease as accident—typhoid from impure drinking water. Vennen v. New Dells Lumber Co. (Wis.), 293. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—injury by act of third person. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—injury not arising out of employment. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—injury received in another jurisdiction. Grinnell v. Wilkinson (R. I.), 618. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—what constitutes accident arising out of employment. Eugene Dietzen Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 764. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—what constitutes accident arising out of employment. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540; Chicago Dry Kiln Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 645.
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—what constitutes "injury." Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—appeal and error—review of findings of workmen's compensation board. Chicago Dry Kiln Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 645. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—appeal and error—review of findings of workmen's compensation board. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540; Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627; Dale v. Saunders (N. Y.), 703; Eugene Dietzen Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 764.
- workmen's compensation act—appeal and error—review of judgment dismissing claim for compensation. Grinnell v. Wilkinson (R. I.), 618.
- workmen's compensation act—"average weekly earnings"—construction of phrase. Cox v. Trollope (Eng.), 637. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—"average weekly earnings"—tips of railroad porter as included. Great Western R. Co. v. Helps (Eng.), 1120. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—award or allowance—lump sum award. McCracken v. Missouri Valley Bridge, etc. Co. (Kan.), 689. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—award or allowance—termination of allowance by marriage of beneficiary. Adleman v. Ocean Accident, etc. Corp. (Md.), 730. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—depriving court of jurisdiction. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—effect of act as dispensing with judicial controversy. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—effect of change in act on pending proceedings. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.
- workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—nature and purpose of Illinois act. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.

MASTER AND SERVANT — Continued.

- Injury to servant—workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—nature and scope of Washington act. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354; Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655.
- workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—retroactive operation of act. State v. General Accident, etc. Assur. Corp. (Minn.), 615. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—theory of liability under New York act. Dale v. Saunders (N. Y.), 703.
- workmen's compensation act—defenses—absence from place of employment as affecting right of recovery. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- workmen's compensation act—defenses—disobedience of orders as precluding recovery. Williams v. Llandudno Coaching, etc. Co. (Eng.), 682.
- workmen's compensation act—defenses—intoxication of employee as barring recovery. Williams v. Llandudno Coaching, etc. Co. (Eng.), 682. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—defenses—receipt of other benefit as affecting right to compensation. State v. District Ct. (Minn.), 635. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—dependents within act—absence of dependents—award to state. Blanton v. Wheeler, etc. Co. (Conn.), 747.
- workmen's compensation act—dependents within act—who is "dependent." Blanton v. Wheeler, etc. Co. (Conn.), 747. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—dependents within act—residence of beneficiary as affecting right to compensation. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—election to accept act—necessity of election. Vaughan's Seed Store v. Simonini (Ill.), 713. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—election to accept act—right of election. Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655.
- workmen's compensation act—election to accept act—time for election. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—employees within act—casual employee. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—employees within act—maritime employee. Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—employees within act—minor illegally employed. Stetz v. F. Mayer Boot, etc. Co. (Wis.), 675. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—employees within act—municipal employee. State v. District Court (Minn.), 635.
- workmen's compensation act—employees within act—railroad employee. Erie R. Co. v. Winfield (U. S.), 662. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—employees within act—who is "employee." Dale v. Saunders (N. Y.), 703. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—employments within act—construction of Illinois statute. Vaughan's Seed Store v. Simonini (Ill.), 713.
- workmen's compensation act—evidence—declaration of employee as to cause of injury—admissibility in evidence. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.
- workmen's compensation act—evidence—declaration of employee while suffering from delirium tremens—admissibility in evidence. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.
- workmen's compensation act—evidence—dependency—sufficiency of evidence. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—evidence—verdict of coroner's jury—admissibility in evidence. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—medical examination of workman. Earwicker v. London Graving Dock Co. (Eng.), 665. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—medical referee—duties. Earwicker v. London Graving Dock Co. (Eng.), 665.
- workmen's compensation act—notice of claim—time for giving. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—proceedings under act—applicability of rules of evidence. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.
- workmen's compensation act—proceedings under act—applicability of rules of legal procedure. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—proceedings under act—form of findings. Blanton v. Wheeler, etc. Co. (Conn.), 747.
- workmen's compensation act—proceedings under act—motion to recommit. Blanton v. Wheeler, etc. Co. (Conn.), 747.
- workmen's compensation act—validity of Illinois act. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation acts—validity of Kentucky act. Greene v. Caldwell (Ky.), 604. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—validity of Washington act. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.

MASTER AND SERVANT—Continued.

- Label and slander—charge of unfair treatment of labor as libelous. Axton Fisher Tobacco Co. v. Evening Post Co. (Ky.), 560.
- charge that name of employer is on "unfair list" as libelous. Axton Fisher Tobacco Co. v. Evening Post Co. (Ky.), 560. Annotated
- See also Labor Combinations.

MECHANICS' LIENS.

- Foreclosure of lien—amendment of bill as affecting plea of limitations. Niehaus v. C. B. Barker Construction Co. (Tenn.), 23.
- consolidation of several actions—effect as to party not served in one proceeding. City Sash, etc. Co. v. Bunn (Wash.), 31.
- foreclosure decree as binding adjudication. Cain v. Parfitt (Utah), 28.
- parties—owner of premises as necessary party defendant. City Sash, etc. Co. v. Bunn (Wash.), 31. Annotated
- parties—person having claim to premises as proper party defendant. Bacon v. Reichelt (Ill.), 1. Annotated
- parties—principal contractor as necessary party defendant. Becker v. Hopper (Wyo.), 35. Annotated
- parties—trustees under prior mortgage as necessary parties defendant. Niehaus v. C. B. Barker Construction Co. (Tenn.), 23. Annotated
- parties—vendee in contract for sale of premises as necessary party defendant. Cain v. Parfitt (Utah), 28. Annotated
- time for institution of proceeding. City Sash, etc. Co. v. Bunn (Wash.), 31.
- Right to lien—effect of payment to contractor in full. Becker v. Hopper (Wyo.), 35.

MEDICAL EXAMINATION.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

MEDICINE.

See Physicians and Surgeons.

MEMBER OF FAMILY.

See Implied Contracts.

MEMORANDUM.

See Frauds, Statute of.

MENTAL CAPACITY.

See Insanity.

MINES AND MINERALS.

- Adverse possession—applicability of doctrine to mineral lands. Northcut v. Church (Tenn.), 545.
- Severance of surface and mineral rights—effect on rights of parties. Northcut v. Church (Tenn.), 545. Annotated
- Tenants in common—extraction of ore by one tenant—measure of damages. Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Silver King Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.), 571. Annotated

MINORS.

See Infants.

MISCONDUCT OF JURY.

See Appeal and Error.

MISREPRESENTATION.

See Infants.

MOOT CASE.

See Actions.

MORTALITY TABLES.

- Judicial notice of mortality tables. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408. Annotated

MOTIONS.

See Appeal and Error; Trial; Verdict.

MOVING PICTURES.

Unlawful assembly—what constitutes—audience at Sunday moving picture show. People v. Dixon (Mich.), 385. Annotated

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Buildings—validity of building ordinance. St. Louis v. Nash (Mo.), 134.
 Business competition with citizen—power of municipality—sale of fixtures in connection with operation of electric lighting plant. Andrews v. South Haven (Mich.), 100. Annotated Charter—effect as superseding state laws. State v. Linn (Okla.), 139.
 Debt limit—computation of indebtedness—interest on bonds as factor. O'Rear v. Sartain (Ala.), 593. Annotated ——— computation of indebtedness—time as of which indebtedness is computed. O'Rear v. Sartain (Ala.), 593.
 ——— computation of indebtedness—unissued bonds as part of present indebtedness. O'Rear v. Sartain (Ala.), 593.
 ——— effect of exceeding limit—validity of tax for payment. O'Rear v. Sartain (Ala.), 593.
 Food—regulation of ice cream—validity. New Orleans v. Toca (La.), 1032.
 Intoxicating liquors—regulation of transportation—validity. Kansas City v. Jordan (Kan.), 273.
 Officers—municipal officer as state officer. State v. Linn (Okla.), 139.
 ——— removal—failure to enforce laws as ground for removal. State v. Linn (Okla.), 139.
 ——— removal—procedure for removal—charter remedy not exclusive. State v. Linn (Okla.), 140.
 Ordinances—charging offense under ordinance—necessity of negating exceptions. Kansas City v. Jordan (Kan.), 273.
 ——— title and subject-matter—ordinance regulating transportation of intoxicating liquors. Kansas City v. Jordan (Kan.), 273.
 Smoke—validity of regulatory ordinance. People v. Detroit, etc. Ferry Co. (Mich.), 170. Annotated
 State—relation to municipality—interest in enforcement of laws within municipality. State v. Linn (Okla.), 139.
 Streets—injury from defect—liability of municipality as dependent on notice of defect. Jamieson v. Edmonton (Can.), 379.
 Workmen's compensation acts—municipal employee as within purview of workmen's compensation act. State v. District Court (Minn.), 635.

NATIONAL PURPOSE.

See Charities.

NAVIGABLE WATERS.

See Waters and Watercourses.

NEGATIVE COVENANTS.

See Master and Servant.

NEGATIVE TESTIMONY.

See Evidence.

NEGATING EXCEPTIONS.

See Municipal Corporations.

NEGLIGENCE.

Automobiles—imputed negligence—negligence of husband operating automobile not imputed to wife. Virginia R. etc. Co. v. Gorsuch (Va.), 838.
 ——— injury in operation—sufficiency of evidence to establish fact that person in charge of car is owner. Koonovsky v. Quellette (Mass.), 1146.
 ——— liability for injury in operation as affected by fact that automobile is unregistered. Koonovsky v. Quellette (Mass.), 1146.
 ——— liability of owner for injury to guest. Massaletti v. Fitzroy (Mass.), 1088.
 ——— reckless driving of automobile—liability of driver for negligent homicide. People v. Falkovitch (Ill.), 1077.
 Carriers of passengers—action for injury to passenger—admissibility of declaration of employee of carrier. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
 ——— action for injury to passenger—construction of pleading. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
 ——— action for injury to passenger—propriety of instruction as to negligence in alighting from moving car. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
 ——— action for injury to passenger—propriety of instruction as to presumption of negligence from injury. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.

NEGLIGENCE — Continued.

- Carriers of passengers—action for injury to passenger—propriety of instruction as to right of passenger to be on step of moving car. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- action for injury to passenger—sufficiency of evidence to sustain recovery against carrier. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- contributory negligence of passenger—standing on platform or steps preparatory to alighting. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- Contributory negligence—sufficiency of instruction as to burden of proving contributory negligence. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- Death by wrongful act—damages—what is excessive verdict. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- Degrees of negligence—gratuitous undertaking. Massaletti v. Fitzroy (Mass.), 1088.
- Food—foreign substance in animal food—liability of seller. Newell v. Reid (Mich.), 224.
- Infants—action for injuries—defenses—misrepresentation as to age. Stetz v. F. Mayer Boot, etc. Co. (Wis.), 675.
- action for injuries—defenses—release by guardian. Stetz v. F. Mayer Boot, etc. Co. (Wis.), 675.
- basis of doctrine of liability for trespassing infant. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.
- liability of owner of premises for drowning of child in canal. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.
- sufficiency of complaint based on turntable doctrine. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.
- Insurance—liability of agent to owner of property for failure to procure insurance. Rezac v. Zima (Kan.), 1035.
- Master and servant—contract limitation of liability—validity. Pittsburgh, etc. R. Co. v. Kinney (Ohio), 286.
- contributory negligence of servant—using unsafe appliance. Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655.
- duty to furnish safe appliances—application of rule to maritime employee. Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655.
- federal employer's liability act—act as exclusive of state regulation. Erie R. Co. v. Winfield (U. S.), 662.
- federal employers' liability act—employees within act—employee clearing wreckage from track. Southern R. Co. v. Puckett (U. S.), 69.
- federal employer's liability act—employees within act—engineer of switch engine. Erie R. Co. v. Winfield (U. S.), 662.
- federal employers' liability act—employees within act—machinist in roundhouse. Minneapolis, etc. R. Co. v. Winters (U. S.), 54.
- federal employers' liability act—employees within act—necessity for existence of relation of master and servant. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. v. Harmon's Administrator (Ky.), 41.
- federal employers' liability act—judgment denying recovery as precluding remedy under state law. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. v. Harmon's Administrator (Ky.), 41.
- federal employers' liability act—removal of cause from state to federal court. Southern R. Co. v. Puckett (U. S.), 69.
- federal employers' liability act—review—applicability of act—saving question for review. Minneapolis, etc. R. Co. v. Winters (U. S.), 54.
- federal employers' liability act—review—decision on appeal—determining rights at common law. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. v. Harmon's Administrator (Ky.), 41.
- federal employers' liability act—review—review by federal court of state decision. Southern R. Co. v. Puckett (U. S.), 69.
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—disease as accident—fall of driver from hack. Carroll v. What Cheer Stables Co. (R. I.), 346.
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—disease as accident—suicide from supervening insanity. Withers v. London, etc. R. Co. (Eng.), 341.
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—disease as accident—typhoid from impure drinking water. Vennen v. New Dells Lumber Co. (Wis.), 293.
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—injury by act of third person. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—injury not arising out of employment. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—injury received in another jurisdiction. Grinnell v. Wilkinson (R. I.), 618.
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—what constitutes accident arising out of employment. Eugene Dietzen Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 764.

NEGLIGENCE — Continued.

- Master and servant—workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—what constitutes accident arising out of employment. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540; Chicago Dry Kiln Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 645.
- workmen's compensation act—accident or injury within act—what constitutes "injury." Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—appeal and error—review of findings of workmen's compensation board. Chicago Dry Kiln Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 645. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—appeal and error—review of findings of workmen's compensation board. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540; Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627; Dale v. Saunders (N. Y.), 703; Eugene Dietzen Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 764.
- workmen's compensation act—appeal and error—review of judgment dismissing claim for compensation. Grinnell v. Wilkinson (R. I.), 618.
- workmen's compensation act—"average weekly earnings"—construction of phrase. Cox v. Trollope (Eng.), 637. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—"average weekly earnings"—tips of railroad porter as included. Great Western R. Co. v. Helps (Eng.), 1120. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—award or allowance—lump sum award. McCracken v. Missouri Valley Bridge, etc. Co. (Kan.), 689.
- workmen's compensation act—award or allowance—termination of allowance by marriage of beneficiary. Adleman v. Ocean Accident, etc. Corp. (Md.), 730. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—depriving court of jurisdiction. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—effect of act as dispensing with judicial controversy. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—effect of change in act on pending proceedings. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.
- workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—nature and purpose of Illinois act. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—nature and scope of Washington act. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354; Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655.
- workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—retroactive operation of act. State v. General Accident, etc. Assur. Corp. (Minn.), 615. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—construction and operation of act—theory of liability under New York act. Dale v. Saunders (N. Y.), 703.
- workmen's compensation act—defenses—absence from place of employment as affecting right of recovery. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- workmen's compensation acts—defenses—disobedience of orders as precluding recovery. Williams v. Llandudno Coaching, etc. Co. (Eng.), 682.
- workmen's compensation acts—defenses—intoxication of employee as precluding recovery. Williams v. Llandudno Coaching, etc. Co. (Eng.), 682. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—defenses—receipt of other benefit as affecting right to compensation. State v. District Court (Minn.), 635. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—dependents within act—absence of dependents—award to state. Blanton v. Wheeler, etc. Co. (Conn.), 747.
- workmen's compensation act—dependents within act—who is "dependent." Blanton v. Wheeler, etc. Co. (Conn.), 747. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—dependents within act—residence of beneficiary as affecting right to compensation. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—election to accept act—necessity of election. Seed Store v. Simonini (Ill.), 713. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—election to accept act—right of election. Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—election to accept act—time for election. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—employees within act—casual employee. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—employees within act—maritime employee. Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—employees within act—minor illegally employed. Stetz v. F. Mayer Boot, etc. Co. (Wis.), 675. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—employees within act—municipal employee. State v. District Court (Minn.), 635.
- workmen's compensation act—employees within act—railroad employee. Erie R. Co. v. Winfield (U. S.), 662. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—employees within act—who is "employee." Dale v. Saunders (N. Y.), 703. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—employments within act—construction of Illinois statute. Vaughan's Seed Store v. Simonini (Ill.), 713. Annotated

NEGLIGENCE — Continued.

- Master and servant—workmen's compensation act—evidence—declaration of employee as to cause of injury—admissibility in evidence. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N.Y.), 540.
- workmen's compensation act—evidence—declaration of employee while suffering from delirium tremens—admissibility in evidence. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N.Y.), 540.
- workmen's compensation act—evidence—dependency—sufficiency of evidence. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—evidence—verdict of coroner's jury—admissibility in evidence. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—medical examination of workman. Earwicker v. London Graving Dock Co. (Eng.), 665. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—medical referee—duties. Earwicker v. London Graving Dock Co. (Eng.), 665.
- workmen's compensation act—notice of claim—time for giving. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—proceedings under act—applicability of rules of evidence. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N.Y.), 540.
- workmen's compensation act—proceedings under act—applicability of rules of legal procedure. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—proceedings under act—form of findings. Blanton v. Wheeler, etc. Co. (Conn.), 747.
- workmen's compensation act—proceedings under act—motion to recommit. Blanton v. Wheeler, etc. Co. (Conn.), 747.
- workmen's compensation act—validity of Illinois act. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- workmen's compensation act—validity of Kentucky act. Greene v. Caldwell (Ky.), 604. Annotated
- workmen's compensation act—validity of Washington act. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- Owners of premises—liability for injury in case of invitation not accepted or acted on. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.
- Pleading—propriety of alleging several inconsistent charges of negligence. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
- sufficiency of complaint for negligence. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.
- Public officers—neglect of duty as affecting right to public officer to compensation. Bartholomew v. Springdale (Wash.), 432. Annotated
- neglect of duty as affecting right of public officer to compensation. Young v. Morris (Okla.), 450. Annotated
- Streets and highways—injury from defect—liability of municipality—notice of defect. Jamieson v. Edmonton (Can.), 379.
- What constitutes negligence—breach of duty essential. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.
- See also Brokers; Public Service Commissions; Taxation.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

See Bills and Notes.

NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

See New Trial.

NEWSPAPERS.

See Contempt; Jury.

NEW TRIAL.

- Newly discovered evidence—affidavit showing diligence—necessity. Chilton v. Commonwealth (Ky.), 851.
- sufficiency of affidavit for new trial. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.
- See also Jury.

NONMAILABLE MATTER.

See War.

NONRESIDENTS.

See Contracts.

NOTES.

See Bills and Notes.

NOTICE.

See Appeal and Error; Sheriffs and Constables; Streets and Highways; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE.

See Trial.

OFFICERS.

See Municipal Corporations; Public Officers.

OFFICIAL BONDS.

See Public Officers.

OLOGRAPHIC WILLS.

See Wills.

OPINION EVIDENCE.

See Evidence.

"OR."

"Or" construed as "and" in instrument creating charity. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.

ORDERS.

See Public Service Commissions.

ORDINANCES.

See Municipal Corporations.

ORE.

See Mines and Minerals.

OVERHANGING TREES.

See Adjoining Landowners.

OWNERSHIP.

See Fences.

OWNERS OF PREMISES.

Infants—basis of doctrine of liability for trespassing infant. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.

—— liability of owner of premises for drowning of child in canal. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.

—— sufficiency of complaint based on turntable doctrine. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.

Invitation—liability for injury in case of invitation not accepted or acted on. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.

See also Adjoining Landowners; Mechanics' Liens.

PARENT AND CHILD.

Contract by parent for services of child—effect as binding child. Cain v. Garner (Ky.), 824. Annotated Custody of child—effect of remarriage after divorce. Cain v. Garner (Ky.), 824.

Gifts—conveyance by parent to child—presumption and burden of proof of undue influence. Soper v. Ciseo (N. J.), 452. Annotated Respective rights of parents in relation to children. Cain v. Garner (Ky.), 824.

See also Adoption; Infants.

PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

See Antenuptial Agreements.

PARTIES TO ACTIONS.

Injunctions—parties—successor of official—necessity of service of process on successor. Hitchman Coal, etc. Co. v. Mitchell (U. S.), 461.

Mechanics' liens—foreclosure—consolidation of several actions—effect as to party not served in one proceeding. City Sash, etc. Co. v. Bunn (Wash.), 31.

PARTIES TO ACTIONS — Continued.

- Mechanics' liens—foreclosure—owner of premises as necessary party defendant. City Sash, etc. Co. v. Bunn (Wash.), 31.
 ——— foreclosure—person having claim to premises as proper party defendant. Bacon v. Reichelt (Ill.), 1. Annotated ——— foreclosure—principal contractor as necessary party defendant. Becker v. Hopper (Wyo.), 35. Annotated ——— foreclosure—trustees under prior mortgage as necessary parties defendant. Niehaus v. C. B. Barker Construction Co. (Tenn.), 23. Annotated ——— foreclosure—vendee in contract for sale of premises as necessary party defendant. Cain v. Parfitt (Utah), 28.
Omission of party—effect of omission in equitable action in federal courts. Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Silver King Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.), 571.
Tenants in common—accounting—parties—effect of assignment of interest by one tenant. Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. King Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.), 571.
Virtual representation—action for partition. Chambers v. Preston (Tenn.), 428.
Warranty—action on warranty—necessary parties. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.
 See also Trial.

PARTITION.

- Parties—virtual representation. Chambers v. Preston (Tenn.), 428.

PATRIOTIC PURPOSE.

See Charities.

PAYMENT.

- Recovery of payments—payment to secure license as payment under duress—right to recover. Baldwin v. Chesaning (Mich.), 512. Annotated
 See also Bills and Notes; Public Officers.

PERPETUITIES.

- Trust for maintenance of estate held to be void as perpetuity. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

See Eminent Domain; Husband and Wife.

PERSONAL SERVICES.

See Infants; Parent and Child.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

- Practice of medicine—massage treatment as practice of medicine. State Board v. Terrill (Utah), 1117.

PLEADING.

- Amendment—bill to foreclose mechanic's lien—amendment as affecting plea of limitations. Niehaus v. C. B. Barker Construction Co. (Tenn.), 23.
 ——— construction of statute authorizing amendment in case of variance. Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey (Va.), 1171.
Carriers of passengers—action for injury—construction of pleading. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
Damages—averments in complaint sufficient to warrant recovery of exemplary damages. Dwyer v. Libert (Ida.), 973.
Demurrer—effect as admission. Axton Fisher Tobacco Co. v. Evening Post Co. (Ky.), 560; State v. Senatobia Blank Book, etc. Co. (Miss.), 953.
Guardian ad litem—sufficiency of allegation of appointment of guardian ad litem. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
Libel and slander—necessity of alleging special damage. Axton Fisher Tobacco Co. v. Evening Post Co. (Ky.), 560.
 ——— sufficiency of complaint with respect to averments of time and place of slander. Anderson v. Shockley (Mo.), 500. Annotated ——— suit on several publications—necessity of pleading each publication separately. Anderson v. Shockley (Mo.), 500.
 ——— variance between complaint and proof. Anderson v. Shockley (Mo.), 500.
Master and servant—action by discharged employee for salary—sufficiency of objection on ground of variance. Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (Va.), 1171.
Negligence—propriety of alleging several inconsistent charges of negligence. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
 ——— sufficiency of complaint for negligence. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.

PLEADING — Continued.

Owners of premises—sufficiency of complaint based on turntable doctrine. Fusselman v. Yellowstone Valley Land, etc. Co. (Mont.), 420.
 Striking out pleading—reply to new matter on appeal. Berryman v. Childs (Neb.), 1029.

PLEDGE.

Army and navy—pledge of public property by soldier—criminal liability of civilian receiving property. Bolland v. United States (U. S.), 520. Annotated

POLICE POWER.

See Constitutional Law.

PORTERS.

See Average Weekly Earnings.

POSITIVE TESTIMONY.

See Evidence.

POST OFFICE.

Espionage act—validity. Masses Pub. Co. v. Patten (U. S.), 999. Annotated

POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

See Trusts and Trustees.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE.

See Physicians and Surgeons.

PREFERENCE.

See Stock and Stockholders.

PRESUMPTIONS.

Carriers of passengers—presumption of negligence from injuries caused by operation of street car. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
 Gifts—conveyance by parent to child—presumption of undue influence. Soper v. Cisco (N. J.), 452. Annotated Public service commissions—presumption in favor of order of commission. Mississippi R. Com. v. Mobile, etc. R. Co. (Miss.), 828.
 Statutes—presumption in favor of validity of statute. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627; New Orleans v. Toca (La.), 1032.
 Witnesses—presumption from failure to call attorney as witness. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.

PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE.

See Evidence.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

See Agency.

PRINTED SIGNATURE.

See Frauds, Statute of.

PRINTING.

Statute prohibiting letting of printing contract to nonresident—validity. State v. Senatobia Blank Book, etc. Co. (Miss.), 953.

PRIORITY.

See Banks.

PRIVILEGE.

See Witnesses.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

See Libel and Slander.

PROCEDURE.

See Eminent Domain; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

PROCESS.

See Injunctions; Mechanics' Liens.

PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

See Witnesses.

PROFITS.

See Eminent Domain.

PROMISSORY NOTES.

See Bills and Notes.

PROMOTERS.

See Corporations.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATORS.

See Executors and Administrators.

PUBLICATION.

See Contempt.

PUBLIC CONTRACTS.

See Contracts.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Land under water—effect of restrictions in grant. People v. Steeplechase Park Co. (N. Y.), 1099.

—— limitation on unrestricted grant. People v. Steeplechase Park Co. (N. Y.), 1099.

—— power of state to make grant. People v. Steeplechase Park Co. (N. Y.), 1099.

Annotated

PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Compensation—neglect of duty as affecting right of public officer to compensation. Bartholomew v. Springdale (Wash.), 432. Annotated —— neglect of duty as affecting right of public officer to compensation. Young v. Morris (Okla.), 450. Annotated —— right of de facto officer to compensation. Thompson v. Denver (Colo.), 915.

—— right of de jure officer to recover salary paid to de facto officer. Thompson v. Denver (Colo.), 915.

—— right to compensation as affected by failure of officials to approve bond. Bartholomew v. Springdale (Wash.), 432.

Federal officers—eminent domain commissioners as federal officers. Brackett v. Commonwealth (Mass.), 863.

Injunctions—control of discretion of county officers by injunction. O'Rear v. Sartain (Ala.), 593.

—— unauthorized payment by public officer—right of taxpayer to restrain. Fergus v. Brady (Ill.), 220.

Personal liability—payment for purpose not governmental. Fergus v. Brady (Ill.), 220.

—— payment under void statute. Fergus v. Brady (Ill.), 220.

—— sale of property for taxes under void statute. Fields v. Altman (Ala.), 189.

Annotated

Removal—failure to enforce laws as ground for removal. State v. Linn (Okla.), 139; State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.

—— procedure for removal—remedy provided in city charter not exclusive. State v. Linn (Okla.), 140.

State officers—municipal officer as state officer. State v. Linn (Okla.), 139.

Vacancy—neglect of duty as creating vacancy in office. Young v. Morris (Okla.), 450.

Veterans—right to appointment to office—discretion of appointing power. Phelps v. Byrne (S. Dak.), 996.

—— right to appointment to office—enforcement by mandamus. Phelps v. Byrne (S. Dak.), 996.

See also Libel and Slander.

PUBLIC POLIOY.

See Contracts.

PUBLIC PROPERTY.

See Army and Navy.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

- Collateral attack on order of commission. Sayers v. Montpelier, etc. R. Co. (Vt.), 1050.
- Effect of order of commission—liability of corporation obeying order. Sayers v. Montpelier, etc. Co. (Vt.), 1050.
- Power of commission—abolition of grade crossings—exceeding powers. Sayers v. Montpelier, etc. R. Co. (Vt.), 1050.
- construction of statute as amended. Sayers v. Montpelier, etc. R. Co. (Vt.), 1050.
- electric wires—power of commission to prevent maintenance in close proximity. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burlington Traction Co. (Vt.), 841. Annotated
- railroads—validity of order of commission requiring station at particular place. Mississippi R. Co. v. Mobile, etc. R. Co. (Miss.), 828.
- Presumption in favor of order of public service commission. Mississippi R. Com. v. Mobile, etc. R. Co. (Miss.), 828.
- Review of order of commission—injunction as proper remedy. Mississippi R. Com. v. Mobile, etc. R. Co. (Miss.), 828.
- power of court of equity. Sayers v. Montpelier, etc. R. Co. (Vt.), 1050.
- review by appellate court of decree disapproving order of commission. Mississippi R. Com. v. Mobile, etc. R. Co. (Miss.), 828.
- review of findings on appeal. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burlington Traction Co. (Vt.), 841.

PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

- Building restriction as binding public service corporation. Flynn v. New York, etc. R. Co. (N. Y.), 588. Annotated
- Judicial notice of charter of public service corporation. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burlington Traction Co. (Vt.), 841.

PUBLIC UTILITIES.

- Power of municipality to compete with citizen in operation of public utility. Andrews v. South Haven (Mich.), 100. Annotated

PUNISHMENT.

See Sentence and Punishment.

QUALIFICATION.

See Jury.

QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT.

- Master and servant—wrongful discharge of servant—question of law or fact. Conrad v. Ellison-Harvey Co. (Va.), 1171.
- Witnesses—mental capacity of witness as question of law and fact. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.

QUO WARRANTO.

- Corporations—violation of charter—quo warranto as proper remedy. State v. Senatobia Blank Book, etc. Co. (Miss.), 953.

RAILROADS.

- Crossings—operation of grade crossing—power of public service commission. Sayers v. Montpelier, etc. R. Co. (Vt.), 1050.
- Right of way—telegraph line on right of way—right of telegraph company to cut overhanging trees—admissibility of evidence of contract with railroad. Cobb v. Western Union Telegraph Co. (Vt.), 1156.
- Stations—order of public service commission requiring station at particular place—reasonableness of order. Mississippi R. Com. v. Mobile, etc. R. Co. (Miss.), 828.
- See also Employers' Liability Acts; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

RAPE.

- Evidence—admissibility of evidence as to conduct of prosecutrix with others. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.
- admissibility of evidence as to subsequent familiarities with prosecutrix. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.

READING OF NEWSPAPERS.

See Jury.

REASONABLE DOUBT.

See Criminal Law.

RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE.

See Trial.

RECONVERSION.

See Equitable Conversion.

RECORDING ACTS.

See Brokers.

RECORDS.

See Evidence.

RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS.

See Payment.

RECREATION.

See Jury.

RECRIMINATION.

See Divorce.

REGISTRATION.

See Automobiles.

RELATIVES.

See Insanity.

RELEASE AND DISCHARGE.

Action for injuries to infant—release by guardian as defense. Stetz v. F. Mayer Boot, etc Co. (Wis.), 675.

RELIGIOUS INSTITUTIONS.

Property used for religious purposes as exempt from taxation. Commonwealth v. First Christian Church (Ky.), 525.

REMAINDERS AND REVERSIONS.

Contingent remainder as "interest" in land. Hill v. Purdy (D. C.), 847.

REMARRIAGE.

See Marriage.

REMEDIES.

See Election of Remedies.

REMOVAL.

See Public Officers; Trusts and Trustees.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

Federal employers' liability act—removal of cause from state to federal court. Southern R Co. v. Puckett (U. S.), 69.

RENEWAL OF CONTRACT.

See Master and Servant.

REOPENING CASE.

See Trial.

REPEAL.

See Statutes.

REPLY.

See Pleading.

RESCISSION, CANCELLATION AND REFORMATION.

Conveyance for future support—right of grantor to rescind after part performance—nature of relief granted. Soper v. Cisco (N. J.), 432.

RESIDENCE.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

RES JUDICATA.

Federal employers' liability act—judgment denying recovery as precluding remedy under state law. Chesapeake, etc. R. Co. v. Harmon's Administrator (Ky.), 41.

Finding of facts—effect of future developments. People v. Detroit, etc. Ferry Co. (Mich.), 170.

Mechanics' liens—foreclosure decree as binding adjudication. Cain v. Parfitt (Utah), 28.

RESTRAINT OF MARRIAGE.

See Marriage.

RESTRICTIONS.

See Building Restrictions; Waters and Watercourses.

REVENUE.

Meaning of "revenue." State v. Gordon (Mo.), 191.

Meaning of "revenue." Fergus v. Brady (Ill.), 220.

Annotated

Annotated

REVIVAL.

See Actions; Statutes.

REVIVAL MEETING.

See Jury.

REVOCATION OF LETTERS.

See Executors and Administrators.

RIGHT OF WAY.

See Railroads.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

See Waters and Watercourses.

ROUNDHOUSES.

See Employers' Liability Acts.

RULES OF DECISION.

See Courts.

RULES OF EVIDENCE.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

RULES OF PROCEDURE.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

SAFE APPLIANCES.

See Master and Servant.

SALES.

Conditional sales—right of conditional vendee to recover damages for breach of warranty. Peuser v. Marsh (N. Y.), 913.

Food—foreign substance in animal food—liability of seller. Newell v. Reid (Mich.), 224.

Warranty—action on warranty—necessary parties. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.

—— agency—warranty to agent as insuring to benefit of undisclosed principal. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.

—— consideration—sufficiency. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.

—— construction of warranty—meaning of "liabilities." Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.

—— distinction between warranty and guaranty. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.

—— duration—continuing warranty. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.

—— duration—when contract executed. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.

SALES — Continued.

Warranty—seed—correspondence of seed sold to name or variety—evidence of breach of warranty. Buckbee v. P. Hohenadel, Jr. Co. (U. S.), 88.
 — seed—germinating power of seed—evidence of breach of warranty. Meehan v. Ingalls (Wash.), 71. Annotated

SAND

See Waters and Watercourses.

SCINTILLA.

See Evidence.

SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence.

SEED.

Warranty of correspondence to name or variety—evidence of breach. Buckbee v. P. Hohenadel, Jr. Co. (U. S.), 88. Annotated Warranty of germinating power—evidence of breach. Meehan v. Ingalls (Wash.), 71. Annotated

SELF-DEFENSE.

See Homicide.

SENTENCE AND PUNISHMENT.

Cruel and unusual punishment—what constitutes. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391. Annotated Error in sentence—remand by appellate court for proper sentence. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.
 Form of sentence—conviction on several counts. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.
 Review of sentence on appeal. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

SERVICE OF PROCESS.

See Injunctions; Mechanics' Liens.

SERVICE.

See Implied Contracts; Infants; Parent and Child.

SEVERANCE.

See Mines and Minerals.

SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES.

Sheriffs—duty of sheriff with respect to unlawful sale of intoxicants. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
 — duty to enforce law—what constitutes notice of violation. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
 — duty to investigate suspected places of business or residence. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
 — duty to prevent crime. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
 — powers generally. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
 — removal—failure to enforce law as ground for removal. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.

SIGNATURE.

Meaning of "sign." Estate of Manchester (Cal.), 227.
See also Frauds, Statute of; Wills.

SLANDER.

See Libel and Sander.

SMOKE.

Validity of smoke ordinance. People v. Detroit, etc. Ferry Co. (Mich.), 170. Annotated

SOLDIERS.

See Army and Navy.

SPECIAL ADMINISTRATORS.

See Actions.

SPECIAL DAMAGES.See Libel and Slander.*SPECIAL DEPOSITS.*See Banks.*STARE DECISIS.*See Courts.*STATE COURTS.*See Appeal and Error; Courts; Removal of Causes.*STATES.Contract exceeding amount of appropriation—validity. Fergus v. Brady (Ill.), 220.Enforcement of laws—interest of state in enforcement of laws within municipality. State v. Linn (Okla.), 139.Officers—municipal officer as state officer. State v. Linn (Okla.), 139.See also Public Lands; Workmen's Compensation Acts.*STATIONS.*See Railroads.*STATUTE OF FRAUDS.*See Frauds, Statute of.*STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.*See Limitation of Actions.*STATUTES.Amendment—construction of statute as amended—powers of public service commission. Sayers v. Montpelier, etc. R. Co. (Vt.), 1050.Construction—all parts of statute considered. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.— construction in favor of validity. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.— effectuating legislative intent. State v. Gordon (Mo.), 191.— legislative definitions—effect. St. Louis v. Nash (Mo.), 134.— weight accorded to construction by executive officers. State v. Gordon (Mo.), 191.— words given ordinary meaning. State v. Gordon (Mo.), 191.Repeal—repeal of repealing act as reviving repealed statute. Manchester Township Supervisors v. Wayne County Commissioners (Pa.), 278. *Annotated*Retroactive operation—statute of limitations. State v. General Accident, etc. Assur. Corp. (Minn.), 615.Retroactive operation—workmen's compensation act. State v. General Accident Assur. Corp. (Minn.), 615. *Annotated*Validity—certainty—statute held not void for uncertainty. State v. Linn (Okla.), 139.— presumption in favor of validity of statute. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627; New Orleans v. Toca (La.), 1032.— wisdom of statute—judicial review. State v. Senatobia Blank Book, etc. Co. (Miss.), 953; Masses Pub. Co. v. Patten (U. S.), 999.See also Municipal Corporations; Wills; Workmen's Compensation Acts.*STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS.Directors—purchase of stock by director as affected by fiduciary relation to stockholder. Dawson v. National Life Ins. Co. (Iowa), 230. *Annotated*Relation of stockholders to corporation. Dawson v. National Life Ins. Co. (Iowa), 230.Subscription to stock—fraud on subscriber—waiver by delay. Heiskell v. Morris (Tenn.), 1134.— liability on subscription as affected by failure to subscribe entire amount. Heiskell v. Morris (Tenn.), 1134. Annotated— right of promoters to subscribe. Heiskell v. Morris (Tenn.), 1134.— right of stockholder to preference in subscribing for new stock. Schmidt v. Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. (N. J.), 131. *AnnotatedSTREAMS.*See Waters and Watercourses.*STREETS AND HIGHWAYS.Injury from defect—liability of municipality—necessity that municipality have notice of defect. Jamieson v. Edmonton (Can.), 379.

SUBSCRIPTION.

See Stock and Stockholders.

SUBSEQUENT PURCHASERS.

See Building Restrictions.

SUICIDE.

See Accident Insurance; Disease.

SUNDAYS AND HOLIDAYS.

Amusements—audience at Sunday moving picture show as constituting unlawful assembly People v. Dixon (Mich.), 385. Annotated

SUPPORT.

See Deeds.

SURFACE.

See Mines and Minerals.

SURVIVAL OF ACTIONS.

See Actions.

TABLES.

See Mortality Tables.

TAXATION.

Exemptions from taxation—property used for religious purposes—what is included in exemption. Commonwealth v. First Christian Church (Ky.), 525

Municipal corporations—debt limit—effect of exceeding limit—validity of tax for payment. O'Rear v. Sartain (Ala.), 593.

Tax sale—sale under void statute—personal liability of officer. Fields v. Altman (Ala.), 189. Annotated

TAXPAYERS' ACTIONS.

Unauthorized payment by state official—right of taxpayer to injunction. Fergus v. Brady (Ill.), 220.

TAX RETURNS.

See Eminent Domain.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.

Overhanging trees on right of way—right of telegraph company to cut to line—admissibility of evidence of contract with railroad. Cobb v. Western Union Telegraph Co. (Vt.), 1156.

TENANTS IN COMMON.

Accounting between tenants in common—parties—effect of assignment of interest by one tenant. Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Silver King Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.), 571.

Minerals—extraction of ore by one tenant—measure of damages. Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Silver King Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.), 571. Annotated

TENDER.

See Brokers.

TENT.

Meaning of "tent." St. Louis v. Nash (Mo.), 134.

Annotated

TERMINATION OF ALLOWANCE.

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

TERMINATION OF CONTRACT.

See Master and Servant.

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

See Wills.

THEATERS AND AMUSEMENTS.

Sundays—audience at Sunday moving picture show as constituting unlawful assembly. People v. Dixon (Mich.) 385 Annotated

TIME OF PAYMENT.

See Bills and Notes.

TIPS.

See Average Weekly Earnings.

TITLE.Proof of title—best and secondary evidence. Littlefield v. Bowen (Wash.), 177.TORTS.

See Actions; Negligence; Taxation; Witnesses.

TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEDENTS.

See Witnesses.

TRANSPORTATION.

See Intoxicating Liquors.

TREES AND TIMBER.Adjoining landowners—tree near boundary line—rights of owner. Wideman v. Faivre (Kan.), 1168. Annotated— tree overhanging boundary line—right to cut to line. Cobb v. Western Union Telegraph Co. (Vt.), 1156. *AnnotatedTRESPASS.

See Infants.

TRIAL.Conduct of judge—remark by judge held to be proper. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.Continuance—absence of party as ground for continuance—divorce case. Neven v. Neven (Nev.), 1083. Annotated— absence of witness as ground for continuance. Neven v. Neven (Nev.), 1083.— motion for continuance as addressed to discretion of court. Neven v. Neven (Nev.), 1083.Motion to strike out evidence—necessity of disclosing ground. Wideman v. Faivre (Kan.), 1168.Objection to evidence—general objection—sufficiency. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.Reception of evidence—refusal to allow offer of proof—propriety. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.Reopening case for additional testimony—discretion of court. Virginia R. etc. Co. v. Gorsuch (Va.), 838.

See also Appeal and Error; Argument of Counsel; Homicide; Jury; Venue; Witnesses.

TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.Accounting by trustee—compounding of interest. Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Silver King Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.), 571.Administration of trust—asking instruction of court. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.Creation of trust—necessity of assent of beneficiary. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.Power of appointment—propriety of exercise—beneficiary designated generally. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.Removal of trustee—antagonism or ill feeling between trustee and beneficiary as ground for removal. Maydwell v. Maydwell (Tenn.), 1043. Annotated— jurisdiction of court of chancery. Maydwell v. Maydwell (Tenn.), 1043.Revocation of trust—right of settlor to revoke. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.

See also Charities; Parties to Actions.

TURNTABLE DOCTRINE.

See Owners of Premises.

TYPHOID FEVER.

See Disease.

ULTRA VIRES.What are "ultra vires contracts." American Southern Nat. Bank v. Smith (Ky.), 959.UNCERTAINTY.

See Statutes.

UNCONTRADICTIONED TESTIMONY.

See Evidence.

UNDISCLOSED PRINCIPAL.

See Agency.

UNDUE INFLUENCE.

See Parent and Child; Wills.

UNFAIR LIST.

See Labor Combinations.

UNIONS.

See Labor Combinations.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY.

What constitutes unlawful assembly—audience at Sunday moving picture show. People v. Dixon (Mich.), 385. Annotated

UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT.

See Sentence and Punishment.

VACANCY.

See Public Officers.

VALUE.

See Eminent Domain.

VARIANCE.

Libel and slander—variance between complaint and proof. Anderson v. Shockley (Mo.), 500.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Building restrictions—restriction as affecting subsequent purchaser. Flynn v. New York, etc. R. Co. (N. Y.), 588.

— restriction as binding public service corporation. Flynn v. New York, etc. R. Co. (N. Y.), 588. Annotated — validity of restriction. Wear v. Kansas (U. S.), 586.

See also Mechanics' Liens.

VENUE.

Proof of venue—sufficiency. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.

VERDICT.

Direction of verdict—effect of motion—court authorized to find facts. Buckbee v. P. Hohenadel, Jr. Co. (U. S.), 88.

Excessiveness—death by wrongful act—what is excessive verdict. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.

See also Coroners.

VETERANS.

Veterans preference acts—right of veteran to appointment—discretion of appointing power. Phelps v. Byrne (S. Dak.), 996.

— right to appointment—enforcement by mandamus. Phelps v. Byrne (S. Dak.), 996.

VIOLENCE.

See Breach of the Peace.

VIRTUAL REPRESENTATION.

See Parties to Actions.

WAIVER.

See Fraud; Witnesses.

WAR.

Conscription—validity of federal statute. Selective Draft Law Cases (U. S.), 856.

WAR — Continued.

- Espionage act—construction—nonmailable matter. Masses Pub. Co. v. Patten (U. S.), 999.
 ——— validity of federal statute. Masses Pub. Co. v. Patten (U. S.), 999. Annotated War power—nature and scope. Masses Pub. Co. v. Patten (U. S.), 999.
 See also Army and Navy; Veterans.

WARRANTY.

- Action on warranty—necessary parties. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.
 Agency—warranty to agent as insuring to benefit of undisclosed principal. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125. Annotated
 Conditional sales—right of conditional vendee to recover damages for breach of warranty. Peuser v. Marsh (N. Y.), 913. Annotated Consideration for warranty—sufficiency. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.
 Construction of warranty—meaning of “liabilities.” Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.
 Duration—continuing warranty. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.
 ——— when contract executed. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.
 Guaranty—distinction between warranty and guaranty. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.
 Seed—warranty of correspondence to name or variety—evidence of breach. Buckbee v. P. Hohenadel, Jr. Co. (U. S.), 88. Annotated
 ——— warranty of germinating power—evidence of breach. Meehan v. Ingalls (Wash.), 71. Annotated

WATERS AND WATERCOURSES.

- Navigable waters—grant of land under navigable water—effect of restrictions in grant. People v. Steeplechase Park Co. (N. Y.), 1099.
 ——— grant of land under navigable water—limitations on unrestricted grant. People v. Steeplechase Park Co. (N. Y.), 1099.
 ——— grant of land under navigable water—power of state to make grant. People v. Steeplechase Park Co. (N. Y.), 1099. Annotated ——— judicial notice of navigable character of stream. Wear v. Kansas (U. S.), 586.
 ——— right to take sand from bed of stream. Wear v. Kansas (U. S.), 586.
 Riparian rights—ownership of bed of stream. Wear v. Kansas (U. S.), 586.

WEALTH.

See Damages.

WEEKLY EARNINGS.

See Average Weekly Earnings.

WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

See Evidence.

WIDOW.

See Equitable Election; Executors and Administrators.

WILLS.

- Contest of will—abatement of will contest—death of contestant. Braeuel v. Reuther (Mo.), 533.
 ——— jurisdiction of city court over will contest. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 ——— persons entitled to contest—necessity of pecuniary interest. Braeuel v. Reuther (Mo.), 533.
 ——— right of administrator of heir to contest. Braeuel v. Reuther (Mo.), 533. Annotated ——— statute authorizing contest—strict construction. Braeuel v. Reuther (Mo.), 533.
 Equitable election—election by widow to take under will as affecting right to intestate property. Compton v. Akers (Kan.), 983. Annotated Estate devisable—contingent remainder as “interest” in land. Hill v. Purdy (D. C.), 847.
 Execution—effect of testator’s intention. Estate of Manchester (Cal.), 227.
 ——— place of signature—intent of testator. Estate of Manchester (Cal.), 227.
 Olographic wills—necessity of signature at end. Estate of Manchester (Cal.), 227.
 Testamentary capacity—evidence admissible as to capacity generally. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 ——— evidence of use of intoxicants by testator—admissibility. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 ——— general business capacity of testator—admissibility of opinion of witness. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 ——— instruction as to capacity held erroneous. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 ——— opinion evidence—admissibility. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.

WILLS — Continued.

- Testamentary capacity—remote statements of testator—admissibility. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 ——— test of testamentary capacity. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 Undue influence—instruction as to burden of proof—propriety. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 Validity of provisions—validity of condition in restraint of marriage. Matter of Seaman (N. Y.), 1138. Annotated See also Equitable Conversion; Perpetuities.

WIRES.

See Electricity.

WISDOM.

See Statutes.

WITNESSES.

- Age—competency of witness to testify as to his own age. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.
 ——— competency of witness to testify to age of another. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.
 Attorneys—presumption from failure to call attorney as witness. Ravenscroft v. Stull (Ill.), 1130.
 Credibility and impeachment—impeachment by prior conflicting statement—necessity of laying foundation. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
 ——— instructions as to effect of false testimony—propriety. Babb v. State (Ariz.), 925.
 ——— instruction as to weight of positive and negative testimony—propriety. Babb v. State (Ariz.), 925.
 ——— instruction singling out particular witness—propriety. Babb v. State (Ariz.), 925.
 Cross-examination—effect of cross-examining witness outside scope of direct examination. Froeming v. Stockton Electric R. Co. (Cal.), 408.
 ——— irrelevant cross-examination properly curtailed. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391; Taylor v. Moseley (Ky.), 1125.
 Examination—certain questions held not proper. People v. Elliott (Ill.), 391.
 Mental capacity of witness—question of law or fact. State v. Tetrault (N. H.), 425.
 Privilege of witness—demand on accused for production of papers as violation of privilege. People v. Gibson (N. Y.), 509.
 Transactions with decedent—rule excluding testimony as applicable to action ex delicto. Leavea v. Southern R. Co. (Mo.), 97. Annotated ——— waiver of incompetency by cross-examination. Poole v. Poole (Kan.), 929.
See also Argument of Counsel; Trial.

WORDS AND PHRASES.

- "All debts"—meaning of term. Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Silver King Consol. Min. Co. (U. S.), 571.
 "And"—"or" construed as "and" in instrument creating charity. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.
 "Average weekly earnings"—meaning of term. Cox v. Trollope (Eng.), 637. Annotated "Average weekly earnings"—tips of railroad porter as included within term. Great Western R. Co. v. Helps (Eng.), 1120. Annotated
 "Breach of the peace"—what constitutes. State v. Reichman (Tenn.), 889.
 "Charity"—meaning of term. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.
 "Child" as including legitimate child. Peerless Pacific Co. v. Burkhard (Wash.), 247. Annotated
 "Dependent"—meaning of term. Blanton v. Wheeler, etc. Co. (Conn.), 747. Annotated
 "Employee"—meaning of term. Dale v. Saunders (N. Y.), 703. Annotated
 "Injury"—what is "injury" within meaning of workmen's compensation act. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354. Annotated
 "Liabilities"—meaning of term. Pacific Power, etc. Co. v. White (Wash.), 125.
 "Or"—"or" construed as "and" in instrument creating charity. Thorp v. Lund (Mass.), 1204.
 "Revenue"—meaning of term. State v. Gordon (Mo.), 191. Annotated
 "Revenue"—meaning of term. Fergus v. Brady (Ill.), 220. Annotated
 "Sign"—meaning of term. Estate of Manchester (Cal.), 227.
 "Tent"—meaning of term. St. Louis v. Nash (Mo.), 134. Annotated
 "Ultra vires contracts"—what constitute. American Southern Nat. Bank v. Smith (Ky.), 959.
See also Evidence; Statutes; Wills.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS.

- Accident or injury within act—disease as accident—fall of driver from hack. Carroll v. What Cheer Stables Co. (R. I.), 346. Annotated ——— disease as accident—suicide from supervening insanity. Withers v. London, etc. R. Co. (Eng.), 341. Annotated

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS — Continued.

- Accident or injury within act—disease as accident—typhoid from impure drinking water. Vennen v. New Dells Lumber Co. (Wis.), 293. Annotated
- injury by act of third person. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- injury not arising out of employment. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- injury received in another jurisdiction. Grinnell v. Wilkinson (R. I.), 618. Annotated
- what constitutes accident arising out of employment. Eugene Dietzen Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 764. Annotated
- what constitutes accident arising out of employment. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540; Chicago Dry Kiln Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 645.
- what constitutes "injury." Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354. Annotated
- Appeal and error—review of findings of workmen's compensation board. Chicago Dry Kiln Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 645. Annotated
- review of findings of workmen's compensation board. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540; Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627; Dale v. Saunders (N. Y.), 703; Eugene Dietzen Co. v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 764.
- review of judgment dismissing claim for compensation. Grinnell v. Wilkinson (R. I.), 618.
- "Average weekly earnings"—construction of phrase. Cox v. Trollope (Eng.), 637. Annotated
- tips of railroad porter as included. Great Western R. Co. v. Helps (Eng.), 1120. Annotated
- Award or allowance—lump sum award. McCracken v. Missouri Valley Bridge, etc. Co. (Kan.), 689. Annotated
- termination of allowance by marriage of beneficiary. Adleman v. Ocean Accident, etc. Corp. (Md.), 730. Annotated
- Construction and operation of act—depriving court of jurisdiction. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- effect of act as dispensing with judicial controversy. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- effect of change in act on pending proceedings. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.
- nature and purpose of Illinois act. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- nature and scope of Washington act. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354; Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655.
- retroactive operation of act. State v. General Accident, etc. Assur. Corp. (Minn.), 615. Annotated
- theory of liability under New York act. Dale v. Saunders (N. Y.), 703.
- Defenses—absence from place of employment as affecting right of recovery. Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.
- disobedience of orders as precluding recovery. Williams v. Llandudno Coaching, etc. Co. (Eng.), 682.
- intoxication of employee as precluding recovery. Williams v. Llandudno Coaching, etc. Co. (Eng.), 682. Annotated
- receipt of other benefit as affecting right to compensation. State v. District Court (Minn.), 635. Annotated
- Dependents within act—absence of dependents—award to state. Blanton v. Wheeler, etc. Co. (Conn.), 747.
- residence of beneficiary as affecting right to compensation. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- who is "dependent." Blanton v. Wheeler, etc. Co. (Conn.), 747. Annotated
- Election to accept act—necessity of election. Vaughan's Seed Store v. Simonini (Ill.), 713. Annotated
- right of election. Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655.
- time for election. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- Employees within act—casual employee. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- maritime employee. Shaughnessy v. Northland Steamship Co. (Wash.), 655. Annotated
- minor illegally employed. Stetz v. F. Mayer Boot, etc. Co. (Wis.), 675. Annotated
- municipal employee. State v. District Court (Minn.), 635.
- railroad employee. Erie R. Co. v. Winfield (U. S.), 662. Annotated
- who is "employee." Dale v. Saunders (N. Y.), 703. Annotated
- Employments within act—construction of Illinois statute. Vaughan's Seed Store v. Simonini (Ill.), 713.
- Evidence—declaration of employee as to cause of injury—admissibility in evidence. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS — Continued.

- Evidence—declaration of employee while suffering from delirium tremens—admissibility in evidence. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.
- dependency—sufficiency of evidence. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- verdict of coroner's jury—admissibility in evidence. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- Medical examination of workman. Earwicker v. London Graving Dock Co. (Eng.), 665. Annotated
- Medical referee—duties. Earwicker v. London Graving Dock Co. (Eng.), 665.
- Notice of claim—time for giving. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- Proceedings under act—applicability of rules of evidence. Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (N. Y.), 540.
- applicability of rules of legal procedure. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- form of findings. Blanton v. Wheeler, etc. Co. (Conn.), 747.
- motion to recommit. Blanton v. Wheeler, etc. Co. (Conn.), 747.
- Validity of act—validity of Illinois act. Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board (Ill.), 627.
- validity of Kentucky act. Greene v. Caldwell (Ky.), 604. Annotated
- validity of Washington act. Sertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission (Wash.), 354.

WRONGFUL DISCHARGE.

See Master and Servant.

INDEX TO NOTES

IN THIS VOLUME.

ACCIDENT —

Disease as an accident, 297.

See also Workmen's Compensation Acts.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE —

Disease as accident under accident insurance policy, 298.

ACTIONS —

Power of court to enjoin proceedings in another state or country, 1150.

What constitutes moot case, 558.

See also Parties to Actions.

ADJOINING LANDOWNERS —

Rights of adjoining landowners with respect to tree on or overhanging boundary line, 1157.

ADMINISTRATORS —

See Executors and Administrators.

ADOPTION —

Adopted child as "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 755.

AGE —

Competency of witness to testify as to his own age, 427.

AGENCY —

Warranty to agent as insuring to benefit of undisclosed principal, 130.

See also Brokers; Insurance.

AGRICULTURE —

See Seed.

ALIMONY —

Validity of conveyance by husband with intent to deprive wife of alimony, 936.

ALLOWANCE —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

ALL REVENUE —

Legal meaning of "all revenue," 206.

AMENDMENTS —

Effect of repeal or amendment of repealing statute as reviving repealed statute, 281.

AMUSEMENTS —

See Theaters and Amusements.

ANCESTORS —

See Insanity.

ANTAGONISM —

See Trusts and Trustees.

ANTENUPTIAL AGREEMENTS —

Effect of partial invalidity of antenuptial contract, 925.

APPEAL AND ERROR —

Meaning of "revenue laws" in statute relating to appellate jurisdiction, 214.

Review of disbarment proceedings by appeal or writ of error, 837.

Review of facts on appeal under workmen's compensation act, 647.

APPOINTMENT TO OFFICE —

See Libel and Slander.

APPREHENDED INJURY TO BUSINESS —

See Payment.

ARMY AND NAVY —

Liability of civilian for purchasing or receiving in pledge public property from soldier or sailor, 523.

ASSAULT —

What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for assault, 398.

ASSIGNMENTS —

Assignor of mechanic's lien as necessary party to action by assignee to foreclose lien, 5.

ATTORNEYS —

Right of attorney to review of disbarment proceedings, 836.

AVERAGE WEEKLY EARNINGS —

Meaning of phrase "average weekly earnings" in workmen's compensation or similar act, 640.

Tips as part of average weekly earnings under workmen's compensation act, 1122.

AWARD —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS —

"Child" in benefit insurance policy as including illegitimate child, 261.

"Child" in statute relating to benefit insurance as including illegitimate child, 256.

Receipt of insurance or other benefit as affecting right to compensation under workmen's compensation act, 635.

BENEFICIARIES —

See Trusts and Trustees; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

BILLS AND NOTES —

Construction of extension of or agreement to extend time of payment of note, 157.
Negotiability of note containing provision allowing discount if paid within certain time, 600.

BILLS FOR RAISING REVENUE —

Legal meaning of "bills for raising revenue," 209.

BOARD OF REVENUE —

Legal meaning of "board of revenue," 220.

BONDS —

See Municipal Corporations; Suretyship.

BOUNDARIES —

See Adjoining Landowners.

BREACH OF WARRANTY —

See Warranty.

BROKERS —

Liability on contract of buyer and seller to pay broker's commission jointly, 180.

BROTHER —

Brother as "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 759.

BUILDING CONTRACTS —

See Contractors.

BUILDING RESTRICTIONS —

Building restriction or restrictive agreement as binding public or public service corporation, 591.

BURDEN OF PROOF —

Presumption and burden of proof of undue influence in case of conveyance inter vivos by parent to child, 457.

What is accident arising out of and in course of employment within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 768.

BURGLARY —

What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for burglary, 398.

BUSINESS —

See Eminent Domain; Payment.

BUSINESS COMPETITION —

See Municipal Corporations.

CERTIORARI —

Certiorari to review disbarment proceedings, 838.

CESTUI QUE TRUST —

See Trusts and Trustees.

CHARTER —

See Corporations.

"CHILD" —

"Child" as including illegitimate child, 249.

See also Infants.

CITIZENSHIP —

"Child" in statute relating to naturalization of Indians as including illegitimate child, 256.

COMMERCE —

See Interstate Commerce; Intrastate Commerce.

COMMISSIONS —

See Brokers.

COMPENSATION —

See Eminent Domain; Public Officers; Master and Servant; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

COMPETITION —

See Municipal Corporations.

COMPLAINT —

See Pleading.

CONDITIONAL SALES —

Right of conditional vendee to recover damages for breach of warranty, 914.

CONDITIONS —

See Wills.

CONDUCT —

See Divorce; Jury.

CONFLICT OF LAWS —

See Actions; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

CONGRESS —

Power of legislature to punish person other than witness for contempt, 378.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW —

Electricity: power of public service commission to prevent maintenance of electric wires in close proximity, 847.

Municipal corporations: interest on municipal bonds as factor in determining whether municipality has exceeded constitutional debt limit, 598.

Smoke: validity of smoke ordinance or statute, 173.

Statutes: effect of repeal or amendment of repealing statute as reviving repealed statute, 281.

War: nature and scope of war power, 1009.

Waters and watercourses: power of state to grant title to land under navigable water, 1107.

Workmen's compensation acts: constitutionality of workmen's compensation act, 611.

See also Public Officers.

CONSTRUCTION —

See Bills and Notes; Industrial Insurance.

CONTEMPT —

Power of legislature to punish person other than witness for contempt, 378.
What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for contempt of court, 398.

CONTEST —

See Wills.

CONTINUANCE —

See Trial.

CONTINUANCE IN SERVICE —

See Master and Servant.

CONTRACTORS —

Principal contractor as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 6.

CONTRACTS —

Effect of partial invalidity of antenuptial contract, 925.
Validity of sale of liquors where seller knows same will be illegally resold, 978.
See also Bills and Notes; Brokers; Contractors; Corporations; Master and Servant; Parent and Child; Sales.

CORPORATIONS —

Construction of debt limit provision in charter of private corporation, 966.
Liability on stock subscription as dependent upon whole amount of stock having been subscribed, 1137.
Purchase of stock by director as affected by fiduciary relation to stockholder, 241.
Right of stockholder to preference in subscribing for new stock, 132.
See also Public Service Corporations.

COURSE OF CONDUCT —

See Divorce.

COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

COURTS —

Judicial notice of mortality tables, 415.
Power of court to enjoin proceedings in another state or country, 1150.
Power of legislature to punish person other than witness for contempt, 378.
What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for contempt of court, 398.

COVENANTS —

See Building Restrictions.

CRIMINAL LAW —

"Child" in statute relating to crime as including illegitimate child, 254.
Engaging in labor or amusement on Sunday as offense at common law or under statute other than Sunday law, 387.
Liability of civilian for purchasing or receiving in pledge public property from soldier or sailor, 523.
What is cruel and unusual punishment, 396.

CRUEL PUNISHMENT —

See Sentence and Punishment.

CRUELTY —

See Divorce.

CUSTODY —

See Jury.

DAMAGES —

Eminent domain: loss of profits or injury to business as element of damages in eminent domain proceedings, 869.
—recovery of damages in condemnation proceedings for injury to personal property or expense of removing it from premises, 886.
Fire insurance: measure of damages recoverable by owner of property for failure of agent to procure insurance, 1040.
Mines and minerals: measure of damages recoverable of tenant in common for removing minerals from soil, 584.
Sales: damages for breach of warranty on sale of seed, 83.
—right of conditional vendee to recover damages for breach of warranty, 914.
Trees: liability of owner for injuries caused by overhanging branches of trees, 1166.

DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT —

"Child" in statute relating to death by wrongful act as including illegitimate child, 255.

DEATH PENALTY —

Death penalty as cruel and unusual punishment, 308.

DEBT LIMIT —

See Corporations; Municipal Corporations.

DECEDENTS' ESTATES —

See Executors and Administrators.

DECREASE OF ALLOWANCE —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

DEEDS —

"Child" in deed as including illegitimate child, 259.
Presumption and burden of proof of undue influence in case of conveyance inter vivos by parent to child, 457.

DEFINITIONS —

See Words and Phrases.

DEPENDENTS —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION —

"Child" in statute of descent and distribution as including illegitimate child, 251.
Devolution of dependent's right to compensation under workmen's compensation act, 762.

DISBARMENT —

See Attorneys.

DISCOUNT —

See Bills and Notes.

DISEASE —

Disease as an accident, 297.

Nonoccupational disease as "injury" within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 362.

Occupational disease as "injury" within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 366.

DISORDERLY HOUSES —

What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for keeping disorderly house, 399.

DISTRIBUTION —

See Descent and Distribution.

DIVORCE —

Continuances in divorce cases, 1087.

Habits or course of conduct of spouse as cruelty warranting divorce, 480.

Validity of conveyance by husband with intent to deprive wife of alimony, 936.

DOWER —

Election by widow to take provision in will in lieu of dower as affecting her right to intestate property, 986.

DRUNKENNESS —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

DURESS —

See Payment.

EARNINGS —

See Average Weekly Earnings.

ELECTION —

See Equitable Election; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

ELECTIONS —

See Libel and Slander.

ELECTRICITY —

Power of public service commission to prevent maintenance of electric wires in close proximity, 847.

EMINENT DOMAIN —

Loss of profits or injury to business as element of damages in eminent domain proceedings, 869.

Recovery of damages in condemnation proceedings for injury to personal property or expense of removing it from premises, 886.

EMPLOYEES —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACTS —

Employees entitled to protection under federal employers' liability act, 55.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACTS —

Continued.

Existence of relation of employer and employee under federal employers' liability act, 46.

EMPLOYMENT —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

EQUITABLE ELECTION —

Election by widow to take under will as affecting her right to intestate property, 986.

ESPIONAGE —

See War.

ESTIMATED REVENUE —

Legal meaning of "estimated revenue," 206.

EVIDENCE —

Age: competency of witness to testify as to his own age, 427.

Burden of proof: burden of proof of undue influence in case of conveyance inter vivos by parent to child, 457.

—burden of proof that accident arose out of employment within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 770.

Insanity: admissibility, on issue of sanity, of evidence of insanity of ancestors or kindred, 124.

Judicial notice of mortality tables, 415.

Presumption of undue influence in case of conveyance inter vivos by parent to child, 457.

Sales: evidence in action for breach of warranty in sale of seed, 87.

Scintilla: what constitutes scintilla of evidence, 943.

See also Gifts; Witnesses.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS —

"Child" in statute relating to administration of decedents' estates as including illegitimate child, 254.

Personal representative of deceased owner of premises as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 16.

Public administrators, 1059.

Right of executor or administrator to contest will, 537.

EXEMPTIONS —

"Child" in statute relating to exemptions as including illegitimate child, 256.

EXPRESS COMPANIES —

Express agent as employee of railroad under federal employers' liability act, 52.

EXPRESS WARRANTY —

See Warranty.

EXTENSION OF TIME —

See Bills and Notes.

FACILITY OF PAYMENT —

Construction of "facility of payment" clause in industrial insurance policy, 1193.

FAMILY —

Member of family as "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 751.

FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT —

See Employers' Liability Acts.

FIDUCIARY RELATION —

See Fraud.

FIRE INSURANCE —

Liability of insurance agent to owner of property for failure to procure insurance, 1037.

FISH AND GAME —

What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for violation of fish and game law, 401.

FOOD AND DRUGS —

Liability for injury resulting from foreign substance in food, 225.

FORECLOSURE —

See Mechanics' Liens.

FOREIGN ACTIONS —

See Actions.

FOREIGN SUBSTANCE —

See Food and Drugs.

FRANCHISES —

Injury to franchise as element of damages in eminent domain proceeding, 877.

FRAUD —

Purchase of stock by director as affected by fiduciary relation to stockholder, 241.
See also Post Office.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF —

Sufficiency of printed signature to memorandum within statute of frauds, 1030.

FRUIT —

Right to fruit of overhanging tree, 1168.

GAME —

See Fish and Game.

GAMING —

What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for sale of lottery tickets, 400.

GENERAL REVENUE —

Legal meaning of "general revenue," 207.

GERMINATING POWER —

See Seed.

GIFTS —

"Child" in statute creating presumption of gift as including illegitimate child, 258.

GIFTS — Continued.

Presumption and burden of proof of undue influence in case of conveyance inter vivos, 457.

GOOD WILL —

Injury to good will as element of damages in eminent domain proceeding, 878.

GRANDCHILDREN —

Grandchild as "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 756.

GUARDIANS —

Right of guardian or guardian ad litem to contest will, 538.

HABITS —

See Divorce.

HEIRS —

Heir of deceased owner of premises as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 16.

HOLIDAYS —

See Sundays and Holidays.

HOMICIDE —

What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for homicide, 398.

HUSBAND AND WIFE —

Antenuptial agreements: effect of partial invalidity of antenuptial contract, 925.
Mechanics' liens: husband of owner of premises as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 15.
—wife of owner of premises as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 14.
Nonsupport: what constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for nonsupport of wife, 399.
Personal property: right of husband, as against wife, to dispose of his personality during coverture, 934.
Workmen's compensation acts: wife as "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 756.
See also Divorce.

ILLEGAL CONTRACTS —

Effect of partial invalidity of antenuptial contract, 925.
Validity of sale of liquors where seller knows same will be illegally resold, 978.
See also Parent and Child.

ILLEGITIMACY —

"Child" as including illegitimate child, 249.
Illegitimate child as "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 754.

ILL FEELING —

See Trusts and Trustees.

IMPLIED WARRANTY —

See Warranty.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT —

What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for nonpayment of debt, 398.

INCREASE OF ALLOWANCE —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS —

Distinction between independent contractor and workman under workmen's compensation act, 708.

Employee of independent contractor as "workman" within workmen's compensation act, 709.

Independent contractor as employee of railroad under federal employers' liability act, 52.

INDIANS —

"Child" in statute relating to naturalization of Indians as including illegitimate child, 256.

INDUSTRIAL INSURANCE —

Nature and construction of industrial insurance policy, 1186.

INFANTS —

Child as "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 754.

"Child" as including illegitimate child, 249.

Election by infant employee with respect to acceptance of provisions of workmen's compensation act, 716.

Increase of allowance to infant under workmen's compensation act, 735.

Minor employed in violation of law as entitled to compensation under workmen's compensation act, 679.

See also Parent and Child.

INJUNCTIONS —

Power of court to enjoin proceedings in another state or country, 1150.

Right of citizen to enjoin business competition by municipality, 118.

INJURY —

What is "injury" or "personal injury" within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 362.

INJURY TO BUSINESS —

See Eminent Domain; Payment.

INJURY TO PERSONALTY —

See Eminent Domain.

INSANITY —

Admissibility, on issue of sanity, of evidence of insanity of ancestors or kindred, 124.

INSURABLE INTEREST —

See Industrial Insurance.

INSURANCE —

Accident insurance: disease as accident under accident insurance policy, 298.

Benefit insurance: "child" in benefit insurance policy as including illegitimate child, 261.

INSURANCE — Continued.

Benefit insurance: "child" in statute relating to benefit insurance as including illegitimate child, 256.

Fire insurance: liability of insurance agent to owner of property for failure to procure insurance, 1037.

Industrial insurance, 1186.

Workmen's compensation acts: receipt of insurance or other benefit as affecting right to compensation under workmen's compensation act, 635.

INTEREST —

See Municipal Corporations.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE —

Railroad employee engaged in interstate commerce as within purview of workmen's compensation act, 664.

INTESTATE PROPERTY —

See Wills.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS —

Validity of sale of liquors where seller knows same will be illegally resold, 978.

What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for violation of liquor law, 401.

INTOXICATION —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

INTRASTATE COMMERCE —

Railroad employee engaged in intrastate commerce as within purview of workmen's compensation act, 664.

JUDICIAL NOTICE —

Judicial notice of mortality tables, 415.

JURY —

Allowing recreation to jury during trial as ground for new trial, 855.

KINDRED —

See Insanity.

LABOR —

See Sundays and Holidays.

LABOR COMBINATIONS —

Publication that employer has been placed on "unfair list" of labor union as libelous, 570.

LANDLORD AND TENANT —

Lessee of premises as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 15.

Lessor of premises as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 15.

LAPSE OF LEGACIES —

See Legacies.

LARCENY —

What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for larceny, 399.

LEASES —

See Landlord and Tenant.

LEGACIES —

"Child" in statute avoiding lapsing of legacies as including illegitimate child, 254.

LEGISLATURE —

Power of legislature to punish person other than witness for contempt, 378.

LEGITIMACY —

See Illegitimacy.

LIBEL AND SLANDER —

Loss of election or appointment to office as element of damages for libel or slander, 1129.

Publication that employer has been placed on "unfair list" of labor union as libelous, 570.

Sufficiency of complaint in action for slander with respect to averments of publication and of time and place, 504.

LIENS —

See Mechanics' Liens.

LIFE INSURANCE —

Industrial insurance, 1186.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS —

Meaning of "revenue laws" in statute relating to limitation of actions, 216.

LOSS OF ELECTION —

See Libel and Slander.

LOSS OF PROFITS —

See Eminent Domain.

LOTTERIES —

See Gaming.

LUMP SUM AWARD —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

MAILS —

See Post Office.

MANDAMUS —

Mandamus to review disbarment proceedings, 837.

MARITIME EMPLOYEES —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

MARRIAGE —

Validity of testamentary disposition in restraint of marriage, 1141.

MASTER AND SERVANT —

Contract of employment: term of employment and rate of compensation of one continuing in service after termination of contract, 1176.

—tips as part of earnings or wages, 1122.
Employers' liability acts: employees entitled to protection under federal employers' liability act, 55.
Ann. Cas. 1918B.—80.

MASTER AND SERVANT — Continued.

Employers' liability acts: existence of relation of employer and employee under federal employers' liability act, 46.

Libel and slander: publication that employer has been placed on "unfair list" of labor union as libelous, 570.

Workmen's compensation acts: "child" in workmen's compensation act as including illegitimate child, 258.

—constitutionality of workmen's compensation act, 611.

—disease as accident under workmen's compensation act, 309.

—increase, decrease, termination or suspension of allowance under workmen's compensation act, 733.

—intoxication of employee as precluding recovery under workmen's compensation act, 686.

—lump sum award under workmen's compensation act, 694.

—maritime employees as within purview of workmen's compensation act, 661.

—meaning of phrase "average weekly earnings" in workmen's compensation or similar act, 640.

—person employed in violation of law as entitled to compensation under workmen's compensation act, 679.

—provisions in workmen's compensation acts respecting medical examination of workmen, 670.

—railroad employees as within purview of workmen's compensation act, 664.

—receipt of insurance or other benefit as affecting right to compensation under workmen's compensation act, 635.

—residence of beneficiary as affecting right to compensation under workmen's compensation act, 634.

—review of facts on appeal under workmen's compensation act, 647.

—right to and effect of election with respect to acceptance of provisions of workmen's compensation act, 715.

—what is accident arising out of and in course of employment within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 768.

—what is "injury" or "personal injury" within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 362.

—who is "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 749.

—who is "workman" within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 704.

—workmen's compensation act as applicable to injury received in another jurisdiction, 625.

—workmen's compensation act as retroactive in operation, 617.

MECHANICS' LIENS —

Necessary or proper parties to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 3.

MEDICAL EXAMINATION —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

MEMORANDUM —

See Frauds, Statute of.

MINES AND MINERALS —

Resulting rights of mine owner after severance of surface and mineral estates, 550.
 Right of tenant in common to remove minerals from soil, 580.

MINORS —

See Infants.

MOOT CASE —

See Actions.

MORTALITY TABLES —

Judicial notice of mortality tables, 415.

MORTGAGES —

Mortgagee of premises as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 19.

MOVING PICTURES —

Engaging in labor or amusement on Sunday as offense at common law or under statute other than Sunday law, 387.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS —

Interest on municipal bonds as factor in determining whether municipality has exceeded constitutional debt limit, 598.
 Liability of municipality for acts of public administrator, 1074.
 Right of municipality to enter into business competition with citizen, 104.
 Validity of smoke ordinance or statute, 173.

NATURALIZATION —

"Child" in statute relating to naturalization of Indians as including illegitimate child, 256.

NAVIGABLE WATERS —

See Waters and Watercourses.

NEGLIGENCE —

Death by wrongful act: "child" in statute relating to death by wrongful act as including illegitimate child, 255.
 Fire insurance: liability of insurance agent to owner of property for failure to procure insurance, 1037.
 Food: liability for injury resulting from foreign substance in food, 225.
 Master and servant: "child" in workmen's compensation act as including illegitimate child, 258.
 —constitutionality of workmen's compensation act, 611.
 —disease as accident under workmen's compensation act, 309.
 —employees entitled to protection under federal employers' liability act, 55.
 —existence of relation of employer and employee under federal employers' liability act, 46.
 —increase, decrease, termination or suspension of allowance under workmen's compensation act, 733.
 —intoxication of employee as precluding recovery under workmen's compensation act, 686.
 —lump sum award under workmen's compensation act, 694.

NEGLIGENCE — Continued.

Master and servant: maritime employees as within purview of workmen's compensation act, 661.
 —meaning of phrase "average weekly earnings" in workmen's compensation or similar act, 640.
 —person employed in violation of law as entitled to compensation under workmen's compensation act, 679.
 —provisions in workmen's compensation acts respecting medical examination of workmen, 670.
 —railroad employees as within purview of workmen's compensation act, 664.
 —receipt of insurance or other benefit as affecting right to compensation under workmen's compensation act, 635.
 —residence of beneficiary as affecting right to compensation under workmen's compensation act, 634.
 —review of facts on appeal under workmen's compensation act, 647.
 —right to and effect of election with respect to acceptance of provisions of workmen's compensation act, 715.
 —what is accident arising out of and in course of employment within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 768.
 —what is "injury" or "personal injury" within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 362.
 —who is "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 749.
 —who is "workman" within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 704.
 —workmen's compensation act as applicable to injury received in another jurisdiction, 625.
 —workmen's compensation act as retroactive in operation, 617.
 Public administrators: personal liability of public administrator for injury to property administered, 1072.
 Public officers: neglect of duty as affecting right of public officers to salary, 435.
 See also Taxation.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS —

See Bills and Notes.

NEW TRIAL —

See Jury.

NONOCCUPATIONAL DISEASE —

See Disease.

NONSUPPORT —

See Husband and Wife.

NOTES —

See Bills and Notes.

OCCUPATIONAL DISEASE —

See Disease.

OFFICER OF THE REVENUE —

Legal meaning of "officer of the revenue," 220.

OFFICERS —

See Public Officers.

ORDINARY REVENUE —

Legal meaning of "ordinary revenue," 208.

OVERHANGING TREES —

See Adjoining Landowners.

OWNERS OF PREMISES —

Owner of premises as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 11.

See also Adjoining Landowners.

PARENT AND CHILD —

Contract by parent for services of minor child as binding latter, 827.

Parent as "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 752.

Presumption and burden of proof of undue influence in case of conveyance inter vivos by parent to child, 457.

PARTIAL INVALIDITY —

See Antenuptial Agreements.

PARTIES TO ACTIONS —

Necessary or proper parties to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 3.

PAYMENT —

Payment to prevent apprehended injury to business as payment under duress, 516.

See also Bills and Notes; Facility of Payment.

PERSONAL INJURY —

What is "injury" or "personal injury" within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 362.

PERSONAL PROPERTY —

See Eminent Domain; Husband and Wife.

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES —

See Executors and Administrators.

PERSONAL SERVICES —

See Parent and Child.

PLEADING —

"Child" in pleading as including illegitimate child, 261.

Pleading in action for breach of warranty in sale of seed, 86.

Sufficiency of complaint in action for slander with respect to averments of publication and of time and place, 504.

PLEDGE —

Liability of civilian for purchasing or receiving in pledge public property from soldier or sailor, 523.

POOR AND POOR LAWS —

"Child" in statute relating to poor as including illegitimate child, 257.

PORTERS —

See Average Weekly Earnings.

POSTHUMOUS CHILD —

Posthumous child as "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 755.

POST OFFICE —

Validity of espionage act, 1011.

What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for use of mails for fraudulent purpose, 401.

PREFERENCE —

See Stock and Stockholders.

PRESUMPTIONS —

Presumption and burden of proof of undue influence in case of conveyance inter vivos by parent to child, 457.

See also Gifts.

PRETERMISSION —

"Child" in statute of pretermission as including illegitimate child, 253.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT —

See Agency.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY —

See Suretyship.

PRINCIPAL CONTRACTOR —

See Contractors.

PRINTED SIGNATURE —

See Frauds, Statute of.

PROFITS —

See Eminent Domain.

PROMISSORY NOTES —

See Bills and Notes.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATORS —

See Executors and Administrators.

PUBLICATION —

See Libel and Slander.

PUBLIC LANDS —

Power of state to grant title to land under navigable water, 1107.

PUBLIC OFFICERS —

Neglect of duty as affecting right of public officer to salary, 435.

Payment made to public official to prevent apprehended injury to business as payment under duress, 519.

Personal liability of officer for sale of property for taxes under void statute, 190.

See also Libel and Slander.

PUBLIC PROPERTY —

See Army and Navy.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS —

Power of public service commission to prevent maintenance of electric wires in close proximity, 847.

PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS —
Building restriction or restrictive agreement as binding public or public service corporation, 591.

PUBLIC UTILITIES —
Right of municipality to operate public utility in competition with citizen, 106.

PULLMAN CARS —
See Sleeping Car Companies.

PUNISHMENT —
See Sentence and Punishment.

RAILROADS —
See Eminent Domain; Employers' Liability Acts; Workmen's Compensation Acts.

RAPE —
What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for rape, 399.

RECEIVERS —
Receiver of property as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 23.

RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS —
See Payment.

RECREATION —
See Jury.

RELATIVES —
See Insanity.

REMOVAL —
See Trusts and Trustees.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES —
Meaning of "revenue laws" in statute relating to removal of causes, 270.

RENEWAL OF CONTRACTS —
See Master and Servant.

REPEAL —
See Statutes.

REPRESENTATIVES —
See Executors and Administrators.

RESIDENCE —
See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

RESTRAINT OF MARRIAGE —
See Marriage.

RESTRICTIONS —
See Building Restrictions.

REVENUE —
Legal meaning of "revenue," 200.

REVENUE DEBTS OR CHARGES —
Legal meaning of "revenue debts or charges," 219.

REVENUE LAWS —
Legal meaning of "revenue laws," 209.

REVENUE MEASURE —
Legal meaning of "revenue measure," 218.

REVENUE TAX —
Legal meaning of "revenue tax," 219.

REVIVAL —
See Statutes.

ROBBERY —
What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for robbery, 400.

SAILORS —
See Army and Navy.

SALES —
Express or implied warranty on sale of seed, 72.
Liability for injury resulting from foreign substance in food, 225.
Right of conditional vendee to recover damages for breach of warranty, 914.
Warranty to agent as insuring to benefit of undisclosed principal, 130.

SCINTILLA —
See Evidence.

SEED —
Express or implied warranty on sale of seed, 72.

SENTENCE AND PUNISHMENT —
What is cruel and unusual punishment, 396.

SERVICES —
See Parent and Child.

SEVERANCE —
See Mines and Minerals.

SHIPS AND SHIPPING —
Employee working on watercraft as entitled to protection under federal employers' liability act, 68.

SIGNATURE —
See Frauds, Statute of.

SISTER —
Sister as "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 759.

SLANDER —
See Libel and Slander.

SLEEPING CAR COMPANIES —
Pullman car employee as employee of railroad under federal employers' liability act, 53.

SMOKE —
Validity of smoke ordinance or statute, 173.

SOLDIERS —
See Army and Navy.

STATES —
See Public Lands.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS —

See Frauds, Statute of.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS —

See Limitation of Actions.

STATUTES —

"Child" in statute as including illegitimate child, 250.

Effect of repeal or amendment of repealing statute as reviving repealed statute, 281.

Workmen's compensation act as retroactive in operation, 617.

STEPCHILDREN —

Stepchild as "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 756.

STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS —

Liability on stock subscription as dependent upon whole amount of stock having been subscribed, 1137.

Purchase of stock by director as affected by fiduciary relation to stockholder, 241.

Right of stockholder to preference in subscribing for new stock, 132.

STREET RAILWAYS —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

SUBSCRIPTION —

See Stock and Stockholders.

SUNDAYS AND HOLIDAYS —

Engaging in labor or amusement on Sunday as offense at common law or under statute other than Sunday law, 387.

SUPPORT —

See Husband and Wife.

SURETYSHIP —

Liability of sureties on bond of public administrator, 1072.

Surety on bond of contractor or purchaser as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 23.

SURFACE —

See Mines and Minerals.

SUSPENSION OF ALLOWANCE —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

TABLES —

See Mortality Tables.

TAXATION —

Personal liability of officer for sale of property for taxes under void statute, 190.

TENANTS IN COMMON —

Right of tenant in common to remove minerals from soil, 580.

TENT —

Legal meaning of "tent," 138.

TERMINATION OF ALLOWANCE —

See Workmen's Compensation Acts.

TERMINATION OF CONTRACT —

See Master and Servant.

THEATERS AND AMUSEMENTS —

Engaging in labor or amusement on Sunday as offense at common law or under statute other than Sunday law, 387.

TIME OF PAYMENT —

See Bills and Notes.

TIPS —

Tips as part of earnings or wages, 1122.

TORTS —

See Taxation; Witnesses.

TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEDENTS

See Witnesses.

TREES AND TIMBER —

Rights of adjoining landowners with respect to tree on or overhanging boundary line, 1157.

TRIAL —

Continuance in divorce cases, 1087.

See also Jury.

TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES —

Antagonism or ill feeling between trustee and beneficiary as ground for removal of trustee, 1044.

Cestui que trust as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 18.

Trustee of property as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 17.

UNDISCLOSED PRINCIPAL —

See Agency.

UNDUE INFLUENCE —

Presumption and burden of proof of undue influence in case of conveyance inter vivos by parent to child, 457.

UNFAIR LIST —

See Labor Combinations.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY —

Engaging in labor or amusement on Sunday as offense at common law or under statute other than Sunday law, 387.

UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT —

See Sentence and Punishment.

USURY —

What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment for taking usury, 400.

VASECTOMY —

Vasectomy as cruel and unusual punishment, 398.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER —

Building restriction or restrictive agreement as binding public or public service corporation, 591.

VESSELS —

See Ships and Shipping.

WAGES —

See Master and Servant.

WAR —

Nature and scope of war power, 1009.

Validity of espionage act, 1011.

See also Army and Navy.

WARRANTY —

Express or implied warranty on sale of seed, 72.

Right of conditional vendee to recover damages for breach of warranty, 914.

Warranty to agent as insuring to benefit of undisclosed principal, 130.

WATERCRAFT —

See Ships and Shipping.

WATERS AND WATERCOURSES —

Power of state to grant title to land under navigable water, 1107.

WEEKLY EARNINGS —

See Average Weekly Earnings.

WIDOW —

Widow of owner of premises as necessary party defendant to action to foreclose mechanic's lien, 14.

See also Equitable Election.

WIFE —

See Husband and Wife.

WILLS —

"Child" in will as including illegitimate child, 261.

Election by widow to take under will as affecting her right to intestate property, 986.

Power or duty of administrator, guardian, or the like, to contest will, 536.

Validity of testamentary disposition in restraint of marriage, 1141.

WIRES —

See Electricity.

WITNESSES —

Competency of witness to testify as to his own age, 427.

Rule excluding testimony relating to transaction with decedent as applicable to action ex delicto, 98.

WORDS AND PHRASES —

"All revenue:" legal meaning of "all revenue," 206.

"Average weekly earnings:" meaning of phrase "average weekly earnings" in workmen's compensation or similar act, 640.

—tips as part of "average weekly earnings" under workmen's compensation act, 1122.

"Bills for raising revenue:" legal meaning of "bills for raising revenue," 209.

WORDS AND PHRASES — Continued.

"Board or revenue:" legal meaning of "board of revenue," 220.

"Child" as including illegitimate child, 249.

"Dependent:" who is "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 749.

"Estimated revenue:" legal meaning of "estimated revenue," 206.

"Facility of payment:" construction of "facility of payment" clause in industrial insurance policy, 1193.

"General revenue:" legal meaning of "general revenue," 207.

"Injury:" what is "injury" within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 362.

"Officer of the revenue:" legal meaning of "officer of the revenue," 220.

"Ordinary revenue:" legal meaning of "ordinary revenue," 208.

"Personal injury:" what is "personal injury" within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 362.

"Revenue:" legal meaning of "revenue," 200.

"Revenue debts or charges:" legal meaning of "revenue debts or charges," 219.

"Revenue laws:" legal meaning of "revenue laws," 209.

"Revenue measure:" legal meaning of "revenue measure," 218.

"Revenue tax:" legal meaning of "revenue tax," 219.

"Tent:" legal meaning of "tent," 138.

"Workman:" who is "workman" within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 704.

See also Evidence.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS

Accident or injury within act: disease as accident under workmen's compensation act, 309.

—what is accident arising out of and in course of employment within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 768.

—what is "injury" or "personal injury" within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 362.

—workmen's compensation act as applicable to injury received in another jurisdiction, 625.

Appeal and error: review of facts on appeal under workmen's compensation act, 647.

"Average weekly earnings:" meaning of phrase "average weekly earnings" in workmen's compensation or similar act, 640.

—tips as part of "average weekly earnings" under workmen's compensation act, 1122.

Award or allowance: increase, decrease, termination or suspension of allowance under workmen's compensation act, 733.

—lump sum award under workmen's compensation act, 694.

Defenses: intoxication of employee as precluding recovery under workmen's compensation act, 686.

—receipt of insurance or other benefit as affecting right to compensation under workmen's compensation act, 635.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS

— Continued.

- Dependents within act: "child" in workmen's compensation act as including illegitimate child, 258.
- residence of beneficiary as affecting right to compensation under workmen's compensation act, 634.
- who is "dependent" within workmen's compensation act, 749.
- Election to accept act: right to and effect of election with respect to acceptance of provisions of workmen's compensation act, 715.
- Employees within act: maritime employees as within purview of workmen's compensation act, 661.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS

— Continued.

- Employees within act: person employed in violation of law as entitled to compensation under workmen's compensation act, 679.
- railroad employees as within purview of workmen's compensation act, 664.
- who is "workman" within meaning of workmen's compensation act, 704.
- Medical examination: provisions in workmen's compensation acts respecting medical examination of workmen, 670.
- Retroactive operation: workmen's compensation act as retroactive in operation, 617.
- Validity of workmen's compensation act, 611.

Stanford Law Library

3 6105 063 525 138

